»-Sabed, amigo Lotario, que tengo una pena en el corazón que me le aprieta de suerte que parece que quiere reventar en el pecho, y ha de ser maravilla si no lo hace, pues ha llegado la desvergüenza de Leonela a tanto, que cada noche encierra a un galán suyo en esta casa y se está con él hasta el día, tan a costa de mi crédito cuanto le quedará campo abierto de juzgarlo al que le viere salir a horas tan inusitadas de mi casa. Y lo que me fatiga es que no la puedo castigar ni reñir: que el ser ella secretario de nuestros tratos me ha puesto un freno en la boca para callar los suyos, y temo que de aquí ha de nacer algún mal suceso.

recámara, para ver desde allí a la clara la poca lealtad que ella le guardaba. Pidióle perdón desta locura, y consejo para poder remedialla y salir bien de tan revuelto laberinto como su mal discurso le había puesto.

»Espantada quedó Camila de oír lo que Lotario le decía, y con mucho enojo y muchas y discretas razones le riñó y afeó su mal pensamiento y la simple y mala determinación que había tenido. Pero, como naturalmente tiene la mujer ingenio presto para el bien y para el mal más que el varón, puesto que le va faltando cuando de propósito se pone a hacer discursos, luego al instante halló Camila el modo de remediar tan al parecer inremediable negocio, y dijo a Lotario que procurase que otro día se escondiese Anselmo donde decía, porque ella pensaba sacar de su escondimiento comodidad para que desde allí en adelante los dos se gozasen sin sobresalto alguno; y, sin declararle del todo su pensamiento, le advirtió que tuviese cuidado que, en estando Anselmo escondido, él viniese cuando Leonela le llamase, y que a cuanto ella le dijese le respondiese como respondiera aunque no supiera que Anselmo le escuchaba. Porfió Lotario que le acabase de declarar su intención, porque con más seguridad y aviso guardase todo lo que viese ser necesario.

»Con esto, se fue Lotario; y Anselmo, otro día, con la excusa de ir aquella aldea de su amigo, se partió y volvió a esconderse: que lo pudo hacer con comodidad, porque de industria se la dieron Camila y Leonela.

»Escondido, pues, Anselmo, con aquel sobresalto que se puede imaginar que tendría el que esperaba ver por sus ojos hacer notomía de las entrañas de su honra, íbase a pique de perder el sumo bien que él pensaba que tenía en su querida Camila. Seguras ya y ciertas Camila y Leonela que Anselmo estaba escondido, entraron en la recámara; y apenas hubo puesto los pies en ella Camila, cuando, dando un grande suspiro, dijo:

primero se pondrá la cruel cuanto honrada mía.

»-¡Ay, señora mía! -respondió la sagaz y advertida Leonela-, y ¿qué es lo que quieres hacer con esta daga? ¿Quieres por ventura quitarte la vida o quitársela a Lotario? Que cualquiera destas cosas que quieras ha de redundar en pérdida de tu crédito y fama. Mejor es que disimules tu agravio, y no des lugar a que este mal hombre entre ahora en esta casa y nos halle solas. Mira, señora, que somos flacas mujeres, y él es hombre y determinado; y, como viene con aquel mal propósito, ciego y apasionado, quizá antes que tú pongas en ejecución el tuyo, hará él lo que te estaría más mal que quitarte la vida. ¡Mal haya mi señor Anselmo, que tanto mal ha querido dar a este desuellacaras en su casa! Y ya, señora, que le mates, como yo pienso que quieres hacer, ¿qué hemos de hacer dél después de muerto?

»-¿Qué, amiga? -respondió Camila-: dejáremosle para que Anselmo le entierre, pues será justo que tenga por descanso el trabajo que tomare en poner debajo de la tierra su misma infamia. Llámale, acaba, que todo el tiempo que tardo en tomar la debida venganza de mi agravio parece que ofendo a la lealtad que a mi esposo debo.

»Con otras cosas a éstas semejantes, que ninguno la escuchara que no la tuviera por la más lastimada y leal doncella del mundo, y a su señora por otra nueva y perseguida Penélope. Poco tardó en volver de su desmayo Camila; y, al volver en sí, dijo:

»-¿Por qué no vas, Leonela, a llamar al más leal amigo de amigo que vio el sol o cubrió la noche? Acaba, corre, aguija, camina, no se esfogue con la tardanza el fuego de la cólera que tengo, y se pase en amenazas y maldiciones la justa venganza que espero.

»-Ya voy a llamarle, señora mía -dijo Leonela-, mas hasme de dar primero esa daga, porque no hagas cosa, en tanto que falto, que dejes con ella que llorar toda la vida a todos los que bien te quieren.

»-Ve segura, Leonela amiga, que no haré -respondió Camila-; porque, ya que sea atrevida y simple a tu parecer en volver por mi honra, no lo he de ser tanto como aquella Lucrecia de quien dicen que se mató sin haber cometido error alguno, y sin haber muerto primero a quien tuvo la causa de su desgracia. Yo moriré, si muero, pero ha de ser vengada y satisfecha del que me ha dado ocasión de venir a este lugar a llorar sus atrevimientos, nacidos tan sin culpa mía.

»Mucho se hizo de rogar Leonela antes que saliese a llamar a Lotario, pero, en fin, salió; y, entre tanto que volvía, quedó Camilia diciendo, como que hablaba consigo misma:

»-¡Válame Dios! ¿No fuera más acertado haber despedido a Lotario, como otras muchas veces lo he hecho, que no ponerle en condición, como ya le he puesto, que me tenga por deshonesto y mala, siquiera este tiempo que he de tardar en desengañarle? Mejor fuera, sin duda; pero no quedara yo vengada, ni la honra de mi marido satisfecha, si tan a manos lavadas y tan a paso llano se volviera a salir de donde sus malos pensamientos le entraron. Pague el traidor con la vida lo que intentó con tan lascivo deseo: sepa el mundo, si acaso llegare a saberlo, de que Camila no sólo guardó la lealtad a su esposo, sino que le dio venganza del que se atrevió a ofendelle. Mas, con todo, creo que fuera mejor dar cuenta desto a Anselmo, pero ya se la apunté a dar en la carta que le escribí al aldea, y creo que el no acudir él al remedio del daño que allí le señalé, debió de ser que, de puro bueno y confiado, no quiso ni pudo creer que en el pecho de su tan firme amigo pudiese haber género de pensamiento que contra su honra fuese; ni aun yo lo creí después, por muchos días, ni lo creyera jamás, si su insolencia no llegara a tanto, que las manifiestas dádivas y las largas promesas y las continuas lágrimas no me lo manifestaran. Mas, ¿para qué hago yo ahora estos discursos? ¿Tiene, por ventura, una resuelta necesidad de consejo alguno? No, por cierto. ¡Afuera, pues, traidores; aquí, venganzas! ¡Entre el falso, venga, llegue, muera y acabe, y suceda lo que sucediere! Limpia entré en poder del que el cielo me dio por mío, limpia he de salir dél; y, cuando mucho, saldré bañada en mi casta sangre, y en la impura del más falso amigo que vio la amistad en el mundo.

»Y, diciendo esto, se paseaba por la sala con la daga desenvainada, dando tan desconcertados y desaforados pasos, y haciendo tales ademanes, que no parecía sino que le faltaba el juicio, y que no era mujer delicada, sino un rufián desesperado.

»Todo lo miraba Anselmo, cubierto detrás de unos tapices donde se había escondido, y de todo se admiraba, y ya le parecía que lo que había visto y oído era bastante satisfacción para mayores sospechas; y ya quisiera que la prueba de venir Lotario faltara, temeroso de algún mal repentino suceso. Y, estando ya para manifestarse y salir, para abrazar y desengañar a su esposa, se detuvo porque vio que Leonela volvía con Lotario de la mano; y, así como Camila le vio, haciendo con la daga en el suelo una gran raya delante della, le dijo:

»-Lotario, advierte lo que te digo: si a dicha te atrevieres a pasar desta raya que ves, ni aun llegar a ella, en el punto que viere que lo intentas, en ese mismo me pasaré el pecho con esta daga que en las manos tengo. Y, antes que a esto me respondas palabra, quiero que otras algunas me escuches; que después responderás lo que más te agradare. Lo primero, quiero, Lotario, que me digas si conoces a Anselmo, mi marido, y en qué opinión le tienes; y lo segundo, quiero saber también si me conoces a mí. Respóndeme a esto, y no te turbes, ni pienses mucho lo que has de responder, pues no son dificultades las que te pregunto.

»No era tan ignorante Lotario que, desde el primer punto que Camila le dijo que hiciese esconder a Anselmo, no hubiese dado en la cuenta de lo que ella pensaba hacer; y así, correspondió con su intención tan discretamente, y tan a tiempo, que hicieran los dos pasar aquella mentira por más que cierta verdad; y así, respondió a Camila desta manera:

»-No pensé yo, hermosa Camila, que me llamabas para preguntarme cosas tan fuera de la intención con que yo aquí vengo. Si lo haces por dilatar me la prometida merced, desde más lejos pudieras entretenerla, porque tanto más fatiga el bien deseado cuanto la esperanza está más cerca de poseello; pero, porque no digas que no respondo a tus preguntas, digo que conozco a tu esposo Anselmo, y nos conocemos los dos desde nuestros más tiernos años; y no quiero decir lo que tú tan bien sabes de nuestra amistad, por no me hacer testigo del agravio que el amor hace que le haga, poderosa disculpa de mayores yerros. A ti te conozco y tengo en la misma posesión que él te tiene; que, a no ser así, por menos prendas que las tuyas no había yo de ir contra lo que debo a ser quien soy y contra las santas leyes de la verdadera amistad, ahora por tan poderoso enemigo como el amor por mí rompidas y violadas.

»-Si eso confieras -respondió Camila-, enemigo mortal de todo aquello que justamente merece ser amado, ¿con qué rostro osas parecer ante quien sabes que es el espejo donde se mira aquel en quien tú te debieras mirar, para que vieras con cuán poca ocasión le agravias? Pero ya cayo, ¡ay, desdichada de mí!, en la cuenta de quién te ha hecho tener tan poca con lo que a ti mismo debes, que debe de haber sido alguna desenvoltura mía, que no quiero llamarla deshonestidad, pues no habrá procedido de deliberada determinación, sino de algún descuido de los que las mujeres que piensan que no tienen de quién recatarse suelen hacer inadvertidamente. Si no, dime: ¿cuándo, ¡oh traidor!, respondí a tus ruegos con alguna palabra o señal que pudiese despertar en ti alguna sombra de esperanza de cumplir tus infames deseos? ¿Cuándo tus amorosas palabras no fueron

deshechas y reprehendidas de las mías con rigor y con aspereza? ¿Cuándo tus muchas promesas y mayores dádivas fueron de mí creídas, ni admitidas? Pero, por parecerme que alguno no puede perseverar en el intento amoroso luengo tiempo, si no es sustentado de alguna esperanza, quiero atribuirme a mí la culpa de tu impertinencia, pues, sin duda, algún descuido mío ha sustentado tanto tiempo tu cuidado; y así, quiero castigarme y darme la pena que tu culpa merece. Y, porque vieses que, siendo conmigo tan inhumana, no era posible dejar de serlo contigo, quise traerte a ser testigo del sacrificio que pienso hacer a la ofendida honra de mi tan honrado marido, agraviado de ti con el mayor cuidado que te ha sido posible, y de mí también con el poco recato que he tenido del huir la ocasión, si alguna te di, para favorecer y canonizar tus malas intenciones. Torno a decir que la sospecha que tengo que algún descuido mío engendró en ti tan desvariados pensamientos es la que más me fatiga, y la que yo más deseo castigar con mis propias manos, porque, castigándome otro verdugo, quizá sería más pública mi culpa; pero, antes que esto haga, quiero matar muriendo, y llevar conmigo quien me acabe de satisfacer el deseo de la venganza que espero y tengo, viendo allá, dondequiera que fuere, la pena que da la justicia desinteresada y que no se dobla al que en términos tan desesperados me ha puesto.

»Y, diciendo estas razones, con una increíble fuerza y ligereza arremetió a Lotario con la daga desenvainada, con tales muestras de querer enclavársela en el pecho, que casi él estuvo en duda si aquellas demostraciones eran falsas o verdaderas, porque le fue forzoso valerse de su industria y de su fuerza para estorbar que Camila no le diese. La cual tan vivamente fingía aquel extraño embuste y fealdad que, por dalle color de verdad, la quiso matizar con su misma sangre; porque, viendo que no podía haber a Lotario, o fingiendo que no podía, dijo:

»Y, haciendo fuerza para soltar la mano de la daga, que Lotario la tenía asida, la sacó, y, guiando su punta por parte que pudiese herir no profundamente, se la entró y escondió por más arriba de la islilla del lado izquierdo, junto al hombro, y luego se dejó caer en el suelo, como desmayada.

larga y triste lamentación sobre el cuerpo de Camila, como si estuviera difunta, echándose muchas maldiciones, no sólo a él, sino al que había sido causa de habelle puesto en aquel término. Y, como sabía que le escuchaba su amigo Anselmo, decía cosas que el que le oyera le tuviera mucha más lástima que a Camila, aunque por muerta la juzgara.

»Leonela la tomó en brazos y la puso en el lecho, suplicando a Lotario fuese a buscar quien secretamente a Camila curase; pedíale asimismo consejo y parecer de lo que dirían a Anselmo de aquella herida de su señora, si acaso viniese antes que estuviese sana. Él respondió que dijese lo que quisiesen, que él no estaba para dar consejo que de provecho fuese; sólo le dijo que procurase tomarle la sangre, porque él se iba adonde gentes no le vieses. Y, con muestras de mucho dolor y sentimiento, se salió de casa; y, cuando se vio solo y en parte donde nadie le veía, no cesaba de hacerse cruces, maravillándose de la industria de Camila y de los ademanes tan propios de Leonela. Consideraba cuán enterado había de quedar Anselmo de que tenía por mujer a una segunda Porcia, y deseaba verse con él para celebrar los dos la mentira y la verdad más disimulada que jamás pudiera imaginarse.

»-Pues yo, hermana -replicó Camila-, ¿qué tengo de saber, que no me atreveré a forjar ni sustentar una mentira, si me fuese en ello la vida? Y si es que no hemos de saber dar salida a esto, mejor será decirle la verdad desnuda, que no que nos alcance en mentirosa cuenta.

»-No tengas pena, señora: de aquí a mañana -respondió Leonela- yo pensaré qué le digamos, y quizá que, por ser la herida donde es, la podrás encubrir sin que él la vea, y el cielo será servido de favorecer a nuestros tan justos y tan honrados pensamientos. Sosiégate, señora mía, y procura sosegar tu alteración, porque mi señor no te halle sobresaltada, y lo demás déjalo a mi cargo, y al de Dios, que siempre acude a los buenos deseos.

»Atentísimo había estado Anselmo a escuchar y a ver representar la tragedia de la muerte de su honra; la cual con tan estraños y eficaces afectos la representaron los personajes della, que pareció que se habían transformado en la misma verdad de lo que fingían. Deseaba mucho la noche, y el tener lugar para salir de su casa, y ir a verse con su buen amigo Lotario, congratulándose con él de la margarita preciosa que había hallado en el desengaño de la bondad de su esposa. Tuvieron cuidado las dos de darle lugar y comodidad a que saliese, y él, sin perdella, salió y luego fue a buscar a Lotario, el cual hallado, no se puede buenamente contar los abrazos que le dio, las cosas que de su contento le dijo, las alabanzas que dio a Camila. Todo lo cual escuchó Lotario sin poder dar muestras de alguna alegría, porque se le representaba a la memoria cuán engañado estaba su amigo y cuán injustamente él le agraviaba. Y, aunque Anselmo veía que Lotario no se alegraba, creía ser la causa por haber dejado a Camila herida y haber él sido la causa; y así, entre otras razones, le dijo que no tuviese pena del suceso de Camila, porque, sin duda, la herida era ligera, pues quedaban de concierto de encubrírsele a él; y que, según esto, no había de qué temer, sino que de allí adelante se gozase y alegrase con él, pues por su industria y medio él se veía levantado a la más alta felicidad que acertara desearse, y quería que no fuesen otros sus entretenimientos que en hacer versos en alabanza de Camila, que la hiciesen eterna en la memoria de los siglos venideros. Lotario alabó su buena determinación y dijo que él, por su parte, ayudaría a levantar tan ilustre edificio.

Capítulo XXXV

POCO más quedaba por leer de la novela, cuando del caramanchón donde reposaba don Quijote salió Sancho Panza todo alborotado, diciendo a voces:

-Acudid, señores, presto y socorred a mi señor, que anda envuelto en la más reñida y trabada batalla que mis ojos han visto. ¡Vive Dios, que ha dado una cuchillada al gigante enemigo de la señora princesa Micomicona, que le ha tajado la cabeza, cercen a cercen, como si fuera un nabo!

-¿Qué dices, hermano? -dijo el cura, dejando de leer lo que de la novela quedaba-. ¿Estáis en vos, Sancho? ¿Cómo diablos puede ser eso que decís, estando el gigante dos mil leguas de aquí?

En esto, oyeron un gran ruido en el aposento, y que don Quijote decía a voces:

-¡Tente, ladrón, malandrín, follón, que aquí te tengo, y no te ha de valer tu cimitarra!

Y parecía que daba grandes cuchilladas por las paredes. Y dijo Sancho:

-No tienen que pararse a escuchar, sino entren a despartir la pelea, o a ayudar a mi amo; aunque ya no será menester, porque, sin duda alguna, el gigante está ya muerto, y dando cuenta a Dios de su pasada y mala vida, que yo vi correr la sangre por el suelo, y la cabeza cortada y caída a un lado, que es tamaño como un gran cuero de vino.

-Que me maten -dijo a esta sazón el ventero-si don Quijote, o don diablo, no ha dado alguna cuchillada en alguno de los cueros de vino tinto que a su cabecera estaban llenos, y el vino derramado debe de ser lo que le parece sangre a este buen hombre.

Y, con esto, entró en el aposento, y todos tras él, y hallaron a don Quijote en el más extraño traje del mundo: estaba en camisa, la cual no era tan cumplida que por delante le acabase de cubrir los muslos, y por detrás tenía seis dedos menos; las piernas eran muy largas y flacas, llenas de vello y no nada limpias; tenía en la cabeza un bonetillo colorado, grasiento, que era del ventero; en el brazo izquierdo tenía revuelta la manta de la cama, con quien tenía ojeriza Sancho, y él se sabía bien el porqué; y en la derecha, desenvainada la espada, con la cual daba cuchilladas a todas partes, diciendo palabras como si verdaderamente estuviera peleando con algún gigante. Y es lo bueno que no tenía los ojos abiertos, porque estaba durmiendo y soñando que estaba en batalla con el gigante; que fue tan intensa la imaginación de la aventura que iba a fenecer, que le hizo soñar que ya había llegado al reino de Micomicón, y que ya estaba en la pelea con su enemigo. Y había dado tantas cuchilladas en los cueros, creyendo que las daba en el gigante, que todo el aposento estaba lleno de vino; lo cual visto por el ventero, tomó tanto enojo que arremetió con don Quijote, y a puño cerrado le comenzó a dar tantos golpes que si Cardenio y el cura no se le quitaran, él acabara la guerra del gigante; y, con todo aquello, no despertaba el pobre caballero, hasta que el barbero trujo un gran caldero de agua fría del pozo y se le echó por todo el cuerpo de golpe, con lo cual despertó don Quijote; mas no con tanto acuerdo que echase de ver de la manera que estaba.

Dorotea, que vio cuán corta y sotilmente estaba vestido, no quiso entrar a ver la batalla de su ayudador y de su contrario.

Andaba Sancho buscando la cabeza del gigante por todo el suelo, y, como no la hallaba, dijo:

-Ya yo sé que todo lo desta casa es encantamento; que la otra vez, en este mismo lugar donde ahora me hallo, me dieron muchos mojicones y porrazos, sin saber quién me los daba, y nunca pude ver a nadie; y ahora no parece por aquí esta cabeza que vi cortar por mis mismísimos ojos, y la sangre corría del cuerpo como de una fuente.

-¿Qué sangre ni qué fuente dices, enemigo de Dios y de sus santos? -dijo el ventero-. ¿No vees, ladrón, que la sangre y la fuente no es otra cosa que estos cueros que aquí están horadados y el vino tinto que nada en este aposento, que nadando vea yo el alma en los infiernos de quien los horadó?

-No sé nada -respondió Sancho-; sólo sé que vendré a ser tan desdichado que, por no hallar esta cabeza, se me ha de deshacer mi condado como la sal en el agua.

Y estaba peor Sancho despierto que su amo durmiendo: tal le tenían las promesas que su amo le había hecho. El ventero se desesperaba de ver la flema del escudero y el maleficio del señor, y juraba que no había de ser como la vez pasada, que se le fueron sin pagar; y que ahora no le habían de valer los privilegios de su caballería para dejar de pagar lo uno y lo otro, aun hasta lo que pudiesen costar las botanas que se habían de echar a los rotos cueros.

Tenía el cura de las manos a don Quijote, el cual, creyendo que ya había acabado la aventura, y que se hallaba delante de la princesa Micomicona, se hincó de rodillas delante del cura, diciendo:

-Bien puede la vuestra grandeza, alta y famosa señora, vivir, de hoy más, segura que le pueda hacer mal esta mal nacida criatura; y yo también, de hoy más, soy quitto de la palabra que os di, pues, con el ayuda del alto Dios y con el favor de aquella por quien yo vivo y respiro, tan bien la he cumplido.

-¿No lo dije yo? -dijo oyendo esto Sancho-. Sí que no estaba yo borracho: ¡mirad si tiene puesto ya en sal mi amo al gigante! ¡Ciertos son los toros: mi condado está de molde!

¿Quién no había de reír con los disparates de los dos, amo y mozo? Todos reían sino el ventero, que se daba a Satanás. Pero, en fin, tanto hicieron el barbero, Cardenio y el cura que, con no poco trabajo, dieron con don Quijote en la cama, el cual se quedó dormido, con muestras de grandísimo cansancio. Dejáronle dormir, y saliéronse al portal de la venta a consolar a Sancho Panza de no haber hallado la cabeza del gigante; aunque más tuvieron que hacer en aplacar al ventero, que estaba desesperado por la repentina muerte de sus cueros. Y la ventera decía en voz y en grito:

-En mal punto y en hora menguada entró en mi casa este caballero andante, que nunca mis ojos le hubieran visto, que tan caro me cuesta. La vez pasada se fue con el costo de una noche, de cena, cama, paja y cebada, para él y para su escudero, y un rocín y un jumento, diciendo que era caballero aventurero (que mala ventura le dé Dios a él y a cuantos aventureros hay en el mundo) y que por esto no estaba obligado a pagar nada, que así estaba escrito en los aranceles de la caballería andantesca. Y ahora, por su respeto, vino estotro señor y me llevó mi cola, y hámela vuelto con más de dos cuartillos de daño, toda pelada, que no puede servir para lo que la quiere mi marido. Y, por fin y remate de todo, romperme mis cueros y derramarme mi vino; que derramada le vea yo su sangre. ¡Pues no se piense; que, por los huesos de mi padre y por el siglo de mi madre, si no me lo han de pagar un cuarto sobre otro, o no me llamaría yo como me llamo ni sería hija de quien soy!

Estas y otras razones tales decía la ventera con grande enojo, y ayudábala su buena criada Maritornes. La hija callaba, y de cuando en cuando se sonreía. El cura lo sosegó todo, prometiendo de satisfacerles su pérdida lo mejor que pudiese, así de los cueros como del vino, y principalmente del menoscabo de la cola, de quien tanta cuenta hacían. Dorotea consoló a Sancho Panza diciéndole que cada y cuando que pareciese haber sido verdad que su amo hubiese descabezado al gigante, le prometía, en viéndose pacífica en su reino, de darle el mejor condado que en él hubiese. Consolóse con esto Sancho, y aseguró a la princesa que tuviese por cierto que él había visto la cabeza del gigante, y que, por más señas, tenía una barba que le llegaba a la cintura; y que si no parecía, era porque todo cuanto en aquella casa pasaba era por vía de encantamento, como él lo había probado otra vez que había posado en ella. Dorotea dijo que así lo creía, y que no tuviese pena, que todo se haría bien y sucedería a pedir de boca.

Sosegados todos, el cura quiso acabar de leer la novela, porque vio que faltaba poco. Cardenio, Dorotea y todos los demás le rogaron la acabase. Él, que a todos quiso dar gusto, y por el que él tenía de leerla, prosiguió el cuento, que así decía:

«Sucedió, pues, que, por la satisfacción que Anselmo tenía de la bondad de Camila, vivía una vida contenta y descuidada, y Camila, de industria, hacía mal rostro a Lotario, porque Anselmo entendiese al revés de la voluntad que le tenía; y, para más confirmación de su hecho, pidió licencia Lotario para no venir a su casa, pues claramente se mostraba la pesadumbre que con su vista Camila recibía; mas el engañado Anselmo le dijo que en ninguna manera tal hiciese. Y, desta manera, por mil maneras era Anselmo el fabricante de su deshonor, creyendo que lo era de su gusto.

»En esto, el que tenía Leonela de verse cualificada, no de con sus amores, llegó a tanto que, sin mirar a otra cosa, se iba tras él a suelta rienda, fiada en que su señora la encubría, y aun la advertía del modo que con poco recelo pudiese ponerle en ejecución. En fin, una noche sintió Anselmo pasos en el aposento de Leonela, y, queriendo entrar a ver quién los daba, sintió que le detenían la puerta, cosa que le puso más voluntad de abrirla; y tanta fuerza hizo, que la abrió, y entró dentro a tiempo que vio que un hombre saltaba por la ventana a la calle; y, acudiendo con presteza a alcanzarle o conocerle, no pudo conseguir lo uno ni lo otro, porque Leonela se abrazó con él, diciéndole:

»No lo quiso creer Anselmo; antes, ciego de enojo, sacó la daga y quiso herir a Leonela, diciéndole que le dijese la verdad, si no, que la mataría. Ella, con el miedo, sin saber lo que se decía, le dijo:

»-Por ahora será imposible -dijo Leonela-, según estoy de turbada; déjame hasta mañana, que entonces sabrás de mí lo que te ha de admirar; y está seguro que el que saltó por esta ventana es un mancebo desta ciudad, que me ha dado la mano de ser mi esposo.

»Sosegóse con esto Anselmo y quiso aguardar el término que se le pedía, porque no pensaba oír cosa que contra Camila fuese, por estar de su bondad tan satisfecho y seguro; y así, se salió del aposento y dejó encerrada en él a Leonela, diciéndole que de allí no saldría hasta que le dijese lo que tenía que decirle.

»Fue luego a ver a Camila y a decirle, como le dijo, todo aquello que con su doncella le había pasado, y la palabra que le había dado de decirle grandes cosas

y de importancia. Si se turbó Camila o no, no hay para qué decirlo, porque fue tanto el temor que cobró, creyendo verdaderamente -y era de creer-que Leonela había de decir a Anselmo todo lo que sabía de su poca fe, que no tuvo ánimo para esperar si su sospecha salía falsa o no. Y aquella misma noche, cuando le pareció que Anselmo dormía, juntó las mejores joyas que tenía y algunos dineros, y, sin ser de nadie sentida, salió de casa y se fue a la de Lotario, a quien contó lo que pasaba, y le pidió que la pusiese en cobro, o que se ausentasen los dos donde de Anselmo pudiesen estar seguros. La confusión en que Camila puso a Lotario fue tal, que no le sabía responder palabra, ni menos sabía resolverse en lo que haría.

»En fin, acordó de llevar a Camila a un monesterio, en quien era priora una su hermana. Consintió Camila en ello, y, con la presteza que el caso pedía, la llevó Lotario y la dejó en el monesterio, y él, ansimesmo, se ausentó luego de la ciudad, sin dar parte a nadie de su ausencia.

»No sabía qué pensar, qué decir, ni qué hacer, y poco a poco se le iba volviendo el juicio. Contemplábase y mirábase en un instante sin mujer, sin amigo y sin criados; desamparado, a su parecer, del cielo que le cubría, y sobre todo sin honra, porque en la falta de Camila vio su perdición.

»Resolvióse, en fin, a cabo de una gran pieza, de irse a la aldea de su amigo, donde había estado cuando dio lugar a que se maquinase toda aquella desventura. Cerró las puertas de su casa, subió a caballo, y con desmayado aliento se puso en camino; y, apenas hubo andado la mitad, cuando, acosado de sus pensamientos, le fue forzoso apearse y arrendar su caballo a un árbol, a cuyo tronco se dejó caer, dando tiernos y dolorosos suspiros, y allí se estuvo hasta casi que anochecía; y aquella hora vio que venía un hombre a caballo de la ciudad, y, después de haberle saludado, le preguntó qué nuevas había en Florencia. El ciudadano respondió:

»-Las más estrañas que muchos días ha se han oído en ella; porque se dice públicamente que Lotario, aquel grande amigo de Anselmo el rico, que vivía a San Juan, se llevó esta noche a Camila, mujer de Anselmo, el cual tampoco parece. Todo esto ha dicho una criada de Camila, que anoche la halló el gobernador descolgándose con una sábana por las ventanas de la casa de Anselmo. En efeto, no sé puntualmente cómo pasó el negocio; sólo sé que toda la ciudad está admirada deste suceso, porque no se podía esperar tal hecho de la mucha y familiar amistad de los dos, que dicen que era tanta, que los llamaban los dos amigos.

»-Ni por pienso -dijo el ciudadano-, puesto que el gobernador ha usado de mucha diligencia en buscarlos.

»Con tan desdichadas nuevas, casi casi llegó a términos Anselmo, no sólo de perder el juicio, sino de acabar la vida. Levantóse como pudo y llegó a casa de su amigo, que aún no sabía su desgracia; mas, como le vio llegar amarillo, consumido y seco, entendió que de algún grave mal venía fatigado. Pidió luego Anselmo que le acostasen, y que le diesen aderezo de escribir. Hízose así, y dejáronle acostado y solo, porque él así lo quiso, y aun que le cerrasen la puerta. Viéndose, pues, solo, comenzó a cargar tanto la imaginación de su desventura, que claramente conoció que se le iba acabando la vida; y así, ordenó de dejar noticia de la causa de su estraña muerte; y, comenzando a escribir, antes que acabase de poner todo lo que quería, le faltó el aliento y dejó la vida en las manos del dolor que le causó su curiosidad impertinente.

»Viendo el señor de casa que era ya tarde y que Anselmo no llamaba, acordó de entrar a saber si pasaba adelante su indisposición, y hallóle tendido boca abajo, la mitad del cuerpo en la cama y la otra mitad sobre el bufete, sobre el cual estaba con el papel escrito y abierto, y él tenía aún la pluma en la mano. Llegóse el huésped a él, habiéndole llamado primero; y, trabándole por la mano, viendo que no le respondía y hallándole frío, vio que estaba muerto. Admiróse y congojóse en gran manera, y llamó a la gente de casa para que vieses la desgracia a Anselmo sucedida; y, finalmente, leyó el papel, que conoció que de su misma mano estaba escrito, el cual contenía estas razones:

Un necio e impertinente deseo me quitó la vida. Si las nuevas de mi muerte llegaren a los oídos de Camila, sepa que yo la perdono, porque no estaba ella obligada a hacer milagros, ni yo tenía necesidad de querer que ella los hiciese; y, pues yo fui el fabricante de mi deshonra, no hay para qué...

»Hasta aquí escribió Anselmo, por donde se echó de ver que en aquel punto, sin poder acabar la razón, se le acabó la vida. Otro día dio aviso su amigo a los parientes de Anselmo de su muerte, los cuales ya sabían su desgracia, y el monesterio donde Camila estaba, casi en el término de acompañar a su esposo en aquel forzoso viaje, no por las nuevas del muerto esposo, mas por las que supo del ausente amigo. Dícese que, aunque se vio viuda, no quiso salir del monesterio, ni, menos, hacer profesión de monja, hasta que, no de allí a muchos días, le vinieron nuevas que Lotario había muerto en una batalla que en aquel tiempo dio monsiur de Lautrec al Gran Capitán Gonzalo Fernández de Córdoba en el reino de Nápoles, donde había ido a parar el tarde arrepentido amigo; lo cual sabido por Camila, hizo profesión, y acabó en breves días la vida a las rigurosas manos de tristezas y melancolías. Éste fue el fin que tuvieron todos, nacido de un tan desatinado principio.»

-Bien -dijo el cura-me parece esta novela, pero no me puedo persuadir que esto sea verdad; y si es fingido, fingió mal el autor, porque no se puede imaginar que haya marido tan necio que quiera hacer tan costosa experiencia como Anselmo. Si este caso se pusiera entre un galán y una dama, pudiérase llevar, pero entre marido y mujer, algo tiene del imposible; y, en lo que toca al modo de contarle, no me descontenta.

Capítulo XXXVI

Que trata de la brava y descomunal batalla que don Quijote tuvo con unos cueros de vino tinto, con otros raros sucesos que en la venta le sucedieron

ESTANDO en esto, el ventero, que estaba a la puerta de la venta, dijo:

-Esta que viene es una hermosa tropa de huéspedes: si ellos paran aquí, gaudeamus tenemos.

-¿Qué gente es? -dijo Cardenio.

-Cuatro hombres -respondió el ventero- vienen a caballo, a la jineta, con lanzas y adargas, y todos con antifaces negros; y junto con ellos viene una mujer vestida de blanco, en un sillón, ansimesmo cubierto el rostro, y otros dos mozos de a pie.

-¿Vienen muy cerca? -preguntó el cura.

-Tan cerca -respondió el ventero-, que ya llegan.

Oyendo esto Dorotea, se cubrió el rostro, y Cardenio se entró en el aposento de don Quijote; y casi no habían tenido lugar para esto, cuando entraron en la venta todos los que el ventero había dicho; y, apeándose los cuatro de a caballo, que de muy gentil talle y disposición eran, fueron a apearse a la mujer que en el sillón venía; y, tomándola uno dellos en sus brazos, la sentó en una silla que estaba a la entrada del aposento donde Cardenio se había escondido. En todo este tiempo, ni ella ni ellos se habían quitado los antifaces, ni hablado palabra alguna; sólo que, al sentarse la mujer en la silla, dio un profundo suspiro y dejó caer los brazos, como persona enferma y desmayada. Los mozos de a pie llevaron los caballos a la caballeriza.

Viendo esto el cura, deseoso de saber qué gente era aquella que con tal traje y tal silencio estaba, se fue donde estaban los mozos, y a uno dellos le preguntó lo que ya deseaba; el cual le respondió:

-Pardiez, señor, yo no sabré deciros qué gente sea ésta; sólo sé que muestra ser muy principal, especialmente aquel que llegó a tomar en sus brazos a aquella señora que habéis visto; y esto dígoles porque todos los demás le tienen respeto, y no se hace otra cosa más de la que él ordena y manda.

-Y la señora, ¿quién es? -preguntó el cura.

-Tampoco sabré decir eso -respondió el mozo-, porque en todo el camino no la he visto el rostro; suspirar sí la he oído muchas veces, y dar unos gemidos que parece que con cada uno dellos quiere dar el alma. Y no es de maravillar que no sepamos más de lo que habemos dicho, porque mi compañero y yo no ha más de dos días que los acompañamos; porque, habiéndolos encontrado en el camino, nos rogaron y persuadieron que viniésemos con ellos hasta el Andalucía, ofreciéndose a pagárnoslo muy bien.

-¿Y habéis oído nombrar a alguno dellos? -preguntó el cura.

-No, por cierto -respondió el mozo-, porque todos caminan con tanto silencio que es maravilla, porque no se oye entre ellos otra cosa que los suspiros y sollozos de la pobre señora, que nos mueven a lástima; y sin duda tenemos creído que ella va forzada dondequiera que va, y, según se puede colegir por su hábito, ella es monja, o va a serlo, que es lo más cierto, y quizá porque no le debe de nacer de voluntad el monjío, va triste, como parece.

Y, dejándolos, se volvió adonde estaba Dorotea, la cual, como había oído suspirar a la embozada, movida de natural compasión, se llegó a ella y le dijo:

-¿Qué mal sentís, señora mía? Mirad si es alguno de quien las mujeres suelen tener uso y experiencia de curarle, que de mi parte os ofrezco una buena voluntad de serviros.

A todo esto callaba la lastimada señora; y, aunque Dorotea tornó con mayores ofrecimientos, todavía se estaba en su silencio, hasta que llegó el caballero embozado que dijo el mozo que los demás obedecían, y dijo a Dorotea:

-No os canséis, señora, en ofrecer nada a esa mujer, porque tiene por costumbre de no agradecer cosa que por ella se hace, ni procuréis que os responda, si no queréis oír alguna mentira de su boca.

-Jamás la dije -dijo a esta sazón la que hasta allí había estado callando-; antes, por ser tan verdadera y tan sin trazas mentirosas, me veo ahora en tanta desventura; y desto vos mismo quiero que seáis el testigo, pues mi pura verdad os hace a vos ser falso y mentiroso.

Oyó estas razones Cardenio bien clara y distintamente, como quien estaba tan junto de quien las decía que sola la puerta del aposento de don Quijote estaba en medio; y, así como las oyó, dando una gran voz dijo:

-¡Válgame Dios! ¿Qué es esto que oigo? ¿Qué voz es esta que ha llegado a mis oídos?

Volvió la cabeza a estos gritos aquella señora, toda sobresaltada, y, no viendo quién las daba, se levantó en pie y fuese a entrar en el aposento; lo cual visto por el caballero, la detuvo, sin dejarla mover un paso. A ella, con la turbación y desasosiego, se le cayó el tafetán con que traía cubierto el rostro, y descubrió una hermosura incomparable y un rostro milagroso, aunque descolorido y asombrado, porque con los ojos andaba rodeando todos los lugares donde alcanzaba con la vista, con tanto ahínco, que parecía persona fuera de juicio; cuyas señales, sin saber por qué las hacía, pusieron gran lástima en Dorotea y en cuantos la miraban. Teníala el caballero fuertemente asida por las espaldas, y, por estar tan ocupado en tenerla, no pudo acudir a alzarse el embozo, que se le caía, como, en efeto, se le cayó del todo; y, alzando los ojos Dorotea, que abrazada con la señora estaba, vio que el que abrazada ansimesmo la tenía era su esposo don Fernando; y, apenas le hubo conocido, cuando, arrojando de lo íntimo de sus entrañas un luengo y tristísimo «¡ay!», se dejó caer de espaldas desmayada; y, a no hallarse allí junto el barbero, que la recogió en los brazos, ella diera consigo en el suelo.

Acudió luego el cura a quitarle el embozo, para echarle agua en el rostro, y así como la descubrió, la conoció don Fernando, que era el que estaba abrazado con la otra, y quedó como muerto en verla; pero no porque dejase, con todo esto, de tener a Luscinda, que era la que procuraba soltarse de sus brazos; la cual había conocido en el suspiro a Cardenio, y él la había conocido a ella. Oyó asimesmo Cardenio el ¡ay! que dio Dorotea cuando se cayó desmayada, y, creyendo que era su Luscinda, salió del aposento despavorido, y lo primero que vio fue a don Fernando, que tenía abrazada a Luscinda. También don Fernando conoció luego a Cardenio; y todos tres, Luscinda, Cardenio y Dorotea, quedaron mudos y suspensos, casi sin saber lo que les había acontecido.

Callaban todos y mirábanse todos: Dorotea a don Fernando, don Fernando a Cardenio, Cardenio a Luscinda y Luscinda a Cardenio. Mas quien primero rompió el silencio fue Luscinda, hablando a don Fernando desta manera:

-Dejadme, señor don Fernando, por lo que debéis a ser quien sois, ya que por otro respeto no lo hagáis; dejadme llegar al muro de quien yo soy yedra, al arrimo de quien no me han podido apartar vuestras importunaciones, vuestras amenazas, vuestras promesas ni vuestras dádivas. Notad cómo el cielo, por desusados y a nosotros encubiertos caminos, me ha puesto a mi verdadero esposo delante. Y bien sabéis por mil costosas experiencias que sola la muerte fuera bastante para borrarle de mi memoria. Sean, pues, parte tan claros desengaños para que volváis, ya que no podáis hacer otra cosa, el amor en rabia, la voluntad en despecho, y acabadme con él la vida; que, como yo la rinda delante de mi buen esposo, la daré por bien empleada: quizá con mi muerte quedará satisfecho de la fe que le mantuve hasta el último trance de la vida.

Había en este entretanto vuelto Dorotea en sí, y había estado escuchando todas las razones que Luscinda dijo, por las cuales vino en conocimiento de quién ella era; que, viendo que don Fernando aún no la dejaba de los brazos, ni respondía a sus razones, esforzándose lo más que pudo, se levantó y se fue a hincar de rodillas a sus pies; y, derramando mucha cantidad de hermosas y lastimeras

-Si ya no es, señor mío, que los rayos deste sol que en tus brazos eclipsado tienes te quitan y ofuscan los de tus ojos, ya habrás echado de ver que la que a tus pies está arrodillada es la sin ventura, hasta que tú quieras, y la desdichada Dorotea. Yo soy aquella labradora humilde a quien tú, por tu bondad o por tu gusto, quisiste levantar a la alteza de poder llamarse tuya. Soy la que, encerrada en los límites de la honestidad, vivió vida contenta hasta que, a las voces de tus importunidades, y, al parecer, justos y amorosos sentimientos, abrió las puertas de su recato y te entregó las llaves de su libertad: dádiva de ti tan mal agradecida, cual lo muestra bien claro haber sido forzoso hallarme en el lugar donde me hallas, y verte yo a ti de la manera que te veo. Pero, con todo esto, no querría que cayese en tu imaginación pensar que he venido aquí con pasos de mi deshonra, habiéndome traído sólo los del dolor y sentimiento de verme de ti olvidada. Tú quisiste que yo fuese tuya, y quisístelo de manera que, aunque ahora quieras que no lo sea, no será posible que tú dejes de ser mío. Mira, señor mío, que puede ser recompensa a la hermosura y nobleza por quien me dejas la incomparable voluntad que te tengo. Tú no puedes ser de la hermosa Luscinda, porque eres mío, ni ella puede ser tuya, porque es de Cardenio; y más fácil te será, si en ello miras, reducir tu voluntad a querer a quien te adora, que no encaminar la que te aborrece a que bien te quiera. Tú solicitaste mi descuido, tú rogaste a mi entereza, tú no ignoraste mi calidad, tú sabes bien de la manera que me entregué a toda tu voluntad: no te queda lugar ni acogida de llamarte a engaño. Y si esto es así, como lo es, y tú eres tan cristiano como caballero, ¿por qué por tantos rodeos dilatas de hacerme venturosa en los fines, como me heciste en los principios? Y si no me quieres por la que soy, que soy tu verdadera y legítima esposa, quiéreme, a lo menos, y admíteme por tu esclava; que, como yo esté en tu poder, me tendré por dichosa y bien afortunada. No permitas, con dejarme y desampararme, que se hagan y junten corrillos en mi deshonra; no des tan mala vejez a mis padres, pues no lo merecen los leales servicios que, como buenos vasallos, a los tuyos siempre han hecho. Y si te parece que has de aniquilar tu sangre por mezclarla con la mía, considera que pocas o ninguna nobleza hay en el mundo que no haya corrido por este camino, y que la que se toma de las mujeres no es la que hace al caso en las ilustres decendencias; cuanto más, que la verdadera nobleza consiste en la virtud, y si ésta a ti te falta, negándome lo que tan justamente me debes, yo quedaré con más ventajas de noble que las que tú tienes. En fin, señor, lo que últimamente te digo es que, quieras o no quieras, yo soy tu esposa: testigos son tus palabras, que no han ni deben ser mentirosas, si ya es que te precias de aquello por que me desprecias; testigo será la firma que hiciste, y testigo el cielo, a quien tú llamaste por testigo de lo que me prometías. Y, cuando todo esto falte, tu misma conciencia no ha de faltar de dar voces callando en mitad de tus alegrías, volviendo por esta verdad que te he dicho y turbando tus mejores gustos y contentos.

Estas y otras razones dijo la lastimada Dorotea, con tanto sentimiento y lágrimas, que los mismos que acompañaban a don Fernando, y cuantos presentes estaban, la acompañaron en ellas. Escuchóla don Fernando sin replicalle palabra, hasta que ella dio fin a las suyas y principio a tantos sollozos y suspiros, que bien había de ser corazón de bronce el que con muestras de tanto dolor no se enterneciera. Mirándola estaba Luscinda, no menos lastimada de su sentimiento que admirada de su mucha discreción y hermosura; y, aunque quisiera llegarse a ella y decirle algunas palabras de consuelo, no la dejaban los brazos de don Fernando, que apretada la tenían. El cual, lleno de confusión y espanto, al cabo de un buen espacio que atentamente estuvo mirando a Dorotea, abrió los brazos y, dejando libre a Luscinda, dijo:

-Venciste, hermosa Dorotea, venciste; porque no es posible tener ánimo para negar tantas verdades juntas.

Con el desmayo que Luscinda había tenido, así como la dejó don Fernando, iba a caer en el suelo; mas, hallándose Cardenio allí junto, que a las espaldas de don Fernando se había puesto porque no le conociese, prosupuesto todo temor y aventurando a todo riesgo, acudió a sostener a Luscinda, y, cogiéndola entre sus brazos, le dijo:

-Si el piadoso cielo gusta y quiere que ya tengas algún descanso, leal, firme y hermosa señora mía, en ninguna parte creo yo que le tendrás más seguro que en estos brazos que ahora te reciben, y otro tiempo te recibieron, cuando la fortuna quiso que pudiese llamarte mía.

A estas razones, puso Luscinda en Cardenio los ojos, y, habiendo comenzado a conocerle, primero por la voz, y asegurándose que él era con la vista, casi fuera de sentido y sin tener cuenta a ningún honesto respeto, le echó los brazos al cuello, y, juntando su rostro con el de Cardenio, le dijo:

-Vos sí, señor mío, sois el verdadero dueño desta vuestra captiva, aunque más lo impida la contraria suerte, y aunque más amenazas le hagan a esta vida que en la vuestra se sustenta.

Estraño espectáculo fue éste para don Fernando y para todos los circunstantes, admirándose de tan no visto suceso. Parecióle a Dorotea que don Fernando había perdido la color del rostro y que hacía además de querer vengarse de Cardenio, porque le vio encaminar la mano a ponella en la espada; y, así como lo pensó, con no vista presteza se abrazó con él por las rodillas, besándoselas y teniéndole apretado, que no le dejaba mover, y, sin cesar un punto de sus lágrimas, le decía:

-¿Qué es lo que piensas hacer, único refugio mío, en este tan impensado trance? Tú tienes a tus pies a tu esposa, y la que quieres que lo sea está en los brazos de su marido. Mira si te estará bien o te será posible deshacer lo que el cielo ha hecho, o si te convendrá querer levantar a igualar a ti mismo a la que, pospuesto todo inconveniente, confirmada en su verdad y firmeza, delante de tus ojos tiene los suyos, bañados de licor amoroso el rostro y pecho de su verdadero esposo. Por quien Dios es te ruego, y por quien tú eres te suplico, que este tan notorio desengaño no sólo no acreciente tu ira, sino que la mengüe en tal manera, que con quietud y sosiego permitas que estos dos amantes le tengan, sin impedimiento tuyo, todo el tiempo que el cielo quisiere concedérsele; y en esto mostrarás la generosidad de tu ilustre y noble pecho, y verá el mundo que tiene contigo más fuerza la razón que el apetito.

En tanto que esto decía Dorotea, aunque Cardenio tenía abrazada a Luscinda, no quitaba los ojos de don Fernando, con determinación de que, si le viese hacer algún movimiento en su perjuicio, procurar defenderse y ofender como mejor pudiese a todos aquellos que en su daño se mostrasen, aunque le costase la vida. Pero a esta sazón acudieron los amigos de don Fernando, y el cura y el barbero, que a todo habían estado presentes, sin que faltase el bueno de Sancho Panza, y todos rodeaban a don Fernando, suplicándole tuviese por bien de mirar las lágrimas de Dorotea; y que, siendo verdad, como sin duda ellos creían que lo era, lo que en sus razones había dicho, que no permitiese quedase defraudada de sus tan justas esperanzas. Que considerase que, no acaso, como parecía, sino con particular providencia del cielo, se habían todos juntado en lugar donde menos ninguno pensaba; y que advirtiese -dijo el cura-que sola la muerte podía apartar a Luscinda de Cardenio; y, aunque los dividiesen filos de alguna espada, ellos tendrían por felicísima su muerte; y que en los lazos inremediables era suma cordura, forzándose y venciéndose a sí mismo, mostrar un generoso pecho, permitiendo que por sola su voluntad los dos gozasen el bien que el cielo ya les había concedido; que pusiese los ojos ansimesmo en la beldad de Dorotea, y vería que pocas o ninguna se le podían igualar, cuanto más hacerle ventaja, y que juntase a su hermosura su humildad y el extremo del amor que le tenía; y, sobre todo, advirtiese que si se preciaba de caballero y de cristiano, que no podía hacer otra cosa que cumplille la palabra dada, y que, cumpliéndosela, cumpliría con Dios y satisfaría a las gentes discretas, las cuales saben y conocen que es prerrogativa de la hermosura, aunque esté en sujeto humilde, como se acompañe con la honestidad, poder levantarse e igualarse a cualquiera alteza, sin nota de menoscabo del que la levanta e iguala a sí mismo; y, cuando se cumplen las fuertes leyes del gusto, como en ello no intervenga pecado, no debe de ser culpado el que las sigue.

En efeto, a estas razones añadieron todos otras, tales y tantas, que el valeroso pecho de don Fernando (en fin, como alimentado con ilustre sangre) se ablandó y se dejó vencer de la verdad, que él no pudiera negar aunque quisiera; y la señal que dio de haberse rendido y entregado al buen parecer que se le había propuesto fue abajarse y abrazar a Dorotea, diciéndole:

-Levantaos, señora mía, que no es justo que esté arrodillada a mis pies la que yo tengo en mi alma; y si hasta aquí no he dado muestras de lo que digo, quizá ha sido por orden del cielo, para que, viendo yo en vos la fe con que me amáis, os sepa estimar en lo que merecéis. Lo que os ruego es que no me reprehendáis mi mal término y mi mucho descuido, pues la misma ocasión y fuerza que me movió para acetaros por mía, esa misma me impelió para procurar no ser vuestro. Y que esto sea verdad, volved y mirad los ojos de la ya contenta Luscinda, y en ellos hallaréis disculpa de todos mis yerros; y, pues ella halló y alcanzó lo que deseaba, y yo he hallado en vos lo que me cumple, viva ella segura y contenta luengos y felices años con su Cardenio, que yo rogaré al cielo que me los deje vivir con mi Dorotea.

Y, diciendo esto, la tornó a abrazar y a juntar su rostro con el suyo, con tan tierno sentimiento, que le fue necesario tener gran cuenta con que las lágrimas no acabasen de dar indubitables señas de su amor y arrepentimiento. No lo hicieron así las de Luscinda y Cardenio, y aun las de casi todos los que allí presentes estaban, porque comenzaron a derramar tantas, los unos de contento propio y los otros del ajeno, que no parecía sino que algún grave y mal caso a todos había sucedido. Hasta Sancho Panza lloraba, aunque después dijo que no lloraba él sino por ver que Dorotea no era, como él pensaba, la reina Micomicona, de quien él tantas mercedes esperaba. Duró algún espacio, junto con el llanto, la admiración en todos, y luego Cardenio y Luscinda se fueron a poner de rodillas ante don Fernando, dándole gracias de la merced que les había hecho con tan corteses razones, que don Fernando no sabía qué responderles; y así, los levantó y abrazó con muestras de mucho amor y de mucha cortesía.

Preguntó luego a Dorotea le dijese cómo había venido a aquel lugar tan lejos del suyo. Ella, con breves y discretas razones, contó todo lo que antes había contado a Cardenio, de lo cual gustó tanto don Fernando y los que con él venían, que quisieran que durara el cuento más tiempo: tanta era la gracia con que Dorotea contaba sus desventuras. Y, así como hubo acabado, dijo don Fernando lo que en la ciudad le había acontecido después que halló el papel en el seno de Luscinda, donde declaraba ser esposa de Cardenio y no poderlo ser suya. Dijo que la quiso matar, y lo hiciera si de sus padres no fuera impedido; y que así, se salió de su casa, despechado y corrido, con determinación de vengarse con más comodidad; y que otro día supo como Luscinda había faltado de casa de sus padres, sin que nadie supiese decir dónde se había ido, y que, en resolución, al cabo de algunos meses vino a saber como estaba en un monesterio, con voluntad de quedarse en él toda la vida, si no la pudiese pasar con Cardenio; y que, así como lo supo, escogiendo para su compañía aquellos tres caballeros, vino al lugar donde estaba, a la cual no había querido hablar, temeroso que, en sabiendo que él estaba allí, había de haber más guarda en el monesterio; y así, aguardando un día a que la portería estuviese abierta, dejó a los dos a la guarda de la puerta, y él, con otro, habían entrado en el monesterio buscando a Luscinda, la cual hallaron en el claustro hablando con una monja; y, arrebatándola, sin darle lugar a otra cosa, se habían venido con ella a un lugar donde se acomodaron de aquello que hubieron menester para traella. Todo lo cual habían podido hacer bien a su salvo, por estar el monesterio en el campo, buen trecho fuera del pueblo. Dijo que, así como Luscinda se vio en su poder, perdió todos los sentidos; y que, después de vuelta en sí, no había hecho otra cosa sino llorar y suspirar, sin hablar palabra alguna; y que así, acompañados de silencio y de lágrimas, habían llegado a aquella venta, que para él era haber llegado al cielo, donde se rematan y tienen fin todas las desventuras de la tierra.

Capítulo XXXVII

TODO esto escuchaba Sancho, no con poco dolor de su ánimo, viendo que se le desaparecían e iban en humo las esperanzas de su ditado, y que la linda princesa Micomicona se le había vuelto en Dorotea, y el gigante en don Fernando, y su amo se estaba durmiendo a sueño suelto, bien descuidado de todo lo sucedido. No se podía asegurar Dorotea si era soñado el bien que poseía. Cardenio estaba en el mismo pensamiento, y el de Luscinda corría por la misma cuenta. Don Fernando daba gracias al cielo por la merced recibida y haberle sacado de aquel intrincado laberinto, donde se hallaba tan a pique de perder el crédito y el alma; y, finalmente, cuantos en la venta estaban, estaban contentos y gozosos del buen suceso que habían tenido tan trabados y desesperados negocios.

Todo lo ponía en su punto el cura, como discreto, y a cada uno daba el parabién del bien alcanzado; pero quien más jubilaba y se contentaba era la ventera, por la promesa que Cardenio y el cura le habían hecho de pagalle todos los daños e intereses que por cuenta de don Quijote le hubiesen venido. Sólo Sancho, como ya se ha dicho, era el afligido, el desventurado y el triste; y así, con malencónico semblante, entró a su amo, el cual acababa de despertar, a quien dijo:

-Bien puede vuestra merced, señor Triste Figura, dormir todo lo que quisiere, sin cuidado de matar a ningún gigante, ni de volver a la princesa su reino: que ya todo está hecho y concluido.

-Eso creo yo bien -respondió don Quijote-, porque he tenido con el gigante la más descomunal y desaforada batalla que pienso tener en todos los días de mi vida; y de un revés, ¡zas!, le derribé la cabeza en el suelo, y fue tanta la sangre que le salió, que los arroyos corrían por la tierra como si fueran de agua.

-Como si fueran de vino tinto, pudiera vuestra merced decir mejor -respondió Sancho-, porque quiero que sepa vuestra merced, si es que no lo sabe, que el gigante muerto es un cuero horadado, y la sangre, seis arrobas de vino tinto que encerraba en su vientre; y la cabeza cortada es la puta que me parió, y llévelo todo Satanás.

-Y ¿qué es lo que dices, loco? -replicó don Quijote-. ¿Estás en tu seso?

-Levántese vuestra merced -dijo Sancho-, y verá el buen recado que ha hecho, y lo que tenemos que pagar; y verá a la reina convertida en una dama particular, llamada Dorotea, con otros sucesos que, si cae en ellos, le han de admirar.

-No me maravillaría de nada deso -replicó don Quijote-, porque, si bien te acuerdas, la otra vez que aquí estuvimos te dije yo que todo cuanto aquí sucedía eran cosas de encantamento, y no sería mucho que ahora fuese lo mismo.

-Todo lo creyera yo -respondió Sancho-, si también mi manteamiento fuera cosa dese jaez, mas no lo fue, sino real y verdaderamente; y vi yo que el ventero que aquí está hoy día tenía del un cabo de la manta, y me empujaba hacia el cielo con mucho donaire y brío, y con tanta risa como fuerza; y donde interviene conocerse las personas, tengo para mí, aunque simple y pecador, que no hay encantamento alguno, sino mucho molimiento y mucha mala ventura.

-Ahora bien, Dios lo remediará -dijo don Quijote-. Dame de vestir y déjame salir allá fuera, que quiero ver los sucesos y transformaciones que dices.

Diole de vestir Sancho, y, en el entretanto que se vestía, contó el cura a don Fernando y a los demás las locuras de don Quijote, y del artificio que habían usado para sacarle de la Peña Pobre, donde él se imaginaba estar por desdenes de su señora. Contóles asimismo casi todas las aventuras que Sancho había contado, de que no poco se admiraron y rieron, por parecerles lo que a todos parecía: ser el más extraño género de locura que podía caber en pensamiento desparatado. Dijo más el cura: que, pues ya el buen suceso de la señora Dorotea impedía pasar con su disignio adelante, que era menester inventar y hallar otro para poderle llevar a su tierra. Ofrecióse Cardenio de proseguir lo comenzado, y que Luscinda haría y representaría la persona de Dorotea.

-No -dijo don Fernando-, no ha de ser así: que yo quiero que Dorotea prosiga su invención; que, como no sea muy lejos de aquí el lugar deste buen caballero, yo holgaré de que se procure su remedio.

-No está más de dos jornadas de aquí.

-Pues, aunque estuviera más, gustara yo de caminallas, a trueco de hacer tan buena obra.

Salió, en esto, don Quijote, armado de todos sus pertrechos, con el yelmo, aunque abollado, de Mambrino en la cabeza, embrazado de su rodela y arrimado a su tronco o lanzón. Suspendió a don Fernando y a los demás la extraña presencia de don Quijote, viendo su rostro de media legua de andadura, seco y amarillo, la desigualdad de sus armas y su mesurado continente, y estuvieron callando hasta ver lo que él decía, el cual, con mucha gravedad y reposo, puestos los ojos en la hermosa Dorotea, dijo:

-Estoy informado, hermosa señora, deste mi escudero que la vuestra grandeza se ha aniquilado, y vuestro ser se ha deshecho, porque de reina y gran señora que solíades ser os habéis vuelto en una particular doncella. Si esto ha sido por orden del rey nigromante de vuestro padre, temeroso que yo no os diese la necesaria y debida ayuda, digo que no supo ni sabe de la misa la media, y que fue poco versado en las historias caballerescas, porque si él las hubiera leído y pasado tan atentamente y con tanto espacio como yo las pasé y leí, hallara a cada paso cómo otros caballeros de menor fama que la mía habían acabado cosas más dificultosas, no siéndolo mucho matar a un gigantillo, por arrogante que sea; porque no ha muchas horas que yo me vi con él, y... quiero callar, porque no me digan que miento; pero el tiempo, descubridor de todas las cosas, lo dirá cuando menos lo pensemos.

-Vístesos vos con dos cueros, que no con un gigante -dijo a esta sazón el ventero.

Al cual mandó don Fernando que callase y no interrumpiese la plática de don Quijote en ninguna manera; y don Quijote prosiguió diciendo:

-Digo, en fin, alta y desheredada señora, que si por la causa que he dicho vuestro padre ha hecho este metamorfóseos en vuestra persona, que no le deis crédito alguno, porque no hay ningún peligro en la tierra por quien no se abra camino mi espada, con la cual, poniendo la cabeza de vuestro enemigo en tierra, os pondré a vos la corona de la vuestra en la cabeza en breves días.

No dijo más don Quijote, y esperó a que la princesa le respondiese, la cual, como ya sabía la determinación de don Fernando de que se prosiguiese adelante en el engaño hasta llevar a su tierra a don Quijote, con mucho donaire y gravedad, le respondió:

-Quienquiera que os dijo, valeroso caballero de la Triste Figura, que yo me había mudado y trocado de mi ser, no os dijo lo cierto, porque la misma que ayer fui me soy hoy. Verdad es que alguna mudanza han hecho en mí ciertos acaecimientos de buena ventura, que me la han dado la mejor que yo pudiera desearme, pero no por eso he dejado de ser la que antes y de tener los mismos pensamientos de valirme del valor de vuestro valeroso e invenerable brazo que siempre he tenido. Así que, señor mío, vuestra bondad vuelva la honra al padre que me engendró, y téngale por hombre advertido y prudente, pues con su ciencia halló camino tan fácil y tan verdadero para remediar mi desgracia; que yo creo que si por vos, señor, no fuera, jamás acertara a tener la ventura que tengo; y en esto digo tanta verdad como son buenos testigos della los más destos señores que están presentes. Lo que resta es que mañana nos pongamos en camino, porque ya hoy se podrá hacer poca jornada, y en lo demás del buen suceso que espero, lo dejaré a Dios y al valor de vuestro pecho.

Esto dijo la discreta Dorotea, y, en oyéndolo don Quijote, se volvió a Sancho, y, con muestras de mucho enojo, le dijo:

-Ahora te digo, Sanchuelo, que eres el mayor bellacuelo que hay en España.

Dime, ladrón vagamundo, ¿no me acabaste de decir ahora que esta princesa se había vuelto en una doncella que se llamaba Dorotea, y que la cabeza que entiendo que corté a un gigante era la puta que te parió, con otros disparates que me pusieron en la mayor confusión que jamás he estado en todos los días de mi vida? ¡Voto... -y miró al cielo y apretó los dientes-que estoy por hacer un estrago en ti, que ponga sal en la mollera a todos cuantos mentirosos escuderos hubiere de caballeros andantes, de aquí adelante, en el mundo!

-Vuestra merced se sosiegue, señor mío -respondió Sancho-, que bien podría ser que yo me hubiese engañado en lo que toca a la mutación de la señora princesa Micomicona; pero, en lo que toca a la cabeza del gigante, o, a lo menos, a la horadación de los cueros y a lo de ser vino tinto la sangre, no me engaño, ¡vive Dios!, porque los cueros allí están heridos, a la cabecera del lecho de vuestra merced, y el vino tinto tiene hecho un lago el aposento; y si no, al freír de los huevos lo verá; quiero decir que lo verá cuando aquí su merced del señor ventero le pida el menoscabo de todo. De lo demás, de que la señora reina se esté como se estaba, me regocijo en el alma, porque me va mi parte, como a cada hijo de vecino.

-Ahora yo te digo, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, que eres un mentecato; y perdóname, y basta.

-Basta -dijo don Fernando-, y no se hable más en esto; y, pues la señora princesa dice que se camine mañana, porque ya hoy es tarde, hágase así, y esta noche la podremos pasar en buena conversación hasta el venidero día, donde todos acompañaremos al señor don Quijote, porque queremos ser testigos de las valerosas e inauditas hazañas que ha de hacer en el discurso desta grande empresa que a su cargo lleva.

-Yo soy el que tengo de servir y acompañaros -respondió don Quijote-, y agradezco mucho la merced que se me hace y la buena opinión que de mí se tiene, la cual procuraré que salga verdadera, o me costará la vida, y aun más, si más costarme puede.

Muchas palabras de comedimiento y muchos ofrecimientos pasaron entre don Quijote y don Fernando; pero a todo puso silencio un pasajero que en aquella sazón entró en la venta, el cual en su traje mostraba ser cristiano recién venido de tierra de moros, porque venía vestido con una casaca de paño azul, corta de faldas, con medias mangas y sin cuello; los calzones eran asimismo de lienzo azul, con bonete de la misma color; traía unos borceguíes datilados y un alfanje morisco, puesto en un tahelí que le atravesaba el pecho. Entró luego tras él, encima de un jumento, una mujer a la morisca vestida, cubierto el rostro con una toca en la cabeza; traía un bonetillo de brocado, y vestida una almalafa, que desde los hombros a los pies la cubría. Era el hombre de robusto y agraciado talle, de edad de poco más de cuarenta años, algo moreno de rostro, largo de bigotes y la barba muy bien puesta. En resolución, él mostraba en su apostura que si estuviera bien vestido, le juzgaran por persona de calidad y bien nacida.

Pidió, en entrando, un aposento, y, como le dijeron que en la venta no le había, mostró recibir pesadumbre; y, llegándose a la que en el traje parecía mora, la apeó en sus brazos. Luscinda, Dorotea, la ventera, su hija y Maritornes, llevadas del nuevo y para ellas nunca visto traje, rodearon a la mora, y Dorotea, que siempre fue agraciada, comedida y discreta, pareciéndole que así ella como el que la traía se congojaban por la falta del aposento, le dijo:

-No os dé mucha pena, señora mía, la incomodidad de regalo que aquí falta, pues es propio de ventas no hallarse en ellas; pero, con todo esto, si gustáredes de pasar con nosotras -señalando a Luscinda-, quizá en el discurso de este camino habréis hallado otros no tan buenos acogimientos.

No respondió nada a esto la embozada, ni hizo otra cosa que levantarse de donde sentado se había, y, puestas entrambas manos cruzadas sobre el pecho, inclinada la cabeza, dobló el cuerpo en señal de que lo agradecía. Por su silencio imaginaron que, sin duda alguna, debía de ser mora, y que no sabía hablar cristiano. Llegó, en esto, el cautivo, que entendiendo en otra cosa hasta entonces había estado, y, viendo que todas tenían cercada a la que con él venía, y que ella a cuanto le decían callaba, dijo:

-Señoras mías, esta doncella apenas entiende mi lengua, ni sabe hablar otra ninguna sino conforme a su tierra, y por esto no debe de haber respondido, ni responde, a lo que se le ha preguntado.

-No se le pregunta otra cosa ninguna -respondió Luscinda-sino ofrecelle por esta noche nuestra compañía y parte del lugar donde nos acomodáremos, donde se le hará el regalo que la comodidad ofreciere, con la voluntad que obliga a servir a todos los extranjeros que dello tuvieren necesidad, especialmente siendo mujer a quien se sirve.

-Por ella y por mí -respondió el cautivo-os beso, señora mía, las manos, y estimo mucho y en lo que es razón la merced ofrecida; que en tal ocasión, y de tales personas como vuestro parecer muestra, bien se echa de ver que ha de ser muy grande.

-Decidme, señor -dijo Dorotea-: ¿esta señora es cristiana o mora? Porque el traje y el silencio nos hace pensar que es lo que no querríamos que fuese.

-Mora es en el traje y en el cuerpo, pero en el alma es muy grande cristiana, porque tiene grandísimos deseos de serlo.

-Luego, ¿no es bautizada? -replicó Luscinda.

-No ha habido lugar para ello -respondió el cautivo-después que salió de Argel, su patria y tierra, y hasta agora no se ha visto en peligro de muerte tan cercana que obligase a baptizalla sin que supiese primero todas las ceremonias que nuestra Madre la Santa Iglesia manda; pero Dios será servido que presto se bautice con la decencia que la calidad de su persona merece, que es más de lo que muestra su hábito y el mío.

Con estas razones puso gana en todos los que escuchándole estaban de saber quién fuese la mora y el cautivo, pero nadie se lo quiso preguntar por entonces, por ver que aquella sazón era más para procurarles descanso que para preguntarles sus vidas. Dorotea la tomó por la mano y la llevó a sentar junto a sí, y le rogó que se quitase el embozo. Ella miró al cautivo, como si le preguntara le dijese lo que decían y lo que ella haría. Él, en lengua árabe, le dijo que le pedían se quitase el embozo, y que lo hiciese; y así, se lo quitó, y descubrió un rostro tan hermoso, que Dorotea la tuvo por más hermosa que a Luscinda, y Luscinda por más hermosa que a Dorotea, y todos los circustantes conocieron que si alguno se podría igualar al de las dos, era el de la mora, y aun hubo algunos que le aventajaron en alguna cosa. Y, como la hermosura tenga prerrogativa y gracia de reconciliar los ánimos y atraer las voluntades, luego se rindieron todos al deseo de servir y acariciar a la hermosa mora.

Preguntó don Fernando al cautivo cómo se llamaba la mora, el cual respondió que lela Zoraida; y, así como esto oyó, ella entendió lo que le habían preguntado al cristiano, y dijo con mucha priesa, llena de congoja y donaire:

-¡No, no Zoraida: María, María! -dando a entender que se llamaba María y no Zoraida.

Estas palabras, el grande afecto con que la mora las dijo, hicieron derramar más de una lágrima a algunos de los que la escucharon, especialmente a las mujeres, que de su naturaleza son tiernas y compasivas. Abrazóla Luscinda con mucho amor, diciéndole:

-Sí, sí: María, María.

A lo cual respondió la mora:

-¡Sí, sí: María; Zoraida macange! -que quiere decir no.

Ya en esto llegaba la noche, y, por orden de los que venían con don Fernando, había el ventero puesto diligencia y cuidado en aderezarles de cenar lo mejor que a él le fue posible. Llegada, pues, la hora, sentáronse todos a una larga mesa, como de tinelo, porque no la había redonda ni cuadrada en la venta, y dieron la cabecera y principal asiento, puesto que él lo rehusaba, a don Quijote, el cual quiso que estuviese a su lado la señora Micomicona, pues él era su aguardador. Luego se sentaron Luscinda y Zoraida, y frontero dellas don Fernando y Cardenio, y luego el cautivo y los demás caballeros, y, al lado de las señoras, el cura y el barbero. Y así, cenaron con mucho contento, y acrecentóseles más viendo que, dejando de comer don Quijote, movido de otro semejante espíritu

-Verdaderamente, si bien se considera, señores míos, grandes e inauditas cosas ven los que profesan la orden de la andante caballería. Si no, ¿cuál de los vivientes habrá en el mundo que ahora por la puerta deste castillo entrara, y de la suerte que estamos nos viere, que juzgue y crea que nosotros somos quien somos? ¿Quién podrá decir que esta señora que está a mi lado es la gran reina que todos sabemos, y que yo soy aquel Caballero de la Triste Figura que anda por ahí en boca de la fama? Ahora no hay que dudar, sino que esta arte y ejercicio excede a todas aquellas y aquellos que los hombres inventaron, y tanto más se ha de tener en estima cuanto a más peligros está sujeto. Quítenseme delante los que dijeren que las letras hacen ventaja a las armas, que les diré, y sean quien se fueren, que no saben lo que dicen. Porque la razón que los tales suelen decir, y a lo que ellos más se atienen, es que los trabajos del espíritu exceden a los del cuerpo, y que las armas sólo con el cuerpo se ejercitan, como si fuese su ejercicio oficio de ganapanes, para el cual no es menester más de buenas fuerzas; o como si en esto que llamamos armas los que las profesamos no se encerrasen los actos de la fortaleza, los cuales piden para ejecutarlos mucho entendimiento; o como si no trabajase el ánimo del guerrero que tiene a su cargo un ejército, o la defensa de una ciudad sitiada, así con el espíritu como con el cuerpo. Si no, véase si se alcanza con las fuerzas corporales a saber y conjeturar el intento del enemigo, los disignios, las estratagemas, las dificultades, el prevenir los daños que se temen; que todas estas cosas son acciones del entendimiento, en quien no tiene parte alguna el cuerpo. Siendo pues así, que las armas requieren espíritu, como las letras, veamos ahora cuál de los dos espíritus, el del letrado o el del guerrero, trabaja más. Y esto se vendrá a conocer por el fin y paradero a que cada uno se encamina, porque aquella intención se ha de estimar en más que tiene por objeto más noble fin. Es el fin y paradero de las letras..., y no hablo ahora de las divinas, que tienen por blanco llevar y encaminar las almas al cielo, que a un fin tan sin fin como éste ninguno otro se le puede igualar; hablo de las letras humanas, que es su fin poner en su punto la justicia distributiva y dar a cada uno lo que es suyo, entender y hacer que las buenas leyes se guarden. Fin, por cierto, generoso y alto y digno de grande alabanza, pero no de tanta como merece aquel a que las armas atienden, las cuales tienen por objeto y fin la paz, que es el mayor bien que los hombres pueden desear en esta vida. Y así, las primeras buenas nuevas que tuvo el mundo y tuvieron los hombres fueron las que dieron los ángeles la noche que fue nuestro día, cuando cantaron en los aires: «Gloria sea en las alturas, y paz en la tierra, a los hombres de buena voluntad»; y a la salutación que el mejor maestro de la tierra y del cielo enseñó a sus allegados y favoritos, fue decirles que cuando entrasen en alguna casa, dijese: «Paz sea en esta casa»; y otras muchas veces les dijo: «Mi paz os doy, mi paz os dejo: paz sea con vosotros», bien como joya y prenda dada y dejada de tal mano; joya que sin ella, en la tierra ni en el cielo puede haber bien alguno. Esta paz es el verdadero fin de la guerra, que lo mismo es decir armas que guerra. Prosupuesta, pues, esta verdad, que el fin de la guerra es la paz, y que en esto hace ventaja al fin de las letras, vengamos ahora a los trabajos del cuerpo del letrado y a los del profesor de las armas, y véase cuáles son mayores.

De tal manera, y por tan buenos términos, iba prosiguiendo en su plática don Quijote que obligó a que, por entonces, ninguno de los que escuchándole estaban le tuviese por loco; antes, como todos los más eran caballeros, a quien son anejas las armas, le escuchaban de muy buena gana; y él prosiguió diciendo:

-Digo, pues, que los trabajos del estudiante son éstos: principalmente pobreza (no porque todos sean pobres, sino por poner este caso en todo el extremo que pueda ser); y, en haber dicho que padece pobreza, me parece que no había que decir más de su mala ventura, porque quien es pobre no tiene cosa buena. Esta pobreza la padece por sus partes, ya en hambre, ya en frío, ya en desnudez, ya en todo junto; pero, con todo eso, no es tanta que no coma, aunque sea un poco más tarde de lo que se usa, aunque sea de las sobras de los ricos; que es la mayor miseria del estudiante éste que entre ellos llaman andar a la sopa; y no les falta algún ajeno brasero o chimenea, que, si no callenta, a lo menos entibie su frío, y, en fin, la noche duermen debajo de cubierta. No quiero llegar a otras menudencias, conviene a saber, de la falta de camisas y no sobra de zapatos, la rareza y poco pelo del vestido, ni aquel ahitarse con tanto gusto, cuando la buena suerte les depara algún banquete. Por este camino que he pintado, áspero y dificultoso, tropezando aquí, cayendo allí, levantándose acullá, tornando a caer acá, llegan al grado que desean; el cual alcanzado, a muchos hemos visto que, habiendo pasado por estas Sirtes y por estas Scilas y Caribdis, como llevados en vuelo de la favorable fortuna, digo que los hemos visto mandar y gobernar el mundo desde una silla, trocada su hambre en hartura, su frío en refrigerio, su desnudez en galas, y su dormir en una estera en reposar en holandas y damascos: premio justamente merecido de su virtud. Pero, contrapuestos y comparados sus trabajos con los del milite guerrero, se quedan muy atrás en todo, como ahora diré.

Capítulo XXXVIII

-Pues comenzamos en el estudiante por la pobreza y sus partes, veamos si es más rico el soldado. Y veremos que no hay ninguno más pobre en la misma pobreza, porque está atenido a la miseria de su paga, que viene o tarde o nunca, o a lo que garbeare por sus manos, con notable peligro de su vida y de su conciencia. Y a veces suele ser su desnudez tanta, que un colete acuchillado le sirve de gala y de camisa, y en la mitad del invierno se suele reparar de las inclemencias del cielo, estando en la campaña rasa, con sólo el aliento de su boca, que, como sale de lugar vacío, tengo por averiguado que debe de salir frío, contra toda naturaleza. Pues esperad que espere que llegue la noche, para restaurarse de todas estas incomodidades, en la cama que le aguarda, la cual, si no es por su culpa, jamás pecará de estrecha; que bien puede medir en la tierra los pies que quisiere, y revolverse en ella a su sabor, sin temor que se le encojan las sábanas. Lléguese, pues, a todo esto, el día y la hora de recibir el grado de su ejercicio; lléguese un día de batalla, que allí le pondrán la borla en la cabeza, hecha de hilas, para curarle algún balazo, que quizá le habrá pasado las sienes, o le dejará estropeado de brazo o pierna. Y, cuando esto no suceda, sino que el cielo piadoso le guarde y conserve sano y vivo, podrá ser que se quede en la misma pobreza que antes estaba, y que sea menester que suceda uno y otro rencuentro, una y otra batalla, y que de todas salga vencedor, para medrar en algo; pero estos milagros vense raras veces. Pero, decidme, señores, si habéis mirado en ello: ¿cuán menos son los premiados por la guerra que los que han perecido en ella? Sin duda, habéis de responder que no tienen comparación, ni se pueden reducir a cuenta los muertos, y que se podrán contar los premiados vivos con tres letras de guarismo. Todo esto es al revés en los letrados; porque, de faldas, que no quiero decir de mangas, todos tienen en qué entretenerse. Así que, aunque es mayor el trabajo del soldado, es mucho menor el premio. Pero a esto se puede responder que es más fácil premiar a dos mil letrados que a treinta mil soldados, porque a aquéllos se premian con darles oficios, que por fuerza se han de dar a los de su profesión, y a éstos no se pueden premiar sino con la misma hacienda del señor a quien sirven; y esta imposibilidad fortifica más la razón que tengo. Pero dejemos esto aparte, que es laberinto de muy dificultosa salida, sino volvamos a la preeminencia de las armas contra las letras, materia que hasta ahora está por averiguar, según son las razones que cada una de su parte alega. Y, entre las que he dicho, dicen las letras que sin ellas no se podrían sustentar las armas, porque la guerra también tiene sus leyes y está sujeta a ellas, y que las leyes caen debajo de lo que son letras y letrados. A esto responden las armas que las leyes no se podrán sustentar sin ellas, porque con las armas se defienden las repúblicas, se conservan los reinos, se guardan las ciudades, se aseguran los caminos, se despejan los mares de cosarios; y, finalmente, si por ellas no fuese, las repúblicas, los reinos, las monarquías, las ciudades, los caminos de mar y tierra estarían sujetos al rigor y a la confusión que trae consigo la guerra el tiempo que dura y tiene licencia de usar de sus privilegios y de sus fuerzas. Y es razón averiguada que aquello que más cuesta se estima y debe de estimar en más. Alcanzar alguno a ser eminente en letras le cuesta tiempo, vigiliias, hambre, desnudez, váguídos de cabeza, indigestiones de estómago, y otras cosas a éstas adherentes, que, en parte, ya las tengo referidas; mas llegar uno por sus términos a ser buen soldado le cuesta todo lo que a el estudiante, en tanto mayor grado que no tiene comparación, porque a cada paso está a pique de perder la vida. Y ¿qué temor de necesidad y pobreza puede llegar ni fatigar al estudiante, que llegue al que tiene un soldado, que, hallándose cercado en alguna fuerza, y estando de posta, o guarda, en algún revellín o caballero, siente que los enemigos están minando hacia la parte donde él está, y no puede apartarse de allí por ningún caso, ni huir el peligro que de tan cerca le amenaza? Sólo lo que puede hacer es dar noticia a su capitán de lo que pasa, para que lo remedie con alguna contramina, y él estarse quedo, temiendo y esperando cuándo improvisamente ha de subir a las nubes sin alas y bajar al profundo sin su voluntad. Y si éste parece pequeño peligro, veamos si le iguala o hace ventaja el de embestirse dos galeras por las proas en mitad del mar espacioso, las cuales enclavijadas y trabadas, no le queda al soldado más espacio del que concede dos pies de tabla del espolón; y, con todo esto, viendo que tiene delante de sí tantos ministros de la muerte que le amenazan cuantos cañones de artillería se asestan de la parte contraria, que no distan de su cuerpo una lanza, y viendo que al primer descuido de los pies iría a visitar los profundos senos de Neptuno; y, con todo esto, con intrépido corazón, llevado de la honra que le incita, se pone a ser blanco de tanta arcabucería, y procura pasar por tan estrecho paso al bajel contrario. Y lo que más es de admirar: que apenas uno ha caído donde no se podrá levantar hasta la fin del mundo, cuando otro ocupa su mismo lugar; y si éste también cae en el mar, que como a enemigo le aguarda, otro y otro le sucede, sin dar tiempo al tiempo de sus muertes: valentía y atrevimiento el mayor que se puede hallar en todos los trances de la guerra. Bien hayan aquellos benditos siglos que carecieron de la espantable furia de aquestos endemoniados instrumentos de la artillería, a cuyo inventor tengo para mí que en el infierno se le está dando el premio de su diabólica invención, con la cual dio causa que un infame y cobarde brazo quite la vida a un valeroso caballero, y que, sin saber cómo o por dónde, en la mitad del coraje y brío que enciende y anima a los valientes pechos, llega una desmandada bala, disparada de quien quizá huyó y se espantó del resplandor que hizo el fuego al disparar de la maldita máquina, y corta y acaba en un instante los pensamientos y vida de quien la merecía gozar luengos siglos. Y así, considerando esto, estoy por decir que en el alma me pesa de haber tomado este ejercicio de caballero andante en edad tan detestable como es esta en que ahora vivimos; porque, aunque a mí ningún peligro me pone miedo, todavía me pone recelo pensar si la pólvora y el estaño me han de quitar la ocasión de hacerme famoso y conocido por el valor de mi brazo y filos de mi espada, por todo lo descubierto de la tierra. Pero haga el cielo lo que fuere servido, que tanto seré más estimado, si salgo con lo que pretendo, cuanto a mayores peligros me he puesto que se pusieron los caballeros andantes de los pasados siglos.

Todo este largo preámbulo dijo don Quijote, en tanto que los demás cenaban, olvidándose de llevar bocado a la boca, puesto que algunas veces le había dicho Sancho Panza que cenase, que después habría lugar para decir todo lo que quisiese. En los que escuchado le habían sobrevino nueva lástima de ver que hombre que, al parecer, tenía buen entendimiento y buen discurso en todas las cosas que trataba, le hubiese perdido tan rematadamente, en tratándole de su negra y pizmienta caballería. El cura le dijo que tenía mucha razón en todo cuanto había dicho en favor de las armas, y que él, aunque letrado y graduado, estaba de su mismo parecer.

Acabaron de cenar, levantaron los manteles, y, en tanto que la ventera, su hija y Maritornes aderezaban el camaranchón de don Quijote de la Mancha, donde habían determinado que aquella noche las mujeres solas en él se recogiesen, don Fernando rogó al cautivo les contase el discurso de su vida, porque no podría ser sino que fuese peregrino y gustoso, según las muestras que había comenzado a dar, viniendo en compañía de Zoraida. A lo cual respondió el cautivo que de muy buena gana haría lo que se le mandaba, y que sólo temía que el cuento no había de ser tal, que les diese el gusto que él deseaba; pero que, con todo eso, por no faltar en obedecelle, le contaría. El cura y todos los demás se lo agradecieron, y de nuevo se lo rogaron; y él, viéndose rogar de tantos, dijo que no eran menester ruegos adonde el mandar tenía tanta fuerza.

-Y así, estén vuestras mercedes atentos, y oirán un discurso verdadero, a quien podría ser que no llegasen los mentirosos que con curioso y pensado artificio suelen componerse.

Con esto que dijo, hizo que todos se acomodasen y le prestasen un grande silencio; y él, viendo que ya callaban y esperaban lo que decir quisiese, con voz agradable y reposada, comenzó a decir desta manera:

Capítulo XXXIX

Donde el cautivo cuenta su vida y sucesos

-«EN un lugar de las Montañas de León tuvo principio mi linaje, con quien fue más agradecida y liberal la naturaleza que la fortuna, aunque, en la estrechez de aquellos pueblos, todavía alcanzaba mi padre fama de rico, y verdaderamente lo fuera si así se diera maña a conservar su hacienda como se la daba en gastalla. Y la condición que tenía de ser liberal y gastador le procedió de haber sido soldado los años de su juventud, que es escuela la soldadesca donde el mezquino se hace franco, y el franco, pródigo; y si algunos soldados se hallan miserables, son como monstruos, que se ven raras veces. Pasaba mi padre los términos de la liberalidad, y rayaba en los de ser pródigo: cosa que no le es de ningún provecho al hombre casado, y que tiene hijos que le han de suceder en el nombre y en el ser. Los que mi padre tenía eran tres, todos varones y todos de edad de poder elegir estado. Viendo, pues, mi padre que, según él decía, no podía irse a la mano contra su condición, quiso privarse del instrumento y causa que le hacía gastador y dadivoso, que fue privarse de la hacienda, sin la cual el mismo Alejandro pareciera estrecho.

»Y así, llamándonos un día a todos tres a solas en un aposento, nos dijo unas razones semejantes a las que ahora diré: “Hijos, para deciros que os quiero bien, basta saber y decir que sois mis hijos; y, para entender que os quiero mal, basta saber que no me voy a la mano en lo que toca a conservar vuestra hacienda. Pues, para que entendáis desde aquí adelante que os quiero como padre, y que no os quiero destruir como padrastro, quiero hacer una cosa con vosotros que ha muchos días que la tengo pensada y con madura consideración dispuesta. Vosotros estáis ya en edad de tomar estado, o, a lo menos, de elegir ejercicio, tal que, cuando mayores, os honre y aproveche. Y lo que he pensado es hacer de mi hacienda cuatro partes: las tres os daré a vosotros, a cada uno lo que le tocare, sin exceder en cosa alguna, y con la otra me quedará yo para vivir y sustentarme los días que el cielo fuere servido de darme de vida. Pero querría que, después que cada uno tuviese en su poder la parte que le toca de su hacienda, siguiese uno de los caminos que le diré. Hay un refrán en nuestra España, a mi parecer muy verdadero, como todos lo son, por ser sentencias breves sacadas de la lengua y discreta experiencia; y el que yo digo dice: ‘Iglesia, o mar, o casa real’, como si más claramente dijera: ‘Quien quisiere valer y ser rico siga o la Iglesia, o navegue, ejercitando el arte de la mercancía, o entre a servir a los reyes en sus casas'; porque dicen: 'Más vale migaja de rey que merced de señor'. Digo esto porque querría, y es mi voluntad, que uno de vosotros siguiese las letras, el otro la mercancía, y el otro sirviese al rey en la guerra, pues es dificultoso entrar a servirle en su casa; que, ya que la guerra no dé muchas riquezas, suele dar mucho valor y mucha fama. Dentro de ocho días, os daré toda vuestra parte en dineros, sin defraudaros en un ardite, como lo veréis por la obra. Decidme ahora si queréis seguir mi parecer y consejo en lo que os he propuesto". Y, mandándome a mí, por ser el mayor, que respondiese, después de haberle dicho que no se deshiciese de la hacienda, sino que gastase todo lo que fuese su voluntad, que nosotros éramos mozos para saber ganarla, vine a concluir en que cumpliría su gusto, y que el mío era seguir el ejercicio de las armas, sirviendo en él a Dios y a mi rey. El segundo hermano hizo los mismos ofrecimientos, y escogió el irse a las Indias, llevando empleada la hacienda que le cupiese. El menor, y, a lo que yo creo, el más discreto, dijo que quería seguir la Iglesia, o irse a acabar sus comenzados estudios a Salamanca. Así como acabamos de concordarnos y escoger nuestros ejercicios, mi padre nos abrazó a todos, y, con la brevedad que dijo, puso por obra cuanto nos había prometido; y, dando a cada uno su parte, que, a lo que se me acuerda, fueron cada tres mil ducados, en dineros (porque un nuestro tío compró toda la hacienda y la pagó de contado, porque no saliese del tronco de la casa), en un mismo día nos despedimos todos tres de nuestro buen padre; y, en aquel mismo, pareciéndome a mí ser inhumanidad que mi padre quedase viejo y con tan poca hacienda, hice con él que de mis tres mil tomase los dos mil ducados, porque a mí me bastaba el resto para acomodarme de lo que había menester un soldado. Mis dos hermanos, movidos de mi ejemplo, cada uno le dio mil ducados: de modo que a mi padre le quedaron cuatro mil en dineros, y más tres mil, que, a lo que parece, valía la hacienda que le cupo, que no quiso vender, sino quedarse con ella en raíces. Digo, en fin, que nos despedimos dél y de aquel nuestro tío que he dicho, no sin mucho sentimiento y lágrimas de todos, encargándonos que les hiciésemos saber, todas las veces que hubiese comodidad para ello, de nuestros sucesos, prósperos o adversos. Prometímosselo, y, abrazándonos y echándonos su bendición, el uno tomó el viaje de Salamanca, el otro de Sevilla y yo el de Alicante, adonde tuve nuevas que había una nave ginovesa que cargaba allí lana para Génova.

Milán, donde me acomodé de armas y de algunas galas de soldado, de donde quise ir a asentar mi plaza al Piamonte; y, estando ya de camino para Alejandría de la Palla, tuve nuevas que el gran duque de Alba pasaba a Flandes. Mudé propósito, fuime con él, servíle en las jornadas que hizo, halléme en la muerte de los condes de Eguemón y de Hornos, alcancé a ser alférez de un famoso capitán de Guadalajara, llamado Diego de Urbina; y, a cabo de algún tiempo que llegué a Flandes, se tuvo nuevas de la liga que la Santidad del Papa Pío Quinto, de felice recordación, había hecho con Venecia y con España, contra el enemigo común, que es el Turco; el cual, en aquel mesmo tiempo, había ganado con su armada la famosa isla de Chipre, que estaba debajo del dominio del veneciano: y pérdida lamentable y desdichada. Súpose cierto que venía por general desta liga el serenísimo don Juan de Austria, hermano natural de nuestro buen rey don Felipe. Divulgóse el grandísimo aparato de guerra que se hacía. Todo lo cual me incitó y conmovió el ánimo y el deseo de verme en la jornada que se esperaba; y, aunque tenía barruntos, y casi promesas ciertas, de que en la primera ocasión que se ofreciese sería promovido a capitán, lo quise dejar todo y venirme, como me vine, a Italia. Y quiso mi buena suerte que el señor don Juan de Austria acababa de llegar a Génova, que pasaba a Nápoles a juntarse con la armada de Venecia, como después lo hizo en Mecina.

»Digo, en fin, que yo me hallé en aquella felicísima jornada, ya hecho capitán de infantería, a cuyo honroso cargo me subió mi buena suerte, más que mis merecimientos. Y aquel día, que fue para la cristiandad tan dichoso, porque en él se desengañó el mundo y todas las naciones del error en que estaban, creyendo que los turcos eran invencibles por la mar: en aquel día, digo, donde quedó el orgullo y soberbia otomana quebrantada, entre tantos venturosos como allí hubo (porque más ventura tuvieron los cristianos que allí murieron que los que vivos y vencedores quedaron), yo solo fui el desdichado, pues, en cambio de que pudiera esperar, si fuera en los romanos siglos, alguna naval corona, me vi aquella noche que siguió a tan famoso día con cadenas a los pies y esposas a las manos.

cristianos los que aquel día alcanzaron la deseada libertad, que todos venían al remo en la turquesca armada.

»Lleváronme a Costantinopla, donde el Gran Turco Selim hizo general de la mar a mi amo, porque había hecho su deber en la batalla, habiendo llevado por muestra de su valor el estandarte de la religión de Malta. Halléme el segundo año, que fue el de setenta y dos, en Navarino, bogando en la capitana de los tres fanales. Vi y noté la ocasión que allí se perdió de no coger en el puerto toda el armada turquesca, porque todos los leventes y jenízaros que en ella venían tuvieron por cierto que les habían de embestir dentro del mismo puerto, y tenían a punto su ropa y pasamaques, que son sus zapatos, para huirse luego por tierra, sin esperar ser combatidos: tanto era el miedo que habían cobrado a nuestra armada. Pero el cielo lo ordenó de otra manera, no por culpa ni descuido del general que a los nuestros regía, sino por los pecados de la cristiandad, y porque quiere y permite Dios que tengamos siempre verdugos que nos castiguen.

»En efeto, el Uchalí se recogió a Modón, que es una isla que está junto a Navarino, y, echando la gente en tierra, fortificó la boca del puerto, y estúvose quedo hasta que el señor don Juan se volvió. En este viaje se tomó la galera que se llamaba La Presa, de quien era capitán un hijo de aquel famoso cosario Barbarroja. Tomóla la capitana de Nápoles, llamada La Loba, regida por aquel rayo de la guerra, por el padre de los soldados, por aquel venturoso y jamás vencido capitán don Álvaro de Bazán, marqués de Santa Cruz. Y no quiero dejar de decir lo que sucedió en la presa de La Presa. Era tan cruel el hijo de Barbarroja, y trataba tan mal a sus cautivos, que, así como los que venían al remo vieron que la galera Loba les iba entrando y que los alcanzaba, soltaron todos a un tiempo los remos, y asieron de su capitán, que estaba sobre el estanterol gritando que bogasen apriesa, y pasándole de banco en banco, de popa a proa, le dieron bocados, que a poco más que pasó del árbol ya había pasado su ánima al infierno: tal era, como he dicho, la crueldad con que los trataba y el odio que ellos le tenían.

»Perdióse, en fin, la Goleta; perdióse el fuerte, sobre las cuales plazas hubo de soldados turcos, pagados, setenta y cinco mil, y de moros, y alárabes de toda la África, más de cuatrocientos mil, acompañado este tan gran número de gente con tantas municiones y pertrechos de guerra, y con tantos gastadores, que con las manos y a puñados de tierra pudieran cubrir la Goleta y el fuerte. Perdióse primero la Goleta, tenida hasta entonces por inexpugnable; y no se perdió por culpa de sus defensores, los cuales hicieron en su defensa todo aquello que debían y podían, sino porque la experiencia mostró la facilidad con que se podían levantar trincheas en aquella desierta arena, porque a dos palmos se hallaba agua, y los turcos no la hallaron a dos varas; y así, con muchos sacos de arena levantaron las trincheas tan altas que sobrepujaban las murallas de la fuerza; y, tirándoles a caballero, ninguno podía parar, ni asistir a la defensa. Fue común opinión que no se habían de encerrar los nuestros en la Goleta, sino esperar en campaña al desembarcadero; y los que esto dicen hablan de lejos y con poca experiencia de casos semejantes, porque si en la Goleta y en el fuerte apenas había siete mil soldados, ¿cómo podía tan poco número, aunque más esforzados fuesen, salir a la campaña y quedar en las fuerzas, contra tanto como era el de los enemigos?; y ¿cómo es posible dejar de perderse fuerza que no es socorrida, y más cuando la cercan enemigos muchos y porfiados, y en su misma tierra? Pero a muchos les pareció, y así me pareció a mí, que fue particular gracia y merced que el cielo hizo a España en permitir que se asolase aquella oficina y capa de maldades, y aquella gomia o esponja y polilla de la infinidad de dineros que allí sin provecho se gastaban, sin servir de otra cosa que de conservar la memoria de haberla ganado la felicísima del invictísimo Carlos Quinto; como si fuera menester para hacerla eterna, como lo es y será, que aquellas piedras la sustentaran.

Murieron en estas dos fuerzas muchas personas de cuenta, de las cuales fue una Pagán de Oria, caballero del hábito de San Juan, de condición generoso, como lo mostró la summa liberalidad que usó con su hermano, el famoso Juan de Andrea de Oria; y lo que más hizo lastimosa su muerte fue haber muerto a manos de unos alárabes de quien se fió, viendo ya perdido el fuerte, que se ofrecieron de llevarle en hábito de moro a Tabarca, que es un portezuelo o casa que en aquellas riberas tienen los ginoveses que se ejercitan en la pesquería del coral; los cuales alárabes le cortaron la cabeza y se la trujeron al general de la armada turquesca, el cual cumplió con ellos nuestro refrán castellano: “Que aunque la traición aplace, el traidor se aborrece”; y así, se dice que mandó el general ahorcar a los que le trujeron el presente, porque no se le habían traído vivo.

En el punto que el cautivo nombró a don Pedro de Aguilar, don Fernando miró a sus camaradas, y todos tres se sonrieron; y, cuando llegó a decir de los sonetos, dijo el uno:

-Antes que vuestra merced pase adelante, le suplico me diga qué se hizo ese don Pedro de Aguilar que ha dicho.

-Lo que sé es -respondió el cautivo-que, al cabo de dos años que estuvo en Constantinopla, se huyó en traje de arnaúte con un griego espía, y no sé si vino en libertad, puesto que creo que sí, porque de allí a un año vi yo al griego en Constantinopla, y no le pude preguntar el suceso de aquel viaje.

-Pues lo fue -respondió el caballero-, porque ese don Pedro es mi hermano, y está ahora en nuestro lugar, bueno y rico, casado y con tres hijos.

-Gracias sean dadas a Dios -dijo el cautivo-por tantas mercedes como le hizo; porque no hay en la tierra, conforme mi parecer, contento que se iguale a alcanzar la libertad perdida.

-Y más -replicó el caballero-, que yo sé los sonetos que mi hermano hizo.

-Dígalos, pues, vuestra merced -dijo el cautivo-, que los sabrá decir mejor que yo.

-Que me place -respondió el caballero-; y el de la Goleta decía así:

Capítulo XL

Donde se prosigue la historia del cautivo

SONETO

Almas dichosas que del mortal velo libres y esentas, por el bien que obrastes, desde la baja tierra os levantastes a lo más alto y lo mejor del cielo, y, ardiendo en ira y en honroso celo, 5

de los cuerpos la fuerza ejercitastes, que en propia y sangre ajena colorastes el mar vecino y arenoso suelo; primero que el valor faltó la vida en los cansados brazos, que, muriendo, 10 con ser vencidos, llevan la vitoria.

Y esta vuestra mortal, triste caída entre el muro y el hierro, os va adquiriendo fama que el mundo os da, y el cielo gloria.

-Desa mesma manera le sé yo -dijo el cautivo.

-Pues el del fuerte, si mal no me acuerdo -dijo el caballero-, dice así:

De entre esta tierra estéril, derribada, destos terrones por el suelo echados, las almas santas de tres mil soldados subieron vivas a mejor morada, siendo primero, en vano, ejercitada 5

la fuerza de sus brazos esforzados, hasta que, al fin, de pocos y cansados, dieron la vida al filo de la espada.

Y éste es el suelo que continuo ha sido de mil memorias lamentables lleno 10 en los pasados siglos y presentes.

Mas no más justas de su duro seno habrán al claro cielo almas subido, ni aun él sostuvo cuerpos tan valientes.

No parecieron mal los sonetos, y el cautivo se alegró con las nuevas que de su camarada le dieron; y, prosiguiendo su cuento, dijo: -«Rendidos, pues, la Goleta y el fuerte, los turcos dieron orden en dismantelar la Goleta, porque el fuerte quedó tal, que no hubo qué poner por tierra, y para hacerlo con más brevedad y menos trabajo, la minaron por tres partes; pero con ninguna se pudo volar lo que parecía menos fuerte, que eran las murallas viejas; y todo aquello que había quedado en pie de la fortificación nueva que había hecho el Fratín, con mucha facilidad vino a tierra. En resolución, la armada volvió a Constantinopla, triunfante y vencedora: y de allí a pocos meses murió mi amo el Uchalí, al cual llamaban Uchalí Fartax, que quiere decir, en lengua turquesca, el renegado tiñoso, porque lo era; y es costumbre entre los turcos ponerse nombres de alguna falta que tengan, o de alguna virtud que en ellos haya. Y esto es porque no hay entre ellos sino cuatro apellidos de linajes, que decien de la casa Otomana, y los demás, como tengo dicho, toman nombre y apellido ya de las tachas del cuerpo y ya de las virtudes del ánimo. Y este Tiñoso bogó el remo, siendo esclavo del Gran Señor, catorce años, y a más de los treinta y cuatro de sus edad renegó, de despecho de que un turco, estando al remo, le dio un bofetón, y por poderse vengar dejó su fe; y fue tanto su valor que, sin subir por los torpes medios y caminos que los más privados del Gran Turco suben, vino a ser rey de Argel, y después, a ser general de la mar, que es el tercero cargo que hay en aquel señorío. Era calabrés de nación, y moralmente fue hombre de bien, y trataba con mucha humanidad a sus cautivos, que llegó a tener tres mil, los cuales, después de su muerte, se repartieron, como él lo dejó en su testamento, entre el Gran Señor (que también es hijo heredero de cuantos mueren, y entra a la parte con los más hijos que deja el difunto) y entre sus renegados; y yo cupe a un renegado veneciano que, siendo grumete de una nave, le cautivó el Uchalí, y le quiso tanto, que fue uno de los más regalados garzones suyos, y él vino a ser el más cruel renegado que jamás se ha visto. Llamábase Azán Agá, y llegó a ser muy rico, y a ser rey de Argel; con el cual yo vine de Constantinopla, algo contento, por estar tan cerca de España, no porque pensase escribir a nadie el desdichado suceso mío, sino por ver si me era más favorable la suerte en Argel que en Constantinopla, donde ya había probado mil maneras de huirme, y ninguna tuvo sazón ni ventura; y pensaba en Argel buscar otros medios de alcanzar lo que tanto deseaba, porque jamás me desamparó la esperanza de tener libertad; y cuando en lo que fabricaba, pensaba y ponía por obra no correspondía el suceso a la intención, luego, sin abandonarme, fingía y buscaba otra esperanza que me sustentase, aunque fuese débil y flaca.

»Con esto entretenía la vida, encerrado en una prisión o casa que los turcos llaman baño, donde encierran los cautivos cristianos, así los que son del rey como de algunos particulares; y los que llaman del almacén, que es como decir

cautivos del concejo, que sirven a la ciudad en las obras públicas que hace y en otros oficios, y estos tales cautivos tienen muy dificultosa su libertad, que, como son del común y no tienen amo particular, no hay con quien tratar su rescate, aunque le tengan. En estos baños, como tengo dicho, suelen llevar a sus cautivos algunos particulares del pueblo, principalmente cuando son de rescate, porque allí los tienen holgados y seguros hasta que venga su rescate. También los cautivos del rey que son de rescate no salen al trabajo con la demás chusma, si no es cuando se tarda su rescate; que entonces, por hacerles que escriban por él con más ahínco, les hacen trabajar y ir por leña con los demás, que es un no pequeño trabajo.

debajo de la caña, por ver si la soltaban, o lo que hacían; pero, así como llegó, alzarón la caña y la movieron a los dos lados, como si dijeran no con la cabeza. Volvióse el cristiano, y tornáronla a bajar y hacer los mismos movimientos que primero. Fue otro de mis compañeros, y sucedióle lo mismo que al primero. Finalmente, fue el tercero y avínole lo que al primero y al segundo. Viendo yo esto, no quise dejar de probar la suerte, y, así como llegué a ponerme debajo de la caña, la dejaron caer, y dio a mis pies dentro del baño. Acudí luego a desatar el lienzo, en el cual vi un nudo, y dentro dél venían diez cianíis, que son unas monedas de oro bajo que usan los moros, que cada una vale diez reales de los nuestros. Si me holgué con el hallazgo, no hay para qué decirlo, pues fue tanto el contento como la admiración de pensar de dónde podía venirnos aquel bien, especialmente a mí, pues las muestras de no haber querido soltar la caña sino a mí claro decían que a mí se hacía la merced. Tomé mi buen dinero, quebré la caña, volvíme al terradillo, miré la ventana, y vi que por ella salía una muy blanca mano, que la abrían y cerraban muy apriesa. Con esto entendimos, o imaginamos, que alguna mujer que en aquella casa vivía nos debía de haber hecho aquel beneficio; y, en señal de que lo agradecíamos, hecimos zalemas a uso de moros, inclinando la cabeza, doblando el cuerpo y poniendo los brazos sobre el pecho. De allí a poco sacaron por la misma ventana una pequeña cruz hecha de cañas, y luego la volvieron a entrar. Esta señal nos confirmó en que alguna cristiana debía de estar cautiva en aquella casa, y era la que el bien nos hacía; pero la blancura de la mano, y las ajorcas que en ella vimos, nos deshizo este pensamiento, puesto que imaginamos que debía de ser cristiana renegada, a quien de ordinario suelen tomar por legítimas mujeres sus mismos amos, y aun lo tienen a ventura, porque las estiman en más que las de su nación.

españoles y un papel escrito en arábigo, y al cabo de lo escrito hecha una grande cruz. Besé la cruz, tomé los escudos, volvíme al terrado, hecimos todas nuestras zalemas, tornó a parecer la mano, hice señas que leería el papel, cerraron la ventana. Quedamos todos confusos y alegres con lo sucedido; y, como ninguno de nosotros no entendía el arábigo, era grande el deseo que teníamos de entender lo que el papel contenía, y mayor la dificultad de buscar quien lo leyese.

»En fin, yo me determiné de fiarme de un renegado, natural de Murcia, que se había dado por grande amigo mío, y puesto prendas entre los dos, que le obligaban a guardar el secreto que le encargase; porque suelen algunos renegados, cuando tienen intención de volverse a tierra de cristianos, traer consigo algunas firmas de cautivos principales, en que dan fe, en la forma que pueden, como el tal renegado es hombre de bien, y que siempre ha hecho bien a cristianos, y que lleva deseo de huirse en la primera ocasión que se le ofrezca. Algunos hay que procuran estas fees con buena intención, otros se sirven dellas acaso y de industria: que, viniendo a robar a tierra de cristianos, si a dicha se pierden o los cautivan, sacan sus firmas y dicen que por aquellos papeles se verá el propósito con que venían, el cual era de quedarse en tierra de cristianos, y que por eso venían en corso con los demás turcos. Con esto se escapan de aquel primer ímpetu, y se reconcilian con la Iglesia, sin que se les haga daño; y, cuando veen la suya, se vuelven a Berbería a ser lo que antes eran. Otros hay que usan destos papeles, y los procuran, con buen intento, y se quedan en tierra de cristianos.

»Leímos el papel, y decía así: Cuando yo era niña, tenía mi padre una esclava, la cual en mi lengua me mostró la zalá cristianesca, y me dijo muchas cosas de Lela Marién. La cristiana murió, y yo sé que no fue al fuego, sino con Alá, porque después la vi dos veces, y me dijo que me fuese a tierra de cristianos a ver a Lela Marién, que me quería mucho. No sé yo cómo vaya: muchos cristianos he visto por esta ventana, y ninguno me ha parecido caballero sino tú. Yo soy muy hermosa y muchacha, y tengo muchos dineros que llevar conmigo: mira tú si puedes hacer cómo nos vamos, y serás allá mi marido, si quisieres, y si no quisieres, no se me dará nada, que Lela Marién me dará con quien me case. Yo escribí esto; mira a quién lo das a leer: no te fíes de ningún moro, porque son todos marfuces. Desto tengo mucha pena: que quisiera que no te descubrieras a nadie, porque si mi padre lo sabe, me echará luego en un pozo, y me cubrirá de piedras. En la caña pondré un hilo: ata allí la respuesta; y si no tienes quien te escriba arábigo, dímelo por señas, que Lela Marién hará que te entienda. Ella y Alá te guarden, y esa cruz que yo beso muchas veces; que así me lo mandó la cautiva.

»Mirad, señores, si era razón que las razones deste papel nos admirasen y alegrasen. Y así, lo uno y lo otro fue de manera que el renegado entendió que no acaso se había hallado aquel papel, sino que realmente a alguno de nosotros se había escrito; y así, nos rogó que si era verdad lo que sospechaba, que nos fiásemos dél y se lo dijésemos, que él aventuraría su vida por nuestra libertad. Y, diciendo esto, sacó del pecho un crucifijo de metal, y con muchas lágrimas juró por el Dios que aquella imagen representaba, en quien él, aunque pecador y malo, bien y fielmente creía, de guardarnos lealtad y secreto en todo cuanto quisiésemos descubrirle, porque le parecía, y casi adivinaba que, por medio de aquella que aquel papel había escrito, había él y todos nosotros de tener libertad, y verse él en lo que tanto deseaba, que era reducirse al gremio de la Santa Iglesia, su madre, de quien como miembro podrido estaba dividido y apartado por su ignorancia y pecado.

»En efeto, lo que a la mora se le respondió fue esto: El verdadero Alá te guarde, señora mía, y aquella bendita Marién, que es la verdadera madre de Dios y es la que te ha puesto en corazón que te vayas a tierra de cristianos, porque te quiere bien. Ruégale tú que se sirva de darte a entender cómo podrás poner por obra lo que te manda, que ella es tan buena que sí hará. De mi parte y de la de todos estos cristianos que están conmigo, te ofrezco de hacer por ti todo lo que pudiéremos, hasta morir. No dejes de escribirme y avisarme lo que pensares hacer, que yo te responderé siempre; que el grande Alá nos ha dado un cristiano cautivo que sabe hablar y escribir tu lengua tan bien como lo verás por este papel. Así que, sin tener miedo, nos puedes avisar de todo lo que quisieres. A lo que dices que si fueres a tierra de cristianos, que has de ser mi mujer, yo te lo prometo como buen cristiano; y sabe que los cristianos cumplen lo que prometen mejor que los moros. Alá y Marién, su madre, sean en tu guarda, señora mía.

»Escrito y cerrado este papel, aguardé dos días a que estuviese el baño solo, como solía, y luego salí al paso acostumbrado del terradillo, por ver si la caña parecía, que no tardó mucho en asomar. Así como la vi, aunque no podía ver quién la ponía, mostré el papel, como dando a entender que pusiesen el hilo, pero ya venía puesto en la caña, al cual até el papel, y de allí a poco tornó a parecer nuestra estrella, con la blanca bandera de paz del atadillo. Dejáronla caer, y alcé yo, y hallé en el paño, en toda suerte de moneda de plata y de oro, más de cincuenta escudos, los cuales cincuenta veces más doblaron nuestro contento y confirmaron la esperanza de tener libertad.

»Aquella misma noche volvió nuestro renegado, y nos dijo que había sabido que en aquella casa vivía el mismo moro que a nosotros nos habían dicho que se llamaba Agi Morato, riquísimo por todo extremo, el cual tenía una sola hija, heredera de toda su hacienda, y que era común opinión en toda la ciudad ser la más hermosa mujer de la Berbería; y que muchos de los virreyes que allí venían la habían pedido por mujer, y que ella nunca se había querido casar; y que también supo que tuvo una cristiana cautiva, que ya se había muerto; todo lo cual concertaba con lo que venía en el papel. Entramos luego en consejo con el renegado, en qué orden se tendría para sacar a la mora y venirnos todos a tierra de cristianos, y, en fin, se acordó por entonces que esperásemos al aviso segundo de Zoraida, que así se llamaba la que ahora quiere llamarse María; porque bien vimos que ella, y no otra alguna era la que había de dar medio a todas aquellas dificultades. Después que quedamos en esto, dijo el renegado que nouviésemos pena, que él perdería la vida o nos pondría en libertad.

vamos a España, ni Lela Marién me lo ha dicho, aunque yo se lo he preguntado. Lo que se podrá hacer es que yo os daré por esta ventana muchísimos dineros de oro: rescataos vos con ellos y vuestros amigos, y vaya uno en tierra de cristianos, y compre allá una barca y vuelva por los demás; y a mí me hallarán en el jardín de mi padre, que está a la puerta de Babazón, junto a la marina, donde tengo de estar todo este verano con mi padre y con mis criados. De allí, de noche, me podréis sacar sin miedo y llevarme a la barca; y mira que has de ser mi marido, porque si no, yo pediré a Marién que te castigue. Si no te fías de nadie que vaya por la barca, rescátate tú y ve, que yo sé que volverás mejor que otro, pues eres caballero y cristiano. Procura saber el jardín, y cuando te pasees por ahí sabré que está solo el baño, y te daré mucho dinero. Alá te guarde, señor mío.

»Esto decía y contenía el segundo papel. Lo cual visto por todos, cada uno se ofreció a querer ser el rescatado, y prometió de ir y volver con toda puntualidad, y también yo me ofrecí a lo mismo; a todo lo cual se opuso el renegado, diciendo que en ninguna manera consentiría que ninguno saliese de libertad hasta que fuesen todos juntos, porque la experiencia le había mostrado cuán mal cumplían los libres las palabras que daban en el cautiverio; porque muchas veces habían usado de aquel remedio algunos principales cautivos, rescatando a uno que fuese a Valencia, o Mallorca, con dineros para poder armar una barca y volver por los que le habían rescatado, y nunca habían vuelto; porque la libertad alcanzada y el temor de no volver a perderla les borraba de la memoria todas las obligaciones del mundo. Y, en confirmación de la verdad que nos decía, nos contó brevemente un caso que casi en aquella misma sazón había acaecido a unos caballeros cristianos, el más extraño que jamás sucedió en aquellas partes, donde a cada paso suceden cosas de grande espanto y de admiración.

»En efecto, él vino a decir que lo que se podía y debía hacer era que el dinero que se había de dar para rescatar al cristiano, que se le diese a él para comprar allí en Argel una barca, con achaque de hacerse mercader y tratante en Tetuán y en aquella costa; y que, siendo él señor de la barca, fácilmente se daría traza para sacarlos del baño y embarcarlos a todos. Cuanto más, que si la mora, como ella decía, daba dineros para rescatarlos a todos, que, estando libres, era facilísima cosa aun embarcarse en la mitad del día; y que la dificultad que se ofrecía mayor era que los moros no consienten que renegado alguno compre ni tenga barca, si no es bajel grande para ir en corso, porque se temen que el que compra barca, principalmente si es español, no la quiere sino para irse a tierra de cristianos; pero que él facilitaría este inconveniente con hacer que un moro tagarino fuese a la parte con él en la compañía de la barca y en la ganancia de las mercancías, y con esta sombra él vendría a ser señor de la barca, con que daba por acabado todo lo demás.

»Y, puesto que a mí y a mis camaradas nos había parecido mejor lo de enviar por la barca a Mallorca, como la mora decía, no osamos contradecirle, temerosos que, si no hacíamos lo que él decía, nos había de descubrir y poner a peligro de perder las vidas, si descubriese el trato de Zoraida, por cuya vida diéramos todas las nuestras. Y así, determinamos de ponernos en las manos de Dios y en las del renegado, y en aquel mismo punto se le respondió a Zoraida, diciéndole que haríamos todo cuanto nos aconsejaba, porque lo había advertido tan bien como si Lela Marién se lo hubiera dicho, y que en ella sola estaba dilatar aquel negocio, o ponello luego por obra. Ofrecímele de nuevo de ser su esposo, y, con esto, otro día que acaeció a estar solo el baño, en diversas veces, con la caña y el paño, nos dio dos mil escudos de oro, y un papel donde decía que el primer jumá, que es el viernes, se iba al jardín de su padre, y que antes que se fuese nos daría más dinero, y que si aquello no bastase, que se lo avisásemos, que nos daría cuanto le pidiésemos: que su padre tenía tantos, que no lo echaría menos, cuanto más, que ella tenía la llaves de todo.

»Dimos luego quinientos escudos al renegado para comprar la barca; con ochocientos me rescaté yo, dando el dinero a un mercader valenciano que a la sazón se hallaba en Argel, el cual me rescató del rey, tomándome sobre su palabra, dándola de que con el primer bajel que viniese de Valencia pagaría mi rescate; porque si luego diera el dinero, fuera dar sospechas al rey que había muchos días que mi rescate estaba en Argel, y que el mercader, por sus granjerías, lo había callado. Finalmente, mi amo era tan caviloso que en ninguna manera me atreví a que luego se desembolsase el dinero. El jueves antes del viernes que la hermosa Zoraida se había de ir al jardín, nos dio otros mil escudos y nos avisó de su partida, rogándome que, si me rescatase, supiese luego el jardín de su padre, y que en todo caso buscase ocasión de ir allá y verla. Respondíle en breves palabras que así lo haría, y que tuviese cuidado de encomendarnos a Lela Marién, con todas aquellas oraciones que la cautiva le había enseñado.

»Hecho esto, dieron orden en que los tres compañeros nuestros se rescatasen, por facilitar la salida del baño, y porque, viéndome a mí rescatado, y a ellos no, pues había dinero, no se alborotasen y les persuadiese el diablo que hiciesen alguna cosa en perjuicio de Zoraida; que, puesto que el ser ellos quien eran me podía asegurar deste temor, con todo eso, no quise poner el negocio en aventura, y así, los hice rescatar por la misma orden que yo me rescaté, entregando todo el dinero al mercader, para que, con certeza y seguridad, pudiese hacer la fianza; al cual nunca descubrimos nuestro trato y secreto, por el peligro que había.

Capítulo XLI

»NO SE PASARON quince días, cuando ya nuestro renegado tenía comprada una muy buena barca, capaz de más de treinta personas: y, para asegurar su hecho y dalle color, quiso hacer, como hizo, un viaje a un lugar que se llamaba Sargel, que está treinta leguas de Argel hacia la parte de Orán, en el cual hay mucha contratación de higos pasos. Dos o tres veces hizo este viaje, en compañía del tagarino que había dicho. Tagarinos llaman en Berbería a los moros de Aragón, y a los de Granada, mudéjares; y en el reino de Fez llaman a los mudéjares elches, los cuales son la gente de quien aquel rey más se sirve en la guerra.

»Digo, pues, que cada vez que pasaba con su barca daba fondo en una caleta que estaba no dos tiros de ballesta del jardín donde Zoraida esperaba; y allí, muy de propósito, se ponía el renegado con los morillos que bogaban el remo, o ya a hacer la zalá, o a como por ensayarse de burlas a lo que pensaba hacer de veras; y así, se iba al jardín de Zoraida y le pedía fruta, y su padre se la daba sin conocelle; y, aunque él quisiera hablar a Zoraida, como él después me dijo, y decille que él era el que por orden mía le había de llevar a tierra de cristianos, que estuviese contenta y segura, nunca le fue posible, porque las moras no se dejan ver de ningún moro ni turco, si no es que su marido o su padre se lo manden. De cristianos cautivos se dejan tratar y comunicar, aun más de aquello que sería razonable; y a mí me hubiera pesado que él la hubiera hablado, que quizá la alborotara, viendo que su negocio andaba en boca de renegados. Pero Dios, que lo ordenaba de otra manera, no dio lugar al buen deseo que nuestro renegado tenía; el cual, viendo cuán seguramente iba y venía a Sargel, y que daba fondo cuando y como y adonde quería, y que el tagarino, su compañero, no tenía más voluntad de lo que la suya ordenaba, y que yo estaba ya rescatado, y que sólo faltaba buscar algunos cristianos que bogasen el remo, me dijo que mirase yo cuáles quería traer conmigo, fuera de los rescatados, y que los tuviese hablados para el primer viernes, donde tenía determinado que fuese nuestra partida. Viendo esto, hablé a doce españoles, todos valientes hombres del remo, y de aquellos que más libremente podían salir de la ciudad; y no fue poco hallar tantos en aquella coyuntura, porque estaban veinte bajeles en corso, y se habían llevado toda la gente de remo, y éstos no se hallaran, si no fuera que su amo se quedó aquel verano sin ir en corso, a acabar una galeota que tenía en astillero. A los cuales no les dije otra cosa, sino que el primer viernes en la tarde se saliesen uno a uno, disimuladamente, y se fuesen la vuelta del jardín de Agi Morato, y que allí me aguardasen hasta que yo fuese. A cada uno di este aviso de por sí, con orden que, aunque allí viesan a otros cristianos, no les dijiesen sino que yo les había mandado esperar en aquel lugar.

»Hecha esta diligencia, me faltaba hacer otra, que era la que más me convenía: y era la de avisar a Zoraida en el punto que estaban los negocios, para que estuviese apercibida y sobre aviso, que no se sobresaltase si de improviso la asaltásemos antes del tiempo que ella podía imaginar que la barca de cristianos podía volver. Y así, determiné de ir al jardín y ver si podría hablarla; y, con ocasión de coger algunas yerbas, un día, antes de mi partida, fui allá, y la primera persona con quién encontré fue con su padre, el cual me dijo, en lengua que en toda la Berbería, y aun en Costantinopla, se halla entre cautivos y moros, que ni es morisca, ni castellana, ni de otra nación alguna, sino una mezcla de todas las lenguas con la cual todos nos entendemos; digo, pues, que en esta manera de lenguaje me preguntó que qué buscaba en aquel su jardín, y de quién era. Respondíle que era esclavo de Arnaúte Mamí (y esto, porque sabía yo por muy cierto que era un grandísimo amigo suyo), y que buscaba de todas yerbas, para hacer ensalada. Preguntóme, por el consiguiente, si era hombre de rescate o no, y que cuánto pedía mi amo por mí. Estando en todas estas preguntas y respuestas, salió de la casa del jardín la bella Zoraida, la cual ya había mucho que me había visto; y, como las moras en ninguna manera hacen melindre de mostrarse a los cristianos, ni tampoco se esquivan, como ya he dicho, no se le dio nada de venir adonde su padre conmigo estaba; antes, luego cuando su padre vio que venía, y de espacio, la llamó y mandó que llegase.

adorno podía venir entonces hermosa, o no, por las reliquias que le han quedado en tantos trabajos se podrá conjeturar cuál debía de ser en las prosperidades. Porque ya se sabe que la hermosura de algunas mujeres tiene días y sazones, y requiere accidentes para disminuirse o acrecentarse; y es natural cosa que las pasiones del ánimo la levanten o abajen, puesto que las más veces la destruyen.

»Digo, en fin, que entonces llegó en todo extremo aderezada y en todo extremo hermosa, o, a lo menos, a mí me pareció serlo la más que hasta entonces había visto; y con esto, viendo las obligaciones en que me había puesto, me parecía que tenía delante de mí una deidad del cielo, venida a la tierra para mi gusto y para mi remedio. Así como ella llegó, le dijo su padre en su lengua como yo era cautivo de su amigo Arnaúte Mamí, y que venía a buscar ensalada. Ella tomó la mano, y en aquella mezcla de lenguas que tengo dicho, me preguntó si era caballero y qué era la causa que no me rescataba. Yo le respondí que ya estaba rescatado, y que en el precio podía echar de ver en lo que mi amo me estimaba, pues había dado por mí mil y quinientos zoltanís. A lo cual ella respondió: “En verdad que si tú fueras de mi padre, que yo hiciera que no te diera él por otros dos tantos, porque vosotros, cristianos, siempre mentís en cuanto decís, y os hacéis pobres por engañar a los moros”. “Bien podría ser eso, señora -le respondí-, mas en verdad que yo la he tratado con mi amo, y la trato y la trataré con cuantas personas hay en el mundo”. “Y ¿cuándo te vas?”, dijo Zoraida. “Mañana, creo yo -dije-, porque está aquí un bajel de Francia que se hace mañana a la vela, y pienso irme en él”. “¿No es mejor -replicó Zoraida-, esperar a que vengan bajeles de España, y irte con ellos, que no con los de Francia, que no son vuestros amigos?” “No -respondí yo-, aunque si como hay nuevas que viene ya un bajel de España, es verdad, todavía yo le aguardaré, puesto que es más cierto el partirme mañana; porque el deseo que tengo de verme en mi tierra, y con las personas que bien quiero, es tanto que no me dejaré esperar otra comodidad, si se tarda, por mejor que sea”. “Debes de ser, sin duda, casado en tu tierra -dijo Zoraida-, y por eso deseas ir a verte con tu mujer”. “No soy -respondí yo-casado, mas tengo dada la palabra de casarme en llegando allá”. “Y ¿es hermosa la dama a quien se la diste?”, dijo Zoraida. “Tan hermosa es -respondí yo-que para encarecella y decirte la verdad, te parece a ti mucho”. Desto se riyó muy de veras su padre, y dijo: “Gualá, cristiano, que debe de ser muy hermosa si se parece a mi hija, que es la más hermosa de todo este reino. Si no, mírala bien, y verás cómo te digo verdad”. Servíanos de intérprete a las más de estas palabras y razones el padre de Zoraida, como más ladino; que, aunque ella hablaba la bastarda lengua que, como he dicho, allí se usa, más declaraba su intención por señas que por palabras.

grandes voces, que por las bardas o paredes del jardín habían saltado cuatro turcos, y andaban cogiendo la fruta, aunque no estaba madura. Sobresaltóse el viejo, y lo mismo hizo Zoraida, porque es común y casi natural el miedo que los moros a los turcos tienen, especialmente a los soldados, los cuales son tan insolentes y tienen tanto imperio sobre los moros que a ellos están sujetos, que los tratan peor que si fuesen esclavos suyos. Digo, pues, que dijo su padre a Zoraida: “Hija, retírate a la casa y enciértrate, en tanto que yo voy a hablar a estos canes; y tú, cristiano, busca tus yerbas, y vete en buen hora, y llévete Alá con bien a tu tierra”. Yo me incliné, y él se fue a buscar los turcos, dejándome solo con Zoraida, que comenzó a dar muestras de irse donde su padre la había mandado. Pero, apenas él se encubrió con los árboles del jardín, cuando ella, volviéndose a mí, llenos los ojos de lágrimas, me dijo: “Ámexi, cristiano, ámexi”; que quiere decir: “¿Vaste, cristiano, vaste?” Yo la respondí: “Señora, sí, pero no en ninguna manera sin ti: el primero jumá me aguarda, y no te sobresaltes cuando nos veas; que sin duda alguna iremos a tierra de cristianos”.

»Yo le dije esto de manera que ella me entendió muy bien a todas las razones que entrambos pasamos; y, echándome un brazo al cuello, con desmayados pasos comenzó a caminar hacia la casa; y quiso la suerte, que pudiera ser muy mala si el cielo no lo ordenara de otra manera, que, yendo los dos de la manera y postura que os he contado, con un brazo al cuello, su padre, que ya volvía de hacer ir a los turcos, nos vio de la suerte y manera que íbamos, y nosotros vimos que él nos había visto; pero Zoraida, advertida y discreta, no quiso quitar el brazo de mi cuello, antes se llegó más a mí y puso su cabeza sobre mi pecho, doblando un poco las rodillas, dando claras señales y muestras que se desmayaba, y yo, ansimismo, di a entender que la sostenía contra mi voluntad. Su padre llegó corriendo adonde estábamos, y, viendo a su hija de aquella manera, le preguntó que qué tenía; pero, como ella no le respondiese, dijo su padre: “Sin duda alguna que con el sobresalto de la entrada de estos canes se ha desmayado”. Y, quitándola del mío, la arrimó a su pecho; y ella, dando un suspiro y aún no enjutos los ojos de lágrimas, volvió a decir: “Ámexi, cristiano, ámexi”: “Vete, cristiano, vete”. A lo que su padre respondió: “No importa, hija, que el cristiano se vaya, que ningún mal te ha hecho, y los turcos ya son idos. No te sobresalte cosa alguna, pues ninguna hay que pueda darte pesadumbre, pues, como ya te he dicho, los turcos, a mi ruego, se volvieron por donde entraron”. “Ellos, señor, la sobresaltaron, como has dicho -dije yo a su padre-; mas, pues ella dice que yo me vaya, no la quiero dar pesadumbre: quédate en paz, y, con tu licencia, volveré, si fuere menester, por yerbas a este jardín; que, según dice mi amo, en ninguno las hay mejores para ensalada que en él”. “Todas las que quisieres podrás volver -respondió Agi Morato-, que mi hija no dice esto porque

tú ni ninguno de los cristianos la enojaban, sino que, por decir que los turcos se fuesen, dijo que tú te fueses, o porque ya era hora que buscases tus yerbas”.

»Sucedió, pues, que, así como yo me mostré y mis compañeros, todos los demás escondidos que nos vieron se vinieron llegando a nosotros. Esto era ya a tiempo que la ciudad estaba ya cerrada, y por toda aquella campaña ninguna persona parecía. Como estuvimos juntos, dudamos si sería mejor ir primero por Zoraida, o rendir primero a los moros bagarinos que bogaban el remo en la barca. Y, estando en esta duda, llegó a nosotros nuestro renegado diciéndonos que en qué nos deteníamos, que ya era hora, y que todos sus moros estaban descuidados, y los más de ellos durmiendo. Dijámosle en lo que reparábamos, y él dijo que lo que más importaba era rendir primero el bajel, que se podía hacer con grandísima facilidad y sin peligro alguno, y que luego podíamos ir por Zoraida. Pareciónos bien a todos lo que decía, y así, sin detenernos más, haciendo él la guía, llegamos al bajel, y, saltando él dentro primero, metió mano a un alfanje, y dijo en morisco: “Ninguno de vosotros se mueva de aquí, si no quiere que le cueste la vida”. Ya, a este tiempo, habían entrado dentro casi todos los cristianos. Los moros, que eran de poco ánimo, viendo hablar de aquella manera a su arráez, quedáronse espantados, y sin ninguno de todos ellos echar mano a las armas, que pocas o casi ningunas tenían, se dejaron, sin hablar alguna palabra, maniatar de los cristianos, los cuales con mucha presteza lo hicieron, amenazando a los moros que si alzaban por alguna vía o manera la voz, que luego al punto los pasarían todos a cuchillo.

»Hecho ya esto, quedándose en guardia dellos la mitad de los nuestros, los que quedábamos, haciéndonos asimismo el renegado la guía, fuimos al jardín de Agi Morato, y quiso la buena suerte que, llegando a abrir la puerta, se abrió con tanta facilidad como si cerrada no estuviera; y así, con gran quietud y silencio, llegamos a la casa sin ser sentidos de nadie. Estaba la bellísima Zoraida aguardándonos a una ventana, y, así como sintió gente, preguntó con voz baja si éramos nizarani, como si dijera o preguntara si éramos cristianos. Yo le respondí que sí, y que bajase. Cuando ella me conoció, no se detuvo un punto, porque, sin responderme palabra, bajó en un instante, abrió la puerta y mostróse a todos tan hermosa y ricamente vestida que no lo acierto a encarecer. Luego que yo la vi, le tomé una mano y la comencé a besar, y el renegado hizo lo mismo, y mis dos camaradas; y los demás, que el caso no sabían, hicieron lo que vieron que nosotros hacíamos, que no parecía sino que le dábamos las gracias y la reconocíamos por señora de nuestra libertad. El renegado le dijo en lengua morisca si estaba su padre en el jardín. Ella respondió que sí y que dormía. “Pues será menester despertalle -replicó el renegado-, y llevárnosle con nosotros, y todo aquello que tiene de valor este hermoso jardín”. “No -dijo ella-, a mi padre no se ha de tocar en ningún modo, y en esta casa no hay otra cosa que lo que yo llevo, que es tanto, que bien habrá para que todos quedéis ricos y contentos; y esperaros un poco y lo veréis”. Y, diciendo esto, se volvió a entrar, diciendo que muy presto volvería; que nos estuviésemos quedos, sin hacer ningún ruido. Preguntéle al renegado lo que con ella había pasado, el cual me lo contó, a quien yo dije que en ninguna cosa se había de hacer más de lo que Zoraida quisiese; la cual ya que volvía cargada con un cofrecillo lleno de escudos de oro, tantos, que apenas lo podía sustentar, quiso la mala suerte que su padre despertase en el ínterin y sintiese el ruido que andaba en el jardín; y, asomándose a la ventana, luego conoció que todos los que en él estaban eran cristianos; y, dando muchas, grandes y desaforadas voces, comenzó a decir en arábigo: “¡Cristianos, cristianos! ¡Ladrones, ladrones!”; por los cuales gritos nos vimos todos puestos en grandísima y temerosa confusión. Pero el renegado, viendo el peligro en que estábamos, y lo mucho que le importaba salir con aquella empresa antes de ser sentido, con grandísima presteza, subió donde Agi Morato estaba, y juntamente con él fueron algunos de nosotros; que yo no osé desamparar a la Zoraida, que como desmayada se había dejado caer en mis brazos. En resolución, los que subieron se dieron tan buena maña que en un momento bajaron con Agi Morato, trayéndole atadas las manos y puesto un pañizuelo en la boca, que no le dejaba hablar palabra, amenazándole que el hablarla le había de costar la vida. Cuando su hija le vio, se cubrió los ojos por no verle, y su padre quedó espantado, ignorando cuán de su voluntad se había puesto en nuestras manos. Mas, entonces siendo más necesarios los pies, con diligencia y presteza nos pusimos en la barca; que ya los que en ella habían quedado nos esperaban, temerosos de algún mal suceso nuestro.

»Dimos de comer a los moros bagarinos, y el renegado les consoló diciéndoles como no iban cautivos, que en la primera ocasión les darían libertad. Lo mismo se le dijo al padre de Zoraida, el cual respondió: “Cualquiera otra cosa pudiera yo esperar y creer de vuestra liberalidad y buen término, ¡oh cristianos!, mas el darme libertad, no me tengáis por tan simple que lo imagine; que nunca os pusistes vosotros al peligro de quitármela para volverla tan liberalmente, especialmente sabiendo quién soy yo, y el interese que se os puede seguir de dármele; el cual interese, si le queréis poner nombre, desde aquí os ofrezco todo aquello que quisiéredes por mí y por esa desdichada hija mía, o si no, por ella sola, que es la mayor y la mejor parte de mi alma”. En diciendo esto, comenzó a llorar tan amargamente que a todos nos movió a compasión, y forzó a Zoraida que le mirase; la cual, viéndole llorar, así se enterneció que se levantó de mis pies y fue a abrazar a su padre, y, juntando su rostro con el suyo, comenzaron los dos tan tierno llanto que muchos de los que allí íbamos le acompañamos en él. Pero, cuando su padre la vio adornada de fiesta y con tantas joyas sobre sí, le dijo en su lengua: “¿Qué es esto, hija, que ayer al anocheecer, antes que nos sucediese esta terrible desgracia en que nos vemos, te vi con tus ordinarios y caseros vestidos, y agora, sin que hayas tenido tiempo de vestirte y sin haberte dado alguna nueva alegre de solenizalle con adornarte y pulirte, te veo compuesta con los mejores vestidos que yo supe y pude darte cuando nos fue la ventura más favorable? Respóndeme a esto, que me tiene más suspenso y admirado que la misma desgracia en que me hallo”.

»Todo lo que el moro decía a su hija nos lo declaraba el renegado, y ella no le respondía palabra. Pero, cuando él vio a un lado de la barca el cofrecillo donde ella solía tener sus joyas, el cual sabía él bien que le había dejado en Argel, y no traídole al jardín, quedó más confuso, y preguntóle que cómo aquel cofre había venido a nuestras manos, y qué era lo que venía dentro. A lo cual el renegado, sin aguardar que Zoraida le respondiese, le respondió: “No te canses, señor, en preguntar a Zoraida, tu hija, tantas cosas, porque con una que yo te responda te satisfaré a todas; y así, quiero que sepas que ella es cristiana, y es la que ha sido la lima de nuestras cadenas y la libertad de nuestro cautiverio; ella va aquí de su voluntad, tan contenta, a lo que yo imagino, de verse en este estado, como el que sale de las tinieblas a la luz, de la muerte a la vida y de la pena a la gloria”. “¿Es verdad lo que éste dice, hija?”, dijo el moro. “Así es”, respondió Zoraida. “¿Que, en efeto -replicó el viejo-, tú eres cristiana, y la que ha puesto a su padre en poder de sus enemigos?” A lo cual respondió Zoraida: “La que es cristiana yo soy, pero no la que te ha puesto en este punto, porque nunca mi deseo se estendió a dejarte ni a hacerte mal, sino a hacerme a mí bien”. “Y ¿qué bien es el que te has hecho, hija?” “Eso -respondió ella-pregúntaselo tú a Lela Marién, que ella te lo sabrá decir mejor que no yo”.

»Apenas hubo oído esto el moro, cuando, con una increíble presteza, se arrojó de cabeza en la mar, donde sin ninguna duda se ahogara, si el vestido largo y embarazoso que traía no le entretuviera un poco sobre el agua. Dio voces Zoraida que le sacasen, y así, acudimos luego todos, y, asiéndole de la almalafa, le sacamos medio ahogado y sin sentido, de que recibió tanta pena Zoraida que, como si fuera ya muerto, hacía sobre él un tierno y doloroso llanto. Volvimosle boca abajo, volvió mucha agua, tornó en sí al cabo de dos horas, en las cuales, habiéndose trocado el viento, nos convino volver hacia tierra, y hacer fuerza de remos, por no embestir en ella; mas quiso nuestra buena suerte que llegamos a una cala que se hace al lado de un pequeño promontorio o cabo que de los moros es llamado el de La Cava Rumía, que en nuestra lengua quiere decir La mala mujer cristiana; y es tradición entre los moros que en aquel lugar está enterrada la Cava, por quien se perdió España, porque cava en su lengua quiere decir mujer mala, y rumía, cristiana; y aun tienen por mal agüero llegar allí a dar fondo cuando la necesidad les fuerza a ello, porque nunca le dan sin ella; puesto que para nosotros no fue abrigo de mala mujer, sino puerto seguro de nuestro remedio, según andaba alterada la mar.

dejallos en aquel lugar, que era despoblado. No fueron tan vanas nuestras oraciones que no fuesen oídas del cielo; que, en nuestro favor, luego volvió el viento, tranquilo el mar, convidándonos a que tornásemos alegres a proseguir nuestro comenzado viaje.

»Viendo esto, desatamos a los moros, y uno a uno los pusimos en tierra, de lo que ellos se quedaron admirados; pero, llegando a desembarcar al padre de Zoraida, que ya estaba en todo su acuerdo, dijo: “¿Por qué pensáis, cristianos, que esta mala hembra huelga de que me deis libertad? ¿Pensáis que es por piedad que de mí tiene? No, por cierto, sino que lo hace por el estorbo que le dará mi presencia cuando quiera poner en ejecución sus malos deseos; ni penséis que la ha movido a mudar religión entender ella que la vuestra a la nuestra se aventaja, sino el saber que en vuestra tierra se usa la deshonestidad más libremente que en la nuestra”. Y, volviéndose a Zoraida, teniéndole yo y otro cristiano de entrambos brazos asido, porque algún desatino no hiciese, le dijo: “¡Oh infame moza y mal aconsejada muchacha! ¿Adónde vas, ciega y desatinada, en poder destos perros, naturales enemigos nuestros? ¡Maldita sea la hora en que yo te engendré, y malditos sean los regalos y deleites en que te he criado!” Pero, viendo yo que llevaba término de no acabar tan presto, di prisa a ponelle en tierra, y desde allí, a voces, prosiguió en sus maldiciones y lamentos, rogando a Mahoma rogase a Alá que nos destruyese, confundiese y acabase; y cuando, por habernos hecho a la vela, no podimos oír sus palabras, vimos sus obras, que eran arrancarse las barbas, mesarse los cabellos y arrastrarse por el suelo; mas una vez esforzó la voz de tal manera que podimos entender que decía: “¡Vuelve, amada hija, vuelve a tierra, que todo te lo perdono; entrega a esos hombres ese dinero, que ya es suyo, y vuelve a consolar a este triste padre tuyo, que en esta desierta arena dejará la vida, si tú le dejas!” Todo lo cual escuchaba Zoraida, y todo lo sentía y lloraba, y no supo decirle ni respondelle palabra, sino: “Plega a Alá, padre mío, que Lela Marién, que ha sido la causa de que yo sea cristiana, ella te consuele en tu tristeza. Alá sabe bien que no pude hacer otra cosa de la que he hecho, y que estos cristianos no deben nada a mi voluntad, pues, aunque quisiera no venir con ellos y quedarme en mi casa, me fuera imposible, según la prisa que me daba mi alma a poner por obra ésta que a mí me parece tan buena como tú, padre amado, la juzgas por mala”. Esto dijo, a tiempo que ni su padre la oía, ni nosotros ya le veíamos; y así, consolando yo a Zoraida, atendimos todos a nuestro viaje, el cual nos le facilitaba el propio viento, de tal manera que bien tuvimos por cierto de vernos otro día al amanecer en las riberas de España.

»Mas, como pocas veces, o nunca, viene el bien puro y sencillo, sin ser acompañado o seguido de algún mal que le turbe o sobresalte, quiso nuestra ventura, o quizá las maldiciones que el moro a su hija había echado, que siempre se han de temer de cualquier padre que sean; quiso, digo, que estando ya engolfados y siendo ya casi pasadas tres horas de la noche, yendo con la vela tendida de alto baja, frenillados los remos, porque el próspero viento nos quitaba del trabajo de haberlos menester, con la luz de la luna, que claramente resplandecía, vimos cerca de nosotros un bajel redondo, que, con todas las velas tendidas, llevando un poco a orza el timón, delante de nosotros atravesaba; y esto tan cerca, que nos fue forzoso amainar por no embestirle, y ellos, asimesmo, hicieron fuerza de timón para darnos lugar que pasásemos.

»Habíanse puesto a bordo del bajel a preguntarnos quién éramos, y adónde navegábamos, y de dónde veníamos; pero, por preguntarnos esto en lengua francesa, dijo nuestro renegado: “Ninguno responda; porque éstos, sin duda, son cosarios franceses, que hacen a toda ropa”. Por este advertimiento, ninguno respondió palabra; y, habiendo pasado un poco delante, que ya el bajel quedaba sotavento, de improviso soltaron dos piezas de artillería, y, a lo que parecía, ambas venían con cadenas, porque con una cortaron nuestro árbol por medio, y dieron con él y con la vela en la mar; y al momento, disparando otra pieza, vino a dar la bala en mitad de nuestra barca, de modo que la abrió toda, sin hacer otro mal alguno; pero, como nosotros nos vimos ir a fondo, comenzamos todos a grandes voces a pedir socorro y a rogar a los del bajel que nos acogiesen, porque nos anegábamos. Amainaron entonces, y, echando el esquife o barca a la mar, entraron en él hasta doce franceses bien armados, con sus arcabuces y cuerdas encendidas, y así llegaron junto al nuestro; y, viendo cuán pocos éramos y cómo el bajel se hundía, nos recogieron, diciendo que, por haber usado de la descortesía de no respondelles, nos había sucedido aquello. Nuestro renegado tomó el cofre de las riquezas de Zoraida, y dio con él en la mar, sin que ninguno echase de ver en lo que hacía. En resolución, todos pasamos con los franceses, los cuales, después de haberse informado de todo aquello que de nosotros saber quisieron, como si fueran nuestros capitales enemigos, nos despojaron de todo cuanto teníamos, y a Zoraida le quitaron hasta los carcajes que traía en los pies. Pero no me daba a mí tanta pesadumbre la que a Zoraida daban, como me la daba el temor que tenía de que habían de pasar del quitar de las riquísimas y preciosísimas joyas al quitar de la joya que más valía y ella más estimaba. Pero los deseos de aquella gente no se estienden a más que al dinero, y desto jamás se ve harta su codicia; lo cual entonces llegó a tanto, que aun hasta los vestidos de cautivos nos quitaran si de algún provecho les fueran. Y hubo parecer entre ellos de que a todos nos arrojasen a la mar envueltos en una vela, porque tenían intención de tratar en algunos puertos de España con nombre de que eran bretones, y si nos llevaban vivos, serían castigados, siendo descubierto su hurto.

Mas el capitán, que era el que había despojado a mi querida Zoraida, dijo que él se contentaba con la presa que tenía, y que no quería tocar en ningún puerto de España, sino pasar el estrecho de Gibraltar de noche, o como pudiese, y irse a la Rochela, de donde había salido; y así, tomaron por acuerdo de darnos el esquite de su navío, y todo lo necesario para la corta navegación que nos quedaba, como lo hicieron otro día, ya a vista de tierra de España, con la cual vista, todas nuestras pesadumbres y pobrezaas se nos olvidaron de todo punto, como si no hubieran pasado por nosotros: tanto es el gusto de alcanzar la libertad perdida.

determinamos de entrarnos la tierra adentro, pues no podría ser menos sino que presto descubriésemos quien nos diese noticia della. Pero lo que a mí más me fatigaba era el ver ir a pie a Zoraida por aquellas asperezas, que, puesto que alguna vez la puse sobre mis hombros, más le cansaba a ella mi cansancio que la reposaba su reposo; y así, nunca más quiso que yo aquel trabajo tomase; y, con mucha paciencia y muestras de alegría, llevándola yo siempre de la mano, poco menos de un cuarto de legua debíamos de haber andado, cuando llegó a nuestros oídos el son de una pequeña esquila, señal clara que por allí cerca había ganado; y, mirando todos con atención si alguno se parecía, vimos al pie de un alcornoque un pastor mozo, que con grande reposo y descuido estaba labrando un palo con un cuchillo. Dimos voces, y él, alzando la cabeza, se puso ligeramente en pie, y, a lo que después supimos, los primeros que a la vista se le ofrecieron fueron el renegado y Zoraida, y, como él los vio en hábito de moros, pensó que todos los de la Berbería estaban sobre él; y, metiéndose con estraña ligereza por el bosque adelante, comenzó a dar los mayores gritos del mundo diciendo: “¡Moros, moros hay en la tierra! ¡Moros, moros! ¡Arma, arma!”

»Con estas voces quedamos todos confusos, y no sabíamos qué hacernos; pero, considerando que las voces del pastor habían de alborotar la tierra, y que la caballería de la costa había de venir luego a ver lo que era, acordamos que el renegado se desnudase las ropas del turco y se vistiese un gilecuelco o casaca de cautivo que uno de nosotros le dio luego, aunque se quedó en camisa; y así, encomendándonos a Dios, fuimos por el mismo camino que vimos que el pastor llevaba, esperando siempre cuándo había de dar sobre nosotros la caballería de la costa. Y no nos engañó nuestro pensamiento, porque, aún no habrían pasado dos horas cuando, habiendo ya salido de aquellas malezas a un llano, descubrimos hasta cincuenta caballeros, que con gran ligereza, corriendo a media rienda, a nosotros se venían, y así como los vimos, nos estuvimos quedos aguardándolos; pero, como ellos llegaron y vieron, en lugar de los moros que buscaban, tanto pobre cristiano, quedaron confusos, y uno dellos nos preguntó si éramos nosotros acaso la ocasión por que un pastor había apellidado al arma. “Sí”, dije yo; y, queriendo comenzar a decirle mi suceso, y de dónde veníamos y quién éramos, uno de los cristianos que con nosotros venían conoció al jinete que nos había hecho la pregunta, y dijo, sin dejarme a mí decir más palabra: “¡Gracias sean dadas a Dios, señores, que a tan buena parte nos ha conducido!, porque, si yo no me engaño, la tierra que pisamos es la de Vélez Málaga, si ya los años de mi cautiverio no me han quitado de la memoria el acordarme que vos, señor, que nos preguntáis quién somos, sois Pedro de Bustamante, tío mío”. Apenas hubo dicho esto el cristiano cautivo, cuando el jinete se arrojó del caballo y vino a abrazar al mozo, diciéndole: “Sobrino de mi alma y de mi vida, ya te conozco, y ya te he llorado por muerto yo, y mi hermana, tu madre, y todos los tuyos, que aún viven; y Dios ha sido servido de darles vida para que gocen el placer de verte: ya sabíamos que estabas en Argel, y por las señales y muestras de tus vestidos, y la de todos los desta compañía, comprehendo que habéis tenido milagrosa libertad”. “Así es -respondió el mozo-, y tiempo nos quedará para contároslo todo”.

»Luego que los jinetes entendieron que éramos cristianos cautivos, se apearon de sus caballos, y cada uno nos convidaba con el suyo para llevarnos a la ciudad de Vélez Málaga, que legua y media de allí estaba. Algunos dellos volvieron a llevar la barca a la ciudad, diciéndoles dónde la habíamos dejado; otros nos subieron a las ancas, y Zoraida fue en las del caballo del tío del cristiano. Salíonos a recibir todo el pueblo, que ya de alguno que se había adelantado sabían la nueva de nuestra venida. No se admiraban de ver cautivos libres, ni moros cautivos, porque toda la gente de aquella costa está hecha a ver a los unos y a los otros; pero admirábanse de la hermosura de Zoraida, la cual en aquel instante y sazón estaba en su punto, ansí con el cansancio del camino como con la alegría de verse ya en tierra de cristianos, sin sobresalto de perderse; y esto le había sacado al rostro tales colores que, si no es que la afición entonces me engañaba, osaré decir que más hermosa criatura no había en el mundo; a lo menos, que yo la hubiese visto.

»Fuimos derechos a la iglesia, a dar gracias a Dios por la merced recibida; y, así como en ella entró Zoraida, dijo que allí había rostros que se parecían a los de Lela Marién. Dijímosle que eran imágenes suyas, y como mejor se pudo le dio el renegado a entender lo que significaban, para que ella las adorase como si verdaderamente fueran cada una dellas la misma Lela Marién que la había hablado. Ella, que tiene buen entendimiento y un natural fácil y claro, entendió luego cuanto acerca de las imágenes se le dijo. Desde allí nos llevaron y repartieron a todos en diferentes casas del pueblo; pero al renegado, Zoraida y a mí nos llevó el cristiano que vino con nosotros, y en casa de sus padres, que medianamente eran acomodados de los bienes de fortuna, y nos regalaron con tanto amor como a su mismo hijo.

»Seis días estuvimos en Vélez, al cabo de los cuales el renegado, hecha su información de canto le convenía, se fue a la ciudad de Granada, a reducirse por medio de la Santa Inquisición al gremio santísimo de la Iglesia; los demás cristianos libertados se fueron cada uno donde mejor le pareció; solos quedamos Zoraida y yo, con solos los escudos que la cortesía del francés le dio a Zoraida, de los cuales compré este animal en que ella viene; y, sirviéndola yo hasta agora de padre y escudero, y no de esposo, vamos con intención de ver si mi padre es vivo, o si alguno de mis hermanos ha tenido más próspera ventura que la mía, puesto que, por haberme hecho el cielo compañero de Zoraida, me parece que ninguna otra suerte me pudiera venir, por buena que fuera, que más la estimara. La paciencia con que Zoraida lleva las incomodidades que la pobreza trae consigo, y el deseo que muestra tener de verse ya cristiana es tanto y tal, que me admira y me mueve a servirla todo el tiempo de mi vida, puesto que el gusto que tengo de verme suyo y de que ella sea mía me le turba y deshace no saber si hallaré en mi tierra algún rincón donde recogella, y si habrán hecho el tiempo y la muerte tal mudanza en la hacienda y vida de mi padre y hermanos que apenas halle quien me conozca, si ellos faltan.» No tengo más, señores, que deciros de mi historia; la cual, si es agradable y peregrina, juzguenlo vuestros buenos entendimientos; que de mí sé decir que quisiera habéroslo contado más brevemente, puesto que el temor de enfadaros más de cuatro circunstancias me ha quitado de la lengua.

Capítulo XLII

Que trata de lo que más sucedió en la venta y de otras muchas cosas dignas de saberse

CALLÓ, en diciendo esto, el cautivo, a quien don Fernando dijo:

-Por cierto, señor capitán, el modo con que habéis contado este extraño suceso ha sido tal, que iguala a la novedad y extrañeza del mismo caso. Todo es peregrino y raro, y lleno de accidentes que maravillan y suspenden a quien los oye; y es de tal manera el gusto que hemos recibido en escuchalle, que, aunque nos hallara el día de mañana entretenidos en el mismo cuento, holgáramos que de nuevo se comenzara.

Y, en diciendo esto, don Fernando y todos los demás se le ofrecieron, con todo lo a ellos posible para servirle, con palabras y razones tan amorosas y tan verdaderas que el capitán se tuvo por bien satisfecho de sus voluntades. Especialmente, le ofreció don Fernando que si quería volverse con él, que él haría que el marqués, su hermano, fuese padrino del bautismo de Zoraida, y que él, por su parte, le acomodaría de manera que pudiese entrar en su tierra con el autoridad y cómodo que a su persona se debía. Todo lo agradeció cortesísimamente el cautivo, pero no quiso acetar ninguno de sus liberales ofrecimientos.

En esto, llegaba ya la noche, y, al cerrar della, llegó a la venta un coche, con algunos hombres de a caballo. Pidieron posada; a quien la ventera respondió que no había en toda la venta un palmo desocupado.

-Pues, aunque eso sea -dijo uno de los de a caballo que habían entrado-, no ha de faltar para el señor oidor que aquí viene.

A este nombre se turbó la güéspedes, y dijo:

-Señor, lo que en ello hay es que no tengo camas: si es que su merced del señor oidor la trae, que sí debe de traer, entre en buen hora, que yo y mi marido nos saldremos de nuestro aposento por acomodar a su merced.

-Sea en buen hora -dijo el escudero.

Pero, a este tiempo, ya había salido del coche un hombre, que en el traje mostró luego el oficio y cargo que tenía, porque la ropa luenga, con las mangas arrocadas, que vestía, mostraron ser oidor, como su criado había dicho. Traía de la mano a una doncella, al parecer de hasta diez y seis años, vestida de camino, tan bizarra, tan hermosa y tan gallarda que a todos puso en admiración su vista; de suerte que, a no haber visto a Dorotea y a Luscinda y Zoraida, que en la venta estaban, creyeran que otra tal hermosura como la desta doncella difícilmente pudiera hallarse. Hallóse don Quijote al entrar del oidor y de la doncella, y, así como le vio, dijo:

-Seguramente puede vuestra merced entrar y espaciarse en este castillo, que, aunque es estrecho y mal acomodado, no hay estrechez ni incomodidad en el mundo que no dé lugar a las armas y a las letras, y más si las armas y letras traen por guía y adalid a la fermosura, como la traen las letras de vuestra merced en esta fermosa doncella, a quien deben no sólo abrirse y manifestarse los castillos, sino apartarse los riscos, y devidirse y abajarse las montañas, para dalle acogida. Entre vuestra merced, digo, en este paraíso, que aquí hallará estrellas y soles que acompañen el cielo que vuestra merced trae consigo; aquí hallará las armas en su punto y la hermosura en su extremo.

Admirado quedó el oidor del razonamiento de don Quijote, a quien se puso a mirar muy de propósito, y no menos le admiraba su talle que sus palabras; y, sin hallar ningunas con que respondelle, se tornó a admirar de nuevo cuando vio delante de sí a Luscinda, Dorotea y a Zoraida, que, a las nuevas de los nuevos güéspedes y a las que la ventera les había dado de la hermosura de la doncella, habían venido a verla y a recibirla. Pero don Fernando, Cardenio y el cura le hicieron más llanos y más cortesanos ofrecimientos. En efecto, el señor oidor entró confuso, así de lo que veía como de lo que escuchaba, y las hermosas de la venta dieron la bienllegada a la hermosa doncella.

En resolución, bien echó de ver el oidor que era gente principal toda la que allí estaba; pero el talle, visaje y la apostura de don Quijote le desatinaba; y, habiendo pasado entre todos cortesos ofrecimientos y tanteado la comodidad de la venta, se ordenó lo que antes estaba ordenado: que todas las mujeres se entrasen en el camaranchón ya referido, y que los hombres se quedasen fuera, como en su guarda. Y así, fue contento el oidor que su hija, que era la doncella, se fuese con aquellas señoras, lo que ella hizo de muy buena gana. Y con parte de la estrecha cama del ventero, y con la mitad de la que el oidor traía, se acomodaron aquella noche mejor de lo que pensaban.

El cautivo, que, desde el punto que vio al oidor, le dio saltos el corazón y barruntos de que aquél era su hermano, preguntó a uno de los criados que con él venían que cómo se llamaba y si sabía de qué tierra era. El criado le respondió que se llamaba el licenciado Juan Pérez de Viedma, y que había oído decir que era de un lugar de las montañas de León. Con esta relación y con lo que él había visto se acabó de confirmar de que aquél era su hermano, que había seguido las letras por consejo de su padre; y, alborotado y contento, llamando aparte a don Fernando, a Cardenio y al cura, les contó lo que pasaba, certificándoles que aquel oidor era su hermano. Habíale dicho también el criado como iba proveído por oidor a las Indias, en la Audiencia de Méjico. Supo también como aquella doncella era su hija, de cuyo parto había muerto su madre, y que él había quedado muy rico con el dote que con la hija se le quedó en casa. Pidióles consejo qué modo tendría para descubrirse, o para conocer primero si, después de descubierto, su hermano, por verle pobre, se afrentaba o le recibía con buenas entrañas.

-Déjeseme a mí el hacer esa experiencia -dijo el cura-; cuanto más, que no hay pensar sino que vos, señor capitán, seréis muy bien recibido; porque el valor y prudencia que en su buen parecer descubre vuestro hermano no da indicios de ser arrogante ni desconocido, ni que no ha de saber poner los casos de la fortuna en su punto.

-Con todo eso -dijo el capitán-yo querría, no de improviso, sino por rodeos, dármele a conocer.

-Ya os digo -respondió el cura-que yo lo trazaré de modo que todos quedemos satisfechos.

Ya, en esto, estaba aderezada la cena, y todos se sentaron a la mesa, eceto el cautivo y las señoras, que cenaron de por sí en su aposento. En la mitad de la cena dijo el cura:

-Del mismo nombre de vuestra merced, señor oidor, tuve yo una camarada en Costantinopla, donde estuve cautivo algunos años; la cual camarada era uno de los valientes soldados y capitanes que había en toda la infantería española, pero tanto cuanto tenía de esforzado y valeroso tenía de desdichado.

-Y ¿cómo se llamaba ese capitán, señor mío? -preguntó el oidor.

-Llamábase -respondió el cura-Ruy Pérez de Viedma, y era natural de un lugar de las montañas de León, el cual me contó un caso que a su padre con sus hermanos le había sucedido, que, a no contármelo un hombre tan verdadero como él, lo tuviera por conseja de aquellas que las viejas cuentan el invierno al fuego. Porque me dijo que su padre había dividido su hacienda entre tres hijos que tenía, y les había dado ciertos consejos, mejores que los de Catón. Y sé yo decir que el que él escogió de venir a la guerra le había sucedido tan bien que en pocos años, por su valor y esfuerzo, sin otro brazo que el de su mucha virtud, subió a ser capitán de infantería, y a verse en camino y predicamento de ser presto maestro de campo. Pero fuele la fortuna contraria, pues donde la pudiera esperar y tener buena, allí la perdió, con perder la libertad en la felicísima jornada donde tantos la cobraron, que fue en la batalla de Lepanto. Yo la perdí en la Goleta, y después, por diferentes sucesos, nos hallamos camaradas en Costantinopla. Desde allí vino a Argel, donde sé que le sucedió uno de los más estraños casos que en el mundo han sucedido.

De aquí fue prosiguiendo el cura, y, con brevedad sucinta, contó lo que con Zoraida a su hermano había sucedido; a todo lo cual estaba tan atento el oidor, que ninguna vez había sido tan oidor como entonces. Sólo llegó el cura al punto de cuando los franceses despojaron a los cristianos que en la barca venían, y la pobreza y necesidad en que su camarada y la hermosa mora habían quedado; de los cuales no había sabido en qué habían parado, ni si habían llegado a España, o llevádoslos los franceses a Francia.

Todo lo que el cura decía estaba escuchando, algo de allí desviado, el capitán, y notaba todos los movimientos que su hermano hacía; el cual, viendo que ya el cura había llegado al fin de su cuento, dando un grande suspiro y llenándosele los ojos de agua, dijo:

-¡Oh, señor, si supiésedes las nuevas que me habéis contado, y cómo me tocan tan en parte que me es forzoso dar muestras dello con estas lágrimas que, contra toda mi discreción y recato, me salen por los ojos! Ese capitán tan valeroso que decís es mi mayor hermano, el cual, como más fuerte y de más altos pensamientos que yo ni otro hermano menor mío, escogió el honroso y digno ejercicio de la guerra, que fue uno de los tres caminos que nuestro padre nos propuso, según os dijo vuestra camarada en la conseja que, a vuestro parecer, le oístes. Yo seguí el de las letras, en las cuales Dios y mi diligencia me han puesto en el grado que me veis. Mi menor hermano está en el Pirú, tan rico que con lo que ha enviado a mi padre y a mí ha satisfecho bien la parte que él se llevó, y aun dado a las manos de mi padre con que poder hartar su liberalidad natural; y yo, ansimesmo, he podido con más decencia y autoridad tratarme en mis estudios y llegar al puesto en que me veo. Vive aún mi padre, muriendo con el deseo de saber de su hijo mayor, y pide a Dios con continuas oraciones no cierre la muerte sus ojos hasta que él vea con vida a los de su hijo; del cual me maravillo, siendo tan discreto, cómo en tantos trabajos y aflicciones, o prósperos sucesos, se haya descuidado de dar noticia de sí a su padre; que si él lo supiera, o alguno de nosotros, no tuviera necesidad de aguardar al milagro de la caña para alcanzar su rescate. Pero de lo que yo agora me temo es de pensar si aquellos franceses le habrán dado libertad, o le habrán muerto por encubrir su hurto. Esto todo será que yo prosiga mi viaje, no con aquel contento con que le comencé, sino con toda melancolía y tristeza. ¡Oh buen hermano mío, y quién supiera agora dónde estabas; que yo te fuera a buscar y a librar de tus trabajos, aunque fuera a costa de los míos! ¡Oh, quién llevara nuevas a nuestro viejo padre de que tenías vida, aunque estuvieras en las mazmorras más escondidas de Berbería; que de allí te sacaran sus riquezas, las de mi hermano y las mías! ¡Oh Zoraida hermosa y liberal, quién pudiera pagar el bien que a un hermano hiciste!; ¡quién pudiera hallarse al renacer de tu alma, y a las bodas, que tanto gusto a todos nos

Estas y otras semejantes palabras decía el oidor, lleno de tanta compasión con las nuevas que de su hermano le habían dado, que todos los que le oían le acompañaban en dar muestras del sentimiento que tenían de su lástima.

Viendo, pues, el cura que tan bien había salido con su intención y con lo que deseaba el capitán, no quiso tenerlos a todos más tiempo tristes, y así, se levantó de la mesa, y, entrando donde estaba Zoraida, la tomó por la mano, y tras ella se vinieron Luscinda, Dorotea y la hija del oidor. Estaba esperando el capitán a ver lo que el cura quería hacer, que fue que, tomándole a él asimesmo de la otra mano, con entrambos a dos se fue donde el oidor y los demás caballeros estaban, y dijo:

-Cesen, señor oidor, vuestras lágrimas, y cólmese vuestro deseo de todo el bien que acertare a desearse, pues tenéis delante a vuestro buen hermano y a vuestra buena cuñada. Éste que aquí veis es el capitán Viedma, y ésta, la hermosa mora que tanto bien le hizo. Los franceses que os dije los pusieron en la estrechez que veis, para que vos mostréis la liberalidad de vuestro buen pecho.

Acudió el capitán a abrazar a su hermano, y él le puso ambas manos en los pechos por mirarle algo más apartado; mas, cuando le acabó de conocer, le abrazó tan estrechamente, derramando tan tiernas lágrimas de contento, que los más de los que presentes estaban le hubieron de acompañar en ellas. Las palabras que entrambos hermanos se dijeron, los sentimientos que mostraron, apenas creo que pueden pensarse, cuanto más escribirse. Allí, en breves razones, se dieron cuenta de sus sucesos; allí mostraron puesta en su punto la buena amistad de dos hermanos; allí abrazó el oidor a Zoraida; allí la ofreció su hacienda; allí hizo que la abrazase su hija; allí la cristiana hermosa y la mora hermosísima renovaron las lágrimas de todos.

Allí don Quijote estaba atento, sin hablar palabra, considerando estos tan estraños sucesos, atribuyéndolos todos a quimeras de la andante caballería. Allí concertaron que el capitán y Zoraida se volviesen con su hermano a Sevilla y avisasen a su padre de su hallazgo y libertad, para que, como pudiese, viniese a hallarse en las bodas y bautismo de Zoraida, por no le ser al oidor posible dejar el camino que llevaba, a causa de tener nuevas que de allí a un mes partía flota de Sevilla a la Nueva España, y fuérale de grande incomodidad perder el viaje.

En resolución, todos quedaron contentos y alegres del buen suceso del cautivo; y, como ya la noche iba casi en las dos partes de su jornada, acordaron de recogerse y reposar lo que de ella les quedaba. Don Quijote se ofreció a hacer la guardia del castillo, porque de algún gigante o otro mal andante follón no fuesen acometidos, codiciosos del gran tesoro de hermosura que en aquel castillo se encerraba. Agradeciéronselo los que le conocían, y dieron al oidor cuenta del humor extraño de don Quijote, de que no poco gusto recibió.

Sólo Sancho Panza se desesperaba con la tardanza del recogimiento, y sólo él se acomodó mejor que todos, echándose sobre los aparejos de su jumento, que le costaron tan caros como adelante se dirá.

Recogidas, pues, las damas en su estancia, y los demás acomodándose como menos mal pudieron, don Quijote se salió fuera de la venta a hacer la centinela del castillo, como lo había prometido.

Sucedió, pues, que faltando poco por venir el alba, llegó a los oídos de las damas una voz tan entonada y tan buena, que les obligó a que todas le prestasen atento oído, especialmente Dorotea, que despierta estaba, a cuyo lado dormía doña Clara de Viedma, que así se llamaba la hija del oidor. Nadie podía imaginar quién era la persona que tan bien cantaba, y era una voz sola, sin que la acompañase instrumento alguno. Unas veces les parecía que cantaban en el patio; otras, que en la caballeriza; y, estando en esta confusión muy atentas, llegó a la puerta del aposento Cardenio y dijo:

-Quien no duerme, escuche; que oirán una voz de un mozo de mulas, que de tal manera canta que encanta.

-Ya lo oímos, señor -respondió Dorotea.

Y, con esto, se fue Cardenio; y Dorotea, poniendo toda la atención posible, entendió que lo que se cantaba era esto:

Capítulo XLIII

Donde se cuenta la agradable historia del mozo de mulas, con otros estraños acaecimientos en la venta sucedidos

-Marinero soy de amor, y en su piélago profundo navego sin esperanza de llegar a puerto alguno.

Siguiendo voy a una estrella que desde lejos descubro, más bella y resplandeciente que cuantas vio Palinuro.

Yo no sé adónde me guía,
y así, navego confuso,
el alma a mirarla atenta,
cuidadosa y con descuido.

Recatos impertinentes, honestidad contra el uso, son nubes que me la encubren cuando más verla procuro.

¡Oh clara y luciente estrella, en cuya lumbre me apuro!;
al punto que te me encubras, será de mi muerte el punto.

Llegando el que cantaba a este punto, le pareció a Dorotea que no sería bien que dejase Clara de oír una tan buena voz; y así, moviéndola a una y a otra parte, la despertó diciéndole: -Perdóname, niña, que te despierto, pues lo hago porque gustes de oír la mejor voz que quizá habrás oído en toda tu vida.

Clara despertó toda soñolienta, y de la primera vez no entendió lo que Dorotea le decía; y, volviéndoselo a preguntar, ella se lo volvió a decir, por lo cual estuvo atenta Clara. Pero, apenas hubo oído dos versos que el que cantaba iba prosiguiendo, cuando le tomó un temblor tan extraño como si de algún grave accidente de cuartana estuviera enferma, y, abrazándose estrechamente con Dorotea, le dijo: -¡Ay señora de mi alma y de mi vida!, ¿para qué me despertastes?; que el mayor bien que la fortuna me podía hacer por ahora era tenerme cerrados los ojos y los oídos, para no ver ni oír a ese desdichado músico.

-¿Qué es lo que dices, niña?; mira que dicen que el que canta es un mozo de mulas.

-No es sino señor de lugares -respondió Clara-, y el que le tiene en mi alma con tanta seguridad que si él no quiere dejalle, no le será quitado eternamente.

Admirada quedó Dorotea de las sentidas razones de la muchacha, pareciéndole que se aventajaban en mucho a la discreción que sus pocos años prometían; y así, le dijo: -Habláis de modo, señora Clara, que no puedo entenderos: declaraos más y decidme qué es lo que decís de alma y de lugares, y deste músico, cuya voz tan inquieta os tiene. Pero no me digáis nada por ahora, que no quiero perder, por acudir a vuestro sobresalto, el gusto que recibo de oír al que canta; que me parece que con nuevos versos y nuevo tono torna a su canto.

-Sea en buen hora -respondió Clara.

Y, por no oírle, se tapó con las manos entrambos oídos, de lo que también se admiró Dorotea; la cual, estando atenta a lo que se cantaba, vio que proseguían en esta manera: -Dulce esperanza mía, que, rompiendo imposibles y malezas, sigues firme la vía que tú mesma te finges y aderezas:

no te desmaye el verte
a cada paso junto al de tu muerte.

No alcanzan perezosos honrados triunfos ni vitoria alguna, ni pueden ser dichosos los que, no contrastando a la fortuna, entregan, desvalidos,
al ocio blando todos los sentidos.

Que amor sus glorias venda caras, es gran razón, y es trato justo, pues no hay más rica prenda que la que se quilata por su gusto;

y es cosa manifiesta que no es de estima lo que poco cuesta.

Amorosas porfías
tal vez alcanzan imposibles cosas;
y así, aunque con las mías sigo de amor las más dificultosas,

no por eso recelo
de no alcanzar desde la tierra el cielo.

Aquí dio fin la voz, y principio a nuevos sollozos Clara. Todo lo cual encendía el deseo de Dorotea, que deseaba saber la causa de tan suave canto y de tan triste lloro. Y así, le volvió a preguntar qué era lo que le quería decir denantes. Entonces Clara, temerosa de que Luscinda no la oyese, abrazando estrechamente a Dorotea, puso su boca tan junto del oído de Dorotea, que seguramente podía hablar sin ser de otro sentida, y así le dijo: -Este que canta, señora mía, es un hijo de un caballero natural del reino de Aragón, señor de dos lugares, el cual vivía frontero de la casa de mi padre en la Corte; y, aunque mi padre tenía las ventanas de su casa con lienzos en el invierno y celosías en el verano, yo no sé lo que fue, ni lo que no, que este caballero, que andaba al estudio, me vio, ni sé si en la iglesia o en otra parte. Finalmente, él se enamoró de mí, y me lo dio a entender desde las ventanas de su casa con tantas señas y con tantas lágrimas, que yo le hube de creer, y aun querer, sin saber lo que me quería. Entre las señas que me hacía, era una de juntarse la una mano con la otra, dándome a entender que se casaría conmigo; y, aunque yo me holgaría mucho de que así fuera, como sola y sin madre, no sabía con quién comunicallo, y así, lo dejé estar sin dalle otro favor si no era, cuando estaba mi padre fuera de casa y el suyo también, alzar un poco el lienzo o la celosía y dejarme ver toda, de lo que él hacía tanta fiesta, que daba señales de volverse loco. Llegóse en esto el tiempo de la partida de mi padre, la cual él supo, y no de mí, pues nunca pude decírselo. Cayó malo, a lo que yo entiendo, de pesadumbre; y así, el día que nos partimos nunca pude verle para despedirme dél, siquiera con los ojos. Pero, a cabo de dos días que caminábamos, al entrar de una posada, en un lugar una jornada de aquí, le vi a la puerta del mesón, puesto en hábito de mozo de mulas, tan al natural que si yo no le trujera tan retratado en mi alma fuera imposible conocele. Conocíle, admiréme y alegréme; él me miró a hurto de mi padre, de quien él siempre se esconde cuando atraviesa por delante de mí en los caminos y en las posadas do llegamos; y, como yo sé quién es, y considero que por amor de mí viene a pie y con tanto trabajo, muérome de pesadumbre, y adonde él pone los pies pongo yo los ojos. No sé con qué intención viene, ni cómo ha podido escaparse de su padre, que le quiere estraordinariamente, porque no tiene otro heredero, y porque él lo merece, como lo verá vuestra merced cuando le vea. Y más le sé decir: que todo aquello que canta lo saca de su cabeza; que he oído decir que es muy gran estudiante y poeta. Y hay más: que cada vez que le veo o le oigo cantar, tiemblo toda y me sobresalto, temerosa de que mi padre le conozca y venga en conocimiento de nuestros deseos. En mi vida le he hablado palabra, y, con todo eso, le quiero de manera que no he de poder vivir sin él. Esto es, señora mía, todo lo que os puedo decir deste músico, cuya voz tanto os ha contentado; que en sola ella echaréis bien de ver que no es mozo de mulas, como decís, sino señor de almas y lugares, como yo os he dicho.

-No digáis más, señora doña Clara -dijo a esta sazón Dorotea, y esto, besándola mil veces-; no digáis más, digo, y esperad que venga el nuevo día, que yo espero en Dios de encaminar de manera vuestros negocios, que tengan el felice fin que tan honestos principios merecen.

-¡Ay señora! -dijo doña Clara-, ¿qué fin se puede esperar, si su padre es tan principal y tan rico que le parecerá que aun yo no puedo ser criada de su hijo, cuanto más esposa? Pues casarme yo a hurto de mi padre, no lo haré por cuanto hay en el mundo. No querría sino que este mozo se volviese y me dejase; quizá con no velle y con la gran distancia del camino que llevamos se me aliviaría la pena que ahora llevo, aunque sé decir que este remedio que me imagino me ha de aprovechar bien poco. No sé qué diablos ha sido esto, ni por dónde se ha entrado este amor que le tengo, siendo yo tan muchacha y él tan muchacho, que en verdad que creo que somos de una edad mesma, y que yo no tengo cumplidos diez y seis años; que para el día de San Miguel que vendrá dice mi padre que los cumplo.

No pudo dejar de reírse Dorotea, oyendo cuán como niña hablaba doña Clara, a quien dijo: -Reposemos, señora, lo poco que creo queda de la noche, y amanecerá Dios y medraremos, o mal me andarán las manos.

Sosegáronse con esto, y en toda la venta se guardaba un grande silencio; solamente no dormían la hija de la ventera y Maritornes, su criada, las cuales, como ya sabían el humor de que pecaba don Quijote, y que estaba fuera de la venta armado y a caballo haciendo la guarda, determinaron las dos de hacelle alguna burla, o, a lo menos, de pasar un poco el tiempo oyéndole sus disparates.

Es, pues, el caso que en toda la venta no había ventana que saliese al campo, sino un agujero de un pajar, por donde echaban la paja por defuera. A este agujero se pusieron las dos semidoncellas, y vieron que don Quijote estaba a caballo, recostado sobre su lanzón, dando de cuando en cuando tan dolientes y profundos suspiros, que parecía que con cada uno se le arrancaba el alma. Y asimesmo oyeron que decía con voz blanda, regalada y amorosa: -¡Oh mi señora Dulcinea del Toboso, extremo de toda hermosura, fin y remate de la discreción, archivo del mejor donaire, depósito de la honestidad, y, ultimadamente, idea de todo lo provechoso, honesto y deleitable que hay en el mundo! Y ¿qué hará agora la tu merced? ¿Si tendrás por ventura las mientes en tu cautivo caballero, que a tantos peligros, por sólo servirte, de su voluntad ha querido ponerse? Dame tú nuevas della, ¡oh luminaria de las tres caras! Quizá con envidia de la suya la estás ahora mirando; que, o paseándose por alguna galería de sus suntuosos palacios, o ya puesta de pechos sobre algún balcón, está considerando cómo, salva su honestidad y grandeza, ha de amansar la tormenta que por ella este mi cuitado corazón padece, qué gloria ha de dar a mis penas, qué sosiego a mi cuidado y, finalmente, qué vida a mi muerte y qué premio a mis servicios. Y tú, sol, que ya debes de estar apriesa ensillando tus caballos, por madrugar y salir a ver a mi señora, así como la veas, suplícode que de mi parte la saludes; pero guárdate que al verla y saludarla no le des paz en el rostro, que tendré más celos de ti que tú los tuviste de aquella ligera ingrata que tanto te hizo sudar y correr por los llanos de Tesalia, o por las riberas de Peneo, que no me acuerdo bien por dónde corriste entonces celoso y enamorado.

A este punto llegaba entonces don Quijote en su tan lastimero razonamiento, cuando la hija de la ventera le comenzó a cecear y a decirle: -Señor mío, lléguese acá la vuestra merced si es servido.

A cuyas señas y voz volvió don Quijote la cabeza, y vio, a la luz de la luna, que entonces estaba en toda su claridad, cómo le llamaban del agujero que a él le pareció ventana, y aun con rejas doradas, como conviene que las tengan tan ricos castillos como él se imaginaba que era aquella venta; y luego en el instante se le representó en su loca imaginación que otra vez, como la pasada, la doncella hermosa, hija de la señora de aquel castillo, vencida de su amor, tornaba a solicitarle; y con este pensamiento, por no mostrarse descortés y desagradecido, volvió las riendas a Rocinante y se llegó al agujero, y, así como vio a las dos mozas, dijo: -Lástima os tengo, hermosa señora, de que hayades puesto vuestras amorosas mientes en parte donde no es posible corresponderos conforme merece vuestro gran valor y gentileza; de lo que no debéis dar culpa a este miserable andante caballero, a quien tiene amor imposibilitado de poder entregar su voluntad a otra que aquella que, en el punto que sus ojos la vieron, la hizo señora absoluta de su alma. Perdonadme, buena señora, y recogeos en vuestro aposento, y no queráis, con significarme más vuestros deseos, que yo me muestre más desagradecido; y si del amor que me tenéis halláis en mí otra cosa con que satisfaceros, que el mismo amor no sea, pedídmela; que yo os juro, por aquella ausente enemiga dulce mía, de dárosela en continente, si bien me pidiédes una guedeja de los cabellos de Medusa, que eran todos culebras, o ya los mismos rayos del sol encerrados en una redoma.

-No ha menester nada deso mi señora, señor caballero -dijo a este punto Maritornes.

-Pues, ¿qué ha menester, discreta dueña, vuestra señora? -respondió don Quijote.

-Sola una de vuestras hermosas manos -dijo Maritornes-, por poder deshogar con ella el gran deseo que a este agujero la ha traído, tan a peligro de su honor que si su señor padre la hubiera sentido, la menor tajada della fuera la oreja.

-¡Ya quisiera yo ver eso! -respondió don Quijote-; pero él se guardará bien deso, si ya no quiere hacer el más desastrado fin que padre hizo en el mundo, por haber puesto las manos en los delicados miembros de su enamorada hija.

Parecióle a Maritornes que sin duda don Quijote daría la mano que le habían pedido, y, proponiendo en su pensamiento lo que había de hacer, se bajó del agujero y se fue a la caballeriza, donde tomó el cabestro del jumento de Sancho Panza, y con mucha presteza se volvió a su agujero, a tiempo que don Quijote se había puesto de pies sobre la silla de Rocinante, por alcanzar a la ventana enrejada, donde se imaginaba estar la ferida doncella; y, al darle la mano, dijo: -Tomad, señora, esa mano, o, por mejor decir, ese verdugo de los malhechores del mundo; tomad esa mano, digo, a quien no ha tocado otra de mujer alguna, ni aun la de aquella que tiene entera posesión de todo mi cuerpo. No os la doy para que la beséis, sino para que miréis la contestura de sus nervios, la trabazón de sus músculos, la anchura y espaciosidad de sus venas; de donde sacaréis qué tal debe de ser la fuerza del brazo que tal mano tiene.

-Ahora lo veremos -dijo Maritornes.

Y, haciendo una lazada corrediza al cabestro, se la echó a la muñeca, y, bajándose del agujero, ató lo que quedaba al cerrojo de la puerta del pajar muy fuertemente. Don Quijote, que sintió la aspereza del cordel en su muñeca, dijo: -Más parece que vuestra merced me ralla que no que me regala la mano; no la tratéis tan mal, pues ella no tiene la culpa del mal que mi voluntad os hace, ni es bien que en tan poca parte venguéis el todo de vuestro enojo. Mirad que quien quiere bien no se venga tan mal.

Pero todas estas razones de don Quijote ya no las escuchaba nadie, porque, así como Maritornes le ató, ella y la otra se fueron, muertas de risa, y le dejaron asido de manera que fue imposible soltarse.

Estaba, pues, como se ha dicho, de pies sobre Rocinante, metido todo el brazo por el agujero y atado de la muñeca, y al cerrojo de la puerta, con grandísimo temor y cuidado, que si Rocinante se desviaba a un cabo o a otro, había de quedar colgado del brazo; y así, no osaba hacer movimiento alguno, puesto que de la paciencia y quietud de Rocinante bien se podía esperar que estaría sin moverse un siglo entero.

En resolución, viéndose don Quijote atado, y que ya las damas se habían ido, se dio a imaginar que todo aquello se hacía por vía de encantamento, como la vez pasada, cuando en aquel mismo castillo le molió aquel moro encantado del arriero; y maldecía entre sí su poca discreción y discurso, pues, habiendo salido tan mal la vez primera de aquel castillo, se había aventurado a entrar en él la segunda, siendo advertimiento de caballeros andantes que, cuando han probado una aventura y no salido bien con ella, es señal que no está para ellos guardada, sino para otros; y así, no tienen necesidad de probarla segunda vez. Con todo esto, tiraba de su brazo, por ver si podía soltarse; mas él estaba tan bien asido, que todas sus pruebas fueron en vano. Bien es verdad que tiraba con tiento, porque Rocinante no se moviese; y, aunque él quisiera sentarse y ponerse en la silla, no podía sino estar en pie, o arrancarse la mano.

Allí fue el desear de la espada de Amadís, contra quien no tenía fuerza de encantamento alguno; allí fue el maldecir de su fortuna; allí fue el exagerar la falta que haría en el mundo su presencia el tiempo que allí estuviese encantado, que sin duda alguna se había creído que lo estaba; allí el acordarse de nuevo de su querida Dulcinea del Toboso; allí fue el llamar a su buen escudero Sancho Panza, que, sepultado en sueño y tendido sobre el albarda de su jumento, no se acordaba en aquel instante de la madre que lo había parido; allí llamó a los sabios Lirgandeo y Alquife, que le ayudasen; allí invocó a su buena amiga Urganda, que le socorriese, y, finalmente, allí le tomó la mañana, tan desesperado y confuso que bramaba como un toro; porque no esperaba él que con el día se remediaría su cuita, porque la tenía por eterna, teniéndose por encantado. Y hacíale creer esto ver que Rocinante poco ni mucho se movía, y creía que de aquella suerte, sin comer ni beber ni dormir, habían de estar él y su caballo hasta que aquel mal influjo de las estrellas se pasase, o hasta que otro más sabio encantador le desencantase.

Pero engañóse mucho en su creencia, porque, apenas comenzó a amanecer, cuando llegaron a la venta cuatro hombres de a caballo, muy bien puestos y aderezados, con sus escopetas sobre los arzones. Llamaron a la puerta de la venta, que aún estaba cerrada, con grandes golpes; lo cual, visto por don Quijote desde donde aún no dejaba de hacer la centinela, con voz arrogante y alta dijo: - Caballeros, o escuderos, o quienquiera que seáis: no tenéis para qué llamar a las puertas deste castillo; que asaz de claro está que a tales horas, o los que están dentro duermen, o no tienen por costumbre de abrirse las fortalezas hasta que el sol esté tendido por todo el suelo. Desviaos afuera, y esperad que aclare el día, y entonces veremos si será justo o no que os abran.

-¿Qué diablos de fortaleza o castillo es éste -dijo uno-, para obligarnos a guardar esas ceremonias? Si sois el ventero, mandad que nos abran, que somos caminantes que no queremos más de dar cebada a nuestras cabalgaduras y pasar adelante, porque vamos de priesa.

-¿Paréceos, caballeros, que tengo yo talle de ventero? -respondió don Quijote.

-No sé de qué tenéis talle -respondió el otro-, pero sé que decís disparates en llamar castillo a esta venta.

-Castillo es -replicó don Quijote-, y aun de los mejores de toda esta provincia; y gente tiene dentro que ha tenido cetro en la mano y corona en la cabeza.

-Mejor fuera al revés -dijo el caminante-: el cetro en la cabeza y la corona en la mano. Y será, si a mano viene, que debe de estar dentro alguna compañía de representantes, de los cuales es tener a menudo esas coronas y cetros que decís, porque en una venta tan pequeña, y adonde se guarda tanto silencio como ésta, no creo yo que se alojan personas dignas de corona y cetro.

-Sabéis poco del mundo -replicó don Quijote-, pues ignoráis los casos que suelen acontecer en la caballería andante.

Cansábanse los compañeros que con el preguntante venían del coloquio que con don Quijote pasaba, y así, tornaron a llamar con grande furia; y fue de modo que el ventero despertó, y aun todos cuantos en la venta estaban; y así, se levantó a preguntar quién llamaba. Sucedió en este tiempo que una de las cabalgaduras en que venían los cuatro que llamaban se llegó a oler a Rocinante, que, melancólico y triste, con las orejas caídas, sostenía sin moverse a su estirado señor; y como, en fin, era de carne, aunque parecía de leño, no pudo dejar de resentirse y tornar a oler a quien le llegaba a hacer caricias; y así, no se hubo movido tanto cuanto, cuando se desviaron los juntos pies de don Quijote, y, resbalando de la silla, dieran con él en el suelo, a no quedar colgado del brazo: cosa que le causó tanto dolor que creyó o que la muñeca le cortaban, o que el brazo se le arrancaba; porque él quedó tan cerca del suelo que con los extremos de las puntas de los pies besaba la tierra, que era en su perjuicio, porque, como sentía lo poco que le faltaba para poner las plantas en la tierra, fatigábase y estirábase cuanto podía por alcanzar al suelo: bien así como los que están en el tormento de la garrucha, puestos a toca, no toca, que ellos mismos son causa de acrecentar su dolor, con el ahínco que ponen en estirarse, engañados de la esperanza que se les representa, que con poco más que se estiren llegarán al suelo.

Capítulo XLIV

EN EFETO, fueron tantas las voces que don Quijote dio, que, abriendo de presto las puertas de la venta, salió el ventero, despavorido, a ver quién tales gritos daba, y los que estaban fuera hicieron lo mismo. Maritornes, que ya había despertado a las mismas voces, imaginando lo que podía ser, se fue al pajar y desató, sin que nadie lo viese, el cabestro que a don Quijote sostenía, y él dio luego en el suelo, a vista del ventero y de los caminantes, que, llegándose a él, le preguntaron qué tenía, que tales voces daba. Él, sin responder palabra, se quitó el cordel de la muñeca, y, levantándose en pie, subió sobre Rocinante, abrazó su adarga, enristró su lanzón, y, tomando buena parte del campo, volvió a medio galope, diciendo:

-Cualquiera que dijere que yo he sido con justo título encantado, como mi señora la princesa Micomicona me dé licencia para ello, yo le desmiento, le rieto y desafío a singular batalla.

Admirados se quedaron los nuevos caminantes de las palabras de don Quijote, pero el ventero les quitó de aquella admiración, diciéndoles que era don Quijote, y que no había que hacer caso dél, porque estaba fuera de juicio.

Preguntáronle al ventero si acaso había llegado a aquella venta un muchacho de hasta edad de quince años, que venía vestido como mozo de mulas, de tales y tales señas, dando las mismas que traía el amante de doña Clara. El ventero respondió que había tanta gente en la venta, que no había echado de ver en el que preguntaban. Pero, habiendo visto uno dellos el coche donde había venido el oidor, dijo:

-Aquí debe de estar sin duda, porque éste es el coche que él dicen que sigue; quédese uno de nosotros a la puerta y entren los demás a buscarle; y aun sería bien que uno de nosotros rodease toda la venta, porque no se fuese por las bardas de los corrales.

-Así se hará -respondió uno dellos.

Y, entrándose los dos dentro, uno se quedó a la puerta y el otro se fue a rodear la venta; todo lo cual veía el ventero, y no sabía atinar para qué se hacían aquellas diligencias, puesto que bien creyó que buscaban aquel mozo cuyas señas le habían dado.

Ya a esta sazón aclaraba el día; y, así por esto como por el ruido que don Quijote había hecho, estaban todos despiertos y se levantaban, especialmente doña Clara y Dorotea, que la una con sobresalto de tener tan cerca a su amante, y la otra con el deseo de verle, habían podido dormir bien mal aquella noche. Don Quijote, que vio que ninguno de los cuatro caminantes hacía caso dél, ni le respondían a su demanda, moría y rabiaba de despecho y saña; y si él hallara en las ordenanzas de su caballería que lícitamente podía el caballero andante tomar y emprender otra empresa, habiendo dado su palabra y fe de no ponerse en ninguna hasta acabar la que había prometido, él embistiera con todos, y les hiciera responder mal de su grado. Pero, por parecerle no convenirle ni estarle bien comenzar nueva empresa hasta poner a Micomicona en su reino, hubo de callar y estarse quedo, esperando a ver en qué paraban las diligencias de aquellos caminantes; uno de los cuales halló al mancebo que buscaba, durmiendo al lado de un mozo de mulas, bien descuidado de que nadie ni le buscase, ni menos de que le hallase. El hombre le trabó del brazo y le dijo:

-Por cierto, señor don Luis, que responde bien a quien vos sois el hábito que tenéis, y que dice bien la cama en que os hallo al regalo con que vuestra madre os crió.

Limpióse el mozo los soñolientos ojos y miró de espacio al que le tenía asido, y luego conoció que era criado de su padre, de que recibió tal sobresalto, que no acertó o no pudo hablarle palabra por un buen espacio. Y el criado prosiguió diciendo:

-Aquí no hay que hacer otra cosa, señor don Luis, sino prestar paciencia y dar la vuelta a casa, si ya vuestra merced no gusta que su padre y mi señor la dé al otro mundo, porque no se puede esperar otra cosa de la pena con que queda por vuestra ausencia.

-Pues, ¿cómo supo mi padre -dijo don Luis- que yo venía este camino y en este traje?

-Un estudiante -respondió el criado- a quien distes cuenta de vuestros pensamientos fue el que lo descubrió, movido a lástima de las que vio que hacía vuestro padre al punto que os echó menos; y así, despachó a cuatro de sus criados en vuestra busca, y todos estamos aquí a vuestro servicio, más contentos de lo que imaginar se puede, por el buen despacho con que tornaremos, llevándoos a los ojos que tanto os quieren.

-Eso será como yo quisiere, o como el cielo lo ordenare -respondió don Luis.

-¿Qué habéis de querer, o qué ha de ordenar el cielo, fuera de consentir en volveros?; porque no ha de ser posible otra cosa.

Todas estas razones que entre los dos pasaban oyó el mozo de mulas junto a quien don Luis estaba; y, levantándose de allí, fue a decir lo que pasaba a don Fernando y a Cardenio, y a los demás, que ya vestido se habían; a los cuales dijo cómo aquel hombre llamaba de don a aquel muchacho, y las razones que pasaban, y cómo le quería volver a casa de su padre, y el mozo no quería. Y con esto, y con lo que dél sabían de la buena voz que el cielo le había dado, vinieron todos en gran deseo de saber más particularmente quién era, y aun de ayudarle si alguna fuerza le quisiesen hacer; y así, se fueron hacia la parte donde aún estaba hablando y porfiando con su criado.

Salía en esto Dorotea de su aposento, y tras ella doña Clara, toda turbada; y, llamando Dorotea a Cardenio aparte, le contó en breves razones la historia del músico y de doña Clara, a quien él también dijo lo que pasaba de la venida a buscarle los criados de su padre, y no se lo dijo tan callando que lo dejase de oír Clara; de lo que quedó tan fuera de sí que, si Dorotea no llegara a tenerla, diera consigo en el suelo. Cardenio dijo a Dorotea que se volviesen al aposento, que él procuraría poner remedio en todo, y ellas lo hicieron.

Ya estaban todos los cuatro que venían a buscar a don Luis dentro de la venta y rodeados dél, persuadiéndole que luego, sin detenerse un punto, volviese a consolar a su padre. Él respondió que en ninguna manera lo podía hacer hasta dar fin a un negocio en que le iba la vida, la honra y el alma. Apretáronle entonces los criados, diciéndole que en ningún modo volverían sin él, y que le llevarían, quisiese o no quisiese.

-Eso no haréis vosotros -replicó don Luis-, si no es llevándome muerto; aunque, de cualquiera manera que me llevéis, será llevarme sin vida.

Ya a esta sazón habían acudido a la porfía todos los más que en la venta estaban, especialmente Cardenio, don Fernando, sus camaradas, el oidor, el cura, el barbero y don Quijote, que ya le pareció que no había necesidad de guardar más el castillo. Cardenio, como ya sabía la historia del mozo, preguntó a los que llevarle querían que qué les movía a querer llevar contra su voluntad aquel muchacho.

-Muévenos -respondió uno de los cuatro-dar la vida a su padre, que por la ausencia deste caballero queda a peligro de perderla.

A esto dijo don Luis:

-No hay para qué se dé cuenta aquí de mis cosas: yo soy libre, y volveré si me diere gusto, y si no, ninguno de vosotros me ha de hacer fuerza.

-Harásela a vuestra merced la razón -respondió el hombre-; y, cuando ella no bastare con vuestra merced, bastará con nosotros para hacer a lo que venimos y lo que somos obligados.

-Sepamos qué es esto de raíz -dijo a este tiempo el oidor.

Pero el hombre, que lo conoció, como vecino de su casa, respondió:

-¿No conoce vuestra merced, señor oidor, a este caballero, que es el hijo de su vecino, el cual se ha ausentado de casa de su padre en el hábito tan indecente a su calidad como vuestra merced puede ver?

Miróle entonces el oidor más atentamente y conocióle; y, abrazándole, dijo:

-¿Qué niñerías son éstas, señor don Luis, o qué causas tan poderosas, que os hayan movido a venir desta manera, y en este traje, que dice tan mal con la calidad vuestra?

Al mozo se le vinieron las lágrimas a los ojos, y no pudo responder palabra. El oidor dijo a los cuatro que se sosegasen, que todo se haría bien; y, tomando por la mano a don Luis, le apartó a una parte y le preguntó qué venida había sido aquélla.

Y, en tanto que le hacía esta y otras preguntas, oyeron grandes voces a la puerta de la venta, y era la causa dellas que dos huéspedes que aquella noche habían alojado en ella, viendo a toda la gente ocupada en saber lo que los cuatro buscaban, habían intentado a irse sin pagar lo que debían; mas el ventero, que atendía más a su negocio que a los ajenos, les asió al salir de la puerta y pidió su paga, y les afeó su mala intención con tales palabras, que les movió a que le respondiesen con los puños; y así, le comenzaron a dar tal mano, que el pobre ventero tuvo necesidad de dar voces y pedir socorro. La ventera y su hija no vieron a otro más desocupado para poder socorrerle que a don Quijote, a quien la hija de la ventera dijo:

-Socorra vuestra merced, señor caballero, por la virtud que Dios le dio, a mi pobre padre, que dos malos hombres le están moliendo como a cibera.

A lo cual respondió don Quijote, muy de espacio y con mucha flema:

-Fermosa doncella, no ha lugar por ahora vuestra petición, porque estoy impedido de entremeterme en otra aventura en tanto que no diere cima a una en que mi palabra me ha puesto. Mas lo que yo podré hacer por serviros es lo que ahora diré: corred y decid a vuestro padre que se entretenga en esa batalla lo mejor que pudiere, y que no se deje vencer en ningún modo, en tanto que yo pido licencia a la princesa Micomicona para poder socorrerle en su cuita; que si ella me la da, tened por cierto que yo le sacaré della.

-¡Pecadora de mí! -dijo a esto Maritornes, que estaba delante-: primero que vuestra merced alcance esa licencia que dice, estará ya mi señor en el otro mundo.

-Dadme vos, señora, que yo alcance la licencia que digo -respondió don Quijote-; que, como yo la tenga, poco hará al caso que él esté en el otro mundo; que de allí le sacaré a pesar del mismo mundo que lo contradiga; o, por lo menos, os daré tal venganza de los que allá le hubieren enviado, que quedéis más que medianamente satisfechas.

Y sin decir más se fue a poner de hinojos ante Dorotea, pidiéndole con palabras caballerescas y andantescas que la su grandeza fuese servida de darle licencia de acorrer y socorrer al castellano de aquel castillo, que estaba puesto en una grave mengua. La princesa se la dio de buen talante, y él luego, embrazando su adarga y poniendo mano a su espada, acudió a la puerta de la venta, adonde aún todavía traían los dos huéspedes a mal traer al ventero; pero, así como llegó, embazó y se estuvo quedo, aunque Maritornes y la ventera le decían que en qué se detenía, que socorriese a su señor y marido.

-Deténgome -dijo don Quijote- porque no me es lícito poner mano a la espada contra gente escudiril; pero llamadme aquí a mi escudero Sancho, que a él toca y atañe esta defensa y venganza.

Esto pasaba en la puerta de la venta, y en ella andaban las puñadas y mojicones muy en su punto, todo en daño del ventero y en rabia de Maritornes, la ventera y su hija, que se desesperaban de ver la cobardía de don Quijote, y de lo mal que lo pasaba su marido, señor y padre.

Pero dejémosle aquí, que no faltará quien le socorra, o si no, sufra y calle el que se atreve a más de a lo que sus fuerzas le prometen, y volvámonos atrás cincuenta pasos, a ver qué fue lo que don Luis respondió al oidor, que le dejamos aparte, preguntándole la causa de su venida a pie y de tan vil traje vestido. A lo cual el mozo, asiéndole fuertemente de las manos, como en señal de que algún gran dolor le apretaba el corazón, y derramando lágrimas en grande abundancia, le dijo:

-Señor mío, yo no sé deciros otra cosa sino que desde el punto que quiso el cielo y facilitó nuestra vecindad que yo viese a mi señora doña Clara, hija vuestra y señora mía, desde aquel instante la hice dueño de mi voluntad; y si la vuestra, verdadero señor y padre mío, no lo impide, en este mismo día ha de ser mi esposa. Por ella dejé la casa de mi padre, y por ella me puse en este traje, para seguirla dondequiera que fuese, como la saeta al blanco, o como el marinero al norte. Ella no sabe de mis deseos más de lo que ha podido entender de algunas veces que desde lejos ha visto llorar mis ojos. Ya, señor, sabéis la riqueza y la nobleza de mis padres, y como yo soy su único heredero: si os parece que éstas son partes para que os aventuréis a hacerme en todo venturoso, recebidme luego por vuestro hijo; que si mi padre, llevado de otros disignios suyos, no gustare deste bien que yo supe buscarme, más fuerza tiene el tiempo para deshacer y mudar las cosas que las humanas voluntades.

Calló, en diciendo esto, el enamorado mancebo, y el oidor quedó en oírle suspenso, confuso y admirado, así de haber oído el modo y la discreción con que don Luis le había descubierto su pensamiento, como de verse en punto que no sabía el que poder tomar en tan repentino y no esperado negocio; y así, no respondió otra cosa sino que se sosegase por entonces, y entretuviese a sus criados, que por aquel día no le volviesen, porque se tuviese tiempo para considerar lo que mejor a todos estuviese. Besóle las manos por fuerza don Luis, y aun se las bañó con lágrimas, cosa que pudiera enternecer un corazón de mármol, no sólo el del oidor, que, como discreto, ya había conocido cuán bien le estaba a su hija aquel matrimonio; puesto que, si fuera posible, lo quisiera efetuar con voluntad del padre de don Luis, del cual sabía que pretendía hacer de título a su hijo.

Ya a esta sazón estaban en paz los huéspedes con el ventero, pues, por persuasión y buenas razones de don Quijote, más que por amenazas, le habían pagado todo lo que él quiso, y los criados de don Luis aguardaban el fin de la plática del oidor y la resolución de su amo, cuando el demonio, que no duerme, ordenó que en aquel mismo punto entró en la venta el barbero a quien don Quijote quitó el yelmo de Mambrino y Sancho Panza los aparejos del asno, que trocó con los del suyo; el cual barbero, llevando su jumento a la caballeriza, vio a Sancho Panza que estaba aderezando no sé qué de la albarda, y así como la vio la conoció, y se atrevió a arremeter a Sancho, diciendo:

-¡Ah don ladrón, que aquí os tengo! ¡Venga mi bacía y mi albarda, con todos mis aparejos que me robastes!

Sancho, que se vio acometer tan de improviso y oyó los vituperios que le decían, con la una mano asió de la albarda, y con la otra dio un mojicón al barbero que le bañó los dientes en sangre; pero no por esto dejó el barbero la presa que tenía hecha en el albarda; antes, alzó la voz de tal manera que todos los de la venta acudieron al ruido y pendencia, y decía:

-¡Aquí del rey y de la justicia, que, sobre cobrar mi hacienda, me quiere matar este ladrón salteador de caminos!

-Mentís -respondió Sancho-, que yo no soy salteador de caminos; que en buena guerra ganó mi señor don Quijote estos despojos.

Ya estaba don Quijote delante, con mucho contento de ver cuán bien se defendía y ofendía su escudero, y túvole desde allí adelante por hombre de pro, y propuso en su corazón de armalle caballero en la primera ocasión que se le ofreciese, por parecerle que sería en él bien empleada la orden de la caballería. Entre otras cosas que el barbero decía en el discurso de la pendencia, vino a decir:

-Señores, así esta albarda es mía como la muerte que debo a Dios, y así la conozco como si la hubiera parido; y ahí está mi asno en el establo, que no me dejará mentir; si no, pruébensela, y si no le viniere pintiparada, yo quedaré por infame. Y hay más: que el mismo día que ella se me quitó, me quitaron también una bacía de azófar nueva, que no se había estrenado, que era señora de un

Aquí no se pudo contener don Quijote sin responder: y, poniéndose entre los dos y apartándoles, depositando la albarda en el suelo, que la tuviese de manifiesto hasta que la verdad se aclarase, dijo:

-¡Porque vean vuestras mercedes clara y manifiestamente el error en que está este buen escudero, pues llama bacía a lo que fue, es y será yelmo de Mambrino, el cual se le quitó yo en buena guerra, y me hice señor dél con ligítima y lícita posesión! En lo del albarda no me entremeto, que lo que en ello sabré decir es que mi escudero Sancho me pidió licencia para quitar los jaeces del caballo deste vencido cobarde, y con ellos adornar el suyo; yo se la di, y él los tomó, y, de haberse convertido de jaez en albarda, no sabré dar otra razón si no es la ordinaria: que como esas transformaciones se ven en los sucesos de la caballería; para confirmación de lo cual, corre, Sancho hijo, y saca aquí el yelmo que este buen hombre dice ser bacía.

-¡Pardiez, señor -dijo Sancho-, si no tenemos otra prueba de nuestra intención que la que vuestra merced dice, tan bacía es el yelmo de Malino como el jaez deste buen hombre albarda!

-Haz lo que te mando -replicó don Quijote-, que no todas las cosas deste castillo han de ser guiadas por encantamento.

Sancho fue a do estaba la bacía y la trujo; y, así como don Quijote la vio, la tomó en las manos y dijo:

-Miren vuestras mercedes con qué cara podía decir este escudero que ésta es bacía, y no el yelmo que yo he dicho; y juro por la orden de caballería que profeso que este yelmo fue el mismo que yo le quitó, sin haber añadido en él ni quitado cosa alguna.

-En eso no hay duda -dijo a esta sazón Sancho-, porque desde que mi señor le ganó hasta agora no ha hecho con él más de una batalla, cuando libró a los sin ventura encadenados; y si no fuera por este baciyelmo, no lo pasara entonces muy bien, porque hubo asaz de pedradas en aquel trance.

Capítulo XLV

Donde se acaba de averiguar la duda del yelmo de Mambrino y de la albarda, y otras aventuras sucedidas, con toda verdad

-¿QUÉ LES PARECE a vuestras mercedes, señores -dijo el barbero-, de lo que afirman estos gentiles hombres, pues aún porfían que ésta no es bacía, sino yelmo?

-Y quien lo contrario dijere -dijo don Quijote-, le haré yo conocer que miente, si fuere caballero, y si escudero, que remiente mil veces.

Nuestro barbero, que a todo estaba presente, como tenía tan bien conocido el humor de don Quijote, quiso esforzar su desatino y llevar adelante la burla para que todos riesen, y dijo, hablando con el otro barbero:

-Señor barbero, o quien sois, sabed que yo también soy de vuestro oficio, y tengo más ha de veinte años carta de examen, y conozco muy bien de todos los instrumentos de la barbería, sin que le falte uno; y ni más ni menos fui un tiempo en mi mocedad soldado, y sé también qué es yelmo, y qué es morrión, y celada de encaje, y otras cosas tocantes a la milicia, digo, a los géneros de armas de los soldados; y digo, salvo mejor parecer, remitiéndome siempre al mejor entendimiento, que esta pieza que está aquí delante y que este buen señor tiene en las manos, no sólo no es bacía de barbero, pero está tan lejos de serlo como está lejos lo blanco de lo negro y la verdad de la mentira; también digo que éste, aunque es yelmo, no es yelmo entero.

-No, por cierto -dijo don Quijote-, porque le falta la mitad, que es la babera.

-Así es -dijo el cura, que ya había entendido la intención de su amigo el barbero.

Y lo mismo confirmó Cardenio, don Fernando y sus camaradas; y aun el oidor, si no estuviera tan pensativo con el negocio de don Luis, ayudara, por su parte, a la burla; pero las veras de lo que pensaba le tenían tan suspenso, que poco o nada atendía a aquellos donaires.

-¡Válame Dios! -dijo a esta sazón el barbero burlado-; ¿que es posible que tanta gente honrada diga que ésta no es bacía, sino yelmo? Cosa parece ésta que puede poner en admiración a toda una universidad, por discreta que sea. Basta: si es que esta bacía es yelmo, también debe de ser esta albarda jaez de caballo, como este señor ha dicho.

-A mí albarda me parece -dijo don Quijote-, pero ya he dicho que en eso no me entremeto.

-De que sea albarda o jaez -dijo el cura-no está en más de decirlo el señor don Quijote; que en estas cosas de la caballería todos estos señores y yo le damos la ventaja.

-Por Dios, señores míos -dijo don Quijote-, que son tantas y tan estrañas las cosas que en este castillo, en dos veces que en él he alojado, me han sucedido, que no me atreva a decir afirmativamente ninguna cosa de lo que acerca de lo que en él se contiene se preguntare, porque imagino que cuanto en él se trata va por vía de encantamento. La primera vez me fatigó mucho un moro encantado que en él hay, y a Sancho no le fue muy bien con otros sus secuaces; y anoche estuve colgado deste brazo casi dos horas, sin saber cómo ni cómo no vine a caer en aquella desgracia. Así que, ponerme yo agora en cosa de tanta confusión a dar mi parecer, será caer en juicio temerario. En lo que toca a lo que dicen que ésta es bacía, y no yelmo, ya yo tengo respondido; pero, en lo de declarar si ésa es albarda o jaez, no me atrevo a dar sentencia difinitiva: sólo lo dejo al buen parecer de vuestras mercedes. Quizá por no ser armados caballeros, como yo lo soy, no tendrán que ver con vuestras mercedes los encantamentos deste lugar, y tendrán los entendimientos libres, y podrán juzgar de las cosas deste castillo como ellas son real y verdaderamente, y no como a mí me parecían.

-No hay duda -respondió a esto don Fernando-, sino que el señor don Quijote ha dicho muy bien hoy que a nosotros toca la definición deste caso; y, porque vaya con más fundamento, yo tomaré en secreto los votos destos señores, y de lo que resultare daré entera y clara noticia.

Para aquellos que la tenían del humor de don Quijote, era todo esto materia de grandísima risa; pero, para los que le ignoraban, les parecía el mayor disparate del mundo, especialmente a los cuatro criados de don Luis, y a don Luis ni más ni menos, y a otros tres pasajeros que acaso habían llegado a la venta, que tenían parecer de ser cuadrilleros, como, en efeto, lo eran. Pero el que más se desesperaba era el barbero, cuya bacía, allí delante de sus ojos, se le había vuelto en yelmo de Mambrino, y cuya albarda pensaba sin duda alguna que se le había de volver en jaez rico de caballo; y los unos y los otros se reían de ver cómo andaba don Fernando tomando los votos de unos en otros, hablándolos al oído para que en secreto declarasen si era albarda o jaez aquella joya sobre quien tanto se había peleado. Y, después que hubo tomado los votos de aquellos que a don Quijote conocían, dijo en alta voz:

-El caso es, buen hombre, que ya yo estoy cansado de tomar tantos pareceres, porque veo que a ninguno pregunto lo que deseo saber que no me diga que es disparate el decir que ésta sea albarda de jumento, sino jaez de caballo, y aun de caballo castizo; y así, habréis de tener paciencia, porque, a vuestro pesar y al de vuestro asno, éste es jaez y no albarda, y vos habéis alegado y probado muy mal de vuestra parte.

-No la tenga yo en el cielo -dijo el sobrebarbero-si todos vuestras mercedes no se engañan, y que así parezca mi ánima ante Dios como ella me parece a mí albarda, y no jaez; pero allá van leyes..., etcétera; y no digo más; y en verdad que no estoy borracho: que no me he desayunado, si de pecar no.

No menos causaban risa las necedades que decía el barbero que los disparates de don Quijote, el cual a esta sazón dijo:

-Aquí no hay más que hacer, sino que cada uno tome lo que es suyo, y a quien Dios se la dio, San Pedro se la bendiga.

Uno de los cuatro dijo:

-Si ya no es que esto sea burla pesada, no me puedo persuadir que hombres de tan buen entendimiento como son, o parecen, todos los que aquí están, se atrevan a decir y afirmar que ésta no es bacía, ni aquélla albarda; mas, como veo que lo afirman y lo dicen, me doy a entender que no carece de misterio el porfiar una cosa tan contraria de lo que nos muestra la misma verdad y la misma experiencia; porque, ¡voto a tal! -y arrojóle redondo-, que no me den a mí a entender cuantos hoy viven en el mundo al revés de que ésta no sea bacía de barbero y ésta albarda de asno.

-Bien podría ser de borrica -dijo el cura.

-Tanto monta -dijo el criado-, que el caso no consiste en eso, sino en si es o no es albarda, como vuestras mercedes dicen.

Oyendo esto uno de los cuadrilleros que habían entrado, que había oído la pendencia y quistión, lleno de cólera y de enfado, dijo:

-Tan albarda es como mi padre; y el que otra cosa ha dicho o dijere debe de estar hecho uva.

-Mentís como bellaco villano -respondió don Quijote.

Y, alzando el lanzón, que nunca le dejaba de las manos, le iba a descargar tal golpe sobre la cabeza, que, a no desviarse el cuadrillero, se le dejara allí tendido. El lanzón se hizo pedazos en el suelo, y los demás cuadrilleros, que vieron tratar mal a su compañero, alzaron la voz pidiendo favor a la Santa Hermandad.

El ventero, que era de la cuadrilla, entró al punto por su varilla y por su espada, y se puso al lado de sus compañeros; los criados de don Luis rodearon a don Luis, porque con el alboroto no se les fuese; el barbero, viendo la casa revuelta, tornó a asir de su albarda, y lo mismo hizo Sancho; don Quijote puso mano a su espada y arremetió a los cuadrilleros. Don Luis daba voces a sus criados que le dejasen a él y acorriesen a don Quijote, y a Cardenio, y a don Fernando, que todos favorecían a don Quijote. El cura daba voces, la ventera gritaba, su hija se afligía, Maritornes lloraba, Dorotea estaba confusa, Luscinda suspensa y doña Clara desmayada. El barbero aporreaba a Sancho, Sancho molía al barbero; don Luis, a quien un criado suyo se atrevió a asirle del brazo porque no se fuese, le dio una puñada que le bañó los dientes en sangre; el oidor le defendía, don Fernando tenía debajo de sus pies a un cuadrillero, midiéndole el cuerpo con ellos muy a su sabor. El ventero tornó a reforzar la voz, pidiendo favor a la Santa Hermandad: de modo que toda la venta era llantos, voces, gritos, confusiones, temores, sobresaltos, desgracias, cuchilladas, mojicones, palos, coces y efusión de sangre. Y, en la mitad deste caos, máquina y laberinto de cosas, se le representó en la memoria de don Quijote que se veía metido de hoz y de coz en la discordia del campo de Agramante; y así dijo, con voz que atronaba la venta:

-¡Ténganse todos; todos envainen; todos se sosieguen; óiganme todos, si todos quieren quedar con vida!

A cuya gran voz, todos se pararon, y él prosiguió diciendo:

-¿No os dije yo, señores, que este castillo era encantado, y que alguna región de demonios debe de habitar en él? En confirmación de lo cual, quiero que veáis por vuestros ojos cómo se ha pasado aquí y trasladado entre nosotros la discordia del campo de Agramante. Mirad cómo allí se pelea por la espada, aquí por el caballo, acullá por el águila, acá por el yelmo, y todos peleamos, y todos no nos entendemos. Venga, pues, vuestra merced, señor oidor, y vuestra merced, señor cura, y el uno sirva de rey Agramante, y el otro de rey Sobrino, y pónganos en paz; porque por Dios Todopoderoso que es gran bellaquería que tanta gente principal como aquí estamos se mate por causas tan livianas.

Los cuadrilleros, que no entendían el frasis de don Quijote, y se veían malparados de don Fernando, Cardenio y sus camaradas, no querían sosegar; el barbero sí, porque en la pendencia tenía deshechas las barbas y el albarda; Sancho, a la más mínima voz de su amo, obedeció como buen criado; los cuatro criados de don Luis también se estuvieron quedos, viendo cuán poco les iba en no estarlo. Sólo el ventero porfiaba que se habían de castigar las insolencias de aquel loco, que a cada paso le alborotaba la venta. Finalmente, el rumor se apaciguó por entonces, la albarda se quedó por jaez hasta el día del juicio, y la bacía por yelmo y la venta por castillo en la imaginación de don Quijote.

Puestos, pues, ya en sosiego, y hechos amigos todos a persuasión del oidor y del cura, volvieron los criados de don Luis a porfiarle que al momento se viniese con ellos; y, en tanto que él con ellos se avenía, el oidor comunicó con don Fernando, Cardenio y el cura qué debía hacer en aquel caso, contándoseles con las razones que don Luis le había dicho. En fin, fue acordado que don Fernando dijese a los criados de don Luis quién él era y cómo era su gusto que don Luis se fuese con él al Andalucía, donde de su hermano el marqués sería estimado como el valor de don Luis merecía; porque desta manera se sabía de la intención de don Luis que no volvería por aquella vez a los ojos de su padre, si le hiciesen pedazos. Entendida, pues, de los cuatro la calidad de don Fernando y la intención de don Luis, determinaron entre ellos que los tres se volviesen a contar lo que pasaba a su padre, y el otro se quedase a servir a don Luis, y a no dejalle hasta que ellos volviesen por él, o viese lo que su padre les ordenaba.

Desta manera se apaciguó aquella máquina de pendencias, por la autoridad de Agramante y prudencia del rey Sobrino; pero, viéndose el enemigo de la concordia y el émulo de la paz menospreciado y burlado, y el poco fruto que había granjeado de haberlos puesto a todos en tan confuso laberinto, acordó de probar otra vez la mano, resucitando nuevas pendencias y desasosiegos.

Es, pues, el caso que los cuadrilleros se sosegaron, por haber entreoído la calidad de los que con ellos se habían combatido, y se retiraron de la pendencia, por parecerles que, de cualquiera manera que sucediese, habían de llevar lo peor de la batalla; pero uno dellos, que fue el que fue molido y pateado por don Fernando, le vino a la memoria que, entre algunos mandamientos que traía para prender a algunos delincuentes, traía uno contra don Quijote, a quien la Santa Hermandad había mandado prender, por la libertad que dio a los galeotes, y como Sancho, con mucha razón, había temido.

Imaginando, pues, esto, quiso certificarse si las señas que de don Quijote traía venían bien, y, sacando del seno un pergamino, topó con el que buscaba; y, poniéndoselo a leer de espacio, porque no era buen lector, a cada palabra que leía ponía los ojos en don Quijote, y iba cotejando las señas del mandamiento con el rostro de don Quijote, y halló que, sin duda alguna, era el que el mandamiento rezaba. Y, apenas se hubo certificado, cuando, recogiendo su pergamino, en la izquierda tomó el mandamiento, y con la derecha asió a don Quijote del cuello fuertemente, que no le dejaba alentar, y a grandes voces decía:

-¡Favor a la Santa Hermandad! Y, para que se vea que lo pido de veras, léase este mandamiento, donde se contiene que se prenda a este salteador de caminos.

Tomó el mandamiento el cura, y vio como era verdad cuanto el cuadrillero decía, y cómo convenía con las señas con don Quijote; el cual, viéndose tratar mal de aquel villano malandrín, puesta la cólera en su punto y crujiéndole los huesos de su cuerpo, como mejor pudo él, asió al cuadrillero con entrambas manos de la garganta, que, a no ser socorrido de sus compañeros, allí dejara la vida antes que don Quijote la presa. El ventero, que por fuerza había de favorecer a los de su oficio, acudió luego a dalle favor. La ventera, que vio de nuevo a su marido en pendencias, de nuevo alzó la voz, cuyo tenor le llevaron luego Maritornes y su hija, pidiendo favor al cielo y a los que allí estaban. Sancho dijo, viendo lo que pasaba:

-¡Vive el Señor, que es verdad cuanto mi amo dice de los encantos deste castillo, pues no es posible vivir una hora con quietud en él!

Don Fernando despartió al cuadrillero y a don Quijote, y, con gusto de entrambos, les desenclavijó las manos, que el uno en el collar del sayo del uno, y el otro en la garganta del otro, bien asidas tenían; pero no por esto cesaban los cuadrilleros de pedir su preso, y que les ayudasen a dársele atado y entregado a toda su voluntad, porque así convenía al servicio del rey y de la Santa Hermandad, de cuya parte de nuevo les pedían socorro y favor para hacer aquella prisión de aquel robador y salteador de sendas y de carreras. Reíase de oír decir estas razones don Quijote; y, con mucho sosiego, dijo:

-Venid acá, gente soez y malnacida: ¿saltear de caminos llamáis al dar libertad a los encadenados, soltar los presos, acorrer a los miserables, alzar los caídos, remediar los menesterosos? ¡Ah, gente infame, digna por vuestro bajo y vil entendimiento que el cielo no os comunique el valor que se encierra en la caballería andante, ni os dé a entender el pecado e ignorancia en que estáis en no reverenciar la sombra, cuanto más la asistencia, de cualquier caballero andante! Venid acá, ladrones en cuadrilla, que no cuadrilleros, salteadores de caminos con licencia de la Santa Hermandad; decidme: ¿quién fue el ignorante que firmó mandamiento de prisión contra un tal caballero como yo soy? ¿Quién el que ignoró que son esentos de todo judicial fuero los caballeros andantes, y que su ley es su espada; sus fueros, sus bríos; sus premáticas, su voluntad? ¿Quién fue el mentecato, vuelvo a decir, que no sabe que no hay secutoria de hidalgo con tantas preeminencias, ni esenciones, como la que adquiere un caballero andante el día que se arma caballero y se entrega al duro ejercicio de la caballería? ¿Qué caballero andante pagó pecho, alcabala, chapín de la reina, moneda forera, portazgo ni barca? ¿Qué sastre le llevó hechura de vestido que le hiciese? ¿Qué castellano le acogió en su castillo que le hiciese pagar el escote? ¿Qué rey no le asentó a su mesa? ¿Qué doncella no se le aficionó y se le entregó rendida, a todo su talante y voluntad? Y, finalmente, ¿qué caballero andante ha habido, hay ni habrá en el mundo, que no tenga bríos para dar él solo cuatrocientos palos a cuatrocientos cuadrilleros que se le pongan delante?

Capítulo XLVI

De la notable aventura de los cuadrilleros, y la gran ferocidad de nuestro buen caballero don Quijote

EN TANTO que don Quijote esto decía, estaba persuadiendo el cura a los cuadrilleros como don Quijote era falto de juicio, como lo veían por sus obras y por sus palabras, y que no tenían para qué llevar aquel negocio adelante, pues, aunque le prendiesen y llevasen, luego le habían de dejar por loco; a lo que respondió el del mandamiento que a él no tocaba juzgar de la locura de don Quijote, sino hacer lo que por su mayor le era mandado, y que una vez preso, siquiera le soltasen trecientas.

-Con todo eso -dijo el cura-, por esta vez no le habéis de llevar, ni aun él dejará llevarse, a lo que yo entiendo.

En efeto, tanto les supo el cura decir, y tantas locuras supo don Quijote hacer, que más locos fueran que no él los cuadrilleros si no conocieran la falta de don Quijote; y así, tuvieron por bien de apaciguarse, y aun de ser medianeros de hacer las paces entre el barbero y Sancho Panza, que todavía asistían con gran rancor a su pendencia. Finalmente, ellos, como miembros de justicia, mediaron la causa y fueron árbitros della, de tal modo que ambas partes quedaron, si no del todo contentas, a lo menos en algo satisfechas, porque se trocaron las albardas, y no las cinchas y jáquimas; y en lo que tocaba a lo del yelmo de Mambrino, el cura, a socapa y sin que don Quijote lo entendiese, le dio por la bacía ocho reales, y el barbero le hizo una cédula del recibo y de no llamarse a engaño por entonces, ni por siempre jamás, amén.

Sosegadas, pues, estas dos pendencias, que eran las más principales y de más tomo, restaba que los criados de don Luis se contentasen de volver los tres, y que el uno quedase para acompañarle donde don Fernando le quería llevar; y, como ya la buena suerte y mejor fortuna había comenzado a romper lanzas y a facilitar dificultades en favor de los amantes de la venta y de los valientes della, quiso llevarlo al cabo y dar a todo felice suceso, porque los criados se contentaron de cuanto don Luis quería; de que recibió tanto contento doña Clara, que ninguno en aquella sazón la mirara al rostro que no conociera el regocijo de su alma.

Zoraida, aunque no entendía bien todos los sucesos que había visto, se entristecía y alegraba a bulto, conforme veía y notaba los semblantes a cada uno, especialmente de su español, en quien tenía siempre puestos los ojos y traía colgada el alma. El ventero, a quien no se le pasó por alto la dádiva y recompensa que el cura había hecho al barbero, pidió el escote de don Quijote, con el menoscabo de sus cueros y falta de vino, jurando que no saldría de la venta Rocinante, ni el jumento de Sancho, sin que se le pagase primero hasta el último ardite. Todo lo apaciguó el cura, y lo pagó don Fernando, puesto que el oidor, de muy buena voluntad, había también ofrecido la paga; y de tal manera quedaron todos en paz y sosiego, que ya no parecía la venta la discordia del campo de Agramante, como don Quijote había dicho, sino la misma paz y quietud del tiempo de Otaviano; de todo lo cual fue común opinión que se debían dar las gracias a la buena intención y mucha elocuencia del señor cura y a la incomparable liberalidad de don Fernando.

Viéndose, pues, don Quijote libre y desembarazado de tantas pendencies, así de su escudero como suyas, le pareció que sería bien seguir su comenzado viaje y dar fin a aquella grande aventura para que había sido llamado y escogido; y así, con resoluta determinación se fue a poner de hinojos ante Dorotea, la cual no le consintió que hablase palabra hasta que se levantase; y él, por obedecella, se puso en pie y le dijo:

-Es común proverbio, hermosa señora, que la diligencia es madre de la buena ventura, y en muchas y graves cosas ha mostrado la experiencia que la solicitud del negociante trae a buen fin el pleito dudoso; pero en ningunas cosas se muestra más esta verdad que en las de la guerra, adonde la celeridad y presteza previene los discursos del enemigo, y alcanza la vitoria antes que el contrario se ponga en defensa. Todo esto digo, alta y preciosa señora, porque me parece que la estada nuestra en este castillo ya es sin provecho, y podría sernos de tanto daño que lo echásemos de ver algún día; porque, ¿quién sabe si por ocultas espías y diligentes habrá sabido ya vuestro enemigo el gigante de que yo voy a destruíle?; y, dándole lugar el tiempo, se fortificase en algún inexpugnable castillo o fortaleza contra quien valiesen poco mis diligencias y la fuerza de mi incansable brazo. Así que, señora mía, prevengamos, como tengo dicho, con nuestra diligencia sus designios, y partámonos luego a la buena ventura; que no está más de tenerla vuestra grandeza como desea, de cuanto yo tarde de verme con vuestro contrario.

Calló y no dijo más don Quijote, y esperó con mucho sosiego la respuesta de la hermosa infanta; la cual, con ademán señorial y acomodado al estilo de don Quijote, le respondió desta manera:

-Yo os agradezco, señor caballero, el deseo que mostráis tener de favorecerme en mi gran cuita, bien así como caballero, a quien es anejo y concerniente favorecer los huérfanos y menesterosos; y quiera el cielo que el vuestro y mi deseo se cumplan, para que veáis que hay agradecidas mujeres en el mundo. Y en lo de mi partida, sea luego; que yo no tengo más voluntad que la vuestra: disponed vos de mí a toda vuestra guisa y talante; que la que una vez os entregó la defensa de su persona y puso en vuestras manos la restauración de sus señoríos no ha de querer ir contra lo que la vuestra prudencia ordenare.

-A la mano de Dios -dijo don Quijote-; pues así es que una señora se me humilla, no quiero yo perder la ocasión de levantalla y ponella en su heredado trono. La partida sea luego, porque me va poniendo espuelas al deseo y al camino lo que suele decirse que en la tardanza está el peligro. Y, pues no ha criado el cielo, ni visto el infierno, ninguno que me espante ni acobarde, ensilla, Sancho, a Rocinante, y apareja tu jumento y el palafrén de la reina, y despedámonos del castellano y destos señores, y vamos de aquí luego al punto.

Sancho, que a todo estaba presente, dijo, meneando la cabeza a una parte y a otra:

-¡Ay señor, señor, y cómo hay más mal en el aldegüela que se suena, con perdón sea dicho de las tocadas honradas!

-¿Qué mal puede haber en ninguna aldea, ni en todas las ciudades del mundo, que pueda sonarse en menoscabo mío, villano?

-Si vuestra merced se enoja -respondió Sancho-, yo callaré, y dejaré de decir lo que soy obligado como buen escudero, y como debe un buen criado decir a su señor.

-Di lo que quisieres -replicó don Quijote-, como tus palabras no se encaminen a ponerme miedo; que si tú le tienes, haces como quien eres, y si yo no le tengo, hago como quien soy.

-No es eso, ¡pecador fui yo a Dios! -respondió Sancho-, sino que yo tengo por cierto y por averiguado que esta señora que se dice ser reina del gran reino Micomicón no lo es más que mi madre; porque, a ser lo que ella dice, no se anduviera hociendo con alguno de los que están en la rueda, a vuelta de cabeza y a cada traspuesta.

Paróse colorada con las razones de Sancho Dorotea, porque era verdad que su esposo don Fernando, alguna vez, a hurto de otros ojos, había cogido con los labios parte del premio que merecían sus deseos (lo cual había visto Sancho, y pareciéndole que aquella desenvoltura más era de dama cortesana que de reina de tan gran reino), y no pudo ni quiso responder palabra a Sancho, sino dejóle proseguir en su plática, y él fue diciendo:

-Esto digo, señor, porque, si al cabo de haber andado caminos y carreras, y pasado malas noches y peores días, ha de venir a coger el fruto de nuestros trabajos el que se está holgando en esta venta, no hay para qué darme prisa a que ensille a Rocinante, albarde el jumento y aderece al palafrén, pues será mejor que nos estemos quedos, y cada puta hile, y comamos.

¡Oh, váleme Dios, y cuán grande que fue el enojo que recibió don Quijote, oyendo las descompuestas palabras de su escudero! Digo que fue tanto, que, con voz atropellada y tartamuda lengua, lanzando vivo fuego por los ojos, dijo:

-¡Oh bellaco villano, mal mirado, descompuesto, ignorante, infacundo, deslenguado, atrevido, murmurador y maldiciente! ¿Tales palabras has osado decir en mi presencia y en la destas ínclitas señoras, y tales deshonestidades y atrevimientos osaste poner en tu confusa imaginación? ¡Vete de mi presencia, monstruo de naturaleza, depositario de mentiras, almario de embustes, silo de bellaquerías, inventor de maldades, publicador de sandeces, enemigo del decoro que se debe a las reales personas! ¡Vete; no parezcas delante de mí, so pena de mi ira!

Y, diciendo esto, enarcó las cejas, hinchó los carrillos, miró a todas partes, y dio con el pie derecho una gran patada en el suelo, señales todas de la ira que encerraba en sus entrañas. A cuyas palabras y furibundos ademanes quedó Sancho tan encogido y medroso, que se holgara que en aquel instante se abriera debajo de sus pies la tierra y le tragara. Y no supo qué hacerse, sino volver las espaldas y quitarse de la enojada presencia de su señor. Pero la discreta Dorotea, que tan entendido tenía ya el humor de don Quijote, dijo, para templarle la ira:

-No os despechéis, señor Caballero de la Triste Figura, de las sandeces que vuestro buen escudero ha dicho, porque quizá no las debe de decir sin ocasión, ni de su buen entendimiento y cristiana conciencia se puede sospechar que levante testimonio a nadie; y así, se ha de creer, sin poner duda en ello, que, como en este castillo, según vos, señor caballero, decís, todas las cosas van y suceden por modo de encantamento, podría ser, digo, que Sancho hubiese visto por esta diabólica vía lo que él dice que vio, tan en ofensa de mi honestidad.

-Por el omnipotente Dios juro -dijo a esta sazón don Quijote-, que la vuestra grandeza ha dado en el punto, y que alguna mala visión se le puso delante a este pecador de Sancho, que le hizo ver lo que fuera imposible verse de otro modo que por el de encantos no fuera; que sé yo bien de la bondad e inocencia deste desdichado, que no sabe levantar testimonios a nadie.

-Ansí es y ansí será -dijo don Fernando-; por lo cual debe vuestra merced, señor don Quijote, perdonalle y reducirle al gremio de su gracia, sicut erat in principio, antes que las tales visiones le sacasen de juicio.

Don Quijote respondió que él le perdonaba, y el cura fue por Sancho, el cual vino muy humilde, y, hincándose de rodillas, pidió la mano a su amo; y él se la dio, y, después de habérsela dejado besar, le echó la bendición, diciendo:

-Agora acabarás de conocer, Sancho hijo, ser verdad lo que yo otras muchas veces te he dicho de que todas las cosas deste castillo son hechas por vía de encantamento.

-Así lo creo yo -dijo Sancho-, excepto aquello de la manta, que realmente sucedió por vía ordinaria.

-No lo creas -respondió don Quijote-; que si así fuera, yo te vengara entonces, y aun agora; pero ni entonces ni agora pude ni vi en quién tomar venganza de tu agravio.

Desearon saber todos qué era aquello de la manta, y el ventero lo contó, punto por punto: la volatería de Sancho Panza, de que no poco se rieron todos; y de que no menos se corriera Sancho, si de nuevo no le asegurara su amo que era encantamento; puesto que jamás llegó la sandez de Sancho a tanto, que creyese no ser verdad pura y averiguada, sin mezcla de engaño alguno, lo de haber sido manteado por personas de carne y hueso, y no por fantasmas soñadas ni imaginadas, como su señor lo creía y lo afirmaba.

Dos días eran ya pasados los que había que toda aquella ilustre compañía estaba en la venta; y, pareciéndoles que ya era tiempo de partirse, dieron orden para que, sin ponerse al trabajo de volver Dorotea y don Fernando con don Quijote a su aldea, con la invención de la libertad de la reina Micomicona, pudiesen el cura y el barbero llevársele, como deseaban, y procurar la cura de su locura en su tierra. Y lo que ordenaron fue que se concertaron con un carretero de bueyes que acaso acertó a pasar por allí, para que lo llevase en esta forma: hicieron una como jaula de palos enrejados, capaz que pudiese en ella caber holgadamente don Quijote; y luego don Fernando y sus camaradas, con los criados de don Luis y los cuadrilleros, juntamente con el ventero, todos por orden y parecer del cura, se cubrieron los rostros y se disfrazaron, quién de una manera y quién de otra, de modo que a don Quijote le pareciese ser otra gente de la que en aquel castillo había visto.

Hecho esto, con grandísimo silencio se entraron adonde él estaba durmiendo y descansando de las pasadas refriegas. Llegáronse a él, que libre y seguro de tal acontecimiento dormía, y, asiéndole fuertemente, le ataron muy bien las manos y los pies, de modo que, cuando él despertó con sobresalto, no pudo menearse, ni hacer otra cosa más que admirarse y suspenderse de ver delante de sí tan estraños visajes; y luego dio en la cuenta de lo que su continua y desvariada imaginación le representaba, y se creyó que todas aquellas figuras eran fantasmas de aquel encantado castillo, y que, sin duda alguna, ya estaba encantado, pues no se podía menear ni defender: todo a punto como había pensado que sucedería el cura, trazador desta máquina. Sólo Sancho, de todos los presentes, estaba en su mismo juicio y en su misma figura; el cual, aunque le faltaba bien poco para tener la misma enfermedad de su amo, no dejó de conocer quién eran todas aquellas contrahechas figuras; mas no osó descoser su boca, hasta ver en qué paraba aquel asalto y prisión de su amo, el cual tampoco hablaba palabra, atendiendo a ver el paradero de su desgracia; que fue que, trayendo allí la jaula, le encerraron dentro, y le clavaron los maderos tan fuertemente que no se pudieran romper a dos tirones.

Tomáronle luego en hombros, y, al salir del aposento, se oyó una voz temerosa, todo cuanto la supo formar el barbero, no el del albarda, sino el otro, que decía:

-¡Oh Caballero de la Triste Figura!, no te dé afincamiento la prisión en que vas, porque así conviene para acabar más presto la aventura en que tu gran esfuerzo te puso; la cual se acabará cuando el furibundo león manchado con la blanca paloma tobosina yoguieren en uno, ya después de humilladas las altas cervices al blando yugo matrimoñesco; de cuyo inaudito consorcio saldrán a la luz del orbe los bravos cachorros, que imitarán las rumpantes garras del valeroso padre. Y esto será antes que el seguidor de la fugitiva ninfa haga dos veces la visita de las lucientes imágenes con su rápido y natural curso. Y tú, ¡oh, el más noble y obediente escudero que tuvo espada en cinta, barbas en rostro y olfato en las narices!, no te desmaye ni descontente ver llevar así delante de tus ojos mismos a la flor de la caballería andante; que presto, si al plasmador del mundo le place, te verás tan alto y tan sublimado que no te conozcas, y no saldrán defraudadas las promesas que te ha fecho tu buen señor. Y asegúrote, de parte de la sabia Mentironiana, que tu salario te sea pagado, como lo verás por la obra; y sigue las pisadas del valeroso y encantado caballero, que conviene que vayas donde paréis entrambos. Y, porque no me es lícito decir otra cosa, a Dios quedad, que yo me vuelvo adonde yo me sé.

Y, al acabar de la profecía, alzó la voz de punto, y diminuyóla después, con tan tierno acento, que aun los sabidores de la burla estuvieron por creer que era verdad lo que oían.

Quedó don Quijote consolado con la escuchada profecía, porque luego coligió de todo en todo la significación de ella; y vio que le prometían el verse ayuntados en santo y debido matrimonio con su querida Dulcinea del Toboso, de cuyo felice vientre saldrían los cachorros, que eran sus hijos, para gloria perpetua de la Mancha. Y, creyendo esto bien y firmemente, alzó la voz, y, dando un gran suspiro, dijo:

-¡Oh tú, quienquiera que seas, que tanto bien me has pronosticado!, ruégote que pidas de mi parte al sabio encantador que mis cosas tiene a cargo, que no me deje perecer en esta prisión donde agora me llevan, hasta ver cumplidas tan alegres e incomparables promesas como son las que aquí se me han hecho; que, como esto sea, tendré por gloria las penas de mi cárcel, y por alivio estas cadenas que me ciñen, y no por duro campo de batalla este lecho en que me acuestan, sino por cama blanda y tálamo dichoso. Y, en lo que toca a la consolación de Sancho Panza, mi escudero, yo confío de su bondad y buen proceder que no me dejará en buena ni en mala suerte; porque, cuando no suceda, por la suya o por mi corta ventura, el poderle yo dar la ínsula, o otra cosa equivalente que le tengo prometida, por lo menos su salario no podrá perderse; que en mi testamento, que ya está hecho, dejo declarado lo que se le ha de dar, no conforme a sus muchos y buenos servicios, sino a la posibilidad mía.

Sancho Panza se le inclinó con mucho comedimiento, y le besó entrambas las manos, porque la una no pudiera, por estar atadas entrambas.

Luego tomaron la jaula en hombros aquellas visiones, y la acomodaron en el carro de los bueyes.

Capítulo XLVII

CUANDO don Quijote se vio de aquella manera enjaulado y encima del carro, dijo:

-Muchas y muy graves historias he yo leído de caballeros andantes, pero jamás he leído, ni visto, ni oído, que a los caballeros encantados los lleven desta manera y con el espacio que prometen estos perezosos y tardíos animales; porque siempre los suelen llevar por los aires, con extraña ligereza, encerrados en alguna parda y oscura nube, o en algún carro de fuego, o ya sobre algún hipogrifo o otra bestia semejante; pero que me lleven a mí ahora sobre un carro de bueyes, ¡vive Dios que me pone en confusión! Pero quizá la caballería y los encantos destos nuestros tiempos deben de seguir otro camino que siguieron los antiguos. Y también podría ser que, como yo soy nuevo caballero en el mundo, y el primero que ha resucitado el ya olvidado ejercicio de la caballería aventurera, también nuevamente se hayan inventado otros géneros de encantamientos y otros modos de llevar a los encantados. ¿Qué te parece desto, Sancho hijo?

-No sé yo lo que me parece -respondió Sancho-, por no ser tan leído como vuestra merced en las escrituras andantes; pero, con todo eso, osaría afirmar y jurar que estas visiones que por aquí andan, que no son del todo católicas.

-¿Católicas? ¡Mi padre! -respondió don Quijote-. ¿Cómo han de ser católicas si son todos demonios que han tomado cuerpos fantásticos para venir a hacer esto y a ponerme en este estado? Y si quieres ver esta verdad, tócalos y pálpalos, y verás como no tienen cuerpo sino de aire, y como no consiste más de en la apariencia.

-Par Dios, señor -replicó Sancho-, ya yo los he tocado; y este diablo que aquí anda tan solícito es rollizo de carnes, y tiene otra propiedad muy diferente de la que yo he oído decir que tienen los demonios; porque, según se dice, todos huelen a piedra azufre y a otros malos olores; pero éste huele a ámbar de media legua.

Decía esto Sancho por don Fernando, que, como tan señor, debía de oler a lo que Sancho decía.

-No te maravilles deso, Sancho amigo -respondió don Quijote-, porque te hago saber que los diablos saben mucho, y, puesto que traigan olores consigo, ellos no huelen nada, porque son espíritus, y si huelen, no pueden oler cosas buenas, sino malas y hidiondas. Y la razón es que como ellos, dondequiera que están, traen el infierno consigo, y no pueden recibir género de alivio alguno en sus tormentos, y el buen olor sea cosa que deleita y contenta, no es posible que ellos huelan cosa buena. Y si a ti te parece que ese demonio que dices huele a ámbar, o tú te engañas, o él quiere engañarte con hacer que no le tengas por demonio.

Todos estos coloquios pasaron entre amo y criado; y, temiendo don Fernando y Cardenio que Sancho no viniese a caer del todo en la cuenta de su invención, a quien andaba ya muy en los alcances, determinaron de abreviar con la partida; y, llamando aparte al ventero, le ordenaron que ensillase a Rocinante y enalbardase el jumento de Sancho; el cual lo hizo con mucha presteza.

Ya en esto, el cura se había concertado con los cuadrilleros que le acompañasen hasta su lugar, dándoles un tanto cada día. Colgó Cardenio del arzón de la silla de Rocinante, del un cabo la adarga y del otro la bacía, y por señas mandó a Sancho que subiese en su asno y tomase de las riendas a Rocinante, y puso a los dos lados del carro a los dos cuadrilleros con sus escopetas. Pero, antes que se moviese el carro, salió la ventera, su hija y Maritornes a despedirse de don Quijote, fingiendo que lloraban de dolor de su desgracia; a quien don Quijote dijo:

-No lloreis, mis buenas señoras, que todas estas desdichas son anexas a los que profesan lo que yo profeso; y si estas calamidades no me acontecieran, no me tuviera yo por famoso caballero andante; porque a los caballeros de poco nombre y fama nunca les suceden semejantes casos, porque no hay en el mundo quien se acuerde dellos. A los valerosos sí, que tienen envidiosos de su virtud y valentía a muchos príncipes y a muchos otros caballeros, que procuran por malas vías destruir a los buenos. Pero, con todo eso, la virtud es tan poderosa que, por sí sola, a pesar de toda la nigromancia que supo su primer inventor, Zoroastes, saldrá vencedora de todo trance, y dará de sí luz en el mundo, como la da el sol en el cielo. Perdonadme, hermosas damas, si algún desaguisado, por descuido mío, os he fecho, que, de voluntad y a sabiendas, jamás le di a nadie; y rogad a Dios me saque destas prisiones, donde algún mal intencionado encantador me ha puesto; que si de ellas me veo libre, no se me caerá de la memoria las mercedes que en este castillo me habedes fecho, para gratificallas, servillas y recompensallas como ellas merecen.

En tanto que las damas del castillo esto pasaban con don Quijote, el cura y el barbero se despidieron de don Fernando y sus camaradas, y del capitán y de su hermano y todas aquellas contentas señoras, especialmente de Dorotea y Luscinda. Todos se abrazaron y quedaron de darse noticia de sus sucesos, diciendo don Fernando al cura dónde había de escribirle para avisarle en lo que paraba don Quijote, asegurándole que no habría cosa que más gusto le diese que saberlo; y que él, asimesmo, le avisaría de todo aquello que él viese que podría darle gusto, así de su casamiento como del bautismo de Zoraida, y suceso de don Luis, y vuelta de Luscinda a su casa. El cura ofreció de hacer cuanto se le mandaba, con toda puntualidad. Tornaron a abrazarse otra vez, y otra vez tornaron a nuevos ofrecimientos.

El ventero se llegó al cura y le dio unos papeles, diciéndole que los había hallado en un aforro de la maleta donde se halló la Novela del curioso impertinente, y que, pues su dueño no había vuelto más por allí, que se los llevase todos; que, pues él no sabía leer, no los quería. El cura se lo agradeció, y, abriéndolos luego, vio que al principio de lo escrito decía: Novela de Rinconete y Cortadillo, por donde entendió ser alguna novela y coligió que, pues la del Curioso impertinente había sido buena, que también lo sería aquélla, pues podría ser fuesen todas de un mismo autor; y así, la guardó, con prosupuesto de leerla cuando tuviese comodidad.

Subió a caballo, y también su amigo el barbero, con sus antifaces, porque no fuesen luego conocidos de don Quijote, y pusiéronse a caminar tras el carro. Y la orden que llevaban era ésta: iba primero el carro, guiándole su dueño; a los dos lados iban los cuadrilleros, como se ha dicho, con sus escopetas; seguía luego Sancho Panza sobre su asno, llevando de rienda a Rocinante. Detrás de todo esto iban el cura y el barbero sobre sus poderosas mulas, cubiertos los rostros, como se ha dicho, con grave y reposado continente, no caminando más de lo que permitía el paso tardo de los bueyes. Don Quijote iba sentado en la jaula, las manos atadas, tendidos los pies, y arrimado a las verjas, con tanto silencio y tanta paciencia como si no fuera hombre de carne, sino estatua de piedra.

Y así, con aquel espacio y silencio caminaron hasta dos leguas, que llegaron a un valle, donde le pareció al boyero ser lugar acomodado para reposar y dar pasto a los bueyes; y, comunicándolo con el cura, fue de parecer el barbero que caminasen un poco más, porque él sabía, detrás de un recuesto que cerca de allí se mostraba, había un valle de más yerba y mucho mejor que aquel donde parar querían. Tomóse el parecer del barbero, y así, tornaron a proseguir su camino.

En esto, volvió el cura el rostro, y vio que a sus espaldas venían hasta seis o siete hombres de a caballo, bien puestos y aderezados, de los cuales fueron presto alcanzados, porque caminaban no con la flema y reposo de los bueyes, sino como quien iba sobre mulas de canónigos y con deseo de llegar presto a sestar a la venta, que menos de una legua de allí se parecía. Llegaron los diligentes a los perezosos y saludáronse cortésmente; y uno de los que venían, que, en resolución, era canónigo de Toledo y señor de los demás que le acompañaban, viendo la concertada procesión del carro, cuadrilleros, Sancho, Rocinante, cura y barbero, y más a don Quijote, enjaulado y aprisionado, no pudo dejar de preguntar qué significaba llevar aquel hombre de aquella manera; aunque ya se había dado a entender, viendo las insignias de los cuadrilleros, que debía de ser algún facinoroso salteador, o otro delincuente cuyo castigo tocase a la Santa Hermandad. Uno de los cuadrilleros, a quien fue hecha la pregunta, respondió así:

-Señor, lo que significa ir este caballero desta manera, dígalo él, porque nosotros no lo sabemos.

Oyó don Quijote la plática, y dijo:

-¿Por dicha vuestras mercedes, señores caballeros, son versados y perictos en esto de la caballería andante? Porque si lo son, comunicaré con ellos mis desgracias, y si no, no hay para qué me canse en decillas.

Y, a este tiempo, habían ya llegado el cura y el barbero, viendo que los caminantes estaban en pláticas con don Quijote de la Mancha, para responder de modo que no fuese descubierto su artificio.

El canónigo, a lo que don Quijote dijo, respondió:

-En verdad, hermano, que sé más de libros de caballerías que de las Súmulas de Villalpando. Ansí que, si no está más que en esto, seguramente podéis comunicar conmigo lo que quisiéredes.

-A la mano de Dios -replicó don Quijote-. Pues así es, quiero, señor caballero, que sepades que yo voy encantado en esta jaula, por envidia y fraude de malos encantadores; que la virtud más es perseguida de los malos que amada de los buenos. Caballero andante soy, y no de aquellos de cuyos nombres jamás la Fama se acordó para eternizarlos en su memoria, sino de aquellos que, a despecho y pesar de la misma envidia, y de cuantos magos crió Persia, bracmanes la India, ginosofistas la Etiopía, ha de poner su nombre en el templo de la inmortalidad para que sirva de ejemplo y dechado en los venideros siglos, donde los caballeros andantes vean los pasos que han de seguir, si quisieren llegar a la cumbre y alteza honrosa de las armas.

-Dice verdad el señor don Quijote de la Mancha -dijo a esta sazón el cura-; que él va encantado en esta carreta, no por sus culpas y pecados, sino por la mala intención de aquellos a quien la virtud enfada y la valentía enoja. Éste es, señor, el Caballero de la Triste Figura, si ya le oístes nombrar en algún tiempo, cuyas valerosas hazañas y grandes hechos serán escritas en bronces duros y en eternos mármoles, por más que se canse la envidia en escurecerlos y la malicia en ocultarlos.

Cuando el canónigo oyó hablar al preso y al libre en semejante estilo, estuvo por hacerse la cruz, de admirado, y no podía saber lo que le había acontecido; y en la misma admiración cayeron todos los que con él venían. En esto, Sancho Panza, que se había acercado a oír la plática, para adobarlo todo, dijo:

-Ahora, señores, quiéranme bien o quiéranme mal por lo que dijere, el caso de ello es que así va encantado mi señor don Quijote como mi madre; él tiene su entero juicio, él come y bebe y hace sus necesidades como los demás hombres, y como las hacía ayer, antes que le enjaulasen. Siendo esto ansí, ¿cómo quieren hacerme a mí entender que va encantado? Pues yo he oído decir a muchas personas que los encantados ni comen, ni duermen, ni hablan, y mi amo, si no le van a la mano, hablará más que treinta procuradores.

Y, volviéndose a mirar al cura, prosiguió diciendo:

-¡Ah señor cura, señor cura! ¿Pensaba vuestra merced que no le conozco, y pensará que yo no calo y adivino adónde se encaminan estos nuevos encantamientos? Pues sepa que le conozco, por más que se encubra el rostro, y sepa que le entiendo, por más que disimule sus embustes. En fin, donde reina la envidia no puede vivir la virtud, ni adonde hay escaseza la liberalidad. ¡Mal haya el diablo!; que, si por su reverencia no fuera, ésta fuera ya la hora que mi señor estuviera casado con la infanta Micomicona, y yo fuera conde, por lo menos, pues no se podía esperar otra cosa, así de la bondad de mi señor el de la Triste Figura como de la grandeza de mis servicios. Pero ya veo que es verdad lo que se dice por ahí: que la rueda de la Fortuna anda más lista que una rueda de molino, y que los que ayer estaban en pinganitos hoy están por el suelo. De mis hijos y de mi mujer me pesa, pues cuando podían y debían esperar ver entrar a su padre por sus puertas hecho gobernador o visorrey de alguna ínsula o reino, le verán entrar hecho mozo de caballos. Todo esto que he dicho, señor cura, no es más de por encarecer a su paternidad haga conciencia del mal tratamiento que a mi señor se le hace, y mire bien no le pida Dios en la otra vida esta prisión de mi amo, y se le haga cargo de todos aquellos socorros y bienes que mi señor don Quijote deja de hacer en este tiempo que está preso.

-¡Adóbame esos candiles! -dijo a este punto el barbero-. ¿También vos, Sancho, sois de la cofradía de vuestro amo? ¡Vive el Señor, que voy viendo que le habéis de tener compañía en la jaula, y que habéis de quedar tan encantado como él, por lo que os toca de su humor y de su caballería! En mal punto os empreñastes de sus promesas, y en mal hora se os entró en los cascos la ínsula que tanto deseáis.

-Yo no estoy preñado de nadie -respondió Sancho-, ni soy hombre que me dejaría empreñar, del rey que fuese; y, aunque pobre, soy cristiano viejo, y no debo nada a nadie; y si ínsulas deseo, otros desean otras cosas peores; y cada uno es hijo de sus obras; y, debajo de ser hombre, puedo venir a ser papa, cuanto más gobernador de una ínsula, y más pudiendo ganar tantas mi señor que le falte a quien dallas. Vuestra merced mire cómo habla, señor barbero; que no es todo hacer barbas, y algo va de Pedro a Pedro. Dígolo porque todos nos conocemos, y a mí no se me ha de echar dado falso. Y en esto del encanto de mi amo, Dios sabe la verdad; y quédese aquí, porque es peor meneallo.

No quiso responder el barbero a Sancho, porque no descubriese con sus simplicidades lo que él y el cura tanto procuraban encubrir; y, por este mismo temor, había el cura dicho al canónigo que caminasen un poco delante: que él le diría el misterio del enjaulado, con otras cosas que le diesen gusto. Hízolo así el canónigo, y adelantóse con sus criados y con él: estuvo atento a todo aquello que decirle quiso de la condición, vida, locura y costumbres de don Quijote, contándole brevemente el principio y causa de su desvarío, y todo el progreso de sus sucesos, hasta haberlo puesto en aquella jaula, y el disignio que llevaban de llevarle a su tierra, para ver si por algún medio hallaban remedio a su locura. Admiráronse de nuevo los criados y el canónigo de oír la peregrina historia de don Quijote, y, en acabándola de oír, dijo:

-Verdaderamente, señor cura, yo hallo por mi cuenta que son perjudiciales en la república estos que llaman libros de caballerías; y, aunque he leído, llevado de un ocioso y falso gusto, casi el principio de todos los más que hay impresos, jamás me he podido acomodar a leer ninguno del principio al cabo, porque me parece que, cuál más, cuál menos, todos ellos son una misma cosa, y no tiene más éste que aquél, ni estotro que el otro. Y, según a mí me parece, este género de escritura y composición cae debajo de aquel de las fábulas que llaman milesias, que son cuentos disparatados, que atienden solamente a deleitar, y no a enseñar: al contrario de lo que hacen las fábulas apólogas, que deleitan y enseñan juntamente. Y, puesto que el principal intento de semejantes libros sea el deleitar, no sé yo cómo puedan conseguirle, yendo llenos de tantos y tan desaforados disparates; que el deleite que en el alma se concibe ha de ser de la hermosura y concordancia que vee o contempla en las cosas que la vista o la imaginación le ponen delante; y toda cosa que tiene en sí fealdad y descompostura no nos puede causar contento alguno. Pues, ¿qué hermosura puede haber, o qué proporción de partes con el todo y del todo con las partes, en un libro o fábula donde un mozo de diez y seis años da una cuchillada a un gigante como una torre, y le divide en dos mitades, como si fuera de alfeñique; y que, cuando nos quieren pintar una batalla, después de haber dicho que hay de la parte de los enemigos un millón de competientes, como sea contra ellos el señor del libro, forzosamente, mal que nos pese, habemos de entender que el tal caballero alcanzó la vitoria por solo el valor de su fuerte brazo? Pues, ¿qué diremos de la facilidad con que una reina o emperatriz heredera se conduce en los brazos de un andante y no conocido caballero? ¿Qué ingenio, si no es del todo bárbaro e inculto, podrá contentarse leyendo que una gran torre llena de caballeros va por la mar adelante, como nave con próspero viento, y hoy anochece en Lombardía, y mañana amanezca en tierras del Preste Juan de las Indias, o en otras que ni las descubrió Tolomeo ni las vio Marco Polo? Y, si a esto se me respondiese que los que tales libros componen los escriben como cosas de mentira, y que así, no están obligados a mirar en delicadezas ni verdades, responderles hía yo que tanto la mentira es mejor cuanto más parece verdadera, y tanto más agrada cuanto tiene más de lo dudoso y posible. Hanse de casar las fábulas mentirosas con el entendimiento de los que las leyeren, escribiéndose de suerte que, facilitando los imposibles, allanando las grandezas, suspendiendo los ánimos, admiren, suspendan, alborocen y entretengan, de modo que anden a un mismo paso la admiración y la alegría juntas; y todas estas cosas no podrá hacer el que huyere de la verisimilitud y de la imitación, en quien consiste la perfección de lo que se escribe. No he visto ningún libro de caballerías que haga un cuerpo de fábula entero con todos sus miembros, de manera que el medio corresponda al principio, y el fin al principio y al medio; sino que los componen con tantos miembros, que más parece que llevan intención a formar una quimera o un monstruo que a hacer una figura proporcionada. Fuera desto, son en el estilo duros; en las hazañas, increíbles; en los amores, lascivos; en las cortesías, mal mirados; largos en las batallas, necios en las razones, disparatados en los viajes, y, finalmente, ajenos de todo discreto artificio, y por esto dignos de ser desterrados de la república cristiana, como a gente inútil.

El cura le estuvo escuchando con grande atención, y parecióle hombre de buen entendimiento, y que tenía razón en cuanto decía; y así, le dijo que, por ser él de su misma opinión y tener ojeriza a los libros de caballerías, había quemado todos los de don Quijote, que eran muchos. Y contóle el escrutinio que dellos había hecho, y los que había condenado al fuego y dejado con vida, de que no poco se rió el canónigo, y dijo que, con todo cuanto mal había dicho de tales libros, hallaba en ellos una cosa buena: que era el sujeto que ofrecían para que un buen entendimiento pudiese mostrarse en ellos, porque daban largo y espacioso campo por donde sin empacho alguno pudiese correr la pluma, descubriendo naufragios, tormentas, rencuentros y batallas; pintando un capitán valeroso con todas las partes que para ser tal se requieren, mostrándose prudente previniendo las astucias de sus enemigos, y elocuente orador persuadiendo o disuadiendo a sus soldados, maduro en el consejo, presto en lo determinado, tan valiente en el esperar como en el acometer; pintando ora un lamentable y trágico suceso, ahora un alegre y no pensado acontecimiento; allí una hermosísima dama, honesta, discreta y recatada; aquí un caballero cristiano, valiente y comedido; acullá un desaforado bárbaro fanfarrón; acá un príncipe cortés, valeroso y bien mirado; representando bondad y lealtad de vasallos, grandezas y mercedes de señores. Ya puede mostrarse astrólogo, ya cosmógrafo excelente, ya músico, ya inteligente en las materias de estado, y tal vez le vendrá ocasión de mostrarse nigromante, si quisiere. Puede mostrar las astucias de Ulixes, la piedad de Eneas, la valentía de Aquiles, las desgracias de Héctor, las traiciones de Sinón, la amistad de Eurialio, la liberalidad de Alejandro, el valor de César, la clemencia y verdad de Trajano, la fidelidad de Zopiro, la prudencia de Catón; y, finalmente, todas aquellas acciones que pueden hacer perfecto a un varón ilustre, ahora poniéndolas en uno solo, ahora dividiéndolas en muchos.

-Y, siendo esto hecho con apacibilidad de estilo y con ingeniosa invención, que tire lo más que fuere posible a la verdad, sin duda compondrá una tela de varios y hermosos lazos tejida, que, después de acabada, tal perfección y hermosura muestre, que consiga el fin mejor que se pretende en los escritos, que es enseñar y deleitar juntamente, como ya tengo dicho. Porque la escritura desatada destos libros da lugar a que el autor pueda mostrarse épico, lírico, trágico, cómico, con todas aquellas partes que encierran en sí las dulcísimas y agradables ciencias de la poesía y de la oratoria; que la épica también puede escribirse en prosa como en verso.

Capítulo XLVIII

Donde prosigue el canónigo la materia de los libros de caballerías, con otras cosas dignas de su ingenio

-ASÍ ES COMO vuestra merced dice, señor canónigo -dijo el cura-, y por esta causa son más dignos de reprehensión los que hasta aquí han compuesto semejantes libros sin tener advertencia a ningún buen discurso, ni al arte y reglas por donde pudieran guiarse y hacerse famosos en prosa, como lo son en verso los dos príncipes de la poesía griega y latina.

-Yo, a lo menos -replicó el canónigo-, he tenido cierta tentación de hacer un libro de caballerías, guardando en él todos los puntos que he significado; y si he de confesar la verdad, tengo escritas más de cien hojas. Y para hacer la experiencia de si correspondían a mi estimación, las he comunicado con hombres apasionados desta leyenda, dotos y discretos, y con otros ignorantes, que sólo atienden al gusto de oír disparates, y de todos he hallado una agradable aprobación; pero, con todo esto, no he proseguido adelante, así por parecerme que hago cosa ajena de mi profesión, como por ver que es más el número de los simples que de los prudentes; y que, puesto que es mejor ser loado de los pocos sabios que burlado de los muchos necios, no quiero sujetarme al confuso juicio del desvanecido vulgo, a quien por la mayor parte toca leer semejantes libros. Pero lo que más me le quitó de las manos, y aun del pensamiento, de acabarle, fue un argumento que hice conmigo mismo, sacado de las comedias que ahora se representan, diciendo: «Si estas que ahora se usan, así las imaginadas como las de historia, todas o las más son conocidos disparates y cosas que no llevan pies ni cabeza, y, con todo eso, el vulgo las oye con gusto, y las tiene y las aprueba por buenas, estando tan lejos de serlo, y los autores que las componen y los actores que las representan dicen que así han de ser, porque así las quiere el vulgo, y no de otra manera; y que las que llevan traza y siguen la fábula como el arte pide, no sirven sino para cuatro discretos que las entienden, y todos los demás se quedan ayunos de entender su artificio, y que a ellos les está mejor ganar de comer con los muchos, que no opinión con los pocos, deste modo vendrá a ser un libro, al cabo de haberme quemado las cejas por guardar los preceptos referidos, y vendré a ser el sastre del cantillo». Y, aunque algunas veces he procurado persuadir a los actores que se engañan en tener la opinión que tienen, y que más gente atraerán y más fama cobrarán representando comedias que hagan el arte que no con las disparatadas, y están tan asidos y encorporados en su parecer, que no hay razón ni evidencia que dél los saque. Acuérdomé que un día dije a uno destos pertinaces: «Decidme, ¿no os acordáis que ha pocos años que se representaron en España tres tragedias que compuso un famoso poeta destos reinos, las cuales fueron tales, que admiraron, alegraron y suspendieron a todos cuantos las oyeron, así simples como prudentes, así del vulgo como de los escogidos, y dieron más dineros a los representantes ellas tres solas que treinta de las mejores que después acá se han hecho?» «Sin duda -respondió el autor que digo-, que debe de decir vuestra merced por La Isabela, La Filis y La Alejandra». «Por ésas digo -le repliqué yo-; y mirad si guardaban bien los preceptos del arte, y si por guardarlos dejaron de parecer lo que eran y de agradar a todo el mundo. Así que no está la falta en el vulgo, que pide disparates, sino en aquellos que no saben representar otra cosa. Sí, que no fue disparate La ingratitud vengada, ni le tuvo La Numancia, ni se le halló en la del Mercader amante, ni menos en La enemiga favorable, ni en otras algunas que de algunos entendidos poetas han sido compuestas, para fama y renombre suyo, y para ganancia de los que las han representado». Y otras cosas añadí a éstas, con que, a mi parecer, le dejé algo confuso, pero no satisfecho ni convencido para sacarle de su errado pensamiento.

-En materia ha tocado vuestra merced, señor canónigo -dijo a esta sazón el cura-, que ha despertado en mí un antiguo rancor que tengo con las comedias que agora se usan, tal, que iguala al que tengo con los libros de caballerías; porque, habiendo de ser la comedia, según le parece a Tulio, espejo de la vida humana, ejemplo de las costumbres y imagen de la verdad, las que ahora se representan son espejos de disparates, ejemplos de necedades e imágenes de lascivia. Porque, ¿qué mayor disparate puede ser en el sujeto que tratamos que salir un niño en mantillas en la primera cena del primer acto, y en la segunda salir ya hecho hombre barbado? Y ¿qué mayor que pintarnos un viejo valiente y un mozo cobarde, un lacayo rectórico, un paje consejero, un rey ganapán y una princesa fregona? ¿Qué diré, pues, de la observancia que guardan en los tiempos en que pueden o podían suceder las acciones que representan, sino que he visto comedia que la primera jornada comenzó en Europa, la segunda en Asia, la tercera se acabó en África, y ansí fuera de cuatro jornadas, la cuarta acababa en América, y así se hubiera hecho en todas las cuatro partes del mundo? Y si es que la imitación es lo principal que ha de tener la comedia, ¿cómo es posible que satisfaga a ningún mediano entendimiento que, fingiendo una acción que pasa en tiempo del rey Pepino y Carlomagno, el mismo que en ella hace la persona principal le atribuyan que fue el emperador Heraclio, que entró con la Cruz en Jerusalén, y el que ganó la Casa Santa, como Godofre de Bullón, habiendo infinitos años de lo uno a lo otro; y fundándose la comedia sobre cosa fingida, atribuirle verdades de historia, y mezclarle pedazos de otras sucedidas a diferentes personas y tiempos, y esto, no con trazas verisímiles, sino con patentes errores de todo punto inexcusables? Y es lo malo que hay ignorantes que digan que esto es lo perfecto, y que lo demás es buscar gullurías. Pues, ¿qué si venimos a las comedias divinas?: ¡qué de milagros falsos fingen en ellas, qué de cosas apócrifas y mal entendidas, atribuyendo a un santo los milagros de otro! Y aun en las humanas se atreven a hacer milagros, sin más respeto ni consideración que parecerles que allí estará bien el tal milagro y apariencia, como ellos llaman, para que gente ignorante se admire y venga a la comedia; que todo esto es en perjuicio de la verdad y en menoscabo de las historias, y aun en oprobrio de los ingenios españoles; porque los extranjeros, que con mucha puntualidad guardan las leyes de la comedia, nos tienen por bárbaros e ignorantes, viendo los absurdos y disparates de las que hacemos. Y no sería bastante disculpa desto decir que el principal intento que las repúblicas bien ordenadas tienen, permitiendo que se hagan públicas comedias, es para entretener la comunidad con alguna honesta recreación, y divertirla a veces de los malos humores que suele engendrar la ociosidad; y que, pues éste se consigue con cualquier comedia, buena o mala, no hay para qué poner leyes, ni estrechar a los que las componen y representan a que las hagan como debían hacerse, pues, como he dicho, con cualquiera se consigue lo que con ellas se pretende. A lo cual respondería yo que este fin se conseguiría mucho mejor, sin comparación alguna, con las comedias buenas que con las no tales; porque, de haber oído la comedia artificiosa y bien ordenada, saldría el oyente alegre con las burlas, enseñado con las veras, admirado de los sucesos, discreto con las razones, advertido con los embustes, sagaz con los ejemplos, airado contra el vicio y enamorado de la virtud; que todos estos afectos ha de despertar la buena comedia en el ánimo del que la escuchare, por rústico y torpe que sea; y de toda imposibilidad es imposible dejar de alegrar y entretener, satisfacer y contentar, la comedia que todas estas partes tuviere mucho más que aquella que careciere dellas, como por la mayor parte carecen estas que de ordinario agora se representan. Y no tienen la culpa desto los poetas que las componen, porque algunos hay dellos que conocen muy bien en lo que yerran, y saben estremadamente lo que deben hacer; pero, como las comedias se han hecho mercadería vendible, dicen, y dicen verdad, que los representantes no se las comprarían si no fuesen de aquel jaez; y así, el poeta procura acomodarse con lo que el representante que le ha de pagar su obra le pide. Y que esto sea verdad véase por muchas e infinitas comedias que ha compuesto un felicísimo ingenio destos reinos, con tanta gala, con tanto donaire, con tan elegante verso, con tan buenas razones, con tan graves sentencias y, finalmente, tan llenas de elocución y alteza de estilo, que tiene lleno el mundo de su fama. Y, por querer acomodarse al gusto de los representantes, no han llegado todas, como han llegado algunas, al punto de la perfección que requieren. Otros las componen tan sin mirar lo que hacen, que después de representadas tienen necesidad los recitantes de huirse y ausentarse, temerosos de ser castigados, como lo han sido muchas veces, por haber representado cosas en perjuicio de algunos reyes y en deshonor de algunos linajes. Y todos estos inconvenientes cesarían, y aun otros muchos más que no digo, con que hubiese en la Corte una persona inteligente y discreta que examinase todas las comedias antes que se representasen (no sólo aquellas que se hiciesen en la Corte, sino todas las que se quisiesen representar en España), sin la cual aprobación, sello y firma, ninguna justicia en su lugar dejase representar comedia alguna; y, desta manera, los comediantes tendrían cuidado de enviar las comedias a la Corte, y con seguridad podrían representallas, y aquellos que las componen mirarían con más cuidado y estudio lo que hacían, temerosos de haber de pasar sus obras por el riguroso examen de quien lo entiende; y desta manera se harían buenas comedias y se conseguiría felicísimamente lo que en ellas se pretende: así el entretenimiento del pueblo, como la opinión de los ingenios de España, el interés y seguridad de los recitantes y el ahorro del cuidado de castigallos. Y si diese cargo a otro, o a este mismo, que examinase los libros de caballerías que de nuevo se compusiesen, sin duda podrían salir algunos con la perfección que vuestra merced ha dicho, enriqueciendo nuestra lengua del agradable y precioso tesoro de la elocuencia, dando ocasión que los libros viejos se escureciesen a la luz de los nuevos que saliesen, para honesto pasatiempo, no solamente de los ociosos, sino de los más ocupados; pues no es posible que esté continuo el arco armado, ni la condición y flaqueza humana se pueda sustentar sin alguna lícita recreación.

A este punto de su coloquio llegaban el canónigo y el cura, cuando, adelantándose el barbero, llegó a ellos, y dijo al cura:

-Aquí, señor licenciado, es el lugar que yo dije que era bueno para que, sesteando nosotros, tuviesen los bueyes fresco y abundoso pasto.

-Así me lo parece a mí -respondió el cura.

Y, diciéndole al canónigo lo que pensaba hacer, él también quiso quedarse con ellos, convidado del sitio de un hermoso valle que a la vista se les ofrecía. Y, así por gozar dél como de la conversación del cura, de quien ya iba aficionado, y por saber más por menudo las hazañas de don Quijote, mandó a algunos de sus criados que se fuesen a la venta, que no lejos de allí estaba, y trujesen della lo que hubiese de comer, para todos, porque él determinaba de sestear en aquel lugar aquella tarde; a lo cual uno de sus criados respondió que el acémila del repuesto, que ya debía de estar en la venta, traía recado bastante para no obligar a no tomar de la venta más que cebada.

-Pues así es -dijo el canónigo-, llévense allá todas las cabalgaduras, y haced volver la acémila.

En tanto que esto pasaba, viendo Sancho que podía hablar a su amo sin la continua asistencia del cura y el barbero, que tenía por sospechosos, se llegó a la jaula donde iba su amo, y le dijo:

-Señor, para descargo de mi conciencia, le quiero decir lo que pasa cerca de su encantamiento; y es que aquestos dos que vienen aquí cubiertos los rostros son el cura de nuestro lugar y el barbero; y imagino han dado esta traza de llevarle desta manera, de pura envidia que tienen como vuestra merced se les adelanta en hacer famosos hechos. Presupuesta, pues, esta verdad, síguese que no va encantado, sino embaído y tonto. Para prueba de lo cual le quiero preguntar una cosa; y si me responde como creo que me ha de responder, tocará con la mano este engaño y verá como no va encantado, sino trastornado el juicio.

-Pregunta lo que quisieres, hijo Sancho -respondió don Quijote-, que yo te satisfaré y responderé a toda tu voluntad. Y en lo que dices que aquellos que allí van y vienen con nosotros son el cura y el barbero, nuestros compatriotas y conocidos, bien podrá ser que parezca que son ellos mismos; pero que lo sean realmente y en efeto, eso no lo creas en ninguna manera. Lo que has de creer y entender es que si ellos se les parecen, como dices, debe de ser que los que me han encantado habrán tomado esa apariencia y semejanza; porque es fácil a los encantadores tomar la figura que se les antoja, y habrán tomado las destos nuestros amigos, para darte a ti ocasión de que pienses lo que piensas, y ponerte en un laberinto de imaginaciones, que no aciertes a salir dél, aunque tuvieses la sogá de Teseo. Y también lo habrán hecho para que yo vacile en mi entendimiento, y no sepa atinar de dónde me viene este daño; porque si, por una parte, tú me dices que me acompañan el barbero y el cura de nuestro pueblo, y, por otra, yo me veo enjaulado, y sé de mí que fuerzas humanas, como no fueran sobrenaturales, no fueran bastantes para enjaularme, ¿qué quieres que diga o piense sino que la manera de mi encantamiento excede a cuantas yo he leído en todas las historias que tratan de caballeros andantes que han sido encantados? Ansí que, bien puedes darte paz y sosiego en esto de creer que son los que dices, porque así son ellos como yo soy turco. Y, en lo que toca a querer preguntarme algo, di, que yo te responderé, aunque me preguntes de aquí a mañana.

-¡Válame Nuestra Señora! -respondió Sancho, dando una gran voz-. Y ¿es posible que sea vuestra merced tan duro de cerebro, y tan falto de meollo, que no eche de ver que es pura verdad la que le digo, y que en esta su prisión y desgracia tiene más parte la malicia que el encanto? Pero, pues así es, yo le quiero probar evidentemente como no va encantado. Si no, dígame, así Dios le saque desta tormenta, y así se vea en los brazos de mi señora Dulcinea cuando menos se piense...

-Acaba de conjurarme -dijo don Quijote-, y pregunta lo que quisieres; que ya te he dicho que te responderé con toda puntualidad.

-Eso pido -replicó Sancho-; y lo que quiero saber es que me diga, sin añadir ni quitar cosa ninguna, sino con toda verdad, como se espera que la han de decir y la dicen todos aquellos que profesan las armas, como vuestra merced las profesa, debajo de título de caballeros andantes...

-Digo que no mentiré en cosa alguna -respondió don Quijote-. Acaba ya de preguntar, que en verdad que me cansas con tantas salvas, plegarias y prevenciones, Sancho.

-Digo que yo estoy seguro de la bondad y verdad de mi amo; y así, porque hace al caso a nuestro cuento, pregunto, hablando con acatamiento, si acaso después que vuestra merced va enjaulado y, a su parecer, encantado en esta jaula, le ha venido gana y voluntad de hacer aguas mayores o menores, como suele decirse.

-No entiendo eso de hacer aguas, Sancho; aclárate más, si quieres que te responda derechamente.

-¿Es posible que no entiende vuestra merced de hacer aguas menores o mayores? Pues en la escuela destetan a los muchachos con ello. Pues sepa que quiero decir si le ha venido gana de hacer lo que no se escusa.

-¡Ya, ya te entiendo, Sancho! Y muchas veces; y aun agora la tengo. ¡Sácame deste peligro, que no anda todo limpio!

Capítulo XLIX

Donde se trata del discreto coloquio que Sancho Panza tuvo con su señor don Quijote

-¡AH -DIJO Sancho-; cogido le tengo! Esto es lo que yo deseaba saber, como al alma y como a la vida. Venga acá, señor: ¿podría negar lo que comúnmente suele decirse por ahí cuando una persona está de mala voluntad: «No sé qué tiene fulano, que ni come, ni bebe, ni duerme, ni responde a propósito a lo que le preguntan, que no parece sino que está encantado»? De donde se viene a sacar que los que no comen, ni beben, ni duermen, ni hacen las obras naturales que yo digo, estos tales están encantados; pero no aquellos que tienen la gana que vuestra merced tiene y que bebe cuando se lo dan, y come cuando lo tiene, y responde a todo aquello que le preguntan.

-Verdad dices, Sancho -respondió don Quijote-, pero ya te he dicho que hay muchas maneras de encantamientos, y podría ser que con el tiempo se hubiesen mudado de unos en otros, y que agora se use que los encantados hagan todo lo que yo hago, aunque antes no lo hacían. De manera que contra el uso de los tiempos no hay que argüir ni de qué hacer consecuencias. Yo sé y tengo para mí que voy encantado, y esto me basta para la seguridad de mi conciencia; que la formaría muy grande si yo pensase que no estaba encantado y me dejase estar en esta jaula, perezoso y cobarde, defraudando el socorro que podría dar a muchos menesterosos y necesitados que de mi ayuda y amparo deben tener a la hora de ahora precisa y extrema necesidad.

-Pues, con todo eso -replicó Sancho-, digo que, para mayor abundancia y satisfacción, sería bien que vuestra merced probase a salir desta cárcel, que yo me obligo con todo mi poder a facilitarlo, y aun a sacarle della, y probase de nuevo a subir sobre su buen Rocinante, que también parece que va encantado, según va de malencólico y triste; y, hecho esto, probásemos otra vez la suerte de buscar más aventuras; y si no nos sucediese bien, tiempo nos queda para volvernos a la jaula, en la cual prometo, a ley de buen y leal escudero, de encerrarme juntamente con vuestra merced, si acaso fuere vuestra merced tan desdichado, o yo tan simple, que no acierte a salir con lo que digo.

-Yo soy contento de hacer lo que dices, Sancho hermano -replicó don Quijote-; y cuando tú veas coyuntura de poner en obra mi libertad, yo te obedeceré en todo y por todo; pero tú, Sancho, verás como te engañas en el conocimiento de mi desgracia.

En estas pláticas se entretuvieron el caballero andante y el mal andante escudero, hasta que llegaron donde, ya apeados, los aguardaban el cura, el canónigo y el barbero. Desunció luego los bueyes de la carreta el boyero, y dejólos andar a sus anchuras por aquel verde y apacible sitio, cuya frescura convidaba a quererla gozar, no a las personas tan encantadas como don Quijote, sino a los tan advertidos y discretos como su escudero; el cual rogó al cura que permitiese que su señor saliese por un rato de la jaula, porque si no le dejaban salir, no iría tan limpia aquella prisión como requiría la decencia de un tal caballero como su amo. Entendióle el cura, y dijo que de muy buena gana haría lo que le pedía si no temiera que, en viéndose su señor en libertad, había de hacer de las suyas, y irse donde jamás gentes le viesan.

-Yo le fío de la fuga -respondió Sancho.

-Y yo y todo -dijo el canónigo-; y más si él me da la palabra, como caballero, de no apartarse de nosotros hasta que sea nuestra voluntad.

-Sí doy -respondió don Quijote, que todo lo estaba escuchando-; cuanto más, que el que está encantado, como yo, no tiene libertad para hacer de su persona lo que quisiere, porque el que le encantó le puede hacer que no se mueva de un lugar en tres siglos; y si hubiere huido, le hará volver en volandas. -Y que, pues esto era así, bien podían soltalle, y más, siendo tan en provecho de todos; y del no soltalle les protestaba que no podía dejar de fatigalles el olfato, si de allí no se desviaban.

Tomóle la mano el canónigo, aunque las tenía atadas, y, debajo de su buena fe y palabra, le desenjaularon, de que él se alegró infinito y en grande manera de verse fuera de la jaula. Y lo primero que hizo fue estirarse todo el cuerpo, y luego se fue donde estaba Rocinante, y, dándole dos palmadas en las ancas, dijo:

-Aún espero en Dios y en su bendita Madre, flor y espejo de los caballos, que presto nos hemos de ver los dos cual deseamos; tú, con tu señor auestas; y yo, encima de ti, ejercitando el oficio para que Dios me echó al mundo.

Y, diciendo esto, don Quijote se apartó con Sancho en remota parte, de donde vino más aliviado y con más deseos de poner en obra lo que su escudero ordenase.

Mirábalo el canónigo, y admirábase de ver la estrañeza de su grande locura, y de que, en cuanto hablaba y respondía, mostraba tener bonísimo entendimiento: solamente venía a perder los estribos, como otras veces se ha dicho, en tratándole de caballería. Y así, movido de compasión, después de haberse sentado todos en la verde yerba, para esperar el repuesto del canónigo, le dijo:

-¿Es posible, señor hidalgo, que haya podido tanto con vuestra merced la amarga y ociosa letura de los libros de caballerías, que le hayan vuelto el juicio de modo que venga a creer que va encantado, con otras cosas deste jaez, tan lejos de ser verdaderas como lo está la misma mentira de la verdad? Y ¿cómo es posible que haya entendimiento humano que se dé a entender que ha habido en el mundo aquella infinidad de Amadises, y aquella turbamulta de tanto famoso caballero, tanto emperador de Trapisonda, tanto Felixmarte de Hircania, tanto palafrén, tanta doncella andante, tantas sierpes, tantos endriagos, tantos gigantes, tantas inauditas aventuras, tanto género de encantamientos, tantas batallas, tantos desaforados encuentros, tanta bizarría de trajes, tantas princesas enamoradas, tantos escuderos condes, tantos enanos graciosos, tanto billete, tanto requiebro, tantas mujeres valientes; y, finalmente, tantos y tan disparatados casos como los libros de caballerías contienen? De mí sé decir que, cuando los leo, en tanto que no pongo la imaginación en pensar que son todos mentira y liviandad, me dan algún contento; pero, cuando caigo en la cuenta de lo que son, doy con el mejor dellos en la pared, y aun diera con él en el fuego si cerca o presente le tuviera, bien como a merecedores de tal pena, por ser falsos y embusteros, y fuera del trato que pide la común naturaleza, y como a inventores de nuevas sectas y de nuevo modo de vida, y como a quien da ocasión que el vulgo ignorante venga a creer y a tener por verdaderas tantas necedades como contienen. Y aun tienen tanto atrevimiento, que se atreven a turbar los ingenios de los discretos y bien nacidos hidalgos, como se echa bien de ver por lo que con vuestra merced han hecho, pues le han traído a términos que sea forzoso encerrarle en una jaula, y traerle sobre un carro de bueyes, como quien trae o lleva algún león o algún tigre, de lugar en lugar, para ganar con él dejando que le vean. ¡Ea, señor don Quijote, duélase de sí mismo, y redúzgase al gremio de la discreción, y sepa usar de la mucha que el cielo fue servido de darle, empleando el felicísimo talento de su ingenio en otra letura que redunde en aprovechamiento de su conciencia y en aumento de su honra! Y si todavía, llevado de su natural inclinación, quisiere leer libros de hazañas y de caballerías, lea en la Sacra Escritura el de los Jueces; que allí hallará verdades grandiosas y hechos tan verdaderos como valientes. Un Viriato tuvo Lusitania; un César, Roma; un Aníbal, Cartago; un Alejandro, Grecia; un conde Fernán González, Castilla; un Cid, Valencia; un Gonzalo Fernández, Andalucía; un Diego García de Paredes, Extremadura; un Garci Pérez de Vargas, Jerez; un Garcilaso, Toledo; un don Manuel de León, Sevilla, cuya lección de sus valerosos hechos puede entretener, enseñar, deleitar y admirar a los más altos ingenios que los leyeren. Ésta sí será letura digna del buen entendimiento de vuestra merced, señor don Quijote mío, de la cual saldrá erudito en la historia, enamorado de la virtud, enseñado en la bondad, mejorado en las costumbres, valiente sin temeridad, osado sin cobardía, y todo esto, para honra de Dios, provecho suyo y fama de la Mancha; do, según he sabido, trae vuestra merced su principio y origen.

Atentísimamente estuvo don Quijote escuchando las razones del canónigo; y, cuando vio que ya había puesto fin a ellas, después de haberle estado un buen espacio mirando, le dijo:

-Paréceme, señor hidalgo, que la plática de vuestra merced se ha encaminado a querer darme a entender que no ha habido caballeros andantes en el mundo, y que todos los libros de caballerías son falsos, mentirosos, dañadores e inútiles para la república; y que yo he hecho mal en leerlos, y peor en creerlos, y más mal en imitarlos, habiéndome puesto a seguir la durísima profesión de la caballería andante, que ellos enseñan, negándome que no ha habido en el mundo Amadises, ni de Gaula ni de Grecia, ni todos los otros caballeros de que las escrituras están llenas.

-Todo es al pie de la letra como vuestra merced lo va relatando -dijo a está sazón el canónigo.

A lo cual respondió don Quijote:

-Añadió también vuestra merced, diciendo que me habían hecho mucho daño tales libros, pues me habían vuelto el juicio y puéstome en una jaula, y que me sería mejor hacer la enmienda y mudar de letura, leyendo otros más verdaderos y que mejor deleitan y enseñan.

-Así es -dijo el canónigo.

-Pues yo -replicó don Quijote-hallo por mi cuenta que el sin juicio y el encantado es vuestra merced, pues se ha puesto a decir tantas blasfemias contra una cosa tan recebida en el mundo, y tenida por tan verdadera, que el que la negase, como vuestra merced la niega, merecía la misma pena que vuestra merced dice que da a los libros cuando los lee y le enfadan. Porque querer dar a entender a nadie que Amadís no fue en el mundo, ni todos los otros caballeros aventureros de que están colmadas las historias, será querer persuadir que el sol no alumbrá, ni el yelo enfría, ni la tierra sustenta; porque, ¿qué ingenio puede haber en el mundo que pueda persuadir a otro que no fue verdad lo de la infanta Floripes y Guy de Borgoña, y lo de Fierabrás con la puente de Mantible, que sucedió en el tiempo de Carlomagno; que voto a tal que es tanta verdad como es ahora de día? Y si es mentira, también lo debe de ser que no hubo Héctor, ni Aquiles, ni la guerra de Troya, ni los Doce Pares de Francia, ni el rey Artús de Ingalaterra, que anda hasta ahora convertido en cuervo y le esperan en su reino por momentos. Y también se atreverán a decir que es mentirosa la historia de Guarino Mezquino, y la de la demanda del Santo Grial, y que son apócrifos los amores de don Tristán y la reina Iseo, como los de Ginebra y Lanzarote, habiendo personas que casi se acuerdan de haber visto a la dueña Quintañoña, que fue la mejor escanciadora de vino que tuvo la Gran Bretaña. Y es esto tan ansí, que me acuerdo yo que me decía una mi agüela de partes de mi padre, cuando veía alguna dueña con tocas reverendas: «Aquélla, nieto, se parece a la dueña Quintañona»; de donde arguyo yo que la debió de conocer ella o, por lo menos, debió de alcanzar a ver algún retrato suyo. Pues, ¿quién podrá negar no ser verdadera la historia de Pierres y la linda Magalona, pues aun hasta hoy día se vee en la armería de los reyes la clavija con que volvía al caballo de madera, sobre quien iba el valiente Pierres por los aires, que es un poco mayor que un timón de carreta? Y junto a la clavija está la silla de Babieca, y en Roncesvalles está el cuerno de Roldán, tamaño como una grande viga: de donde se infiere que hubo Doce Pares, que hubo Pierres, que hubo Cides, y otros caballeros semejantes,

Si no, díganme también que no es verdad que fue caballero andante el valiente lusitano Juan de Merlo, que fue a Borgoña y se combatió en la ciudad de Ras con el famoso señor de Charní, llamado mosén Pierres, y después, en la ciudad de Basilea, con mosén Enrique de Remestán, saliendo de entrambas empresas vencedor y lleno de honrosa fama; y las aventuras y desafíos que también acabaron en Borgoña los valientes españoles Pedro Barba y Gutierre Quijada (de cuya alcurnia yo diciendo por línea recta de varón), venciendo a los hijos del conde de San Polo. Niéguenme, asimesmo, que no fue a buscar las aventuras a Alemania don Fernando de Guevara, donde se combatió con micer Jorge, caballero de la casa del duque de Austria; digan que fueron burla las justas de Suero de Quiñones, del Paso; las empresas de mosén Luis de Falces contra don Gonzalo de Guzmán, caballero castellano, con otras muchas hazañas hechas por caballeros cristianos, déstos y de los reinos extranjeros, tan auténticas y verdaderas, que torno a decir que el que las negase carecería de toda razón y buen discurso.

Admirado quedó el canónigo de oír la mezcla que don Quijote hacía de verdades y mentiras, y de ver la noticia que tenía de todas aquellas cosas tocantes y concernientes a los hechos de su andante caballería; y así, le respondió:

-No puedo yo negar, señor don Quijote, que no sea verdad algo de lo que vuestra merced ha dicho, especialmente en lo que toca a los caballeros andantes españoles; y, asimesmo, quiero conceder que hubo Doce Pares de Francia, pero no quiero creer que hicieron todas aquellas cosas que el arzobispo Turpín dellos escribe; porque la verdad dello es que fueron caballeros escogidos por los reyes de Francia, a quien llamaron pares por ser todos iguales en valor, en calidad y en valentía; a lo menos, si no lo eran, era razón que lo fuesen y era como una religión de las que ahora se usan de Santiago o de Calatrava, que se presupone que los que la profesan han de ser, o deben ser, caballeros valerosos, valientes y bien nacidos; y, como ahora dicen caballero de San Juan, o de Alcántara, decían en aquel tiempo caballero de los Doce Pares, porque no fueron doce iguales los que para esta religión militar se escogieron. En lo de que hubo Cid no hay duda, ni menos Bernardo del Carpio, pero de que hicieron las hazañas que dicen, creo que la hay muy grande. En lo otro de la clavija que vuestra merced dice del conde Pierres, y que está junto a la silla de Babieca en la armería de los reyes, confieso mi pecado; que soy tan ignorante, o tan corto de vista, que, aunque he visto la silla, no he echado de ver la clavija, y más siendo tan grande como vuestra merced ha dicho.

-Pues allí está, sin duda alguna -replicó don Quijote-; y, por más señas, dicen que está metida en una funda de vaqueta, porque no se tome de moho.

-Todo puede ser -respondió el canónigo-; pero, por las órdenes que recibí, que no me acuerdo haberla visto. Mas, puesto que conceda que está allí, no por eso me obligo a creer las historias de tantos Amadises, ni las de tanta turbamulta de caballeros como por ahí nos cuentan; ni es razón que un hombre como vuestra merced, tan honrado y de tan buenas partes, y dotado de tan buen entendimiento, se dé a entender que son verdaderas tantas y tan estrañas locuras como las que están escritas en los disparatados libros de caballerías.

Capítulo L

-¡BUENO está eso! -respondió don Quijote-. Los libros que están impresos con licencia de los reyes y con aprobación de aquellos a quien se remitieron, y que con gusto general son leídos y celebrados de los grandes y de los chicos, de los pobres y de los ricos, de los letrados e ignorantes, de los plebeyos y caballeros, finalmente, de todo género de personas, de cualquier estado y condición que sean, ¿habían de ser mentira?; y más llevando tanta apariencia de verdad, pues nos cuentan el padre, la madre, la patria, los parientes, la edad, el lugar y las hazañas, punto por punto y día por día, que el tal caballero hizo, o caballeros hicieron. Calle vuestra merced, no diga tal blasfemia (y créame que le aconsejo en esto lo que debe de hacer como discreto), si no léalos, y verá el gusto que recibe de su leyenda. Si no, dígame: ¿hay mayor contento que ver, como si dijésemos: aquí ahora se muestra delante de nosotros un gran lago de pez hirviendo a borbollones, y que andan nadando y cruzando por él muchas serpientes, culebras y lagartos, y otros muchos géneros de animales feroces y espantables, y que del medio del lago sale una voz tristísima que dice: «Tú, caballero, quienquiera que seas, que el temeroso lago estás mirando, si quieres alcanzar el bien que debajo destas negras aguas se encubre, muestra el valor de tu fuerte pecho y arrójate en mitad de su negro y encendido licor; porque si así no lo haces, no serás digno de ver las altas maravillas que en sí encierran y contienen los siete castillos de las siete fadas que debajo desta negregura yacen?» ¿Y que, apenas el caballero no ha acabado de oír la voz temerosa, cuando, sin entrar más en cuentas consigo, sin ponerse a considerar el peligro a que se pone, y aun sin despojarse de la pesadumbre de sus fuertes armas, encomendándose a Dios y a su señora, se arroja en mitad del bullente lago, y, cuando no se cata ni sabe dónde ha de parar, se halla entre unos floridos campos, con quien los Elíseos no tienen que ver en ninguna cosa? Allí le parece que el cielo es más transparente, y que el sol luce con claridad más nueva; ofrécese a los ojos una apacible floresta de tan verdes y frondosos árboles compuesta, que alegra a la vista su verdura, y entretiene los oídos el dulce y no aprendido canto de los pequeños, infinitos y pintados pajarillos que por los intrincados ramos van cruzando. Aquí descubre un arroyuelo, cuyas frescas aguas, que líquidos cristales parecen, corren sobre menudas arenas y blancas pedrezuelas, que oro cernido y puras perlas semejan; acullá vee una artificiosa fuente de jaspe variado y de liso mármol compuesta; acá vee otra a lo brutesco adornada, adonde las menudas conchas de las almejas, con las torcidas casas blancas y amarillas del caracol, puestas con orden desordenada, mezclados entre ellas pedazos de cristal luciente y de contrahechas esmeraldas, hacen una variada labor, de manera que el arte, imitando a la naturaleza, parece que allí la vence. Acullá de improviso se le descubre un fuerte castillo o vistoso alcázar, cuyas murallas son de macizo oro, las almenas de diamantes, las puertas de jacintos; finalmente, él es de tan admirable compostura que, con ser la materia de que está formado no menos que de diamantes, de carbuncos, de rubíes, de perlas, de oro y de esmeraldas, es de más estimación su hechura. Y ¿hay más que ver, después de haber visto esto, que ver salir por la puerta del castillo un buen número de doncellas, cuyos galanos y vistosos trajes, si yo me pusiese ahora a decirlos como las historias nos los cuentan, sería nunca acabar; y tomar luego la que parecía principal de todas por la mano al atrevido caballero que se arrojó en el ferviente lago, y llevarle, sin hablarle palabra, dentro del rico alcázar o castillo, y hacerle desnudar como su madre le parió, y bañarle con templadas aguas, y luego untarle todo con olorosos ungüentos, y vestirle una camisa de cendal delgadísimo, toda olorosa y perfumada, y acudir otra doncella y echarle un mantón sobre los hombros, que, por lo menos menos, dicen que suele valer una ciudad, y aun más? ¿Qué es ver, pues, cuando nos cuentan que, tras todo esto, le llevan a otra sala, donde halla puestas las mesas, con tanto concierto, que queda suspenso y admirado?; ¿qué, el verle echar agua a manos, toda de ámbar y de olorosas flores distilada?; ¿qué, el hacerle sentar sobre una silla de marfil?; ¿qué, verle servir todas las doncellas, guardando un maravilloso silencio?; ¿qué, el traerle tanta diferencia de manjares, tan sabrosamente guisados, que no sabe el apetito a cuál deba de alargar la mano? ¿Cuál será oír la música que en tanto que come suena, sin saberse quién la canta ni adónde suena? ¿Y, después de la comida acabada y las mesas alzadas, quedarse el caballero recostado sobre la silla, y quizá mondándose los dientes, como es costumbre, entrar a deshora por la puerta de la sala otra mucho más hermosa doncella que ninguna de las primeras, y sentarse al lado del caballero, y comenzar a darle cuenta de qué castillo es aquél, y de cómo ella está encantada en él, con otras cosas que suspenden al caballero y admiran a los leyentes que van leyendo su historia? No quiero alargarme más en esto, pues dello se puede colegir que cualquiera parte que se lea, de cualquiera historia de caballero andante, ha de causar gusto y maravilla a cualquiera que la leyere. Y vuestra merced créame, y, como otra vez le he dicho, lea estos libros, y verá cómo le destierran la melancolía que tuviere, y le mejoran la condición, si acaso la tiene mala. De mí sé decir que, después que soy caballero andante, soy valiente, comedido, liberal, bien criado, generoso, cortés, atrevido, blando, paciente, sufridor de trabajos, de prisiones, de encantos; y, aunque ha tan poco que me vi encerrado en una jaula, como loco, pienso, por el valor de mi brazo, favoreciéndome el cielo y no me siendo contraria la fortuna, en pocos días verme rey de algún reino, adonde pueda mostrar el agradecimiento y liberalidad que mi pecho encierra. Que, mía fe, señor, el pobre está inhabilitado de poder mostrar la virtud de liberalidad con ninguno, aunque en sumo grado la posea; y el agradecimiento que sólo consiste en el deseo es cosa muerta, como es muerta la fe sin obras. Por esto querría que la fortuna me ofreciese presto alguna ocasión donde me hiciese emperador, por mostrar mi pecho haciendo bien a mis amigos, especialmente a este pobre de Sancho Panza, mi escudero, que es el mejor hombre del mundo, y querría darle un condado que le tengo muchos días ha prometido, sino que temo que no ha de tener habilidad para gobernar su estado.

-Trabaje vuestra merced, señor don Quijote, en darme ese condado, tan prometido de vuestra merced como de mí esperado, que yo le prometo que no me falte a mí habilidad para gobernarle; y, cuando me faltare, yo he oído decir que hay hombres en el mundo que toman en arrendamiento los estados de los señores, y les dan un tanto cada año, y ellos se tienen cuidado del gobierno, y el señor se está a pierna tendida, gozando de la renta que le dan, sin curarse de otra cosa; y así haré yo, y no repararé en tanto más cuanto, sino que luego me desistiré de todo, y me gozaré mi renta como un duque, y allá se lo hayan.

-Eso, hermano Sancho -dijo el canónigo-, entiéndese en cuanto al gozar la renta; empero, al administrar justicia, ha de atender el señor del estado, y aquí entra la habilidad y buen juicio, y principalmente la buena intención de acertar; que si ésta falta en los principios, siempre irán errados los medios y los fines; y así suele Dios ayudar al buen deseo del simple como desfavorecer al malo del discreto.

-No sé esas filosofías -respondió Sancho Panza-; mas sólo sé que tan presto tuviese yo el condado como sabría regirle; que tanta alma tengo yo como otro, y tanto cuerpo como el que más, y tan rey sería yo de mi estado como cada uno del suyo; y, siéndolo, haría lo que quisiese; y, haciendo lo que quisiese, haría mi gusto; y, haciendo mi gusto, estaría contento; y, en estando uno contento, no tiene más que desear; y, no teniendo más que desear, acabóse; y el estado venga, y a Dios y veámonos, como dijo un ciego a otro.

-No son malas filosofías éstas, como tú dices, Sancho; pero, con todo eso, hay mucho que decir sobre esta materia de condados.

A lo cual replicó don Quijote:

-Yo no sé que haya más que decir; sólo me guío por el ejemplo que me da el grande Amadís de Gaula, que hizo a su escudero conde de la Ínsula Firme; y así, puedo yo, sin escrúpulo de conciencia, hacer conde a Sancho Panza, que es uno de los mejores escuderos que caballero andante ha tenido.

Admirado quedó el canónigo de los concertados disparates que don Quijote había dicho, del modo con que había pintado la aventura del Caballero del Lago, de la impresión que en él habían hecho las pensadas mentiras de los libros que había leído; y, finalmente, le admiraba la necedad de Sancho, que con tanto ahínco deseaba alcanzar el condado que su amo le había prometido.

Ya en esto, volvían los criados del canónigo, que a la venta habían ido por la acémila del repuesto, y, haciendo mesa de una alhombra y de la verde yerba del prado, a la sombra de unos árboles se sentaron, y comieron allí, porque el boyero no perdiese la comodidad de aquel sitio, como queda dicho. Y, estando comiendo, a deshora oyeron un recio estruendo y un son de esquila, que por entre unas zarzas y espesas matas que allí junto estaban sonaba, y al mismo instante vieron salir de entre aquellas malezas una hermosa cabra, toda la piel manchada de negro, blanco y pardo. Tras ella venía un cabrero dándole voces, y diciéndole palabras a su uso, para que se detuviese, o al rebaño volviese. La fugitiva cabra, temerosa y despavorida, se vino a la gente, como a favorecerse della, y allí se detuvo. Llegó el cabrero, y, asiéndola de los cuernos, como si fuera capaz de discurso y entendimiento, le dijo:

-¡Ah cerrera, cerrera, Manchada, Manchada, y cómo andáis vos estos días de pie cojo! ¿Qué lobos os espantan, hija? ¿No me diréis qué es esto, hermosa? Mas ¡qué puede ser sino que sois hembra, y no podéis estar sosegada; que mal haya vuestra condición, y la de todas aquellas a quien imitáis! Volved, volved, amiga; que si no tan contenta, a lo menos, estaréis más segura en vuestro aprisco, o con vuestras compañeras; que si vos que las habéis de guardar y encaminar andáis tan sin guía y tan descaminada, ¿en qué podrán parar ellas?

Contento dieron las palabras del cabrero a los que las oyeron, especialmente al canónigo, que le dijo:

-Por vida vuestra, hermano, que os soseguéis un poco y no os acuciéis en volver tan presto esa cabra a su rebaño; que, pues ella es hembra, como vos decís, ha de seguir su natural distinto, por más que vos os pongáis a estorbarlo. Tomad este bocado y bebed una vez, con que templaréis la cólera, y en tanto, descansará la cabra.

Y el decir esto y el darle con la punta del cuchillo los lomos de un conejo fiambre, todo fue uno. Tomólo y agradeciolo el cabrero; bebió y sosegóse, y luego dijo:

-No querría que por haber yo hablado con esta alimaña tan en seso, me tuviesen vuestras mercedes por hombre simple; que en verdad que no carecen de misterio las palabras que le dije. Rústico soy, pero no tanto que no entienda cómo se ha de tratar con los hombres y con las bestias.

-Eso creo yo muy bien -dijo el cura-, que ya yo sé de experiencia que los montes crían letrados y las cabañas de los pastores encierran filósofos.

-A lo menos, señor -replicó el cabrero-, acogen hombres escarmentados; y para que creáis esta verdad y la toquéis con la mano, aunque parezca que sin ser rogado me convido, si no os enfadáis dello y queréis, señores, un breve espacio prestarme oído atento, os contaré una verdad que acredite lo que ese señor (señalando al cura) ha dicho, y la mía.

A esto respondió don Quijote:

-Por ver que tiene este caso un no sé qué de sombra de aventura de caballería, yo, por mi parte, os oiré, hermano, de muy buena gana, y así lo harán todos estos señores, por lo mucho que tienen de discretos y de ser amigos de curiosas novedades que suspendan, alegren y entretengan los sentidos, como, sin duda, pienso que lo ha de hacer vuestro cuento. Comenzad, pues, amigo, que todos escucharemos.

-Saco la mía -dijo Sancho-; que yo a aquel arroyo me voy con esta empanada, donde pienso hartarme por tres días; porque he oído decir a mi señor don Quijote que el escudero de caballero andante ha de comer, cuando se le ofreciere, hasta no poder más, a causa que se les suele ofrecer entrar acaso por una selva tan intrincada que no aciertan a salir della en seis días; y si el hombre no va hartado, o bien proveídas las alforjas, allí se podrá quedar, como muchas veces se queda, hecho carne momia.

-Tú estás en lo cierto, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-: vete adonde quisieres, y come lo que pudieres; que yo ya estoy satisfecho, y sólo me falta dar al alma su refacción, como se la daré escuchando el cuento deste buen hombre.

-Así las daremos todos a las nuestras -dijo el canónigo.

Y luego, rogó al cabrero que diese principio a lo que prometido había. El cabrero dio dos palmadas sobre el lomo a la cabra, que por los cuernos tenía, diciéndole:

-Recuéstate junto a mí, Manchada, que tiempo nos queda para volver a nuestro apero.

Parece que lo entendió la cabra, porque, en sentándose su dueño, se tendió ella junto a él con mucho sosiego, y, mirándole al rostro, daba a entender que estaba atenta a lo que el cabrero iba diciendo, el cual comenzó su historia desta manera:

Capítulo LI

Que trata de lo que contó el cabrero a todos los que llevaban a don Quijote

-«TRES leguas deste valle está una aldea que, aunque pequeña, es de las más ricas que hay en todos estos contornos; en la cual había un labrador muy honrado, y tanto, que, aunque es anexo al ser rico el ser honrado, más lo era él por la virtud que tenía que por la riqueza que alcanzaba. Mas lo que le hacía más dichoso, según él decía, era tener una hija de tan estremada hermosura, rara discreción, donaire y virtud, que el que la conocía y la miraba se admiraba de ver las estremadas partes con que el cielo y la naturaleza la habían enriquecido. Siendo niña fue hermosa, y siempre fue creciendo en belleza, y en la edad de diez y seis años fue hermosísima. La fama de su belleza se comenzó a estender por todas las circunvecinas aldeas, ¿qué digo yo por las circunvecinas no más, si se extendió a las apartadas ciudades, y aun se entró por las salas de los reyes, y por los oídos de todo género de gente; que, como a cosa rara, o como a imagen de milagros, de todas partes a verla venían? Guardábala su padre, y guardábase ella; que no hay candados, guardas ni cerraduras que mejor guarden a una doncella que las del recato propio.

»La riqueza del padre y la belleza de la hija movieron a muchos, así del pueblo como forasteros, a que por mujer se la pidiesen; mas él, como a quien tocaba disponer de tan rica joya, andaba confuso, sin saber determinarse a quién la entregaría de los infinitos que le importunaban. Y, entre los muchos que tan buen deseo tenían, fui yo uno, a quien dieron muchas y grandes esperanzas de buen suceso conocer que el padre conocía quien yo era, el ser natural del mismo pueblo, limpio en sangre, en la edad floreciente, en la hacienda muy rico y en el ingenio no menos acabado. Con todas estas mismas partes la pidió también otro del mismo pueblo, que fue causa de suspender y poner en balanza la voluntad del padre, a quien parecía que con cualquiera de nosotros estaba su hija bien empleada; y, por salir desta confusión, determinó decírselo a Leandra, que así se llama la rica que en miseria me tiene puesto, advirtiéndole que, pues los dos éramos iguales, era bien dejar a la voluntad de su querida hija el escoger a su gusto: cosa digna de imitar de todos los padres que a sus hijos quieren poner en estado: no digo yo que los dejen escoger en cosas ruines y malas, sino que se las propongan buenas, y de las buenas, que escojan a su gusto. No sé yo el que tuvo Leandra; sólo sé que el padre nos entretuvo a entrambos con la poca edad de su

hija y con palabras generales, que ni le obligaban, ni nos desobligaba tampoco. Llámase mi competidor Anselmo, y yo Eugenio, porque vais con noticia de los nombres de las personas que en esta tragedia se contienen, cuyo fin aún está pendiente; pero bien se deja entender que será desastrado.

»En esta sazón, vino a nuestro pueblo un Vicente de la Rosa, hijo de un pobre labrador del mismo lugar; el cual Vicente venía de las Italías, y de otras diversas partes, de ser soldado. Llevóle de nuestro lugar, siendo muchacho de hasta doce años, un capitán que con su compañía por allí acertó a pasar, y volvió el mozo de allí a otros doce, vestido a la soldadesca, pintado con mil colores, lleno de mil dijes de cristal y sutiles cadenas de acero. Hoy se ponía una gala y mañana otra; pero todas sutiles, pintadas, de poco peso y menos tomo. La gente labradora, que de suyo es maliciosa, y dándole el ocio lugar es la misma malicia, lo notó, y contó punto por punto sus galas y preseas, y halló que los vestidos eran tres, de diferentes colores, con sus ligas y medias; pero él hacía tantos guisados e invenciones dellas, que si no se los contaran, hubiera quien jurara que había hecho muestra de más de diez pares de vestidos y de más de veinte plumajes. Y no parezca impertinencia y demasía esto que de los vestidos voy contando, porque ellos hacen una buena parte en esta historia.

referido, y, finalmente, que así el diablo lo debía de tener ordenado, ella se vino a enamorar dél, antes que en él naciese presunción de solicitalla. Y, como en los casos de amor no hay ninguno que con más facilidad se cumpla que aquel que tiene de su parte el deseo de la dama, con facilidad se concertaron Leandra y Vicente; y, primero que alguno de sus muchos pretendientes cayesen en la cuenta de su deseo, ya ella le tenía cumplido, habiendo dejado la casa de su querido y amado padre, que madre no la tiene, y ausentándose de la aldea con el soldado, que salió con más triunfo desta empresa que de todas las muchas que él se aplicaba.

»Admiró el suceso a toda el aldea, y aun a todos los que dél noticia tuvieron; yo quedé suspenso, Anselmo, atónito, el padre triste, sus parientes afrentados, solícita la justicia, los cuadrilleros listos; tomáronse los caminos, escudriñáronse los bosques y cuanto había, y, al cabo de tres días, hallaron a la antojadiza Leandra en una cueva de un monte, desnuda en camisa, sin muchos dineros y preciosísimas joyas que de su casa había sacado. Volviéronla a la presencia del lastimado padre; preguntáronle su desgracia; confesó sin apremio que Vicente de la Roca la había engañado, y debajo de su palabra de ser su esposo la persuadió que dejase la casa de su padre; que él la llevaría a la más rica y más viciosa ciudad que había en todo el universo mundo, que era Nápoles; y que ella, mal advertida y peor engañada, le había creído; y, robando a su padre, se le entregó la misma noche que había faltado; y que él la llevó a un áspero monte, y la encerró en aquella cueva donde la habían hallado. Contó también como el soldado, sin quitalle su honor, le robó cuanto tenía, y la dejó en aquella cueva y se fue: suceso que de nuevo puso en admiración a todos.

»Duro se nos hizo de creer la continencia del mozo, pero ella lo afirmó con tantas veras, que fueron parte para que el desconsolado padre se consolase, no haciendo cuenta de las riquezas que le llevaban, pues le habían dejado a su hija con la joya que, si una vez se pierde, no deja esperanza de que jamás se cobre. El mismo día que pareció Leandra la desapareció su padre de nuestros ojos, y la llevó a encerrar en un monesterio de una villa que está aquí cerca, esperando que el tiempo gaste alguna parte de la mala opinión en que su hija se puso. Los pocos años de Leandra sirvieron de disculpa de su culpa, a lo menos con aquellos que no les iba algún interés en que ella fuese mala o buena; pero los que conocían su discreción y mucho entendimiento no atribuyeron a ignorancia su pecado, sino a su desenvoltura y a la natural inclinación de las mujeres, que, por la mayor parte, suele ser desatinada y mal compuesta.

nuestra tristeza, apocábase nuestra paciencia, maldecíamos las galas del soldado y abominábamos del poco recato del padre de Leandra. Finalmente, Anselmo y yo nos concertamos de dejar el aldea y venirnos a este valle, donde él, apacentando una gran cantidad de ovejas suyas propias, y yo un numeroso rebaño de cabras, también mías, pasamos la vida entre los árboles, dando vado a nuestras pasiones, o cantando juntos alabanzas o vituperios de la hermosa Leandra, o suspirando solos y a solas comunicando con el cielo nuestras querellas.

»A imitación nuestra, otros muchos de los pretendientes de Leandra se han venido a estos ásperos montes, usando el mismo ejercicio nuestro; y son tantos, que parece que este sitio se ha convertido en la pastoral Arcadia, según está colmo de pastores y de apriscos, y no hay parte en él donde no se oiga el nombre de la hermosa Leandra. Éste la maldice y la llama antojadiza, varia y deshonesta; aquél la condena por fácil y ligera; tal la absuelve y perdona, y tal la justicia y vitupera; uno celebra su hermosura, otro reniega de su condición, y, en fin, todos la deshonran, y todos la adoran, y de todos se estiende a tanto la locura, que hay quien se queje de desdén sin haberla jamás hablado, y aun quien se lamente y sienta la rabiosa enfermedad de los celos, que ella jamás dio a nadie; porque, como ya tengo dicho, antes se supo su pecado que su deseo. No hay hueco de peña, ni margen de arroyo, ni sombra de árbol que no esté ocupada de algún pastor que sus desventuras a los aires cuente; el eco repite el nombre de Leandra dondequiera que pueda formarse: Leandra resuenan los montes, Leandra murmuran los arroyos, y Leandra nos tiene a todos suspensos y encantados, esperando sin esperanza y temiendo sin saber de qué tememos. Entre estos disparatados, el que muestra que menos y más juicio tiene es mi competidor Anselmo, el cual, teniendo tantas otras cosas de que quejarse, sólo se queja de ausencia; y al son de un rabel, que admirablemente toca, con versos donde muestra su buen entendimiento, cantando se queja. Yo sigo otro camino más fácil, y a mi parecer el más acertado, que es decir mal de la ligereza de las mujeres, de su inconstancia, de su doble trato, de sus promesas muertas, de su fe rompida, y, finalmente, del poco discurso que tienen en saber colocar sus pensamientos e intenciones que tienen.» Y ésta fue la ocasión, señores, de las palabras y razones que dije a esta cabra cuando aquí llegué; que por ser hembra la tengo en poco, aunque es la mejor de todo mi apero. Ésta es la historia que prometí contaros; si he sido en el contarla prolijo, no seré en serviros corto: cerca de aquí tengo mi majada, y en ella tengo fresca leche y muy sabrosísimo queso, con otras varias y sazonadas frutas, no menos a la vista que al gusto agradables.

Capítulo LII

De la pendencia que don Quijote tuvo con el cabrero, con la rara aventura de los deceplinantes, a quien dio felice fin a costa de su sudor

GENERAL gusto causó el cuento del cabrero a todos los que escuchado le habían; especialmente le recibió el canónigo, que con estraña curiosidad notó la manera con que le había contado, tan lejos de parecer rústico cabrero cuan cerca de mostrarse discreto cortesano; y así, dijo que había dicho muy bien el cura en decir que los montes criaban letrados. Todos se ofrecieron a Eugenio; pero el que más se mostró liberal en esto fue don Quijote, que le dijo: -Por cierto, hermano cabrero, que si yo me hallara posibilitado de poder comenzar alguna aventura, que luego luego me pusiera en camino porque vos la tuviéades buena; que yo sacara del monesterio, donde, sin duda alguna, debe de estar contra su voluntad, a Leandra, a pesar de la abadesa y de cuantos quisieran estorbarlo, y os la pusiera en vuestras manos, para que hiciéades della a toda vuestra voluntad y talante, guardando, pero, las leyes de la caballería, que mandan que a ninguna doncella se le sea fecho desaguisado alguno; aunque yo espero en Dios Nuestro Señor que no ha de poder tanto la fuerza de un encantador malicioso, que no pueda más la de otro encantador mejor intencionado, y para entonces os prometo mi favor y ayuda, como me obliga mi profesión, que no es otra si no es favorecer a los desvalidos y menesterosos.

Miróle el cabrero, y, como vio a don Quijote de tan mal pelaje y catadura, admiróse y preguntó al barbero, que cerca de sí tenía: -Señor, ¿quién es este hombre, que tal talle tiene y de tal manera habla?

-¿Quién ha de ser -respondió el barbero-sino el famoso don Quijote de la Mancha, desfacedor de agravios, enderezador de tuertos, el amparo de las doncellas, el asombro de los gigantes y el vencedor de las batallas?

-Eso me semeja -respondió el cabrero-a lo que se lee en los libros de caballeros andantes, que hacían todo eso que de este hombre vuestra merced dice; puesto que para mí tengo, o que vuestra merced se burla, o que este gentil hombre debe de tener vacíos los aposentos de la cabeza.

-Sois un grandísimo bellaco -dijo a esta sazón don Quijote-; y vos sois el vacío y el menguado, que yo estoy más lleno que jamás lo estuvo la muy hideputa puta que os parió.

Y, diciendo y haciendo, arrebató de un pan que junto a sí tenía, y dio con él al cabrero en todo el rostro, con tanta furia, que le remachó las narices; mas el cabrero, que no sabía de burlas, viendo con cuántas veras le maltrataban, sin tener respeto a la alhombra, ni a los manteles, ni a todos aquellos que comiendo estaban, saltó sobre don Quijote, y, asiéndole del cuello con entrambas manos, no dudara de ahogalle, si Sancho Panza no llegara en aquel punto, y le asiera por las espaldas y diera con él encima de la mesa, quebrando platos, rompiendo tazas y derramando y esparciendo cuanto en ella estaba. Don Quijote, que se vio libre, acudió a subirse sobre el cabrero; el cual, lleno de sangre el rostro, molido a coces de Sancho, andaba buscando a gatas algún cuchillo de la mesa para hacer alguna sanguinolenta venganza, pero estorbábanselo el canónigo y el cura; mas el barbero hizo de suerte que el cabrero cogió debajo de sí a don Quijote, sobre el cual llovió tanto número de mojicones, que del rostro del pobre caballero llovía tanta sangre como del suyo.

Reventaban de risa el canónigo y el cura, saltaban los cuadrilleros de gozo, zuzaban los unos y los otros, como hacen a los perros cuando en pendencia están trabados; sólo Sancho Panza se desesperaba, porque no se podía desasir de un criado del canónigo, que le estorbaba que a su amo no ayudase.

En resolución, estando todos en regocijo y fiesta, sino los dos aporreantes que se carpían, oyeron el son de una trompeta, tan triste que les hizo volver los rostros hacia donde les pareció que sonaba; pero el que más se alborotó de oírle fue don Quijote, el cual, aunque estaba debajo del cabrero, harto contra su voluntad y más que medianamente molido, le dijo: -Hermano demonio, que no es posible que dejes de serlo, pues has tenido valor y fuerzas para sujetar las mías, ruégote que hagamos treguas, no más de por una hora; porque el doloroso son de aquella trompeta que a nuestros oídos llega me parece que a alguna nueva aventura me llama.

El cabrero, que ya estaba cansado de moler y ser molido, le dejó luego, y don Quijote se puso en pie, volviendo asimismo el rostro adonde el son se oía, y vio a deshora que por un recuesto bajaban muchos hombres vestidos de blanco, a modo de diciplinantes.

Era el caso que aquel año habían las nubes negado su rocío a la tierra, y por todos los lugares de aquella comarca se hacían procesiones, rogativas y diciplinas, pidiendo a Dios abriese las manos de su misericordia y les lloviese; y para este efecto la gente de una aldea que allí junto estaba venía en procesión a una devota ermita que en un recuesto de aquel valle había.

Don Quijote, que vio los estraños trajes de los diciplinantes, sin pasarle por la memoria las muchas veces que los había de haber visto, se imaginó que era cosa de aventura, y que a él solo tocaba, como a caballero andante, el acometerla; y confirmóle más esta imaginación pensar que una imagen que traían cubierta de luto fuese alguna principal señora que llevaban por fuerza aquellos follones y descomedidos malandrines; y, como esto le cayó en las mientes, con gran ligereza arremetió a Rocinante, que paciendo andaba, quitándole del arzón el freno y el adarga, y en un punto le enfrenó, y, pidiendo a Sancho su espada, subió sobre Rocinante y embrazó su adarga, y dijo en alta voz a todos los que presentes estaban: -Agora, valerosa compañía, veredes cuánto importa que haya en el mundo caballeros que profesen la orden de la andante caballería; agora digo que veredes, en la libertad de aquella buena señora que allí va cautiva, si se han de estimar los caballeros andantes.

Y, en diciendo esto, apretó los muslos a Rocinante, porque espuelas no las tenía, y, a todo galope, porque carrera tirada no se lee en toda esta verdadera historia que jamás la diese Rocinante, se fue a encontrar con los diciplinantes, bien que fueran el cura y el canónigo y barbero a detenelle; mas no les fue posible, ni menos le detuvieron las voces que Sancho le daba, diciendo: -¿Adónde va, señor don Quijote? ¿Qué demonios lleva en el pecho, que le incitan a ir contra nuestra fe católica? Advierta, mal haya yo, que aquélla es procesión de diciplinantes, y que aquella señora que llevan sobre la peana es la imagen benditísima de la Virgen sin mancilla; mire, señor, lo que hace, que por esta vez se puede decir que no es lo que sabe.

Fatigóse en vano Sancho, porque su amo iba tan puesto en llegar a los ensabanados y en librar a la señora enlutada, que no oyó palabra; y, aunque la oyera, no volviera, si el rey se lo mandara. Llegó, pues, a la procesión, y paró a Rocinante, que ya llevaba deseo de quietarse un poco, y, con turbada y ronca voz, dijo: -Vosotros, que, quizá por no ser buenos, os encubris los rostros, atended y escuchad lo que deciros quiero.

Los primeros que se detuvieron fueron los que la imagen llevaban; y uno de los cuatro clérigos que cantaban las ledanías, viendo la estraña catadura de don Quijote, la flaqueza de Rocinante y otras circunstancias de risa que notó y descubrió en don Quijote, le respondió diciendo: -Señor hermano, si nos quiere decir algo, dígallo presto, porque se van estos hermanos abriendo las carnes, y no podemos, ni es razón que nos detengamos a oír cosa alguna, si ya no es tan breve que en dos palabras se diga.

-En una lo diré -replicó don Quijote-, y es ésta: que luego al punto dejéis libre a esa hermosa señora, cuyas lágrimas y triste semblante dan claras muestras que la lleváis contra su voluntad y que algún notorio desaguisado le habedes fecho; y yo, que nací en el mundo para desfacer semejantes agravios, no consentiré que un solo paso adelante pase sin darle la deseada libertad que merece.

En estas razones, cayeron todos los que las oyeron que don Quijote debía de ser algún hombre loco, y tomáronse a reír muy de gana; cuya risa fue poner pólvora a la cólera de don Quijote, porque, sin decir más palabra, sacando la espada, arremetió a las andas. Uno de aquellos que las llevaban, dejando la carga a sus compañeros, salió al encuentro de don Quijote, enarbolando una horquilla o bastón con que sustentaba las andas en tanto que descansaba; y, recibiendo en ella una gran cuchillada que le tiró don Quijote, con que se la hizo dos partes, con el último tercio, que le quedó en la mano, dio tal golpe a don Quijote encima de un hombro, por el mismo lado de la espada, que no pudo cubrir el adarga contra villana fuerza, que el pobre don Quijote vino al suelo muy malparado.

Sancho Panza, que jadeando le iba a los alcances, viéndole caído, dio voces a su moledor que no le diese otro palo, porque era un pobre caballero encantado, que no había hecho mal a nadie en todos los días de su vida. Mas, lo que detuvo al villano no fueron las voces de Sancho, sino el ver que don Quijote no bullía pie ni mano; y así, creyendo que le había muerto, con priesa se alzó la túnica a la cinta, y dio a huir por la campaña como un gamo.

Ya en esto llegaron todos los de la compañía de don Quijote adonde él estaba; y más los de la procesión, que los vieron venir corriendo, y con ellos los cuadrilleros con sus ballestas, temieron algún mal suceso, y hiciéronse todos un remolino alrededor de la imagen; y, alzados los capirotos, empuñando las diciplinas, y los clérigos los ciriales, esperaban el asalto con determinación de defenderse, y aun ofender, si pudiesen, a sus acometedores; pero la fortuna lo hizo mejor que se pensaba, porque Sancho no hizo otra cosa que arrojarle sobre el cuerpo de su señor, haciendo sobre él el más doloroso y risueño llanto del mundo, creyendo que estaba muerto.

El cura fue conocido de otro cura que en la procesión venía, cuyo conocimiento puso en sosiego el concebido temor de los dos escuadrones. El primer cura dio al segundo, en dos razones, cuenta de quién era don Quijote, y así él como toda la turba de los diciplinantes fueron a ver si estaba muerto el pobre caballero, y oyeron que Sancho Panza, con lágrimas en los ojos, decía: - ¡Oh flor de la caballería, que con solo un garrotazo acabaste la carrera de tus tan bien gastados años! ¡Oh honra de tu linaje, honor y gloria de toda la Mancha, y aun de todo el mundo, el cual, faltando tú en él, quedará lleno de malhechores, sin temor de ser castigados de sus malas fechorías! ¡Oh liberal sobre todos los Alejandros, pues por solos ocho meses de servicio me tenías dada la mejor ínsula que el mar ciñe y rodea! ¡Oh humilde con los soberbios y arrogante con los humildes, acometedor de peligros, sufridor de afrentas, enamorado sin causa, imitador de los buenos, azote de los malos, enemigo de los ruines, en fin, caballero andante, que es todo lo que decir se puede!

Con las voces y gemidos de Sancho revivió don Quijote, y la primer palabra que dijo fue: -El que de vos vive ausente, dulcísima Dulcinea, a mayores miserias que éstas está sujeto. Ayúdame, Sancho amigo, a ponerme sobre el carro encantado, que ya no estoy para oprimir la silla de Rocinante, porque tengo todo este hombro hecho pedazos.

-Eso haré yo de muy buena gana, señor mío -respondió Sancho-, y volvamos a mi aldea en compañía destos señores, que su bien desean, y allí daremos orden de hacer otra salida que nos sea de más provecho y fama.

-Bien dices, Sancho -respondió don Quijote-, y será gran prudencia dejar pasar el mal influjo de las estrellas que agora corre.

El canónigo y el cura y barbero le dijeron que haría muy bien en hacer lo que decía; y así, habiendo recibido grande gusto de las simplicidades de Sancho Panza, pusieron a don Quijote en el carro, como antes venía. La procesión volvió a ordenarse y a proseguir su camino; el cabrero se despidió de todos; los cuadrilleros no quisieron pasar adelante, y el cura les pagó lo que se les debía. El canónigo pidió al cura le avisase el suceso de don Quijote, si sanaba de su locura o si proseguía en ella, y con esto tomó licencia para seguir su viaje. En fin, todos se dividieron y apartaron, quedando solos el cura y barbero, don Quijote y Panza, y el bueno de Rocinante, que a todo lo que había visto estaba con tanta paciencia como su amo.

El boyero unció sus bueyes y acomodó a don Quijote sobre un haz de heno, y con su acostumbrada flema siguió el camino que el cura quiso, y a cabo de seis días llegaron a la aldea de don Quijote, adonde entraron en la mitad del día, que acertó a ser domingo, y la gente estaba toda en la plaza, por mitad de la cual atravesó el carro de don Quijote. Acudieron todos a ver lo que en el carro venía, y, cuando conocieron a su compatrioto, quedaron maravillados, y un muchacho acudió corriendo a dar las nuevas a su ama y a su sobrina de que su tío y su señor venía flaco y amarillo, y tendido sobre un montón de heno y sobre un carro de bueyes. Cosa de lástima fue oír los gritos que las dos buenas señoras alzaron, las bofetadas que se dieron, las maldiciones que de nuevo echaron a los malditos libros de caballerías; todo lo cual se renovó cuando vieron entrar a don Quijote por sus puertas.

A las nuevas desta venida de don Quijote, acudió la mujer de Sancho Panza, que ya había sabido que había ido con él sirviéndole de escudero, y, así como vio a Sancho, lo primero que le preguntó fue que si venía bueno el asno. Sancho respondió que venía mejor que su amo.

-Gracias sean dadas a Dios -replicó ella-, que tanto bien me ha hecho; pero contadme agora, amigo: ¿qué bien habéis sacado de vuestras escuderías?, ¿qué saboyana me traéis a mí?, ¿qué zapaticos a vuestros hijos?

-No traigo nada deso -dijo Sancho-, mujer mía, aunque traigo otras cosas de más momento y consideración.

-Deso recibo yo mucho gusto -respondió la mujer-; mostradme esas cosas de más consideración y más momento, amigo mío, que las quiero ver, para que se me alegre este corazón, que tan triste y descontento ha estado en todos los siglos de vuestra ausencia.

-En casa os las mostraré, mujer -dijo Panza-, y por agora estad contenta, que, siendo Dios servido de que otra vez salgamos en viaje a buscar aventuras, vos me veréis presto conde o gobernador de una ínsula, y no de las de por ahí, sino la mejor que pueda hallarse.

-Quiéralo así el cielo, marido mío; que bien lo habemos menester. Mas, decidme: ¿qué es eso de ínsulas, que no lo entiendo?

-No es la miel para la boca del asno -respondió Sancho-; a su tiempo lo verás, mujer, y aun te admirarás de oírte llamar Señoría de todos tus vasallos.

-¿Qué es lo que decís, Sancho, de señorías, ínsulas y vasallos? -respondió Juana Panza, que así se llamaba la mujer de Sancho, aunque no eran parientes, sino porque se usa en la Mancha tomar las mujeres el apellido de sus maridos.

-No te acucies, Juana, por saber todo esto tan apriesa; basta que te digo verdad, y cose la boca. Sólo te sabré decir, así de paso, que no hay cosa más gustosa en el mundo que ser un hombre honrado escudero de un caballero andante buscador de aventuras. Bien es verdad que las más que se hallan no salen tan a gusto como el hombre querría, porque de ciento que se encuentran, las noventa y nueve suelen salir aviesas y torcidas. Sólo yo de experiencia, porque de algunas he salido manteado, y de otras molido; pero, con todo eso, es linda cosa esperar los sucesos atravesando montes, escudriñando selvas, pisando peñas, visitando castillos, alojando en ventas a toda discreción, sin pagar, ofrecido sea al diablo, el maravedí.

Todas estas pláticas pasaron entre Sancho Panza y Juana Panza, su mujer, en tanto que el ama y sobrina de don Quijote le recibieron, y le desnudaron, y le tendieron en su antiguo lecho. Mirábalas él con ojos atravesados, y no acababa de entender en qué parte estaba. El cura encargó a la sobrina tuviese gran cuenta con regalar a su tío, y que estuviesen alerta de que otra vez no se les escapase, contando lo que había sido menester para traelle a su casa. Aquí alzaron las dos de nuevo los gritos al cielo; allí se renovaron las maldiciones de los libros de caballerías, allí pidieron al cielo que confundiese en el centro del abismo a los autores de tantas mentiras y disparates. Finalmente, ellas quedaron confusas y temerosas de que se habían de ver sin su amo y tío en el mismo punto que tuviese alguna mejoría; y sí fue como ellas se lo imaginaron.

Pero el autor desta historia, puesto que con curiosidad y diligencia ha buscado los hechos que don Quijote hizo en su tercera salida, no ha podido hallar noticia de ellas, a lo menos por escrituras auténticas; sólo la fama ha guardado, en las memorias de la Mancha, que don Quijote, la tercera vez que salió de su casa, fue a Zaragoza, donde se halló en unas famosas justas que en aquella ciudad hicieron, y allí le pasaron cosas dignas de su valor y buen entendimiento. Ni de su fin y acabamiento pudo alcanzar cosa alguna, ni la alcanzara ni supiera si la buena suerte no le deparara un antiguo médico que tenía en su poder una caja de plomo, que, según él dijo, se había hallado en los cimientos derribados de una antigua ermita que se renovaba; en la cual caja se habían hallado unos pergaminos escritos con letras góticas, pero en versos castellanos, que contenían muchas de sus hazañas y daban noticia de la hermosura de Dulcinea del Toboso, de la figura de Rocinante, de la fidelidad de Sancho Panza y de la sepultura del mismo don Quijote, con diferentes epitafios y elogios de su vida y costumbres.

Y los que se pudieron leer y sacar en limpio fueron los que aquí pone el fidedigno autor desta nueva y jamás vista historia. El cual autor no pide a los que la leyeren, en premio del inmenso trabajo que le costó inquerir y buscar todos los archivos manchegos, por sacarla a luz, sino que le den el mismo crédito que suelen dar los discretos a los libros de caballerías, que tan validos andan en el mundo; que con esto se tendrá por bien pagado y satisfecho, y se animará a sacar y buscar otras, si no tan verdaderas, a lo menos de tanta invención y pasatiempo.

Las palabras primeras que estaban escritas en el pergamino que se halló en la caja de plomo eran éstas: Los académicos de la Argamasilla, lugar de la Mancha, en vida y muerte del valeroso don Quijote de la Mancha, hoc scripserunt:

El Monicongo, académico de la Argamasilla, a la sepultura de don Quijote
Epitafio

El calvatuerno que adornó a la Mancha de más despojos que Jasón decreta;
el jüicio que tuvo la veleta aguda donde fuera mejor ancha, el brazo que su fuerza tanto ensancha, 5 que llegó del Catay hasta Gaeta, la musa más horrenda y más discreta que grabó versos en la broncínea plancha, el que a cola dejó los Amadises,

y en muy poquito a Galaos tuvo, 10
estribando en su amor y bizarría, el que hizo callar los Belianises, aquel que en Rocinante errando anduvo, yace debajo desta losa fría.

Del Paniaguado, académico de la Argamasilla, In laudem Dulcineae del Toboso

Soneto

Esta que veis de rostro amondongado, alta de pechos y ademán brioso, es Dulcinea, reina del Toboso, de quien fue el gran Quijote aficionado.

Pisó por ella el uno y otro lado 5
de la gran Sierra Negra, y el famoso campo de Montiel, hasta el herboso llano de Aranjuez, a pie y cansado.

Culpa de Rocinante, ¡oh dura estrella!, que esta manchega dama, y este invito 10
andante caballero, en tiernos años,

ella dejó, muriendo, de ser bella;
y él, aunque queda en mármores escrito, no pudo huir de amor, iras y engaños.

Del Caprichoso, discretísimo académico de la Argamasilla, en loor de Rocinante, caballo de don Quijote de la Mancha

Soneto

En el soberbio trono diamantino que con sangrientas plantas huella Marte, frenético, el Manchego su estandarte tremola con esfuerzo peregrino.

Cuelga las armas y el acero fino 5
con que destroza, asuela, raja y parte:
¡nuevas proezas!, pero inventa el arte un nuevo estilo al nuevo paladino.

Y si de su Amadís se precia Gaula, por cuyos bravos descendientes Grecia 10
triunfó mil veces y su fama ensancha, hoy a Quijote le corona el aula do Belona preside, y dél se precia, más que Grecia ni Gaula, la alta Mancha.

Nunca sus glorias el olvido mancha, 15
pues hasta Rocinante, en ser gallardo, excede a Brilladoro y a Bayardo.

Del Burlador, académico argamasillesco, a Sancho Panza

Soneto

Sancho Panza es aquéste, en cuerpo chico, pero grande en valor, ¡milagro extraño!
Escudero el más simple y sin engaño que tuvo el mundo, os juro y certifico.

De ser conde no estuvo en un tantico, 5
si no se conjuraran en su daño insolencias y agravios del tacaño siglo, que aun no perdonan a un borrico.

Sobre él anduvo -con perdón se miente—este manso escudero, tras el manso 10
caballo Rocinante y tras su dueño.

¡Oh vanas esperanzas de la gente;
cómo pasáis con prometer descanso,

y al fin paráis en sombra, en humo, en sueño!

Del Cachidiablo, académico de la Argamasilla, en la sepultura de don Quijote

Epitafio

Aquí yace el caballero, bien molido y mal andante, a quien llevó Rocinante por uno y otro sendero.

Sancho Panza el majadero   5
yace también junto a él, escudero el más fiel que vio el trato de escudero.

Del Tiquitoc, académico de la Argamasilla, en la sepultura de Dulcinea del Toboso

Epitafio

Reposa aquí Dulcinea;
y, aunque de carnes rolliza, la volvió en polvo y ceniza la muerte espantable y fea.

Fue de castiza ralea,   5
y tuvo asomos de dama;
del gran Quijote fue llama,
y fue gloria de su aldea.

Éstos fueron los versos que se pudieron leer; los demás, por estar carcomida la letra, se entregaron a un académico para que por conjeturas los declarase. Tiénese noticia que lo ha hecho, a costa de muchas vigiliass y mucho trabajo, y que tiene intención de sacallos a luz, con esperanza de la tercera salida de don Quijote.

Forsi altro canterà con miglior plectio.

Tasa

Yo, Hernando de Vallejo, escribano de Cámara del Rey nuestro señor, de los que residen en su Consejo, doy fe que, habiéndose visto por los señores dél un libro que compuso Miguel de Cervantes Saavedra, intitulado Don Quijote de la Mancha, Segunda parte, que con licencia de Su Majestad fue impreso, le tasaron a cuatro maravedís cada pliego en papel, el cual tiene setenta y tres pliegos, que al dicho respeto suma y monta docientos y noventa y dos maravedís, y mandaron que esta tasa se ponga al principio de cada volumen del dicho libro, para que se sepa y entienda lo que por él se ha de pedir y llevar, sin que se exceda en ello en manera alguna, como consta y parece por el auto y decreto original sobre ello dado, y que queda en mi poder, a que me refiero; y de mandamiento de los dichos señores del Consejo y de pedimiento de la parte del dicho Miguel de Cervantes, di esta fee en Madrid, a veinte y uno días del mes de octubre del mil y seiscientos y quince años.

Fee de erratas

Aprobación

Por comisión y mandado de los señores del Consejo, he hecho ver el libro contenido en este memorial: no contiene cosa contra la fe ni buenas costumbres, antes es libro de mucho entretenimiento lícito, mezclado de mucha filosofía moral; puédesele dar licencia para imprimirle. En Madrid, a cinco de noviembre de mil seiscientos y quince.

Aprobación

Por comisión y mandado de los señores del Consejo, he visto la Segunda parte de don Quijote de la Mancha, por Miguel de Cervantes Saavedra: no contiene cosa contra nuestra santa fe católica, ni buenas costumbres, antes, muchas de honesta recreación y apacible divertimiento, que los antiguos juzgaron convenientes a sus repúblicas, pues aun en la severa de los lacedemonios levantaron estatua a la risa, y los de Tesalia la dedicaron fiestas, como lo dice Pausanias, referido de Bosio, libro II De signis Ecclesiae, cap. 10, alentando ánimos marchitos y espíritus melancólicos, de que se acordó Tulio en el primero De legibus, y el poeta diciendo:

Interpone tuis interdum gaudia curis, lo cual hace el autor mezclando las veras a las burlas, lo dulce a lo provechoso y lo moral a lo faceto, disimulando en el cebo del donaire el anzuelo de la reprehensión, y cumpliendo con el acertado asunto en que pretende la expulsión de los libros de caballerías, pues con su buena diligencia mañosamente alimpiando de su contagiosa dolencia a estos reinos, es obra muy digna de su grande ingenio, honra y lustre de nuestra nación, admiración y invidia de las estrañas. Éste es mi parecer, salvo etc. En Madrid, a 17 de marzo de 1615.

Aprobación

Por comisión del señor doctor Gutierre de Cetina, vicario general desta villa de Madrid, corte de Su Majestad, he visto este libro de la Segunda parte del ingenioso caballero don Quijote de la Mancha, por Miguel de Cervantes Saavedra, y no hallo en él cosa indigna de un cristiano celo, ni que disuene de la decencia debida a buen ejemplo, ni virtudes morales; antes, mucha erudición y aprovechamiento, así en la continencia de su bien seguido asunto para extirpar los vanos y mentirosos libros de caballerías, cuyo contagio había cundido más de lo que fuera justo, como en la lisura del lenguaje castellano, no adulterado con enfadosa y estudiada afectación, vicio con razón aborrecido de hombres cuerdos; y en la corrección de vicios que generalmente toca, ocasionado de sus agudos discursos, guarda con tanta cordura las leyes de reprehensión cristiana, que aquel que fuere tocado de la enfermedad que pretende curar, en lo dulce y sabroso de sus medicinas gustosamente habrá bebido, cuando menos lo imagine, sin empacho ni asco alguno, lo provechoso de la detestación de su vicio, con que se hallará, que es lo más difícil de conseguirse, gustoso y reprehendido. Ha habido muchos que, por no haber sabido templar ni mezclar a propósito lo útil con lo dulce, han dado con todo su molesto trabajo en tierra, pues no pudiendo imitar a Diógenes en lo filósofo y docto, atrevida, por no decir licenciosa y desalumbradamente, le pretenden imitar en lo cínico, entregándose a maldicientes, inventando casos que no pasaron, para hacer capaz al vicio que tocan de su áspera reprehensión, y por ventura descubren caminos para seguirle, hasta entonces ignorados, con que vienen a quedar, si no reprehensores, a lo menos maestros dél. Hácense odiosos a los bien entendidos, con el pueblo pierden el crédito, si alguno tuvieron, para admitir sus escritos y los vicios que arrojada e imprudentemente quisieren corregir en muy peor estado que antes, que no todas las postemas a un mismo tiempo están dispuestas para admitir las recetas o cauterios; antes, algunos mucho mejor reciben las blandas y suaves medicinas, con cuya aplicación, el atentado y docto médico consigue el fin de resolverlas, término que muchas veces es mejor que no el que se alcanza con el rigor del hierro. Bien diferente han sentido de los escritos de Miguel de Cervantes, así nuestra nación como las estrañas, pues como a milagro desean ver el autor de libros que con general aplauso, así por su decoro y decencia como por la suavidad y blandura de sus discursos, han recebido España, Francia, Italia, Alemania y Flandes. Certifico con verdad que en veinte y cinco de febrero deste año de seiscientos y quince, habiendo ido el ilustrísimo señor don Bernardo de Sandoval y Rojas, cardenal arzobispo de Toledo, mi señor, a pagar la visita que a Su Ilustrísima hizo el embajador de Francia, que vino a tratar cosas tocantes a los casamientos de sus príncipes y los de España, muchos caballeros franceses, de los que vinieron acompañando al embajador, tan corteses como entendidos y amigos de buenas letras, se llegaron a mí y a otros capellanes del cardenal mi señor, deseosos de saber qué libros de ingenio andaban más validos; y, tocando acaso en éste que yo estaba censurando, apenas oyeron el nombre de Miguel de Cervantes, cuando se comenzaron a hacer lenguas, encareciendo la estimación en que, así en Francia como en los reinos sus confinantes, se tenían sus obras: la Galatea, que alguno dellos tiene casi de memoria la primera parte désta, y las Novelas. Fueron tantos sus encarecimientos, que me ofrecí llevarles que vieses el autor dellas, que estimaron con mil demostraciones de vivos deseos. Preguntáronme muy por menor su edad, su profesión, calidad y cantidad. Halléme obligado a decir que era viejo, soldado, hidalgo y pobre, a que uno respondió estas formales palabras: «Pues, ¿a tal hombre no le tiene España muy rico y sustentado del erario público?» Acudió otro de aquellos caballeros con este pensamiento y con mucha agudeza, y dijo: «Si necesidad le ha de obligar a escribir, plega a Dios que nunca tenga abundancia, para que con sus obras, siendo él pobre, haga rico a todo el mundo». Bien creo que está, para censura, un poco larga; alguno dirá que toca los límites de lisonjero elogio; mas la verdad de lo que cortamente digo deshace en el crítico la sospecha y en mí el cuidado; además que el día de hoy no se lisonjea a quien no tiene con qué cebar el pico del adulator, que, aunque afectuosa y falsamente dice de burlas, pretende ser remunerado de veras. En Madrid, a veinte y siete de febrero de mil y seiscientos y quince.

Prólogo al lector

¡Válame Dios, y con cuánta gana debes de estar esperando ahora, lector ilustre, o quier plebeyo, este prólogo, creyendo hallar en él venganzas, riñas y vituperios del autor del segundo Don Quijote; digo de aquel que dicen que se engendró en Tordesillas y nació en Tarragona! Pues en verdad que no te he dar este contento; que, puesto que los agravios despiertan la cólera en los más humildes pechos, en el mío ha de padecer excepción esta regla. Quisieras tú que lo diera del asno, del mentecato y del atrevido, pero no me pasa por el pensamiento: castíguele su pecado, con su pan se lo coma y allá se lo haya. Lo que no he podido dejar de sentir es que me note de viejo y de manco, como si hubiera sido en mi mano haber detenido el tiempo, que no pasase por mí, o si mi manquedad hubiera nacido en alguna taberna, sino en la más alta ocasión que vieron los siglos pasados, los presentes, ni esperan ver los venideros. Si mis heridas no resplandecen en los ojos de quien las mira, son estimadas, a lo menos, en la estimación de los que saben dónde se cobraron; que el soldado más bien parece muerto en la batalla que libre en la fuga; y es esto en mí de manera, que si ahora me propusieran y facilitaran un imposible, quisiera antes haberme hallado en aquella facción prodigiosa que sano ahora de mis heridas sin haberme hallado en ella. Las que el soldado muestra en el rostro y en los pechos, estrellas son que guían a los demás al cielo de la honra, y al de desear la justa alabanza; y hase de advertir que no se escribe con las canas, sino con el entendimiento, el cual suele mejorarse con los años.

He sentido también que me llame invidioso, y que, como a ignorante, me describa qué cosa sea la envidia; que, en realidad de verdad, de dos que hay, yo no conozco sino a la santa, a la noble y bien intencionada; y, siendo esto así, como lo es, no tengo yo de perseguir a ningún sacerdote, y más si tiene por añadidura ser familiar del Santo Oficio; y si él lo dijo por quien parece que lo dijo, engañóse de todo en todo: que del tal adoro el ingenio, admiro las obras y la ocupación continua y virtuosa. Pero, en efecto, le agradezco a este señor autor el decir que mis novelas son más satíricas que ejemplares, pero que son buenas; y no lo pudieran ser si no tuvieran de todo.

Paréceme que me dices que ando muy limitado y que me contengo mucho en los términos de mi modestia, sabiendo que no se ha de añadir aflicción al afligido, y que la que debe de tener este señor sin duda es grande, pues no osa parecer a campo abierto y al cielo claro, encubriendo su nombre, fingiendo su patria, como si hubiera hecho alguna traición de lesa majestad. Si, por ventura, llegares a conocerle, dile de mi parte que no me tengo por agraviado: que bien sé lo que son tentaciones del demonio, y que una de las mayores es ponerle a un hombre en el entendimiento que puede componer y imprimir un libro, con que gane tanta fama como dineros, y tantos dineros cuanta fama; y, para confirmación desto, quiero que en tu buen donaire y gracia le cuentes este cuento:

«Había en Sevilla un loco que dio en el más gracioso disparate y tema que dio loco en el mundo. Y fue que hizo un cañuto de caña puntiagudo en el fin, y, en cogiendo algún perro en la calle, o en cualquiera otra parte, con el un pie le cogía el suyo, y el otro le alzaba con la mano, y como mejor podía le acomodaba el cañuto en la parte que, soplándole, le ponía redondo como una pelota; y, en teniéndolo desta suerte, le daba dos palmaditas en la barriga, y le soltaba, diciendo a los circunstantes, que siempre eran muchos: “¿Pensarán vuestras mercedes ahora que es poco trabajo hinchar un perro?”»

Y si este cuento no le cuadrare, dirásle, lector amigo, éste, que también es de loco y de perro:

«Había en Córdoba otro loco, que tenía por costumbre de traer encima de la cabeza un pedazo de losa de mármol, o un canto no muy liviano, y, en topando algún perro descuidado, se le ponía junto, y a plomo dejaba caer sobre él el peso. Amohinábase el perro, y, dando ladridos y aullidos, no paraba en tres calles. Sucedió, pues, que, entre los perros que descargó la carga, fue uno un perro de un bonetero, a quien quería mucho su dueño. Bajó el canto, diole en la cabeza, alzó el grito el molido perro, violó y sintiólo su amo, asió de una vara de medir, y salió al loco y no le dejó hueso sano; y cada palo que le daba decía: “Perro ladrón, ¿a mi podenco? ¿No viste, cruel, que era podenco mi perro?” Y, repitiéndole el nombre de podenco muchas veces, envió al loco hecho una alheña. Escarmentó el loco y retiróse, y en más de un mes no salió a la plaza; al cabo del cual tiempo, volvió con su invención y con más carga. Llegábase donde estaba el perro, y, mirándole muy bien de hito en hito, y sin querer ni atreverse a descargar la piedra, decía: “Este es podenco: ¡guarda!” En efeto, todos cuantos perros topaba, aunque fuesen alanos, o gozques, decía que eran podencos; y así, no soltó más el canto.»

Quizá de esta suerte le podrá acontecer a este historiador: que no se atreverá a soltar más la presa de su ingenio en libros que, en siendo malos, son más duros que las peñas.

Dile también que de la amenaza que me hace, que me ha de quitar la ganancia con su libro, no se me da un ardite, que, acomodándome al entremés famoso de La Perendenga, le respondo que me viva el Veinte y cuatro, mi señor, y Cristo con todos. Viva el gran conde de Lemos, cuya cristiandad y liberalidad, bien conocida, contra todos los golpes de mi corta fortuna me tiene en pie, y vívame la suma caridad del ilustrísimo de Toledo, don Bernardo de Sandoval y Rojas, y siquiera no haya emprentas en el mundo, y siquiera se impriman contra mí más libros que tienen letras las Coplas de Mingo Revulgo. Estos dos príncipes, sin que los solicite adulación mía ni otro género de aplauso, por sola su bondad, han tomado a su cargo el hacerme merced y favorecerme; en lo que me tengo por más dichoso y más rico que si la fortuna por camino ordinario me hubiera puesto en su cumbre. La honra puédela tener el pobre, pero no el vicioso; la pobreza puede anublar a la nobleza, pero no escurecerla del todo; pero, como la virtud dé alguna luz de sí, aunque sea por los inconvenientes y resquicios de la estrechez, viene a ser estimada de los altos y nobles espíritus, y, por el consiguiente, favorecida.

Y no le digas más, ni yo quiero decirte más a ti, sino advertirte que consideres que esta segunda parte de Don Quijote que te ofrezco es cortada del mismo artífice y del mismo paño que la primera, y que en ella te doy a don Quijote dilatado, y, finalmente, muerto y sepultado, porque ninguno se atreva a levantarle nuevos testimonios, pues bastan los pasados y basta también que un hombre honrado haya dado noticia destas discretas locuras, sin querer de nuevo entrarse en ellas: que la abundancia de las cosas, aunque sean buenas, hace que no se estimen, y la carestía, aun de las malas, se estima en algo. Olvídaseme de decirte que esperes el Persiles, que ya estoy acabando, y la segunda parte de Galatea.

Dedicatoria al conde de Lemos

Enviando a Vuestra Excelencia los días pasados mis comedias, antes impresas que representadas, si bien me acuerdo, dije que don Quijote quedaba calzadas las espuelas para ir a besar las manos a Vuestra Excelencia; y ahora digo que se las ha calzado y se ha puesto en camino, y si él allá llega, me parece que habré hecho algún servicio a Vuestra Excelencia, porque es mucha la priesa que de infinitas partes me dan a que le envíe para quitar el hámago y la náusea que ha causado otro don Quijote, que, con nombre de Segunda parte, se ha disfrazado y corrido por el orbe; y el que más ha mostrado desearle ha sido el grande emperador de la China, pues en lengua chinesca habrá un mes que me escribió una carta con un propio, pidiéndome, o, por mejor decir, suplicándome se le enviase, porque quería fundar un colegio donde se leyese la lengua castellana, y quería que el libro que se leyese fuese el de la historia de don Quijote. Juntamente con esto, me decía que fuese yo a ser el rector del tal colegio.

Preguntéle al portador si Su Majestad le había dado para mí alguna ayuda de costa. Respondióme que ni por pensamiento. «Pues, hermano -le respondí yo-, vos os podéis volver a vuestra China a las diez, o a las veinte, o a las que venís despachado, porque yo no estoy con salud para ponerme en tan largo viaje; además que, sobre estar enfermo, estoy muy sin dineros, y emperador por emperador, y monarca por monarca, en Nápoles tengo al grande conde de Lemos, que, sin tantos titulillos de colegios ni rectorías, me sustenta, me ampara y hace más merced que la que yo acierto a desear».

Con esto le despedí, y con esto me despido, ofreciendo a Vuestra Excelencia los Trabajos de Persiles y Sigismunda, libro a quien daré fin dentro de cuatro meses, Deo volente; el cual ha de ser o el más malo o el mejor que en nuestra lengua se haya compuesto, quiero decir de los de entretenimiento; y digo que me arrepiento de haber dicho el más malo, porque, según la opinión de mis amigos, ha de llegar al extremo de bondad posible.

Venga Vuestra Excelencia con la salud que es deseado; que ya estará Persiles para besarle las manos, y yo los pies, como criado que soy de Vuestra Excelencia. De Madrid, último de octubre de mil seiscientos y quince.

Criado de Vuestra Excelencia,
Miguel de Cervantes Saavedra.

Capítulo I

De lo que el cura y el barbero pasaron con don Quijote cerca de su enfermedad

CUENTA Cide Hamete Benengeli, en la segunda parte desta historia y tercera salida de don Quijote, que el cura y el barbero se estuvieron casi un mes sin verle, por no renovarle y traerle a la memoria las cosas pasadas; pero no por esto dejaron de visitar a su sobrina y a su ama, encargándolas tuviesen cuenta con regalarle, dándole a comer cosas confortativas y apropiadas para el corazón y el cerebro, de donde procedía, según buen discurso, toda su mala ventura. Las cuales dijeron que así lo hacían, y lo harían, con la voluntad y cuidado posible, porque echaban de ver que su señor por momentos iba dando muestras de estar en su entero juicio; de lo cual recibieron los dos gran contento, por parecerles que habían acertado en haberle traído encantado en el carro de los bueyes, como se contó en la primera parte desta tan grande como puntual historia, en su último capítulo. Y así, determinaron de visitarle y hacer experiencia de su mejoría, aunque tenían casi por imposible que la tuviese, y acordaron de no tocarle en ningún punto de la andante caballería, por no ponerse a peligro de descoser los de la herida, que tan tiernos estaban.

Visitáronle, en fin, y halláronle sentado en la cama, vestida una almilla de bayeta verde, con un bonete colorado toledano; y estaba tan seco y amojamado, que no parecía sino hecho de carne momia. Fueron dél muy bien recibidos, preguntáronle por su salud, y él dio cuenta de sí y de ella con mucho juicio y con muy elegantes palabras; y en el discurso de su plática vinieron a tratar en esto que llaman razón de estado y modos de gobierno, enmendando este abuso y condenando aquél, reformando una costumbre y desterrando otra, haciéndose cada uno de los tres un nuevo legislador, un Licurgo moderno o un Solón flamante; y de tal manera renovaron la república, que no pareció sino que la habían puesto en una fragua, y sacado otra de la que pusieron; y habló don Quijote con tanta discreción en todas las materias que se tocaron, que los dos examinadores creyeron indubitadamente que estaba del todo bueno y en su entero juicio.

Halláronse presentes a la plática la sobrina y ama, y no se hartaban de dar gracias a Dios de ver a su señor con tan buen entendimiento; pero el cura, mudando el propósito primero, que era de no tocarle en cosa de caballerías, quiso hacer de todo en todo experiencia si la sanidad de don Quijote era falsa o verdadera, y así, de lance en lance, vino a contar algunas nuevas que habían venido de la corte; y, entre otras, dijo que se tenía por cierto que el Turco bajaba con una poderosa armada, y que no se sabía su designio, ni adónde había de descargar tan gran nublado; y, con este temor, con que casi cada año nos toca arma, estaba puesta en ella toda la cristiandad, y Su Majestad había hecho proveer las costas de Nápoles y Sicilia y la isla de Malta. A esto respondió don Quijote:

-Su Majestad ha hecho como prudentísimo guerrero en proveer sus estados con tiempo, porque no le halle desapercebido el enemigo; pero si se tomara mi consejo, aconsejále yo que usara de una prevención, de la cual Su Majestad la hora de agora debe estar muy ajeno de pensar en ella.

Apenas oyó esto el cura, cuando dijo entre sí:

-¡Dios te tenga de su mano, pobre don Quijote: que me parece que te despeñas de la alta cumbre de tu locura hasta el profundo abismo de tu simplicidad!

Mas el barbero, que ya había dado en el mismo pensamiento que el cura, preguntó a don Quijote cuál era la advertencia de la prevención que decía era bien se hiciese; quizá podría ser tal, que se pusiese en la lista de los muchos advertimientos impertinentes que se suelen dar a los príncipes.

-El mío, señor rapador -dijo don Quijote-, no será impertinente, sino perteneciente.

-No lo digo por tanto -replicó el barbero-, sino porque tiene mostrado la experiencia que todos o los más arbitrios que se dan a Su Majestad, o son imposibles, o disparatados, o en daño del rey o del reino.

-Pues el mío -respondió don Quijote- ni es imposible ni disparatado, sino el más fácil, el más justo y el más mañero y breve que puede caber en pensamiento de arbitante alguno.

-Ya tarda en decirle vuestra merced, señor don Quijote -dijo el cura.

-No querría -dijo don Quijote- que le dijese yo aquí agora, y amaneciese mañana en los oídos de los señores consejeros, y se llevase otro las gracias y el premio de mi trabajo.

-Por mí -dijo el barbero-, doy la palabra, para aquí y para delante de Dios, de no decir lo que vuestra merced dijere a rey ni a roque, ni a hombre terrenal, juramento que aprendí del romance del cura que en el prefacio avisó al rey del ladrón que le había robado las cien doblas y la su mula la andariega.

-No sé historias -dijo don Quijote-, pero sé que es bueno ese juramento, en fee de que sé que es hombre de bien el señor barbero.

-Cuando no lo fuera -dijo el cura-, yo le abono y salgo por él, que en este caso no hablará más que un mudo, so pena de pagar lo juzgado y sentenciado.

-Y a vuestra merced, ¿quién le fía, señor cura? -dijo don Quijote.

-Mi profesión -respondió el cura-, que es de guardar secreto.

-¡Cuerpo de tal! -dijo a esta sazón don Quijote-. ¿Hay más, sino mandar Su Majestad por público pregón que se junten en la corte para un día señalado todos los caballeros andantes que vagan por España; que, aunque no viniesen sino media docena, tal podría venir entre ellos, que solo bastase a destruir toda la potestad del Turco? Esténme vuestras mercedes atentos, y vayan conmigo. ¿Por ventura es cosa nueva deshacer un solo caballero andante un ejército de docientos mil hombres, como si todos juntos tuvieran una sola garganta, o fueran hechos de alfenique? Si no, díganme: ¿cuántas historias están llenas destas maravillas? ¡Había, en hora mala para mí, que no quiero decir para otro, de vivir hoy el famoso don Belianís, o alguno de los del innumerable linaje de Amadís de Gaula; que si alguno déstos hoy viviera y con el Turco se afrontara, a fee que no le arrendara la ganancia! Pero Dios mirará por su pueblo, y deparará alguno que, si no tan bravo como los pasados andantes caballeros, a lo menos no les será inferior en el ánimo; y Dios me entiende, y no digo más.

-¡Ay! -dijo a este punto la sobrina-; ¡que me maten si no quiere mi señor volver a ser caballero andante!

A lo que dijo don Quijote:

-Caballero andante he de morir, y baje o suba el Turco cuando él quisiere y cuan poderosamente pudiere; que otra vez digo que Dios me entiende.

A esta sazón dijo el barbero:

-Suplico a vuestras mercedes que se me dé licencia para contar un cuento breve que sucedió en Sevilla, que, por venir aquí como de molde, me da gana de contarle.

Dio la licencia don Quijote, y el cura y los demás le prestaron atención, y él comenzó desta manera:

-«En la casa de los locos de Sevilla estaba un hombre a quien sus parientes habían puesto allí por falta de juicio. Era graduado en cánones por Osuna, pero, aunque lo fuera por Salamanca, según opinión de muchos, no dejara de ser loco. Este tal graduado, al cabo de algunos años de recogimiento, se dio a entender que estaba cuerdo y en su entero juicio, y con esta imaginación escribió al arzobispo, suplicándole encarecidamente y con muy concertadas razones le mandase sacar de aquella miseria en que vivía, pues por la misericordia de Dios había ya cobrado el juicio perdido; pero que sus parientes, por gozar de la parte de su hacienda, le tenían allí, y, a pesar de la verdad, querían que fuese loco hasta la muerte.

»El arzobispo, persuadido de muchos billetes concertados y discretos, mandó a un capellán suyo se informase del retor de la casa si era verdad lo que aquel licenciado le escribía, y que asimesmo hablase con el loco, y que si le pareciese que tenía juicio, le sacase y pusiese en libertad. Hízolo así el capellán, y el retor le dijo que aquel hombre aún se estaba loco: que, puesto que hablaba muchas veces como persona de grande entendimiento, al cabo disparaba con tantas necedades, que en muchas y en grandes igualaban a sus primeras discreciones, como se podía hacer la experiencia hablándole. Quiso hacerla el capellán, y, poniéndole con el loco, habló con él una hora y más, y en todo aquel tiempo jamás el loco dijo razón torcida ni disparatada; antes, habló tan atentadamente, que el capellán fue forzado a creer que el loco estaba cuerdo; y entre otras cosas que el loco le dijo fue que el retor le tenía ojeriza, por no perder los regalos que sus parientes le hacían porque dijese que aún estaba loco, y con lúcidos intervalos; y que el mayor contrario que en su desgracia tenía era su mucha hacienda, pues, por gozar della sus enemigos, ponían dolo y dudaban de la merced que Nuestro Señor le había hecho en volverle de bestia en hombre. Finalmente, él habló de manera que hizo sospechoso al retor, codiciosos y desalmados a sus parientes, y a él tan discreto que el capellán se determinó a llevársele consigo a que el arzobispo le viese y tocase con la mano la verdad de aquel negocio.

»Con esta buena fee, el buen capellán pidió al retor mandase dar los vestidos con que allí había entrado el licenciado; volvió a decir el retor que mirase lo que hacía, porque, sin duda alguna, el licenciado aún se estaba loco. No sirvieron de nada para con el capellán las prevenciones y advertimientos del retor para que dejase de llevarle; obedeció el retor, viendo ser orden del arzobispo; pusieron al licenciado sus vestidos, que eran nuevos y decentes, y, como él se vio vestido de cuerdo y desnudo de loco, suplicó al capellán que por caridad le diese licencia para ir a despedirse de sus compañeros los locos. El capellán dijo que él le quería acompañar y ver los locos que en la casa había. Subieron, en efeto, y con ellos algunos que se hallaron presentes; y, llegado el licenciado a una jaula adonde estaba un loco furioso, aunque entonces sosegado y quieto, le dijo: “Hermano mío, mire si me manda algo, que me voy a mi casa; que ya Dios ha sido servido, por su infinita bondad y misericordia, sin yo merecerlo, de volverme mi juicio: ya estoy sano y cuerdo; que acerca del poder de Dios ninguna cosa es imposible. Tenga grande esperanza y confianza en Él, que, pues a mí me ha vuelto a mi primero estado, también le volverá a él si en Él confía. Yo tendré cuidado de enviarle algunos regalos que coma, y cómalos en todo caso, que le hago saber que imagino, como quien ha pasado por ello, que todas nuestras locuras proceden de tener los estómagos vacíos y los cerebros llenos de aire. Esfuércese, esfuércese, que el descaecimiento en los infortunios apoca la salud y acarrea la muerte”.

frontero de la del furioso, y, levantándose de una estera vieja donde estaba echado y desnudo en cueros, preguntó a grandes voces quién era el que se iba sano y cuerdo. El licenciado respondió: “Yo soy, hermano, el que me voy; que ya no tengo necesidad de estar más aquí, por lo que doy infinitas gracias a los cielos, que tan grande merced me han hecho”. “Mirad lo que decís, licenciado, no os engañe el diablo -replicó el loco-; sosegad el pie, y estaos quedito en vuestra casa, y ahorraréis la vuelta”. “Yo sé que estoy bueno -replicó el licenciado-, y no habrá para qué tornar a andar estaciones”. “¿Vos bueno? -dijo el loco-: agora bien, ello dirá; andad con Dios, pero yo os voto a Júpiter, cuya majestad yo represento en la tierra, que por solo este pecado que hoy comete Sevilla, en sacaros desta casa y en teneros por cuerdo, tengo de hacer un tal castigo en ella, que quede memoria dél por todos los siglos del los siglos, amén. ¿No sabes tú, licenciadillo menguado, que lo podré hacer, pues, como digo, soy Júpiter Tonante, que tengo en mis manos los rayos abrasadores con que puedo y suelo amenazar y destruir el mundo? Pero con sola una cosa quiero castigar a este ignorante pueblo, y es con no llover en él ni en todo su distrito y contorno por tres enteros años, que se han de contar desde el día y punto en que ha sido hecha esta amenaza en adelante. ¿Tú libre, tú sano, tú cuerdo, y yo loco, y yo enfermo, y yo atado...? Así pienso llover como pensar ahorcarme”.

-Pues, ¿éste es el cuento, señor barbero -dijo don Quijote-, que, por venir aquí como de molde, no podía dejar de contarle? ¡Ah, señor rapista, señor rapista, y cuán ciego es aquel que no ve por tela de cedazo! Y ¿es posible que vuestra merced no sabe que las comparaciones que se hacen de ingenio a ingenio, de valor a valor, de hermosura a hermosura y de linaje a linaje son siempre odiosas y mal recibidas? Yo, señor barbero, no soy Neptuno, el dios de las aguas, ni procuro que nadie me tenga por discreto no lo siendo; sólo me fatigo por dar a entender al mundo en el error en que está en no renovar en sí el felicísimo tiempo donde campeaba la orden de la andante caballería. Pero no es merecedora la depravada edad nuestra de gozar tanto bien como el que gozaron las edades donde los andantes caballeros tomaron a su cargo y echaron sobre sus espaldas la defensa de los reinos, el amparo de las doncellas, el socorro de los huérfanos y pupilos, el castigo de los soberbios y el premio de los humildes. Los más de los caballeros que agora se usan, antes les crujen los damascos, los brocados y otras ricas telas de que se visten, que la malla con que se arman; ya no hay caballero que duerma en los campos, sujeto al rigor del cielo, armado de todas armas desde los pies a la cabeza; y ya no hay quien, sin sacar los pies de los estribos, arrimado a su lanza, sólo procure descabezar, como dicen, el sueño, como lo hacían los caballeros andantes. Ya no hay ninguno que, saliendo deste bosque, entre en aquella montaña, y de allí pise una estéril y desierta playa del mar, las más veces proceloso y alterado, y, hallando en ella y en su orilla un pequeño batel sin remos, vela, mástil ni jarcia alguna, con intrépido corazón se arroje en él, entregándose a las implacables olas del mar profundo, que ya le suben al cielo y ya le bajan al abismo; y él, puesto el pecho a la incontrastable borrasca, cuando menos se cata, se halla tres mil y más leguas distante del lugar donde se embarcó, y, saltando en tierra remota y no conocida, le suceden cosas dignas de estar escritas, no en pergaminos, sino en bronces. Mas agora, ya triunfa la pereza de la diligencia, la ociosidad del trabajo, el vicio de la virtud, la arrogancia de la valentía y la teórica de la práctica de las armas, que sólo vivieron y resplandecieron en las edades del oro y en los andantes caballeros. Si no, díganme: ¿quién más honesto y más valiente que el famoso Amadís de Gaula?; ¿quién más discreto que Palmerín de Inglaterra?; ¿quién más acomodado y manual que Tirante el Blanco?; ¿quién más galán que Lisuarte de Grecia?; ¿quién más acuchillado ni acuchillador que don Belianís?; ¿quién más intrépido que Perión de Gaula, o quién más acometedor de peligros que Felixmarte de Hircania, o quién más sincero que Esplandián?; ¿quién mas arrojado que don Cirongilio de Tracia?; ¿quién más bravo que Rodamonte?; ¿quién más prudente que el rey Sobrino?; ¿quién más atrevido que Reinaldos?; ¿quién más invencible que Roldán?; y ¿quién más gallardo y más cortés que Rugero, de quien decienden hoy los duques de Ferrara, según Turpín en su Cosmografía? Todos estos caballeros, y otros muchos que pudiera decir, señor cura, fueron caballeros andantes, luz y gloria de la caballería. Déstos, o tales como éstos, quisiera yo que fueran los de mi arbitrio, que, a serlo, Su Majestad se hallara bien servido y ahorrara de mucho gasto, y el Turco se quedara pelando las barbas, y con esto, no quiero quedar en mi casa, pues no me saca el capellán della; y si su Júpiter, como ha dicho el barbero, no lloviere, aquí estoy yo, que lloveré cuando se me antojare. Digo esto porque sepa el señor Bacía que le entiendo.

-En verdad, señor don Quijote -dijo el barbero-, que no lo dije por tanto, y así me ayude Dios como fue buena mi intención, y que no debe vuestra merced

-Si puedo sentirme o no -respondió don Quijote-, yo me lo sé.

A esto dijo el cura:

-Aun bien que yo casi no he hablado palabra hasta ahora, y no quisiera quedar con un escrúpulo que me roe y escarba la conciencia, nacido de lo que aquí el señor don Quijote ha dicho.

-Para otras cosas más -respondió don Quijote-tiene licencia el señor cura; y así, puede decir su escrúpulo, porque no es de gusto andar con la conciencia escrupulosa.

-Pues con ese beneplácito -respondió el cura-, digo que mi escrúpulo es que no me puedo persuadir en ninguna manera a que toda la caterva de caballeros andantes que vuestra merced, señor don Quijote, ha referido, hayan sido real y verdaderamente personas de carne y hueso en el mundo; antes, imagino que todo es ficción, fábula y mentira, y sueños contados por hombres despiertos, o, por mejor decir, medio dormidos.

-Ése es otro error -respondió don Quijote-en que han caído muchos, que no creen que haya habido tales caballeros en el mundo; y yo muchas veces, con diversas gentes y ocasiones, he procurado sacar a la luz de la verdad este casi común engaño; pero algunas veces no he salido con mi intención, y otras sí, sustentándola sobre los hombros de la verdad; la cual verdad es tan cierta, que estoy por decir que con mis propios ojos vi a Amadís de Gaula, que era un hombre alto de cuerpo, blanco de rostro, bien puesto de barba, aunque negra, de vista entre blanda y rigurosa, corto de razones, tardo en airarse y presto en deponer la ira; y del modo que he delineado a Amadís pudiera, a mi parecer, pintar y descubrir todos cuantos caballeros andantes andan en las historias en el orbe, que, por la aprehensión que tengo de que fueron como sus historias cuentan, y por las hazañas que hicieron y condiciones que tuvieron, se pueden sacar por buena filosofía sus faciones, sus colores y estaturas.

-¿Que tan grande le parece a vuestra merced, mi señor don Quijote -preguntó el barbero-, debía de ser el gigante Morgante?

-En esto de gigantes -respondió don Quijote-hay diferentes opiniones, si los ha habido o no en el mundo; pero la Santa Escritura, que no puede faltar un átomo en la verdad, nos muestra que los hubo, contándonos la historia de aquel filisteazo de Golías, que tenía siete codos y medio de altura, que es una desmesurada grandeza. También en la isla de Sicilia se han hallado canillas y espaldas tan grandes, que su grandeza manifiesta que fueron gigantes sus dueños, y tan grandes como grandes torres; que la geometría saca esta verdad de duda. Pero, con todo esto, no sabré decir con certidumbre qué tamaño tuviese Morgante, aunque imagino que no debió de ser muy alto; y muéveme a ser deste parecer hallar en la historia donde se hace mención particular de sus hazañas que muchas veces dormía debajo de techado; y, pues hallaba casa donde cupiese, claro está que no era desmesurada su grandeza.

-Así es -dijo el cura.

El cual, gustando de oírle decir tan grandes disparates, le preguntó que qué sentía acerca de los rostros de Reinaldos de Montalbán y de don Roldán, y de los demás Doce Pares de Francia, pues todos habían sido caballeros andantes.

-De Reinaldos -respondió don Quijote-me atrevo a decir que era ancho de rostro, de color bermejo, los ojos bailadores y algo saltados, puntoso y colérico en demasía, amigo de ladrones y de gente perdida. De Roldán, o Rotolando, o Orlando, que con todos estos nombres le nombran las historias, soy de parecer y me afirmo que fue de mediana estatura, ancho de espaldas, algo estevado, moreno de rostro y barbitaheño, velloso en el cuerpo y de vista amenazadora; corto de razones, pero muy comedido y bien criado.

-Si no fue Roldán más gentilhombre que vuestra merced ha dicho -replicó el cura-, no fue maravilla que la señora Angélica la Bella le desdeñase y dejase por la gala, brío y donaire que debía de tener el morillo barbiponiente a quien ella se entregó; y anduvo discreta de adamar antes la blandura de Medoro que la aspereza de Roldán.

-Esa Angélica -respondió don Quijote-, señor cura, fue una doncella destraída, andariega y algo antojadiza, y tan lleno dejó el mundo de sus impertinencias como de la fama de su hermosura: despreció mil señores, mil valientes y mil discretos, y contentóse con un pajecillo barbilucio, sin otra hacienda ni nombre que el que le pudo dar de agradecido la amistad que guardó a su amigo. El gran cantor de su belleza, el famoso Ariosto, por no atreverse, o por no querer cantar lo que a esta señora le sucedió después de su ruin entrega, que no debieron ser cosas demasiadamente honestas, la dejó donde dijo:

Y como del Catay recibió el cetro, quizá otro cantará con mejor plectro.

Y, sin duda, que esto fue como profecía; que los poetas también se llaman vates, que quiere decir adivinos. Véese esta verdad clara, porque, después acá, un famoso poeta andaluz lloró y cantó sus lágrimas, y otro famoso y único poeta castellano cantó su hermosura.

-Dígame, señor don Quijote -dijo a esta sazón el barbero-, ¿no ha habido algún poeta que haya hecho alguna sátira a esa señora Angélica, entre tantos como la han alabado?

-Bien creo yo -respondió don Quijote-que si Sacripante o Roldán fueran poetas, que ya me hubieran jabonado a la doncella; porque es propio y natural de los poetas desdeñados y no admitidos de sus damas fingidas -o fingidas, en efeto, de aquéllos a quien ellos escogieron por señoras de sus pensamientos-, vengarse con sátiras y libelos (venganza, por cierto, indigna de pechos generosos), pero hasta agora no ha llegado a mi noticia ningún verso infamatorio contra la señora Angélica, que trujo revuelto el mundo.

-¡Milagro! -dijo el cura.

Y, en esto, oyeron que la ama y la sobrina, que ya habían dejado la conversación, daban grandes voces en el patio, y acudieron todos al ruido.

Capítulo II

Que trata de la notable pendencia que Sancho Panza tuvo con la sobrina y ama de don Quijote, con otros sujetos graciosos

CUENTA la historia que las voces que oyeron don Quijote, el cura y el barbero eran de la sobrina y ama, que las daban diciendo a Sancho Panza, que pugnaba por entrar a ver a don Quijote, y ellas le defendían la puerta:

-¿Qué quiere este mostrenco en esta casa? Idos a la vuestra, hermano, que vos sois, y no otro, el que destrae y sonsaca a mi señor, y le lleva por esos andurriales.

A lo que Sancho respondió:

-Ama de Satanás, el sonsacado, y el distraído, y el llevado por esos andurriales soy yo, que no tu amo; él me llevó por esos mundos, y vosotras os engañáis en la mitad del justo precio: él me sacó de mi casa con engañifas, prometiéndome una ínsula, que hasta ahora la espero.

-Malas ínsulas te ahoguen -respondió la sobrina-, Sancho maldito. Y ¿qué son ínsulas? ¿Es alguna cosa de comer, golosazo, comilón, que tú eres?

-No es de comer -replicó Sancho-, sino de gobernar y regir mejor que cuatro ciudades y que cuatro alcaldes de corte.

-Con todo eso -dijo el ama-, no entraréis acá, saco de maldades y costal de malicias. Id a gobernar vuestra casa y a labrar vuestros pegujares, y dejaos de pretender ínsulas ni ínsulos.

Grande gusto recibían el cura y el barbero de oír el coloquio de los tres; pero don Quijote, temeroso que Sancho se descosiese y desbuchase algún montón de maliciosas necedades, y tocase en puntos que no le estarían bien a su crédito, le llamó, y hizo a las dos que callasen y le dejasen entrar. Entró Sancho, y el cura y el barbero se despidieron de don Quijote, de cuya salud desesperaron, viendo cuán puesto estaba en sus desvariados pensamientos, y cuán embebido en la simplicidad de sus malandantes caballerías; y así, dijo el cura al barbero:

-Vos veréis, compadre, cómo, cuando menos lo pensemos, nuestro hidalgo sale otra vez a volar la ribera.

-No pongo yo duda en eso -respondió el barbero-, pero no me maravillo tanto de la locura del caballero como de la simplicidad del escudero, que tan creído tiene aquello de la ínsula, que creo que no se lo sacarán del casco cuantos desengaños pueden imaginarse.

-Dios los remedie -dijo el cura-, y estemos a la mira: veremos en lo que para esta máquina de disparates de tal caballero y de tal escudero, que parece que los forjaron a los dos en una misma turquesa, y que las locuras del señor, sin las necesidades del criado, no valían un ardite.

-Así es -dijo el barbero-, y holgara mucho saber qué tratarán ahora los dos.

-Yo seguro -respondió el cura- que la sobrina o el ama nos lo cuenta después, que no son de condición que dejarán de escucharlo.

En tanto, don Quijote se encerró con Sancho en su aposento; y, estando solos, le dijo:

-Mucho me pesa, Sancho, que hayas dicho y digas que yo fui el que te saqué de tus casillas, sabiendo que yo no me quedé en mis casas: juntos salimos, juntos fuimos y juntos peregrinamos; una misma fortuna y una misma suerte ha corrido por los dos: si a ti te mantearon una vez, a mí me han molido ciento, y esto es lo que te llevo de ventaja.

-Eso estaba puesto en razón -respondió Sancho-, porque, según vuestra merced dice, más anejas son a los caballeros andantes las desgracias que a sus escuderos.

-Engañaste, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-; según aquello, quando caput dolet, etcétera.

-No entiendo otra lengua que la mía -respondió Sancho.

-Quiero decir -dijo don Quijote- que, cuando la cabeza duele, todos los miembros duelen; y así, siendo yo tu amo y señor, soy tu cabeza, y tú mi parte, pues eres mi criado; y, por esta razón, el mal que a mí me toca, o tocare, a ti te ha de doler, y a mí el tuyo.

-Así había de ser -dijo Sancho-, pero cuando a mí me manteaban como a miembro, se estaba mi cabeza detrás de las bardas, mirándome volar por los aires, sin sentir dolor alguno; y, pues los miembros están obligados a dolerse del mal de la cabeza, había de estar obligada ella a dolerse dellos.

-¿Querrás tú decir agora, Sancho -respondió don Quijote-, que no me dolía yo cuando a ti te manteaban? Y si lo dices, no lo digas, ni lo pienses; pues más dolor sentía yo entonces en mi espíritu que tú en tu cuerpo. Pero dejemos esto aparte por agora, que tiempo habrá donde lo ponderemos y pongamos en su punto, y dime, Sancho amigo: ¿qué es lo que dicen de mí por ese lugar? ¿En qué opinión me tiene el vulgo, en qué los hidalgos y en qué los caballeros? ¿Qué dicen de mi valentía, qué de mis hazañas y qué de mi cortesía? ¿Qué se platica del asunto que he tomado de resucitar y volver al mundo la ya olvidada orden caballeresca? Finalmente, quiero, Sancho, me digas lo que acerca desto ha llegado a tus oídos; y esto me has de decir sin añadir al bien ni quitar al mal cosa alguna, que de los vasallos leales es decir la verdad a sus señores en su ser y figura propia, sin que la adulación la acreciente o otro vano respeto la disminuya; y quiero que sepas, Sancho, que si a los oídos de los príncipes llegase la verdad desnuda, sin los vestidos de la lisonja, otros siglos correrían, otras edades serían tenidas por más de hierro que la nuestra, que entiendo que, de las que ahora se usan, es la dorada. Sírdate este advertimiento, Sancho, para que discreta y bienintencionadamente pongas en mis oídos la verdad de las cosas que supieres de lo que te he preguntado.

-Eso haré yo de muy buena gana, señor mío -respondió Sancho-, con condición que vuestra merced no se ha de enojar de lo que dijere, pues quiere que lo diga en cueros, sin vestirlo de otras ropas de aquellas con que llegaron a mi noticia.

-En ninguna manera me enojaré -respondió don Quijote-. Bien puedes, Sancho, hablar libremente y sin rodeo alguno.

-Pues lo primero que digo -dijo-, es que el vulgo tiene a vuestra merced por grandísimo loco, y a mí por no menos mentecato. Los hidalgos dicen que, no conteniéndose vuestra merced en los límites de la hidalguía, se ha puesto don y se ha arremetido a caballero con cuatro cepas y dos yugadas de tierra y con un trapo atrás y otro adelante. Dicen los caballeros que no querrían que los hidalgos se opusiesen a ellos, especialmente aquellos hidalgos escuderiles que dan humo a los zapatos y toman los puntos de las medias negras con seda verde.

-Eso -dijo don Quijote- no tiene que ver conmigo, pues ando siempre bien vestido, y jamás remendado; roto, bien podría ser; y el roto, más de las armas que del tiempo.

-En lo que toca -prosiguió Sancho- a la valentía, cortesía, hazañas y asunto de vuestra merced, hay diferentes opiniones; unos dicen: «loco, pero gracioso»; otros, «valiente, pero desgraciado»; otros, «cortés, pero impertinente»; y por aquí van discurriendo en tantas cosas, que ni a vuestra merced ni a mí nos dejan hueso sano.

-Mira, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-: dondequiera que está la virtud en eminente grado, es perseguida. Pocos o ninguno de los famosos varones que pasaron dejó de ser calumniado de la malicia. Julio César, animosísimo, prudentísimo y valentísimo capitán, fue notado de ambicioso y algún tanto no limpio, ni en sus vestidos ni en sus costumbres. Alejandro, a quien sus hazañas le alcanzaron el renombre de Magno, dicen dél que tuvo sus ciertos puntos de borracho. De Hércules, el de los muchos trabajos, se cuenta que fue lascivo y muelle. De don Galaor, hermano de Amadís de Gaula, se murmura que fue más que demasíadamente rijoso; y de su hermano, que fue llorón. Así que, ¡oh Sancho!, entre las tantas calumnias de buenos, bien pueden pasar las mías, como no sean más de las que has dicho.

-Pues, ¿hay más? -preguntó don Quijote.

-Aún la cola falta por desollar -dijo Sancho-. Lo de hasta aquí son tortas y pan pintado; mas si vuestra merced quiere saber todo lo que hay acerca de las caloñas que le ponen, yo le traeré aquí luego al momento quien se las diga todas, sin que les falte una meaja; que anoche llegó el hijo de Bartolomé Carrasco, que viene de estudiar de Salamanca, hecho bachiller, y, yéndole yo a dar la bienvenida, me dijo que andaba ya en libros la historia de vuestra merced, con nombre del Ingenioso Hidalgo don Quijote de la Mancha; y dice que me mientan a mí en ella con mi mismo nombre de Sancho Panza, y a la señora Dulcinea del Toboso, con otras cosas que pasamos nosotros a solas, que me hice cruces de espantado cómo las pudo saber el historiador que las escribió.

-Yo te aseguro, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, que debe de ser algún sabio encantador el autor de nuestra historia; que a los tales no se les encubre nada de lo que quieren escribir.

-Y ¿cómo -dijo Sancho-si era sabio y encantador, pues (según dice el bachiller Sansón Carrasco, que así se llama el que dicho tengo) que el autor de la historia se llama Cide Hamete Berenjena!

-Ese nombre es de moro -respondió don Quijote.

-Así será -respondió Sancho-, porque por la mayor parte he oído decir que los moros son amigos de berenjenas.

-Tú debes, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, errarte en el sobrenombre de ese Cide, que en árabe quiere decir señor.

-Bien podría ser -replicó Sancho-, mas, si vuestra merced gusta que yo le haga venir aquí, iré por él en volandas.

-Harásme mucho placer, amigo -dijo don Quijote-, que me tiene suspenso lo que me has dicho, y no comeré bocado que bien me sepa hasta ser informado de todo.

-Pues yo voy por él -respondió Sancho.

Y, dejando a su señor, se fue a buscar al bachiller, con el cual volvió de allí a poco espacio, y entre los tres pasaron un preciosísimo coloquio.

Capítulo III

Del ridículo razonamiento que pasó entre don Quijote, Sancho Panza y el bachiller Sansón Carrasco

PENSATIVO además quedó don Quijote, esperando al bachiller Carrasco, de quien esperaba oír las nuevas de sí mismo puestas en libro, como había dicho Sancho; y no se podía persuadir a que tal historia hubiese, pues aún no estaba enjuta en la cuchilla de su espada la sangre de los enemigos que había muerto, y ya querían que anduviesen en estampa sus altas caballerías. Con todo eso, imaginó que algún sabio, o ya amigo o enemigo, por arte de encantamento las habrá dado a la estampa: si amigo, para engrandecerlas y levantarlas sobre las más señaladas de caballero andante; si enemigo, para aniquilarlas y ponerlas debajo de las más viles que de algún vil escudero se hubiesen escrito, puesto - decía entre sí-que nunca hazañas de escuderos se escribieron; y cuando fuese verdad que la tal historia hubiese, siendo de caballero andante, por fuerza había de ser grandilocua, alta, insigne, magnífica y verdadera.

Con esto se consoló algún tanto, pero desconsolóle pensar que su autor era moro, según aquel nombre de Cide; y de los moros no se podía esperar verdad alguna, porque todos son embelecadores, falsarios y quimeristas. Temíase no hubiese tratado sus amores con alguna indecencia, que redundase en menoscabo y perjuicio de la honestidad de su señora Dulcinea del Toboso; deseaba que hubiese declarado su fidelidad y el decoro que siempre la había guardado, menospreciando reinas, emperatrices y doncellas de todas calidades, teniendo a raya los ímpetus de los naturales movimientos; y así, envuelto y revuelto en estas y otras muchas imaginaciones, le hallaron Sancho y Carrasco, a quien don Quijote recibió con mucha cortesía.

Era el bachiller, aunque se llamaba Sansón, no muy grande de cuerpo, aunque muy gran socarrón, de color macilenta, pero de muy buen entendimiento; tendría hasta veinte y cuatro años, carirredondo, de nariz chata y de boca grande, señales todas de ser de condición maliciosa y amigo de donaires y de burlas, como lo mostró en viendo a don Quijote, poniéndose delante dél de rodillas, diciéndole:

-Déme vuestra grandeza las manos, señor don Quijote de la Mancha; que, por el hábito de San Pedro que visto, aunque no tengo otras órdenes que las cuatro primeras, que es vuestra merced uno de los más famosos caballeros andantes que ha habido, ni aun habrá, en toda la redondez de la tierra. Bien haya Cide Hamete Benengeli, que la historia de vuestras grandezas dejó escritas, y rebién haya el curioso que tuvo cuidado de hacerlas traducir de arábigo en nuestro vulgar castellano, para universal entretenimiento de las gentes.

Hízole levantar don Quijote y dijo:

-Desa manera, ¿verdad es que hay historia mía, y que fue moro y sabio el que la compuso?

-Es tan verdad, señor -dijo Sansón-, que tengo para mí que el día de hoy están impresos más de doce mil libros de la tal historia; si no, dígalo Portugal, Barcelona y Valencia, donde se han impreso; y aun hay fama que se está imprimiendo en Amberes, y a mí se me trasluce que no ha de haber nación ni lengua donde no se traduzga.

-Una de las cosas -dijo a esta sazón don Quijote- que más debe de dar contento a un hombre virtuoso y eminente es verse, viviendo, andar con buen nombre por las lenguas de las gentes, impreso y en stampa. Dije con buen nombre porque, siendo al contrario, ninguna muerte se le igualará.

-Si por buena fama y si por buen nombre va -dijo el bachiller-, solo vuestra merced lleva la palma a todos los caballeros andantes; porque el moro en su lengua y el cristiano en la suya tuvieron cuidado de pintarnos muy al vivo la gallardía de vuestra merced, el ánimo grande en acometer los peligros, la paciencia en las adversidades y el sufrimiento, así en las desgracias como en las heridas, la honestidad y continencia en los amores tan platónicos de vuestra merced y de mi señora doña Dulcinea del Toboso.

-Nunca -dijo a este punto Sancho Panza- he oído llamar con don a mi señora Dulcinea, sino solamente la señora Dulcinea del Toboso, y ya en esto anda errada la historia.

-No es objeción de importancia ésa -respondió Carrasco.

-No, por cierto -respondió don Quijote-; pero dígame vuestra merced, señor bachiller: ¿qué hazañas mías son las que más se ponderan en esa historia?

-En eso -respondió el bachiller-, hay diferentes opiniones, como hay diferentes gustos: unos se atienen a la aventura de los molinos de viento, que a vuestra merced le parecieron Briareos y gigantes; otros, a la de los batanes; éste, a la descripción de los dos ejércitos, que después parecieron ser dos manadas de carneros; aquél encarece la del muerto que llevaban a enterrar a Segovia; uno dice que a todas se aventaja la de la libertad de los galeotes; otro, que ninguna iguala a la de los dos gigantes benitos, con la pendencia del valeroso vizcaíno.

-Dígame, señor bachiller -dijo a esta sazón Sancho-: ¿entra ahí la aventura de los yangüeses, cuando a nuestro buen Rocinante se le antojó pedir cotufas en el golfo?

-No se le quedó nada -respondió Sansón-al sabio en el tintero: todo lo dice y todo lo apunta, hasta lo de las cabriolas que el buen Sancho hizo en la manta.

-En la manta no hice yo cabriolas -respondió Sancho-; en el aire sí, y aun más de las que yo quisiera.

-A lo que yo imagino -dijo don Quijote-, no hay historia humana en el mundo que no tenga sus altibajos, especialmente las que tratan de caballerías, las cuales nunca pueden estar llenas de prósperos sucesos.

-Con todo eso -respondió el bachiller-, dicen algunos que han leído la historia que se holgaran se les hubiera olvidado a los autores della algunos de los infinitos palos que en diferentes encuentros dieron al señor don Quijote.

-Ahí entra la verdad de la historia -dijo Sancho.

-También pudieran callarlos por equidad -dijo don Quijote-, pues las acciones que ni mudan ni alteran la verdad de la historia no hay para qué escribirlas, si han de redundar en menosprecio del señor de la historia. A fee que no fue tan piadoso Eneas como Virgilio le pinta, ni tan prudente Ulises como le describe Homero.

-Así es -replicó Sansón-, pero uno es escribir como poeta y otro como historiador: el poeta puede contar, o cantar las cosas, no como fueron, sino como debían ser; y el historiador las ha de escribir, no como debían ser, sino como fueron, sin añadir ni quitar a la verdad cosa alguna.

-Pues si es que se anda a decir verdades ese señor moro -dijo Sancho-, a buen seguro que entre los palos de mi señor se hallen los míos; porque nunca a su merced le tomaron la medida de las espaldas que no me la tomasen a mí de todo el cuerpo; pero no hay de qué maravillarme, pues, como dice el mismo señor mío, del dolor de la cabeza han de participar los miembros.

-Socarrón sois, Sancho -respondió don Quijote-. A fee que no os falta memoria cuando vos queréis tenerla.

-Cuando yo quisiese olvidarme de los garrotazos que me han dado -dijo Sancho-, no lo consentirán los cardenales, que aún se están frescos en las costillas.

-Callad, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, y no interrumpáis al señor bachiller, a quien suplico pase adelante en decirme lo que se dice de mí en la referida historia.

-Y de mí -dijo Sancho-, que también dicen que soy yo uno de los principales presonajes della.

-Personajes que no presonajes, Sancho amigo -dijo Sansón.

-¿Otro reprochador de voquibles tenemos? -dijo Sancho-. Pues ándense a eso, y no acabaremos en toda la vida.

-Mala me la dé Dios, Sancho -respondió el bachiller-, si no sois vos la segunda persona de la historia; y que hay tal, que precia más oíros hablar a vos que al más pintado de toda ella, puesto que también hay quien diga que anduvistes demasiadamente de crédulo en creer que podía ser verdad el gobierno de aquella ínsula, ofrecida por el señor don Quijote, que está presente.

-Aún hay sol en las bardas -dijo don Quijote-, y, mientras más fuere entrando en edad Sancho, con la experiencia que dan los años, estará más idóneo y más hábil para ser gobernador que no está agora.

-Por Dios, señor -dijo Sancho-, la isla que yo no gobernase con los años que tengo, no la gobernaré con los años de Matusalén. El daño está en que la dicha ínsula se entretiene, no sé dónde, y no en faltarme a mí el caletre para gobernarla.

-Encomendadlo a Dios, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, que todo se hará bien, y quizá mejor de lo que vos pensáis; que no se mueve la hoja en el árbol sin la voluntad de Dios.

-Así es verdad -dijo Sansón-, que si Dios quiere, no le faltarán a Sancho mil islas que gobernar, cuanto más una.

-Gobernador he visto por ahí -dijo Sancho-que, a mi parecer, no llegan a la suela de mi zapato, y, con todo eso, los llaman señoría, y se sirven con plata.

-Ésos no son gobernadores de ínsulas -replicó Sansón-, sino de otros gobiernos más manuales; que los que gobiernan ínsulas, por lo menos han de saber gramática.

-Con la grama bien me avendría yo -dijo Sancho-, pero con la tica, ni me tiro ni me pago, porque no la entiendo. Pero, dejando esto del gobierno en las manos de Dios, que me eche a las partes donde más de mí se sirva, digo, señor bachiller Sansón Carrasco, que infinitamente me ha dado gusto que el autor de la historia haya hablado de mí de manera que no enfadan las cosas que de mí se cuentan; que a fe de buen escudero que si hubiera dicho de mí cosas que no fueran muy de cristiano viejo, como soy, que nos habían de oír los sordos.

-Eso fuera hacer milagros -respondió Sansón.

-Milagros o no milagros -dijo Sancho-, cada uno mire cómo habla o cómo escribe de las presonas, y no ponga a troche moche lo primero que le viene al magín.

-Una de las tachas que ponen a la tal historia -dijo el bachiller-es que su autor puso en ella una novela intitulada El curioso impertinente; no por mala ni por mal razonada, sino por no ser de aquel lugar, ni tiene que ver con la historia de su merced del señor don Quijote.

-Yo apostaré -replicó Sancho-que ha mezclado el hideperro berzas con capachos.

-Ahora digo -dijo don Quijote-que no ha sido sabio el autor de mi historia, sino algún ignorante hablador, que, a tienta y sin algún discurso, se puso a escribirla, salga lo que saliere, como hacía Orbaneja, el pintor de Úbeda, al cual preguntándole qué pintaba, respondió: «Lo que saliere». Tal vez pintaba un gallo, de tal suerte y tan mal parecido, que era menester que con letras góticas escribiese junto a él: «Éste es gallo». Y así debe de ser de mi historia, que tendrá necesidad de comento para entenderla.

-Eso no -respondió Sansón-, porque es tan clara, que no hay cosa que dificultar en ella: los niños la manosean, los mozos la leen, los hombres la entienden y los viejos la celebran; y, finalmente, es tan trillada y tan leída y tan sabida de todo género de gentes, que, apenas han visto algún rocín flaco, cuando dicen: «Allí va Rocinante». Y los que más se han dado a su letura son los pajes: no hay antecámara de señor donde no se halle un Don Quijote: unos le toman si otros le dejan; éstos le embisten y aquéllos le piden. Finalmente, la tal historia es del más gustoso y menos perjudicial entretenimiento que hasta agora se haya visto, porque en toda ella no se descubre, ni por semejas, una palabra deshonesto ni un pensamiento menos que católico.

-A escribir de otra suerte -dijo don Quijote-, no fuera escribir verdades, sino mentiras; y los historiadores que de mentiras se valen habían de ser quemados, como los que hacen moneda falsa; y no sé yo qué le movió al autor a valerse de novelas y cuentos ajenos, habiendo tanto que escribir en los míos: sin duda se debió de atener al refrán: «De paja y de heno...», etcétera. Pues en verdad que en sólo manifestar mis pensamientos, mis suspiros, mis lágrimas, mis buenos deseos y mis acometimientos pudiera hacer un volumen mayor, o tan grande que el que pueden hacer todas las obras del Tostado. En efeto, lo que yo alcanzo, señor bachiller, es que para componer historias y libros, de cualquier suerte que sean, es menester un gran juicio y un maduro entendimiento. Decir gracias y escribir donaires es de grandes ingenios: la más discreta figura de la comedia es la del bobo, porque no lo ha de ser el que quiere dar a entender que es simple. La historia es como cosa sagrada; porque ha de ser verdadera, y donde está la verdad está Dios, en cuanto a verdad; pero, no obstante esto, hay algunos que así componen y arrojan libros de sí como si fuesen buñuelos.

-No hay libro tan malo -dijo el bachiller- que no tenga algo bueno.

-No hay duda en eso -replicó don Quijote-; pero muchas veces acontece que los que tenían méritamente granjeada y alcanzada gran fama por sus escritos, en dándolos a la estampa, la perdieron del todo, o la menoscabaron en algo.

-La causa deso es -dijo Sansón- que, como las obras impresas se miran despacio, fácilmente se veen sus faltas, y tanto más se escudriñan cuanto es mayor la fama del que las compuso. Los hombres famosos por sus ingenios, los grandes poetas, los ilustres historiadores, siempre, o las más veces, son envidiados de aquellos que tienen por gusto y por particular entretenimiento juzgar los escritos ajenos, sin haber dado algunos propios a la luz del mundo.

-Eso no es de maravillar -dijo don Quijote-, porque muchos teólogos hay que no son buenos para el púlpito, y son bonísimos para conocer las faltas o sobras de los que predicán.

-Todo eso es así, señor don Quijote -dijo Carrasco-, pero quisiera yo que los tales censuradores fueran más misericordiosos y menos escrupulosos, sin atenerse a los átomos del sol clarísimo de la obra de que murmuran; que si aliquando bonus dormitat Homerus, consideren lo mucho que estuvo despierto, por dar la luz de su obra con la menos sombra que pudiese; y quizá podría ser que lo que a ellos les parece mal fuesen lunares, que a las veces acrecientan la hermosura del rostro que los tiene; y así, digo que es grandísimo el riesgo a que se pone el que imprime un libro, siendo de toda imposibilidad imposible componerle tal, que satisfaga y contente a todos los que le leyerén.

-El que de mí trata -dijo don Quijote-, a pocos habrá contentado.

-Antes es al revés; que, como de stultorum infinitus est numerus, infinitos son los que han gustado de la tal historia; y algunos han puesto falta y dolo en la memoria del autor, pues se le olvida de contar quién fue el ladrón que hurtó el rucio a Sancho, que allí no se declara, y sólo se infiere de lo escrito que se le hurtaron, y de allí a poco le vemos a caballo sobre el mismo jumento, sin haber parecido. También dicen que se le olvidó poner lo que Sancho hizo de aquellos cien escudos que halló en la maleta en Sierra Morena, que nunca más los nombra, y hay muchos que desean saber qué hizo dellos, o en qué los gastó, que es uno de los puntos sustanciales que faltan en la obra.

Sancho respondió:

-Yo, señor Sansón, no estoy ahora para ponerme en cuentas ni cuentos; que me ha tomado un desmayo de estómago, que si no le reparo con dos tragos de lo añejo, me pondrá en la espina de Santa Lucía. En casa lo tengo, mi oíslo me aguarda; en acabando de comer, daré la vuelta, y satisfaré a vuestra merced y a todo el mundo de lo que preguntar quisieren, así de la pérdida del jumento como del gasto de los cien escudos.

Y, sin esperar respuesta ni decir otra palabra, se fue a su casa.

Don Quijote pidió y rogó al bachiller se quedase a hacer penitencia con él. Tuvo el bachiller el envite: quedóse, añadióse al ordinario un par de pichones, tratóse en la mesa de caballerías, siguióle el humor Carrasco, acabóse el banquete, durmieron la siesta, volvió Sancho y renovóse la plática pasada.

Capítulo IV

Donde Sancho Panza satisface al bachiller Sansón Carrasco de sus dudas y preguntas, con otros sucesos dignos de saberse y de contarse

VOLVIÓ Sancho a casa de don Quijote, y, volviendo al pasado razonamiento, dijo:

-A lo que el señor Sansón dijo que se deseaba saber quién, o cómo, o cuándo se me hurtó el jumento, respondiéndome digo que la noche misma que, huyendo de la Santa Hermandad, nos entramos en Sierra Morena, después de la aventura sin ventura de los galeotes y de la del difunto que llevaban a Segovia, mi señor y yo nos metimos entre una espesura, adonde mi señor arrimado a su lanza, y yo sobre mi rucio, molidos y cansados de las pasadas refriegas, nos pusimos a dormir como si fuera sobre cuatro colchones de pluma; especialmente yo dormí con tan pesado sueño, que quienquiera que fue tuvo lugar de llegar y suspenderme sobre cuatro estacas que puso a los cuatro lados de la albarda, de manera que me dejó a caballo sobre ella, y me sacó debajo de mí al rucio, sin que yo lo sintiese.

-Eso es cosa fácil, y no acontecimiento nuevo, que lo mesmo le sucedió a Sacripante cuando, estando en el cerco de Albraca, con esa misma invención le sacó el caballo de entre las piernas aquel famoso ladrón llamado Brunelo.

-Amaneció -prosiguió Sancho-, y, apenas me hube estremecido, cuando, faltando las estacas, di conmigo en el suelo una gran caída; miré por el jumento, y no le vi; acudieronme lágrimas a los ojos, y hice una lamentación, que si no la puso el autor de nuestra historia, puede hacer cuenta que no puso cosa buena. Al cabo de no sé cuántos días, viniendo con la señora princesa Micomicona, conocí mi asno, y que venía sobre él en hábito de gitano aquel Ginés de Pasamonte, aquel embustero y grandísimo maleador que quitamos mi señor y yo de la cadena.

-No está en eso el yerro -replicó Sansón-, sino en que, antes de haber parecido el jumento, dice el autor que iba a caballo Sancho en el mesmo rucio.

-A eso -dijo Sancho-, no sé qué responder, sino que el historiador se engañó, o ya sería descuido del impresor.

-Así es, sin duda -dijo Sansón-; pero, ¿qué se hicieron los cien escudos?; ¿deshicieronse?

Respondió Sancho:

-Yo los gasté en pro de mi persona y de la de mi mujer, y de mis hijos, y ellos han sido causa de que mi mujer lleve en paciencia los caminos y carreras que he andado sirviendo a mi señor don Quijote; que si, al cabo de tanto tiempo, volviera sin blanca y sin el jumento a mi casa, negra ventura me esperaba; y si hay más que saber de mí, aquí estoy, que responderé al mismo rey en presona, y nadie tiene para qué meterse en si truje o no truje, si gasté o no gasté; que si los palos que me dieron en estos viajes se hubieran de pagar a dinero, aunque no se tasaran sino a cuatro maravedís cada uno, en otros cien escudos no había para pagarme la mitad; y cada uno meta la mano en su pecho, y no se ponga a juzgar lo blanco por negro y lo negro por blanco; que cada uno es como Dios le hizo, y aun peor muchas veces.

-Yo tendré cuidado -dijo Carrasco-de acusar al autor de la historia que si otra vez la imprimiere, no se le olvide esto que el buen Sancho ha dicho, que será realzarla un buen coto más de lo que ella se está.

-¿Hay otra cosa que enmendar en esa leyenda, señor bachiller? -preguntó don Quijote.

-Sí debe de haber -respondió él-, pero ninguna debe de ser de la importancia de las ya referidas.

-Y por ventura -dijo don Quijote-, ¿promete el autor segunda parte?

-Sí promete -respondió Sansón-, pero dice que no ha hallado ni sabe quién la tiene, y así, estamos en duda si saldrá o no; y así por esto como porque algunos dicen: «Nunca segundas partes fueron buenas», y otros: «De las cosas de don Quijote bastan las escritas», se duda que no ha de haber segunda parte; aunque algunos que son más joviales que saturninos dicen: «Vengan más qui jotadas: embista don Quijote y hable Sancho Panza, y sea lo que fuere, que con eso nos contentamos».

-Y ¿a qué se atiene el autor?

-A que -respondió Sansón-, en hallando que halle la historia, que él va buscando con extraordinarias diligencias, la dará luego a la estampa, llevado más del interés que de darla se le sigue que de otra alabanza alguna.

A lo que dijo Sancho:

-¿Al dinero y al interés mira el autor? Maravilla será que acierte, porque no hará sino harbar, harbar, como sastre en vísperas de pascuas, y las obras que se hacen apriesa nunca se acaban con la perfección que requieren. Atienda ese señor moro, o lo que es, a mirar lo que hace; que yo y mi señor le daremos tanto ripio a la mano en materia de aventuras y de sucesos diferentes, que pueda componer no sólo segunda parte, sino ciento. Debe de pensar el buen hombre, sin duda, que nos dormimos aquí en las pajas; pues ténganos el pie al herrar, y verá del que cosqueamos. Lo que yo sé decir es que si mi señor tomase mi consejo, ya habíamos de estar en esas campañas deshaciendo agravios y enderezando tuertos, como es uso y costumbre de los buenos andantes caballeros.

No había bien acabado de decir estas razones Sancho, cuando llegaron a sus oídos relinchos de Rocinante; los cuales relinchos tomó don Quijote por felicísimo agüero, y determinó de hacer de allí a tres o cuatro días otra salida; y, declarando su intento al bachiller, le pidió consejo por qué parte comenzaría su jornada; el cual le respondió que era su parecer que fuese al reino de Aragón y a la ciudad de Zaragoza, adonde, de allí a pocos días, se habían de hacer unas solenísimas justas por la fiesta de San Jorge, en las cuales podría ganar fama sobre todos los caballeros aragoneses, que sería ganarla sobre todos los del mundo. Alabóle ser honradísima y valentísima su determinación, y advirtióle que anduviese más atentado en acometer los peligros, a causa que su vida no era suya, sino de todos aquellos que le habían de menester para que los amparase y socorriese en sus desventuras.

-Deso es lo que yo reniego, señor Sansón -dijo a este punto Sancho-, que así acomete mi señor a cien hombres armados como un muchacho goloso a media docena de badeas. ¡Cuerpo del mundo, señor bachiller! Sí, que tiempos hay de acometer y tiempos de retirar; sí, no ha de ser todo «¡Santiago, y cierra, España!» Y más, que yo he oído decir, y creo que a mi señor mismo, si mal no me acuerdo, que en los extremos de cobarde y de temerario está el medio de la valentía; y si esto es así, no quiero que huya sin tener para qué, ni que acometa cuando la demasía pide otra cosa. Pero, sobre todo, aviso a mi señor que si me ha de llevar consigo, ha de ser con condición que él se lo ha de batallar todo, y que yo no he de estar obligado a otra cosa que a mirar por su persona en lo que tocara a su limpieza y a su regalo; que en esto yo le bailaré el agua delante; pero pensar que tengo de poner mano a la espada, aunque sea contra villanos malandrines de hacha y capellina, es pensar en lo escusado. Yo, señor Sansón, no pienso granjear fama de valiente, sino del mejor y más leal escudero que jamás sirvió a caballero andante; y si mi señor don Quijote, obligado de mis muchos y buenos servicios, quisiere darme alguna ínsula de las muchas que su merced dice que se ha de topar por ahí, recibiré mucha merced en ello; y cuando no me la diere, nacido soy, y no ha de vivir el hombre en hoto de otro sino de Dios; y más, que tan bien, y aun quizá mejor, me sabrá el pan desgobernado que siendo gobernador; y ¿sé yo por ventura si en esos gobiernos me tiene aparejada el diablo alguna zancadilla donde tropiece y caiga y me haga las muelas? Sancho nací, y Sancho pienso morir; pero si con todo esto, de buenas a buenas, sin mucha solicitud y sin mucho riesgo, me deparase el cielo alguna ínsula, o otra cosa semejante, no soy tan necio que la desechase; que también se dice:

-Vos, hermano Sancho -dijo Carrasco-, habéis hablado como un catedrático; pero, con todo eso, confiad en Dios y en el señor don Quijote, que os ha de dar un reino, no que una ínsula.

-Tanto es lo de más como lo de menos -respondió Sancho-; aunque sé decir al señor Carrasco que no echara mi señor el reino que me diera en saco roto, que yo he tomado el pulso a mí mismo, y me hallo con salud para regir reinos y gobernar ínsulas, y esto ya otras veces lo he dicho a mi señor.

-Mirad, Sancho -dijo Sansón-, que los oficios mudan las costumbres, y podría ser que viéndoos gobernador no conociédeses a la madre que os parió.

-Eso allá se ha de entender -respondió Sancho-con los que nacieron en las malvas, y no con los que tienen sobre el alma cuatro dedos de enjundia de cristianos viejos, como yo los tengo. ¡No, sino llegaos a mi condición, que sabrá usar de desagradecimiento con alguno!

-Dios lo haga -dijo don Quijote-, y ello dirá cuando el gobierno venga; que ya me parece que le trayo entre los ojos.

Dicho esto, rogó al bachiller que, si era poeta, le hiciese merced de componerle unos versos que tratasen de la despedida que pensaba hacer de su señora Dulcinea del Toboso, y que advirtiese que en el principio de cada verso había de poner una letra de su nombre, de manera que al fin de los versos, juntando las primeras letras, se leyese: Dulcinea del Toboso.

El bachiller respondió que, puesto que él no era de los famosos poetas que había en España, que decían que no eran sino tres y medio, que no dejaría de componer los tales metros, aunque hallaba una dificultad grande en su composición, a causa que las letras que contenían el nombre eran diez y siete; y que si hacía cuatro castellanas de a cuatro versos, sobrara una letra; y si de a cinco, a quien llaman décimas o redondillas, faltaban tres letras; pero, con todo eso, procuraría embeber una letra lo mejor que pudiese, de manera que en las cuatro castellanas se incluyese el nombre de Dulcinea del Toboso.

-Ha de ser así en todo caso -dijo don Quijote-; que si allí no va el nombre patente y de manifiesto, no hay mujer que crea que para ella se hicieron los metros.

Quedaron en esto y en que la partida sería de allí a ocho días. Encargó don Quijote al bachiller la tuviese secreta, especialmente al cura y a maese Nicolás, y a su sobrina y al ama, porque no estorbasen su honrada y valerosa determinación. Todo lo prometió Carrasco. Con esto se despidió, encargando a don Quijote que de todos sus buenos o malos sucesos le avisase, habiendo comodidad; y así, se despidieron, y Sancho fue a poner en orden lo necesario

Capítulo V

De la discreta y graciosa plática que pasó entre Sancho Panza y su mujer Teresa Panza, y otros sucesos dignos de felice recordación

(LLEGANDO a escribir el traductor desta historia este quinto capítulo, dice que le tiene por apócrifo, porque en él habla Sancho Panza con otro estilo del que se podía prometer de su corto ingenio, y dice cosas tan sutiles, que no tiene por posible que él las supiese; pero que no quiso dejar de traducirlo, por cumplir con lo que a su oficio debía; y así, prosiguió diciendo:)

Llegó Sancho a su casa tan regocijado y alegre, que su mujer conoció su alegría a tiro de ballesta; tanto, que la obligó a preguntarle:

-¿Qué traés, Sancho amigo, que tan alegre venís?

A lo que él respondió:

-Mujer mía, si Dios quisiera, bien me holgara yo de no estar tan contento como nuestro.

-No os entiendo, marido -replicó ella-, y no sé qué queréis decir en eso de que os holgáredes, si Dios quisiera, de no estar contento; que, maguer tonta, no sé yo quién recibe gusto de no tenerle.

-Mirad, Teresa -respondió Sancho-: yo estoy alegre porque tengo determinado de volver a servir a mi amo don Quijote, el cual quiere la vez tercera salir a buscar las aventuras; y yo vuelvo a salir con él, porque lo quiere así mi necesidad, junto con la esperanza, que me alegra, de pensar si podré hallar otros cien escudos como los ya gastados, puesto que me entristece el haberme de apartar de ti y de mis hijos; y si Dios quisiera darme de comer a pie enjuto y en mi casa, sin traerme por vericuetos y encrucijadas, pues lo podía hacer a poca costa y no más de quererlo, claro está que mi alegría fuera más firme y valedera, pues que la que tengo va mezclada con la tristeza del dejarte; así que, dije bien que holgara, si Dios quisiera, de no estar contento.

-Mirad, Sancho -replicó Teresa-: después que os hicistes miembro de caballero andante habláis de tan rodeada manera, que no hay quien os entienda.

-Basta que me entienda Dios, mujer -respondió Sancho-, que Él es el entendedor de todas las cosas, y quédese esto aquí; y advertid, hermana, que os conviene tener cuenta estos tres días con el rucio, de manera que esté para armas tomar: dobladle los piensos, requerid la albarda y las demás jarcias, porque no vamos a bodas, sino a rodear el mundo, y a tener dares y tomares con gigantes, con endriagos y con vestiglos, y a oír silbos, rugidos, bramidos y baladros; y aun todo esto fuera flores de cantueso si no tuviéramos que entender con yangüeses y con moros encantados.

-Bien creo yo, marido -replicó Teresa-, que los escuderos andantes no comen el pan de balde; y así, quedaré rogando a Nuestro Señor os saque presto de tanta mala ventura.

-Yo os digo, mujer -respondió Sancho-, que si no pensase antes de mucho tiempo verme gobernador de una ínsula, aquí me caería muerto.

-Eso no, marido mío -dijo Teresa-: viva la gallina, aunque sea con su pepita; vivid vos, y llévase el diablo cuantos gobiernos hay en el mundo; sin gobierno salistes del vientre de vuestra madre, sin gobierno habéis vivido hasta ahora, y sin gobierno os iréis, o os llevarán, a la sepultura cuando Dios fuere servido. Como ésos hay en el mundo que viven sin gobierno, y no por eso dejan de vivir y de ser contados en el número de las gentes. La mejor salsa del mundo es la hambre; y como ésta no falta a los pobres, siempre comen con gusto. Pero mirad, Sancho: si por ventura os viéredes con algún gobierno, no os olvidéis de mí y de vuestros hijos. Advertid que Sanchico tiene ya quince años cabales, y es razón que vaya a la escuela, si es que su tío el abad le ha de dejar hecho de la Iglesia. Mirad también que Mari Sancha, vuestra hija, no se morirá si la casamos; que me va dando barruntos que desea tanto tener marido como vos deseáis veros con gobierno; y, en fin en fin, mejor parece la hija mal casada que bien abarraganada.

-A buena fe -respondió Sancho- que si Dios me llega a tener algo qué de gobierno, que tengo de casar, mujer mía, a Mari Sancha tan altamente que no la alcancen sino con llamarla señora.

-Eso no, Sancho -respondió Teresa-: casadla con su igual, que es lo más acertado; que si de los zuecos la sacáis a chapines, y de saya parda de catorceno a verdugado y saboyanas de seda, y de una Marica y un tú a una doña tal y señoría, no se ha de hallar la mochacha, y a cada paso ha de caer en mil faltas, descubriendo la hilaza de su tela basta y grosera.

-Calla, boba -dijo Sancho-, que todo será usarlo dos o tres años; que después le vendrá el señorío y la gravedad como de molde; y cuando no, ¿qué importa? Séase ella señoría, y venga lo que viniere.

-Medíos, Sancho, con vuestro estado -respondió Teresa-; no os queráis alzar a mayores, y advertid al refrán que dice: «Al hijo de tu vecino, límpiale las narices y métele en tu casa». ¡Por cierto, que sería gentil cosa casar a nuestra María con un condazo, o con caballerote que, cuando se le antojase, la pusiese como nueva, llamándola de villana, hija del destripaterrones y de la pelarruecas! ¡No en mis días, marido! ¡Para eso, por cierto, he criado yo a mi hija! Traed vos dineros, Sancho, y el casarla dejadlo a mi cargo; que ahí está Lope Tocho, el hijo de Juan Tocho, mozo rollizo y sano, y que le conocemos, y sé que no mira de mal ojo a la mochacha; y con éste, que es nuestro igual, estará bien casada, y le tendremos siempre a nuestros ojos, y seremos todos unos, padres y hijos, nietos y yernos, y andará la paz y la bendición de Dios entre todos nosotros; y no casármela vos ahora en esas cortes y en esos palacios grandes, adonde ni a ella la entiendan, ni ella se entienda.

-Ven acá, bestia y mujer de Barrabás -replicó Sancho-: ¿por qué quieres tú ahora, sin qué ni para qué, estorbarme que no case a mi hija con quien me dé nietos que se llamen señoría? Mira, Teresa: siempre he oído decir a mis mayores que el que no sabe gozar de la ventura cuando le viene, que no se debe quejar si se le pasa. Y no sería bien que ahora, que está llamando a nuestra puerta, se la cerremos; dejémonos llevar deste viento favorable que nos sopla.

(Por este modo de hablar, y por lo que más abajo dice Sancho, dijo el tradutor desta historia que tenía por apócrifo este capítulo).

-¿No te parece, animalia -prosiguió Sancho-, que será bien dar con mi cuerpo en algún gobierno provechoso que nos saque el pie del lodo? Y cásese a Mari Sancha con quien yo quisiere, y verás cómo te llaman a ti doña Teresa Panza, y te sientas en la iglesia sobre alcatifa, almohadas y arambeles, a pesar y despecho de las hidalgas del pueblo. ¡No, sino estaos siempre en un ser, sin crecer ni menguar, como figura de paramento! Y en esto no hablemos más, que Sanchica ha de ser condesa, aunque tú más me digas.

-¿Veis cuanto decís, marido? -respondió Teresa-. Pues, con todo eso, temo que este condado de mi hija ha de ser su perdición. Vos haced lo que quisiéredes, ora la hagáis duquesa o princesa, pero séos decir que no será ello con voluntad ni consentimiento mío. Siempre, hermano, fui amiga de la igualdad, y no puedo ver entonos sin fundamentos. Teresa me pusieron en el bautismo, nombre mondo y escueto, sin añadiduras ni cortapisas, ni arrequives de dones ni donas; Cascajo se llamó mi padre, y a mí, por ser vuestra mujer, me llaman Teresa Panza, que a buena razón me habían de llamar Teresa Cascajo. Pero allá van reyes do quieren leyes, y con este nombre me contento, sin que me le pongan un don encima, que pese tanto que no le pueda llevar, y no quiero dar que decir a los que me vieren andar vestida a lo condesil o a lo de gobernadora, que luego dirán: «¡Mirad qué entonada va la pazpuerca!; ayer no se hartaba de estirar de un copo de estopa, y iba a misa cubierta la cabeza con la falda de la saya, en lugar de manto, y ya hoy va con verdugado, con broches y con entono, como si no la conociésemos». Si Dios me guarda mis siete, o mis cinco sentidos, o los que tengo, no pienso dar ocasión de verme en tal aprieto. Vos, hermano, idos a ser gobierno o ínsulo, y entonaos a vuestro gusto; que mi hija ni yo, por el siglo de mi madre, que no nos hemos de mudar un paso de nuestra aldea: la mujer honrada, la pierna quebrada, y en casa; y la doncella honesta, el hacer algo es su fiesta. Idos con vuestro don Quijote a vuestras aventuras, y dejadnos a nosotras con nuestras malas venturas, que Dios nos las mejorará como seamos buenas; y yo no sé, por cierto, quién le puso a él don, que no tuvieron sus padres ni sus agüelos.

-Ahora digo -replicó Sancho-que tienes algún familiar en ese cuerpo. ¡Válate Dios, la mujer, y qué de cosas has ensartado unas en otras, sin tener pies ni cabeza! ¿Qué tiene que ver el Cascajo, los broches, los refranes y el entono con lo que yo digo? Ven acá, mentecata e ignorante (que así te puedo llamar, pues no entiendes mis razones y vas huyendo de la dicha): si yo dijera que mi hija se arrojara de una torre abajo, o que se fuera por esos mundos, como se quiso ir la infanta doña Urraca, tenías razón de no venir con mi gusto; pero si en dos paletas, y en menos de un abrir y cerrar de ojos, te la chanto un don y una señoría a cuestras, y te la saco de los rastros, y te la pongo en toldo y en peana, y en un estrado de más almohadas de velludo que tuvieron moros en su linaje los Almohadas de Marruecos, ¿por qué no has de consentir y querer lo que yo quiero?

-¿Sabéis por qué, marido? -respondió Teresa-; por el refrán que dice: «¡Quien te cubre, te descubre!» Por el pobre todos pasan los ojos como de corrida, y en el rico los detienen; y si el tal rico fue un tiempo pobre, allí es el murmurar y el maldecir, y el peor perseverar de los maldicientes, que los hay por esas calles a montones, como enjambres de abejas.

-Mira, Teresa -respondió Sancho-, y escucha lo que agora quiero decirte; quizá no lo habrás oído en todos los días de tu vida, y yo agora no hablo de mío; que todo lo que pienso decir son sentencias del padre predicador que la Cuaresma pasada predicó en este pueblo, el cual, si mal no me acuerdo, dijo que todas las cosas presentes que los ojos están mirando se presentan, están y asisten en nuestra memoria mucho mejor y con más vehemencia que las cosas pasadas.

(Todas estas razones que aquí va diciendo Sancho son las segundas por quien dice el tradutor que tiene por apócrifo este capítulo, que exceden a la capacidad de Sancho. El cual prosiguió diciendo:)

-De donde nace que, cuando vemos alguna persona bien aderezada, y con ricos vestidos compuesta, y con pompa de criados, parece que por fuerza nos mueve y convida a que la tengamos respeto, puesto que la memoria en aquel instante nos represente alguna baja en que vimos a la tal persona; la cual inominia, ahora sea de pobreza o de linaje, como ya pasó, no es, y sólo es lo que vemos presente. Y si éste a quien la fortuna sacó del borrador de su baja (que por estas mismas razones lo dijo el padre) a la alteza de su prosperidad, fuere bien criado, liberal y cortés con todos, y no se pusiere en cuentos con aquellos que por antigüedad son nobles, ten por cierto, Teresa, que no habrá quien se acuerde de lo que fue, sino que reverencien lo que es, si no fueren los envidiosos, de quien ninguna próspera fortuna está segura.

-Yo no os entiendo, marido -replicó Teresa-: haced lo que quisiéredes, y no me quebréis más la cabeza con vuestras arengas y retóricas. Y si estáis revuelto en hacer lo que decís...

-Resuelto has de decir, mujer -dijo Sancho-, y no revuelto.

-No os pongáis a disputar, marido, conmigo -respondió Teresa-. Yo hablo como Dios es servido, y no me meto en más dibujos; y digo que si estáis porfiando en tener gobierno, que llevéis con vos a vuestro hijo Sancho, para que desde agora le enseñéis a tener gobierno, que bien es que los hijos hereden y aprendan los oficios de sus padres.

-En teniendo gobierno -dijo Sancho-, enviaré por él por la posta, y te enviaré dineros, que no me faltarán, pues nunca falta quien se los preste a los gobernadores cuando no los tienen; y vístele de modo que disimule lo que es y parezca lo que ha de ser.

-Enviad vos dinero -dijo Teresa-, que yo os lo vistiré como un palmito.

-En efecto, quedamos de acuerdo -dijo Sancho-de que ha de ser condesa nuestra hija.

-El día que yo la viere condesa -respondió Teresa-, ése haré cuenta que la entierro, pero otra vez os digo que hagáis lo que os diere gusto, que con esta carga nacemos las mujeres, de estar obedientes a sus maridos, aunque sean unos porros.

Y, en esto, comenzó a llorar tan de veras como si ya viera muerta y enterrada a Sanchica. Sancho la consoló diciéndole que, ya que la hubiese de hacer condesa, la haría todo lo más tarde que ser pudiese. Con esto se acabó su plática, y Sancho volvió a ver a don Quijote para dar orden en su partida.

Capítulo VI

De lo que le pasó a don Quijote con su sobrina y con su ama, y es uno de los importantes capítulos de toda la historia

EN TANTO que Sancho Panza y su mujer Teresa Cascajo pasaron la impertinente referida plática, no estaban ociosas la sobrina y el ama de don Quijote, que por mil señales iban coligiendo que su tío y señor quería desgarrarse la vez tercera, y volver al ejercicio de su, para ellas, mal andante caballería: procuraban por todas las vías posibles apartarle de tan mal pensamiento, pero todo era predicar en desierto y majar en hierro frío. Con todo esto, entre otras muchas razones que con él pasaron, le dijo el ama:

-En verdad, señor mío, que si vuesa merced no afirma el pie llano y se está quedo en su casa, y se deja de andar por los montes y por los valles como ánima en pena, buscando esas que dicen que se llaman aventuras, a quien yo llamo desdichas, que me tengo de quejar en voz y en grito a Dios y al rey, que pongan remedio en ello.

A lo que respondió don Quijote:

-Ama, lo que Dios responderá a tus quejas yo no lo sé, ni lo que ha de responder Su Majestad tampoco, y sólo sé que si yo fuera rey, me escusara de responder a tanta infinidad de memoriales impertinentes como cada día le dan; que uno de los mayores trabajos que los reyes tienen, entre otros muchos, es el estar obligados a escuchar a todos y a responder a todos; y así, no querría yo que cosas mías le diesen pesadumbre.

A lo que dijo el ama:

-Díganos, señor: en la corte de Su Majestad, ¿no hay caballeros?

-Sí -respondió don Quijote-, y muchos; y es razón que los haya, para adorno de la grandeza de los príncipes y para ostentación de la majestad real.

-Pues, ¿no sería vuesa merced -replicó ella-uno de los que a pie quedo sirviesen a su rey y señor, estándose en la corte?

-Mira, amiga -respondió don Quijote-: no todos los caballeros pueden ser cortesanos, ni todos los cortesanos pueden ni deben ser caballeros andantes: de todos ha de haber en el mundo; y, aunque todos seamos caballeros, va mucha diferencia de los unos a los otros; porque los cortesanos, sin salir de sus aposentos ni de los umbrales de la corte, se pasean por todo el mundo, mirando un mapa, sin costarles blanca, ni padecer calor ni frío, hambre ni sed; pero nosotros, los caballeros andantes verdaderos, al sol, al frío, al aire, a las inclemencias del cielo, de noche y de día, a pie y a caballo, medimos toda la tierra con nuestros mismos pies; y no solamente conocemos los enemigos pintados, sino en su mismo ser, y en todo trance y en toda ocasión los acometemos, sin mirar en niñerías, ni en las leyes de los desafíos; si lleva, o no lleva, más corta la lanza, o la espada; si trae sobre sí reliquias, o algún engaño encubierto; si se ha de partir y hacer tajadas el sol, o no, con otras ceremonias deste jaez, que se usan en los desafíos particulares de persona a persona, que tú no sabes y yo sí. Y has de saber más: que el buen caballero andante, aunque vea diez gigantes que con las cabezas no sólo tocan, sino pasan las nubes, y que a cada uno le sirven de piernas dos grandísimas torres, y que los brazos semejan árboles de gruesos y poderosos navíos, y cada ojo como una gran rueda de molino y más ardiendo que un horno de vidrio, no le han de espantar en manera alguna; antes con gentil continente y con intrépido corazón los ha de acometer y embestir, y, si fuere posible, vencerlos y desbaratarlos en un pequeño instante, aunque viniesen armados de unas conchas de un cierto pescado que dicen que son más duras que si fuesen de diamantes, y en lugar de espadas trujesen cuchillos tajantes de damasquino acero, o porras ferradas con puntas asimismo de acero, como yo las he visto más de dos veces. Todo esto he dicho, ama mía, porque veas la diferencia que hay de unos caballeros a otros; y sería razón que no hubiese príncipe que no estimase en más esta segunda, o, por mejor decir, primera especie de caballeros andantes, que, según leemos en sus historias, tal ha habido entre ellos que ha sido la salud no sólo de un reino, sino de muchos.

-¡Ah, señor mío! -dijo a esta sazón la sobrina-; advierta vuestra merced que todo eso que dice de los caballeros andantes es fábula y mentira, y sus historias, ya que no las quemasen, merecían que a cada una se le echase un sambenito, o alguna señal en que fuese conocida por infame y por gastadora de las buenas costumbres.

-Por el Dios que me sustenta -dijo don Quijote-, que si no fueras mi sobrina derechamente, como hija de mi misma hermana, que había de hacer un tal castigo en ti, por la blasfemia que has dicho, que sonara por todo el mundo. ¿Cómo que es posible que una rapaza que apenas sabe menear doce palillos de randas se atreva a poner lengua y a censurar las historias de los caballeros andantes? ¿Qué dijera el señor Amadís si lo tal oyera? Pero a buen seguro que él te perdonara, porque fue el más humilde y cortés caballero de su tiempo, y, demás, grande amparador de las doncellas; mas, tal te pudiera haber oído que no te fuera bien dello, que no todos son cortesos ni bien mirados: algunos hay follones y descomedidos. Ni todos los que se llaman caballeros lo son de todo en todo: que unos son de oro, otros de alquimia, y todos parecen caballeros, pero no todos pueden estar al toque de la piedra de la verdad. Hombres bajos hay que revientan por parecer caballeros, y caballeros altos hay que parece que apostan mueren por parecer hombres bajos; aquéllos se levantan o con la ambición o con la virtud, éstos se abajan o con la flojedad o con el vicio; y es menester aprovecharnos del conocimiento discreto para distinguir estas dos maneras de caballeros, tan parecidos en los nombres y tan distantes en las acciones.

-¡Válame Dios! -dijo la sobrina-. ¡Que sepa vuestra merced tanto, señor tío, que, si fuese menester en una necesidad, podría subir en un púlpito e irse a predicar por esas calles, y que, con todo esto, dé en una ceguera tan grande y en una sandez tan conocida, que se dé a entender que es valiente, siendo viejo, que tiene fuerzas, estando enfermo, y que endereza tuertos, estando por la edad agobiado, y, sobre todo, que es caballero, no lo siendo; porque, aunque lo puedan ser los hidalgos, no lo son los pobres!

-Tienes mucha razón, sobrina, en lo que dices -respondió don Quijote-, y cosas te pudiera yo decir cerca de los linajes, que te admiraran; pero, por no mezclar lo divino con lo humano, no las digo. Mirad, amigas: a cuatro suertes de linajes, y estadme atentas, se pueden reducir todos los que hay en el mundo, que son éstas: unos, que tuvieron principios humildes, y se fueron estendiendo y dilatando hasta llegar a una suma grandeza; otros, que tuvieron principios grandes, y los fueron conservando y los conservan y mantienen en el ser que comenzaron; otros, que, aunque tuvieron principios grandes, acabaron en punta, como pirámide, habiendo disminuido y aniquilado su principio hasta parar en nonada, como lo es la punta de la pirámide, que respeto de su basa o asiento no es nada; otros hay, y éstos son los más, que ni tuvieron principio bueno ni razonable medio, y así tendrán el fin, sin nombre, como el linaje de la gente plebeya y ordinaria. De los primeros, que tuvieron principio humilde y subieron a la grandeza que agora conservan, te sirva de ejemplo la Casa Otomana, que, de un humilde y bajo pastor que le dio principio, está en la cumbre que le vemos. Del segundo linaje, que tuvo principio en grandeza y la conserva sin aumentarla, serán ejemplo muchos príncipes que por herencia lo son, y se conservan en ella, sin aumentarla ni disminuirla, conteniéndose en los límites de sus estados pacíficamente. De los que comenzaron grandes y acabaron en punta hay millares de ejemplos, porque todos los Faraones y Tolomeos de Egipto, los Césares de Roma, con toda la caterva, si es que se le puede dar este nombre, de infinitos príncipes, monarcas, señores, medos, asirios, persas, griegos y bárbaros, todos estos linajes y señoríos han acabado en punta y en nonada, así ellos como los que les dieron principio, pues no será posible hallar agora ninguno de sus decendientes, y si le hallásemos, sería en bajo y humilde estado. Del linaje plebeyo no tengo qué decir, sino que sirve sólo de acrecentar el número de los que viven, sin que merezcan otra fama ni otro elogio sus grandezas. De todo lo dicho quiero que infiráis, bobas mías, que es grande la confusión que hay entre los linajes, y que solos aquéllos parecen grandes y ilustres que lo muestran en la virtud, y en la riqueza y liberalidad de sus dueños. Dije virtudes, riquezas y liberalidades, porque el grande que fuere vicioso será vicioso grande, y el rico no liberal será un avaro mendigo; que al poseedor de las riquezas no le hace dichoso el tenerlas, sino el gastarlas, y no el gastarlas comoquiera, sino el saberlas bien gastar. Al caballero pobre no le queda otro camino para mostrar que es caballero sino el de la virtud, siendo afable, bien criado, cortés y comedido, y oficioso; no soberbio, no arrogante, no murmurador, y, sobre todo, caritativo; que con dos maravedís que con ánimo alegre dé al pobre se mostrará tan liberal como el que a campana herida da limosna, y no habrá quien le vea adornado de las referidas virtudes que, aunque no le conozca, deje de juzgarle y tenerle por de buena casta, y el no serlo sería milagro; y siempre la alabanza fue premio de la virtud, y los virtuosos no pueden dejar de ser alabados. Dos caminos hay, hijas, por donde pueden ir los hombres a llegar a ser ricos y honrados: el uno es el de las letras; otro, el de las armas. Yo tengo más armas que letras, y nací, según me inclino a las armas, debajo de la influencia del planeta Marte; así que, casi me es forzoso seguir por su camino, y por él tengo de ir a pesar de todo el mundo, y será en balde cansaros en persuadirme a que no quiera yo lo que los cielos quieren, la fortuna ordena y la razón pide, y, sobre todo, mi voluntad desea. Pues con saber, como sé, los innumerables trabajos que son anejos al andante caballería, sé también los infinitos bienes que se alcanzan con ella; y sé que la senda de la virtud es muy estrecha, y el camino del vicio, ancho y espacioso; y sé que sus fines y paraderos son diferentes, porque el del vicio, dilatado y espacioso, acaba en muerte, y el de la virtud, angosto y trabajoso, acaba en vida, y no en vida que se acaba, sino en la que no tendrá fin; y sé, como dice el gran poeta castellano nuestro, que

de la inmortalidad al alto asiento, do nunca arriba quien de allí declina.

-¡Ay, desdichada de mí -dijo la sobrina-, que también mi señor es poeta! Todo lo sabe, todo lo alcanza: yo apostaré que si quisiera ser albañil, que supiera fabricar una casa como una jaula.

-Yo te prometo, sobrina -respondió don Quijote-, que si estos pensamientos caballerescos no me llevasen tras sí todos los sentidos, que no habría cosa que yo no hiciese, ni curiosidad que no saliese de mis manos, especialmente jaulas y palillos de dientes.

A este tiempo, llamaron a la puerta, y, preguntando quién llamaba, respondió Sancho Panza que él era; y, apenas le hubo conocido el ama, cuando corrió a esconderse por no verle: tanto le aborrecía. Abrióle la sobrina, salió a recibirle con los brazos abiertos su señor don Quijote, y encerráronse los dos en su aposento, donde tuvieron otro coloquio que no le hace ventaja el pasado.

Capítulo VII

De lo que pasó don Quijote con su escudero, con otros sucesos famosísimos

APENAS vio el ama que Sancho Panza se encerraba con su señor, cuando dio en la cuenta de sus tratos; y, imaginando que de aquella consulta había de salir la resolución de su tercera salida y tomando su manto, toda llena de congoja y pesadumbre, se fue a buscar al bachiller Sansón Carrasco, pareciéndole que, por ser bien hablado y amigo fresco de su señor, le podría persuadir a que dejase tan desvariado propósito.

Hallóle paseándose por el patio de su casa, y, viéndole, se dejó caer ante sus pies, trasudando y congojosa. Cuando la vio Carrasco con muestras tan doloridas y sobresaltadas, le dijo:

-¿Qué es esto, señora ama? ¿Qué le ha acontecido, que parece que se le quiere arrancar el alma?

-No es nada, señor Sansón mío, sino que mi amo se sale; ¡sálese sin duda!

-Y ¿por dónde se sale, señora? -preguntó Sansón-. ¿Hásele roto alguna parte de su cuerpo?

-No se sale -respondió ella-, sino por la puerta de su locura. Quiero decir, señor bachiller de mi ánima, que quiere salir otra vez, que con ésta será la tercera, a buscar por ese mundo lo que él llama venturas, que yo no puedo entender cómo les da este nombre. La vez primera nos le volvieron atravesado sobre un jumento, molido a palos. La segunda vino en un carro de bueyes, metido y encerrado en una jaula, adonde él se daba a entender que estaba encantado; y venía tal el triste, que no le conociera la madre que le parió: flaco, amarillo, los ojos hundidos en los últimos camaranchones del cerebro, que, para haberle de volver algún tanto en sí, gasté más de seiscientos huevos, como lo sabe Dios y todo el mundo, y mis gallinas, que no me dejaran mentir.

-Eso creo yo muy bien -respondió el bachiller-; que ellas son tan buenas, tan gordas y tan bien criadas, que no dirán una cosa por otra, si reventasen. En efecto, señora ama: ¿no hay otra cosa, ni ha sucedido otro desmán alguno, sino el que se teme que quiere hacer el señor don Quijote?

-No, señor -respondió ella.

-Pues no tenga pena -respondió el bachiller-, sino váyase en hora buena a su casa, y téngame aderezado de almorzar alguna cosa caliente, y, de camino, vaya rezando la oración de Santa Apolonia si es que la sabe, que yo iré luego allá, y verá maravillas.

-¡Cuitada de mí! -replicó el ama-; ¿la oración de Santa Apolonia dice vuestra merced que rece?: eso fuera si mi amo lo hubiera de las muelas, pero no lo ha sino de los cascós.

-Yo sé lo que digo, señora ama: váyase y no se ponga a disputar conmigo, pues sabe que soy bachiller por Salamanca, que no hay más que bachillear -respondió Carrasco.

Y con esto, se fue el ama, y el bachiller fue luego a buscar al cura, a comunicar con él lo que se dirá a su tiempo.

En el que estuvieron encerrados don Quijote y Sancho, pasaron las razones que con mucha puntualidad y verdadera relación cuenta la historia.

Dijo Sancho a su amo:

-Señor, ya yo tengo relucida a mi mujer a que me deje ir con vuestra merced adonde quisiere llevarme.

-Reducida has de decir, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, que no relucida.

-Una o dos veces -respondió Sancho-, si mal no me acuerdo, he suplicado a vuestra merced que no me emiende los vocablos, si es que entiende lo que quiero decir en ellos, y que, cuando no los entienda, diga: «Sancho, o diablo, no te entiendo»; y si yo no me declarare, entonces podrá emendarme; que yo soy tan fácil...

-No te entiendo, Sancho -dijo luego don Quijote-, pues no sé qué quiere decir soy tan fácil.

-Tan fácil quiere decir -respondió Sancho- soy tan así.

-Menos te entiendo agora -replicó don Quijote.

-Pues si no me puede entender -respondió Sancho-, no sé cómo lo diga: no sé más, y Dios sea conmigo.

-Ya, ya caigo -respondió don Quijote-en ello: tú quieres decir que eres tan dócil, blando y mañero que tomarás lo que yo te dijere, y pasarás por lo que te enseñare.

-Apostaré yo -dijo Sancho-que desde el emprincipio me caló y me entendió, sino que quiso turbarme por oírme decir otras docientas patochadas.

-Podrá ser -replicó don Quijote-. Y, en efecto, ¿qué dice Teresa?

-Teresa dice -dijo Sancho-que ate bien mi dedo con vuestra merced, y que hablen cartas y callen barbas, porque quien destaja no baraja, pues más vale un toma que dos te daré. Y yo digo que el consejo de la mujer es poco, y el que no le toma es loco.

-Y yo lo digo también -respondió don Quijote-. Decid, Sancho amigo; pasá adelante, que habláis hoy de perlas.

-Es el caso -replicó Sancho-que, como vuestra merced mejor sabe, todos estamos sujetos a la muerte, y que hoy somos y mañana no, y que tan presto se va el cordero como el carnero, y que nadie puede prometerse en este mundo más horas de vida de las que Dios quisiere darle, porque la muerte es sorda, y, cuando llega a llamar a las puertas de nuestra vida, siempre va depriesa y no la harán detener ni ruegos, ni fuerzas, ni ceptros, ni mitras, según es pública voz y fama, y según nos lo dicen por esos púlpitos.

-Todo eso es verdad -dijo don Quijote-, pero no sé dónde vas a parar.

-Voy a parar -dijo Sancho-en que vuesa merced me señale salario conocido de lo que me ha de dar cada mes el tiempo que le sirviere, y que el tal salario se me pague de su hacienda; que no quiero estar a mercedes, que llegan tarde, o mal, o nunca; con lo mío me ayude Dios. En fin, yo quiero saber lo que gano, poco o mucho que sea, que sobre un huevo pone la gallina, y muchos pocos hacen un mucho, y mientras se gana algo no se pierde nada. Verdad sea que si sucediese, lo cual ni lo creo ni lo espero, que vuesa merced me diese la ínsula que me tiene prometida, no soy tan ingrato, ni llevo las cosas tan por los cabos, que no querré que se aprecie lo que montare la renta de la tal ínsula, y se descuente de mi salario gata por cantidad.

-Sancho amigo -respondió don Quijote-, a las veces, tan buena suele ser una gata como una rata.

-Ya entiendo -dijo Sancho-: yo apostaré que había de decir rata, y no gata; pero no importa nada, pues vuesa merced me ha entendido.

-Y tan entendido -respondió don Quijote-que he penetrado lo último de tus pensamientos, y sé al blanco que tiras con las innumerables saetas de tus refranes. Mira, Sancho: yo bien te señalaría salario, si hubiera hallado en alguna de las historias de los caballeros andantes ejemplo que me descubriese y mostrase, por algún pequeño resquicio, qué es lo que solían ganar cada mes, o cada año; pero yo he leído todas o las más de sus historias, y no me acuerdo haber leído que ningún caballero andante haya señalado conocido salario a su escudero. Sólo sé que todos servían a merced, y que, cuando menos se lo pensaban, si a sus señores les había corrido bien la suerte, se hallaban premiados con una ínsula, o con otra cosa equivalente, y, por lo menos, quedaban con título y señoría. Si con estas esperanzas y aditamentos vos, Sancho, gustáis de volver a servirme, sea en buena hora: que pensar que yo he de sacar de sus términos y quicios la antigua usanza de la caballería andante es pensar en lo escusado. Así que, Sancho mío, volveos a vuestra casa, y declarad a vuestra Teresa mi intención; y si ella gustare y vos gustáredes de estar a merced conmigo, bene quidem; y si no, tan amigos como de antes; que si al palomar no le falta cebo, no le faltarán palomas. Y advertid, hijo, que vale más buena esperanza que ruin posesión, y buena queja que mala paga. Hablo de esta manera, Sancho, por daros a entender que también como vos sé yo arrojar refranes como llovidos. Y, finalmente, quiero decir, y os digo, que si no queréis venir a merced conmigo y correr la suerte que yo corriere, que Dios quede con vos y os haga un santo; que a mí no me faltarán escuderos más obedientes, más solícitos, y no tan empachados ni tan habladores como vos.

Cuando Sancho oyó la firme resolución de su amo se le anubló el cielo y se le cayeron las alas del corazón, porque tenía creído que su señor no se iría sin él por todos los haberes del mundo; y así, estando suspenso y pensativo, entró Sansón Carrasco y la sobrina, deseosos de oír con qué razones persuadía a su señor que no tornarse a buscar las aventuras. Llegó Sansón, socarrón famoso, y, abrazándole como la vez primera y con voz levantada, le dijo:

-¡Oh flor de la andante caballería; oh luz resplandeciente de las armas; oh honor y espejo de la nación española! Plega a Dios todopoderoso, donde más largamente se contiene, que la persona o personas que pusieren impedimento y estorbaren tu tercera salida, que no la hallen en el laberinto de sus deseos, ni jamás se les cumpla lo que mal desearen.

Y, volviéndose al ama, le dijo:

-Bien puede la señora ama no rezar más la oración de Santa Apolonia, que yo sé que es determinación precisa de las esferas que el señor don Quijote vuelva a ejecutar sus altos y nuevos pensamientos, y yo encargaría mucho mi conciencia si no intimase y persuadiese a este caballero que no tenga más tiempo encogida y detenida la fuerza de su valeroso brazo y la bondad de su ánimo valentísimo, porque defrauda con su tardanza el derecho de los tuertos, el amparo de los huérfanos, la honra de las doncellas, el favor de las viudas y el arrimo de las casadas, y otras cosas deste jaez, que tocan, atañen, dependen y son anejas a la orden de la caballería andante. ¡Ea, señor don Quijote mío, hermoso y bravo, antes hoy que mañana se ponga vuestra merced y su grandeza en camino; y si alguna cosa faltare para ponerle en ejecución, aquí estoy yo para suplirla con mi persona y hacienda; y si fuere necesidad servir a tu magnificencia de escudero, lo tendré a felicísima ventura!

A esta sazón, dijo don Quijote, volviéndose a Sancho:

-¿No te dije yo, Sancho, que me habían de sobrar escuderos? Mira quién se ofrece a serlo, sino el inaudito bachiller Sansón Carrasco, perpetuo trastulo y regocijador de los patios de las escuelas salmantenses, sano de su persona, ágil de sus miembros, callado, sufridor así del calor como del frío, así de la hambre como de la sed, con todas aquellas partes que se requieren para ser escudero de un caballero andante. Pero no permita el cielo que, por seguir mi gusto, desjarrete y quiebre la columna de las letras y el vaso de las ciencias, y tronque la palma eminente de las buenas y liberales artes. Quédese el nuevo Sansón en su patria, y, honrándola, honre juntamente las canas de sus ancianos padres; que yo con cualquier escudero estaré contento, ya que Sancho no se digna de venir conmigo.

-Sí digno -respondió Sancho, enternecido y llenos de lágrimas los ojos; y prosiguió-: No se dirá por mí, señor mío: el pan comido y la compañía deshecha; sí, que no vengo yo de alguna alcurnia desagradecida, que ya sabe todo el mundo, y especialmente mi pueblo, quién fueron los Panzas, de quien yo deciendo, y más, que tengo conocido y calado por muchas buenas obras, y por más buenas palabras, el deseo que vuestra merced tiene de hacerme merced; y si me he puesto en cuentas de tanto más cuanto acerca de mi salario, ha sido por complacer a mi mujer; la cual, cuando toma la mano a persuadir una cosa, no hay mazo que tanto apriete los aros de una cuba como ella aprieta a que se haga lo que quiere; pero, en efeto, el hombre ha de ser hombre, y la mujer, mujer; y, pues yo soy hombre dondequiera, que no lo puedo negar, también lo quiero ser en mi casa, pese a quien pesare; y así, no hay más que hacer, sino que vuestra merced ordene su testamento con su codicilo, en modo que no se pueda revolcar, y pongámonos luego en camino, porque no padezca el alma del señor Sansón, que dice que su conciencia le lita que persuada a vuestra merced a salir vez tercera por ese mundo; y yo de nuevo me ofrezco a servir a vuestra merced fiel y legalmente, tan bien y mejor que cuantos escuderos han servido a caballeros andantes en los pasados y presentes tiempos.

Admirado quedó el bachiller de oír el término y modo de hablar de Sancho Panza; que, puesto que había leído la primera historia de su señor, nunca creyó que era tan gracioso como allí le pintan; pero, oyéndole decir ahora testamento y codicilo que no se pueda revolcar, en lugar de testamento y codicilo que no se pueda revocar, creyó todo lo que dél había leído, y confirmólo por uno de los más solenes mentecatos de nuestros siglos; y dijo entre sí que tales dos locos como amo y mozo no se habrían visto en el mundo.

Finalmente, don Quijote y Sancho se abrazaron y quedaron amigos, y con parecer y beneplácito del gran Carrasco, que por entonces era su oráculo, se ordenó que de allí a tres días fuese su partida; en los cuales habría lugar de aderezar lo necesario para el viaje, y de buscar una celada de encaje, que en todas maneras dijo don Quijote que la había de llevar. Ofreciósela Sansón, porque sabía no se la negaría un amigo suyo que la tenía, puesto que estaba más oscura por el orín y el moho que clara y limpia por el terso acero.

Las maldiciones que las dos, ama y sobrina, echaron al bachiller no tuvieron cuento: mesaron sus cabellos, arañaron sus rostros, y, al modo de las endechaderas que se usaban, lamentaban la partida como si fuera la muerte de su señor. El designo que tuvo Sansón, para persuadirle a que otra vez saliese, fue hacer lo que adelante cuenta la historia, todo por consejo del cura y del barbero, con quien él antes lo había comunicado.

En resolución, en aquellos tres días don Quijote y Sancho se acomodaron de lo que les pareció convenirles; y, habiendo aplacado Sancho a su mujer, y don Quijote a su sobrina y a su ama, al anochecer, sin que nadie lo viese, sino el bachiller, que quiso acompañarles media legua del lugar, se pusieron en camino del Toboso: don Quijote sobre su buen Rocinante, y Sancho sobre su antiguo rucio, proveídas las alforjas de cosas tocantes a la bucólica, y la bolsa de dineros que le dio don Quijote para lo que se ofreciese. Abrazóle Sansón, y suplicóle le avisase de su buena o mala suerte, para alegrarse con ésta o entristecerse con aquélla, como las leyes de su amistad pedían. Prometióselo don Quijote, dio Sansón la vuelta a su lugar, y los dos tomaron la de la gran ciudad del Toboso.

Capítulo VIII

Donde se cuenta lo que le sucedió a don Quijote yendo a ver su señora Dulcinea del Toboso

«¡BENDITO sea el poderoso Alá! -dice Hamete Benengeli al comienzo deste octavo capítulo-. ¡Bendito sea Alá!», repite tres veces; y dice que da estas bendiciones por ver que tiene ya en campaña a don Quijote y a Sancho, y que los lectores de su agradable historia pueden hacer cuenta que desde este punto comienzan las hazañas y donaires de don Quijote y de su escudero; persuádeles que se les olviden las pasadas caballerías del ingenioso hidalgo, y pongan los ojos en las que están por venir, que desde agora en el camino del Toboso comienzan, como las otras comenzaron en los campos de Montiel, y no es mucho lo que pide para tanto como él promete; y así prosigue diciendo:

Solos quedaron don Quijote y Sancho, y, apenas se hubo apartado Sansón, cuando comenzó a relinchar Rocinante y a sospirar el rucio, que de entrambos, caballero y escudero, fue tenido a buena señal y por felicísimo agüero; aunque, si se ha de contar la verdad, más fueron los sospiros y rebuznos del rucio que los relinchos del rocín, de donde coligió Sancho que su ventura había de sobrepujar y ponerse encima de la de su señor, fundándose no sé si en astrología judiciaria que él se sabía, puesto que la historia no lo declara; sólo le oyeron decir que, cuando tropezaba o caía, se holgara no haber salido de casa, porque del tropezar o caer no se sacaba otra cosa sino el zapato roto o las costillas quebradas; y, aunque tonto, no andaba en esto muy fuera de camino. Díjole don Quijote:

-Sancho amigo, la noche se nos va entrando a más andar, y con más escuridad de la que habíamos menester para alcanzar a ver con el día al Toboso, adonde tengo determinado de ir antes que en otra aventura me ponga, y allí tomaré la bendición y buena licencia de la sin par Dulcinea, con la cual licencia pienso y tengo por cierto de acabar y dar felice cima a toda peligrosa aventura, porque ninguna cosa desta vida hace más valientes a los caballeros andantes que verse favorecidos de sus damas.

-Yo así lo creo -respondió Sancho-; pero tengo por dificultoso que vuestra merced pueda hablarla ni verse con ella, en parte, a lo menos, que pueda recibir su bendición, si ya no se la echa desde las bardas del corral, por donde yo la vi la vez primera, cuando le llevé la carta donde iban las nuevas de las sandeces y locuras que vuestra merced quedaba haciendo en el corazón de Sierra Morena.

-¿Bardas de corral se te antojaron aquéllas, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, adonde o por donde viste aquella jamás bastantemente alabada gentileza y hermosura? No debían de ser sino galerías o corredores, o lonjas, o como las llaman, de ricos y reales palacios.

-Todo pudo ser -respondió Sancho-, pero a mí bardas me parecieron, si no es que soy falto de memoria.

-Con todo eso, vamos allá, Sancho -replicó don Quijote-, que como yo la vea, eso se me da que sea por bardas que por ventanas, o por resquicios, o verjas de jardines; que cualquier rayo que del sol de su belleza llegue a mis ojos alumbrará mi entendimiento y fortalecerá mi corazón, de modo que quede único y sin igual en la discreción y en la valentía.

-Pues en verdad, señor -respondió Sancho-, que cuando yo vi ese sol de la señora Dulcinea del Toboso, que no estaba tan claro, que pudiese echar de sí rayos algunos, y debió de ser que, como su merced estaba ahechando aquel trigo que dije, el mucho polvo que sacaba se le puso como nube ante el rostro y se le oscureció.

-¡Que todavía das, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, en decir, en pensar, en creer y en porfiar que mi señora Dulcinea ahechaba trigo, siendo eso un menester y ejercicio que va desviado de todo lo que hacen y deben hacer las personas principales que están constituidas y guardadas para otros ejercicios y entretenimientos, que muestran a tiro de ballesta su principalidad...! Mal se te acuerdan a ti, ¡oh Sancho!, aquellos versos de nuestro poeta donde nos pinta las labores que hacían allá en sus moradas de cristal aquellas cuatro ninfas que del Tajo amado sacaron las cabezas, y se sentaron a labrar en el prado verde aquellas ricas telas que allí el ingenioso poeta nos describe, que todas eran de oro, sirgo y perlas contestas y tejidas. Y desta manera debía de ser el de mi señora cuando tú la viste; sino que la envidia que algún mal encantador debe de tener a mis cosas, todas las que me han de dar gusto trueca y vuelve en diferentes figuras que ellas tienen; y así, temo que, en aquella historia que dicen que anda impresa de mis hazañas, si por ventura ha sido su autor algún sabio mi enemigo, habrá puesto unas cosas por otras, mezclando con una verdad mil mentiras, divirtiéndose a contar otras acciones fuera de lo que requiere la continuación de una verdadera historia. ¡Oh envidia, raíz de infinitos males y carcoma de las virtudes! Todos los vicios, Sancho, traen un no sé qué de deleite consigo, pero el de la envidia no trae sino disgustos, rancores y rabias.

-Eso es lo que yo digo también -respondió Sancho-, y pienso que en esa leyenda o historia que nos dijo el bachiller Carrasco que de nosotros había visto debe de andar mi honra a coche acá, cinchado, y, como dicen, al estricote, aquí y allí, barriendo las calles. Pues, a fe de bueno, que no he dicho yo mal de ningún encantador, ni tengo tantos bienes que pueda ser envidiado; bien es verdad que soy algo malicioso, y que tengo mis ciertos asomos de bellaco, pero todo lo cubre y tapa la gran capa de la simpleza mía, siempre natural y nunca artificiosa. Y cuando otra cosa no tuviese sino el creer, como siempre creo, firme y verdaderamente en Dios y en todo aquello que tiene y cree la Santa Iglesia Católica Romana, y el ser enemigo mortal, como lo soy, de los judíos, debían los historiadores tener misericordia de mí y tratarme bien en sus escritos. Pero digan lo que quisieren; que desnudo nací, desnudo me hallo: ni pierdo ni gano; aunque, por verme puesto en libros y andar por ese mundo de mano en mano, no se me da un higo que digan de mí todo lo que quisieren.

-Eso me parece, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, a lo que sucedió a un famoso poeta destos tiempos, el cual, habiendo hecho una maliciosa sátira contra todas las damas cortesanas, no puso ni nombró en ella a una dama que se podía dudar si lo era o no; la cual, viendo que no estaba en la lista de las demás, se quejó al poeta, diciéndole que qué había visto en ella para no ponerla en el número de las otras, y que alargase la sátira, y la pusiese en el ensanche; si no, que mirase para lo que había nacido. Hízolo así el poeta, y púsola cual no digan dueñas, y ella quedó satisfecha, por verse con fama, aunque infame. También viene con esto lo que cuentan de aquel pastor que puso fuego y abrasó el templo famoso de Diana, contado por una de las siete maravillas del mundo, sólo porque quedase vivo su nombre en los siglos venideros; y, aunque se mandó que nadie le nombrase, ni hiciese por palabra o por escrito mención de su nombre, porque no consiguiese el fin de su deseo, todavía se supo que se llamaba Eróstrato. También alude a esto lo que sucedió al grande emperador Carlo Quinto con un caballero en Roma. Quiso ver el emperador aquel famoso templo de la Rotunda, que en la antigüedad se llamó el templo de todos los dioses, y ahora, con mejor vocación, se llama de todos los santos, y es el edificio que más entero ha quedado de los que alzó la gentilidad en Roma, y es el que más conserva la fama de la grandiosidad y magnificencia de sus fundadores: él es de hechura de una media naranja, grandísimo en extremo, y está muy claro, sin entrarle otra luz que la que le concede una ventana, o, por mejor decir, claraboya redonda que está en su cima, desde la cual mirando el emperador el edificio, estaba con él y a su lado un caballero romano, declarándole los primores y sutilezas de aquella gran máquina y memorable arquitectura; y, habiéndose quitado de la claraboya, dijo al emperador: «Mil veces, Sacra Majestad, me vino deseo de abrazarme con vuestra Majestad y arrojar me de aquella claraboya abajo, por dejar de mí fama eterna en el mundo». «Yo os agradezco -respondió el emperador-el no haber puesto tan mal pensamiento en efeto, y de aquí adelante no os pondré yo en ocasión que volváis a hacer prueba de vuestra lealtad; y así, os mando que jamás me habléis, ni estéis donde yo estuviere». Y, tras estas palabras, le hizo una gran merced. Quiero decir, Sancho, que el deseo de alcanzar fama es activo en gran manera. ¿Quién piensas tú que arrojó a Horacio del puente abajo, armado de todas armas, en la profundidad del Tíbre? ¿Quién abrasó el brazo y la mano a Mucio? ¿Quién impelió a Curcio a lanzarse en la profunda sima ardiente que apareció en la mitad de Roma? ¿Quién, contra todos los agüeros que en contra se le habían mostrado, hizo pasar el Rubicón a César? Y, con ejemplos más modernos, ¿quién barrenó los navíos y dejó en seco y aislados los valerosos españoles guiados por el cortesísimo Cortés en el Nuevo Mundo? Todas estas y otras grandes y diferentes hazañas son, fueron y serán obras de la fama, que los mortales desean como premios y parte de la inmortalidad que sus famosos hechos merecen, puesto que los cristianos, católicos y andantes caballeros más habemos de atender a la gloria de los siglos venideros, que es eterna en las regiones etéreas y celestes, que a la vanidad de la fama que en este presente y acabable siglo se alcanza; la cual fama, por mucho que dure, en fin se ha de acabar con el mismo mundo, que tiene su fin señalado. Así, ¡oh Sancho!, que nuestras obras no han de salir del límite que nos tiene puesto la religión cristiana, que profesamos. Hemos de matar en los gigantes a la soberbia; a la envidia, en la generosidad y buen pecho; a la ira, en el reposado continente y quietud del ánimo; a la gula y al sueño, en el poco comer que comemos y en el mucho velar que velamos; a la lujuria y lascivia, en la lealtad que guardamos a las que hemos hecho señoras de nuestros pensamientos; a la pereza, con andar por todas las partes del mundo, buscando las ocasiones que nos puedan hacer y hagan, sobre cristianos, famosos caballeros. Ves aquí, Sancho, los medios por donde se alcanzan los extremos de alabanzas que consigo trae la buena fama.

-Todo lo que vuestra merced hasta aquí me ha dicho -dijo Sancho-lo he entendido muy bien, pero, con todo eso, querría que vuestra merced me sorbiese una duda que agora en este punto me ha venido a la memoria.

-Asolviese quieres decir, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-. Di en buen hora, que yo responderé lo que supiere.

-Dígame, señor -prosiguió Sancho-: esos Julios o Agostos, y todos esos caballeros hazañosos que ha dicho, que ya son muertos, ¿dónde están agora?

-Los gentiles -respondió don Quijote-sin duda están en el infierno; los cristianos, si fueron buenos cristianos, o están en el purgatorio o en el cielo.

-Está bien -dijo Sancho-, pero sepamos ahora: esas sepulturas donde están los cuerpos desos señorazos, ¿tienen delante de sí lámparas de plata, o están adornadas las paredes de sus capillas de muletas, de mortajas, de cabelleras, de piernas y de ojos de cera? Y si desto no, ¿de qué están adornadas?

A lo que respondió don Quijote:

-Los sepulcros de los gentiles fueron por la mayor parte suntuosos templos: las cenizas del cuerpo de Julio César se pusieron sobre una pirámide de piedra de desmesurada grandeza, a quien hoy llaman en Roma La aguja de San Pedro; al emperador Adriano le sirvió de sepultura un castillo tan grande como una buena aldea, a quien llamaron Moles Hadriani, que agora es el castillo de Santángel en Roma; la reina Artemisa sepultó a su marido Mausoleo en un sepulcro que se tuvo por una de las siete maravillas del mundo; pero ninguna destas sepulturas ni otras muchas que tuvieron los gentiles se adornaron con mortajas ni con otras ofrendas y señales que mostrasen ser santos los que en ellas estaban sepultados.

-A eso voy -replicó Sancho-. Y dígame agora: ¿cuál es más: resucitar a un muerto, o matar a un gigante?

-La respuesta está en la mano -respondió don Quijote-: más es resucitar a un muerto.

-Cogido le tengo -dijo Sancho-: luego la fama del que resucita muertos, da vista a los ciegos, endereza los cojos y da salud a los enfermos, y delante de sus sepulturas arden lámparas, y están llenas sus capillas de gentes devotas que de rodillas adoran sus reliquias, mejor fama será, para este y para el otro siglo, que la que dejaron y dejaren cuantos emperadores gentiles y caballeros andantes ha habido en el mundo.

-También confieso esa verdad -respondió don Quijote.

-Pues esta fama, estas gracias, estas prerrogativas, como llaman a esto -respondió Sancho-, tienen los cuerpos y las reliquias de los santos que, con aprobación y licencia de nuestra santa madre Iglesia, tienen lámparas, velas, mortajas, muletas, pinturas, cabelleras, ojos, piernas, con que aumentan la devoción y engrandecen su cristiana fama. Los cuerpos de los santos o sus reliquias llevan los reyes sobre sus hombros, besan los pedazos de sus huesos, adornan y enriquecen con ellos sus oratorios y sus más preciados altares...

-¿Qué quieres que infiera, Sancho, de todo lo que has dicho? -dijo don Quijote.

-Quiero decir -dijo Sancho- que nos demos a ser santos, y alcanzaremos más brevemente la buena fama que pretendemos; y advierta, señor, que ayer o antes de ayer, que, según ha poco se puede decir desta manera, canonizaron o beatificaron dos frailecitos descalzos, cuyas cadenas de hierro con que ceñían y atormentaban sus cuerpos se tiene ahora a gran ventura el besarlas y tocarlas, y están en más veneración que está, según dije, la espada de Roldán en la armería del rey, nuestro señor, que Dios guarde. Así que, señor mío, más vale ser humilde frailecito, de cualquier orden que sea, que valiente y andante caballero; mas alcanzan con Dios dos docenas de diciplinas que dos mil lanzadas, ora las den a gigantes, ora a vestiglos o a endrigos.

-Todo eso es así -respondió don Quijote-, pero no todos podemos ser frailes, y muchos son los caminos por donde lleva Dios a los suyos al cielo: religión es la caballería; caballeros santos hay en la gloria.

-Sí -respondió Sancho-, pero yo he oído decir que hay más frailes en el cielo que caballeros andantes.

-Eso es -respondió don Quijote- porque es mayor el número de los religiosos que el de los caballeros.

-Muchos son los andantes -dijo Sancho.

-Muchos -respondió don Quijote-, pero pocos los que merecen nombre de caballeros.

En estas y otras semejantes pláticas se les pasó aquella noche y el día siguiente, sin acontecerles cosa que de contar fuese, de que no poco le pesó a don Quijote. En fin, otro día, al anochecer, descubrieron la gran ciudad del Toboso, con cuya vista se le alegraron los espíritus a don Quijote y se le entristecieron a Sancho, porque no sabía la casa de Dulcinea, ni en su vida la había visto, como no la había visto su señor; de modo que el uno por verla, y el otro por no haberla visto, estaban alborotados, y no imaginaba Sancho qué había de hacer cuando su dueño le enviase al Toboso. Finalmente, ordenó don Quijote entrar en la ciudad entrada la noche, y, en tanto que la hora se llegaba, se quedaron entre unas encinas que cerca del Toboso estaban, y, llegado el determinado punto, entraron en la ciudad, donde les sucedió cosas que a cosas llegan.

Capítulo IX

Donde se cuenta lo que en él se verá

MEDIA noche era por filo, poco más a menos, cuando don Quijote y Sancho dejaron el monte y entraron en el Toboso. Estaba el pueblo en un sosegado silencio, porque todos sus vecinos dormían y reposaban a pierna tendida, como suele decirse. Era la noche entreclara, puesto que quisiera Sancho que fuera del todo oscura, por hallar en su oscuridad disculpa de su sandez. No se oía en todo el lugar sino ladridos de perros, que atronaban los oídos de don Quijote y turbaban el corazón de Sancho. De cuando en cuando, rebuznaba un jumento, gruñían puercos, mayaban gatos, cuyas voces, de diferentes sonidos, se aumentaban con el silencio de la noche, todo lo cual tuvo el enamorado caballero a mal agüero; pero, con todo esto, dijo a Sancho:

-Sancho, hijo, guía al palacio de Dulcinea: quizá podrá ser que la hallemos despierta.

-¿A qué palacio tengo de guiar, cuerpo del sol -respondió Sancho-, que en el que yo vi a su grandeza no era sino casa muy pequeña?

-Debía de estar retirada, entonces -respondió don Quijote-, en algún pequeño apartamiento de su alcázar, solazándose a solas con sus doncellas, como es uso y costumbre de las altas señoras y princesas.

-Señor -dijo Sancho-, ya que vuestra merced quiere, a pesar mío, que sea alcázar la casa de mi señora Dulcinea, ¿es hora ésta por ventura de hallar la puerta abierta? Y ¿será bien que demos aldabazos para que nos oyan y nos abran, metiendo en alboroto y rumor toda la gente? ¿Vamos por dicha a llamar a la casa de nuestras mancebas, como hacen los abarraganados, que llegan, y llaman, y entran a cualquier hora, por tarde que sea?

-Hallemos primero una por una el alcázar -replicó don Quijote-, que entonces yo te diré, Sancho, lo que será bien que hagamos. Y advierte, Sancho, que yo veo poco, o que aquel bulto grande y sombra que desde aquí se descubre la debe de hacer el palacio de Dulcinea.

-Pues guíe vuestra merced -respondió Sancho-: quizá será así; aunque yo lo veré con los ojos y lo tocaré con las manos, y así lo creeré yo como creer que es ahora de día.

Guió don Quijote, y, habiendo andado como docientos pasos, dio con el bulto que hacía la sombra, y vio una gran torre, y luego conoció que el tal edificio no era alcázar, sino la iglesia principal del pueblo. Y dijo:

-Con la iglesia hemos dado, Sancho.

-Ya lo veo -respondió Sancho-; y plega a Dios que no demos con nuestra sepultura, que no es buena señal andar por los cimiterios a tales horas, y más, habiendo yo dicho a vuestra merced, si mal no me acuerdo, que la casa desta señora ha de estar en una callejuela sin salida.

-¡Maldito seas de Dios, mentecato! -dijo don Quijote-. ¿Adónde has tú hallado que los alcázares y palacios reales estén edificadas en callejuelas sin salida?

-Señor -respondió Sancho-, en cada tierra su uso: quizá se usa aquí en el Toboso edificar en callejuelas los palacios y edificios grandes; y así, suplico a vuestra merced me deje buscar por estas calles o callejuelas que se me ofrecen: podría ser que en algún rincón topase con ese alcázar, que le vea yo comido de perros, que así nos trae corridos y asendereados.

-Habla con respeto, Sancho, de las cosas de mi señora -dijo don Quijote-, y tengamos la fiesta en paz, y no arrojemos la soga tras el caldero.

-Yo me reportaré -respondió Sancho-; pero, ¿con qué paciencia podré llevar que quiera vuestra merced que de sola una vez que vi la casa de nuestra ama, la haya de saber siempre y hallarla a media noche, no hallándola vuestra merced, que la debe de haber visto millares de veces?

-Tú me harás desesperar, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-. Ven acá, hereje: ¿no te he dicho mil veces que en todos los días de mi vida no he visto a la sin par Dulcinea, ni jamás atravesé los umbrales de su palacio, y que sólo estoy enamorado de oídas y de la gran fama que tiene de hermosa y discreta?

-Ahora lo oigo -respondió Sancho-; y digo que, pues vuestra merced no la ha visto, ni yo tampoco...

-Eso no puede ser -replicó don Quijote-; que, por lo menos, ya me has dicho tú que la viste ahechando trigo, cuando me trujiste la respuesta de la carta que le envié contigo.

-No se atenga a eso, señor -respondió Sancho-, porque le hago saber que también fue de oídas la vista y la respuesta que le truje; porque, así sé yo quién es la señora Dulcinea como dar un puño en el cielo.

-Sancho, Sancho -respondió don Quijote-, tiempos hay de burlar, y tiempos donde caen y parecen mal las burlas. No porque yo diga que ni he visto ni hablado a la señora de mi alma has tú de decir también que ni la has hablado ni visto, siendo tan al revés como sabes.

Estando los dos en estas pláticas, vieron que venía a pasar por donde estaban uno con dos mulas, que, por el ruido que hacía el arado, que arrastraba por el suelo, juzgaron que debía de ser labrador, que habría madrugado antes del día a ir a su labranza; y así fue la verdad. Venía el labrador cantando aquel romance que dicen:

Mala la hubistes, franceses, en esa de Roncesvalles.

-Que me maten, Sancho -dijo, en oyéndole, don Quijote-, si nos ha de suceder cosa buena esta noche. ¿No oyes lo que viene cantando ese villano?

-Sí oigo -respondió Sancho-; pero, ¿qué hace a nuestro propósito la caza de Roncesvalles? Así pudiera cantar el romance de Caláinos, que todo fuera uno para sucedernos bien o mal en nuestro negocio.

Llegó, en esto, el labrador, a quien don Quijote preguntó:

-¿Sabréisme decir, buen amigo, que buena ventura os dé Dios, dónde son por aquí los palacios de la sin par princesa doña Dulcinea del Toboso?

-Señor -respondió el mozo-, yo soy forastero y ha pocos días que estoy en este pueblo, sirviendo a un labrador rico en la labranza del campo; en esa casa frontera viven el cura y el sacristán del lugar; entrambos, o cualquier dellos, sabrá dar a vuestra merced razón desa señora princesa, porque tienen la lista de todos los vecinos del Toboso; aunque para mí tengo que en todo él no vive princesa alguna; muchas señoras, sí, principales, que cada una en su casa puede ser princesa.

-Pues entre éstas -dijo don Quijote-debe de estar, amigo, ésta por quien te pregunto.

-Podría ser -respondió el mozo-; y adiós, que ya viene el alba.

Y, dando a sus mulas, no atendió a más preguntas. Sancho, que vio suspenso a su señor y asaz mal contento, le dijo:

-Señor, ya se viene a más andar el día, y no será acertado dejar que nos halle el sol en la calle; mejor será que nos salgamos fuera de la ciudad, y que vuestra merced se embosque en alguna floresta aquí cercana, y yo volveré de día, y no dejaré ostugo en todo este lugar donde no busque la casa, alcázar o palacio de mi señora, y asaz sería de desdichado si no le hallase; y, hallándole, hablaré con su merced, y le diré dónde y cómo queda vuestra merced esperando que le dé orden y traza para verla, sin menoscabo de su honra y fama.

-Has dicho, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, mil sentencias encerradas en el círculo de breves palabras: el consejo que ahora me has dado le apetezco y recibo de bonísima gana. Ven, hijo, y vamos a buscar donde me embosque, que tú volverás, como dices, a buscar, a ver y hablar a mi señora, de cuya discreción y cortesía espero más que milagrosos favores.

Rabiaba Sancho por sacar a su amo del pueblo, porque no averiguase la mentira de la respuesta que de parte de Dulcinea le había llevado a Sierra Morena; y así, dio priesa a la salida, que fue luego, y a dos millas del lugar hallaron una floresta o bosque, donde don Quijote se emboscó en tanto que Sancho volvía a la ciudad a hablar a Dulcinea; en cuya embajada le sucedieron cosas que piden nueva atención y nuevo crédito.

Capítulo X

LLEGANDO el autor desta grande historia a contar lo que en este capítulo cuenta, dice que quisiera pasarle en silencio, temeroso de que no había de ser creído, porque las locuras de don Quijote llegaron aquí al término y raya de las mayores que pueden imaginarse, y aun pasaron dos tiros de ballesta más allá de las mayores. Finalmente, aunque con este miedo y recelo, las escribió de la misma manera que él las hizo, sin añadir ni quitar a la historia un átomo de la verdad, sin dársele nada por las objeciones que podían ponerle de mentiroso. Y tuvo razón, porque la verdad adelgaza y no quiebra, y siempre anda sobre la mentira como el aceite sobre el agua.

Y así, prosiguiendo su historia, dice que, así como don Quijote se emboscó en la floresta, encinar o selva junto al gran Toboso, mandó a Sancho volver a la ciudad, y que no volviese a su presencia sin haber primero hablado de su parte a su señora, pidiéndola fuese servida de dejarse ver de su cautivo caballero, y se dignase de echarle su bendición, para que pudiese esperar por ella felicísimos sucesos de todos sus acometimientos y dificultosas empresas. Encargóse Sancho de hacerlo así como se le mandaba, y de traerle tan buena respuesta como le trujo la vez primera.

-Anda, hijo -replicó don Quijote-, y no te turbes cuando te vieres ante la luz del sol de hermosura que vas a buscar. ¡Dichoso tú sobre todos los escuderos del mundo! Ten memoria, y no se te pase della cómo te recibe: si muda las colores el tiempo que la estuvieres dando mi embajada; si se desasosiega y turba oyendo mi nombre; si no cabe en la almohada, si acaso la hallas sentada en el estrado rico de su autoridad; y si está en pie, mírala si se pone ahora sobre el uno, ahora sobre el otro pie; si te repite la respuesta que te diere dos o tres veces; si la muda de blanda en áspera, de aceda en amorosa; si levanta la mano al cabello para componerle, aunque no esté desordenado; finalmente, hijo, mira todas sus acciones y movimientos; porque si tú me los relatares como ellos fueron, sacaré yo lo que ella tiene escondido en lo secreto de su corazón acerca de lo que al fecho de mis amores toca; que has de saber, Sancho, si no lo sabes, que entre los amantes, las acciones y movimientos exteriores que muestran, cuando de sus amores se trata, son certísimos correos que traen las nuevas de lo que allá en lo interior del alma pasa. Ve, amigo, y guíete otra mejor ventura que la mía, y vuélvate otro mejor suceso del que yo quedo temiendo y esperando en esta amarga soledad en que me dejas.

-Yo iré y volveré presto -dijo Sancho-; y ensanche vuestra merced, señor mío, ese corazoncillo, que le debe de tener agora no mayor que una avellana, y considere que se suele decir que buen corazón quebranta mala ventura, y que donde no hay tocinos, no hay estacas; y también se dice: donde no piensa, salta la liebre. Dígolo porque si esta noche no hallamos los palacios o alcázares de mi señora, agora que es de día los pienso hallar, cuando menos los piense, y hallados, déjenme a mí con ella.

-Por cierto, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, que siempre traes tus refranes tan a pelo de lo que tratamos cuanto me dé Dios mejor ventura en lo que deseo.

Esto dicho, volvió Sancho las espaldas y vareó su rucio, y don Quijote se quedó a caballo, descansando sobre los estribos y sobre el arrimo de su lanza, lleno de tristes y confusas imaginaciones, donde le dejaremos, yéndonos con Sancho Panza, que no menos confuso y pensativo se apartó de su señor que él quedaba; y tanto, que, apenas hubo salido del bosque, cuando, volviendo la cabeza y viendo que don Quijote no parecía, se apeó del jumento, y, sentándose al pie de un árbol, comenzó a hablar consigo mismo y a decirse:

-Sepamos agora, Sancho hermano, adónde va vuesa merced. ¿Va a buscar algún jumento que se le haya perdido? «No, por cierto». Pues, ¿qué va a buscar? «Voy a buscar, como quien no dice nada, a una princesa, y en ella al sol de la hermosura y a todo el cielo junto». Y ¿adónde pensáis hallar eso que decís, Sancho? «¿Adónde? En la gran ciudad del Toboso». Y bien: ¿y de parte de quién la vais a buscar? «De parte del famoso caballero don Quijote de la Mancha, que desfaze los tuertos, y da de comer al que ha sed, y de beber al que ha hambre». Todo eso está muy bien. Y ¿sabéis su casa, Sancho? «Mi amo dice que han de ser unos reales palacios o unos soberbios alcázares». Y ¿habéisla visto algún día por ventura? «Ni yo ni mi amo la hemos visto jamás». Y ¿paréceos que fuera acertado y bien hecho que si los del Toboso supiesen que estáis vos aquí con intención de ir a sonsacarles sus princesas y a desasosegarles sus damas, viniesen y os moliesen las costillas a puros palos, y no os dejasen hueso sano? «En verdad que tendrían mucha razón, cuando no considerasen que soy mandado, y que mensajero sois, amigo, no merecéis culpa, non». No os fiéis en eso, Sancho, porque la gente manchega es tan colérica como honrada, y no consiente cosquillas de nadie. Vive Dios que si os huele, que os mando mala ventura. «¡Oxte, puto! ¡Allá darás, rayo! ¡No, sino ándeme yo buscando tres pies al gato por el gusto ajeno! Y más, que así será buscar a Dulcinea por el Toboso como a Marica por Rávena, o al bachiller en Salamanca. ¡El diablo, el diablo me

-Ahora bien, todas las cosas tienen remedio, si no es la muerte, debajo de cuyo yugo hemos de pasar todos, mal que nos pese, al acabar de la vida. Este mi amo, por mil señales, he visto que es un loco de atar, y aun también yo no le quedo en zaga, pues soy más mentecato que él, pues le sigo y le sirvo, si es verdadero el refrán que dice: «Dime con quién andas, decirte he quién eres», y el otro de «No con quien naces, sino con quien paces». Siendo, pues, loco, como lo es, y de locura que las más veces toma unas cosas por otras, y juzga lo blanco por negro y lo negro por blanco, como se pareció cuando dijo que los molinos de viento eran gigantes, y las mulas de los religiosos dromedarios, y las manadas de carneros ejércitos de enemigos, y otras muchas cosas a este tono, no será muy difícil hacerle creer que una labradora, la primera que me topare por aquí, es la señora Dulcinea; y, cuando él no lo crea, juraré yo; y si él jurare, tomaré yo a jurar; y si porfiare, porfiaré yo más, y de manera que tengo de tener la mía siempre sobre el hito, venga lo que viniere. Quizá con esta porfía acabaré con él que no me envíe otra vez a semejantes mensajerías, viendo cuán mal recado le traigo dellas, o quizá pensará, como yo imagino, que algún mal encantador de estos que él dice que le quieren mal la habrá mudado la figura por hacerle mal y daño.

Con esto que pensó Sancho Panza quedó sosegado su espíritu, y tuvo por bien acabado su negocio, y deteniéndose allí hasta la tarde, por dar lugar a que don Quijote pensase que le había tenido para ir y volver del Toboso; y sucedióle todo tan bien que, cuando se levantó para subir en el rucio, vio que del Toboso hacia donde él estaba venían tres labradoras sobre tres pollinos, o pollinas, que el autor no lo declara, aunque más se puede creer que eran borricas, por ser ordinaria caballería de las aldeanas; pero, como no va mucho en esto, no hay para qué detenernos en averiguarlo. En resolución: así como Sancho vio a las labradoras, a paso tirado volvió a buscar a su señor don Quijote, y hallóle suspirando y diciendo mil amorosas lamentaciones. Como don Quijote le vio, le dijo:

-¿Qué hay, Sancho amigo? ¿Podré señalar este día con piedra blanca, o con negra?

-Mejor será -respondió Sancho- que vuesa merced la señale con almagre, como rétulos de cátedras, porque le echen bien de ver los que le vieren.

-De ese modo -replicó don Quijote-, buenas nuevas traes.

-Tan buenas -respondió Sancho-, que no tiene más que hacer vuesa merced sino picar a Rocinante y salir a lo raso a ver a la señora Dulcinea del Toboso, que con otras dos doncellas suyas viene a ver a vuesa merced.

-¡Santo Dios! ¿Qué es lo que dices, Sancho amigo? -dijo don Quijote-. Mira no me engañes, ni quieras con falsas alegrías alegrar mis verdaderas tristezas.

-¿Qué sacaría yo de engañar a vuesa merced -respondió Sancho-, y más estando tan cerca de descubrir mi verdad? Pique, señor, y venga, y verá venir a la princesa, nuestra ama, vestida y adornada, en fin, como quien ella es. Sus doncellas y ella todas son una ascua de oro, todas mazorcas de perlas, todas son diamantes, todas rubíes, todas telas de brocado de más de diez altos; los cabellos, sueltos por las espaldas, que son otros tantos rayos del sol que andan jugando con el viento; y, sobre todo, vienen a caballo sobre tres cananeas remendadas, que no hay más que ver.

-Hacaneas querrás decir, Sancho.

-Poca diferencia hay -respondió Sancho- de cananeas a hacaneas; pero, vengan sobre lo que vinieren, ellas vienen las más galanas señoras que se puedan desear, especialmente la princesa Dulcinea, mi señora, que pasma los sentidos.

-Vamos, Sancho hijo -respondió don Quijote-; y, en albricias destas no esperadas como buenas nuevas, te mando el mejor despojo que ganare en la primera aventura que tuviere, y si esto no te contenta, te mando las crías que este año me dieren las tres yeguas mías, que tú sabes que quedan para parir en el prado concejil de nuestro pueblo.

-A las crías me atengo -respondió Sancho-, porque de ser buenos los despojos de la primera aventura no está muy cierto.

Ya en esto salieron de la selva, y descubrieron cerca a las tres aldeanas. Tendió don Quijote los ojos por todo el camino del Toboso, y como no vio sino a las tres labradoras, turbóse todo, y preguntó a Sancho si las había dejado fuera de la ciudad.

-¿Cómo fuera de la ciudad? -respondió-. ¿Por ventura tiene vuesa merced los ojos en el colodrillo, que no ve que son éstas, las que aquí vienen, resplandecientes como el mismo sol a mediodía?

-Yo no veo, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, sino a tres labradoras sobre tres borricos.

-¡Agora me libre Dios del diablo! -respondió Sancho-. Y ¿es posible que tres hacaneas, o como se llaman, blancas como el ampo de la nieve, le parezcan a vuesa merced borricos? ¡Vive el Señor, que me pele estas barbas si tal fuese verdad!

-Pues yo te digo, Sancho amigo -dijo don Quijote-, que es tan verdad que son borricos, o borricas, como yo soy don Quijote y tú Sancho Panza; a lo menos, a mí tales me parecen.

-Calle, señor -dijo Sancho-, no diga la tal palabra, sino despabile esos ojos, y venga a hacer reverencia a la señora de sus pensamientos, que ya llega cerca.

Y, diciendo esto, se adelantó a recibir a las tres aldeanas; y, apeándose del rucio, tuvo del cabestro al jumento de una de las tres labradoras, y, hincando ambas rodillas en el suelo, dijo:

-Reina y princesa y duquesa de la hermosura, vuestra altivez y grandeza sea servida de recibir en su gracia y buen talente al cautivo caballero vuestro, que allí está hecho piedra mármol, todo turbado y sin pulsos de verse ante vuestra magnífica presencia. Yo soy Sancho Panza, su escudero, y él es el asendereado caballero don Quijote de la Mancha, llamado por otro nombre el Caballero de la Triste Figura.

A esta sazón, ya se había puesto don Quijote de hinojos junto a Sancho, y miraba con ojos desencajados y vista turbada a la que Sancho llamaba reina y señora, y, como no descubría en ella sino una moza aldeana, y no de muy buen rostro, porque era carirredonda y chata, estaba suspenso y admirado, sin osar desplegar los labios. Las labradoras estaban asimismo atónitas, viendo aquellos dos hombres tan diferentes hincados de rodillas, que no dejaban pasar adelante a su compañera; pero, rompiendo el silencio la detenida, toda desgraciada y mohína, dijo:

-Apártense nora en tal del camino, y déjenmos pasar, que vamos de priesa.

A lo que respondió Sancho:

-¡Oh princesa y señora universal del Toboso! ¿Cómo vuestro magnánimo corazón no se entenece viendo arrodillado ante vuestra sublimada presencia a la columna y sustento de la andante caballería?

Oyendo lo cual, otra de las dos dijo:

-Mas, ¡jo, que te estrego, burra de mi suegro! ¡Mirad con qué se vienen los señoritos ahora a hacer burla de las aldeanas, como si aquí no supiésemos echar pullas como ellos! Vayan su camino, e déjenmos hacer el nueso, y serles ha sano.

-Levántate, Sancho -dijo a este punto don Quijote-, que ya veo que la Fortuna, de mi mal no harta, tiene tomados los caminos todos por donde pueda venir algún contento a esta ánima mezquina que tengo en las carnes. Y tú, ¡oh extremo del valor que puede desearse, término de la humana gentileza, único remedio deste afligido corazón que te adora!, ya que el maligno encantador me persigue, y ha puesto nubes y cataratas en mis ojos, y para sólo ellos y no para otros ha mudado y transformado tu sin igual hermosura y rostro en el de una labradora pobre, si ya también el mío no le ha cambiado en el de algún vestiglo, para hacerle aborrecible a tus ojos, no dejes de mirarme blanda y amorosamente, echando de ver en esta sumisión y arrodillamiento que a tu contrahecha hermosura hago, la humildad con que mi alma te adora.

-¡Tomá que mi agüelo! -respondió la aldeana-. ¡Amiguita soy yo de oír

Apartóse Sancho y dejóla ir, contentísimo de haber salido bien de su enredo.

Apenas se vio libre la aldeana que había hecho la figura de Dulcinea, cuando, picando a su cananea con un aguijón que en un palo traía, dio a correr por el prado adelante. Y, como la borrica sentía la punta del aguijón, que le fatigaba más de lo ordinario, comenzó a dar corcovos, de manera que dio con la señora Dulcinea en tierra; lo cual visto por don Quijote, acudió a levantarla, y Sancho a componer y cinchar el albarda, que también vino a la barriga de la pollina. Acomodada, pues, la albarda, y quiriendo don Quijote levantar a su encantada señora en los brazos sobre la jumenta, la señora, levantándose del suelo, le quitó de aquel trabajo, porque, haciéndose algún tanto atrás, tomó una corridica, y, puestas ambas manos sobre las ancas de la pollina, dio con su cuerpo, más ligero que un halcón, sobre la albarda, y quedó a horcajadas, como si fuera hombre; y entonces dijo Sancho:

-¡Vive Roque, que es la señora nuestra ama más ligera que un acotán, y que puede enseñar a subir a la jineta al más diestro cordobés o mejicano! El arzón trasero de la silla pasó de un salto, y sin espuelas hace correr la hacanea como una cebrá. Y no le van en zaga sus doncellas; que todas corren como el viento.

Y así era la verdad, porque, en viéndose a caballo Dulcinea, todas picaron tras ella y dispararon a correr, sin volver la cabeza atrás por espacio de más de media legua. Siguiólas don Quijote con la vista, y, cuando vio que no parecían, volviéndose a Sancho, le dijo:

-Sancho, ¿qué te parece cuán malquisto soy de encantadores? Y mira hasta dónde se estiende su malicia y la ojeriza que me tienen, pues me han querido privar del contento que pudiera darme ver en su ser a mi señora. En efecto, yo nací para ejemplo de desdichados, y para ser blanco y terrero donde tomen la mira y asiesten las flechas de la mala fortuna. Y has también de advertir, Sancho, que no se contentaron estos traidores de haber vuelto y transformado a mi Dulcinea, sino que la transformaron y volvieron en una figura tan baja y tan fea como la de aquella aldeana, y juntamente le quitaron lo que es tan suyo de las principales señoras, que es el buen olor, por andar siempre entre ámbares y entre flores. Porque te hago saber, Sancho, que cuando llegué a subir a Dulcinea sobre su hacanea, según tú dices, que a mí me pareció borrica, me dio un olor de ajos crudos, que me encalabrino y atosigó el alma.

-¡Oh canalla! -gritó a esta sazón Sancho- ¡Oh encantadores aciagos y malintencionados, y quién os viera a todos ensartados por las agallas, como sardinas en lercha! Mucho sabéis, mucho podéis y mucho más hacéis. Bastaros debiera, bellacos, haber mudado las perlas de los ojos de mi señora en agallas alcornoqueñas, y sus cabellos de oro purísimo en cerdas de cola de buey bermejo, y, finalmente, todas sus faciones de buenas en malas, sin que le tocárades en el olor; que por él siquiera sacáramos lo que estaba encubierto debajo de aquella fea corteza; aunque, para decir verdad, nunca yo vi su fealdad, sino su hermosura, a la cual subía de punto y quilates un lunar que tenía sobre el labio derecho, a manera de bigote, con siete o ocho cabellos rubios como hebras de oro y largos de más de un palmo.

-A ese lunar -dijo don Quijote-, según la correspondencia que tienen entre sí los del rostro con los del cuerpo, ha de tener otro Dulcinea en la tabla del muslo que corresponde al lado donde tiene el del rostro, pero muy luengos para lunares son pelos de la grandeza que has significado.

-Pues yo sé decir a vuestra merced -respondió Sancho-que le parecían allí como nacidos.

-Yo lo creo, amigo -replicó don Quijote-, porque ninguna cosa puso la naturaleza en Dulcinea que no fuese perfecta y bien acabada; y así, si tuviera cien lunares como el que dices, en ella no fueran lunares, sino lunas y estrellas resplandecientes. Pero dime, Sancho: aquella que a mí me pareció albarda, que tú aderezaste, ¿era silla rasa o sillón?

-No era -respondió Sancho-sino silla a la jineta, con una cubierta de campo que vale la mitad de un reino, según es de rica.

-¡Y que no viese yo todo eso, Sancho! -dijo don Quijote-. Ahora torno a decir, y diré mil veces, que soy el más desdichado de los hombres.

Harto tenía que hacer el socarrón de Sancho en disimular la risa, oyendo las sandeces de su amo, tan delicadamente engañado. Finalmente, después de otras muchas razones que entre los dos pasaron, volvieron a subir en sus bestias, y siguieron el camino de Zaragoza, adonde pensaban llegar a tiempo que pudiesen hallarse en unas solenes fiestas que en aquella insigne ciudad cada año suelen hacerse. Pero, antes que allá llegasen, les sucedieron cosas que, por muchas, grandes y nuevas, merecen ser escritas y leídas, como se verá adelante.

Capítulo XI

PENSATIVO además iba don Quijote por su camino adelante, considerando la mala burla que le habían hecho los encantadores volviendo a su señora Dulcinea en la mala figura de la aldeana, y no imaginaba qué remedio tendría para volverla a su ser primero; y estos pensamientos le llevaban tan fuera de sí, que, sin sentirlo, soltó las riendas a Rocinante, el cual, sintiendo la libertad que se le daba, a cada paso se detenía a pacer la verde yerba de que aquellos campos abundaban. De su embelesamiento le volvió Sancho Panza, diciéndole:

-Señor, las tristezas no se hicieron para las bestias, sino para los hombres; pero si los hombres las sienten demasiado, se vuelven bestias: vuestra merced se reporte, y vuelva en sí, y coja las riendas a Rocinante, y avive y despierte, y muestre aquella gallardía que conviene que tengan los caballeros andantes. ¿Qué diablos es esto? ¿Qué descaecimiento es éste? ¿Estamos aquí, o en Francia? Mas que se lleve Satanás a cuantas Dulcineas hay en el mundo, pues vale más la salud de un solo caballero andante que todos los encantos y transformaciones de la tierra.

-Calla, Sancho -respondió don Quijote con voz no muy desmayada-; calla, digo, y no digas blasfemias contra aquella encantada señora, que de su desgracia y desventura yo solo tengo la culpa: de la invidia que me tienen los malos ha nacido su mala andanza.

-Así lo digo yo -respondió Sancho-: quien la vido y la vee ahora, ¿cuál es el corazón que no llora?

-Eso puedes tú decir bien, Sancho -replicó don Quijote-, pues la viste en la entereza cabal de su hermosura, que el encanto no se estendió a turbarte la vista ni a encubrirte su belleza: contra mí solo y contra mis ojos se endereza la fuerza de su veneno. Mas, con todo esto, he caído, Sancho, en una cosa, y es que me pintaste mal su hermosura, porque, si mal no me acuerdo, dijiste que tenía los ojos de perlas, y los ojos que parecen de perlas antes son de besugo que de dama; y, a lo que yo creo, los de Dulcinea deben ser de verdes esmeraldas, rasgados, con dos celestiales arcos que les sirven de cejas; y esas perlas quítalas de los ojos y pásalas a los dientes, que sin duda te trocaste, Sancho, tomando los ojos por los dientes.

-Todo puede ser -respondió Sancho-, porque también me turbó a mí su hermosura como a vuesa merced su fealdad. Pero encomendémoslo todo a Dios, que Él es el sabidor de las cosas que han de suceder en este valle de lágrimas, en este mal mundo que tenemos, donde apenas se halla cosa que esté sin mezcla de maldad, embuste y bellaquería. De una cosa me pesa, señor mío, más que de otras; que es pensar qué medio se ha de tener cuando vuesa merced venza a algún gigante o otro caballero, y le mande que se vaya a presentar ante la hermosura de la señora Dulcinea: ¿adónde la ha de hallar este pobre gigante, o este pobre y mísero caballero vencido? Paréceme que los veo andar por el Toboso hechos unos bausanes, buscando a mi señora Dulcinea, y, aunque la encuentren en mitad de la calle, no la conocerán más que a mi padre.

-Quizá, Sancho -respondió don Quijote-, no se estenderá el encantamento a quitar el conocimiento de Dulcinea a los vencidos y presentados gigantes y caballeros; y, en uno o dos de los primeros que yo venza y le envíe, haremos la experiencia si la ven o no, mandándoles que vuelvan a darme relación de lo que acerca desto les hubiere sucedido.

-Digo, señor -replicó Sancho-, que me ha parecido bien lo que vuesa merced ha dicho, y que con ese artificio vendremos en conocimiento de lo que deseamos; y si es que ella a solo vuesa merced se encubre, la desgracia más será de vuesa merced que suya; pero, como la señora Dulcinea tenga salud y contento, nosotros por acá nos avendremos y lo pasaremos lo mejor que pudiéremos, buscando nuestras aventuras y dejando al tiempo que haga de las suyas, que él es el mejor médico destas y de otras mayores enfermedades.

Responder quería don Quijote a Sancho Panza, pero estorbóselo una carreta que salió al través del camino, cargada de los más diversos y estraños personajes y figuras que pudieron imaginarse. El que guiaba las mulas y servía de carretero era un feo demonio. Venía la carreta descubierta al cielo abierto, sin toldo ni zarzo. La primera figura que se ofreció a los ojos de don Quijote fue la de la misma Muerte, con rostro humano; junto a ella venía un ángel con unas grandes y pintadas alas; al un lado estaba un emperador con una corona, al parecer de oro, en la cabeza; a los pies de la Muerte estaba el dios que llaman Cupido, sin venda en los ojos, pero con su arco, carcaj y saetas. Venía también un caballero armado de punta en blanco, excepto que no traía morrión, ni celada, sino un sombrero lleno de plumas de diversas colores; con éstas venían otras personas de diferentes trajes y rostros. Todo lo cual visto de improviso, en alguna manera alborotó a don Quijote y puso miedo en el corazón de Sancho; mas luego se alegró don Quijote, creyendo que se le ofrecía alguna nueva y peligrosa aventura, y con este pensamiento, y con ánimo dispuesto de acometer cualquier peligro, se puso delante de la carreta, y, con voz alta y amenazadora, dijo:

-Carretero, cochero, o diablo, o lo que eres, no tardes en decirme quién eres, a dó vas y quién es la gente que llevas en tu carricoche, que más parece la barca de Carón que carreta de las que se usan.

A lo cual, mansamente, deteniendo el Diablo la carreta, respondió:

-Señor, nosotros somos recitantes de la compañía de Angulo el Malo; hemos hecho en un lugar que está detrás de aquella loma, esta mañana, que es la octava del Corpus, el auto de Las Cortes de la Muerte, y hémosle de hacer esta tarde en aquel lugar que desde aquí se parece; y, por estar tan cerca y escusar el trabajo de desnudarnos y volvernos a vestir, nos vamos vestidos con los mismos vestidos que representamos. Aquel mancebo va de Muerte; el otro, de Ángel; aquella mujer, que es la del autor, va de Reina; el otro, de Soldado; aquél, de Emperador, y yo, de Demonio, y soy una de las principales figuras del auto, porque hago en esta compañía los primeros papeles. Si otra cosa vuestra merced desea saber de nosotros, pregúntemelo, que yo le sabré responder con toda puntualidad; que, como soy demonio, todo se me alcanza.

-Por la fe de caballero andante -respondió don Quijote-, que, así como vi este carro, imaginé que alguna grande aventura se me ofrecía; y ahora digo que es menester tocar las apariencias con la mano para dar lugar al desengaño. Andad con Dios, buena gente, y haced vuestra fiesta, y mirad si mandáis algo en que pueda seros de provecho, que lo haré con buen ánimo y buen talante, porque desde mochacho fui aficionado a la carátula, y en mi mocedad se me iban los ojos tras la farándula.

Estando en estas pláticas, quiso la suerte que llegase uno de la compañía, que venía vestido de bojiganga, con muchos cascabeles, y en la punta de un palo traía tres vejigas de vaca hinchadas; el cual moharracho, llegándose a don Quijote, comenzó a esgrimir el palo y a sacudir el suelo con las vejigas, y a dar grandes saltos, sonando los cascabeles, cuya mala visión así alborotó a Rocinante, que, sin ser poderoso a detenerle don Quijote, tomando el freno entre los dientes, dio a correr por el campo con más ligereza que jamás prometieron los huesos de su notomía. Sancho, que consideró el peligro en que iba su amo de ser derribado, saltó del rucio, y a toda priesa fue a valerle; pero, cuando a él llegó, ya estaba en tierra, y junto a él, Rocinante, que, con su amo, vino al suelo: ordinario fin y paradero de las lozanías de Rocinante y de sus atrevimientos.

Mas, apenas hubo dejado su caballería Sancho por acudir a don Quijote, cuando el demonio bailador de las vejigas saltó sobre el rucio, y, sacudiéndole con ellas, el miedo y ruido, más que el dolor de los golpes, le hizo volar por la campaña hacia el lugar donde iban a hacer la fiesta. Miraba Sancho la carrera de su rucio y la caída de su amo, y no sabía a cuál de las dos necesidades acudiría primero; pero, en efecto, como buen escudero y como buen criado, pudo más con él el amor de su señor que el cariño de su jumento, puesto que cada vez que veía levantar las vejigas en el aire y caer sobre las ancas de su rucio eran para él tártagos y sustos de muerte, y antes quisiera que aquellos golpes se los dieran a él en las niñas de los ojos que en el más mínimo pelo de la cola de su asno. Con esta perpleja tribulación llegó donde estaba don Quijote, harto más maltrecho de lo que él quisiera, y, ayudándole a subir sobre Rocinante, le dijo:

-Señor, el Diablo se ha llevado al rucio.

-¿Qué diablo? -preguntó don Quijote.

-El de las vejigas -respondió Sancho.

-Pues yo le cobraré -replicó don Quijote-, si bien se encerrase con él en los más hondos y oscuros calabozos del infierno. Sígueme, Sancho, que la carreta va despacio, y con las mulas della satisfaré la pérdida del rucio.

-No hay para qué hacer esa diligencia, señor -respondió Sancho-: vuestra merced temple su cólera, que, según me parece, ya el Diablo ha dejado el rucio, y vuelve a la querencia.

Y así era la verdad; porque, habiendo caído el Diablo con el rucio, por imitar a don Quijote y a Rocinante, el Diablo se fue a pie al pueblo, y el jumento se volvió a su amo.

-Con todo eso -dijo don Quijote-, será bien castigar el descomedimiento de aquel demonio en alguno de los de la carreta, aunque sea el mismo emperador.

-Quítese a vuestra merced eso de la imaginación -replicó Sancho-, y tome mi consejo, que es que nunca se tome con farsantes, que es gente favorecida. Recitante he visto yo estar preso por dos muertes y salir libre y sin costas. Sepa vuesa merced que, como son gentes alegres y de placer, todos los favorecen, todos los amparan, ayudan y estiman, y más siendo de aquellos de las compañías reales y de título, que todos, o los más, en sus trajes y compostura parecen unos príncipes.

-Pues con todo -respondió don Quijote-, no se me ha de ir el demonio farsante alabando, aunque le favorezca todo el género humano.

Y, diciendo esto, volvió a la carreta, que ya estaba bien cerca del pueblo. Iba dando voces, diciendo:

-Deteneos, esperad, turba alegre y regocijada, que os quiero dar a entender cómo se han de tratar los jumentos y alimañas que sirven de caballería a los escuderos de los caballeros andantes.

Tan altos eran los gritos de don Quijote, que los oyeron y entendieron los de la carreta; y, juzgando por las palabras la intención del que las decía, en un instante saltó la Muerte de la carreta, y tras ella, el Emperador, el Diablo carretero y el Ángel, sin quedarse la Reina ni el dios Cupido; y todos se cargaron de piedras y se pusieron en ala, esperando recibir a don Quijote en las puntas de sus guijarros. Don Quijote, que los vio puestos en tan gallardo escuadrón, los brazos levantados con ademán de despedir poderosamente las piedras, detuvo las riendas a Rocinante y púsose a pensar de qué modo los acometería con menos peligro de su persona. En esto que se detuvo, llegó Sancho, y, viéndole en talle de acometer al bien formado escuadrón, le dijo:

-Asaz de locura sería intentar tal empresa: considere vuesa merced, señor mío, que para sopa de arroyo y tente bonete, no hay arma defensiva en el mundo, si no es embutirse y encerrarse en una campana de bronce; y también se ha de considerar que es más temeridad que valentía acometer un hombre solo a un ejército donde está la Muerte, y pelean en persona emperadores, y a quien ayudan los buenos y los malos ángeles; y si esta consideración no le mueve a estarse quedo, muévale saber de cierto que, entre todos los que allí están, aunque parecen reyes, príncipes y emperadores, no hay ningún caballero andante.

-Ahora sí -dijo don Quijote-has dado, Sancho, en el punto que puede y debe mudarme de mi ya determinado intento. Yo no puedo ni debo sacar la espada, como otras veces muchas te he dicho, contra quien no fuere armado caballero. A ti, Sancho, toca, si quieres tomar la venganza del agravio que a tu rucio se le ha hecho, que yo desde aquí te ayudaré con voces y advertimientos saludables.

-No hay para qué, señor -respondió Sancho-, tomar venganza de nadie, pues no es de buenos cristianos tomarla de los agravios; cuanto más, que yo acabaré con mi asno que ponga su ofensa en las manos de mi voluntad, la cual es de vivir pacíficamente los días que los cielos me dieren de vida.

-Pues ésa es tu determinación -replicó don Quijote-, Sancho bueno, Sancho discreto, Sancho cristiano y Sancho sincero, dejemos estas fantasmas y volvamos a buscar mejores y más calificadas aventuras; que yo veo esta tierra de talle, que no han de faltar en ella muchas y muy milagrosas.

Volvió las riendas luego, Sancho fue a tomar su rucio, la Muerte con todo su escuadrón volante volvieron a su carreta y prosiguieron su viaje, y este felice fin tuvo la temerosa aventura de la carreta de la Muerte, gracias sean dadas al saludable consejo que Sancho Panza dio a su amo; al cual, el día siguiente, le sucedió otra con un enamorado y andante caballero, de no menos suspensión que la pasada.

Capítulo XII

*De la estraña aventura que le sucedió al valeroso don Quijote con el bravo
Caballero de los Espejos*

LA NOCHE que siguió al día del rencuentro de la Muerte la pasaron don Quijote y su escudero debajo de unos altos y sombrosos árboles, habiendo, a persuasión de Sancho, comido don Quijote de lo que venía en el repuesto del rucio, y entre la cena dijo Sancho a su señor:

-Señor, ¡qué tonto hubiera andado yo si hubiera escogido en albricias los despojos de la primera aventura que vuestra merced acabara, antes que las crías de las tres yeguas! En efecto, en efecto, más vale pájaro en mano que buitre volando.

-Todavía -respondió don Quijote-, si tú, Sancho, me dejaras acometer, como yo quería, te hubieran cabido en despojos, por lo menos, la corona de oro de la Emperatriz y las pintadas alas de Cupido, que yo se las quitara al redropelo y te las pusiera en las manos.

-Nunca los cetros y coronas de los emperadores farsantes -respondió Sancho Panza-fueron de oro puro, sino de oropel o hoja de lata.

-Así es verdad -replicó don Quijote-, porque no fuera acertado que los atavíos de la comedia fueran finos, sino fingidos y aparentes, como lo es la misma comedia, con la cual quiero, Sancho, que estés bien, teniéndola en tu gracia, y por el mismo consiguiente a los que las representan y a los que las componen, porque todos son instrumentos de hacer un gran bien a la república, poniéndonos un espejo a cada paso delante, donde se veen al vivo las acciones de la vida humana, y ninguna comparación hay que más al vivo nos represente lo que somos y lo que habemos de ser como la comedia y los comediantes. Si no, dime: ¿no has visto tú representar alguna comedia adonde se introducen reyes, emperadores y pontífices, caballeros, damas y otros diversos personajes? Uno hace el rufián, otro el embustero, éste el mercader, aquél el soldado, otro el simple discreto, otro el enamorado simple; y, acabada la comedia y desnudándose de los vestidos della, quedan todos los recitantes iguales.

-Sí he visto -respondió Sancho.

-Pues lo mismo -dijo don Quijote-acontece en la comedia y trato deste mundo, donde unos hacen los emperadores, otros los pontífices, y, finalmente, todas cuantas figuras se pueden introducir en una comedia; pero, en llegando al fin, que es cuando se acaba la vida, a todos les quita la muerte las ropas que los diferenciaban, y quedan iguales en la sepultura.

-¡Brava comparación! -dijo Sancho-, aunque no tan nueva que yo no la haya oído muchas y diversas veces, como aquella del juego del ajedrez, que, mientras dura el juego, cada pieza tiene su particular oficio; y, en acabándose el juego, todas se mezclan, juntan y barajan, y dan con ellas en una bolsa, que es como dar con la vida en la sepultura.

-Cada día, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, te vas haciendo menos simple y más discreto.

-Sí, que algo se me ha de pegar de la discreción de vuestra merced -respondió Sancho-; que las tierras que de suyo son estériles y secas, estercolándolas y cultivándolas, vienen a dar buenos frutos: quiero decir que la conversación de vuestra merced ha sido el estiércol que sobre la estéril tierra de mi seco ingenio ha caído; la cultivación, el tiempo que ha que le sirvo y comunico; y con esto espero de dar frutos de mí que sean de bendición, tales, que no desdigan ni deslicen de los senderos de la buena crianza que vuestra merced ha hecho en el agostado entendimiento mío.

Rióse don Quijote de las afectadas razones de Sancho, y parecióle ser verdad lo que decía de su emienda, porque de cuando en cuando hablaba de manera que le admiraba; puesto que todas o las más veces que Sancho quería hablar de oposición y a lo cortesano, acababa su razón con despenarse del monte de su simplicidad al profundo de su ignorancia; y en lo que él se mostraba más elegante y memorioso era en traer refranes, viniesen o no viniesen a pelo de lo que trataba, como se habrá visto y se habrá notado en el discurso desta historia.

En estas y en otras pláticas se les pasó gran parte de la noche, y a Sancho le vino en voluntad de dejar caer las compuertas de los ojos, como él decía cuando quería dormir, y, desaliñando al rucio, le dio pasto abundoso y libre. No quitó la silla a Rocinante, por ser expreso mandamiento de su señor que, en el tiempo que anduviesen en campaña, o no durmiesen debajo de techado, no desaliñase a Rocinante: antigua usanza establecida y guardada de los andantes caballeros, quitar el freno y colgarle del arzón de la silla; pero, ¿quitar la silla al caballo?, ¡guarda!; y así lo hizo Sancho, y le dio la misma libertad que al rucio, cuya amistad dél y de Rocinante fue tan única y tan trabada, que hay fama, por tradición de padres a hijos, que el autor desta verdadera historia hizo particulares capítulos della; mas que, por guardar la decencia y decoro que a tan heroica historia se debe, no los puso en ella, puesto que algunas veces se descuida deste su prosupuesto, y escribe que, así como las dos bestias se juntaban, acudían a rascarse el uno al otro, y que, después de cansados y satisfechos, cruzaba Rocinante el pescuezo sobre el cuello del rucio (que le sobraba de la otra parte más de media vara), y, mirando los dos atentamente al suelo, se solían estar de aquella manera tres días; a lo menos, todo el tiempo que les dejaban, o no les compelia la hambre a buscar sustento.

Digo que dicen que dejó el autor escrito que los había comparado en la amistad a la que tuvieron Niso y Euríalo, y Pílates y Orestes; y si esto es así, se podía echar de ver, para universal admiración, cuán firme debió ser la amistad destos dos pacíficos animales, y para confusión de los hombres, que tan mal saben guardarse amistad los unos a los otros. Por esto se dijo:

No hay amigo para amigo:
las cañas se vuelven lanzas;

y el otro que cantó:
De amigo a amigo la chinche, etc.

Y no le parezca a alguno que anduvo el autor algo fuera de camino en haber comparado la amistad destos animales a la de los hombres, que de las bestias han recibido muchos advertimientos los hombres y aprendido muchas cosas de importancia, como son: de las cigüeñas, el cristel; de los perros, el vómito y el agradecimiento; de las grullas, la vigilancia; de las hormigas, la providencia; de los elefantes, la honestidad, y la lealtad, del caballo.

Finalmente, Sancho se quedó dormido al pie de un alcornoque, y don Quijote dormitando al de una robusta encina; pero, poco espacio de tiempo había pasado, cuando le despertó un ruido que sintió a sus espaldas, y, levantándose con sobresalto, se puso a mirar y a escuchar de dónde el ruido procedía, y vio que eran dos hombres a caballo, y que el uno, dejándose derribar de la silla, dijo al otro:

-Apéate, amigo, y quita los frenos a los caballos, que, a mi parecer, este sitio abunda de yerba para ellos, y del silencio y soledad que han menester mis amorosos pensamientos.

El decir esto y el tenderse en el suelo todo fue a un mismo tiempo; y, al arrojarse, hicieron ruido las armas de que venía armado, manifiesta señal por donde conoció don Quijote que debía de ser caballero andante; y, llegándose a Sancho, que dormía, le trabó del brazo, y con no pequeño trabajo le volvió en su acuerdo, y con voz baja le dijo:

-Hermano Sancho, aventura tenemos.

-Dios nos la dé buena -respondió Sancho-; y ¿adónde está, señor mío, su merced de esa señora aventura?

-¿Adónde, Sancho? -replicó don Quijote-; vuelve los ojos y mira, y verás allí tendido un andante caballero, que, a lo que a mí se me trasluce, no debe de estar demasiadamente alegre, porque le vi arrojar del caballo y tenderse en el suelo con algunas muestras de despecho, y al caer le crujieron las armas.

-Pues ¿en qué halla vuesa merced -dijo Sancho-que ésta sea aventura?

-No quiero yo decir -respondió don Quijote-que ésta sea aventura del todo, sino principio della; que por aquí se comienzan las aventuras. Pero escucha, que, a lo que parece, templando está un laúd o vigüela, y, según escupe y se desembaraza el pecho, debe de prepararse para cantar algo.

-A buena fe que es así -respondió Sancho-, y que debe de ser caballero enamorado.

-No hay ninguno de los andantes que no lo sea -dijo don Quijote-. Y escuchémosle, que por el hilo sacaremos el ovillo de sus pensamientos, si es que canta; que de la abundancia del corazón habla la lengua.

Replicar quería Sancho a su amo, pero la voz del Caballero del Bosque, que no era muy mala ni muy buena, lo estorbó; y, estando los dos atónitos, oyeron que lo que cantó fue este soneto:

-Dadme, señora, un término que siga, conforme a vuestra voluntad cortado;
que será de la mía así estimado, que por jamás un punto dél desdiga.

Si gustáis que callando mi fatiga   5
muera, contadme ya por acabado:
si queréis que os la cuente en desusado modo, haré que el mismo amor la diga.

A prueba de contrarios estoy hecho, de blanda cera y de diamante duro,   10
y a las leyes de amor el alma ajusto.

Blando cual es, o fuerte, ofrezco el pecho:
entallad o imprimid lo que os dé gusto, que de guardarlo eternamente juro.

Con un ¡ay!, arrancado, al parecer, de lo íntimo de su corazón, dio fin a su canto el Caballero del Bosque; y, de allí a un poco, con voz doliente y lastimada, dijo:

-¡Oh la más hermosa y la más ingrata mujer del orbe! ¿Cómo que será posible, serenísima Casildea de Vandalia, que has de consentir que se consuma y acabe en continuas peregrinaciones y en ásperos y duros trabajos este tu cautivo caballero? ¿No basta ya que he hecho que te confiesen por la más hermosa del mundo todos los caballeros de Navarra, todos los leoneses, todos los tartesios, todos los castellanos y, finalmente, todos los caballeros de la Mancha?

-Eso no -dijo a esta sazón don Quijote-, que yo soy de la Mancha y nunca tal he confesado, ni podía ni debía confesar una cosa tan perjudicial a la belleza de mi señora; y este tal caballero ya vees tú, Sancho, que desvaría. Pero, escuchemos: quizá se declarará más.

-Sí hará -replicó Sancho-, que término lleva de quejarse un mes arreo.

Pero no fue así, porque, habiendo entreoído el Caballero del Bosque que hablaban cerca dél, sin pasar adelante en su lamentación, se puso en pie, y dijo con voz sonora y comedida:

-¿Quién va allá? ¿Qué gente? ¿Es por ventura de la del número de los contentos, o la del de los afligidos?

-De los afligidos -respondió don Quijote.

-Pues lléguese a mí -respondió el del Bosque-, y hará cuenta que se llega a la misma tristeza y a la aflicción misma.

Don Quijote, que se vio responder tan tierna y comedidamente, se llegó a él, y Sancho ni más ni menos.

El caballero lamentador asió a don Quijote del brazo, diciendo:

-Sentaos aquí, señor caballero, que para entender que lo sois, y de los que profesan la andante caballería, bástame el haberos hallado en este lugar, donde la soledad y el sereno os hacen compañía, naturales lechos y propias estancias de los caballeros andantes.

A lo que respondió don Quijote:

-Caballero soy, y de la profesión que decís; y, aunque en mi alma tienen su propio asiento las tristezas, las desgracias y las desventuras, no por eso se ha ahuyentado della la compasión que tengo de las ajenas desdichas. De lo que contaste poco ha, colegí que las vuestras son enamoradas, quiero decir, del amor que tenéis a aquella hermosa ingrata que en vuestras lamentaciones nombrastes.

Ya cuando esto pasaban estaban sentados juntos sobre la dura tierra, en buena paz y compañía, como si al romper del día no se hubieran de romper las cabezas.

-Por ventura, señor caballero -preguntó el del Bosque a don Quijote-, ¿sois enamorado?

-Por desventura lo soy -respondió don Quijote-; aunque los daños que nacen de los bien colocados pensamientos, antes se deben tener por gracias que por desdichas.

-Así es la verdad -replicó el del Bosque-, si no nos turbasen la razón y el entendimiento los desdenes, que, siendo muchos, parecen venganzas.

-Nunca fui desdeñado de mi señora -respondió don Quijote.

-No, por cierto -dijo Sancho, que allí junto estaba-, porque es mi señora como una borrega mansa: es más blanda que una manteca.

-¿Es vuestro escudero éste? -preguntó el del Bosque.

-Sí es -respondió don Quijote.

-Nunca he visto yo escudero -replicó el del Bosque-que se atreva a hablar donde habla su señor; a lo menos, ahí está ese mío, que es tan grande como su padre, y no se probará que haya desplegado el labio donde yo hablo.

-Pues a fe -dijo Sancho-, que he hablado yo, y puedo hablar delante de otro tan..., y aun quédese aquí, que es peor meneallo.

El escudero del Bosque asió por el brazo a Sancho, diciéndole:

-Vámonos los dos donde podamos hablar escuderilmente todo cuanto quisiéremos, y dejemos a estos señores amos nuestros que se den de las astas, contándose las historias de sus amores; que a buen seguro que les ha de coger el día en ellas y no las han de haber acabado.

-Sea en buena hora -dijo Sancho-; y yo le diré a vuestra merced quién soy, para que vea si puedo entrar en docena con los más hablantes escuderos.

Con esto se apartaron los dos escuderos, entre los cuales pasó un tan gracioso coloquio como fue grave el que pasó entre sus señores.

Capítulo XIII

Donde se prosigue la aventura del Caballero del Bosque, con el discreto, nuevo y suave coloquio que pasó entre los dos escuderos

DIVIDIDOS estaban caballeros y escuderos: éstos contándose sus vidas, y aquéllos sus amores; pero la historia cuenta primero el razonamiento de los mozos y luego prosigue el de los amos; y así, dice que, apartándose un poco dellos, el del Bosque dijo a Sancho:

-Trabajosa vida es la que pasamos y vivimos, señor mío, estos que somos escuderos de caballeros andantes: en verdad que comemos el pan en el sudor de nuestros rostros, que es una de las maldiciones que echó Dios a nuestros primeros padres.

-También se puede decir -añadió Sancho-que lo comemos en el yelo de nuestros cuerpos; porque, ¿quién más calor y más frío que los miserables escuderos de la andante caballería? Y aun menos mal si comiéramos, pues los duelos, con pan son menos; pero tal vez hay que se nos pasa un día y dos sin desayunarnos, si no es del viento que sopla.

-Todo eso se puede llevar y conllevar -dijo el del Bosque-, con la esperanza que tenemos del premio; porque si demasiadamente no es desgraciado el caballero andante a quien un escudero sirve, por lo menos, a pocos lances se verá premiado con un hermoso gobierno de cualquier ínsula, o con un condado de buen parecer.

-Yo -replicó Sancho-ya he dicho a mi amo que me contento con el gobierno de alguna ínsula; y él es tan noble y tan liberal, que me le ha prometido muchas y diversas veces.

-Yo -dijo el del Bosque-, con un canonicato quedará satisfecho de mis servicios, y ya me le tiene mandado mi amo, y ¡qué tal!

-Debe de ser -dijo Sancho-su amo de vuesa merced caballero a lo eclesiástico, y podrá hacer esas mercedes a sus buenos escuderos; pero el mío es meramente lego, aunque yo me acuerdo cuando le querían aconsejar personas discretas, aunque, a mi parecer mal intencionadas, que procurase ser arzobispo; pero él no quiso sino ser emperador, y yo estaba entonces temblando si le venía en voluntad de ser de la Iglesia, por no hallarme suficiente de tener beneficios por ella; porque le hago saber a vuesa merced que, aunque parezco hombre, soy una bestia para ser de la Iglesia.

-Pues en verdad que lo yerra vuesa merced -dijo el del Bosque-, a causa que los gobiernos insulanos no son todos de buena data. Algunos hay torcidos, algunos pobres, algunos malencónicos, y finalmente, el más erguido y bien dispuesto trae consigo una pesada carga de pensamientos y de incomodidades, que pone sobre sus hombros el desdichado que le cupo en suerte. Harto mejor sería que los que profesamos esta maldita servidumbre nos retirásemos a nuestras casas, y allí nos entretuviésemos en ejercicios más suaves, como si dijésemos, cazando o pescando; que, ¿qué escudero hay tan pobre en el mundo, a quien le falte un rocín, y un par de galgos, y una caña de pescar, con que entretenerse en su aldea?

-A mí no me falta nada deso -respondió Sancho-: verdad es que no tengo rocín, pero tengo un asno que vale dos veces más que el caballo de mi amo. Mala pascua me dé Dios, y sea la primera que viniere, si le trocara por él, aunque me diesen cuatro fanegas de cebada encima. A burla tendrá vuesa merced el valor de mi rucio, que rucio es el color de mi jumento. Pues galgos no me habían de faltar, habiéndolos sobrados en mi pueblo; y más, que entonces es la caza más gustosa cuando se hace a costa ajena.

-Real y verdaderamente -respondió el del Bosque-, señor escudero, que tengo propuesto y determinado de dejar estas borracherías destos caballeros, y retirarme a mi aldea, y criar mis hijitos, que tengo tres como tres orientales perlas.

-Dos tengo yo -dijo Sancho-, que se pueden presentar al Papa en persona, especialmente una muchacha a quien crío para condesa, si Dios fuere servido, aunque a pesar de su madre.

-Y ¿qué edad tiene esa señora que se cría para condesa? -preguntó el del Bosque.

-Quince años, dos más a menos -respondió Sancho-, pero es tan grande como una lanza, y tan fresca como una mañana de abril, y tiene una fuerza de un ganapán.

-Partes son éstas -respondió el del Bosque-no sólo para ser condesa, sino para ser ninfa del verde bosque. ¡Oh hideputa, puta, y qué rejoy debe de tener la bellaca!

A lo que respondió Sancho, algo mohíno:

-Ni ella es puta, ni lo fue su madre, ni lo será ninguna de las dos, Dios quiriendo, mientras yo viviere. Y hállese más comedidamente, que, para haberse criado vuesa merced entre caballeros andantes, que son la misma cortesía, no me parecen muy concertadas esas palabras.

-¡Oh, qué mal se le entiende a vuesa merced -replicó el del Bosque-de achaque de alabanzas, señor escudero! ¿Cómo y no sabe que cuando algún caballero da una buena lanzada al toro en la plaza, o cuando alguna persona hace alguna cosa bien hecha, suele decir el vulgo: «¡Oh hideputa, puto, y qué bien que lo ha hecho!?» Y aquello que parece vituperio, en aquel término, es alabanza notable; y renegad vos, señor, de los hijos o hijas que no hacen obras que merezcan se les den a sus padres loores semejantes.

-Sí reniego -respondió Sancho-, y dese modo y por esa misma razón podía echar vuestra merced a mí y hijos y a mi mujer toda una putería encima, porque todo cuanto hacen y dicen son extremos dignos de semejantes alabanzas, y para volverlos a ver ruego yo a Dios me saque de pecado mortal, que lo mesmo será si me saca deste peligroso oficio de escudero, en el cual he incurrido segunda vez, cebado y engañado de una bolsa con cien ducados que me hallé un día en el corazón de Sierra Morena, y el diablo me pone ante los ojos aquí, allí, acá no, sino acullá, un talego lleno de doblones, que me parece que a cada paso le toco con la mano, y me abrazo con él, y lo llevo a mi casa, y echo censos, y fundo rentas, y vivo como un príncipe; y el rato que en esto pienso se me hacen fáciles y llevaderos cuantos trabajos padezco con este mentecato de mi amo, de quien sé que tiene más de loco que de caballero.

-Por eso -respondió el del Bosque-dicen que la codicia rompe el saco; y si va a tratar dellos, no hay otro mayor en el mundo que mi amo, porque es de aquellos que dicen: «Cuidados ajenos matan al asno»; pues, porque cobre otro caballero el juicio que ha perdido, se hace el loco, y anda buscando lo que no sé si después de hallado le ha de salir a los hocicos.

-Y ¿es enamorado, por dicha?

-Sí -dijo el del Bosque-: de una tal Casildea de Vandalia, la más cruda y la más asada señora que en todo el orbe puede hallarse; pero no cojea del pie de la crudeza, que otros mayores embustes le gruñen en las entrañas, y ello dirá antes de muchas horas.

-No hay camino tan llano -replicó Sancho-que no tenga algún tropezón o barranco; en otras casas cuecen habas, y en la mía, a calderadas; más acompañados y paniaguados debe de tener la locura que la discreción. Mas si es verdad lo que comúnmente se dice, que el tener compañeros en los trabajos suele servir de alivio en ellos, con vuestra merced podré consolarme, pues sirve a otro amo tan tonto como el mío.

-Tonto, pero valiente -respondió el del Bosque-, y más bellaco que tonto y que valiente.

-Eso no es el mío -respondió Sancho-: digo, que no tiene nada de bellaco; antes tiene una alma como un cántaro: no sabe hacer mal a nadie, sino bien a todos, ni tiene malicia alguna: un niño le hará entender que es de noche en la mitad del día; y por esta sencillez le quiero como a las telas de mi corazón, y no me amaño a dejarle, por más disparates que haga.

-Con todo eso, hermano y señor -dijo el del Bosque-, si el ciego guía al ciego, ambos van a peligro de caer en el hoyo. Mejor es retirarnos con buen compás de pies, y volvernos a nuestras querencias; que los que buscan aventuras no siempre las hallan buenas.

Escupía Sancho a menudo, al parecer, un cierto género de saliva pegajosa y algo seca; lo cual visto y notado por el caritativo bosqueril escudero, dijo:

-Paréceme que de lo que hemos hablado se nos pegan al paladar las lenguas; pero yo traigo un despegador pendiente del arzón de mi caballo, que es tal como bueno.

Y, levantándose, volvió desde allí a un poco con una gran bota de vino y una empanada de media vara; y no es encarecimiento, porque era de un conejo albar, tan grande que Sancho, al tocarla, entendió ser de algún cabrón, no que de cabrito; lo cual visto por Sancho, dijo:

-Y ¿esto trae vuestra merced consigo, señor?

-Pues ¿qué se pensaba? -respondió el otro-. ¿Soy yo por ventura algún escudero de agua y lana? Mejor repuesto traigo yo en las ancas de mi caballo que lleva consigo cuando va de camino un general.

Comió Sancho sin hacerse de rogar, y tragaba a oscuras bocados de nudos de suelta. Y dijo:

-Vuestra merced sí que es escudero fiel y legal, moliente y corriente, magnífico y grande, como lo muestra este banquete, que si no ha venido aquí por arte de encantamento, parécelo, a lo menos; y no como yo, mezquino y malaventurado, que sólo traigo en mis alforjas un poco de queso, tan duro que pueden descalabrar con ello a un gigante, a quien hacen compañía cuatro docenas de algarrobas y otras tantas de avellanas y nueces, mercedes a la estrechez de mi dueño, y a la opinión que tiene y orden que guarda de que los caballeros andantes no se han de mantener y sustentar sino con frutas secas y con las yerbas del campo.

-Por mi fe, hermano -replicó el del Bosque-, que yo no tengo hecho el estómago a tagarninas, ni a piruétanos, ni a raíces de los montes. Allá se lo hayan con sus opiniones y leyes caballerescas nuestros amos, y coman lo que ellos mandaren. Fiambreras traigo, y esta bota colgando del arzón de la silla, por sí o por no; y es tan devota mía y quiérola tanto, que pocos ratos se pasan sin que la dé mil besos y mil abrazos.

Y, diciendo esto, se la puso en las manos a Sancho, el cual, empinándola, puesta a la boca, estuvo mirando las estrellas un cuarto de hora, y, en acabando de beber, dejó caer la cabeza a un lado, y, dando un gran suspiro, dijo:

-¡Oh hideputa bellaco, y cómo es católico!

-¿Veis ahí -dijo el del Bosque, en oyendo el hideputa de Sancho-, cómo habéis alabado este vino llamándole hideputa?

-Digo -respondió Sancho-, que confieso que conozco que no es deshonra llamar hijo de puta a nadie, cuando cae debajo del entendimiento de alabarle. Pero dígame, señor, por el siglo de lo que más quiere: ¿este vino es de Ciudad Real?

-¡Bravo mojón! -respondió el del Bosque-. En verdad que no es de otra parte, y que tiene algunos años de ancianidad.

-¡A mí con eso! -dijo Sancho-. No toméis menos, sino que se me fuera a mí por alto dar alcance a su conocimiento. ¿No será bueno, señor escudero, que tenga yo un instinto tan grande y tan natural, en esto de conocer vinos, que, en dándome a oler cualquiera, acierto la patria, el linaje, el sabor, y la dura, y las vueltas que ha de dar, con todas las circunstancias al vino atañederas? Pero no hay de qué maravillarse, si tuve en mi linaje por parte de mi padre los dos más excelentes mojonos que en luengos años conoció la Mancha; para prueba de lo cual les sucedió lo que ahora diré: «Diéronles a los dos a probar del vino de una cuba, pidiéndoles su parecer del estado, cualidad, bondad o malicia del vino. El uno lo probó con la punta de la lengua, el otro no hizo más de llegarlo a las narices. El primero dijo que aquel vino sabía a hierro, el segundo dijo que más sabía a cordobán. El dueño dijo que la cuba estaba limpia, y que el tal vino no tenía adobo alguno por donde hubiese tomado sabor de hierro ni de cordobán. Con todo eso, los dos famosos mojonos se afirmaron en lo que habían dicho. Anduvo el tiempo, vendióse el vino, y al limpiar de la cuba hallaron en ella una llave pequeña, pendiente de una correa de cordobán.» Porque vea vuestra merced si quien viene desta ralea podrá dar su parecer en semejantes causas.

-Por eso digo -dijo el del Bosque- que nos dejemos de andar buscando aventuras; y, pues tenemos hogazas, no busquemos tortas, y volvámonos a nuestras chozas, que allí nos hallará Dios, si Él quiere.

-Hasta que mi amo llegue a Zaragoza, le serviré; que después todos nos entenderemos.

Finalmente, tanto hablaron y tanto bebieron los dos buenos escuderos, que tuvo necesidad el sueño de atarles las lenguas y temprarles la sed, que quitársela fuera imposible; y así, asidos entrambos de la ya casi vacía bota, con los bocados a medio mascar en la boca, se quedaron dormidos, donde los dejaremos por ahora, por contar lo que el Caballero del Bosque pasó con el de la Triste Figura.

Capítulo XIV

Donde se prosigue la aventura del Caballero del Bosque

ENTRE muchas razones que pasaron don Quijote y el Caballero de la Selva, dice la historia que el del Bosque dijo a don Quijote:

-Finalmente, señor caballero, quiero que sepáis que mi destino, o, por mejor decir, mi elección, me trujo a enamorar de la sin par Casildea de Vandalia. Llámola sin par porque no le tiene, así en la grandeza del cuerpo como en el extremo del estado y de la hermosura. Esta tal Casildea, pues, que voy contando, pagó mis buenos pensamientos y comedidos deseos con hacerme ocupar, como su madrina a Hércules, en muchos y diversos peligros, prometiéndome al fin de cada uno que en el fin del otro llegaría el de mi esperanza; pero así se han ido eslabonando mis trabajos, que no tienen cuento, ni yo sé cuál ha de ser el último que dé principio al cumplimiento de mis buenos deseos. Una vez me mandó que fuese a desafiar a aquella famosa gigantea de Sevilla llamada la Giralda, que es tan valiente y fuerte como hecha de bronce, y, sin mudarse de un lugar, es la más movible y voltaria mujer del mundo. Llegué, vila, y vencíla, y hícela estar queda y a raya, porque en más de una semana no soplaron sino vientos nortes. Vez también hubo que me mandó fuese a tomar en peso las antiguas piedras de los valientes Toros de Guisando, empresa más para encomendarse a ganapanes que a caballeros. Otra vez me mandó que me precipitase y sumiese en la sima de Cabra, peligro inaudito y temeroso, y que le trujese particular relación de lo que en aquella oscura profundidad se encierra. Detuve el movimiento a la Giralda, pesé los Toros de Guisando, despeñéme en la sima y saqué a luz lo escondido de su abismo: y mis esperanzas, muertas que muertas, y sus mandamientos y desdenes, vivos que vivos. En resolución, últimamente me ha mandado que discurra por todas las provincias de España y haga confesar a todos los andantes caballeros que por ellas vagaren que ella sola es la más aventajada en hermosura de cuantas hoy viven, y que yo soy el más valiente y el más bien enamorado caballero del orbe; en cuya demanda he andado ya la mayor parte de España, y en ella he vencido muchos caballeros que se han atrevido a contradecirme. Pero de lo que yo más me precio y ufano es de haber vencido, en singular batalla, a aquel tan famoso caballero don Quijote de la Mancha, y héchole confesar que es más hermosa mi Casildea que su Dulcinea; y en solo este vencimiento hago cuenta que he vencido todos los caballeros del mundo, porque el tal don Quijote que digo los ha vencido a todos; y, habiéndole yo vencido a él, su gloria, su fama y su honra se ha transferido y pasado a mi persona;

y tanto el vencedor es más honrado, cuanto más el vencido es reputado;

así que, ya corren por mi cuenta y son más las innumerables hazañas del ya referido don Quijote.

Admirado quedó don Quijote de oír al Caballero del Bosque, y estuvo mil veces por decirle que mentía, y ya tuvo el mentís en el pico de la lengua; pero reportóse lo mejor que pudo, por hacerle confesar por su propia boca su mentira; y así, sosegadamente le dijo:

-De que vuesa merced, señor caballero, haya vencido a los más caballeros andantes de España, y aun de todo el mundo, no digo nada; pero de que haya vencido a don Quijote de la Mancha, póngolo en duda. Podría ser que fuese otro que le pareciese, aunque hay pocos que le parezcan.

-¿Cómo no? -replicó el del Bosque-. Por el cielo que nos cubre, que peleé con don Quijote, y le vencí y rendí; y es un hombre alto de cuerpo, seco de rostro, estirado y avellanado de miembros, entrecano, la nariz aguileña y algo corva, de bigotes grandes, negros y caídos. Campea debajo del nombre del Caballero de la Triste Figura, y trae por escudero a un labrador llamado Sancho Panza; oprime el lomo y rige el freno de un famoso caballo llamado Rocinante, y, finalmente, tiene por señora de su voluntad a una tal Dulcinea del Toboso, llamada un tiempo Aldonza Lorenzo; como la mía, que, por llamarse Casilda y ser de la Andalucía, yo la llamo Casildea de Vandalia. Si todas estas señas no bastan para acreditar mi verdad, aquí está mi espada, que la hará dar crédito a la misma incredulidad.

-Sosegaos, señor caballero -dijo don Quijote-, y escuchad lo que deciros quiero. Habéis de saber que ese don Quijote que decís es el mayor amigo que en este mundo tengo, y tanto, que podré decir que le tengo en lugar de mi misma persona, y que por las señas que dél me habéis dado, tan puntuales y ciertas, no puedo pensar sino que sea el mismo que habéis vencido. Por otra parte, veo con los ojos y toco con las manos no ser posible ser el mismo, si ya no fuese que como él tiene muchos enemigos encantadores, especialmente uno que de ordinario le persigue, no haya alguno dellos tomado su figura para dejarse vencer, por defraudarle de la fama que sus altas caballerías le tienen granjeada y adquirida por todo lo descubierto de la tierra. Y, para confirmación desto, quiero también que sepáis que los tales encantadores sus contrarios no ha más de dos días que transformaron la figura y persona de la hermosa Dulcinea del Toboso en una aldeana soez y baja, y desta manera habrán transformado a don Quijote; y si todo esto no basta para enteraros en esta verdad que digo, aquí está el mismo don Quijote, que la sustentará con sus armas a pie, o a caballo, o de cualquiera suerte que os agradare.

Y, diciendo esto, se levantó en pie y se empuñó en la espada, esperando qué resolución tomaría el Caballero del Bosque; el cual, con voz asimismo sosegada, respondió y dijo:

-Al buen pagador no le duelen prendas: el que una vez, señor don Quijote, pudo venceros transformado, bien podrá tener esperanza de rendiros en vuestro propio ser. Mas, porque no es bien que los caballeros hagan sus fechos de armas ascuras, como los salteadores y rufianes, esperemos el día, para que el sol vea nuestras obras. Y ha de ser condición de nuestra batalla que el vencido ha de quedar a la voluntad del vencedor, para que haga dél todo lo que quisiere, con tal que sea decente a caballero lo que se le ordenare.

-Soy más que contento desa condición y convenencia -respondió don Quijote.

Y, en diciendo esto, se fueron donde estaban sus escuderos, y los hallaron roncando y en la misma forma que estaban cuando les salteó el sueño. Despertáronlos y mandáronles que tuviesen a punto los caballos, porque, en saliendo el sol, habían de hacer los dos una sangrienta, singular y desigual batalla; a cuyas nuevas quedó Sancho atónito y pasmado, temeroso de la salud de su amo, por las valentías que había oído decir del suyo al escudero del Bosque; pero, sin hablar palabra, se fueron los dos escuderos a buscar su ganado, que ya todos tres caballos y el rucio se habían olido, y estaban todos juntos.

En el camino dijo el del Bosque a Sancho:

-Ha de saber, hermano, que tienen por costumbre los peleantes de la Andalucía, cuando son padrinos de alguna pendencia, no estarse ociosos mano sobre mano en tanto que sus ahijados riñen. Dígolo porque esté advertido que mientras nuestros dueños riñeren, nosotros también hemos de pelear y hacernos astillas.

-Esa costumbre, señor escudero -respondió Sancho-, allá puede correr y pasar con los rufianes y peleantes que dice, pero con los escuderos de los caballeros andantes, ni por pienso. A lo menos, yo no he oído decir a mi amo semejante costumbre, y sabe de memoria todas las ordenanzas de la andante caballería. Cuanto más, que yo quiero que sea verdad y ordenanza expresa el pelear los escuderos en tanto que sus señores pelean; pero yo no quiero cumplirla, sino pagar la pena que estuviere puesta a los tales pacíficos escuderos, que yo aseguro que no pase de dos libras de cera, y más quiero pagar las tales libras, que sé que me costarán menos que las hilas que podré gastar en curarme la cabeza, que ya me la cuento por partida y dividida en dos partes. Hay más: que me imposibilita el reñir el no tener espada, pues en mi vida me la puse.

-Para eso sé yo un buen remedio -dijo el del Bosque-: yo traigo aquí dos talegas de lienzo, de un mesmo tamaño: tomaréis vos la una, y yo la otra, y riñiremos a talegazos, con armas iguales.

-Desa manera, sea en buena hora -respondió Sancho-, porque antes servirá la tal pelea de despolvorearnos que de herirnos.

-No ha de ser así -replicó el otro-, porque se han de echar dentro de las talegas, porque no se las lleve el aire, media docena de guijarros lindos y pelados, que pesen tanto los unos como los otros, y desta manera nos podremos atalegar sin hacernos mal ni daño.

-¡Mirad, cuerpo de mi padre -respondió Sancho-, qué martas cebollinas, o qué copos de algodón cardado pone en las talegas, para no quedar molidos los cascós y hechos alheña los huesos! Pero, aunque se llenaran de capullos de seda, sepa, señor mío, que no he de pelear: peleen nuestros amos, y allá se lo hayan, y bebamos y vivamos nosotros, que el tiempo tiene cuidado de quitarnos las vidas, sin que andemos buscando apetites para que se acaben antes de llegar su sazón y término y que se cayan de maduras.

-Con todo -replicó el del Bosque-, hemos de pelear siquiera media hora.

-Eso no -respondió Sancho-: no seré yo tan descortés ni tan desagradecido, que con quien he comido y he bebido trabe cuestión alguna, por mínima que sea; cuanto más que, estando sin cólera y sin enojo, ¿quién diablos se ha de amañar a reñir a secas?

-Para eso -dijo el del Bosque- yo daré un suficiente remedio: y es que, antes que comencemos la pelea, yo me llegaré bonitamente a vuestra merced y le daré tres o cuatro bofetadas, que dé con él a mis pies, con las cuales le haré despertar la cólera, aunque esté con más sueño que un lirón.

-Contra ese corte sé yo otro -respondió Sancho-, que no le va en zaga: cogeré yo un garrote, y, antes que vuestra merced llegue a despertarme la cólera, haré yo dormir a garrotazos de tal suerte la suya, que no despierte si no fuere en el otro mundo, en el cual se sabe que no soy yo hombre que me dejen manosear el rostro de nadie; y cada uno mire por el virote, aunque lo más acertado sería dejar dormir su cólera a cada uno, que no sabe nadie el alma de nadie, y tal suele venir por lana que vuelve tresquilado; y Dios bendijo la paz y maldijo las riñas, porque si un gato acosado, encerrado y apretado se vuelve en león, yo, que soy hombre, Dios sabe en lo que podré volverme; y así, desde ahora intimo a vuestra merced, señor escudero, que corra por su cuenta todo el mal y daño que de nuestra pendencia resultare.

pajarillos, y en sus diversos y alegres cantos parecía que daban la norabuena y saludaban a la fresca aurora, que ya por las puertas y balcones del oriente iba descubriendo la hermosura de su rostro, sacudiendo de sus cabellos un número infinito de líquidas perlas, en cuyo suave licor bañándose las yerbas, parecía asimesmo que ellas brotaban y llovían blanco y menudo aljófár; los sauces destilaban maná sabroso, reíanse las fuentes, murmuraban los arroyos, alegrábanse las selvas y enriquecíanse los prados con su venida. Mas, apenas dio lugar la claridad del día para ver y diferenciar las cosas, cuando la primera que se ofreció a los ojos de Sancho Panza fue la nariz del escudero del Bosque, que era tan grande que casi le hacía sombra a todo el cuerpo. Cuéntase, en efecto, que era de demasiada grandeza, corva en la mitad y toda llena de verrugas, de color amoratado, como de berenjena; bajábale dos dedos más abajo de la boca; cuya grandeza, color, verrugas y encorvamiento así le afeaban el rostro, que, en viéndole Sancho, comenzó a herir de pie y de mano, como niño con alferecía, y propuso en su corazón de dejarse dar docientas bofetadas antes que despertar la cólera para reñir con aquel vestiglo.

Don Quijote miró a su contendor, y hallóle ya puesta y calada la celada, de modo que no le pudo ver el rostro, pero notó que era hombre membrudo, y no muy alto de cuerpo. Sobre las armas traía una sobrevista o casaca de una tela, al parecer, de oro finísimo, sembradas por ella muchas lunas pequeñas de resplandecientes espejos, que le hacían en grandísima manera galán y vistoso; volábanle sobre la celada grande cantidad de plumas verdes, amarillas y blancas; la lanza, que tenía arrimada a un árbol, era grandísima y gruesa, y de un hierro acerado de más de un palmo.

Todo lo miró y todo lo notó don Quijote, y juzgó de lo visto y mirado que el ya dicho caballero debía de ser de grandes fuerzas; pero no por eso temió, como Sancho Panza; antes, con gentil denuedo, dijo al Caballero de los Espejos:

-Si la mucha gana de pelear, señor caballero, no os gasta la cortesía, por ella os pido que alcéis la visera un poco, porque yo vea si la gallardía de vuestro rostro responde a la de vuestra disposición.

-O vencido o vencedor que salgáis desta empresa, señor caballero -respondió el de los Espejos-, os quedará tiempo y espacio demasiado para verme; y si ahora no satisfago a vuestro deseo, es por parecerme que hago notable agravio a la hermosa Casildea de Vandalia en dilatar el tiempo que tardare en alzarme la visera, sin haceros confesar lo que ya sabéis que pretendo.

-Pues, en tanto que subimos a caballo -dijo don Quijote-, bien podéis decirme si soy yo aquel don Quijote que dijistes haber vencido.

-A eso vos respondemos -dijo el de los Espejos- que parecéis, como se parece un huevo a otro, al mismo caballero que yo vencí; pero, según vos decís que le persiguen encantadores, no osaré afirmar si sois el contenido o no.

-Eso me basta a mí -respondió don Quijote-para que crea vuestro engaño; empero, para sacaros dél de todo punto, vengan nuestros caballos; que, en menos tiempo que el que tardáades en alzaros la visera, si Dios, si mi señora y mi brazo me valen, veré yo vuestro rostro, y vos veréis que no soy yo el vencido don Quijote que pensáis.

Con esto, acortando razones, subieron a caballo, y don Quijote volvió las riendas a Rocinante para tomar lo que convenía del campo, para volver a encontrar a su contrario, y lo mismo hizo el de los Espejos. Pero, no se había apartado don Quijote veinte pasos, cuando se oyó llamar del de los Espejos, y, partiendo los dos el camino, el de los Espejos le dijo:

-Advertid, señor caballero, que la condición de nuestra batalla es que el vencido, como otra vez he dicho, ha de quedar a discreción del vencedor.

-Ya la sé -respondió don Quijote-; con tal que lo que se le impusiere y mandare al vencido han de ser cosas que no salgan de los límites de la caballería.

-Así se entiende -respondió el de los Espejos.

Ofreciéronsele en esto a la vista de don Quijote las estrañas narices del escudero, y no se admiró menos de verlas que Sancho; tanto, que le juzgó por algún monstro, o por hombre nuevo y de aquellos que no se usan en el mundo. Sancho, que vio partir a su amo para tomar carrera, no quiso quedar solo con el narigudo, temiendo que con solo un pasagonzalo con aquellas narices en las suyas sería acabada la pendencia suya, quedando del golpe, o del miedo, tendido en el suelo, y fuese tras su amo, asido a una acción de Rocinante; y, cuando le pareció que ya era tiempo que volviese, le dijo:

-Suplico a vuesa merced, señor mío, que antes que vuelva a encontrarse me ayude a subir sobre aquel alcornoque, de donde podré ver más a mi sabor, mejor que desde el suelo, el gallardo encuentro que vuesa merced ha de hacer con este caballero.

-Antes creo, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, que te quieres encaramar y subir en andamio por ver sin peligro los toros.

-La verdad que diga -respondió Sancho-, las desaforadas narices de aquel escudero me tienen atónito y lleno de espanto, y no me atrevo a estar junto a él.

-Ellas son tales -dijo don Quijote-, que, a no ser yo quien soy, también me asombraran; y así, ven: ayudarte he a subir donde dices.

En lo que se detuvo don Quijote en que Sancho subiese en el alcornoque, tomó el de los Espejos del campo lo que le pareció necesario; y, creyendo que lo mismo habría hecho don Quijote, sin esperar son de trompeta ni otra señal que los avisase, volvió las riendas a su caballo -que no era más ligero ni de mejor parecer que Rocinante-, y, a todo su correr, que era un mediano trote, iba a encontrar a su enemigo; pero, viéndole ocupado en la subida de Sancho, detuvo las riendas y paróse en la mitad de la carrera, de lo que el caballo quedó agradecidísimo, a causa que ya no podía moverse. Don Quijote, que le pareció que ya su enemigo venía volando, arrimó reciamente las espuelas a las trasijadas ijadas de Rocinante, y le hizo aguijar de manera, que cuenta la historia que esta sola vez se conoció haber corrido algo, porque todas las demás siempre fueron trotes declarados; y con esta no vista furia llegó donde el de los Espejos estaba hincando a su caballo las espuelas hasta los botones, sin que le pudiese mover un solo dedo del lugar donde había hecho estanco de su carrera.

En esta buena sazón y coyuntura halló don Quijote a su contrario embarazado con su caballo y ocupado con su lanza, que nunca, o no acertó, o no tuvo lugar de ponerla en ristre. Don Quijote, que no miraba en estos inconvenientes, a salvamano y sin peligro alguno, encontró al de los Espejos con tanta fuerza, que mal de su grado le hizo venir al suelo por las ancas del caballo, dando tal caída, que, sin mover pie ni mano, dio señales de que estaba muerto.

Apenas le vio caído Sancho, cuando se deslizó del alcornoque y a toda priesa vino donde su señor estaba, el cual, apeándose de Rocinante, fue sobre el de los Espejos, y, quitándole las lazadas del yelmo para ver si era muerto y para que le diese el aire si acaso estaba vivo; y vio... ¿Quién podrá decir lo que vio, sin causar admiración, maravilla y espanto a los que lo oyeren? Vio, dice la historia, el rostro mismo, la misma figura, el mismo aspecto, la misma fisonomía, la misma efigie, la pespetiva misma del bachiller Sansón Carrasco; y, así como la vio, en altas voces dijo:

-¡Acude, Sancho, y mira lo que has de ver y no lo has creer! ¡Aguija, hijo, y advierte lo que puede la magia, lo que pueden los hechiceros y los encantadores!

Llegó Sancho, y, como vio el rostro del bachiller Carrasco, comenzó a hacerse mil cruces y a santiguarse otras tantas. En todo esto, no daba muestras de estar vivo el derribado caballero, y Sancho dijo a don Quijote:

-Soy de parecer, señor mío, que, por sí o por no, vuesa merced hincue y meta la espada por la boca a este que parece el bachiller Sansón Carrasco; quizá matará en él a alguno de sus enemigos los encantadores.

-No dices mal -dijo don Quijote-, porque de los enemigos, los menos.

Y, sacando la espada para poner en efecto el aviso y consejo de Sancho, llegó el escudero del de los Espejos, ya sin las narices que tan feo le habían hecho, y a grandes voces dijo:

-Mire vuesa merced lo que hace, señor don Quijote, que ese que tiene a los pies es el bachiller Sansón Carrasco, su amigo, y yo soy su escudero.

Y, viéndole Sancho sin aquella fealdad primera, le dijo:

-¿Y las narices?

A lo que él respondió:

-Aquí las tengo, en la faldriquera.

Y, echando mano a la derecha, sacó unas narices de pasta y barniz, de máscara, de la manifatura que quedan delineadas. Y, mirándole más y más Sancho, con voz admirativa y grande, dijo:

-¡Santa María, y valme! ¿Éste no es Tomé Cecial, mi vecino y mi compadre?

-Y ¡cómo si lo soy! -respondió el ya desnarigado escudero-: Tomé Cecial soy, compadre y amigo Sancho Panza, y luego os diré los arcaduces, embustes y enredos por donde soy aquí venido; y en tanto, pedid y suplicad al señor vuestro amo que no toque, maltrate, hiera ni mate al caballero de los Espejos, que a sus pies tiene, porque sin duda alguna es el atrevido y mal aconsejado del bachiller Sansón Carrasco, nuestro compatrioto.

En esto, volvió en sí el de los Espejos, lo cual visto por don Quijote, le puso la punta desnuda de su espada encima del rostro, y le dijo:

-Muerto sois, caballero, si no confesáis que la sin par Dulcinea del Toboso se aventaja en belleza a vuestra Casildea de Vandalia; y demás de esto habéis de prometer, si de esta contienda y caída quedárades con vida, de ir a la ciudad del Toboso y presentaros en su presencia de mi parte, para que haga de vos lo que más en voluntad le viniere; y si os dejare en la vuestra, asimismo habéis de volver a buscarme, que el rastro de mis hazañas os servirá de guía que os traiga donde yo estuviere, y a decirme lo que con ella hubiéredes pasado; condiciones que, conforme a las que pusimos antes de nuestra batalla, no salen de los términos de la andante caballería.

-Confieso -dijo el caído caballero-que vale más el zapato descosido y sucio de la señora Dulcinea del Toboso que las barbas mal peinadas, aunque limpias, de Casildea, y prometo de ir y volver de su presencia a la vuestra, y daros entera y particular cuenta de lo que me pedís.

-También habéis de confesar y creer -añadió don Quijote-que aquel caballero que vencistes no fue ni pudo ser don Quijote de la Mancha, sino otro que se le parecía, como yo confieso y creo que vos, aunque parecéis el bachiller Sansón Carrasco, no lo sois, sino otro que le parece, y que en su figura aquí me le han puesto mis enemigos, para que detenga y temple el ímpetu de mi cólera, y para que use blandamente de la gloria del vencimiento.

-Todo lo confieso, juzgo y siento como vos lo creéis, juzgáis y sentís -respondió el derrengado caballero-. Dejadme levantar, os ruego, si es que lo permite el golpe de mi caída, que asaz maltrecho me tiene.

Ayudóle a levantar don Quijote y Tomé Cecial, su escudero, del cual no apartaba los ojos Sancho, preguntándole cosas cuyas respuestas le daban manifiestas señales de que verdaderamente era el Tomé Cecial que decía; mas la aprehensión que en Sancho había hecho lo que su amo dijo, de que los encantadores habían mudado la figura del Caballero de los Espejos en la del bachiller Carrasco, no le dejaba dar crédito a la verdad que con los ojos estaba mirando. Finalmente, se quedaron con este engaño amo y mozo, y el de los Espejos y su escudero, mohínos y malandantes, se apartaron de don Quijote y Sancho, con intención de buscar algún lugar donde bizmarle y entablarle las costillas. Don Quijote y Sancho volvieron a proseguir su camino de Zaragoza, donde los deja la historia, por dar cuenta de quién era el Caballero de los Espejos y su narigante escudero.

Capítulo XV

Donde se cuenta y da noticia de quién era el Caballero de los Espejos y su escudero

EN ESTREMO contento, ufano y vanaglorioso iba don Quijote por haber alcanzado vitoria de tan valiente caballero como él se imaginaba que era el de los Espejos, de cuya caballeresca palabra esperaba saber si el encantamento de su señora pasaba adelante, pues era forzoso que el tal vencido caballero volviese, so pena de no serlo, a darle razón de lo que con ella le hubiese sucedido. Pero uno pensaba don Quijote y otro el de los Espejos, puesto que por entonces no era otro su pensamiento sino buscar donde bismarse, como se ha dicho.

Dice, pues, la historia que cuando el bachiller Sansón Carrasco aconsejó a don Quijote que volviese a proseguir sus dejadas caballerías, fue por haber entrado primero en bureo con el cura y el barbero sobre qué medio se podría tomar para reducir a don Quijote a que se estuviese en su casa quieto y sosegado, sin que le alborotasen sus mal buscadas aventuras; de cuyo consejo salió, por voto común de todos y parecer particular de Carrasco, que dejasen salir a don Quijote, pues el detenerle parecía imposible, y que Sansón le saliese al camino como caballero andante, y trabase batalla con él, pues no faltaría sobre qué, y le venciese, teniéndolo por cosa fácil, y que fuese pacto y concierto que el vencido quedase a merced del vencedor; y así vencido don Quijote, le había de mandar el bachiller caballero se volviese a su pueblo y casa, y no saliese della en dos años, o hasta tanto que por él le fuese mandado otra cosa; lo cual era claro que don Quijote vencido cumpliría indubitablemente, por no contravenir y faltar a las leyes de la caballería, y podría ser que en el tiempo de su reclusión se le olvidasen sus vanidades, o se diese lugar de buscar a su locura algún conveniente remedio.

Aceptólo Carrasco, y ofreciósele por escudero Tomé Cecial, compadre y vecino de Sancho Panza, hombre alegre y de lucios cascos. Armóse Sansón como queda referido y Tomé Cecial acomodó sobre sus naturales narices las falsas y de máscara ya dichas, porque no fuese conocido de su compadre cuando se viesen; y así, siguieron el mismo viaje que llevaba don Quijote, y llegaron casi a hallarse en la aventura del carro de la Muerte. Y, finalmente, dieron con ellos en el bosque, donde les sucedió todo lo que el prudente ha leído; y si no fuera por los pensamientos extraordinarios de don Quijote, que se dio a entender que el bachiller no era el bachiller, el señor bachiller quedara imposibilitado para

Tomé Cecial, que vio cuán mal había logrado sus deseos y el mal paradero que había tenido su camino, dijo al bachiller:

-Por cierto, señor Sansón Carrasco, que tenemos nuestro merecido: con facilidad se piensa y se acomete una empresa, pero con dificultad las más veces se sale della. Don Quijote loco, nosotros cuerdos: él se va sano y riendo, vuesa merced queda molido y triste. Sepamos, pues, ahora, cuál es más loco: ¿el que lo es por no poder menos, o el que lo es por su voluntad?

A lo que respondió Sansón:

-La diferencia que hay entre esos dos locos es que el que lo es por fuerza lo será siempre, y el que lo es de grado lo dejará de ser cuando quisiere.

-Pues así es -dijo Tomé Cecial-, yo fui por mi voluntad loco cuando quise hacerme escudero de vuestra merced, y por la misma quiero dejar de serlo y volverme a mi casa.

-Eso os cumple -respondió Sansón-, porque pensar que yo he de volver a la mía, hasta haber molido a palos a don Quijote, es pensar en lo escusado; y no me llevará ahora a buscarle el deseo de que cobre su juicio, sino el de la venganza; que el dolor grande de mis costillas no me deja hacer más piadosos discursos.

En esto fueron razonando los dos, hasta que llegaron a un pueblo donde fue ventura hallar un algebrista, con quien se curó el Sansón desgraciado. Tomé Cecial se volvió y le dejó, y él quedó imaginando su venganza; y la historia vuelve a hablar dél a su tiempo, por no dejar de regocijarse ahora con don Quijote.

Capítulo XVI

De lo que sucedió a don Quijote con un discreto caballero de la Mancha

CON LA ALEGRÍA, contento y ufanidad que se ha dicho, seguía don Quijote su jornada, imaginándose por la pasada vitoria ser el caballero andante más valiente que tenía en aquella edad el mundo; daba por acabadas y a felice fin conducidas cuantas aventuras pudiesen sucederle de allí adelante; tenía en poco a los encantos y a los encantadores; no se acordaba de los innumerables palos que en el discurso de sus caballerías le habían dado, ni de la pedrada que le derribó la mitad de los dientes, ni del desagradecimiento de los galeotes, ni del atrevimiento y lluvia de estacas de los yangüeses. Finalmente, decía entre sí que si él hallara arte, modo o manera como desencantar a su señora Dulcinea, no invidiara a la mayor ventura que alcanzó o pudo alcanzar el más venturoso caballero andante de los pasados siglos. En estas imaginaciones iba todo ocupado, cuando Sancho le dijo:

-¿No es bueno, señor, que aun todavía traigo entre los ojos las desaforadas narices, y mayores de marca, de mi compadre Tomé Cecial?

-Y ¿crees tú, Sancho, por ventura, que el Caballero de los Espejos era el bachiller Carrasco; y su escudero, Tomé Cecial, tu compadre?

-No sé qué me diga a eso -respondió Sancho-; sólo sé que las señas que me dio de mi casa, mujer y hijos no me las podría dar otro que él mismo; y la cara, quitadas las narices, era la misma de Tomé Cecial, como yo se la he visto muchas veces en mi pueblo y pared en medio de mi misma casa; y el tono de la habla era todo uno.

-Estemos a razón, Sancho -replicó don Quijote-. Ven acá: ¿en qué consideración puede caber que el bachiller Sansón Carrasco viniese como caballero andante, armado de armas ofensivas y defensivas, a pelear conmigo? ¿He sido yo su enemigo por ventura? ¿Hele dado yo jamás ocasión para tenerme ojeriza? ¿Soy yo su rival, o hace él profesión de las armas, para tener invidia a la fama que yo por ellas he ganado?

-Pues, ¿qué diremos, señor -respondió Sancho-, a esto de parecerse tanto aquel caballero, sea el que se fuere, al bachiller Carrasco, y su escudero a Tomé Cecial, mi compadre? Y si ello es encantamento, como vuestra merced ha dicho, ¿no había en el mundo otros dos a quien se parecieran?

-Todo es artificio y traza -respondió don Quijote- de los malignos magos que me persiguen, los cuales, anteviendo que yo había de quedar vencedor en la contienda, se previnieron de que el caballero vencido mostrase el rostro de mi amigo el bachiller, porque la amistad que le tengo se pusiese entre los filos de mi espada y el rigor de mi brazo, y templase la justa ira de mi corazón, y desta manera quedase con vida el que con embelecocos y falsías procuraba quitarme la mía. Para prueba de lo cual ya sabes, ¡oh Sancho!, por experiencia que no te dejará mentir ni engañar, cuán fácil sea a los encantadores mudar unos rostros en otros, haciendo de lo hermoso feo y de lo feo hermoso, pues no ha dos días que viste por tus mismos ojos la hermosura y gallardía de la sin par Dulcinea en toda su entereza y natural conformidad, y yo la vi en la fealdad y bajeza de una zafia labradora, con cataratas en los ojos y con mal olor en la boca; y más, que el perverso encantador que se atrevió a hacer una transformación tan mala no es mucho que haya hecho la de Sansón Carrasco y la de tu compadre, por quitarme la gloria del vencimiento de las manos. Pero, con todo esto, me consuelo; porque, en fin, en cualquiera figura que haya sido, he quedado vencedor de mi enemigo.

Y como él sabía que la transformación de Dulcinea había sido traza y embelecoco suyo, no le satisfacían las quimeras de su amo; pero no le quiso replicar, por no decir alguna palabra que descubriese su embuste.

En estas razones estaban cuando los alcanzó un hombre que detrás dellos por el mismo camino venía sobre una muy hermosa yegua tordilla, vestido un gabán de paño fino verde, jironado de terciopelo leonado, con una montera del mismo terciopelo; el aderezo de la yegua era de campo y de la jineta, asimismo de morado y verde. Traía un alfanje morisco pendiente de un ancho tahalí de verde y oro, y los borceguíes eran de la labor del tahalí; las espuelas no eran doradas, sino dadas con un barniz verde, tan tersas y bruñidas que, por hacer labor con todo el vestido, parecían mejor que si fuera de oro puro. Cuando llegó a ellos, el caminante los saludó cortésmente, y, picando a la yegua, se pasaba de largo; pero don Quijote le dijo:

-Señor galán, si es que vuestra merced lleva el camino que nosotros y no importa el darse priesa, merced recibiría en que nos fuésemos juntos.

-En verdad -respondió el de la yegua-que no me pasara tan de largo, si no fuera por temor que con la compañía de mi yegua no se alborotara ese caballo.

-Bien puede, señor -respondió a esta sazón Sancho-, bien puede tener las riendas a su yegua, porque nuestro caballo es el más honesto y bien mirado del mundo: jamás en semejantes ocasiones ha hecho vileza alguna, y una vez que se desmandó a hacerla la lastamos mi señor y yo con las setenas. Digo otra vez que puede vuestra merced detenerse, si quisiere; que, aunque se la den entre dos platos, a buen seguro que el caballo no la arrostre.

Detuvo la rienda el caminante, admirándose de la apostura y rostro de don Quijote, el cual iba sin celada, que la llevaba Sancho como maleta en el arzón delantero de la albarda del rucio; y si mucho miraba el de lo verde a don Quijote, mucho más miraba don Quijote al de lo verde, pareciéndole hombre de chapa. La edad mostraba ser de cincuenta años; las canas, pocas, y el rostro, aguileño; la vista, entre alegre y grave; finalmente, en el traje y apostura daba a entender ser hombre de buenas prendas.

Lo que juzgó de don Quijote de la Mancha el de lo verde fue que semejante manera ni parecer de hombre no le había visto jamás: admiróle la longura de su caballo, la grandeza de su cuerpo, la flaqueza y amarillez de su rostro, sus armas, su ademán y compostura: figura y retrato no visto por luengos tiempos atrás en aquella tierra. Notó bien don Quijote la atención con que el caminante le miraba, y leyóle en la suspensión su deseo; y, como era tan cortés y tan amigo de dar gusto a todos, antes que le preguntase nada, le salió al camino, diciéndole:

-Esta figura que vuesa merced en mí ha visto, por ser tan nueva y tan fuera de las que comúnmente se usan, no me maravillaría yo de que le hubiese maravillado; pero dejaré vuesa merced de estarlo cuando le diga, como le digo, que soy caballero

Salí de mi patria, empecé mi hacienda, dejé mi regalo, y entreguéme en los brazos de la Fortuna, que me llevasen donde más fuese servida. Quise resucitar la ya muerta andante caballería, y ha muchos días que, tropezando aquí, cayendo allí, despeñándome acá y levantándome acullá, he cumplido gran parte de mi deseo, socorriendo viudas, amparando doncellas y favoreciendo casadas, huérfanos y pupilos, propio y natural oficio de caballeros andantes; y así, por mis valerosas, muchas y cristianas hazañas he merecido andar ya en estampa en casi todas o las más naciones del mundo. Treinta mil volúmenes se han impreso de mi historia, y lleva camino de imprimirse treinta mil veces de millares, si el cielo no lo remedia. Finalmente, por encerrarlo todo en breves palabras, o en una sola, digo que yo soy don Quijote de la Mancha, por otro nombre llamado el Caballero de la Triste Figura; y, puesto que las propias alabanzas envilecen, esme forzoso decir yo tal vez las mías, y esto se entiende cuando no se halla presente quien las diga; así que, señor gentilhombre, ni este caballo, esta lanza, ni este escudo, ni escudero, ni todas juntas estas armas, ni la amarillez de mi rostro, ni mi atenuada flaqueza, os podrá admirar de aquí adelante, habiendo ya sabido quién soy y la profesión que hago.

Calló en diciendo esto don Quijote, y el de lo verde, según se tardaba en responderle, parecía que no acertaba a hacerlo; pero de allí a buen espacio le dijo:

-Acertastes, señor caballero, a conocer por mi suspensión mi deseo; pero no habéis acertado a quitarme la maravilla que en mí causa el haberos visto; que, puesto que, como vos, señor, decís, que el saber ya quién sois me lo podría quitar, no ha sido así; antes, agora que lo sé, quedo más suspenso y maravillado. ¿Cómo y es posible que hay hoy caballeros andantes en el mundo, y que hay historias impresas de verdaderas caballerías? No me puedo persuadir que haya hoy en la tierra quien favorezca viudas, ampare doncellas, ni honre casadas, ni socorra huérfanos, y no lo creyera si en vuesa merced no lo hubiera visto con mis ojos. ¡Bendito sea el cielo!, que con esa historia, que vuesa merced dice que está impresa, de sus altas y verdaderas caballerías, se habrán puesto en olvido las innumerables de los fingidos caballeros andantes, de que estaba lleno el mundo, tan en daño de las buenas costumbres y tan en perjuicio y descrédito de las buenas historias.

-Hay mucho que decir -respondió don Quijote-en razón de si son fingidas, o no, las historias de los andantes caballeros.

-Pues, ¿hay quien dude -respondió el Verde-que no son falsas las tales historias?

-Yo lo dudo -respondió don Quijote-, y quédese esto aquí; que si nuestra jornada dura, espero en Dios de dar a entender a vuesa merced que ha hecho mal en irse con la corriente de los que tienen por cierto que no son verdaderas.

Desta última razón de don Quijote tomó barruntos el caminante de que don Quijote debía de ser algún mentecato, y aguardaba que con otras lo confirmase; pero, antes que se divertiesen en otros razonamientos, don Quijote le rogó le dijese quién era, pues él le había dado parte de su condición y de su vida. A lo que respondió el del Verde Gabán:

-Yo, señor Caballero de la Triste Figura, soy un hidalgo natural de un lugar donde iremos a comer hoy, si Dios fuere servido. Soy más que medianamente rico y es mi nombre don Diego de Miranda; paso la vida con mi mujer, y con mis hijos, y con mis amigos; mis ejercicios son el de la caza y pesca, pero no mantengo ni halcón ni galgos, sino algún perdigón manso, o algún hurón atrevido. Tengo hasta seis docenas de libros, cuáles de romance y cuáles de latín, de historia algunos y de devoción otros; los de caballerías aún no han entrado por los umbrales de mis puertas. Hojeo más los que son profanos que los devotos, como sean de honesto entretenimiento, que deleiten con el lenguaje y admiren y suspendan con la invención, puesto que éstos hay muy pocos en España. Alguna vez como con mis vecinos y amigos, y muchas veces los convido; son mis convites limpios y aseados, y no nada escasos; ni gusto de murmurar, ni consiento que delante de mí se murmure; no escudriño las vidas ajenas, ni soy lince de los hechos de los otros; oigo misa cada día; reparto de mis bienes con los pobres, sin hacer alarde de las buenas obras, por no dar entrada en mi corazón a la hipocresía y vanagloria, enemigos que blandamente se apoderan del corazón más recatado; procuro poner en paz los que sé que están desavenidos; soy devoto de nuestra Señora, y confío siempre en la misericordia infinita de Dios nuestro Señor.

Atentísimo estuvo Sancho a la relación de la vida y entretenimientos del hidalgo; y, pareciéndole buena y santa y que quien la hacía debía de hacer milagros, se arrojó del rucio, y con gran priesa le fue a asir del estribo derecho, y con devoto corazón y casi lágrimas le besó los pies una y muchas veces. Visto lo cual por el hidalgo, le preguntó:

-¿Qué hacéis, hermano? ¿Qué besos son éstos?

-Déjenme besar -respondió Sancho-, porque me parece vuesa merced el primer santo a la jineta que he visto en todos los días de mi vida.

-No soy santo -respondió el hidalgo-, sino gran pecador; vos sí, hermano, que debéis de ser bueno, como vuestra simplicidad lo muestra.

Volvió Sancho a cobrar la albarda, habiendo sacado a plaza la risa de la profunda malencolía de su amo y causado nueva admiración a don Diego. Preguntóle don Quijote que cuántos hijos tenía, y díjole que una de las cosas en que ponían el sumo bien los antiguos filósofos, que carecieron del verdadero conocimiento de Dios, fue en los bienes de la naturaleza, en los de la fortuna, en tener muchos amigos y en tener muchos y buenos hijos.

-Yo, señor don Quijote -respondió el hidalgo-, tengo un hijo, que, a no tenerle, quizá me juzgara por más dichoso de lo que soy; y no porque él sea malo, sino porque no es tan bueno como yo quisiera. Será de edad de diez y ocho años: los seis ha estado en Salamanca, aprendiendo las lenguas latina y griega; y, cuando quise que pasase a estudiar otras ciencias, halléle tan embebido en la de la poesía, si es que se puede llamar ciencia, que no es posible hacerle arrostrar la de las leyes, que yo quisiera que estudiara, ni de la reina de todas, la teología. Quisiera yo que fuera corona de su linaje, pues vivimos en siglo donde nuestros reyes premian altamente las virtuosas y buenas letras; porque letras sin virtud son perlas en el muladar. Todo el día se le pasa en averiguar si dijo bien o mal Homero en tal verso de la Ilíada; si Marcial anduvo deshonesto, o no, en tal epigrama; si se han de entender de una manera o otra tales y tales versos de Virgilio. En fin, todas sus conversaciones son con los libros de los referidos poetas, y con los de Horacio, Persio, Juvenal y Tibulo; que de los modernos romancistas no hace mucha cuenta; y, con todo el mal cariño que muestra tener a la poesía de romance, le tiene agora desvanecidos los pensamientos el hacer una glosa a cuatro versos que le han enviado de Salamanca, y pienso que son de justa literaria.

-Los hijos, señor, son pedazos de las entrañas de sus padres, y así, se han de querer, o buenos o malos que sean, como se quieren las almas que nos dan vida; a los padres toca el encaminarlos desde pequeños por los pasos de la virtud, de la buena crianza y de las buenas y cristianas costumbres, para que cuando grandes sean báculo de la vejez de sus padres y gloria de su posteridad; y en lo de forzarles que estudien esta o aquella ciencia no lo tengo por acertado, aunque el persuadirles no será dañoso; y cuando no se ha de estudiar para pane lucrando, siendo tan venturoso el estudiante que le dio el cielo padres que se lo dejen, sería yo de parecer que le dejen seguir aquella ciencia a que más le vieren inclinado; y, aunque la de la poesía es menos útil que deleitable, no es de aquellas que suelen deshonorar a quien las posee. La poesía, señor hidalgo, a mi parecer, es como una doncella tierna y de poca edad, y en todo extremo hermosa, a quien tienen cuidado de enriquecer, pulir y adornar otras muchas doncellas, que son todas las otras ciencias, y ella se ha de servir de todas, y todas se han de autorizar con ella; pero esta tal doncella no quiere ser manoseada, ni traída por las calles, ni publicada por las esquinas de las plazas ni por los rincones de los palacios. Ella es hecha de una alquimia de tal virtud, que quien la sabe tratar la volverá en oro purísimo de inestimable precio; hala de tener, el que la tuviere, a raya, no dejándola correr en torpes sátiras ni en desalmados sonetos; no ha de ser vendible en ninguna manera, si ya no fuere en poemas heroicos, en lamentables tragedias, o en comedias alegres y artificiosas; no se ha de dejar tratar de los truhanes, ni del ignorante vulgo, incapaz de conocer ni estimar los tesoros que en ella se encierran. Y no penséis, señor, que yo llamo aquí vulgo solamente a la gente plebeya y humilde; que todo aquel que no sabe, aunque sea señor y príncipe, puede y debe entrar en número de vulgo. Y así, el que con los requisitos que he dicho tratare y tuviere a la poesía, será famoso y estimado su nombre en todas las naciones políticas del mundo. Y a lo que decís, señor, que vuestro hijo no estima mucho la poesía de romance, doyme a entender que no anda muy acertado en ello, y la razón es ésta: el grande Homero no escribió en latín, porque era griego, ni Virgilio no escribió en griego, porque era latino. En resolución, todos los poetas antiguos escribieron en la lengua que mamaron en la leche, y no fueron a buscar las extranjeras para declarar la alteza de sus conceptos. Y, siendo esto así, razón sería se estendiese esta costumbre por todas las naciones, y que no se desestimase el poeta alemán porque escribe en su lengua, ni el castellano, ni aun el vizcaíno, que escribe en la suya. Pero vuestro hijo, a lo que yo, señor, imagino, no debe de estar mal con la poesía de romance, sino con los poetas que son meros romancistas, sin saber otras lenguas ni otras ciencias que adornen y despierten y ayuden a su natural impulso; y aun en esto puede haber yerro; porque, según es opinión verdadera, el poeta nace: quieren decir que del vientre de su madre el poeta natural sale poeta; y, con aquella inclinación que le dio el cielo, sin más estudio ni artificio, compone cosas, que hace verdadero al que dijo: est Deus in nobis..., etcétera. También digo que el natural poeta que se ayudare del arte será mucho mejor y se aventajará al poeta que sólo por saber el arte quisiere serlo; la razón es porque el arte no se aventaja a la naturaleza, sino perficiónala; así que, mezcladas la naturaleza y el arte, y el arte con la naturaleza, sacarán un perfetísimo poeta. Sea, pues, la conclusión de mi plática, señor hidalgo, que vuesa merced deje caminar a su hijo por donde su estrella le llama; que, siendo él tan buen estudiante como debe de ser, y habiendo ya subido felicemente el primer escalón de las esencias, que es el de las lenguas, con ellas por sí mismo subirá a la cumbre de las letras humanas, las cuales tan bien parecen en un caballero de capa y espada, y así le adornan, honran y engrandecen, como las mitras a los obispos, o como las garnachas a los peritos jurisconsultos. Riña vuesa merced a su hijo si hiciere sátiras que perjudiquen las honras ajenas, y castíguele, y rómpaselas, pero si hiciere sermones al modo de Horacio, donde reprehenda los vicios en general, como tan elegantemente él lo hizo, alábele: porque lícito es al poeta escribir contra la invidia, y decir en sus versos mal de los envidiosos, y así de los otros vicios, con que no señale persona alguna; pero hay poetas que, a trueco de decir una malicia, se pondrán a peligro que los destierren a las islas de Ponto. Si el poeta fuere casto en sus costumbres, lo será también en sus versos; la pluma es lengua del alma: cuales fueren los conceptos que en ella se engendraren, tales serán sus escritos; y cuando los reyes y príncipes veen la milagrosa ciencia de la poesía en sujetos prudentes, virtuosos y graves, los honran, los estiman y los enriquecen, y aun los coronan con las hojas del árbol a quien no ofende el rayo, como en señal que no han de ser ofendidos de nadie los que con tales coronas veen honrados y adornadas sus sienes.

Admirado quedó el del Verde Gabán del razonamiento de don Quijote, y tanto, que fue perdiendo de la opinión que con él tenía, de ser mentecato. Pero, a la mitad desta plática, Sancho, por no ser muy de su gusto, se había desviado del camino a pedir un poco de leche a unos pastores que allí junto estaban ordeñando unas ovejas; y, en esto, ya volvía a renovar la plática el hidalgo, satisfecho en extremo de la discreción y buen discurso de don Quijote, cuando, alzando don Quijote la cabeza, vio que por el camino por donde ellos iban venía un carro lleno de banderas reales; y, creyendo que debía de ser alguna nueva aventura, a grandes voces llamó a Sancho que viniese a darle la celada. El cual Sancho, oyéndose llamar, dejó a los pastores, y a toda priesa picó al rucio, y llegó donde su amo estaba, a quien sucedió una espantosa y desatinada aventura.

Capítulo XVII

De donde se declaró el último punto y extremo adonde llegó y pudo llegar el inaudito ánimo de don Quijote, con la felicemente acabada aventura de los leones

CUENTA la historia que cuando don Quijote daba voces a Sancho que le trujese el yelmo, estaba él comprando unos requesones que los pastores le vendían; y, acosado de la mucha priesa de su amo, no supo qué hacer dellos, ni en qué traerlos, y, por no perderlos, que ya los tenía pagados, acordó de echarlos en la celada de su señor, y con este buen recado volvió a ver lo que le quería; el cual, en llegando, le dijo:

-Dame, amigo, esa celada; que yo sé poco de aventuras, o lo que allí descubro es alguna que me ha de necesitar, y me necesita, a tomar mis armas.

El del Verde Gabán, que esto oyó, tendió la vista por todas partes, y no descubrió otra cosa que un carro que hacia ellos venía, con dos o tres banderas pequeñas, que le dieron a entender que el tal carro debía de traer moneda de Su Majestad, y así se lo dijo a don Quijote; pero él no le dio crédito, siempre creyendo y pensando que todo lo que le sucediese habían de ser aventuras y más aventuras, y así, respondió al hidalgo:

-Hombre apercebido, medio combatido: no se pierde nada en que yo me aperciba, que sé por experiencia que tengo enemigos visibles e invisibles, y no sé cuándo, ni adónde, ni en qué tiempo, ni en qué figuras me han de acometer.

Y, volviéndose a Sancho, le pidió la celada; el cual, como no tuvo lugar de sacar los requesones, le fue forzoso dársela como estaba. Tomóla don Quijote, y, sin que echase de ver lo que dentro venía, con toda priesa se la encajó en la cabeza; y, como los requesones se apretaron y exprimieron, comenzó a correr el suero por todo el rostro y barbas de don Quijote, de lo que recibió tal susto, que dijo a Sancho:

-¿Qué será esto, Sancho, que parece que se me ablandan los cascos, o se me derriten los sesos, o que sudo de los pies a la cabeza? Y si es que sudo, en verdad que no es de miedo; sin duda creo que es terrible la aventura que agora quiere sucederme. Dame, si tienes, con que me limpie, que el copioso sudor me ciega los ojos.

Calló Sancho y dióle un paño, y dio con él gracias a Dios de que su señor no hubiese caído en el caso. Limpióse don Quijote y quitóse la celada por ver qué cosa era la que, a su parecer, le enfriaba la cabeza, y, viendo aquellas gachas blancas dentro de la celada, las llegó a las narices, y en oliéndolas dijo:

-Por vida de mi señora Dulcinea del Toboso, que son requesones los que aquí me has puesto, traidor, bergante y mal mirado escudero.

A lo que, con gran flema y disimulación, respondió Sancho:

-Si son requesones, démelos vuesa merced, que yo me los comeré... Pero cómalos el diablo, que debió de ser el que ahí los puso. ¿Yo había de tener atrevimiento de ensuciar el yelmo de vuesa merced? ¡Hallado le habéis el atrevido! A la fe, señor, a lo que Dios me da a entender, también debo yo de tener encantadores que me persiguen como a hechura y miembro de vuesa merced, y habrán puesto ahí esa inmundicia para mover a cólera su paciencia y hacer que me muela, como suele, las costillas. Pues en verdad que esta vez han dado salto en vago, que yo confío en el buen discurso de mi señor, que habrá considerado que ni yo tengo requesones, ni leche, ni otra cosa que lo valga, y que si la tuviera, antes la pusiera en mi estómago que en la celada.

-Todo puede ser -dijo don Quijote.

Y todo lo miraba el hidalgo, y de todo se admiraba, especialmente cuando, después de haberse limpiado don Quijote cabeza, rostro y barbas y celada, se la encajó; y, afirmándose bien en los estribos, requiriendo la espada y asiendo la lanza, dijo:

-Ahora, venga lo que veniere, que aquí estoy con ánimo de tomarme con el mismo Satanás en persona.

Llegó en esto el carro de las banderas, en el cual no venía otra gente que el carretero, en las mulas, y un hombre sentado en la delantera. Púsose don Quijote delante y dijo:

-¿Adónde vais, hermanos? ¿Qué carro es éste, qué lleváis en él y qué banderas son aquéstras?

A lo que respondió el carretero:

-El carro es mío; lo que va en él son dos bravos leones enjaulados, que el general de Orán envía a la corte, presentados a Su Majestad; las banderas son del rey nuestro señor, en señal que aquí va cosa suya.

-Y ¿son grandes los leones? -preguntó don Quijote.

-Tan grandes -respondió el hombre que iba a la puerta del carro-, que no han pasado mayores, ni tan grandes, de África a España jamás; y yo soy el leonero, y he pasado otros, pero como éstos, ninguno. Son hembra y macho; el macho va en esta jaula primera, y la hembra en la de atrás; y ahora van hambrientos porque no han comido hoy; y así, vuesa merced se desvíe, que es menester llegar presto donde les demos de comer.

A lo que dijo don Quijote, sonriéndose un poco:

-¿Leoncitos a mí? ¿A mí leoncitos, y a tales horas? Pues, ¡por Dios que han de ver esos señores que acá los envían si soy yo hombre que se espanta de leones! Apeaos, buen hombre, y, pues sois el leonero, abrid esas jaulas y echadme esas bestias fuera, que en mitad desta campaña les daré a conocer quién es don Quijote de la Mancha, a despecho y pesar de los encantadores que a mí los envían.

-¡Ta, ta! -dijo a esta sazón entre sí el hidalgo-, dado ha señal de quién es nuestro buen caballero: los requesones, sin duda, le han ablandado los cascos y madurado los sesos.

Llegóse en esto a él Sancho y díjole:

-Señor, por quien Dios es, que vuesa merced haga de manera que mi señor don Quijote no se tome con estos leones, que si se toma, aquí nos han de hacer pedazos a todos.

-Pues, ¿tan loco es vuestro amo -respondió el hidalgo-, que teméis, y creéis que se ha de tomar con tan fieros animales?

-No es loco -respondió Sancho-, sino atrevido.

-Yo haré que no lo sea -replicó el hidalgo.

Y, llegándose a don Quijote, que estaba dando prisa al leonero que abriese las jaulas, le dijo:

-Señor caballero, los caballeros andantes han de acometer las aventuras que prometen esperanza de salir bien dellas, y no aquellas que de en todo la quitan; porque la valentía que se entra en la jurisdicción de la temeridad, más tiene de locura que de fortaleza. Cuanto más, que estos leones no vienen contra vuesa merced, ni lo sueñan: van presentados a Su Majestad, y no será bien detenerlos ni impedirles su viaje.

-Váyase vuesa merced, señor hidalgo -respondió don Quijote-, a entender con su perdigón manso y con su hurón atrevido, y deje a cada uno hacer su oficio. Éste es el mío, y yo sé si vienen a mí, o no, estos señores leones.

Y, volviéndose al leonero, le dijo:

-¡Voto a tal, don bellaco, que si no abris luego luego las jaulas, que con esta lanza os he de coser con el carro!

El carretero, que vio la determinación de aquella armada fantasía, le dijo:

-Señor mío, vuestra merced sea servido, por caridad, dejarme desuncir las mulas y ponerme en salvo con ellas antes que se desenvainen los leones, porque si me las matan, quedaré rematado para toda mi vida; que no tengo otra hacienda sino este carro y estas mulas.

-¡Oh hombre de poca fe! -respondió don Quijote-, apéate y desunce, y haz lo que quisieres, que presto verás que trabajaste en vano y que pudieras ahorrar desta diligencia.

Apeóse el carretero y desunció a gran priesa, y el leonero dijo a grandes voces:

-Séanme testigos cuantos aquí están cómo contra mi voluntad y forzado abro las jaulas y suelto los leones, y de que protesto a este señor que todo el mal y daño que estas bestias hicieren corra y vaya por su cuenta, con más mis salarios y derechos. Vuestras mercedes, señores, se pongan en cobro antes que abra, que yo seguro estoy que no me han de hacer daño.

Otra vez le persuadió el hidalgo que no hiciese locura semejante, que era tentar a Dios acometer tal disparate. A lo que respondió don Quijote que él sabía lo que hacía. Respondióle el hidalgo que lo mirase bien, que él entendía que se engañaba.

-Ahora, señor -replicó don Quijote-, si vuesa merced no quiere ser oyente desta que a su parecer ha de ser tragedia, pique la tordilla y póngase en salvo.

Oído lo cual por Sancho, con lágrimas en los ojos le suplicó desistiese de tal empresa, en cuya comparación habían sido tortas y pan pintado la de los molinos de viento y la temerosa de los batanes, y, finalmente, todas las hazañas que había acometido en todo el discurso de su vida.

-Mire, señor -decía Sancho-, que aquí no hay encanto ni cosa que lo valga; que yo he visto por entre las verjas y resquicios de la jaula una uña de león verdadero, y saco por ella que el tal león, cuya debe de ser la tal uña, es mayor que una montaña.

-El miedo, a lo menos -respondió don Quijote-, te le hará parecer mayor que la mitad del mundo. Retírate, Sancho, y déjame; y si aquí muere, ya sabes nuestro antiguo concierto: acudirás a Dulcinea, y no te digo más.

A éstas añadió otras razones, con que quitó las esperanzas de que no había de dejar de proseguir su desvariado intento. Quisiera el del Verde Gabán oponérsele, pero viose desigual en las armas, y no le pareció cordura tomarse con un loco, que ya se lo había parecido de todo punto don Quijote; el cual, volviendo a dar priesa al leonero y a reiterar las amenazas, dio ocasión al hidalgo a que picase la yegua, y Sancho al rucio, y el carretero a sus mulas, procurando todos apartarse del carro lo más que pudiesen, antes que los leones se desembanastasen.

Lloraba Sancho la muerte de su señor, que aquella vez sin duda creía que llegaba en las garras de los leones; maldecía su ventura, y llamaba menguada la hora en que le vino al pensamiento volver a servirle; pero no por llorar y lamentarse dejaba de aporrear al rucio para que se alejase del carro. Viendo, pues, el leonero que ya los que iban huyendo estaban bien desviados, tornó a requerir y a intimar a don Quijote lo que ya le había requerido e intimado, el cual respondió que lo oía, y que no se curase de más intimaciones y requerimientos,

En el espacio que tardó el leonero en abrir la jaula primera, estuvo considerando don Quijote si sería bien hacer la batalla antes a pie que a caballo; y, en fin, se determinó de hacerla a pie, temiendo que Rocinante se espantaría con la vista de los leones. Por esto saltó del caballo, arrojó la lanza y embrazó el escudo, y, desenvainando la espada, paso ante paso, con maravilloso denuedo y corazón valiente, se fue a poner delante del carro, encomendándose a Dios de todo corazón, y luego a su señora Dulcinea.

Y es de saber que, llegando a este paso, el autor de esta verdadera historia exclama y dice: «¡Oh fuerte y, sobre todo encarecimiento, animoso don Quijote de la Mancha, espejo donde se pueden mirar todos los valientes del mundo, segundo y nuevo don Manuel de León, que fue gloria y honra de los españoles caballeros! ¿Con qué palabras contaré esta tan espantosa hazaña, o con qué razones la haré creíble a los siglos venideros, o qué alabanzas habrá que no te convengan y cuadren, aunque sean hipérboles sobre todos los hipérboles? Tú a pie, tú solo, tú intrépido, tú magnánimo, con sola una espada, y no de las del perrillo cortadoras, con un escudo no de muy luciente y limpio acero, estás aguardando y atendiendo los dos más fieros leones que jamás criaron las africanas selvas. Tus mismos hechos sean los que te alaben, valeroso manchego, que yo los dejo aquí en su punto por faltarme palabras con que encarecerlos».

Aquí cesó la referida exclamación del autor, y pasó adelante, anudando el hilo de la historia, diciendo que, visto el leonero ya puesto en postura a don Quijote, y que no podía dejar de soltar al león macho, so pena de caer en la desgracia del indignado y atrevido caballero, abrió de par en par la primera jaula, donde estaba, como se ha dicho, el león, el cual pareció de grandeza extraordinaria y de espantable y fea catadura. Lo primero que hizo fue revolverse en la jaula, donde venía echado, y tender la garra, y desperezarse todo; abrió luego la boca y bostezó muy despacio, y, con casi dos palmos de lengua que sacó fuera, se despolvoreó los ojos y se lavó el rostro; hecho esto, sacó la cabeza fuera de la jaula y miró a todas partes con los ojos hechos brasas, vista y ademán para poner espanto a la misma temeridad. Sólo don Quijote lo miraba atentamente, deseando que saltase ya del carro y viniese con él a las manos, entre las cuales pensaba hacerle pedazos.

Hasta aquí llegó el extremo de su jamás vista locura. Pero el generoso león, más comedido que arrogante, no haciendo caso de niñerías, ni de bravatas, después de haber mirado a una y otra parte, como se ha dicho, volvió las espaldas y enseñó sus traseras partes a don Quijote, y con gran flema y remanso se volvió a echar en la jaula. Viendo lo cual don Quijote, mandó al leonero que le diese de palos y le irritase para echarle fuera.

-Eso no haré yo -respondió el leonero-, porque si yo le instigo, el primero a quien hará pedazos será a mí mismo. Vuesa merced, señor caballero, se contente con lo hecho, que es todo lo que puede decirse en género de valentía, y no quiera tentar segunda fortuna. El león tiene abierta la puerta: en su mano está salir, o no salir; pero, pues no ha salido hasta ahora, no saldrá en todo el día. La grandeza del corazón de vuesa merced ya está bien declarada: ningún bravo peleante, según a mí se me alcanza, está obligado a más que a desafiar a su enemigo y esperarle en campaña; y si el contrario no acude, en él se queda la infamia, y el esperante gana la corona del vencimiento.

-Así es verdad -respondió don Quijote-: cierra, amigo, la puerta, y dame por testimonio, en la mejor forma que pudieres, lo que aquí me has visto hacer; conviene a saber: cómo tú abriste al león, yo le esperé, él no salió; volvíle a esperar, volvió a no salir y volvióse acostar. No debo más, y encantos afuera, y Dios ayude a la razón y a la verdad, y a la verdadera caballería; y cierra, como he dicho, en tanto que hago señas a los huidos y ausentes, para que sepan de tu boca esta hazaña.

Hízolo así el leonero, y don Quijote, poniendo en la punta de la lanza el lienzo con que se había limpiado el rostro de la lluvia de los requesones, comenzó a llamar a los que no dejaban de huir ni de volver la cabeza a cada paso, todos en tropa y antecogidos del hidalgo; pero, alcanzando Sancho a ver la señal del blanco paño, dijo:

-Que me maten si mi señor no ha vencido a las fieras bestias, pues nos llama.

Detuviéronse todos, y conocieron que el que hacía las señas era don Quijote; y, perdiendo alguna parte del miedo, poco a poco se vinieron acercando hasta donde claramente oyeron las voces de don Quijote, que los llamaba. Finalmente, volvieron al carro, y, en llegando, dijo don Quijote al carretero:

-Volved, hermano, a uncir vuestras mulas y a proseguir vuestro viaje; y tú, Sancho, dale dos escudos de oro, para él y para el leonero, en recompensa de lo que por mí se han detenido.

-Ésos daré yo de muy buena gana -respondió Sancho-; pero, ¿qué se han hecho los leones? ¿Son muertos, o vivos?

Entonces el leonero, menudamente y por sus pausas, contó el fin de la contienda, exagerando, como él mejor pudo y supo, el valor de don Quijote, de cuya vista el león, acobardado, no quiso ni osó salir de la jaula, puesto que había tenido un buen espacio abierta la puerta de la jaula; y que, por haber él dicho a aquel caballero que era tentar a Dios irritar al león para que por fuerza saliese, como él quería que se irritase, mal de su grado y contra toda su voluntad, había permitido que la puerta se cerrase.

-¿Qué te parece desto, Sancho? -dijo don Quijote-. ¿Hay encantos que valgan contra la verdadera valentía? Bien podrán los encantadores quitarme la ventura, pero el esfuerzo y el ánimo, será imposible.

Dio los escudos Sancho, unció el carretero, besó las manos el leonero a don Quijote por la merced recebida, y prometióle de contar aquella valerosa hazaña al mismo rey, cuando en la corte se viese.

-Pues, si acaso Su Majestad preguntare quién la hizo, diréisle que el Caballero de los Leones, que de aquí adelante quiero que en éste se trueque, cambie, vuelva y mude el que hasta aquí he tenido del Caballero de la Triste Figura; y en esto sigo la antigua usanza de los andantes caballeros, que se mudaban los nombres cuando querían, o cuando les venía a cuento.

Siguió su camino el carro, y don Quijote, Sancho y el del Verde Gabán prosiguieron el suyo.

En todo este tiempo no había hablado palabra don Diego de Miranda, todo atento a mirar y a notar los hechos y palabras de don Quijote, pareciéndole que era un cuerdo loco y un loco que tiraba a cuerdo. No había aún llegado a su noticia la primera parte de su historia; que si la hubiera leído, cesara la admiración en que lo ponían sus hechos y sus palabras, pues ya supiera el género de su locura; pero, como no la sabía, ya le tenía por cuerdo y ya por loco, porque lo que hablaba era concertado, elegante y bien dicho, y lo que hacía, disparatado, temerario y tonto. Y decía entre sí:

-¿Qué más locura puede ser que ponerse la celada llena de requesones y darse a entender que le ablandaban los cascos los encantadores? Y ¿qué mayor temeridad y disparate que querer pelear por fuerza con leones?

Destas imaginaciones y deste soliloquio le sacó don Quijote, diciéndole:

-¿Quién duda, señor don Diego de Miranda, que vuestra merced no me tenga en su opinión por un hombre disparatado y loco? Y no sería mucho que así fuese, porque mis obras no pueden dar testimonio de otra cosa. Pues, con todo esto, quiero que vuestra merced advierta que no soy tan loco ni tan menguado como debo de haberle parecido. Bien parece un gallardo caballero, a los ojos de su rey, en la mitad de una gran plaza, dar una lanzada con felice suceso a un bravo toro; bien parece un caballero, armado de resplandecientes armas, pasar la tela en alegres justas delante de las damas, y bien parecen todos aquellos caballeros que en ejercicios militares, o que lo parezcan, entretienen y alegran, y, si se puede decir, honran las cortes de sus príncipes; pero sobre todos éstos parece mejor un caballero andante, que por los desiertos, por las soledades, por las encrucijadas, por las selvas y por los montes anda buscando peligrosas aventuras, con intención de darles dichosa y bien afortunada cima, sólo por alcanzar gloriosa fama y duradera. Mejor parece, digo, un caballero andante, socorriendo a una viuda en algún despoblado, que un cortesano caballero, requebrando a una doncella en las ciudades. Todos los caballeros tienen sus particulares ejercicios: sirva a las damas el cortesano; autorice la corte de su rey con libreas; sustente los caballeros pobres con el espléndido plato de su mesa; concierte justas, mantenga torneos y muéstrase grande, liberal y magnífico, y buen cristiano, sobre todo, y desta manera cumplirá con sus precisas obligaciones. Pero el andante caballero busque los rincones del mundo; éntrese en los más intrincados laberintos; acometa a cada paso lo imposible; resista en los páramos despoblados los ardientes rayos del sol en la mitad del verano, y en el invierno la dura inclemencia de los vientos y de los yelos; no le asombren leones, ni le espanten vestiglos, ni atemoricen endriagos; que buscar éstos, acometer aquéllos y vencerlos a todos son sus principales y verdaderos ejercicios. Yo, pues, como me cupo en suerte ser uno del número de la andante caballería, no puedo dejar de acometer todo aquello que a mí me pareciere que cae debajo de la jurisdicción de mis ejercicios; y así, el acometer los leones que ahora acometí derechamente me tocaba, puesto que conocí ser temeridad esorbitante, porque bien sé lo que es valentía, que es una virtud que está puesta entre dos extremos viciosos, como son la cobardía y la temeridad; pero menos mal será que el que es valiente toque y suba al punto de temerario, que no que baje y toque en el punto de cobarde; que así como es más fácil venir el pródigo a ser liberal que al avaro, así es más fácil dar el temerario en verdadero valiente que no el cobarde subir a la verdadera valentía; y, en esto de acometer aventuras, créame vuesa merced, señor don Diego, que antes se ha de perder por carta de más que de menos, porque mejor suena en las orejas de los que lo oyen «el tal caballero es temerario y atrevido» que no «el tal caballero es tímido y cobarde».

-Digo, señor don Quijote -respondió don Diego-, que todo lo que vuesa merced ha dicho y hecho va nivelado con el fiel de la misma razón, y que entiendo que si las ordenanzas y leyes de la caballería andante se perdiesen, se hallarían en el pecho de vuesa merced como en su mismo depósito y archivo. Y démonos prisa, que se hace tarde, y lleguemos a mi aldea y casa, donde descansará vuestra merced del pasado trabajo, que si no ha sido del cuerpo, ha sido del espíritu, que suele tal vez redundar en cansancio del cuerpo.

Y, picando más de lo que hasta entonces, serían como las dos de la tarde cuando llegaron a la aldea y a la casa de don Diego, a quien don Quijote llamaba el Caballero del Verde Gabán.

Capítulo XVIII

De lo que sucedió a don Quijote en el castillo o casa del Caballero del Verde Gabán, con otras cosas extravagantes

HALLÓ don Quijote ser la casa de don Diego de Miranda ancha como de aldea; las armas, empero, aunque de piedra tosca, encima de la puerta de la calle; la bodega, en el patio; la cueva, en el portal, y muchas tinajas a la redonda, que, por ser del Toboso, le renovaron las memorias de su encantada y transformada Dulcinea; y sospirando, y sin mirar lo que decía, ni delante de quién estaba, dijo:

-¡Oh dulces prendas, por mi mal halladas, dulces y alegres cuando Dios quería!

Oyóle decir esto el estudiante poeta, hijo de don Diego, que con su madre había salido a recibirle, y madre y hijo quedaron suspensos de ver la estraña figura de don Quijote; el cual, apeándose de Rocinante, fue con mucha cortesía a pedirle las manos para besárselas, y don Diego dijo: -Recebid, señora, con vuestro sólito agrado al señor don Quijote de la Mancha, que es el que tenéis delante, andante caballero y el más valiente y el más discreto que tiene el mundo.

La señora, que doña Cristina se llamaba, le recibió con muestras de mucho amor y de mucha cortesía, y don Quijote se le ofreció con asaz de discretas y comedidas razones. Casi los mismos comedimientos pasó con el estudiante, que, en oyéndole hablar don Quijote, le tuvo por discreto y agudo.

Aquí pinta el autor todas las circunstancias de la casa de don Diego, pintándonos en ellas lo que contiene una casa de un caballero labrador y rico; pero al traductor desta historia le pareció pasar estas y otras semejantes menudencias en silencio, porque no venían bien con el propósito principal de la historia, la cual más tiene su fuerza en la verdad que en las frías digresiones.

Entraron a don Quijote en una sala, desarmóle Sancho, quedó en valones y en jubón de camuza, todo bisunto con la mugre de las armas: el cuello era valona a lo estudiantil, sin almidón y sin randas; los borceguíes eran datilados, y encerados los zapatos. Ciñóse su buena espada, que pendía de un tahalí de lobos marinos; que es opinión que muchos años fue enfermo de los riñones; cubrióse un herreruelo de buen paño pardo; pero antes de todo, con cinco calderos, o seis, de agua, que en la cantidad de los calderos hay alguna diferencia, se lavó la cabeza y rostro, y todavía se quedó el agua de color de suero, merced a la golosina de Sancho y a la compra de sus negros requesones, que tan blanco pusieron a su amo. Con los referidos atavíos, y con gentil donaire y gallardía, salió don Quijote a otra sala, donde el estudiante le estaba esperando para entretenerle en tanto que las mesas se ponían; que, por la venida de tan noble huésped, quería la señora doña Cristina mostrar que sabía y podía regalar a los que a su casa llegasen.

En tanto que don Quijote se estuvo desarmando, tuvo lugar don Lorenzo, que así se llamaba el hijo de don Diego, de decir a su padre: -¿Quién diremos, señor, que es este caballero que vuesa merced nos ha traído a casa? Que el nombre, la figura, y el decir que es caballero andante, a mí y a mi madre nos tiene suspensos.

-No sé lo que te diga, hijo -respondió don Diego-; sólo te sabré decir que le he visto hacer cosas del mayor loco del mundo, y decir razones tan discretas que borran y deshacen sus hechos: háblale tú, y toma el pulso a lo que sabe, y, pues eres discreto, juzga de su discreción o tontería lo que más puesto en razón estuviere; aunque, para decir verdad, antes le tengo por loco que por cuerdo.

Con esto, se fue don Lorenzo a entretener a don Quijote, como queda dicho, y, entre otras pláticas que los dos pasaron, dijo don Quijote a don Lorenzo: -El señor don Diego de Miranda, padre de vuesa merced, me ha dado noticia de la rara habilidad y sutil ingenio que vuestra merced tiene, y, sobre todo, que es vuesa merced un gran poeta.

-Poeta, bien podrá ser -respondió don Lorenzo-, pero grande, ni por pensamiento. Verdad es que yo soy algún tanto aficionado a la poesía y a leer los buenos poetas, pero no de manera que se me pueda dar el nombre de grande que mi padre dice.

-No me parece mal esa humildad -respondió don Quijote-, porque no hay poeta que no sea arrogante y piense de sí que es el mayor poeta del mundo.

-No hay regla sin excepción -respondió don Lorenzo-, y alguno habrá que lo sea y no lo piense.

-Pocos -respondió don Quijote-; pero dígame vuesa merced: ¿qué versos son los que agora trae entre manos, que me ha dicho el señor su padre que le traen algo inquieto y pensativo? Y si es alguna glosa, a mí se me entiende algo de achaque de glosas, y holgaría saberlos; y si es que son de justa literaria, procure vuestra merced llevar el segundo premio, que el primero siempre se lleva el favor o la gran calidad de la persona, el segundo se le lleva la mera justicia, y el tercero viene a ser segundo, y el primero, a esta cuenta, será el tercero, al modo de las licencias que se dan en las universidades; pero, con todo esto, gran personaje es el nombre de primero.

-Hasta ahora -dijo entre sí don Lorenzo-, no os podré yo juzgar por loco; vamos adelante.

-Paréceme que vuesa merced ha cursado las escuelas: ¿qué ciencias ha oído?

-La de la caballería andante -respondió don Quijote-, que es tan buena como la de la poesía, y aun dos deditos más.

-No sé qué ciencia sea ésa -replicó don Lorenzo-, y hasta ahora no ha llegado a mi noticia.

-Es una ciencia -replicó don Quijote- que encierra en sí todas o las más ciencias del mundo, a causa que el que la profesa ha de ser jurisperito, y saber las leyes de la justicia distributiva y comutativa, para dar a cada uno lo que es suyo y lo que le conviene; ha de ser teólogo, para saber dar razón de la cristiana ley que profesa, clara y distintamente, adondequiera que le fuere pedido; ha de ser médico y principalmente herbolario, para conocer en mitad de los despoblados y desiertos las yerbas que tienen virtud de sanar las heridas, que no ha de andar el caballero andante a cada triquete buscando quien se las cure; ha de ser astrólogo, para conocer por las estrellas cuántas horas son pasadas de la noche, y en qué parte y en qué clima del mundo se halla; ha de saber las matemáticas, porque a cada paso se le ofrecerá tener necesidad dellas; y, dejando aparte que ha de estar adornado de todas las virtudes teologales y cardinales, decendiendo a otras menudencias, digo que ha de saber nadar como dicen que nadaba el peje Nicolás o Nicolao; ha de saber herrar un caballo y aderezar la silla y el freno; y, volviendo a lo de arriba, ha de guardar la fe a Dios y a su dama; ha de ser casto en los pensamientos, honesto en las palabras, liberal en las obras, valiente en los hechos, sufrido en los trabajos, caritativo con los menesterosos, y, finalmente, mantenedor de la verdad, aunque le cueste la vida el defenderla. De todas estas grandes y mínimas partes se compone un buen caballero andante; porque vea vuesa merced, señor don Lorenzo, si es ciencia mocosa lo que aprende el caballero que la estudia y la profesa, y si se puede igualar a las más estiradas que en los ginasios y escuelas se enseñan.

-Si eso es así -replicó don Lorenzo-, yo digo que se aventaja esa ciencia a todas.

-¿Cómo si es así? -respondió don Quijote.

-Lo que yo quiero decir -dijo don Lorenzo- es que dudo que haya habido, ni que los hay ahora, caballeros andantes y adornados de virtudes tantas.

-Muchas veces he dicho lo que vuelvo a decir ahora -respondió don Quijote-: que la mayor parte de la gente del mundo está de parecer de que no ha habido en él caballeros andantes; y, por parecerme a mí que si el cielo milagrosamente no les da a entender la verdad de que los hubo y de que los hay, cualquier trabajo que se tome ha de ser en vano, como muchas veces me lo ha mostrado la experiencia, no quiero detenerme agora en sacar a vuesa merced del error que con los muchos tiene; lo que pienso hacer es el rogar al cielo le saque dél, y le dé a entender cuán provechosos y cuán necesarios fueron al mundo los caballeros andantes en los pasados siglos, y cuán útiles fueran en el presente si se usaran; pero triunfan ahora, por pecados de las gentes, la pereza, la ociosidad, la gula y el regalo.

-Escapado se nos ha nuestro huésped -dijo a esta sazón entre sí don Lorenzo-, pero, con todo eso, él es loco bizarro, y yo sería mentecato flojo si así no lo creyese.

Aquí dieron fin a su plática, porque los llamaron a comer. Preguntó don Diego a su hijo qué había sacado en limpio del ingenio del huésped. A lo que él respondió: -No le sacarán del borrador de su locura cuantos médicos y buenos escribanos tiene el mundo: él es un entreverado loco, lleno de lúcidos intervalos.

Fuéronse a comer, y la comida fue tal como don Diego había dicho en el camino que la solía dar a sus convidados: limpia, abundante y sabrosa; pero de lo que más se contentó don Quijote fue del maravilloso silencio que en toda la casa había, que semejaba un monasterio de cartujos. Levantados, pues, los manteles, y dadas gracias a Dios y agua a las manos, don Quijote pidió ahincadamente a don Lorenzo dijese los versos de la justa literaria; a lo que él respondió que, por no parecer de aquellos poetas que cuando les ruegan digan sus versos los niegan y cuando no se los piden los vomitan, -...yo diré mi glosa, de la cual no espero premio alguno, que sólo por ejercitar el ingenio la he hecho.

-Un amigo y discreto -respondió don Quijote- era de parecer que no se había de cansar nadie en glosar versos; y la razón, decía él, era que jamás la glosa podía llegar al texto, y que muchas o las más veces iba la glosa fuera de la intención y propósito de lo que pedía lo que se glosaba; y más, que las leyes de la glosa eran demasiadamente estrechas: que no sufrían interrogantes, ni dijo, ni diré, ni hacer nombres de verbos, ni mudar el sentido, con otras ataduras y estrechezas con que van atados los que glosan, como vuestra merced debe de saber.

-Verdaderamente, señor don Quijote -dijo don Lorenzo-, que deseo coger a vuestra merced en un mal latín continuado, y no puedo, porque se me desliza de entre las manos como anguila.

-No entiendo -respondió don Quijote- lo que vuestra merced dice ni quiere decir en eso del deslizarme.

-Yo me daré a entender -respondió don Lorenzo-; y por ahora esté vuesa merced atento a los versos glosados y a la glosa, que dicen desta manera: ¡Si mi fue tornase a es, sin esperar más será, o viniese el tiempo ya de lo que será después...!

Glosa

Al fin, como todo pasa, se pasó el bien que me dio Fortuna, un tiempo no escasa, y nunca me le volvió,

ni abundante, ni por tasa. 5

Siglos ha ya que me vees, Fortuna, puesto a tus pies; vuélveme a ser venturoso, que será mi ser dichoso si mi fue tornase a es. 10

No quiero otro gusto o gloria, otra palma o vencimiento, otro triunfo, otra vitoria, sino volver al contento que es pesar en mi memoria. 15

Si tú me vuelves allá,

Fortuna, templado está

todo el rigor de mi fuego, y más si este bien es luego, sin esperar más será.

Cosas imposibles pido,

pues volver el tiempo a ser después que una vez ha sido, no hay en la tierra poder que a tanto se haya estendido. 25

Corre el tiempo, vuela y va ligero, y no volverá, y erraría el que pidiese, o que el tiempo ya se fuese, o volviese el tiempo ya.

Vivo en perpleja vida, ya esperando, ya temiendo: es muerte muy conocida, y es mucho mejor muriendo buscar al dolor salida. 35

A mí me fuera interés

acabar, mas no lo es, pues, con discurso mejor, me da la vida el temor

de lo que será después. 40

En acabando de decir su glosa don Lorenzo, se levantó en pie don Quijote, y, en voz levantada, que parecía grito, asiendo con su mano la derecha de don Lorenzo, dijo: -¡Viven los cielos donde más altos están, mancebo generoso, que sois el mejor poeta del orbe, y que merecéis estar laureado, no por Chipre ni por

Gaeta, como dijo un poeta, que Dios perdone, sino por las academias de Atenas, si hoy vivieran, y por las que hoy viven de París, Bolonia y Salamanca! Plega al cielo que los jueces que os quiten el premio primero, Febo los asaetee y las Musas jamás atraviesen los umbrales de sus casas. Decidme, señor, si sois servido, algunos versos mayores, que quiero tomar de todo en todo el pulso a vuestro admirable ingenio.

¿No es bueno que dicen que se holgó don Lorenzo de verse alabar de don Quijote, aunque le tenía por loco? ¡Oh fuerza de la adulación, a cuánto te extiendes, y cuán dilatados límites son los de tu jurisdicción agradable! Esta verdad acreditó don Lorenzo, pues concedió con la demanda y deseo de don Quijote, diciéndole este soneto a la fábula o historia de Píramo y Tisbe:

Soneto

El muro rompe la doncella hermosa que de Píramo abrió el gallardo pecho: parte el Amor de Chipre, y va derecho a ver la quiebra estrecha y prodigiosa.

Habla el silencio allí, porque no osa   5 la voz entrar por tan estrecho estrecho; las almas sí, que amor suele de hecho facilitar la más difícil cosa.

Salió el deseo de compás, y el paso de la imprudente virgen solicita   10 por su gusto su muerte; ved qué historia: que a entrambos en un punto, ¡oh extraño caso!, los mata, los encubre y resucita una espada, un sepulcro, una memoria.

-¡Bendito sea Dios! -dijo don Quijote habiendo oído el soneto a don Lorenzo-, que entre los infinitos poetas consumidos que hay, he visto un consumado poeta, como lo es vuesa merced, señor mío; que así me lo da a entender el artificio deste soneto.

Cuatro días estuvo don Quijote regaladísimo en la casa de don Diego, al cabo de los cuales le pidió licencia para irse, diciéndole que le agradecía la merced y buen tratamiento que en su casa había recibido; pero que, por no parecer bien que los caballeros andantes se den muchas horas a ocio y al regalo, se quería ir a cumplir con su oficio, buscando las aventuras, de quien tenía noticia que aquella tierra abundaba, donde esperaba entretener el tiempo hasta que llegase el día de las justas de Zaragoza, que era el de su derecha derrota; y que primero había de entrar en la cueva de Montesinos, de quien tantas y tan admirables cosas en aquellos contornos se contaban, sabiendo e inquiriendo asimismo el nacimiento y verdaderos manantiales de las siete lagunas llamadas comúnmente de Ruidera.

Don Diego y su hijo le alabaron su honrosa determinación, y le dijeron que tomase de su casa y de su hacienda todo lo que en grado le viniese, que le servirían con la voluntad posible; que a ello les obligaba el valor de su persona y la honrosa profesión suya.

Llegóse, en fin, el día de su partida, tan alegre para don Quijote como triste y aciago para Sancho Panza, que se hallaba muy bien con la abundancia de la casa de don Diego, y rehusaba de volver a la hambre que se usa en las florestas, despoblados, y a la estrechez de sus mal proveídas alforjas. Con todo esto, las llenó y colmó de lo más necesario que le pareció; y al despedirse dijo don Quijote a don Lorenzo: -No sé si he dicho a vuesa merced otra vez, y si lo he dicho lo vuelvo a decir, que cuando vuesa merced quisiere ahorrar caminos y trabajos para llegar a la inaccesible cumbre del templo de la Fama, no tiene que hacer otra cosa sino dejar a una parte la senda de la poesía, algo estrecha, y tomar la estrechísima de la andante caballería, bastante para hacerle emperador en daca las pajas.

Con estas razones acabó don Quijote de cerrar el proceso de su locura, y más con las que añadió, diciendo: -Sabe Dios si quisiera llevar conmigo al señor don Lorenzo, para enseñarle cómo se han de perdonar los sujetos, y supeditar y acocear los soberbios, virtudes anejas a la profesión que yo profeso; pero, pues no lo pide su poca edad, ni lo querrán consentir sus loables ejercicios, sólo me contento con advertirle a vuesa merced que, siendo poeta, podrá ser famoso si se guía más por el parecer ajeno que por el propio, porque no hay padre ni madre a quien sus hijos le parezcan feos, y en los que lo son del entendimiento corre más este engaño.

De nuevo se admiraron padre y hijo de las entremetidas razones de don Quijote, ya discretas y ya disparatadas, y del tema y tesón que llevaba de acudir de todo en todo a la busca de sus desventuradas aventuras, que las tenía por fin y blanco de sus deseos. Reiteráronse los ofrecimientos y comedimientos, y, con la buena licencia de la señora del castillo, don Quijote y Sancho, sobre Rocinante y el rucio, se partieron.

Capítulo XIX

*Donde se cuenta la aventura del pastor enamorado, con otros en verdad
graciosos sucesos*

POCO trecho se había alongado don Quijote del lugar de don Diego, cuando encontró con dos como clérigos o como estudiantes y con dos labradores que sobre cuatro bestias asnales venían caballeros. El uno de los estudiantes traía, como en portamanteo, en un lienzo de bocací verde envuelto, al parecer, un poco de grana blanca y dos pares de medias de cordellate; el otro no traía otra cosa que dos espadas negras de esgrima, nuevas, y con sus zapatillas. Los labradores traían otras cosas, que daban indicio y señal que venían de alguna villa grande, donde las habían comprado, y las llevaban a su aldea; y así estudiantes como labradores cayeron en la misma admiración en que caían todos aquellos que la vez primera veían a don Quijote, y morían por saber qué hombre fuese aquél tan fuera del uso de los otros hombres.

Saludóles don Quijote, y, después de saber el camino que llevaban, que era el mismo que él hacía, les ofreció su compañía, y les pidió detuviesen el paso, porque caminaban más sus pollinas que su caballo; y, para obligarlos, en breves razones les dijo quién era, y su oficio y profesión, que era de caballero andante que iba a buscar las aventuras por todas las partes del mundo. Díjoles que se llamaba de nombre propio don Quijote de la Mancha, y por el apelativo, el Caballero de los Leones. Todo esto para los labradores era hablarles en griego o en jerigonza, pero no para los estudiantes, que luego entendieron la flaqueza del cerebro de don Quijote; pero, con todo eso, le miraban con admiración y con respecto, y uno dellos le dijo:

-Si vuestra merced, señor caballero, no lleva camino determinado, como no le suelen llevar los que buscan las aventuras, vuesa merced se venga con nosotros: verá una de las mejores bodas y más ricas que hasta el día de hoy se habrán celebrado en la Mancha, ni en otras muchas leguas a la redonda.

-No son -respondió el estudiante-sino de un labrador y una labradora: él, el más rico de toda esta tierra; y ella, la más hermosa que han visto los hombres. El aparato con que se han de hacer es extraordinario y nuevo, porque se han de celebrar en un prado que está junto al pueblo de la novia, a quien por excelencia llaman Quiteria la hermosa, y el desposado se llama Camacho el rico; ella de edad de diez y ocho años, y él de veinte y dos; ambos para en uno, aunque algunos curiosos que tienen de memoria los linajes de todo el mundo quieren decir que el de la hermosa Quiteria se aventaja al de Camacho; pero ya no se mira en esto, que las riquezas son poderosas de soldar muchas quiebras. En efecto, el tal Camacho es liberal y hásele antojado de enramar y cubrir todo el prado por arriba, de tal suerte que el sol se ha de ver en trabajo si quiere entrar a visitar las yerbas verdes de que está cubierto el suelo. Tiene asimesmo maheridas danzas, así de espadas como de cascabel menudo, que hay en su pueblo quien los repique y sacuda por extremo; de zapateadores no digo nada, que es un juicio los que tiene muñidos; pero ninguna de las cosas referidas ni otras muchas que he dejado de referir ha de hacer más memorables estas bodas, sino las que imagino que hará en ellas el despechado Basilio. Es este Basilio un zagal vecino del mismo lugar de Quiteria, el cual tenía su casa pared y medio de la de los padres de Quiteria, de donde tomó ocasión el amor de renovar al mundo los ya olvidados amores de Píramo y Tisbe, porque Basilio se enamoró de Quiteria desde sus tiernos y primeros años, y ella fue correspondiendo a su deseo con mil honestos favores, tanto, que se contaban por entretenimiento en el pueblo los amores de los dos niños Basilio y Quiteria. Fue creciendo la edad, y acordó el padre de Quiteria de estorbar a Basilio la ordinaria entrada que en su casa tenía; y, por quitarse de andar receloso y lleno de sospechas, ordenó de casar a su hija con el rico Camacho, no pareciéndole ser bien casarla con Basilio, que no tenía tantos bienes de fortuna como de naturaleza; pues si va a decir las verdades sin invidia, él es el más ágil mancebo que conocemos: gran tirador de barra, luchador estremado y gran jugador de pelota; corre como un gamo, salta más que una cabra y birla a los bolos como por encantamento; canta como una calandria, y toca una guitarra, que la hace hablar, y, sobre todo, juega una espada como el más pintado.

-Por esa sola gracia -dijo a esta sazón don Quijote-, merecía ese mancebo no sólo casarse con la hermosa Quiteria, sino con la misma reina Ginebra, si fuera hoy viva, a pesar de Lanzarote y de todos aquellos que estorbarlo quisieran.

-¡A mi mujer con eso! -dijo Sancho Panza, que hasta entonces había ido callando y escuchando-, la cual no quiere sino que cada uno case con su igual, ateniéndose al refrán que dicen «cada oveja con su pareja». Lo que yo quisiera es que ese buen Basilio, que ya me le voy aficionando, se casara con esa señora Quiteria; que buen siglo hayan y buen poso, iba a decir al revés, los que estorban que se casen los que bien se quieren.

-Si todos los que bien se quieren se hubiesen de casar -dijo don Quijote-, quitaríase la elección y jurisdicción a los padres de casar sus hijos con quien y cuando deben; y si a la voluntad de las hijas quedase escoger los maridos, tal habría que escogiese al criado de su padre, y tal al que vio pasar por la calle, a su parecer, bizarro y entonado, aunque fuese un desbaratado espadachín; que el amor y la afición con facilidad ciegan los ojos del entendimiento, tan necesarios para escoger estado, y el del matrimonio está muy a peligro de errarse, y es menester gran tiento y particular favor del cielo para acertarle. Quiere hacer uno un viaje largo, y si es prudente, antes de ponerse en camino busca alguna compañía segura y apacible con quien acompañarse; pues, ¿por qué no hará lo mismo el que ha de caminar toda la vida, hasta el paradero de la muerte, y más si la compañía le ha de acompañar en la cama, en la mesa y en todas partes, como es la de la mujer con su marido? La de la propia mujer no es mercaduría que una vez comprada se vuelve, o se trueca o cambia, porque es accidente inseparable, que dura lo que dura la vida: es un lazo que si una vez le echáis al cuello, se vuelve en el nudo gordiano, que si no le corta la guadaña de la muerte, no hay desatarle. Muchas más cosas pudiera decir en esta materia, si no lo estorbara el deseo que tengo de saber si le queda más que decir al señor licenciado acerca de la historia de Basilio.

A lo que respondió el estudiante bachiller, o licenciado, como le llamó don Quijote, que:

-De todo no me queda más que decir sino que desde el punto que Basilio supo que la hermosa Quiteria se casaba con Camacho el rico, nunca más le han visto reír ni hablar razón concertada, y siempre anda pensativo y triste, hablando entre sí mismo, con que da ciertas y claras señales de que se le ha vuelto el juicio: come poco y duerme poco, y lo que come son frutas, y en lo que duerme, si duerme, es en el campo, sobre la dura tierra, como animal bruto; mira de cuando en cuando al cielo, y otras veces clava los ojos en la tierra, con tal embelesamiento, que no parece sino estatua vestida que el aire le mueve la ropa. En fin, él da tales muestras de tener apasionado el corazón, que tememos todos los que le conocemos que el dar el sí mañana la hermosa Quiteria ha de ser la sentencia de su muerte.

-Dios lo hará mejor -dijo Sancho-; que Dios, que da la llaga, da la medicina; nadie sabe lo que está por venir: de aquí a mañana muchas horas hay, y en una, y aun en un momento, se cae la casa; yo he visto llover y hacer sol, todo a un mismo punto; tal se acuesta sano la noche, que no se puede mover otro día. Y díganme, ¿por ventura habrá quien se alabe que tiene echado un clavo a la rodaja de la Fortuna? No, por cierto; y entre el sí y el no de la mujer no me atrevería yo a poner una punta de alfiler, porque no cabría. Denme a mí que Quiteria quiera de buen corazón y de buena voluntad a Basilio, que yo le daré a él un saco de buena ventura: que el amor, según yo he oído decir, mira con unos antojos que hacen parecer oro al cobre, a la pobreza riqueza, y a las lagañas perlas.

-¿Adónde vas a parar, Sancho, que seas maldito? -dijo don Quijote-; que cuando comienzas a ensartar refranes y cuentos, no te puede esperar sino el mismo Judas, que te lleve. Dime, animal, ¿qué sabes tú de clavos, ni de rodajas, ni de otra cosa ninguna?

-¡Oh! Pues si no me entienden -respondió Sancho-, no es maravilla que mis sentencias sean tenidas por disparates. Pero no importa: yo me entiendo, y sé que no he dicho muchas necedades en lo que he dicho; sino que vuesa merced, señor mío, siempre es friscal de mis dichos, y aun de mis hechos.

-Fiscal has de decir -dijo don Quijote-, que no friscal, prevaricador del buen lenguaje, que Dios te confunda.

-No se apunte vuestra merced conmigo -respondió Sancho-, pues sabe que no me he criado en la Corte, ni he estudiado en Salamanca, para saber si añadido o quitado alguna letra a mis vocablos. Sí, que, ¡válgame Dios!, no hay para qué obligar al sayagués a que hable como el toledano, y toledanos puede haber que no las corten en el aire en esto del hablar polido.

-Así es -dijo el licenciado-, porque no pueden hablar tan bien los que se crían en las Tenerías y en Zocodover como los que se pasean casi todo el día por el claustro de la Iglesia Mayor, y todos son toledanos. El lenguaje puro, el propio, el elegante y claro, está en los discretos cortesanos, aunque hayan nacido en Majalahonda: dije discretos porque hay muchos que no lo son, y la discreción es la gramática del buen lenguaje, que se acompaña con el uso. Yo, señores, por mis pecados, he estudiado Cánones en Salamanca, y pícome algún tanto de decir mi razón con palabras claras, llanas y significantes.

-Si no os picáredes más de saber más menear las negras que lleváis que la lengua -dijo el otro estudiante-, vos lleváredes el primero en licencias, como llevastes cola.

-Mirad, bachiller -respondió el licenciado-: vos estáis en la más errada opinión del mundo acerca de la destreza de la espada, teniéndola por vana.

-Para mí no es opinión, sino verdad asentada -replicó Corchuelo-; y si queréis que os lo muestre con la experiencia, espadas traéis, comodidad hay, yo pulsos y fuerzas tengo, que acompañadas de mi ánimo, que no es poco, os harán confesar que yo no me engaño. Apeaos, y usad de vuestro compás de pies, de vuestros círculos y vuestros ángulos y ciencia; que yo espero de haceros ver estrellas a mediodía con mi destreza moderna y zafia, en quien espero, después de Dios, que está por nacer hombre que me haga volver las espaldas, y que no le hay en el mundo a quien yo no le haga perder tierra.

-En eso de volver, o no, las espaldas no me meto -replicó el diestro-; aunque podría ser que en la parte donde la vez primera clavásedes el pie, allí os abriesen la sepultura: quiero decir que allí quedásedes muerto por la despreciada destreza.

-Ahora se verá -respondió Corchuelo.

Y, apeándose con gran presteza de su jumento, tiró con furia de una de las espadas que llevaba el licenciado en el suyo.

-No ha de ser así -dijo a este instante don Quijote-, que yo quiero ser el maestro desta esgrima, y el juez desta muchas veces no averiguada cuestión.

Y, apeándose de Rocinante y asiendo de su lanza, se puso en la mitad del camino, a tiempo que ya el licenciado, con gentil donaire de cuerpo y compás de pies, se iba contra Corchuelo, que contra él se vino, lanzando, como decirse suele, fuego por los ojos. Los otros dos labradores del acompañamiento, sin apearse de sus pollinas, sirvieron de aspetadores en la mortal tragedia. Las cuchilladas, estocadas, altibajos, reveses y mandobles que tiraba Corchuelo eran sin número, más espesas que hígado y más menudas que granizo. Arremetía como un león irritado, pero salíale al encuentro un tapaboca de la zapatilla de la espada del licenciado, que en mitad de su furia le detenía, y se la hacía besar como si fuera reliquia, aunque no con tanta devoción como las reliquias deben y suelen besarse.

Finalmente, el licenciado le contó a estocadas todos los botones de una media sotanilla que traía vestida, haciéndole tiras los faldamentos, como colas de pulpo; derribóle el sombrero dos veces, y cansóle de manera que de despecho, cólera y rabia asió la espada por la empuñadura, y arrojóla por el aire con tanta fuerza, que uno de los labradores asistentes, que era escribano, que fue por ella, dio después por testimonio que la alongó de sí casi tres cuartos de legua; el cual testimonio sirve y ha servido para que se conozca y vea con toda verdad cómo la fuerza es vencida del arte.

-Mía fe, señor bachiller, si vuesa merced toma mi consejo, de aquí adelante no ha de desafiar a nadie a esgrimir, sino a luchar o a tirar la barra, pues tiene edad y fuerzas para ello; que destos a quien llaman diestros he oído decir que meten una punta de una espada por el ojo de una aguja.

-Yo me contento -respondió Corchuelo- de haber caído de mi burra, y de que me haya mostrado la experiencia la verdad, de quien tan lejos estaba.

Y, levantándose, abrazó al licenciado, y quedaron más amigos que de antes, y no queriendo esperar al escribano, que había ido por la espada, por parecerle que tardaría mucho; y así, determinaron seguir, por llegar temprano a la aldea de Quiteria, de donde todos eran.

En lo que faltaba del camino, les fue contando el licenciado las excelencias de la espada, con tantas razones demostrativas y con tantas figuras y demostraciones matemáticas, que todos quedaron enterados de la bondad de la ciencia y Corchuelo reducido de su pertinacia.

Era anochecido, pero antes que llegasen les pareció a todos que estaba delante del pueblo un cielo lleno de innumerables y resplandecientes estrellas. Oyeron, asimismo, confusos y suaves sonidos de diversos instrumentos, como de flautas, tamborinos, salterios, albogues, panderos y sonajas; y cuando llegaron cerca vieron que los árboles de una enramada, que a mano habían puesto a la entrada del pueblo, estaban todos llenos de luminarias, a quien no ofendía el viento, que entonces no soplaba sino tan manso que no tenía fuerza para mover las hojas de los árboles. Los músicos eran los regocijadores de la boda, que en diversas cuadrillas por aquel agradable sitio andaban, unos bailando, y otros cantando, y otros tocando la diversidad de los referidos instrumentos. En efecto, no parecía sino que por todo aquel prado andaba corriendo la alegría y saltando el contento.

Otros muchos andaban ocupados en levantar andamios, de donde con comodidad pudiesen ver otro día las representaciones y danzas que se habían de hacer en aquel lugar dedicado para solenizar las bodas del rico Camacho y las exequias de Basilio. No quiso entrar en el lugar don Quijote, aunque se lo pidieron así el labrador como el bachiller; pero él dio por disculpa, bastantísima a su parecer, ser costumbre de los caballeros andantes dormir por los campos y florestas antes que en los poblados, aunque fuese debajo de dorados techos; y con esto, se desvió un poco del camino, bien contra la voluntad de Sancho, viniéndosele a la memoria el buen alojamiento que había tenido en el castillo o casa de don Diego.

Capítulo XX

APENAS la blanca aurora había dado lugar a que el luciente Febo, con el ardor de sus calientes rayos, las líquidas perlas de sus cabellos de oro enjugase, cuando don Quijote, sacudiendo la pereza de sus miembros, se puso en pie y llamó a su escudero Sancho, que aún todavía roncaba; lo cual visto por don Quijote, antes que le despertase, le dijo: -¡Oh tú, bienaventurado sobre cuantos viven sobre la haz de la tierra, pues sin tener invidia ni ser envidiado, duermes con sosegado espíritu, ni te persiguen encantadores, ni sobresaltan encantamientos! Duerme, digo otra vez, y lo diré otras ciento, sin que te tengan en continua vigilia celos de tu dama, ni te desvelen pensamientos de pagar deudas que debas, ni de lo que has de hacer para comer otro día tú y tu pequeña y angustiada familia. Ni la ambición te inquieta, ni la pompa vana del mundo te fatiga, pues los límites de tus deseos no se estienden a más que a pensar tu jumento; que el de tu persona sobre mis hombros le tienes puesto: contrapeso y carga que puso la naturaleza y la costumbre a los señores. Duerme el criado, y está velando el señor, pensando cómo le ha de sustentar, mejorar y hacer mercedes. La congoja de ver que el cielo se hace de bronce sin acudir a la tierra con el conveniente rocío no aflige al criado, sino al señor, que ha de sustentar en la esterilidad y hambre al que le sirvió en la fertilidad y abundancia.

A todo esto no respondió Sancho, porque dormía, ni despertara tan presto si don Quijote con el cuento de la lanza no le hiciera volver en sí. Despertó, en fin, soñoliento y perezoso, y, volviendo el rostro a todas partes, dijo: -De la parte desta enramada, si no me engaño, sale un tufo y olor hartos más de torreznos asados que de juncos y tomillos: bodas que por tales olores comienzan, para mi santiguada que deben de ser abundantes y generosas.

-Acaba, glotón -dijo don Quijote-; ven, iremos a ver estos desposorios, por ver lo que hace el desdeñado Basilio.

-Mas que haga lo que quisiere -respondió Sancho-: no fuera él pobre y casárase con Quiteria. ¿No hay más sino no tener un cuarto y querer alzarse por las nubes? A la fe, señor, yo soy de parecer que el pobre debe de contentarse con lo que hallare, y no pedir cotufas en el golfo. Yo apostaré un brazo que puede Camacho envolver en reales a Basilio; y si esto es así, como debe de ser, bien boba fuera Quiteria en desechar las galas y las joyas que le debe de haber dado, y le puede dar Camacho, por escoger el tirar de la barra y el jugar de la negra de Basilio. Sobre un buen tiro de barra o sobre una gentil treta de espada no dan un cuartillo de vino en la taberna. Habilidades y gracias que no son vendibles, mas que las tenga el conde Dirlos; pero, cuando las tales gracias caen sobre quien tiene buen dinero, tal sea mi vida como ellas parecen. Sobre un buen cimiento se puede levantar un buen edificio, y el mejor cimiento y zanja del mundo es el dinero.

-Por quien Dios es, Sancho -dijo a esta sazón don Quijote-, que concluyas con tu arenga; que tengo para mí que si te dejasen seguir en las que a cada paso comienzas, no te quedaría tiempo para comer ni para dormir, que todo le gastarías en hablar.

-Si vuestra merced tuviera buena memoria -replicó Sancho-, debiérase acordar de los capítulos de nuestro concierto antes que esta última vez saliésemos de casa: uno dellos fue que me había de dejar hablar todo aquello que quisiese, con que no fuese contra el prójimo ni contra la autoridad de vuesa merced; y hasta agora me parece que no he contravenido contra el tal capítulo.

-Yo no me acuerdo, Sancho -respondió don Quijote-, del tal capítulo; y, puesto que sea así, quiero que calles y vengas, que ya los instrumentos que anoche oímos vuelven a alegrar los valles, y sin duda los desposorios se celebrarán en el frescor de la mañana, y no en el calor de la tarde.

Hizo Sancho lo que su señor le mandaba, y, poniendo la silla a Rocinante y la albarda al rucio, subieron los dos, y paso ante paso se fueron entrando por la enramada.

Lo primero que se le ofreció a la vista de Sancho fue, espetado en un asador de un olmo entero, un entero novillo; y en el fuego donde se había de asar ardía un mediano monte de leña, y seis ollas que alrededor de la hoguera estaban no se habían hecho en la común turquesa de las demás ollas, porque eran seis medias tinajas, que cada una cabía un rastro de carne: así embebían y encerraban en sí carneros enteros, sin echarse de ver, como si fueran palominos; las liebres ya sin pellejo y las gallinas sin pluma que estaban colgadas por los árboles para sepultarlas en las ollas no tenían número; los pájaros y caza de diversos géneros eran infinitos, colgados de los árboles para que el aire los enfriase.

Contó Sancho más de sesenta zaques de más de a dos arrobas cada uno, y todos llenos, según después pareció, de generosos vinos; así había rimeros de pan blanquísimo, como los suele haber de montones de trigo en las eras; los quesos, puestos como ladrillos enrejados, formaban una muralla, y dos calderas de aceite, mayores que las de un tinte, servían de freír cosas de masa, que con dos valientes palas las sacaban fritas y las zabullían en otra caldera de preparada

Los cocineros y cocineras pasaban de cincuenta: todos limpios, todos diligentes y todos contentos. En el dilatado vientre del novillo estaban doce tiernos y pequeños lechones, que, cosidos por encima, servían de darle sabor y enternecerle. Las especias de diversas suertes no parecía haberlas comprado por libras, sino por arrobas, y todas estaban de manifiesto en una grande arca. Finalmente, el aparato de la boda era rústico, pero tan abundante que podía sustentar a un ejército.

Todo lo miraba Sancho Panza, y todo lo contemplaba, y de todo se aficionaba: primero le cautivaron y rindieron el deseo las ollas, de quién él tomara de bonísima gana un mediano puchero; luego le aficionaron la voluntad los zaques; y, últimamente, las frutas de sartén, si es que se podían llamar sartenes las tan orondas calderas; y así, sin poderlo sufrir ni ser en su mano hacer otra cosa, se llegó a uno de los solícitos cocineros, y, con corteses y hambrientas razones, le rogó le dejase mojar un mendrugo de pan en una de aquellas ollas. A lo que el cocinero respondió: -Hermano, este día no es de aquellos sobre quien tiene jurisdicción la hambre, merced al rico Camacho. Apeaos y mirad si hay por ahí un cucharón, y espumad una gallina o dos, y buen provecho os hagan.

-No veo ninguno -respondió Sancho.

-Esperad -dijo el cocinero-. ¡Pecador de mí, y qué melindroso y para poco debéis de ser!

Y, diciendo esto, asió de un caldero, y, encajándole en una de las medias tinajas, sacó en él tres gallinas y dos gansos, y dijo a Sancho: -Comed, amigo, y desayunaos con esta espuma, en tanto que se llega la hora del yantar.

-No tengo en qué echarla -respondió Sancho.

-Pues llevaos -dijo el cocinero-la cuchara y todo, que la riqueza y el contento de Camacho todo lo suple.

En tanto, pues, que esto pasaba Sancho, estaba don Quijote mirando cómo, por una parte de la enramada, entraban hasta doce labradores sobre doce hermosísimas yeguas, con ricos y vistosos jaeces de campo y con muchos cascabeles en los petrales, y todos vestidos de regocijo y fiestas; los cuales, en concertado tropel, corrieron no una, sino muchas carreras por el prado, con regocijada algazara y grito, diciendo: -¡Vivan Camacho y Quiteria: él tan rico como ella hermosa, y ella la más hermosa del mundo!

Oyendo lo cual don Quijote, dijo entre sí:

-Bien parece que éstos no han visto a mi Dulcinea del Toboso, que si la hubieran visto, ellos se fueran a la mano en las alabanzas desta su Quiteria.

De allí a poco comenzaron a entrar por diversas partes de la enramada muchas y diferentes danzas, entre las cuales venía una de espadas, de hasta veinte y cuatro zagales de gallardo parecer y brío, todos vestidos de delgado y blanquísimo lienzo, con sus paños de tocar, labrados de varias colores de fina seda; y al que los guiaba, que era un ligero mancebo, preguntó uno de los de las yeguas si se había herido alguno de los danzantes.

-Por ahora, bendito sea Dios, no se ha herido nadie: todos vamos sanos.

Y luego comenzó a enredarse con los demás compañeros, con tantas vueltas y con tanta destreza que, aunque don Quijote estaba hecho a ver semejantes danzas, ninguna le había parecido tan bien como aquélla.

También le pareció bien otra que entró de doncellas hermosísimas, tan mozas que, al parecer, ninguna bajaba de catorce ni llegaba a diez y ocho años, vestidas todas de palmilla verde, los cabellos parte tranzados y parte sueltos, pero todos tan rubios, que con los del sol podían tener competencia, sobre los cuales traían guirnalda de jazmines, rosas, amaranto y madreselva compuestas. Guiábalas un venerable viejo y una anciana matrona, pero más ligeros y sueltos que sus años prometían. Hacíales el son una gaita zamorana, y ellas, llevando en los rostros y en los ojos a la honestidad y en los pies a la ligereza, se mostraban las mejores bailadoras del mundo.

Tras ésta entró otra danza de artificio y de las que llaman habladas. Era de ocho ninfas, repartidas en dos hileras: de la una hilera era guía el dios Cupido, y de la otra, el Interés; aquél, adornado de alas, arco, aljaba y saetas; éste, vestido de ricas y diversas colores de oro y seda. Las ninfas que al Amor seguían traían a las espaldas, en pargamino blanco y letras grandes, escritos sus nombres: POESÍA era el título de la primera, el de la segunda DISCRECIÓN, el de la tercera BUEN LINAJE, el de la cuarta VALENTÍA; del modo mismo venían señaladas las que al Interés seguían: decía LIBERALIDAD el título de la primera, DÁDIVA el de la segunda, TESORO el de la tercera y el de la cuarta POSESIÓN PACÍFICA. Delante de todos venía un castillo de madera, a quien tiraban cuatro salvajes, todos vestidos de yedra y de cáñamo teñido de verde, tan al natural, que por poco espantaran a Sancho. En la frontera del castillo y en todas cuatro partes de sus cuadros traía escrito: CASTILLO DEL BUEN RECATO. Hacíanles el son cuatro diestros tañedores de tamboril y flauta.

Comenzaba la danza Cupido, y, habiendo hecho dos mudanzas, alzaba los ojos y flechaba el arco contra una doncella que se ponía entre las almenas del castillo, a la cual desta suerte dijo:

-Yo soy el dios poderoso en el aire y en la tierra
y en el ancho mar undoso, y en cuanto el abismo encierra en su bátraco espantoso.

Nunca conocí qué es miedo;
todo cuanto quiero puedo, aunque quiera lo imposible,
y en todo lo que es posible mando, quito, pongo y vedo.

Acabó la copla, disparó una flecha por lo alto del castillo y retiróse a su puesto. Salió luego el Interés, y hizo otras dos mudanzas; callaron los tamborinos, y él dijo:

-Soy quien puede más que Amor, y es Amor el que me guía;
soy de la estirpe mejor que el cielo en la tierra cría, más conocida y mayor.
Soy el Interés, en quien pocos suelen obrar bien, y obrar sin mí es gran milagro;
y cual soy te me consagro, por siempre jamás, amén.

Retiróse el Interés, y hízose adelante la Poesía; la cual, después de haber hecho sus mudanzas como los demás, puestos los ojos en la doncella del castillo, dijo:

-En dulcísimos conceptos,
la dulcísima Poesía, altos, graves y discretos, señora, el alma te envía envuelta entre mil sonetos.
Si acaso no te importuna mi porfía, tu fortuna, de otras muchas invidiada, será por mí levantada
sobre el cerco de la luna.

Desvióse la Poesía, y de la parte del Interés salió la Liberalidad, y, después de hechas sus mudanzas, dijo:

-Llaman Liberalidad
al dar que el extremo huye de la prodigalidad, y del contrario, que arguye
tibia y floja voluntad.
Mas yo, por te engrandecer, de hoy más, pródiga he de ser;
que, aunque es vicio, es vicio honrado
y de pecho enamorado, que en el dar se echa de ver.

Deste modo salieron y se retiraron todas las dos figuras de las dos escuadras, y cada uno hizo sus mudanzas y dijo sus versos, algunos elegantes y algunos ridículos, y sólo tomó de memoria don Quijote -que la tenía grande-los ya referidos; y luego se mezclaron todos, haciendo y deshaciendo lazos con gentil donaire y desenvoltura; y cuando pasaba el Amor por delante del castillo, disparaba por alto sus flechas, pero el Interés quebraba en él alcancías doradas.

Finalmente, después de haber bailado un buen espacio, el Interés sacó un bolsón, que le formaba el pellejo de un gran gato romano, que parecía estar lleno de dineros, y, arrojándole al castillo, con el golpe se desencajaron las tablas y se cayeron, dejando a la doncella descubierta y sin defensa alguna. Llegó el Interés con las figuras de su valía, y, echándola una gran cadena de oro al cuello, mostraron prenderla, rendirla y cautivarla; lo cual visto por el Amor y sus valedores, hicieron ademán de quitársela; y todas las demostraciones que hacían eran al son de los tamborinos, bailando y danzando concertadamente. Pusiéronlos en paz los salvajes, los cuales con mucha presteza volvieron a armar y a encajar las tablas del castillo, y la doncella se encerró en él como de nuevo, y con esto se acabó la danza con gran contento de los que la miraban.

Preguntó don Quijote a una de las ninfas que quién la había compuesto y ordenado. Respondióle que un beneficiado de aquel pueblo, que tenía gentil caletre para semejantes invenciones.

-Yo apostaré -dijo don Quijote-que debe de ser más amigo de Camacho que de Basilio el tal bachiller o beneficiado, y que debe de tener más de satírico que de vísperas: ¡bien ha encajado en la danza las habilidades de Basilio y las riquezas de Camacho!

Sancho Panza, que lo escuchaba todo, dijo:

-El rey es mi gallo: a Camacho me atengo.

-En fin -dijo don Quijote-, bien se parece, Sancho, que eres villano y de aquéllos que dicen: «¡Viva quien vence!»

-No sé de los que soy -respondió Sancho-, pero bien sé que nunca de ollas de Basilio sacaré yo tan elegante espuma como es esta que he sacado de las de Camacho.

Y enseñóle el caldero lleno de gansos y de gallinas, y, asiendo de una, comenzó a comer con mucho donaire y gana, y dijo: -¡A la barba de las habilidades de Basilio!, que tanto vales cuanto tienes, y tanto tienes cuanto vales. Dos linajes solos hay en el mundo, como decía una agüela mía, que son el tener y el no tener, aunque ella al del tener se atenía; y el día de hoy, mi señor don Quijote, antes se toma el pulso al haber que al saber: un asno cubierto de oro parece mejor que un caballo enalbardado. Así que vuelvo a decir que a Camacho me atengo, de cuyas ollas son abundantes espumas gansos y gallinas, liebres y conejos; y de las de Basilio serán, si viene a mano, y aunque no venga sino al pie, aguachirle.

-¿Has acabado tu arenga, Sancho? -dijo don Quijote.

-Habréla acabado -respondió Sancho-, porque veo que vuestra merced recibe pesadumbre con ella; que si esto no se pusiera de por medio, obra había cortada para tres días.

-Plega a Dios, Sancho -replicó don Quijote-, que yo te vea mudo antes que me muera.

-Al paso que llevamos -respondió Sancho-, antes que vuestra merced se muera estaré yo mascando barro, y entonces podrá ser que esté tan mudo que no hable palabra hasta la fin del mundo, o, por lo menos, hasta el día del Juicio.

-Aunque eso así suceda, ¡oh Sancho! -respondió don Quijote-, nunca llegará tu silencio a do ha llegado lo que has hablado, hablas y tienes de hablar en tu vida; y más, que está muy puesto en razón natural que primero llegue el día de mi muerte que el de la tuya; y así, jamás pienso verte mudo, ni aun cuando estés bebiendo o durmiendo, que es lo que puedo encarecer.

-A buena fe, señor -respondió Sancho-, que no hay que fiar en la descarnada, digo, en la muerte, la cual también come cordero como carnero; y a nuestro cura he oído decir que con igual pie pisaba las altas torres de los reyes como las humildes chozas de los pobres. Tiene esta señora más de poder que de melindre: no es nada asquerosa, de todo come y a todo hace, y de toda suerte de gentes, edades y preeminencias hinche sus alforjas. No es segador que duerme las siestas, que a todas horas siega, y corta así la seca como la verde yerba; y no parece que masca, sino que engulle y traga cuanto se le pone delante, porque tiene hambre canina, que nunca se harta; y, aunque no tiene barriga, da a entender que está hidrópica y sedienta de beber solas las vidas de cuantos viven, como quien se bebe un jarro de agua fría.

-No más, Sancho -dijo a este punto don Quijote-. Tente en buenas, y no te dejes caer; que en verdad que lo que has dicho de la muerte por tus rústicos términos es lo que pudiera decir un buen predicador. Dígote, Sancho que si como tienes buen natural y discreción, pudieras tomar un púlpito en la mano y irte por ese mundo predicando lindezas...

-Bien predica quien bien vive -respondió Sancho-, y yo no sé otras tologías.

-Ni las has menester -dijo don Quijote-; pero yo no acabo de entender ni alcanzar cómo, siendo el principio de la sabiduría el temor de Dios, tú, que temes más a un lagarto que a Él, sabes tanto.

-Juzgue vuesa merced, señor, de sus caballerías -respondió Sancho-, y no se meta en juzgar de los temores o valentías ajenas, que tan gentil temeroso soy yo de Dios como cada hijo de vecino; y déjeme vuestra merced despabilar esta espuma, que lo demás todas son palabras ociosas, de que nos han de pedir cuenta en la otra vida.

Y, diciendo esto, comenzó de nuevo a dar asalto a su caldero, con tan buenos alientos que despertó los de don Quijote, y sin duda le ayudara, si no lo impidiera lo que es fuerza se diga adelante.

Capítulo XXI

Donde se prosiguen las bodas de Camacho, con otros gustosos sucesos

CUANDO estaban don Quijote y Sancho en las razones referidas en el capítulo antecedente, se oyeron grandes voces y gran ruido, y dábanlas y causábanle los de las yeguas, que con larga carrera y grito iban a recibir a los novios, que, rodeados de mil géneros de instrumentos y de invenciones, venían acompañados del cura, y de la parentela de entrambos, y de toda la gente más lucida de los lugares circunvecinos, todos vestidos de fiesta. Y como Sancho vio a la novia, dijo:

-A buena fe que no viene vestida de labradora, sino de garrida palaciega. ¡Pardiez, que según diviso, que las patenas que había de traer son ricos corales, y la palmilla verde de Cuenca es terciopelo de treinta pelos! ¡Y montas que la guarnición es de tiras de lienzo, blanca!, ¡voto a mí que es de raso!; pues, ¡tomadme las manos, adornadas con sortijas de azabache!: no medre yo si no son anillos de oro, y muy de oro, y empedrados con pelras blancas como una cuajada, que cada una debe de valer un ojo de la cara. ¡Oh hideputa, y qué cabellos; que, si no son postizos, no los he visto mas luengos ni más rubios en toda mi vida! ¡No, sino ponedla tacha en el brío y en el talle, y no la comparéis a una palma que se mueve cargada de racimos de dátiles, que lo mesmo parecen los dijes que trae pendientes de los cabellos y de la garganta! Juro en mi ánima que ella es una chapada moza, y que puede pasar por los bancos de Flandes.

Rióse don Quijote de las rústicas alabanzas de Sancho Panza; parecióle que, fuera de su señora Dulcinea del Toboso, no había visto mujer más hermosa jamás. Venía la hermosa Quiteria algo descolorida, y debía de ser de la mala noche que siempre pasan las novias en componerse para el día venidero de sus bodas. Íbanse acercando a un teatro que a un lado del prado estaba, adornado de alfombras y ramos, adonde se habían de hacer los desposorios, y de donde habían de mirar las danzas y las invenciones; y, a la sazón que llegaban al puesto, oyeron a sus espaldas grandes voces, y una que decía:

-Esperaos un poco, gente tan inconsiderada como presurosa.

A cuyas voces y palabras todos volvieron la cabeza, y vieron que las daba un hombre vestido, al parecer, de un sayo negro, jironado de carmesí a llamas. Venía coronado -como se vio luego-con una corona de funesto ciprés; en las manos traía un bastón grande. En llegando más cerca, fue conocido de todos por el gallardo Basilio, y todos estuvieron suspensos, esperando en qué habían de parar sus voces y sus palabras, temiendo algún mal suceso de su venida en sazón semejante.

Llegó, en fin, cansado y sin aliento; y, puesto delante de los desposados, hincando el bastón en el suelo, que tenía el cuento de una punta de acero, mudada la color, puestos los ojos en Quiteria, con voz tremente y ronca, estas razones dijo:

-Bien sabes, desconocida Quiteria, que conforme a la santa ley que profesamos, que viviendo yo, tú no puedes tomar esposo; y juntamente no ignoras que, por esperar yo que el tiempo y mi diligencia mejorasen los bienes de mi fortuna, no he querido dejar de guardar el decoro que a tu honra convenía; pero tú, echando a las espaldas todas las obligaciones que debes a mi buen deseo, quieres hacer señor de lo que es mío a otro, cuyas riquezas le sirven no sólo de buena fortuna, sino de bonísima ventura. Y para que la tenga colmada, y no como yo pienso que la merece, sino como se la quieren dar los cielos, yo, por mis manos, desharé el imposible o el inconveniente que puede estorbársela, quitándome a mí de por medio. ¡Viva, viva el rico Camacho con la ingrata Quiteria largos y felices siglos, y muera, muera el pobre Basilio, cuya pobreza cortó las alas de su dicha y le puso en la sepultura!

Y, diciendo esto, asió del bastón que tenía hincado en el suelo, y, quedándose la mitad dél en la tierra, mostró que servía de vaina a un mediano estoque que en él se ocultaba; y, puesta la que se podía llamar empuñadura en el suelo, con ligero desenfado y determinado propósito se arrojó sobre él, y en un punto mostró la punta sangrienta a las espaldas, con la mitad del acerada cuchilla, quedando el triste bañado en su sangre y tendido en el suelo, de sus mismas armas traspasado.

Acudieron luego sus amigos a favorecerle, condolidos de su miseria y lastimosa desgracia; y, dejando don Quijote a Rocinante, acudió a favorecerle y le tomó en sus brazos, y halló que aún no había espirado. Quisiéronle sacar el estoque, pero el cura, que estaba presente, fue de parecer que no se le sacasen antes de confesarle, porque el sacársele y el espirar sería todo a un tiempo. Pero, volviendo un poco en sí Basilio, con voz doliente y desmayada dijo:

-Si quisieses, cruel Quiteria, darme en este último y forzoso trance la mano de esposa, aún pensaría que mi temeridad tendría desculpa, pues en ella alcancé el bien de ser tuyo.

El cura, oyendo lo cual, le dijo que atendiese a la salud del alma antes que a los gustos del cuerpo, y que pidiese muy de veras a Dios perdón de sus pecados y de su desesperada determinación. A lo cual replicó Basilio que en ninguna manera se confesaría si primero Quiteria no le daba la mano de ser su esposa:

que aquel contento le adobaría la voluntad y le daría aliento para confesarse.

En oyendo don Quijote la petición del herido, en altas voces dijo que Basilio pedía una cosa muy justa y puesta en razón, y además, muy hacedera, y que el señor Camacho quedaría tan honrado recibiendo a la señora Quiteria viuda del valeroso Basilio como si la recibiera del lado de su padre:

-Aquí no ha de haber más de un sí, que no tenga otro efecto que el pronunciarle, pues el tálamo de estas bodas ha de ser la sepultura.

Todo lo oía Camacho, y todo le tenía suspenso y confuso, sin saber qué hacer ni qué decir; pero las voces de los amigos de Basilio fueron tantas, pidiéndole que consintiese que Quiteria le diese la mano de esposa, porque su alma no se perdiese, partiendo desesperado desta vida, que le movieron, y aun forzaron, a decir que si Quiteria quería dársela, que él se contentaba, pues todo era dilatar por un momento el cumplimiento de sus deseos.

Luego acudieron todos a Quiteria, y unos con ruegos, y otros con lágrimas, y otros con eficaces razones, la persuadían que diese la mano al pobre Basilio; y ella, más dura que un mármol y más sesga que una estatua, mostraba que ni sabía ni podía, ni quería responder palabra; ni la respondiera si el cura no la dijera que se determinase presto en lo que había de hacer, porque tenía Basilio ya el alma en los dientes, y no daba lugar a esperar irresolutas determinaciones.

Entonces la hermosa Quiteria, sin responder palabra alguna, turbada, al parecer triste y pesarosa, llegó donde Basilio estaba, ya los ojos vueltos, el aliento corto y apresurado, murmurando entre los dientes el nombre de Quiteria, dando muestras de morir como gentil, y no como cristiano. Llegó, en fin, Quiteria, y, puesta de rodillas, le pidió la mano por señas, y no por palabras. Desencajó los ojos Basilio, y, mirándola atentamente, le dijo:

-¡Oh Quiteria, que has venido a ser piadosa a tiempo cuando tu piedad ha de servir de cuchillo que me acabe de quitar la vida, pues ya no tengo fuerzas para llevar la gloria que me das en escogermene por tuyo, ni para suspender el dolor que tan apriesa me va cubriendo los ojos con la espantosa sombra de la muerte! Lo que te suplico es, ¡oh fatal estrella mía!, que la mano que me pides y quieres darme no sea por cumplimiento, ni para engañarme de nuevo, sino que confieses y digas que, sin hacer fuerza a tu voluntad, me la entregas y me la das como a tu legítimo esposo; pues no es razón que en un trance como éste me engañes, ni uses de fingimientos con quien tantas verdades ha tratado contigo.

Entre estas razones, se desmayaba, de modo que todos los presentes pensaban que cada desmayo se había de llevar el alma consigo. Quiteria, toda honesta y toda vergonzosa, asiendo con su derecha mano la de Basilio, le dijo:

-Ninguna fuerza fuera bastante a torcer mi voluntad; y así, con la más libre que tengo te doy la mano de legítima esposa, y recibo la tuya, si es que me la das de tu libre albedrío, sin que la turbe ni contraste la calamidad en que tu discurso acelerado te ha puesto.

-Sí doy -respondió Basilio-, no turbado ni confuso, sino con el claro entendimiento que el cielo quiso darme; y así, me doy y me entrego por tu esposo.

-Y yo por tu esposa -respondió Quiteria-, ahora vivas largos años, ahora te lleven de mis brazos a la sepultura.

-Para estar tan herido este mancebo -dijo a este punto Sancho Panza-, mucho habla; háganle que se deje de requiebros y que atienda a su alma, que, a mi parecer, más la tiene en la lengua que en los dientes.

Estando, pues, asidos de las manos Basilio y Quiteria, el cura, tierno y lloroso, los echó la bendición y pidió al cielo diese buen poso al alma del nuevo desposado; el cual, así como recibió la bendición, con presta ligereza se levantó en pie, y con no vista desenvoltura se sacó el estoque, a quien servía de vaina su cuerpo.

Quedaron todos los circunstantes admirados, y algunos dellos, más simples que curiosos, en altas voces, comenzaron a decir:

-¡Milagro, milagro!

Pero Basilio replicó:

-¡No «milagro, milagro», sino industria, industria!

El cura, desatentado y atónito, acudió con ambas manos a tentar la herida, y halló que la cuchilla había pasado, no por la carne y costillas de Basilio, sino por un cañón hueco de hierro que, lleno de sangre, en aquel lugar bien acomodado tenía; preparada la sangre, según después se supo, de modo que no se helase.

Finalmente, el cura y Camacho, con todos los más circunstantes, se tuvieron por burlados y escarnidos. La esposa no dio muestras de pesarle de la burla; antes, oyendo decir que aquel casamiento, por haber sido engañoso, no había de ser valedero, dijo que ella le confirmaba de nuevo; de lo cual coligieron todos que de consentimiento y sabiduría de los dos se había trazado aquel caso, de lo que quedó Camacho y sus valedores tan corridos que remitieron su venganza a las manos, y, desenvainando muchas espadas, arremetieron a Basilio, en cuyo favor en un instante se desenvainaron casi otras tantas. Y, tomando la delantera a caballo don Quijote, con la lanza sobre el brazo y bien cubierto de su escudo, se hacía dar lugar de todos. Sancho, a quien jamás pluguieron ni solazaron semejantes fechorías, se acogió a las tinajas, donde había sacado su agradable espuma, pareciéndole aquel lugar como sagrado, que había de ser tenido en respeto. Don Quijote, a grandes voces, decía:

-Teneos, señores, teneos, que no es razón toméis venganza de los agravios que el amor nos hace; y advertid que el amor y la guerra son una misma cosa, y así como en la guerra es cosa lícita y acostumbrada usar de ardides y estratagemas para vencer al enemigo, así en las contiendas y competencias amorosas se tienen por buenos los embustes y marañas que se hacen para conseguir el fin que se desea, como no sean en menoscabo y deshonor de la cosa amada. Quiteria era de Basilio, y Basilio de Quiteria, por justa y favorable disposición de los cielos. Camacho es rico, y podrá comprar su gusto cuando, donde y como quisiere. Basilio no tiene más desta oveja, y no se la ha de quitar alguno, por poderoso que sea; que a los dos que Dios junta no podrá separar el hombre; y el que lo intentare, primero ha de pasar por la punta desta lanza.

Y, en esto, la blandió tan fuerte y tan diestramente, que puso pavor en todos los que no le conocían, y tan intensamente se fijó en la imaginación de Camacho el desdén de Quiteria, que se la borró de la memoria en un instante; y así tuvieron lugar con él las persuasiones del cura, que era varón prudente y bien intencionado, con las cuales quedó Camacho y los de su parcialidad pacíficos y sosegados; en señal de lo cual volvieron las espadas a sus lugares, culpando más a la facilidad de Quiteria que a la industria de Basilio; haciendo discurso Camacho que si Quiteria quería bien a Basilio doncella, también le quisiera casada, y que debía de dar gracias al cielo, más por habérsela quitado que por habérsela dado.

Consolado, pues, y pacífico Camacho y los de su mesnada, todos los de la de Basilio se sosegaron, y el rico Camacho, por mostrar que no sentía la burla, ni la estimaba en nada, quiso que las fiestas pasasen adelante como si realmente se desposara; pero no quisieron asistir a ellas Basilio ni su esposa ni secuaces; y así, se fueron a la aldea de Basilio, que también los pobres virtuosos y discretos tienen quien los siga, honre y ampare, como los ricos tienen quien los lisonjee y acompañe.

Lleváronse consigo a don Quijote, estimándole por hombre de valor y de pelo en pecho. A sólo Sancho se le escureció el alma, por verse imposibilitado de aguardar la espléndida comida y fiestas de Camacho, que duraron hasta la noche; y así, asenderado y triste, siguió a su señor, que con la cuadrilla de Basilio iba, y así se dejó atrás las ollas de Egipto, aunque las llevaba en el alma, cuya ya casi consumida y acabada espuma, que en el caldero llevaba, le representaba la gloria y la abundancia del bien que perdía; y así, congojado y pensativo, aunque sin hambre, sin apearce del rucio, siguió las huellas de Rocinante.

Capítulo XXII

Donde se da cuenta de la grande aventura de la cueva de Montesinos, que está en el corazón de la Mancha, a quien dio felice cima el valeroso don Quijote de la Mancha

GRANDES fueron y muchos los regalos que los desposados hicieron a don Quijote, obligados de las muestras que había dado defendiendo su causa, y al par de la valentía le graduaron la discreción, teniéndole por un Cid en las armas y por un Cicerón en la elocuencia. El buen Sancho se refociló tres días a costa de los novios, de los cuales se supo que no fue traza comunicada con la hermosa Quiteria el herirse fingidamente, sino industria de Basilio, esperando della el mismo suceso que se había visto; bien es verdad que confesó que había dado parte de su pensamiento a algunos de sus amigos, para que al tiempo necesario favoreciesen su intención y abonasen su engaño.

-No se pueden ni deben llamar engaños -dijo don Quijote-los que ponen la mira en virtuosos fines.

Y que el de casarse los enamorados era el fin de más excelencia, advirtiéndole que el mayor contrario que el amor tiene es la hambre y la continua necesidad, porque el amor es todo alegría, regocijo y contento, y más cuando el amante está en posesión de la cosa amada, contra quien son enemigos opuestos y declarados la necesidad y la pobreza; y que todo esto decía con intención de que se dejase el señor Basilio de ejercitar las habilidades que sabe, que, aunque le daban fama, no le daban dineros, y que atendiese a granjear hacienda por medios lícitos e industriosos, que nunca faltan a los prudentes y aplicados.

-El pobre honrado, si es que puede ser honrado el pobre, tiene prenda en tener mujer hermosa, que, cuando se la quitan, le quitan la honra y se la matan. La mujer hermosa y honrada, cuyo marido es pobre, merece ser coronada con laureles y palmas de vencimiento y triunfo. La hermosura, por sí sola, atrae las voluntades de cuantos la miran y conocen, y como a señuelo gustoso se le abaten las águilas reales y los pájaros altaneros; pero si a la tal hermosura se le junta la necesidad y la estrechez, también la embisten los cuervos, los milanos y las otras aves de rapiña; y la que está a tantos encuentros firme bien merece llamarse corona de su marido. Mirad, discreto Basilio -añadió don Quijote-: opinión fue de no sé qué sabio que no había en todo el mundo sino una sola mujer buena, y daba por consejo que cada uno pensase y creyese que aquella sola buena era la suya, y así viviría contento. Yo no soy casado, ni hasta agora me ha venido en pensamiento serlo; y, con todo esto, me atrevería a dar consejo al que me lo pidiese del modo que había de buscar la mujer con quien se quisiese casar. Lo primero, le aconsejaría que mirase más a la fama que a la hacienda, porque la buena mujer no alcanza la buena fama solamente con ser buena, sino con parecerlo; que mucho más dañan a las honras de las mujeres las desenvolturas y libertades públicas que las maldades secretas. Si traes buena mujer a tu casa, fácil cosa sería conservarla, y aun mejorarla, en aquella bondad; pero si la traes mala, en trabajo te pondrá el enmendarla: que no es muy hacedero pasar de un extremo a otro. Yo no digo que sea imposible, pero téngolo por dificultoso.

Oía todo esto Sancho, y dijo entre sí:

-Este mi amo, cuando yo hablo cosas de meollo y de sustancia suele decir que podría yo tomar un púlpito en las manos y irme por ese mundo adelante predicando lindezas; y yo digo dél que cuando comienza a enhilar sentencias y a dar consejos, no sólo puede tomar púlpito en las manos, sino dos en cada dedo, y andarse por esas plazas a ¿qué quieres boca? ¡Válate el diablo por caballero andante, que tantas cosas sabes! Yo pensaba en mi ánima que sólo podía saber aquello que tocaba a sus caballerías, pero no hay cosa donde no pique y deje de meter su cucharada.

Murmuraba esto algo Sancho, y entreoyóle su señor, y preguntóle:

-¿Qué murmuras, Sancho?

-No digo nada, ni murmuro de nada -respondió Sancho-; sólo estaba diciendo entre mí que quisiera haber oído lo que vuesa merced aquí ha dicho antes que me casara, que quizá dijera yo agora: «El buey suelto bien se lame».

-¿Tan mala es tu Teresa, Sancho? -dijo don Quijote.

-No es muy mala -respondió Sancho-, pero no es muy buena; a lo menos, no es tan buena como yo quisiera.

-Mal haces, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, en decir mal de tu mujer, que, en efecto, es madre de tus hijos.

-No nos debemos nada -respondió Sancho-, que también ella dice mal de mí cuando se le antoja, especialmente cuando está celosa, que entonces súfrala el mismo Satanás.

Finalmente, tres días estuvieron con los novios, donde fueron regalados y servidos como cuerpos de rey. Pidió don Quijote al diestro licenciado le diese una guía que le encaminase a la cueva de Montesinos, porque tenía gran deseo de entrar en ella y ver a ojos vistas si eran verdaderas las maravillas que de ella se decían por todos aquellos contornos. El licenciado le dijo que le daría a un primo suyo, famoso estudiante y muy aficionado a leer libros de caballerías, el cual con mucha voluntad le pondría a la boca de la misma cueva, y le enseñaría las lagunas de Ruidera, famosas ansimismo en toda la Mancha, y aun en toda España; y díjole que llevaría con él gustoso entretenimiento, a causa que era mozo que sabía hacer libros para imprimir y para dirigirlos a príncipes. Finalmente, el primo vino con una pollina preñada, cuya albarda cubría un gayado tapete o arpillera. Ensilló Sancho a Rocinante y aderezó al rucio, proveyó sus alforjas, a las cuales acompañaron las del primo, asimismo bien proveídas, y, encomendándose a Dios y despidiéndose de todos, se pusieron en camino, tomando la derrota de la famosa cueva de Montesinos.

En el camino preguntó don Quijote al primo de qué género y calidad eran sus ejercicios, su profesión y estudios; a lo que él respondió que su profesión era ser humanista; sus ejercicios y estudios, componer libros para dar a la estampa, todos de gran provecho y no menos entretenimiento para la república; que el uno se intitulaba el de las libreas, donde pinta setecientas y tres libreas, con sus colores, motes y cifras, de donde podían sacar y tomar las que quisiesen en tiempo de fiestas y regocijos los caballeros cortesanos, sin andarlas mendigando de nadie, ni lambicando, como dicen, el cerbelo, por sacarlas conformes a sus deseos e intenciones.

-Porque doy al celoso, al desdeñado, al olvidado y al ausente las que les convienen, que les vendrán más justas que pecadoras. Otro libro tengo también, a quien he de llamar Metamorfóseos, o Ovidio español, de invención nueva y rara; porque en él, imitando a Ovidio a lo burlesco, pinto quién fue la Giralda de Sevilla y el Ángel de la Madalena, quién el Caño de Vecinguerra, de Córdoba, quiénes los Toros de Guisando, la Sierra Morena, las fuentes de Leganitos y Lavapiés, en Madrid, no olvidándome de la del Piojo, de la del Caño Dorado y de la Priora; y esto, con sus alegorías, metáforas y translaciones, de modo que alegran, suspenden y enseñan a un mismo punto. Otro libro tengo, que le llamo Suplemento a Virgilio Polidoro, que trata de la invención de las cosas, que es de grande erudición y estudio, a causa que las cosas que se dejó de decir Polidoro de gran sustancia, las averiguo yo, y las declaro por gentil estilo. Olvidósele a Virgilio de declararnos quién fue el primero que tuvo catarro en el mundo, y el primero que tomó las unciones para curarse del morbo gálico, y yo lo declaro al pie de la letra, y lo autorizo con más de veinte y cinco autores: porque vea vuesa merced si he trabajado bien y si ha de ser útil el tal libro a todo el mundo.

Sancho, que había estado muy atento a la narración del primo, le dijo:

-Dígame, señor, así Dios le dé buena manderecha en la impresión de sus libros: ¿sabríame decir, que sí sabrá, pues todo lo sabe, quién fue el primero que se rascó en la cabeza, que yo para mí tengo que debió de ser nuestro padre Adán?

-Sí sería -respondió el primo-, porque Adán no hay duda sino que tuvo cabeza y cabellos; y, siendo esto así, y siendo el primer hombre del mundo, alguna vez se rascaría.

-Así lo creo yo -respondió Sancho-; pero dígame ahora: ¿quién fue el primer volteador del mundo?

-En verdad, hermano -respondió el primo-, que no me sabré determinar por ahora, hasta que lo estudie. Yo lo estudiaré, en volviendo adonde tengo mis libros, y yo os satisfaré cuando otra vez nos veamos, que no ha de ser ésta la postrera.

-Pues mire, señor -replicó Sancho-, no tome trabajo en esto, que ahora he caído en la cuenta de lo que le he preguntado. Sepa que el primer volteador del mundo fue Lucifer, cuando le echaron o arrojaron del cielo, que vino volteando hasta los abismos.

-Tienes razón, amigo -dijo el primo.

Y dijo don Quijote:

-Esa pregunta y respuesta no es tuya, Sancho: a alguno las has oído decir.

-Calle, señor -replicó Sancho-, que a buena fe que si me doy a preguntar y a responder, que no acabe de aquí a mañana. Sí, que para preguntar necedades y responder disparates no he menester yo andar buscando ayuda de vecinos.

-Más has dicho, Sancho, de lo que sabes -dijo don Quijote-; que hay algunos que se cansan en saber y averiguar cosas que, después de sabidas y averiguadas, no importan un ardite al entendimiento ni a la memoria.

En estas y otras gustosas pláticas se les pasó aquel día, y a la noche se albergaron en una pequeña aldea, adonde el primo dijo a don Quijote que desde allí a la cueva de Montesinos no había más de dos leguas, y que si llevaba determinado de entrar en ella, era menester proveerse de sogas, para atarse y descolgarse en su profundidad.

Don Quijote dijo que, aunque llegase al abismo, había de ver dónde paraba; y así, compraron casi cien brazas de soga, y otro día, a las dos de la tarde, llegaron a la cueva, cuya boca es espaciosa y ancha, pero llena de cambronerías y cabrahígos, de zarzas y malezas, tan espesas y intrincadas, que de todo en todo la ciegan y encubren. En viéndola, se apearon el primo, Sancho y don Quijote, al cual los dos le ataron luego fortísimamente con las sogas; y, en tanto que le fajaban y ceñían, le dijo Sancho:

-Mire vuestra merced, señor mío, lo que hace: no se quiera sepultar en vida, ni se ponga adonde parezca frasco que le ponen a enfriar en algún pozo. Sí, que a vuestra merced no le toca ni atañe ser el escudriñador desta que debe de ser peor que mazmorra.

-Ata y calla -respondió don Quijote-, que tal empresa como aquésta, Sancho amigo, para mí estaba guardada.

Y entonces dijo la guía:

-Suplico a vuesa merced, señor don Quijote, que mire bien y especule con cien ojos lo que hay allá dentro: quizá habrá cosas que las ponga yo en el libro de mis Transformaciones.

-En manos está el pandero que le sabrá bien tañer -respondió Sancho Panza.

Dicho esto y acabada la ligadura de don Quijote -que no fue sobre el arnés, sino sobre el jubón de armar-, dijo don Quijote:

-Inadvertidos hemos andado en no habernos proveído de algún esquilón pequeño, que fuera atado junto a mí en esta misma sogá, con cuyo sonido se entendiera que todavía bajaba y estaba vivo; pero, pues ya no es posible, a la mano de Dios, que me guíe.

Y luego se hincó de rodillas y hizo una oración en voz baja al cielo, pidiendo a Dios le ayudase y le diese buen suceso en aquella, al parecer, peligrosa y nueva aventura, y en voz alta dijo luego:

-¡Oh señora de mis acciones y movimientos, clarísima y sin par Dulcinea del Toboso! Si es posible que lleguen a tus oídos las plegarias y rogaciones deste tu venturoso amante, por tu inaudita belleza te ruego las escuches, que no son otras que rogarte no me niegues tu favor y amparo, ahora que tanto le he menester. Yo voy a despeñarme, a empozarme y a hundirme en el abismo que aquí se me representa, sólo porque conozca el mundo que si tú me favoreces, no habrá imposible a quien yo no acometa y acabe.

Y, en diciendo esto, se acercó a la sima; vio no ser posible descolgarse, ni hacer lugar a la entrada, si no era a fuerza de brazos, o a cuchilladas, y así, poniendo mano a la espada, comenzó a derribar y a cortar de aquellas malezas que a la boca de la cueva estaban, por cuyo ruido y estruendo salieron por ella una infinidad de grandísimos cuervos y grajos, tan espesos y con tanta priesa, que dieron con don Quijote en el suelo; y si él fuera tan agorero como católico cristiano, lo tuviera a mala señal y escusara de encerrarse en lugar semejante.

Finalmente se levantó, y, viendo que no salían más cuervos ni otras aves noturnas, como fueron murciélagos, que asimismo entre los cuervos salieron, dándole sogá el primo y Sancho, se dejó calar al fondo de la caverna espantosa; y, al entrar, echándole Sancho su bendición y haciendo sobre él mil cruces, dijo:

-¡Dios te guíe y la Peña de Francia, junto con la Trinidad de Gaeta, flor, nata y espuma de los caballeros andantes! ¡Allá vas, valentón del mundo, corazón de acero, brazos de bronce! ¡Dios te guíe, otra vez, y te vuelva libre, sano y sin cautela a la luz desta vida que dejas por enterrarte en esta escuridad que buscas!

Casi las mismas plegarias y deprecaciones hizo el primo.

Iba don Quijote dando voces que le diesen sogá y más sogá, y ellos se la daban poco a poco; y cuando las voces, que acanaladas por la cueva salían, dejaron de oírse, ya ellos tenían descolgadas las cien brazas de sogas, y fueron de parecer de volver a subir a don Quijote, pues no le podían dar más cuerda. Con todo eso, se detuvieron como media hora, al cabo del cual espacio volvieron a recoger la soga con mucha facilidad y sin peso alguno, señal que les hizo imaginar que don Quijote se quedaba dentro; y, creyéndolo así, Sancho lloraba amargamente y tiraba con mucha priesa por desengañarse, pero, llegando, a su parecer, a poco más de las ochenta brazas, sintieron peso, de que en extremo se alegraron. Finalmente, a las diez vieron distintamente a don Quijote, a quien dio voces Sancho, diciéndole:

-Sea vuestra merced muy bien vuelto, señor mío, que ya pensábamos que se quedaba allá para casta.

Pero no respondía palabra don Quijote; y, sacándole del todo, vieron que traía cerrados los ojos, con muestras de estar dormido. Tendiéronle en el suelo y desliáronle, y con todo esto no despertaba; pero tanto le volvieron y revolvieron, sacudieron y menearon, que al cabo de un buen espacio volvió en sí, desperezándose, bien como si de algún grave y profundo sueño despertara; y, mirando a una y otra parte, como espantado, dijo:

-Dios os lo perdone, amigos; que me habéis quitado de la más sabrosa y agradable vida y vista que ningún humano ha visto ni pasado. En efecto, ahora acabo de conocer que todos los contentos desta vida pasan como sombra y sueño, o se marchitan como la flor del campo. ¡Oh desdichado Montesinos! ¡Oh mal ferido Durandarte! ¡Oh sin ventura Belerma! ¡Oh lloroso Guadiana, y vosotras sin dicha hijas de Ruidera, que mostráis en vuestras aguas las que lloraron vuestros hermosos ojos!

Escuchaban el primo y Sancho las palabras de don Quijote, que las decía como si con dolor inmenso las sacara de las entrañas. Suplicáronle les diese a entender lo que decía, y les dijese lo que en aquel infierno había visto.

-¿Infierno le llamáis? -dijo don Quijote-; pues no le llaméis así, porque no lo merece, como luego veréis.

Pidió que le diesen algo de comer, que traía grandísima hambre. Tendieron la arpillera del primo sobre la verde yerba, acudieron a la despensa de sus alforjas, y, sentados todos tres en buen amor y compañía, merendaron y cenaron, todo junto. Levantada la arpillera, dijo don Quijote de la Mancha:

-No se levante nadie, y estadme, hijos, todos atentos.

Capítulo XXIII

De las admirables cosas que el estremado don Quijote contó que había visto en la profunda cueva de Montesinos, cuya imposibilidad y grandeza hace que se tenga esta aventura por apócrifa

LAS CUATRO de la tarde serían cuando el sol, entre nubes cubierto, con luz escasa y templados rayos, dio lugar a don Quijote para que, sin calor y pesadumbre, contase a sus dos clarísimos oyentes lo que en la cueva de Montesinos había visto. Y comenzó en el modo siguiente:

-A obra de doce o catorce estados de la profundidad desta mazmorra, a la derecha mano, se hace una concavidad y espacio capaz de poder caber en ella un gran carro con sus mulas. Éntrale una pequeña luz por unos resquicios o agujeros, que lejos le responden, abiertos en la superficie de la tierra. Esta concavidad y espacio vi yo a tiempo cuando ya iba cansado y mohíno de verme, pendiente y colgado de la sogá, caminar por aquella oscura región abajo, sin llevar cierto ni determinado camino; y así, determiné entrarme en ella y descansar un poco. Di voces, pidiéndoos que no descolgádes más sogá hasta que yo os lo dijese, pero no debistes de oírme. Fui recogiendo la sogá que enviábades, y, haciendo della una rosca o rimero, me senté sobre él, pensativo además, considerando lo que hacer debía para calar al fondo, no teniendo quién me sustentase; y, estando en este pensamiento y confusión, de repente y sin procurarlo, me saltó un sueño profundísimo; y, cuando menos lo pensaba, sin saber cómo ni cómo no, desperté dél y me hallé en la mitad del más bello, ameno y deleitoso prado que puede criar la naturaleza ni imaginar la más discreta imaginación humana. Despabilé los ojos, limpiémelos, y vi que no dormía, sino que realmente estaba despierto; con todo esto, me tenté la cabeza y los pechos, por certificarme si era yo mismo el que allí estaba, o alguna fantasma vana y contrahecha; pero el tacto, el sentimiento, los discursos concertados que entre mí hacía, me certificaron que yo era allí entonces el que soy aquí ahora. Ofrecióseme luego a la vista un real y suntuoso palacio o alcázar, cuyos muros y paredes parecían de transparente y claro cristal fabricados; del cual abriéndose dos grandes puertas, vi que por ellas salía y hacia mí se venía un venerable anciano, vestido con un capuz de bayeta morada, que por el suelo le arrastraba: ceñíale los hombros y los pechos una beca de colegial, de raso verde; cubríale la cabeza una gorra milanésa negra, y la barba, canísima, le pasaba de la cintura; no traía arma ninguna, sino un rosario de cuentas en la mano, mayores que medianas nueces, y los dieces asimismo como huevos medianos de avestruz; el continente, el paso, la gravedad y la anchísima presencia, cada cosa de por sí y todas juntas, me suspendieron y admiraron. Llegóse a mí, y lo primero que hizo fue abrazarme estrechamente, y luego decirme: «Luengos tiempos ha, valeroso caballero don Quijote de la Mancha, que los que estamos en estas soledades encantados esperamos verte, para que des noticia al mundo de lo que encierra y cubre la profunda cueva por donde has entrado, llamada la cueva de Montesinos: hazaña sólo guardada para ser acometida de tu invencible corazón y de tu ánimo stupendo. Ven conmigo, señor clarísimo, que te quiero mostrar las maravillas que este transparente alcázar solapa, de quien yo soy alcaide y guarda mayor perpetua, porque soy el mismo Montesinos, de quien la cueva toma nombre». Apenas me dijo que era Montesinos, cuando le pregunté si fue verdad lo que en el mundo de acá arriba se contaba: que él había sacado de la mitad del pecho, con una pequeña daga, el corazón de su grande amigo Durandarte y llevádole a la Señora Belerma, como él se lo mandó al punto de su muerte. Respondiome que en todo decían verdad, sino en la daga, porque no fue daga, ni pequeña, sino un puñal buido, más agudo que una lezna.

-Debía de ser -dijo a este punto Sancho-el tal puñal de Ramón de Hoces, el sevillano.

-No sé -prosiguió don Quijote-, pero no sería dese puñalero, porque Ramón de Hoces fue ayer, y lo de Roncesvalles, donde aconteció esta desgracia, ha muchos años; y esta averiguación no es de importancia, ni turba ni altera la verdad y contesto de la historia.

-Así es -respondió el primo-; prosiga vuestra merced, señor don Quijote, que le escucho con el mayor gusto del mundo.

-No con menor lo cuento yo -respondió don Quijote-; y así, digo que el venerable Montesinos me metió en el cristalino palacio, donde en una sala baja, fresquísima sobremodo y toda de alabastro, estaba un sepulcro de mármol, con gran maestría fabricado, sobre el cual vi a un caballero tendido de largo a largo, no de bronce, ni de mármol, ni de jaspe hecho, como los suele haber en otros sepulcros, sino de pura carne y de puros huesos. Tenía la mano derecha (que, a mi parecer, es algo peluda y nervosa, señal de tener muchas fuerzas su dueño) puesta sobre el lado del corazón, y, antes que preguntase nada a Montesinos, viéndome suspenso mirando al del sepulcro, me dijo: «Éste es mi amigo Durandarte, flor y espejo de los caballeros enamorados y valientes de su tiempo; tiénele aquí encantado, como me tiene a mí y a otros muchos y muchas, Merlín, aquel francés encantador que dicen que fue hijo del diablo; y lo que yo creo es que no fue hijo del diablo, sino que supo, como dicen, un punto más que el diablo. El cómo o para qué nos encantó nadie lo sabe, y ello dirá andando los tiempos, que no están muy lejos, según imagino. Lo que a mí me admira es que sé, tan cierto como ahora es de día, que Durandarte acabó los de su vida en mis brazos, y que después de muerto le saqué el corazón con mis propias manos; y en verdad que debía de pesar dos libras, porque, según los naturales, el que tiene mayor corazón es dotado de mayor valentía del que le tiene pequeño. Pues siendo esto así, y que realmente murió este caballero, ¿cómo ahora se queja y suspira de cuando en cuando, como si estuviese vivo?» Esto dicho, el mísero Durandarte, dando una gran voz, dijo:

Lo postrero que os rogaba, que cuando yo fuere muerto,
y mi ánima arrancada, que llevéis mi corazón
adonde Belerma estaba, sacándomele del pecho,
ya con puñal, ya con daga».

Oyendo lo cual el venerable Montesinos, se puso de rodillas ante el lastimado caballero, y, con lágrimas en los ojos, le dijo: «Ya, señor Durandarte, carísimo primo mío, ya hice lo que me mandastes en el aciago día de nuestra pérdida: yo os saqué el corazón lo mejor que pude, sin que os dejase una mínima parte en el pecho; yo le limpié con un pañizuelo de puntas; yo partí con él de carrera para Francia, habiéndoo primero puesto en el seno de la tierra, con tantas lágrimas, que fueron bastantes a lavarme las manos y limpiarme con ellas la sangre que tenían, de haberos andado en las entrañas; y, por más señas, primo de mi alma, en el primero lugar que topé, saliendo de Roncesvalles, eché un poco de sal en vuestro corazón, porque no oliese mal, y fuese, si no fresco, a lo menos amojamado, a la presencia de la señora Belerma; la cual, con vos, y conmigo, y con Guadiana, vuestro escudero, y con la dueña Ruidera y sus siete hijas y dos sobrinas, y con otros muchos de vuestros conocidos y amigos, nos tiene aquí encantados el sabio Merlín ha muchos años; y, aunque pasan de quinientos, no se ha muerto ninguno de nosotros: solamente faltan Ruidera y sus hijas y sobrinas, las cuales llorando, por compasión que debió de tener Merlín dellas, las convirtió en otras tantas lagunas, que ahora, en el mundo de los vivos y en la provincia de la Mancha, las llaman las lagunas de Ruidera; las siete son de los reyes de España, y las dos sobrinas, de los caballeros de una orden santísima, que llaman de San Juan. Guadiana, vuestro escudero, plañendo asimesmo vuestra desgracia, fue convertido en un río llamado de su mismo nombre; el cual, cuando llegó a la superficie de la tierra y vio el sol del otro cielo, fue tanto el pesar que sintió de ver que os dejaba, que se sumergió en las entrañas de la tierra; pero, como no es posible dejar de acudir a su natural corriente, de cuando en cuando sale y se muestra donde el sol y las gentes le vean. Vanle administrando de sus aguas las referidas lagunas, con las cuales y con otras muchas que se llegan, entra pomposo y grande en Portugal. Pero, con todo esto, por dondequiera que va muestra su tristeza y melancolía, y no se precia de criar en sus aguas peces regalados y de estima, sino burdos y desabridos, bien diferentes de los del Tajo dorado; y esto que agora os digo, ¡oh primo mío!, os lo he dicho muchas veces; y, como no me respondéis, imagino que no me dais crédito, o no me oís, de lo que yo recibo tanta pena cual Dios lo sabe. Unas nuevas os quiero dar ahora, las cuales, ya que no sirvan de alivio a vuestro dolor, no os le aumentarán en ninguna manera. Sabed que tenéis aquí en vuestra presencia, y abrid los ojos y veréislo, aquel gran caballero de quien tantas cosas tiene profetizadas el sabio Merlín, aquel don Quijote de la Mancha, digo, que de nuevo y con mayores ventajas que en los pasados siglos ha resucitado en los presentes la ya olvidada andante caballería, por cuyo medio y favor podría ser que nosotros fuésemos desencantados; que las grandes hazañas para los grandes hombres están guardadas». «Y cuando así no sea -respondió el lastimado Durandarte con voz desmayada y baja-, cuando así no sea, ¡oh primo!, digo, paciencia y barajar». Y, volviéndose de lado, tornó a su acostumbrado silencio, sin hablar más palabra. Oyéronse en esto grandes alaridos y llantos, acompañados de profundos gemidos y angustiados sollozos; volví la cabeza, y vi por las paredes de cristal que por otra sala pasaba una procesión de dos hileras de hermosísimas doncellas, todas vestidas de luto, con turbantes blancos sobre las cabezas, al modo turquesco. Al cabo y fin de las hileras venía una señora, que en la gravedad lo parecía, asimismo vestida de negro, con tocas blancas tan tendidas y largas, que besaban la tierra. Su turbante era mayor dos veces que el mayor de alguna de las otras; era cejijunta y la nariz algo chata; la boca grande, pero colorados los labios; los dientes, que tal vez los descubría, mostraban ser ralos y no bien puestos, aunque eran blancos como unas peladas almendras; traía en las manos un lienzo delgado, y entre él, a lo que pude divisar, un corazón de carne momia, según venía seco y amojamado. Díjome Montesinos como toda aquella gente de la procesión eran sirvientes de Durandarte y de Belerma, que allí con sus dos señores estaban encantados, y que la última, que traía el corazón entre el lienzo y en las manos, era la señora Belerma, la cual con sus doncellas cuatro días en la semana hacían aquella procesión y cantaban, o, por mejor decir, lloraban endechas sobre el cuerpo y sobre el lastimado corazón de su primo; y que si me había parecido algo fea, o no tan hermosa como tenía la fama, era la causa las malas noches y peores días que en aquel encantamento pasaba, como lo podía ver en sus grandes ojeras y en su color quebradiza. «Y no toma ocasión su amarillez y sus ojeras de estar con el mal mensil, ordinario en las mujeres, porque ha muchos meses, y aun años, que no le tiene ni asoma por sus puertas, sino del dolor que siente su corazón por el que de continuo tiene en las manos, que le renueva y trae a la memoria la desgracia de su mal logrado amante; que si esto no fuera, apenas la igualara en hermosura, donaire y brío la gran Dulcinea del Toboso, tan celebrada en todos estos contornos, y aun en todo el mundo». «¡Cepos quedos! -dije yo entonces-, señor don Montesinos: cuente vuesa merced su historia como debe, que ya sabe que toda comparación es odiosa, y así, no hay para qué comparar a nadie con nadie. La sin par Dulcinea del Toboso es quien es, y la señora doña Belerma es quien es, y quien ha sido, y quédese aquí». A lo que él me respondió: «Señor don Quijote, perdóneme vuesa merced, que yo confieso que anduve mal, y no dije bien en decir que apenas igualara la señora Dulcinea a la señora Belerma, pues me bastaba a mí haber entendido, por no sé qué barruntos, que vuesa merced es su caballero, para que me mordiera la lengua antes de compararla sino con el mismo cielo». Con esta satisfacción que me dio el gran Montesinos se quietó mi corazón del sobresalto que recibí en oír que a mi señora la comparaban con Belerma.

-Y aun me maravillo yo -dijo Sancho-de cómo vuestra merced no se subió sobre el vejote, y le molió a coces todos los huesos, y le peló las barbas, sin dejarle pelo en ellas.

-No, Sancho amigo -respondió don Quijote-, no me estaba a mí bien hacer eso, porque estamos todos obligados a tener respeto a los ancianos, aunque no sean caballeros, y principalmente a los que lo son y están encantados; yo sé bien que no nos quedamos a deber nada en otras muchas demandas y respuestas que entre los dos pasamos.

A esta sazón dijo el primo:

-Yo no sé, señor don Quijote, cómo vuestra merced en tan poco espacio de tiempo como ha que está allá bajo, haya visto tantas cosas y hablado y respondido tanto.

-¿Cuánto ha que bajé? -preguntó don Quijote.

-Poco más de una hora -respondió Sancho.

-Eso no puede ser -replicó don Quijote-, porque allá me anocheció y amaneció, y tornó a anochecer y amanecer tres veces; de modo que, a mi cuenta, tres días he estado en aquellas partes remotas y escondidas a la vista nuestra.

-Verdad debe de decir mi señor -dijo Sancho-, que, como todas las cosas que le han sucedido son por encantamento, quizá lo que a nosotros nos parece un hora, debe de parecer allá tres días con sus noches.

-Así será -respondió don Quijote.

-Y ¿ha comido vuestra merced en todo este tiempo, señor mío? -preguntó el primo.

-No me he desayunado de bocado -respondió don Quijote-, ni aun he tenido hambre, ni por pensamiento.

-Y los encantados, ¿comen? -dijo el primo.

-No comen -respondió don Quijote-, ni tienen escrementos mayores; aunque es opinión que les crecen las uñas, las barbas y los cabellos.

-¿Y duermen, por ventura, los encantados, señor? -preguntó Sancho.

-No, por cierto -respondió don Quijote-; a lo menos, en estos tres días que yo he estado con ellos, ninguno ha pegado el ojo, ni yo tampoco.

-Aquí encaja bien el refrán -dijo Sancho-de dime con quién andas, decirte he quién eres: ándase vuestra merced con encantados ayunos y vigilantes, mirad si es mucho que ni coma ni duerma mientras con ellos anduviere. Pero perdóneme vuestra merced, señor mío, si le digo que de todo cuanto aquí ha dicho, lléveme Dios, que iba a decir el diablo, si le creo cosa alguna.

-¿Cómo no? -dijo el primo-, pues ¿había de mentir el señor don Quijote, que, aunque quisiera, no ha tenido lugar para componer e imaginar tanto millón de mentiras?

-Yo no creo que mi señor miente -respondió Sancho.

-Si no, ¿qué crees? -le preguntó don Quijote.

-Creo -respondió Sancho-que aquel Merlín, o aquellos encantadores que encantaron a toda la chusma que vuestra merced dice que ha visto y comunicado allá bajo, le encajaron en el magín o la memoria toda esa máquina que nos ha contado, y todo aquello que por contar le queda.

-Todo eso pudiera ser, Sancho -replicó don Quijote-, pero no es así, porque lo que he contado lo vi por mis propios ojos y lo toqué con mis mismas manos. Pero, ¿qué dirás cuando te diga yo ahora cómo, entre otras infinitas cosas y maravillas que me mostró Montesinos, las cuales despacio y a sus tiempos te las iré contando en el discurso de nuestro viaje, por no ser todas deste lugar, me mostró tres labradoras que por aquellos amenísimos campos iban saltando y brincando como cabras; y, apenas las hube visto, cuando conocí ser la una la sin par Dulcinea del Toboso, y las otras dos aquellas mismas labradoras que venían con ella, que hablamos a la salida del Toboso? Pregunté a Montesinos si las conocía, respondiíme que no, pero que él imaginaba que debían de ser algunas señoras principales encantadas, que pocos días había que en aquellos prados habían parecido; y que no me maravillase desto, porque allí estaban otras muchas señoras de los pasados y presentes siglos, encantadas en diferentes y estrañas figuras, entre las cuales conocía él a la reina Ginebra y su dueña Quintañoa, escanciando el vino a Lanzarote,

Cuando Sancho Panza oyó decir esto a su amo, pensó perder el juicio, o morirse de risa; que, como él sabía la verdad del fingido encanto de Dulcinea, de quien él había sido el encantador y el levantador de tal testimonio, acabó de conocer indubitablemente que su señor estaba fuera de juicio y loco de todo punto; y así, le dijo:

-En mala coyuntura y en peor sazón y en aciago día bajó vuestra merced, caro patrón mío, al otro mundo, y en mal punto se encontró con el señor Montesinos, que tal nos le ha vuelto. Bien se estaba vuestra merced acá arriba con su entero juicio, tal cual Dios se le había dado, hablando sentencias y dando consejos a cada paso, y no agora, contando los mayores disparates que pueden imaginarse.

-Como te conozco, Sancho -respondió don Quijote-, no hago caso de tus palabras.

-Ni yo tampoco de las de vuestra merced -replicó Sancho-, siquiera me hiera, siquiera me mate por las que le he dicho, o por las que le pienso decir si en las tuyas no se corrige y enmienda. Pero dígame vuestra merced, ahora que estamos en paz: ¿cómo o en qué conoció a la señora nuestra ama? Y si la habló, ¿qué dijo, y qué le respondió?

-Conocíla -respondió don Quijote-en que trae los mismos vestidos que traía cuando tú me le mostraste. Habléla, pero no me respondió palabra; antes, me volvió las espaldas, y se fue huyendo con tanta priesa, que no la alcanzara una jara. Quise seguirla, y lo hiciera, si no me aconsejara Montesinos que no me cansase en ello, porque sería en balde, y más porque se llegaba la hora donde me convenía volver a salir de la sima. Díjome asimesmo que, andando el tiempo, se me daría aviso cómo habían de ser desencantados él, y Belerma y Durandarte, con todos los que allí estaban; pero lo que más pena me dio, de las que allí vi y noté, fue que, estándome diciendo Montesinos estas razones, se llegó a mí por un lado, sin que yo la viese venir, una de las dos compañeras de la sin ventura Dulcinea, y, llenos los ojos de lágrimas, con turbada y baja voz, me dijo: «Mi señora Dulcinea del Toboso besa a vuestra merced las manos, y suplica a vuestra merced se la haga de hacerla saber cómo está; y que, por estar en una gran necesidad, asimismo suplica a vuestra merced, cuan encarecidamente puede, sea servido de prestarle sobre este faldellín que aquí traigo, de cotonía, nuevo, media docena de reales, o los que vuestra merced tuviere, que ella da su palabra de volvérselos con mucha brevedad». Suspendióme y admiróme el tal recado, y, volviéndome al señor Montesinos, le pregunté: «¿Es posible, señor Montesinos, que los encantados principales padecen necesidad?» A lo que él me respondió: «Créame vuestra merced, señor don Quijote de la Mancha, que ésta que llaman necesidad adondequiera se usa, y por todo se estiende, y a todos alcanza, y aun hasta los encantados no perdona; y, pues la señora Dulcinea del Toboso envía a pedir esos seis reales, y la prenda es buena, según parece, no hay sino dárselos; que, sin duda, debe de estar puesta en algún grande aprieto». «Prenda, no la tomaré yo -le respondí-, ni menos le daré lo que pide, porque no tengo sino solos cuatro reales»; los cuales le di (que fueron los que tú, Sancho, me diste el otro día para dar limosna a los pobres que topase por los caminos), y le dije: «Decid, amiga mía, a vuesa señora que a mí me pesa en el alma de sus trabajos, y que quisiera ser un Fúcar para remediarlos; y que le hago saber que yo no puedo ni debo tener salud careciendo de su agradable vista y discreta conversación, y que le suplico, cuan encarecidamente puedo, sea servida su merced de dejarse ver y tratar deste su cautivo servidor y asendereado caballero. Diréisle también que, cuando menos se lo piense, oirá decir como yo he hecho un juramento y voto, a modo de aquel que hizo el marqués de Mantua, de vengar a su sobrino Baldovinos, cuando le halló para espirar en mitad de la montiña, que fue de no comer pan a manteles, con las otras zarandajas que allí añadió, hasta vengarle; y así le haré yo de no sosegar, y de andar las siete partidas del mundo, con más puntualidad que las anduvo el infante don Pedro de Portugal, hasta desencantarla». «Todo eso, y más, debe vuestra merced a mi señora», me respondió la doncella. Y, tomando los cuatro reales, en lugar de hacerme una reverencia, hizo una cabriola, que se levantó dos varas de medir en el aire.

-¡Oh santo Dios! -dijo a este tiempo dando una gran voz Sancho-. ¿Es posible que tal hay en el mundo, y que tengan en él tanta fuerza los encantadores y encantamientos, que hayan trocado el buen juicio de mi señor en una tan disparatada locura? ¡Oh señor, señor, por quien Dios es, que vuestra merced mire por sí y vuelva por su honra, y no dé crédito a esas vaciedades que le tienen menguado y descabalado el sentido!

-Como me quieres bien, Sancho, hablas desa manera -dijo don Quijote-; y, como no estás experimentado en las cosas del mundo, todas las cosas que tienen algo de dificultad te parecen imposibles; pero andrà el tiempo, como otra vez he dicho, y yo te contaré algunas de las que allá abajo he visto, que te harán creer las que aquí he contado, cuya verdad ni admite réplica ni disputa.

Capítulo XXIV

Donde se cuentan mil zarandajas tan impertinentes como necesarias al verdadero entendimiento desta grande historia

DICE el que tradujo esta grande historia del original, de la que escribió su primer autor Cide Hamete Benengeli, que, llegando al capítulo de la aventura de la cueva de Montesinos, en el margen dél estaban escritas, de mano del mismo Hamete, estas mismas razones:

«No me puedo dar a entender, ni me puedo persuadir, que al valeroso don Quijote le pasase puntualmente todo lo que en el antecedente capítulo queda escrito: la razón es que todas las aventuras hasta aquí sucedidas han sido contingibles y verisímiles, pero ésta desta cueva no le hallo entrada alguna para tenerla por verdadera, por ir tan fuera de los términos razonables. Pues pensar yo que don Quijote mintiese, siendo el más verdadero hidalgo y el más noble caballero de sus tiempos, no es posible; que no dijera él una mentira si le asaetaran. Por otra parte, considero que él la contó y la dijo con todas las circunstancias dichas, y que no pudo fabricar en tan breve espacio tan gran máquina de disparates; y si esta aventura parece apócrifa, yo no tengo la culpa; y así, sin afirmarla por falsa o verdadera, la escribo. Tú, lector, pues eres prudente, juzga lo que te pareciere, que yo no debo ni puedo más; puesto que se tiene por cierto que al tiempo de su fin y muerte dicen que se retrató della, y dijo que él la había inventado, por parecerle que convenía y cuadraba bien con las aventuras que había leído en sus historias».

Espantóse el primo, así del atrevimiento de Sancho Panza como de la paciencia de su amo, y juzgó que del contento que tenía de haber visto a su señora Dulcinea del Toboso, aunque encantada, le nacía aquella condición blanda que entonces mostraba; porque, si así no fuera, palabras y razones le dijo Sancho, que merecían molerle a palos; porque realmente le pareció que había andado atrevidillo con su señor, a quien le dijo:

-Yo, señor don Quijote de la Mancha, doy por bien empleadísima la jornada que con vuestra merced he hecho, porque en ella he granjeado cuatro cosas. La primera, haber conocido a vuestra merced, que lo tengo a gran felicidad. La segunda, haber sabido lo que se encierra en esta cueva de Montesinos, con las mutaciones de Guadiana y de las lagunas de Ruidera, que me servirán para el

Ovidio español que traigo entre manos. La tercera, entender la antigüedad de los naipes, que, por lo menos, ya se usaban en tiempo del emperador Carlomagno, según puede colegirse de las palabras que vuesa merced dice que dijo Durandarte, cuando, al cabo de aquel grande espacio que estuvo hablando con él Montesinos, él despertó diciendo: «Paciencia y barajar»; y esta razón y modo de hablar no la pudo aprender encantado, sino cuando no lo estaba, en Francia y en tiempo del referido emperador Carlomagno. Y esta averiguación me viene pintiparada para el otro libro que voy componiendo, que es Suplemento de Virgilio Polidoro, en la invención de las antigüedades; y creo que en el suyo no se acordó de poner la de los naipes, como la pondré yo ahora, que será de mucha importancia, y más alegando autor tan grave y tan verdadero como es el señor Durandarte. La cuarta es haber sabido con certidumbre el nacimiento del río Guadiana, hasta ahora ignorado de las gentes.

-Vuestra merced tiene razón -dijo don Quijote-, pero querría yo saber, ya que Dios le haga merced de que se le dé licencia para imprimir esos sus libros, que lo dudo, a quién piensa dirigirlos.

-Señores y grandes hay en España a quien puedan dirigirse -dijo el primo.

-No muchos -respondió don Quijote-; y no porque no lo merezcan, sino que no quieren admitirlos, por no obligarse a la satisfacción que parece se debe al trabajo y cortesía de sus autores. Un príncipe conozco yo que puede suplir la falta de los demás, con tantas ventajas que, si me atreviere a decirlas, quizá despertara la envidia en más de cuatro generosos pechos; pero quédese esto aquí para otro tiempo más cómodo, y vamos a buscar a donde recogernos esta noche.

-No lejos de aquí -respondió el primo- está una ermita, donde hace su habitación un ermitaño, que dicen ha sido soldado, y está en opinión de ser un buen cristiano, y muy discreto y caritativo además. Junto con la ermita tiene una pequeña casa, que él ha labrado a su costa; pero, con todo, aunque chica, es capaz de recibir huéspedes.

-¿Tiene por ventura gallinas el tal ermitaño? -preguntó Sancho.

-Pocos ermitaños están sin ellas -respondió don Quijote-, porque no son los que agora se usan como aquellos de los desiertos de Egipto, que se vestían de hojas de palma y comían raíces de la tierra. Y no se entienda que por decir bien de aquéllos no lo digo de aquéstos, sino que quiero decir que al rigor y estrechez de entonces no llegan las penitencias de los de agora; pero no por esto dejan de ser todos buenos; a lo menos, yo por buenos los juzgo; y, cuando todo corra turbio, menos mal hace el hipócrita que se finge bueno que el público pecador.

Estando en esto, vieron que hacia donde ellos estaban venía un hombre a pie, caminando apriesa, y dando varazos a un macho que venía cargado de lanzas y de alabardas. Cuando llegó a ellos, los saludó y pasó de largo. Don Quijote le dijo:

-Buen hombre, deteneos, que parece que vais con más diligencia que ese macho ha menester.

-No me puedo detener, señor -respondió el hombre-, porque las armas que veis que aquí llevo han de servir mañana; y así, me es forzoso el no detenerme, y a Dios. Pero si quisiéredes saber para qué las llevo, en la venta que está más arriba de la ermita pienso alojar esta noche; y si es que hacéis este mismo camino, allí me hallaréis, donde os contaré maravillas. Y a Dios otra vez.

Y de tal manera aguijó el macho, que no tuvo lugar don Quijote de preguntarle qué maravillas eran las que pensaba decirles; y, como él era algo curioso y siempre le fatigaban deseos de saber cosas nuevas, ordenó que al momento se partiesen y fuesen a pasar la noche en la venta, sin tocar en la ermita, donde quisiera el primo que se quedaran.

Hízose así, subieron a caballo, y siguieron todos tres el derecho camino de la venta, a la cual llegaron un poco antes de anochecer. Dijo el primo a don Quijote que llegasen a ella a beber un trago. Apenas oyó esto Sancho Panza, cuando encaminó el rucio a la ermita, y lo mismo hicieron don Quijote y el primo; pero la mala suerte de Sancho parece que ordenó que el ermitaño no estuviese en casa; que así se lo dijo una sotaermitaño que en la ermita hallaron. Pidiéronle de lo caro; respondió que su señor no lo tenía, pero que si querían agua barata, que se la daría de muy buena gana.

-Si yo la tuviera de agua -respondió Sancho-, pozos hay en el camino, donde la hubiera satisfecho. ¡Ah bodas de Camacho y abundancia de la casa de don Diego, y cuántas veces os tengo de echar menos!

Con esto, dejaron la ermita y picaron hacia la venta; y a poco trecho toparon un mancebito, que delante dellos iba caminando no con mucha priesa; y así, le alcanzaron. Llevaba la espada sobre el hombro, y en ella puesto un bulto o envoltorio, al parecer de sus vestidos; que, al parecer, debían de ser los calzones o greguescos, y herreruelo, y alguna camisa, porque traía puesta una ropilla de terciopelo con algunas vislumbres de raso, y la camisa, de fuera; las medias eran de seda, y los zapatos cuadrados, a uso de corte; la edad llegaría a diez y ocho o diez y nueve años; alegre de rostro, y, al parecer, ágil de su persona. Iba cantando seguidillas, para entretener el trabajo del camino. Cuando llegaron a él, acababa de cantar una, que el primo tomó de memoria, que dicen que decía: mi necesidad;

A la guerra me lleva

si tuviera dineros,
no fuera, en verdad.

El primero que le habló fue don Quijote, diciéndole:

-Muy a la ligera camina vuesa merced, señor galán. Y ¿adónde bueno? Sepamos, si es que gusta decirlo.

A lo que el mozo respondió:

-El caminar tan a la ligera lo causa el calor y la pobreza, y el adónde voy es a la guerra.

-¿Cómo la pobreza? -preguntó don Quijote-; que por el calor bien puede ser.

-Señor -replicó el mancebo-, yo llevo en este envoltorio unos greguescos de terciopelo, compañeros desta ropilla; si los gasto en el camino, no me podré honrar con ellos en la ciudad, y no tengo con qué comprar otros; y, así por esto como por orearme, voy desta manera, hasta alcanzar unas compañías de infantería que no están doce leguas de aquí, donde asentaré mi plaza, y no faltarán bagajes en que caminar de allí adelante hasta el embarcadero, que dicen ha de ser en Cartagena. Y más quiero tener por amo y por señor al rey, y servirle en la guerra, que no a un pelón en la corte.

-Y ¿lleva vuesa merced alguna ventaja por ventura? -preguntó el primo.

-Si yo hubiera servido a algún grande de España, o algún principal personaje -respondió el mozo-, a buen seguro que yo la llevara, que eso tiene el servir a los buenos: que del tinelo suelen salir a ser alférez o capitanes, o con algún buen entretenimiento; pero yo, desventurado, serví siempre a catarriberras y a gente advenediza, de ración y quitación tan mísera y atenuada, que en pagar el almidonar un cuello se consumía la mitad della; y sería tenido a milagro que un paje aventurero alcanzase alguna siquiera razonable ventura.

-Y dígame, por su vida, amigo -preguntó don Quijote-: ¿es posible que en los años que sirvió no ha podido alcanzar alguna librea?

-Dos me han dado -respondió el paje-; pero, así como el que se sale de alguna religión antes de profesar le quitan el hábito y le vuelven sus vestidos, así me volvían a mí los míos mis amos, que, acabados los negocios a que venían a la corte, se volvían a sus casas y recogían las libreas que por sola ostentación habían dado.

-Notable espilorchería, como dice el italiano -dijo don Quijote-; pero, con todo eso, tenga a felice ventura el haber salido de la corte con tan buena intención como lleva; porque no hay otra cosa en la tierra más honrada ni de más provecho que servir a Dios, primeramente, y luego, a su rey y señor natural, especialmente en el ejercicio de las armas, por las cuales se alcanzan, si no más riquezas, a lo menos, más honra que por las letras, como yo tengo dicho muchas veces; que, puesto que han fundado más mayorazgos las letras que las armas, todavía llevan un no sé qué los de las armas a los de las letras, con un sí sé qué de esplendor que se halla en ellos, que los aventaja a todos. Y esto que ahora le quiero decir llévelo en la memoria, que le será de mucho provecho y alivio en sus trabajos; y es que, aparte la imaginación de los sucesos adversos que le podrán venir, que el peor de todos es la muerte, y como ésta sea buena, el mejor de todos es el morir. Preguntáronle a Julio César, aquel valeroso emperador romano, cuál era la mejor muerte; respondió que la impensada, la de repente y no prevista; y, aunque respondió como gentil y ajeno del conocimiento del verdadero Dios, con todo eso, dijo bien, para ahorrarse del sentimiento humano; que, puesto caso que os maten en la primera facción y refriega, o ya de un tiro de artillería, o volado de una mina, ¿qué importa? Todo es morir, y acabóse la obra; y, según Terencio, más bien parece el soldado muerto en la batalla que vivo y salvo en la huida; y tanto alcanza de fama el buen soldado cuanto tiene de obediencia a sus capitanes y a los que mandarles pueden. Y advertid, hijo, que al soldado mejor le está el oler a pólvora que algalia, y que si la vejez os coge en este honroso ejercicio, aunque sea lleno de heridas y estropeado o cojo, a lo menos no os podrá coger sin honra, y tal, que no os la podrá menoscabar la pobreza; cuanto más, que ya se va dando orden cómo se entretengan y remedien los soldados viejos y estropeados, porque no es bien que se haga con ellos lo que suelen hacer los que ahorran y dan libertad a sus negros cuando ya son viejos y no pueden servir, y, echándolos de casa con título de libres, los hacen esclavos de la hambre, de quien no piensan ahorrarse sino con la muerte. Y por ahora no os quiero decir más, sino que subáis a las ancas deste mi caballo hasta la venta, y allí cenaréis conmigo, y por la mañana seguiréis el camino, que os le dé Dios tan bueno como vuestros deseos merecen.

El paje no aceptó el convite de las ancas, aunque sí el de cenar con él en la venta; y, a esta sazón, dicen que dijo Sancho entre sí:

-¡Válate Dios por señor! Y ¿es posible que hombre que sabe decir tales, tantas y tan buenas cosas como aquí ha dicho, diga que ha visto los disparates imposibles que cuenta de la cueva de Montesinos? Ahora bien, ello dirá.

Y en esto, llegaron a la venta, a tiempo que anohecía, y no sin gusto de Sancho, por ver que su señor la juzgó por verdadera venta, y no por castillo, como solía. No hubieron bien entrado, cuando don Quijote preguntó al ventero por el hombre de las lanzas y alabardas; el cual le respondió que en la caballeriza estaba acomodando el macho. Lo mismo hicieron de sus jumentos el primo y

Sancho, dando a Rocinante el mejor pesebre y el mejor lugar de la caballeriza.

Capítulo XXV

Donde se apunta la aventura del rebuzno y la graciosa del titerero, con las memorables adivinanzas del mono adivino

NO SE LE COCÍA el pan a don Quijote, como suele decirse, hasta oír y saber las maravillas prometidas del hombre condutor de las armas. Fuele a buscar donde el ventero le había dicho que estaba, y hallóle, y díjole que en todo caso le dijese luego lo que le había de decir después, acerca de lo que le había preguntado en el camino. El hombre le respondió:

-Más despacio, y no en pie, se ha de tomar el cuento de mis maravillas: déjeme vuestra merced, señor bueno, acabar de dar recado a mi bestia, que yo le diré cosas que le admiren.

-No quede por eso -respondió don Quijote-, que yo os ayudaré a todo.

Y así lo hizo, ahechándole la cebada y limpiando el pesebre, humildad que obligó al hombre a contarle con buena voluntad lo que le pedía; y, sentándose en un poyo y don Quijote junto a él, teniendo por senado y auditorio al primo, al paje, a Sancho Panza y al ventero, comenzó a decir desta manera:

-«Sabrán vuesas mercedes que en un lugar que está cuatro leguas y media desta venta sucedió que a un regidor dél, por industria y engaño de una muchacha criada suya, y esto es largo de contar, le faltó un asno, y, aunque el tal regidor hizo las diligencias posibles por hallarle, no fue posible. Quince días serían pasados, según es pública voz y fama, que el asno faltaba, cuando, estando en la plaza el regidor perdidoso, otro regidor del mismo pueblo le dijo: “Dadme albricias, compadre, que vuestro jumento ha parecido”. “Yo os las mando y buenas, compadre -respondió el otro-, pero sepamos dónde ha parecido”. “En el monte -respondió el hallador-, le vi esta mañana, sin albarda y sin aparejo alguno, y tan flaco que era una compasión miralle. Quísele antecoger delante de mí y traérosle, pero está ya tan montaraz y tan huraño, que, cuando llegué a él, se fue huyendo y se entró en lo más escondido del monte. Si queréis que volvamos los dos a buscarle, dejadme poner esta borrica en mi casa, que luego vuelvo”. “Mucho placer me haréis -dijo el del jumento-, e yo procuraré pagároslo en la misma moneda”. Con estas circunstancias todas, y de la misma manera que yo lo voy contando, lo cuentan todos aquellos que están enterados en la verdad deste caso. En resolución, los dos regidores, a pie y mano a mano, se fueron al monte, y, llegando al lugar y sitio donde pensaron hallar el asno, no le hallaron, ni pareció por todos aquellos contornos, aunque más le buscaron. Viendo, pues, que no parecía, dijo el regidor que le había visto al otro: “Mirad, compadre: una traza me ha venido al pensamiento, con la cual sin duda alguna podremos descubrir este animal, aunque esté metido en las entrañas de la tierra, no que del monte; y es que yo sé rebuznar maravillosamente; y si vos sabéis algún tanto, dad el hecho por concluido”. “¿Algún tanto decís, compadre? -dijo el otro-; por Dios, que no dé la ventaja a nadie, ni aun a los mismos asnos”. “Ahora lo veremos -respondió el regidor segundo-, porque tengo determinado que os vais vos por una parte del monte y yo por otra, de modo que le rodeemos y andemos todo, y de trecho en trecho rebuznaréis vos y rebuznaré yo, y no podrá ser menos sino que el asno nos oya y nos responda, si es que está en el monte”. A lo que respondió el dueño del jumento: “Digo, compadre, que la traza es excelente y digna de vuestro gran ingenio”. Y, dividiéndose los dos según el acuerdo, sucedió que casi a un mismo tiempo rebuznaron, y cada uno engañado del rebuzno del otro, acudieron a buscarse, pensando que ya el jumento había parecido; y, en viéndose, dijo el perdidoso: “¿Es posible, compadre, que no fue mi asno el que rebuznó?” “No fue, sino yo”, respondió el otro. “Ahora digo -dijo el dueño-, que de vos a un asno, compadre, no hay alguna diferencia, en cuanto toca al rebuznar, porque en mi vida he visto ni oído cosa más propia”. “Esas alabanzas y encarecimiento -respondió el de la traza-, mejor os atañen y tocan a vos que a mí, compadre; que por el Dios que me crió que podéis dar dos rebuznos de ventaja al mayor y más perito rebuznador del mundo; porque el sonido que tenéis es alto; lo sostenido de la voz, a su tiempo y compás; los dejos, muchos y apresurados, y, en resolución, yo me doy por vencido y os rindo la palma y doy la bandera desta rara habilidad”. “Ahora digo -respondió el dueño-, que me tendré y estimaré en más de aquí adelante, y pensaré que sé alguna cosa, pues tengo alguna gracia; que, puesto que pensara que rebuznaba bien, nunca entendí que llegaba el extremo que decís”. “También diré yo ahora -respondió el segundo-que hay raras habilidades perdidas en el mundo, y que son mal empleadas en aquellos que no saben aprovecharse dellas”. “Las nuestras -respondió el dueño-, si no es en casos semejantes como el que traemos entre manos, no nos pueden servir en otros, y aun en éste plega a Dios que nos sean de provecho”. Esto dicho, se tornaron a dividir y a volver a sus rebuznos, y a cada paso se engañaban y volvían a juntarse, hasta que se dieron por contraseño que, para entender que eran ellos, y no el asno, rebuznasen dos veces, una tras otra. Con esto, doblando a cada paso los rebuznos, rodearon todo el monte sin que el perdido jumento respondiese, ni aun por señas. Mas, ¿cómo había de responder el pobre y mal logrado, si le hallaron en lo más escondido del bosque, comido de lobos? Y, en viéndole, dijo su dueño: “Ya me maravillaba yo de que él no respondía, pues a no estar muerto, él rebuznara si nos oyera, o no fuera asno; pero, a trueco de haberos oído rebuznar con tanta gracia, compadre, doy por bien empleado el trabajo que he tenido en buscarle, aunque le he hallado muerto”. “En buena mano está, compadre -respondió el otro-, pues si bien canta el abad, no le va en zaga el monacillo”. Con esto, desconsolados y roncós, se volvieron a su aldea, adonde contaron a sus amigos, vecinos y conocidos cuanto les había acontecido en la busca del asno, exagerando el uno la gracia del otro en el rebuznar; todo lo cual se supo y se extendió por los lugares circunvecinos. Y el diablo, que no duerme, como es amigo de sembrar y derramar rencillas y discordia por doquiera, levantando caramillos en el viento y grandes quimeras de nonada, ordenó e hizo que las gentes de los otros pueblos, en viendo a alguno de nuestra aldea, rebuznase, como dándoles en rostro con el rebuzno de nuestros regidores. Dieron en ello los muchachos, que fue dar en manos y en bocas de todos los demonios del infierno, y fue cundiendo el rebuzno de en uno en otro pueblo, de manera que son conocidos los naturales del pueblo del rebuzno, como son conocidos y diferenciados los negros de los blancos; y ha llegado a tanto la desgracia desta burla, que muchas veces con mano armada y formado escuadrón han salido contra los burladores los burlados a darse la batalla, sin poderlo remediar rey ni roque, ni temor ni vergüenza. Yo creo que mañana o esotro día han de salir en campaña los de mi pueblo, que son los del rebuzno, contra otro lugar que está a dos leguas del nuestro, que es uno de los que más nos persiguen; y, por salir bien apercibidos, llevo compradas estas lanzas y alabardas que habéis visto.» Y éstas son las maravillas que dije que os había de contar, y si no os lo han parecido, no sé otras.

Y con esto dio fin a su plática el buen hombre; y, en esto, entró por la puerta de la venta un hombre todo vestido de camuza, medias, greguescos y jubón, y con voz levantada dijo:

-Señor huésped, ¿hay posada? Que viene aquí el mono adivino y el retablo de la libertad de Melisendra.

-¡Cuerpo de tal -dijo el ventero-, que aquí está el señor mase Pedro! Buena noche se nos apareja.

Olvidábaseme de decir como el tal mase Pedro traía cubierto el ojo izquierdo, y casi medio carrillo, con un parche de tafetán verde, señal que todo aquel lado debía de estar enfermo; y el ventero prosiguió, diciendo:

-Sea bien venido vuestra merced, señor mase Pedro. ¿Adónde está el mono y el retablo, que no los veo?

-Ya llegan cerca -respondió el todo camuza-, sino que yo me he adelantado, a saber si hay posada.

-Al mismo duque de Alba se la quitara para dársela al señor mase Pedro - respondió el ventero-; llegue el mono y el retablo, que gente hay esta noche en la venta que pagará el verle y las habilidades del mono.

-Sea en buen hora -respondió el del parche-, que yo moderaré el precio, y con sola la costa me dará por bien pagado; y yo vuelvo a hacer que camine la carreta donde viene el mono y el retablo.

Y luego se volvió a salir de la venta.

Preguntó luego don Quijote al ventero qué mase Pedro era aquél, y qué retablo y qué mono traía. A lo que respondió el ventero:

-Éste es un famoso titerero, que ha muchos días que anda por esta Mancha de Aragón enseñando un retablo de Melisendra, libertada por el famoso don Gaiferos, que es una de las mejores y más bien representadas historias que de muchos años a esta parte en este reino se han visto. Trae asimismo consigo un mono de la más rara habilidad que se vio entre monos, ni se imaginó entre hombres, porque si le preguntan algo, está atento a lo que le preguntan y luego salta sobre los hombros de su amo, y, llegándosele al oído, le dice la respuesta de lo que le preguntan, y maese Pedro la declara luego; y de las cosas pasadas dice mucho más que de las que están por venir; y, aunque no todas veces acierta en todas, en las más no yerra, de modo que nos hace creer que tiene el diablo en el cuerpo. Dos reales lleva por cada pregunta, si es que el mono responde; quiero decir, si responde el amo por él, después de haberle hablado al oído; y así, se cree que el tal maese Pedro esta riquísimo; y es hombre galante, como dicen en Italia y bon compañero, y dase la mejor vida del mundo; habla más que seis y bebe más que doce, todo a costa de su lengua y de su mono y de su retablo.

En esto, volvió maese Pedro, y en una carreta venía el retablo, y el mono, grande y sin cola, con las posaderas de fieltro, pero no de mala cara; y, apenas le vio don Quijote, cuando le preguntó:

-Dígame vuestra merced, señor adivino: ¿qué peje pillamo? ¿Qué ha de ser de nosotros? Y vea aquí mis dos reales.

Y mandó a Sancho que se los diese a maese Pedro, el cual respondió por el mono, y dijo:

-Señor, este animal no responde ni da noticia de las cosas que están por venir; de las pasadas sabe algo, y de las presentes, algún tanto.

-¡Voto a Rus -dijo Sancho-, no dé yo un ardite porque me digan lo que por mí ha pasado!; porque, ¿quién lo puede saber mejor que yo mismo? Y pagar yo porque me digan lo que sé, sería una gran necedad; pero, pues sabe las cosas presentes, he aquí mis dos reales, y dígame el señor monísimo qué hace ahora mi mujer Teresa Panza, y en qué se entretiene.

No quiso tomar maese Pedro el dinero, diciendo:

-No quiero recibir adelantados los premios, sin que hayan precedido los servicios.

Y, dando con la mano derecha dos golpes sobre el hombro izquierdo, en un brinco se le puso el mono en él, y, llegando la boca al oído, daba diente con diente muy apriesa; y, habiendo hecho este ademán por espacio de un credo, de otro brinco se puso en el suelo, y al punto, con grandísima priesa, se fue maese Pedro a poner de rodillas ante don Quijote, y, abrazándole las piernas, dijo:

-Estas piernas abrazo, bien así como si abrazara las dos columnas de Hércules, ¡oh resucitador insigne de la ya puesta en olvido andante caballería!; ¡oh no jamás como se debe alabado caballero don Quijote de la Mancha, ánimo de los desmayados, arrimo de los que van a caer, brazo de los caídos, báculo y consuelo de todos los desdichados!

Quedó pasmado don Quijote, absorto Sancho, suspenso el primo, atónito el paje, abobado el del rebuzno, confuso el ventero, y, finalmente, espantados todos los que oyeron las razones del titerero, el cual prosiguió diciendo:

-Y tú, ¡oh buen Sancho Panza!, el mejor escudero y del mejor caballero del mundo, alégrate, que tu buena mujer Teresa está buena, y ésta es la hora en que ella está rastrillando una libra de lino, y, por más señas, tiene a su lado izquierdo un jarro desbocado que cabe un buen porqué de vino, con que se entretiene en su trabajo.

-Eso creo yo muy bien -respondió Sancho-, porque es ella una bienaventurada, y, a no ser celosa, no la trocara yo por la gigante Andandona, que, según mi señor, fue una mujer muy cabal y muy de pro; y es mi Teresa de aquellas que no se dejan mal pasar, aunque sea a costa de sus herederos.

-Ahora digo -dijo a esta sazón don Quijote-, que el que lee mucho y anda mucho, vee mucho y sabe mucho. Digo esto porque, ¿qué persuasión fuera bastante para persuadirme que hay monos en el mundo que adivinen, como lo he visto ahora por mis propios ojos? Porque yo soy el mismo don Quijote de la Mancha que este buen animal ha dicho, puesto que se ha estendido algún tanto en mis alabanzas; pero comoquiera que yo me sea, doy gracias al cielo, que me dotó de un ánimo blando y compasivo, inclinado siempre a hacer bien a todos, y mal a ninguno.

-Si yo tuviera dineros -dijo el paje-, preguntara al señor mono qué me ha de suceder en la peregrinación que llevo.

A lo que respondió maese Pedro, que ya se había levantado de los pies de don Quijote:

-Ya he dicho que esta bestezuela no responde a lo por venir; que si respondiera, no importara no haber dineros; que, por servicio del señor don Quijote, que está presente, dejara yo todos los intereses del mundo. Y agora, porque se lo debo, y por darle gusto, quiero armar mi retablo y dar placer a cuantos están en la venta, sin paga alguna.

Oyendo lo cual el ventero, alegre sobremanera, señaló el lugar donde se podía poner el retablo, que en un punto fue hecho.

Don Quijote no estaba muy contento con las adivinanzas del mono, por parecerle no ser a propósito que un mono adivinase, ni las de por venir, ni las pasadas cosas; y así, en tanto que maese Pedro acomodaba el retablo, se retiró don Quijote con Sancho a un rincón de la caballeriza, donde, sin ser oídos de nadie, le dijo:

-Mira, Sancho, yo he considerado bien la estraña habilidad deste mono, y hallo por mi cuenta que sin duda este maese Pedro, su amo, debe de tener hecho pacto, tácito o espreso, con el demonio.

-Si el patio es espeso y del demonio -dijo Sancho-, sin duda debe de ser muy sucio patio; pero, ¿de qué provecho le es al tal maese Pedro tener esos patios?

-No me entiendes, Sancho: no quiero decir sino que debe de tener hecho algún concierto con el demonio de que infunda esa habilidad en el mono, con que gane de comer, y después que esté rico le dará su alma, que es lo que este universal enemigo pretende. Y háceme creer esto el ver que el mono no responde sino a las cosas pasadas o presentes, y la sabiduría del diablo no se puede estender a más, que las por venir no las sabe si no es por conjeturas, y no todas veces; que a solo Dios está reservado conocer los tiempos y los momentos, y para Él no hay pasado ni porvenir, que todo es presente. Y, siendo esto así, como lo es, está claro que este mono habla con el estilo del diablo; y estoy maravillado cómo no le han acusado al Santo Oficio, y examinádole y sacádole de cuajo en virtud de quién adivina; porque cierto está que este mono no es astrólogo, ni su amo ni él alzan, ni saben alzar, estas figuras que llaman judiciarias, que tanto ahora se usan en España, que no hay mujercilla, ni paje, ni zapatero de viejo que no presuma de alzar una figura, como si fuera una sota de naipes del suelo, echando a perder con sus mentiras e ignorancias la verdad maravillosa de la ciencia. De una señora sé yo que preguntó a uno destos figureros que si una perrilla de falda pequeña, que tenía, si se empreñaría y pariría, y cuántos y de qué color serían los perros que pariese. A lo que el señor judicario, después de haber alzado la figura, respondió que la perrica se empreñaría, y pariría tres perricos, el uno verde, el otro encarnado y el otro de mezcla, con tal condición que la tal perra se cubriese entre las once y doce del día, o de la noche, y que fuese en lunes o en sábado; y lo que sucedió fue que de allí a dos días se murió la perra de ahíta, y el señor levantador quedó acreditado en el lugar por acertadísimo judicario, como lo quedan todos o los más levantadores.

-Con todo eso, querría -dijo Sancho- que vuestra merced dijese a maese Pedro preguntase a su mono si es verdad lo que a vuestra merced le pasó en la cueva de Montesinos; que yo para mí tengo, con perdón de vuestra merced, que todo fue embeleco y mentira, o por lo menos, cosas soñadas.

-Todo podría ser -respondió don Quijote-, pero yo haré lo que me aconsejas, puesto que me ha de quedar un no sé qué de escrúpulo.

Estando en esto, llegó maese Pedro a buscar a don Quijote y decirle que ya estaba en orden el retablo; que su merced viniese a verle, porque lo merecía. Don Quijote le comunicó su pensamiento, y le rogó preguntase luego a su mono le dijese si ciertas cosas que había pasado en la cueva de Montesinos habían sido soñadas o verdaderas; porque a él le parecía que tenían de todo. A lo que maese Pedro, sin responder palabra, volvió a traer el mono, y, puesto delante de don Quijote y de Sancho, dijo:

-Mirad, señor mono, que este caballero quiere saber si ciertas cosas que le pasaron en una cueva llamada de Montesinos, si fueron falsas o verdaderas.

Y, haciéndole la acostumbrada señal, el mono se le subió en el hombro izquierdo, y, hablándole, al parecer, en el oído, dijo luego maese Pedro:

-El mono dice que parte de las cosas que vuesa merced vio, o pasó, en la dicha cueva son falsas, y parte verisímiles; y que esto es lo que sabe, y no otra cosa, en cuanto a esta pregunta; y que si vuesa merced quisiere saber más, que el viernes venidero responderá a todo lo que se le preguntare, que por ahora se le ha acabado la virtud, que no le vendrá hasta el viernes, como dicho tiene.

-¿No lo decía yo -dijo Sancho-, que no se me podía asentar que todo lo que vuesa merced, señor mío, ha dicho de los acontecimientos de la cueva era verdad, ni aun la mitad?

-Los sucesos lo dirán, Sancho -respondió don Quijote-; que el tiempo, descubridor de todas las cosas, no se deja ninguna que no las saque a la luz del sol, aunque esté escondida en los senos de la tierra. Y, por ahora, baste esto, y vámonos a ver el retablo del buen maese Pedro, que para mí tengo que debe de tener alguna novedad.

-¿Cómo alguna? -respondió maese Pedro-: sesenta mil encierra en sí este mi retablo; dígoles a vuesa merced, mi señor don Quijote, que es una de las cosas más de ver que hoy tiene el mundo, y operibus credite, et non verbis; y manos a labor, que se hace tarde y tenemos mucho que hacer y que decir y que mostrar.

Obedecieronle don Quijote y Sancho, y vinieron donde ya estaba el retablo puesto y descubierto, lleno por todas partes de candelillas de cera encendidas, que le hacían vistoso y resplandeciente. En llegando, se metió maese Pedro dentro dél, que era el que había de manejar las figuras del artificio, y fuera se puso un muchacho, criado del maese Pedro, para servir de intérprete y declarador de los misterios del tal retablo: tenía una varilla en la mano, con que señalaba las figuras que salían.

Puestos, pues, todos cuantos había en la venta, y algunos en pie, frontero del retablo, y acomodados don Quijote, Sancho, el paje y el primo en los mejores lugares, el trujamán comenzó a decir lo que oirá y verá el que le oyere o viere el capítulo siguiente.

Capítulo XXVI

*Donde se prosigue la graciosa aventura del titerero, con otras cosas en verdad
harto buenas*

CALLARON todos, tirios y troyanos; quiero decir, pendientes estaban todos los que el retablo miraban de la boca del declarador de sus maravillas, cuando se oyeron sonar en el retablo cantidad de atabales y trompetas, y dispararse mucha artillería, cuyo rumor pasó en tiempo breve, y luego alzó la voz el muchacho, y dijo:

-Esta verdadera historia que aquí a vuestras mercedes se representa es sacada al pie de la letra de las corónicas francesas y de los romances españoles que andan en boca de las gentes, y de los muchachos, por esas calles. Trata de la libertad que dio el señor don Gaiferos a su esposa Melisendra, que estaba cautiva en España, en poder de moros, en la ciudad de Sansueña, que así se llamaba entonces la que hoy se llama Zaragoza; y vean vuestras mercedes allí cómo está jugando a las tablas don Gaiferos, según aquello que se canta:

Jugando está a las tablas don Gaiferos, que ya de Melisendra está olvidado.

Y aquel personaje que allí asoma, con corona en la cabeza y ceptro en las manos, es el emperador Carlomagno, padre putativo de la tal Melisendra, el cual, mohíno de ver el ocio y descuido de su yerno, le sale a reñir; y adviertan con la vehemencia y ahínco que le riñe, que no parece sino que le quiere dar con el ceptro media docena de coscorrones, y aun hay autores que dicen que se los dio, y muy bien dados; y, después de haberle dicho muchas cosas acerca del peligro que corría su honra en no procurar la libertad de su esposa, dicen que le dijo:

Miren vuestras mercedes también cómo el emperador vuelve las espaldas y deja despechado a don Gaiferos, el cual ya ven como arroja, impaciente de la cólera, lejos de sí el tablero y las tablas, y pide apriesa las armas, y a don Roldán, su primo, pide prestada su espada Durindana, y cómo don Roldán no se la quiere prestar, ofreciéndole su compañía en la difícil empresa en que se pone; pero el valeroso enojado no lo quiere aceptar; antes, dice que él solo es bastante para sacar a su esposa, si bien estuviese metida en el más hondo centro de la tierra; y, con esto, se entra a armar, para ponerse luego en camino. Vuelvan vuestras mercedes los ojos a aquella torre que allí parece, que se presupone que es una de las torres del alcázar de Zaragoza, que ahora llaman la Aljafería; y aquella dama que en aquel balcón parece, vestida a lo moro, es la sin par Melisendra, que desde allí muchas veces se ponía a mirar el camino de Francia, y, puesta la imaginación en París y en su esposo, se consolaba en su cautiverio. Miren también un nuevo caso que ahora sucede, quizá no visto jamás. ¿No veen aquel moro que callandico y pasito a paso, puesto el dedo en la boca, se llega por las espaldas de Melisendra? Pues miren cómo la da un beso en mitad de los labios, y la priesa que ella se da a escupir, y a limpiárselos con la blanca manga de su camisa, y cómo se lamenta, y se arranca de pesar sus hermosos cabellos, como si ellos tuvieran la culpa del maleficio. Miren también cómo aquel grave moro que está en aquellos corredores es el rey Marsilio de Sansueña; el cual, por haber visto la insolencia del moro, puesto que era un pariente y gran privado suyo, le mandó luego prender, y que le den docientos azotes, llevándole por las calles acostumbradas de la ciudad, con chilladores delante

y veis aquí donde salen a ejecutar la sentencia, aun bien apenas no habiendo sido puesta en ejecución la culpa; porque entre moros no hay «traslado a la parte», ni «a prueba y estése», como entre nosotros.

-Niño, niño -dijo con voz alta a esta sazón don Quijote-, seguid vuestra historia línea recta, y no os metáis en las curvas o transversales; que, para sacar una verdad en limpio, menester son muchas pruebas y repruebas.

También dijo maese Pedro desde dentro:

-Muchacho, no te metas en dibujos, sino haz lo que ese señor te manda, que será lo más acertado; sigue tu canto llano, y no te metas en contrapuntos, que se suelen quebrar de sotiles.

-Yo lo haré así -respondió el muchacho; y prosiguió, diciendo-: Esta figura que aquí parece a caballo, cubierta con una capa gascona, es la mesma de don Gaiferos, a quien su esposa, ya vengada del atrevimiento del enamorado moro, con mejor y más sosegado semblante, se ha puesto a los miradores de la torre, y habla con su esposo, creyendo que es algún pasajero, con quien pasó todas aquellas razones y coloquios de aquel romance que dicen:

Caballero, si a Francia ides, por Gaiferos preguntad;

las cuales no digo yo ahora, porque de la prolijidad se suele engendrar el fastidio; basta ver cómo don Gaiferos se descubre, y que por los ademanes alegres que Melisendra hace se nos da a entender que ella le ha conocido, y más ahora que vemos se descuelga del balcón, para ponerse en las ancas del caballo de su buen esposo. Mas, ¡ay, sin ventura!, que se le ha asido una punta del faldellín de uno de los hierros del balcón, y está pendiente en el aire, sin poder llegar al suelo. Pero veis cómo el piadoso cielo socorre en las mayores necesidades, pues llega don Gaiferos, y, sin mirar si se rasgará o no el rico faldellín, ase della, y mal su grado la hace bajar al suelo, y luego, de un brinco, la pone sobre las ancas de su caballo, a horcajadas como hombre, y la manda que se tenga fuertemente y le eche los brazos por las espaldas, de modo que los cruce en el pecho, porque no se caiga, a causa que no estaba la señora Melisendra acostumbrada a semejantes caballerías. Veis también cómo los relinchos del caballo dan señales que va contento con la valiente y hermosa carga que lleva en su señor y en su señora. Veis cómo vuelven las espaldas y salen de la ciudad, y alegres y regocijados toman de París la vía. ¡Vais en paz, oh par sin par de verdaderos amantes! ¡Lleguéis a salvamento a vuestra deseada patria, sin que la fortuna ponga estorbo en vuestro felice viaje! ¡Los ojos de vuestros amigos y parientes os vean gozar en paz tranquila los días, que los de Néstor sean, que os quedan de la vida!

Aquí alzó otra vez la voz maese Pedro, y dijo:

-Llaneza, muchacho; no te encumbres, que toda afectación es mala.

No respondió nada el intérprete; antes, prosiguió, diciendo:

-No faltaron algunos ociosos ojos, que lo suelen ver todo, que no viesan la bajada y la subida de Melisendra, de quien dieron noticia al rey Marsilio, el cual mandó luego tocar al arma; y miren con qué priesa, que ya la ciudad se hunde con el son de las campanas que en todas las torres de las mezquitas suenan.

-¡Eso no! -dijo a esta sazón don Quijote:- en esto de las campanas anda muy impropio maese Pedro, porque entre moros no se usan campanas, sino atabales, y un género de dulzainas que parecen nuestras chirimías; y esto de sonar campanas en Sansueña sin duda que es un gran disparate.

Lo cual oído por maese Pedro, cesó el tocar y dijo:

-No mire vuesa merced en niñerías, señor don Quijote, ni quiera llevar las cosas tan por el cabo que no se le halle. ¿No se representan por ahí, casi de ordinario, mil comedias llenas de mil impropiedades y disparates, y, con todo eso, corren felicísimamente su carrera, y se escuchan no sólo con aplauso, sino con admiración y todo? Prosigue, muchacho, y deja decir; que, como yo llene mi talego, si quiere represente más impropiedades que tiene átomos el sol.

-Así es la verdad -replicó don Quijote.

Y el muchacho dijo:

-Miren cuánta y cuán lucida caballería sale de la ciudad en seguimiento de los dos católicos amantes, cuántas trompetas que suenan, cuántas dulzainas que tocan y cuántos atabales y atambores que retumban. Téname que los han de alcanzar, y los han de volver atados a la cola de su mismo caballo, que sería un horrendo espectáculo.

Viendo y oyendo, pues, tanta morisma y tanto estruendo don Quijote, parecióle ser bien dar ayuda a los que huían; y, levantándose en pie, en voz alta, dijo:

-No consentiré yo en mis días y en mi presencia se le haga superchería a tan famoso caballero y a tan atrevido enamorado como don Gaiferos. ¡Deteneos, mal nacida canalla; no le sigáis ni persigáis; si no, conmigo sois en la batalla!

Y, diciendo y haciendo, desenvainó la espada, y de un brinco se puso junto al retablo, y, con acelerada y nunca vista furia, comenzó a llover cuchilladas sobre la titerera morisma, derribando a unos, descabezando a otros, estropeando a éste, destrozando a aquél, y, entre otros muchos, tiró un altibajo tal, que si maese Pedro no se abaja, se encoge y agazapa, le cercenara la cabeza con más facilidad que si fuera hecha de masa de mazapán. Daba voces maese Pedro, diciendo:

-Deténgase vuesa merced, señor don Quijote, y advierta que estos que derriba, destroza y mata no son verdaderos moros, sino unas figurillas de pasta. ¡Mire, pecador de mí, que me destruye y echa a perder toda mi hacienda!

Mas no por esto dejaba de menudear don Quijote cuchilladas, mandobles, tajos y reveses como llovidos. Finalmente, en menos de dos credos dio con todo el retablo en el suelo, hechas pedazos y desmenuzadas todas sus jarcias y figuras: el rey Marsilio, mal herido, y el emperador Carlomagno, partida la corona y la cabeza en dos partes. Alborotóse el senado de los oyentes, huyóse el mono por los tejados de la ventana, temió el primo, acobardóse el paje, y hasta el mismo Sancho Panza tuvo pavor grandísimo, porque, como él juró después de pasada la borrasca, jamás había visto a su señor con tan desatinada cólera. Hecho, pues, el general destrozo del retablo, sosegóse un poco don Quijote y dijo:

-Quisiera yo tener aquí delante en este punto todos aquellos que no creen, ni quieren creer, de cuánto provecho sean en el mundo los caballeros andantes: miren, si no me hallara yo aquí presente, qué fuera del buen don Gaiferos y de la hermosa Melisendra; a buen seguro que ésta fuera ya la hora que los hubieran alcanzado estos canes, y les hubieran hecho algún desaguizado. En resolución, ¡viva la andante caballería sobre cuantas cosas hoy viven en la tierra!

-¡Vivan en hora buena -dijo a esta sazón con voz enfermiza maese Pedro-, y muera yo, pues soy tan desdichado que puedo decir con el rey don Rodrigo:

Ayer fui señor de España...
y hoy no tengo una almena que pueda decir que es mía.

No ha media hora, ni aun un mediano momento, que me vi señor de reyes y de emperadores, llenas mis caballerizas y mis cofres y sacos de infinitos caballos y de innumerables galas, y agora me veo desolado y abatido, pobre y mendigo, y, sobre todo, sin mi mono, que a fe que primero que le vuelva a mi poder me han de sudar los dientes; y todo por la furia mal considerada deste señor caballero, de quien se dice que ampara pupilos, y endereza tuertos, y hace otras obras caritativas; y en mí solo ha venido a faltar su intención generosa, que sean benditos y alabados los cielos, allá donde tienen más levantados sus asientos. En fin, el Caballero de la Triste Figura había de ser aquel que había de desfigurar las mías.

Enternecióse Sancho Panza con las razones de maese Pedro, y díjole:

-No llores, maese Pedro, ni te lamentes, que me quiebras el corazón; porque te hago saber que es mi señor don Quijote tan católico y escrupuloso cristiano, que si él cae en la cuenta de que te ha hecho algún agravio, te lo sabrá y te lo querrá pagar y satisfacer con muchas ventajas.

-Con que me pagase el señor don Quijote alguna parte de las hechuras que me ha deshecho, quedaría contento, y su merced aseguraría su conciencia, porque no se puede salvar quien tiene lo ajeno contra la voluntad de su dueño y no lo restituye.

-Así es -dijo don Quijote-, pero hasta ahora yo no sé que tenga nada vuestro, maese Pedro.

-¿Cómo no? -respondió maese Pedro-; y estas reliquias que están por este duro y estéril suelo, ¿quién las esparció y aniquiló, sino la fuerza invencible dese poderoso brazo?, y ¿cúyos eran sus cuerpos sino míos?, y ¿con quién me sustentaba yo sino con ellos?

-Ahora acabo de creer -dijo a este punto don Quijote-lo que otras muchas veces he creído: que estos encantadores que me persiguen no hacen sino ponerme las figuras como ellas son delante de los ojos, y luego me las mudan y truecan en las que ellos quieren. Real y verdaderamente os digo, señores que me oís, que a mí me pareció todo lo que aquí ha pasado que pasaba al pie de la letra: que Melisendra era Melisendra, don Gaiferos don Gaiferos, Marsilio Marsilio, y Carlomagno Carlomagno: por eso se me alteró la cólera, y, por cumplir con mi profesión de caballero andante, quise dar ayuda y favor a los que huían, y con este buen propósito hice lo que habéis visto; si me ha salido al revés, no es culpa mía, sino de los malos que me persiguen; y, con todo esto, deste mi yerro, aunque no ha procedido de malicia, quiero yo mismo condenarme en costas: vea maese Pedro lo que quiere por las figuras deshechas, que yo me ofrezco a pagárselo luego, en buena y corriente moneda castellana.

Inclinósele maese Pedro, diciéndole:

-No esperaba yo menos de la inaudita cristiandad del valeroso don Quijote de la Mancha, verdadero socorredor y amparo de todos los necesitados y menesterosos vagamundos; y aquí el señor ventero y el gran Sancho serán medianeros y apreciadores, entre vuesa merced y mí, de lo que valen o podían valer las ya deshechas figuras.

El ventero y Sancho dijeron que así lo harían, y luego maese Pedro alzó del suelo, con la cabeza menos, al rey Marsilio de Zaragoza, y dijo:

-Ya se ve cuán imposible es volver a este rey a su ser primero; y así, me parece, salvo mejor juicio, que se me dé por su muerte, fin y acabamiento cuatro reales y medio.

-¡Adelante! -dijo don Quijote.

-Pues por esta abertura de arriba abajo -prosiguió maese Pedro, tomando en las manos al partido emperador Carlomagno-, no sería mucho que pidiese yo cinco reales y un cuartillo.

-No es poco -dijo Sancho.

-Ni mucho -replicó el ventero-; médiase la partida y señálensele cinco reales.

-Dénsese todos cinco y cuartillo -dijo don Quijote-, que no está en un cuartillo más a menos la monta desta notable desgracia; y acabe presto maese Pedro, que se hace hora de cenar, y yo tengo ciertos barruntos de hambre.

-Por esta figura -dijo maese Pedro-que está sin narices y un ojo menos, que es de la hermosa Melisendra, quiero, y me pongo en lo justo, dos reales y doce maravedís.

-Aun ahí sería el diablo -dijo don Quijote-, si ya no estuviese Melisendra con su esposo, por lo menos, en la raya de Francia; porque el caballo en que iban, a mí me pareció que antes volaba que corría; y así, no hay para qué venderme a mí el gato por liebre, presentándome aquí a Melisendra desnarigada, estando la otra, si viene a mano, ahora holgándose en Francia con su esposo a pierna tendida. Ayude Dios con lo suyo a cada uno, señor maese Pedro, y caminemos todos con pie llano y con intención sana. Y prosiga.

Maese Pedro, que vio que don Quijote izquierdeaba y que volvía a su primer tema, no quiso que se le escapase; y así, le dijo:

-Ésta no debe de ser Melisendra, sino alguna de las doncellas que la servían; y así, con sesenta maravedís que me den por ella quedaré contento y bien pagado.

Desta manera fue poniendo precio a otras muchas destrozadas figuras, que después los moderaron los dos jueces árbitros, con satisfacción de las partes, que llegaron a cuarenta reales y tres cuartillos; y, además desto, que luego lo desembolsó Sancho, pidió maese Pedro dos reales por el trabajo de tomar el mono.

-Dáselos, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, no para tomar el mono, sino la mona; y docientos diera yo ahora en albricias a quien me dijera con certidumbre que la señora doña Melisendra y el señor don Gaiferos estaban ya en Francia y entre los suyos.

Ninguno nos lo podrá decir mejor que mi mono -dijo maese Pedro-, pero no habrá diablo que ahora le tome; aunque imagino que el cariño y la hambre le han de forzar a que me busque esta noche, y amanecerá Dios y verémonos.

En resolución, la borrasca del retablo se acabó y todos cenaron en paz y en buena compañía, a costa de don Quijote, que era liberal en todo extremo.

Antes que amaneciese, se fue el que llevaba las lanzas y las alabardas, y ya después de amanecido, se vinieron a despedir de don Quijote el primo y el paje: el uno, para volverse a su tierra; y el otro, a proseguir su camino, para ayuda del cual le dio don Quijote una docena de reales. Maese Pedro no quiso volver a entrar en más dimes ni diretes con don Quijote, a quien él conocía muy bien, y así, madrugó antes que el sol, y, cogiendo las reliquias de su retablo y a su mono, se fue también a buscar sus aventuras. El ventero, que no conocía a don Quijote, tan admirado le tenían sus locuras como su liberalidad. Finalmente, Sancho le pagó muy bien, por orden de su señor, y, despidiéndose dél, casi a las ocho del día dejaron la venta y se pusieron en camino, donde los dejaremos ir; que así conviene para dar lugar a contar otras cosas pertenecientes a la declaración desta famosa historia.

Capítulo XXVII

Donde se da cuenta quiénes eran maese Pedro y su mono, con el mal suceso que don Quijote tuvo en la aventura del rebuzno, que no la acabó como él quisiera y como lo tenía pensado

ENTRA Cide Hamete, coronista desta grande historia, con estas palabras en este capítulo: «Juro como católico cristiano...»; a lo que su traductor dice que el jurar Cide Hamete como católico cristiano, siendo él moro, como sin duda lo era, no quiso decir otra cosa sino que, así como el católico cristiano cuando jura, jura, o debe jurar, verdad, y decirla en lo que dijere, así él la decía, como si jurara como cristiano católico, en lo que quería escribir de don Quijote, especialmente en decir quién era maese Pedro, y quién el mono adivino que traía admirados todos aquellos pueblos con sus adivinanzas.

Dice, pues, que bien se acordará, el que hubiere leído la primera parte desta historia, de aquel Ginés de Pasamonte, a quien, entre otros galeotes, dio libertad don Quijote en Sierra Morena, beneficio que después le fue mal agradecido y peor pagado de aquella gente maligna y mal acostumbrada. Este Ginés de Pasamonte, a quien don Quijote llamaba Ginesillo de Parapilla, fue el que hurtó a Sancho Panza el rucio; que, por no haberse puesto el cómo ni el cuándo en la primera parte, por culpa de los impresores, ha dado en qué entender a muchos, que atribuían a poca memoria del autor la falta de emprenta. Pero, en resolución, Ginés le hurtó, estando sobre él durmiendo Sancho Panza, usando de la traza y modo que usó Brunelo cuando, estando Sacripante sobre Albraca, le sacó el caballo de entre las piernas, y después le cobró Sancho, como se ha contado. Este Ginés, pues, temeroso de no ser hallado de la justicia, que le buscaba para castigarle de sus infinitas bellaquerías y delitos, que fueron tantos y tales, que él mismo compuso un gran volumen contándolos, determinó pasarse al reino de Aragón y cubrirse el ojo izquierdo, acomodándose al oficio de titerero; que esto y el jugar de manos lo sabía hacer por extremo.

Sucedió, pues, que de unos cristianos ya libres que venían de Berbería compró aquel mono, a quien enseñó que, en haciéndole cierta señal, se le subiese en el hombro y le murmurase, o lo pareciese, al oído. Hecho esto, antes que entrase en el lugar donde entraba con su retablo y mono, se informaba en el lugar más cercano, o de quien él mejor podía, qué cosas particulares hubiesen sucedido en el tal lugar, y a qué personas; y, llevándolas bien en la memoria, lo primero que hacía era mostrar su retablo, el cual unas veces era de una historia, y otras de otra; pero todas alegres y regocijadas y conocidas. Acabada la muestra, proponía las habilidades de su mono, diciendo al pueblo que adivinaba todo lo pasado y lo presente; pero que en lo de por venir no se daba maña. Por la respuesta de cada pregunta pedía dos reales, y de algunas hacía barato, según tomaba el pulso a los preguntantes; y como tal vez llegaba a las casas de quien él sabía los sucesos de los que en ella moraban, aunque no le preguntasen nada por no pagarle, él hacía la seña al mono, y luego decía que le había dicho tal y tal cosa, que venía de molde con lo sucedido. Con esto cobraba crédito inefable, y andábanse todos tras él. Otras veces, como era tan discreto, respondía de manera que las respuestas venían bien con las preguntas; y, como nadie le apuraba ni apretaba a que dijese cómo adivinaba su mono, a todos hacía monas, y llenaba sus esqueros.

Así como entró en la venta, conoció a don Quijote y a Sancho, por cuyo conocimiento le fue fácil poner en admiración a don Quijote y a Sancho Panza, y a todos los que en ella estaban; pero hubiérale de costar caro si don Quijote bajara un poco más la mano cuando cortó la cabeza al rey Marsilio y destruyó toda su caballería, como queda dicho en el antecedente capítulo.

Esto es lo que hay que decir de maese Pedro y de su mono.

Y, volviendo a don Quijote de la Mancha, digo que, después de haber salido de la venta, determinó de ver primero las riberas del río Ebro y todos aquellos contornos, antes de entrar en la ciudad de Zaragoza, pues le daba tiempo para todo el mucho que faltaba desde allí a las justas. Con esta intención siguió su camino, por el cual anduvo dos días sin acontecerle cosa digna de ponerse en escritura, hasta que al tercero, al subir de una loma, oyó un gran rumor de atambores, de trompetas y arcabuces. Al principio pensó que algún tercio de soldados pasaba por aquella parte, y por verlos picó a Rocinante y subió la loma arriba; y cuando estuvo en la cumbre, vio al pie della, a su parecer, más de docientos hombres armados de diferentes suertes de armas, como si dijésemos lanzones, ballestas, partesanas, alabardas y picas, y algunos arcabuces, y muchas rodela. Bajó del recuesto y acercóse al escuadrón, tanto, que distintamente vio las banderas, juzgó de las colores y notó las empresas que en ellas traían, especialmente una que en un estandarte o jirón de raso blanco venía, en el cual estaba pintado muy al vivo un asno como un pequeño sardesco, la cabeza levantada, la boca abierta y la lengua de fuera, en acto y postura como si estuviera rebuznando; alrededor dél estaban escritos de letras grandes estos dos versos:

No rebuznaron en balde el uno y el otro alcalde.

Por esta insignia sacó don Quijote que aquella gente debía de ser del pueblo del rebuzno, y así se lo dijo a Sancho, declarándole lo que en el estandarte venía escrito. Díjole también que el que les había dado noticia de aquel caso se había errado en decir que dos regidores habían sido los que rebuznaron; pero que, según los versos del estandarte, no habían sido sino alcaldes. A lo que respondió Sancho Panza:

-Señor, en eso no hay que reparar, que bien puede ser que los regidores que entonces rebuznaron viniesen con el tiempo a ser alcaldes de su pueblo, y así, se pueden llamar con entrambos títulos; cuanto más, que no hace al caso a la verdad de la historia ser los rebuznadores alcaldes o regidores, como ellos una por una hayan rebuznado; porque tan a pique está de rebuznar un alcalde como un regidor.

Finalmente, conocieron y supieron como el pueblo corrido salía a pelear con otro que le corría más de lo justo y de lo que se debía a la buena vecindad.

Fuese llegando a ellos don Quijote, no con poca pesadumbre de Sancho, que nunca fue amigo de hallarse en semejantes jornadas. Los del escuadrón le recogieron en medio, creyendo que era alguno de los de su parcialidad. Don Quijote, alzando la visera, con gentil brío y continente, llegó hasta el estandarte del asno, y allí se le pusieron alrededor todos los más principales del ejército, por verle, admirados con la admiración acostumbrada en que caían todos aquellos que la vez primera le miraban. Don Quijote, que los vio tan atentos a mirarle, sin que ninguno le hablase ni le preguntase nada, quiso aprovecharse de aquel silencio, y, rompiendo el suyo, alzó la voz y dijo:

-Buenos señores, cuan encarecidamente puedo, os suplico que no interrumpáis un razonamiento que quiero haceros, hasta que veáis que os disgusta y enfada; que si esto sucede, con la más mínima señal que me hagáis pondré un sello en mi boca y echaré una mordaza a mi lengua.

-Todos le dijeron que dijese lo que quisiese, que de buena gana le escucharían. Don Quijote, con esta licencia, prosiguió diciendo:

-Yo, señores míos, soy caballero andante, cuyo ejercicio es el de las armas, y cuya profesión la de favorecer a los necesitados de favor y acudir a los menesterosos. Días ha que he sabido vuestra desgracia y la causa que os mueve a tomar las armas a cada paso, para vengaros de vuestros enemigos; y, habiendo discurrido una y muchas veces en mi entendimiento sobre vuestro negocio, hallo, según las leyes del duelo, que estáis engañados en teneros por afrentados, porque ningún particular puede afrentar a un pueblo entero, si no es retándole de traidor por junto, porque no sabe en particular quién cometió la traición por que le reta. Ejemplo desto tenemos en don Diego Ordóñez de Lara, que retó a todo el pueblo zamorano, porque ignoraba que solo Vellido Dolfos había cometido la traición de matar a su rey; y así, retó a todos, y a todos tocaba la venganza y la respuesta; aunque bien es verdad que el señor don Diego anduvo algo demasiado, y aun pasó muy adelante de los límites del reto, porque no tenía para qué retar a los muertos, a las aguas, ni a los panes, ni a los que estaban por nacer, ni a las otras menudencias que allí se declaran; pero, ¡vaya!, pues cuando la cólera sale de madre, no tiene la lengua padre, ayo ni freno que la corrija. Siendo, pues, esto así, que uno solo no puede afrentar a reino, provincia, ciudad, república ni pueblo entero, queda en limpio que no hay para qué salir a la venganza del reto de la tal afrenta, pues no lo es; porque, ¡bueno sería que se matasen a cada paso los del pueblo de la Reloja con quien se lo llama, ni los cazoleros, berenjeneros, ballenatos, jaboneros, ni los de otros nombres y apellidos que andan por ahí en boca de los muchachos y de gente de poco más a menos! ¡Bueno sería, por cierto, que todos estos insignes pueblos se corriesen y vengasen, y anduviesen contino hechas las espadas sacabuches a cualquier pendencia, por pequeña que fuese! No, no, ni Dios lo permita o quiera. Los varones prudentes, las repúblicas bien concertadas, por cuatro cosas han de tomar las armas y desenvainar las espadas, y poner a riesgo sus personas, vidas y haciendas: la primera, por defender la fe católica; la segunda, por defender su vida, que es de ley natural y divina; la tercera, en defensa de su honra, de su familia y hacienda; la cuarta, en servicio de su rey, en la guerra justa; y si le quisiéremos añadir la quinta, que se puede contar por segunda, es en defensa de su patria. A estas cinco causas, como capitales, se pueden agregar algunas otras que sean justas y razonables, y que obliguen a tomar las armas; pero tomarlas por niñerías y por cosas que antes son de risa y pasatiempo que de afrenta, parece que quien las toma carece de todo razonable discurso; cuanto más, que el tomar venganza injusta, que justa no puede haber alguna que lo sea, va derechamente contra la santa ley que profesamos, en la cual se nos manda que hagamos bien a nuestros enemigos y que amemos a los que nos aborrecen; mandamiento que, aunque parece algo dificultoso de cumplir, no lo es sino para aquellos que tienen menos de Dios que del mundo, y más de carne que de espíritu; porque Jesucristo, Dios y hombre verdadero, que nunca mintió, ni pudo ni puede mentir, siendo legislador nuestro, dijo que su yugo era suave y su carga liviana; y así, no nos había de mandar cosa que fuese imposible el cumplirla. Así que, mis señores, vuestas mercedes están obligados por leyes divinas y humanas a sosegar-se.

-El diablo me lleve -dijo a esta sazón Sancho entre sí-si este mi amo no es tólogo; y si no lo es, que lo parece como un güevo a otro.

Tomó un poco de aliento don Quijote, y, viendo que todavía le prestaban silencio, quiso pasar adelante en su plática, como pasara si no se pusiere en medio la agudeza de Sancho, el cual, viendo que su amo se detenía, tomó la mano por él, diciendo:

-Mi señor don Quijote de la Mancha, que un tiempo se llamó el Caballero de la Triste Figura y ahora se llama el Caballero de los Leones, es un hidalgo muy atentado, que sabe latín y romance como un bachiller, y en todo cuanto trata y aconseja procede como muy buen soldado, y tiene todas las leyes y ordenanzas de lo que llaman el duelo en la uña; y así, no hay más que hacer sino dejarse llevar por lo que él dijere, y sobre mí si lo erraren; cuanto más, que ello se está dicho que es necedad correrse por sólo oír un rebuzno, que yo me acuerdo, cuando muchacho, que rebuznaba cada y cuando que se me antojaba, sin que nadie me fuese a la mano, y con tanta gracia y propiedad que, en rebuznando yo, rebuznaban todos los asnos del pueblo, y no por eso dejaba de ser hijo de mis padres, que eran honradísimos; y, aunque por esta habilidad era envidiado de más de cuatro de los estirados de mi pueblo, no se me daba dos ardites. Y, porque se vea que digo verdad, esperen y escuchen, que esta ciencia es como la del nadar: que, una vez aprendida, nunca se olvida.

Y luego, puesta la mano en las narices, comenzó a rebuznar tan reciamente, que todos los cercanos valles retumbaron. Pero uno de los que estaban junto a él, creyendo que hacía burla dellos, alzó un varapalo que en la mano tenía, y dióle tal golpe con él, que, sin ser poderoso a otra cosa, dio con Sancho Panza en el suelo. Don Quijote, que vio tan malparado a Sancho, arremetió al que le había dado, con la lanza sobre mano, pero fueron tantos los que se pusieron en medio, que no fue posible vengarle; antes, viendo que llovía sobre él un nublado de piedras, y que le amenazaban mil encaradas ballestas y no menos cantidad de arcabuces, volvió las riendas a Rocinante, y a todo lo que su galope pudo, se salió de entre ellos, encomendándose de todo corazón a Dios, que de aquel peligro le librase, temiendo a cada paso no le entrase alguna bala por las espaldas y le saliese al pecho; y a cada punto recogía el aliento, por ver si le faltaba.

Pero los del escuadrón se contentaron con verle huir, sin tirarle. A Sancho le pusieron sobre su jumento, apenas vuelto en sí, y le dejaron ir tras su amo, no porque él tuviese sentido para regirle; pero el rucio siguió las huellas de Rocinante, sin el cual no se hallaba un punto. Alongado, pues, don Quijote buen trecho, volvió la cabeza y vio que Sancho venía, y atendióle, viendo que ninguno

Los del escuadrón se estuvieron allí hasta la noche, y, por no haber salido a la batalla sus contrarios, se volvieron a su pueblo, regocijados y alegres; y si ellos supieran la costumbre antigua de los griegos, levantarán en aquel lugar y sitio un trofeo.

Capítulo XXVIII

De cosas que dice Benengeli que las sabrá quien le leyere, si las lee con atención

CUANDO el valiente huye, la superchería está descubierta, y es de varones prudentes guardarse para mejor ocasión. Esta verdad se verificó en don Quijote, el cual, dando lugar a la furia del pueblo y a las malas intenciones de aquel indignado escuadrón, puso pies en polvorosa, y, sin acordarse de Sancho ni del peligro en que le dejaba, se apartó tanto cuanto le pareció que bastaba para estar seguro. Seguía Sancho, atravesado en su jumento, como queda referido. Llegó, en fin, ya vuelto en su acuerdo, y al llegar, se dejó caer del rucio a los pies de Rocinante, todo ansioso, todo molido y todo apaleado. Apeóse don Quijote para catarle las heridas; pero, como le hallase sano de los pies a la cabeza, con asaz cólera le dijo:

-¡Tan en hora mala supistes vos rebuznar, Sancho! Y ¿dónde hallastes vos ser bueno el nombrar la sogá en casa del ahorcado? A música de rebuznos, ¿qué contrapunto se había de llevar sino de varapalos? Y dad gracias a Dios, Sancho, que ya que os santiguaron con un palo, no os hicieron el per signum crucis con un alfanje.

-No estoy para responder -respondió Sancho-, porque me parece que hablo por las espaldas. Subamos y apartémonos de aquí, que yo pondré silencio en mis rebuznos, pero no en dejar de decir que los caballeros andantes huyen, y dejan a sus buenos escuderos molidos como alheña, o como cibera, en poder de sus enemigos.

-No huye el que se retira -respondió don Quijote-, porque has de saber, Sancho, que la valentía que no se funda sobre la basa de la prudencia se llama temeridad, y las hazañas del temerario más se atribuyen a la buena fortuna que a su ánimo. Y así, yo confieso que me he retirado, pero no huido; y en esto he imitado a muchos valientes, que se han guardado para tiempos mejores, y desto están las historias llenas, las cuales, por no serte a ti de provecho ni a mí de gusto, no te las refiero ahora.

En esto, ya estaba a caballo Sancho, ayudado de don Quijote, el cual asimismo subió en Rocinante, y poco a poco se fueron a emboscar en una alameda que hasta un cuarto de legua de allí se parecía. De cuando en cuando daba Sancho unos ayes profundísimos y unos gemidos dolorosos; y, preguntándole don Quijote la causa de tan amargo sentimiento, respondió que, desde la punta del espinazo hasta la nuca del cerebro, le dolía de manera que le sacaba de sentido.

-La causa dese dolor debe de ser, sin duda -dijo don Quijote-, que, como era el palo con que te dieron largo y tendido, te cogió todas las espaldas, donde entran todas esas partes que te duelen; y si más te cogiera, más te doliera.

-¡Por Dios -dijo Sancho-, que vuesa merced me ha sacado de una gran duda, y que me la ha declarado por lindos términos! ¡Cuerpo de mí! ¿Tan encubierta estaba la causa de mi dolor que ha sido menester decirme que me duele todo todo aquello que alcanzó el palo? Si me dolieran los tobillos, aún pudiera ser que se anduviera adivinando el porqué me dolían, pero dolerme lo que me molieron no es mucho adivinar. A la fe, señor nuestro amo, el mal ajeno de pelo cuelga, y cada día voy descubriendo tierra de lo poco que puedo esperar de la compañía que con vuestra merced tengo; porque si esta vez me ha dejado apalear, otra y otras ciento volveremos a los manteamientos de marras y a otras muchacherías, que si ahora me han salido a las espaldas, después me saldrán a los ojos. Harto mejor haría yo, sino que soy un bárbaro, y no haré nada que bueno sea en toda mi vida; harto mejor haría yo, vuelvo a decir, en volverme a mi casa, y a mi mujer, y a mis hijos, y sustentarla y criarlos con lo que Dios fue servido de darme, y no andarme tras vuesa merced por caminos sin camino y por sendas y carreras que no las tienen, bebiendo mal y comiendo peor. Pues, ¡tomadme el dormir! Contad, hermano escudero, siete pies de tierra, y si quisiéredes más, tomad otros tantos, que en vuestra mano está escudillar, y tendeos a todo vuestro buen talante; que quemado vea yo y hecho polvos al primero que dio puntada en la andante caballería, o, a lo menos, al primero que quiso ser escudero de tales tontos como debieron ser todos los caballeros andantes pasados. De los presentes no digo nada, que, por ser vuestra merced uno dellos, los tengo respeto, y porque sé que sabe vuesa merced un punto más que el diablo en cuanto habla y en cuanto piensa.

-Haría yo una buena apuesta con vos, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-: que ahora que vais hablando sin que nadie os vaya a la mano, que no os duele nada en todo vuestro cuerpo. Hablad, hijo mío, todo aquello que os viniere al pensamiento y a la boca; que, a trueco de que a vos no os duela nada, tendré yo por gusto el enfado que me dan vuestras impertinencias. Y si tanto deseáis volveros a vuestra casa con vuestra mujer y hijos, no permita Dios que yo os lo impida; dineros tenéis míos: mirad cuánto ha que esta tercera vez salimos de nuestro pueblo, y mirad lo que podéis y debéis ganar cada mes, y pagaos de vuestra mano.

-Cuando yo servía -respondió Sancho-a Tomé Carrasco, el padre del bachiller Sansón Carrasco, que vuestra merced bien conoce, dos ducados ganaba cada mes, amén de la comida; con vuestra merced no sé lo que puedo ganar, puesto que sé que tiene más trabajo el escudero del caballero andante que el que sirve a un labrador; que, en resolución, los que servimos a labradores, por mucho que trabajemos de día, por mal que suceda, a la noche cenamos olla y dormimos en cama, en la cual no he dormido después que ha que sirvo a vuestra merced. Si no ha sido el tiempo breve que estuvimos en casa de don Diego de Miranda, y la jira que tuve con la espuma que saqué de las ollas de Camacho, y lo que comí y bebí y dormí en casa de Basilio, todo el otro tiempo he dormido en la dura tierra, al cielo abierto, sujeto a lo que dicen inclemencias del cielo, sustentándome con rajas de queso y mendrugos de pan, y bebiendo aguas, ya de arroyos, ya de fuentes, de las que encontramos por esos andurriales donde andamos.

-Confieso -dijo don Quijote-que todo lo que dices, Sancho, sea verdad. ¿Cuánto parece que os debo dar más de lo que os daba Tomé Carrasco?

-A mi parecer -dijo Sancho-, con dos reales más que vuestra merced añadiese cada mes me tendría por bien pagado. Esto es cuanto al salario de mi trabajo; pero, en cuanto a satisfacerme a la palabra y promesa que vuestra merced me tiene hecha de darme el gobierno de una ínsula, sería justo que se me añadiesen otros seis reales, que por todos serían treinta.

-Está muy bien -replicó don Quijote-; y, conforme al salario que vos os habéis señalado, 25 días ha que salimos de nuestro pueblo: contad, Sancho, rata por cantidad, y mirad lo que os debo, y pagaos, como os tengo dicho, de vuestra mano.

-¡Oh, cuerpo de mí! -dijo Sancho-, que va vuestra merced muy errado en esta cuenta, porque en lo de la promesa de la ínsula se ha de contar desde el día que vuestra merced me la prometió hasta la presente hora en que estamos.

-Pues, ¿qué tanto ha, Sancho, que os la prometí? -dijo don Quijote.

-Si yo mal no me acuerdo -respondió Sancho-, debe de haber más de veinte años, tres días más a menos.

Diose don Quijote una gran palmada en la frente, y comenzó a reír muy de gana, y dijo:

-Pues no anduve yo en Sierra Morena, ni en todo el discurso de nuestras salidas, sino dos meses apenas, y ¿dices, Sancho, que ha veinte años que te prometí la ínsula? Ahora digo que quieres que se consuman en tus salarios el dinero que tienes mío; y si esto es así, y tú gustas dello, desde aquí te lo doy, y buen provecho te haga; que, a trueco de verme sin tan mal escudero, holgaréme de quedarme pobre y sin blanca. Pero dime, prevaricador de las ordenanzas escuderiles de la andante caballería, ¿dónde has visto tú, o leído, que ningún escudero de caballero andante se haya puesto con su señor en tanto más cuánto me habéis de dar cada mes porque os sirva? Éntrate, éntrate, malandrín, follón y vestiglo, que todo lo pareces; éntrate, digo, por el mare magnum de sus historias, y si hallares que algún escudero haya dicho, ni pensado, lo que aquí has dicho, quiero que me le claves en la frente, y, por añadidura, me hagas cuatro mamonas selladas en mi rostro. Vuelve las riendas, o el cabestro, al rucio, y vuélvete a tu casa, porque un solo paso desde aquí no has de pasar más adelante conmigo. ¡Oh pan mal conocido! ¡Oh promesas mal colocadas! ¡Oh hombre que tiene más de bestia que de persona! ¿Ahora, cuando yo pensaba ponerte en estado, y tal, que a pesar de tu mujer te llamaran señoría, te despides? ¿Ahora te vas, cuando yo venía con intención firme y valedera de hacerte señor de la mejor ínsula del mundo? En fin, como tú has dicho otras veces, no es la miel etc. Asno eres, y asno has de ser, y en asno has de parar cuando se te acabe el curso de la vida; que para mí tengo que antes llegará ella a su último término que tú caigas y des en la cuenta de que eres bestia.

Miraba Sancho a don Quijote de en hito en hito, en tanto que los tales vituperios le decía, y compungióse de manera que le vinieron las lágrimas a los ojos, y con voz dolorida y enferma le dijo:

-Señor mío, yo confieso que para ser del todo asno no me falta más de la cola; si vuestra merced quiere ponérmela, yo la daré por bien puesta, y le serviré como jumento todos los días que me quedan de mi vida. Vuestra merced me perdone y se duela de mi mocedad, y advierta que sé poco, y que si hablo mucho, más procede de enfermedad que de malicia; mas, quien yerra y se enmienda, a Dios se encomienda.

-Maravillárame yo, Sancho, si no mezclaras algún refrancico en tu coloquio. Ahora bien, yo te perdono, con que te emiendes, y con que no te muestres de aquí adelante tan amigo de tu interés, sino que procures ensanchar el corazón, y te alientes y animes a esperar el cumplimiento de mis promesas, que, aunque se tarda, no se imposibilita.

Sancho respondió que sí haría, aunque sacase fuerzas de flaqueza.

Con esto, se metieron en la alameda, y don Quijote se acomodó al pie de un olmo, y Sancho al de una haya; que estos tales árboles y otros sus semejantes siempre tienen pies, y no manos. Sancho pasó la noche penosamente, porque el varapalo se hacía más sentir con el sereno. Don Quijote la pasó en sus continuas memorias; pero, con todo eso, dieron los ojos al sueño, y al salir del alba siguieron su camino buscando las riberas del famoso Ebro, donde les sucedió lo que se contará en el capítulo venidero.

Capítulo XXIX

De la famosa aventura del barco encantado

POR SUS pasos contados y por contar, dos días después que salieron de la alameda, llegaron don Quijote y Sancho al río Ebro, y el verle fue de gran gusto a don Quijote, porque contempló y miró en él la amenidad de sus riberas, la claridad de sus aguas, el sosiego de su curso y la abundancia de sus líquidos cristales, cuya alegre vista renovó en su memoria mil amorosos pensamientos. Especialmente fue y vino en lo que había visto en la cueva de Montesinos; que, puesto que el mono de maese Pedro le había dicho que parte de aquellas cosas eran verdad y parte mentira, él se atenía más a las verdaderas que a las mentirosas, bien al revés de Sancho, que todas las tenía por la misma mentira.

Yendo, pues, desta manera, se le ofreció a la vista un pequeño barco sin remos ni otras jarcias algunas, que estaba atado en la orilla a un tronco de un árbol que en la ribera estaba. Miró don Quijote a todas partes, y no vio persona alguna; y luego, sin más ni más, se apeó de Rocinante y mandó a Sancho que lo mismo hiciese del rucio, y que a entrambas bestias las atase muy bien, juntas, al tronco de un álamo o sauce que allí estaba. Preguntóle Sancho la causa de aquel súbito apeamiento y de aquel ligamiento. Respondió don Quijote:

-Has de saber, Sancho, que este barco que aquí está, derechamente y sin poder ser otra cosa en contrario, me está llamando y convidando a que entre en él, y vaya en él a dar socorro a algún caballero, o a otra necesitada y principal persona, que debe de estar puesta en alguna grande cuita, porque éste es estilo de los libros de las historias caballerescas y de los encantadores que en ellas se entremeten y platican: cuando algún caballero está puesto en algún trabajo, que no puede ser librado dél sino por la mano de otro caballero, puesto que estén distantes el uno del otro dos o tres mil leguas, y aun más, o le arrebatan en una nube o le deparan un barco donde se entre, y en menos de un abrir y cerrar de ojos le llevan, o por los aires, o por la mar, donde quieren y adonde es menester su ayuda; así que, ¡oh Sancho!, este barco está puesto aquí para el mismo efecto; y esto es tan verdad como es ahora de día; y antes que éste se pase, ata juntos al rucio y a Rocinante, y a la mano de Dios, que nos guíe, que no dejaré de embarcarme si me lo pidiesen frailes descalzos.

-Pues así es -respondió Sancho-, y vuestra merced quiere dar a cada paso en estos que no sé si los llame disparates, no hay sino obedecer y bajar la cabeza, atendiendo al refrán «haz lo que tu amo te manda, y siéntate con él a la mesa»; pero, con todo esto, por lo que toca al descargo de mi conciencia, quiero advertir a vuestra merced que a mí me parece que este tal barco no es de los encantados, sino de algunos pescadores deste río, porque en él se pescan las mejores sabogas del mundo.

Esto decía, mientras ataba las bestias, Sancho, dejándolas a la protección y amparo de los encantadores, con harto dolor de su ánima. Don Quijote le dijo que no tuviese pena del desamparo de aquellos animales, que el que los llevaría a ellos por tan longincuos caminos y regiones tendría cuenta de sustentarlos.

-No entiendo eso de logicuos -dijo Sancho-, ni he oído tal vocablo en todos los días de mi vida.

-Longincuos -respondió don Quijote-quiere decir apartados; y no es maravilla que no lo entiendas, que no estás tú obligado a saber latín, como algunos que presumen que lo saben, y lo ignoran.

-Ya están atados -replicó Sancho-. ¿Qué hemos de hacer ahora?

-¿Qué? -respondió don Quijote-. Santiguarnos y levar ferro; quiero decir, embarcarnos y cortar la amarra con que este barco está atado.

Y, dando un salto en él, siguiéndole Sancho, cortó el cordel, y el barco se fue apartando poco a poco de la ribera; y cuando Sancho se vio obra de dos varas dentro del río, comenzó a temblar, temiendo su perdición; pero ninguna cosa le dio más pena que el oír rozar al rucio y el ver que Rocinante pugnaba por desatarse, y díjole a su señor:

-El rucio rebuzna, condolido de nuestra ausencia, y Rocinante procura ponerse en libertad para arrojarse tras nosotros. ¡Oh carísimos amigos, quedaos en paz, y la locura que nos aparta de vosotros, convertida en desengaño, nos vuelva a vuestra presencia!

Y, en esto, comenzó a llorar tan amargamente que don Quijote, mohíno y colérico, le dijo:

-¿De qué temes, cobarde criatura? ¿De qué lloras, corazón de mantequillas? ¿Quién te persigue, o quién te acosa, ánimo de ratón casero, o qué te falta, menesteroso en la mitad de las entrañas de la abundancia? ¿Por dicha vas caminando a pie y descalzo por las montañas rifeas, sino sentado en una tabla, como un archiduque, por el sesgo curso deste agradable río, de donde en breve espacio saldremos al mar dilatado? Pero ya hemos de haber salido, y caminado, por lo menos, setecientas o ochocientas leguas; y si yo tuviera aquí un astrolabio con que tomar la altura del polo, yo te dijera las que hemos caminado; aunque, o yo sé poco, o ya hemos pasado, o pasaremos presto, por la línea equinocial, que divide y corta los dos contrapuestos polos en igual distancia.

-Y cuando lleguemos a esa leña que vuestra merced dice -preguntó Sancho-,

-Mucho -replicó don Quijote-, porque de trecientos y sesenta grados que contiene el globo, del agua y de la tierra, según el cómputo de Ptolomeo, que fue el mayor cosmógrafo que se sabe, la mitad habremos caminado, llegando a la línea que he dicho.

-Por Dios -dijo Sancho-, que vuesa merced me trae por testigo de lo que dice a una gentil persona, puto y gafo, con la añadidura de meón, o meo, o no sé cómo.

Rióse don Quijote de la interpretación que Sancho había dado al nombre y al cómputo y cuenta del cosmógrafo Ptolomeo, y díjole:

-Sabrás, Sancho, que los españoles y los que se embarcan en Cádiz para ir a las Indias Orientales, una de las señales que tienen para entender que han pasado la línea equinocial que te he dicho es que a todos los que van en el navío se les mueren los piojos, sin que les quede ninguno, ni en todo el bajel le hallarán, si le pesan a oro; y así, puedes, Sancho, pasear una mano por un muslo, y si topares cosa viva, saldremos desta duda; y si no, pasado habemos.

-Yo no creo nada deso -respondió Sancho-, pero, con todo, haré lo que vuesa merced me manda, aunque no sé para qué hay necesidad de hacer esas experiencias, pues yo veo con mis mismos ojos que no nos habemos apartado de la ribera cinco varas, ni hemos decantado de donde están las alemañas dos varas, porque allí están Rocinante y el rucio en el propio lugar do los dejamos; y tomada la mira, como yo la tomo ahora, voto a tal que no nos movemos ni andamos al paso de una hormiga.

-Haz, Sancho, la averiguación que te he dicho, y no te cures de otra, que tú no sabes qué cosa sean coluros, líneas, paralelos, zodíacos, clíticas, polos, solsticios, equinocios, planetas, signos, puntos, medidas, de que se compone la esfera celeste y terrestre; que si todas estas cosas supieras, o parte dellas, vieras claramente qué de paralelos hemos cortado, qué de signos visto y qué de imágenes hemos dejado atrás y vamos dejando ahora. Y tórnote a decir que te tientes y pesques, que yo para mí tengo que estás más limpio que un pliego de papel liso y blanco.

Tentóse Sancho, y, llegando con la mano bonitamente y con tiento hacia la corva izquierda, alzó la cabeza y miró a su amo, y dijo:

-O la experiencia es falsa, o no hemos llegado adonde vuesa merced dice, ni con muchas leguas.

-Pues ¿qué? -preguntó don Quijote-, ¿has topado algo?

-¡Y aun algos! -respondió Sancho.

Y, sacudiéndose los dedos, se lavó toda la mano en el río, por el cual sosegadamente se deslizaba el barco por mitad de la corriente, sin que le moviese alguna inteligencia secreta, ni algún encantador escondido, sino el mismo curso del agua, blando entonces y suave.

En esto, descubrieron unas grandes aceñas que en la mitad del río estaban; y apenas las hubo visto don Quijote, cuando con voz alta dijo a Sancho:

-¿Vees? Allí, ¡oh amigo!, se descubre la ciudad, castillo o fortaleza donde debe de estar algún caballero oprimido, o alguna reina, infanta o princesa malparada, para cuyo socorro soy aquí traído.

-¿Qué diablos de ciudad, fortaleza o castillo dice vuesa merced, señor? -dijo Sancho-. ¿No echa de ver que aquéllas son aceñas que están en el río, donde se muele el trigo?

-Calla, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-; que, aunque parecen aceñas, no lo son; y ya te he dicho que todas las cosas trastruecan y mudan de su ser natural los encantos. No quiero decir que las mudan de en uno en otro ser realmente, sino que lo parece, como lo mostró la experiencia en la transformación de Dulcinea, único refugio de mis esperanzas.

En esto, el barco, entrado en la mitad de la corriente del río, comenzó a caminar no tan lentamente como hasta allí. Los molineros de las aceñas, que vieron venir aquel barco por el río, y que se iba a embocar por el raudal de las ruedas, salieron con presteza muchos dellos con varas largas a detenerle, y, como salían enharinados, y cubiertos los rostros y los vestidos del polvo de la harina, representaban una mala vista. Daban voces grandes, diciendo:

-¡Demonios de hombres! ¿Dónde vais? ¿Venís desesperados? ¿Qué queréis, ahogaros y haceros pedazos en estas ruedas?

-¿No te dije yo, Sancho -dijo a esta sazón don Quijote-, que habíamos llegado donde he de mostrar a dó llega el valor de mi brazo? Mira qué de malandrines y follones me salen al encuentro, mira cuántos vestiglos se me oponen, mira cuántas feas cataduras nos hacen cocos... Pues ¡ahora lo veréis, bellacos!

Y, puesto en pie en el barco, con grandes voces comenzó a amenazar a los molineros, diciéndoles:

-Canalla malvada y peor aconsejada, dejad en su libertad y libre albedrío a la persona que en esa vuestra fortaleza o prisión tenéis oprimida, alta o baja, de cualquiera suerte o calidad que sea, que yo soy don Quijote de la Mancha, llamado el Caballero de los Leones por otro nombre, a quien está reservada por orden de los altos cielos el dar fin felice a esta aventura.

Y, diciendo esto, echó mano a su espada y comenzó a esgrimirla en el aire contra los molineros; los cuales, oyendo y no entendiendo aquellas sandeces, se pusieron con sus varas a detener el barco, que ya iba entrando en el raudal y canal de las ruedas.

Púsose Sancho de rodillas, pidiendo devotamente al cielo le librase de tan manifiesto peligro, como lo hizo, por la industria y presteza de los molineros, que, oponiéndose con sus palos al barco, le detuvieron, pero no de manera que dejasen de trastornar el barco y dar con don Quijote y con Sancho al través en el agua; pero vínole bien a don Quijote, que sabía nadar como un ganso, aunque el peso de las armas le llevó al fondo dos veces; y si no fuera por los molineros, que se arrojaron al agua y los sacaron como en peso a entrambos, allí había sido Troya para los dos.

Puestos, pues, en tierra, más mojados que muertos de sed, Sancho, puesto de rodillas, las manos juntas y los ojos clavados al cielo, pidió a Dios con una larga y devota plegaria le librase de allí adelante de los atrevidos deseos y acometimientos de su señor.

Llegaron en esto los pescadores dueños del barco, a quien habían hecho pedazos las ruedas de las aceñas; y, viéndole roto, acometieron a desnudar a Sancho, y a pedir a don Quijote se lo pagase; el cual, con gran sosiego, como si no hubiera pasado nada por él, dijo a los molineros y pescadores que él pagaría el barco de bonísima gana, con condición que le diesen libre y sin cautela a la persona o personas que en aquel su castillo estaban oprimidas.

-¿Qué personas o qué castillo dice -respondió uno de los molineros-, hombre sin juicio? ¿Quiéreste llevar por ventura las que vienen a moler trigo a estas aceñas?

-¡Basta! -dijo entre sí don Quijote-. Aquí será predicar en desierto querer reducir a esta canalla a que por ruegos haga virtud alguna. Y en esta aventura se deben de haber encontrado dos valientes encantadores, y el uno estorba lo que el otro intenta: el uno me deparó el barco, y el otro dio conmigo al través. Dios lo remedie, que todo este mundo es máquinas y trazas, contrarias unas de otras. Yo no puedo más.

Y, alzando la voz, prosiguió diciendo, y mirando a las aceñas:

-Amigos, cualesquiera que seáis, que en esa prisión quedáis encerrados, perdonadme; que, por mi desgracia y por la vuestra, yo no os puedo sacar de vuestra cuita. Para otro caballero debe de estar guardada y reservada esta aventura.

En diciendo esto, se concertó con los pescadores, y pagó por el barco cincuenta reales, que los dio Sancho de muy mala gana, diciendo:

-A dos barcadas como éstas, daremos con todo el caudal al fondo.

Los pescadores y molineros estaban admirados, mirando aquellas dos figuras tan fuera del uso, al parecer, de los otros hombres, y no acababan de entender a dó se encaminaban las razones y preguntas que don Quijote les decía; y, teniéndolos por locos, les dejaron y se recogieron a sus aceñas, y los pescadores a sus ranchos. Volvieron a sus bestias, y a ser bestias, don Quijote y Sancho, y este fin tuvo la aventura del encantado barco.

Capítulo XXX

De lo que le avino a don Quijote con una bella cazadora

ASAZ melancólicos y de mal talante llegaron a sus animales caballero y escudero, especialmente Sancho, a quien llegaba al alma llegar al caudal del dinero, pareciéndole que todo lo que dél se quitaba era quitárselo a él de las niñas de sus ojos. Finalmente, sin hablarse palabra, se pusieron a caballo y se apartaron del famoso río, don Quijote sepultado en los pensamientos de sus amores, y Sancho en los de su acrecentamiento, que por entonces le parecía que estaba bien lejos de tenerle; porque, maguer era tonto, bien se le alcanzaba que las acciones de su amo, todas o las más, eran disparates, y buscaba ocasión de que, sin entrar en cuentas ni en despedimientos con su señor, un día se desgarrase y se fuese a su casa. Pero la fortuna ordenó las cosas muy al revés de lo que él temía.

Sucedió, pues, que otro día, al poner del sol y al salir de una selva, tendió don Quijote la vista por un verde prado, y en lo último dél vio gente, y, llegándose cerca, conoció que eran cazadores de altanería. Llegóse más, y entre ellos vio una gallarda señora sobre un palafrén o hacanea blanquísima, adornada de guarniciones verdes y con un sillón de plata. Venía la señora asimismo vestida de verde, tan bizarra y ricamente que la misma bizarría venía transformada en ella. En la mano izquierda traía un azor, señal que dio a entender a don Quijote ser aquélla alguna gran señora, que debía serlo de todos aquellos cazadores, como era la verdad; y así, dijo a Sancho:

-Corre, hijo Sancho, y di a aquella señora del palafrén y del azor que yo, el Caballero de los Leones, besa las manos a su gran fermosura, y que si su grandeza me da licencia, se las iré a besar, y a servirla en cuanto mis fuerzas pudieren y su alteza me mandare. Y mira, Sancho, cómo hablas, y ten cuenta de no encajar algún refrán de los tuyos en tu embajada.

-¡Hallado os le habéis el encajador! -respondió Sancho-. ¡A mí con eso! ¡Sí, que no es ésta la vez primera que he llevado embajadas a altas y crecidas señoras en esta vida!

-Si no fue la que llevaste a la señora Dulcinea -replicó don Quijote-, yo no sé que hayas llevado otra, a lo menos en mi poder.

-Así es verdad -respondió Sancho-, pero al buen pagador no le duelen prendas, y en casa llena presto se guisa la cena; quiero decir que a mí no hay que decirme ni advertirme de nada, que para todo tengo y de todo se me alcanza un poco.

-Yo lo creo, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-; ve en buena hora, y Dios te guíe.

Partió Sancho de carrera, sacando de su paso al rucio, y llegó donde la bella cazadora estaba, y, apeándose, puesto ante ella de hinojos, le dijo:

-Hermosa señora, aquel caballero que allí se parece, llamado el Caballero de los Leones, es mi amo, y yo soy un escudero suyo, a quien llaman en su casa Sancho Panza. Este tal Caballero de los Leones, que no ha mucho que se llamaba el de la Triste Figura, envía por mí a decir a vuestra grandeza sea servida de darle licencia para que, con su propósito y beneplácito y consentimiento, él venga a poner en obra su deseo, que no es otro, según él dice y yo pienso, que de servir a vuestra encumbrada altanería y fermosura; que en dársela vuestra señoría hará cosa que redunde en su pro, y él recibirá señaladísima merced y contento.

-Por cierto, buen escudero -respondió la señora-, vos habéis dado la embajada vuestra con todas aquellas circunstancias que las tales embajadas piden. Levantaos del suelo, que escudero de tan gran caballero como es el de la Triste Figura, de quien ya tenemos acá mucha noticia, no es justo que esté de hinojos; levantaos, amigo, y decid a vuestro señor que venga mucho en hora buena a servirse de mí y del duque mi marido, en una casa de placer que aquí tenemos.

Levantóse Sancho admirado, así de la hermosura de la buena señora como de su mucha crianza y cortesía, y más de lo que le había dicho que tenía noticia de su señor el Caballero de la Triste Figura, y que si no le había llamado el de los Leones, debía de ser por habersele puesto tan nuevamente. Preguntóle la duquesa, cuyo título aún no se sabe:

-Decidme, hermano escudero: este vuestro señor, ¿no es uno de quien anda impresa una historia que se llama del ingenioso hidalgo don Quijote de la Mancha, que tiene por señora de su alma a una tal Dulcinea del Toboso?

-El mismo es, señora -respondió Sancho-; y aquel escudero suyo que anda, o debe de andar, en la tal historia, a quien llaman Sancho Panza, soy yo, si no es que me trocaron en la cuna; quiero decir, que me trocaron en la estampa.

-De todo eso me huelgo yo mucho -dijo la duquesa-. Id, hermano Panza, y decid a vuestro señor que él sea el bien llegado y el bien venido a mis estados, y que ninguna cosa me pudiera venir que más contento me diera.

Sancho, con esta tan agradable respuesta, con grandísimo gusto volvió a su amo, a quien contó todo lo que la gran señora le había dicho, levantando con sus rústicos términos a los cielos su mucha fermosura, su gran donaire y cortesía. Don Quijote se gallardeó en la silla, púsose bien en los estribos, acomodóse la visera, arremetió a Rocinante, y con gentil denuedo fue a besar las manos a la duquesa; la cual, haciendo llamar al duque, su marido, le contó, en tanto que don Quijote llegaba, toda la embajada suya; y los dos, por haber leído la primera parte desta historia y haber entendido por ella el disparatado humor de don Quijote, con grandísimo gusto y con deseo de conocerle le atendían, con propuesto de seguirle el humor y conceder con él en cuanto les dijese, tratándole como a caballero andante los días que con ellos se detuviese, con todas las ceremonias acostumbradas en los libros de caballerías, que ellos habían leído, y aun les eran muy aficionados.

En esto, llegó don Quijote, alzada la visera; y, dando muestras de apearse, acudió Sancho a tenerle el estribo; pero fue tan desgraciado que, al apearse del rucio, se le asió un pie en una sogá del albarda, de tal modo que no fue posible desenredarle, antes quedó colgado dél, con la boca y los pechos en el suelo. Don Quijote, que no tenía en costumbre apearse sin que le tuviesen el estribo, pensando que ya Sancho había llegado a tenersele, descargó de golpe el cuerpo, y llevóse tras sí la silla de Rocinante, que debía de estar mal cinchado, y la silla y él vinieron al suelo, no sin vergüenza suya y de muchas maldiciones que entre dientes echó al desdichado de Sancho, que aún todavía tenía el pie en la corma.

El duque mandó a sus cazadores que acudiesen al caballero y al escudero, los cuales levantaron a don Quijote maltrecho de la caída, y, renqueando y como pudo, fue a hincar las rodillas ante los dos señores; pero el duque no lo consintió en ninguna manera, antes, apeándose de su caballo, fue a abrazar a don Quijote, diciéndole:

-A mí me pesa, señor Caballero de la Triste Figura, que la primera que vuesa merced ha hecho en mi tierra haya sido tan mala como se ha visto; pero descuidos de escuderos suelen ser causa de otros peores sucesos.

-El que yo he tenido en veros, valeroso príncipe -respondió don Quijote-, es imposible ser malo, aunque mi caída no parara hasta el profundo de los abismos, pues de allí me levantara y me sacara la gloria de haberos visto. Mi escudero, que Dios maldiga, mejor desata la lengua para decir malicias que ata y cincha una silla para que esté firme; pero, comoquiera que yo me halle, caído o levantado, a pie o a caballo, siempre estaré al servicio vuestro y al de mi señora la duquesa, digna consorte vuestra, y digna señora de la hermosura y universal princesa de la cortesía.

-¡Pasito, mi señor don Quijote de la Mancha! -dijo el duque-, que adonde está mi señora doña Dulcinea del Toboso no es razón que se alaben otras ferosuras.

Ya estaba a esta sazón libre Sancho Panza del lazo, y, hallándose allí cerca, antes que su amo respondiese, dijo:

-No se puede negar, sino afirmar, que es muy hermosa mi señora Dulcinea del Toboso, pero donde menos se piensa se levanta la liebre; que yo he oído decir que esto que llaman naturaleza es como un alcarrer que hace vasos de barro, y el que hace un vaso hermoso también puede hacer dos, y tres y ciento; dígolo porque mi señora la duquesa a fee que no va en zaga a mi ama la señora Dulcinea del Toboso.

Volvióse don Quijote a la duquesa y dijo:

-Vuestra grandeza imagine que no tuvo caballero andante en el mundo escudero más hablador ni más gracioso del que yo tengo, y él me sacará verdadero si algunos días quisiere vuestra gran celsitud servirse de mí.

A lo que respondió la duquesa:

-De que Sancho el bueno sea gracioso lo estimo yo en mucho, porque es señal que es discreto; que las gracias y los donaires, señor don Quijote, como vuesa merced bien sabe, no asientan sobre ingenios torpes; y, pues el buen Sancho es gracioso y donairoso, desde aquí le confirmo por discreto.

-Y hablador -añadió don Quijote.

-Tanto que mejor -dijo el duque-, porque muchas gracias no se pueden decir con pocas palabras. Y, porque no se nos vaya el tiempo en ellas, venga el gran Caballero de la Triste Figura...

-De los Leones ha de decir vuestra alteza -dijo Sancho-, que ya no hay Triste Figura, ni figuro.

-Sea el de los Leones -prosiguió el duque-. Digo que venga el señor Caballero de los Leones a un castillo mío que está aquí cerca, donde se le hará el acogimiento que a tan alta persona se debe justamente, y el que yo y la duquesa solemos hacer a todos los caballeros andantes que a él llegan.

Ya en esto, Sancho había aderezado y cinchado bien la silla a Rocinante; y, subiendo en él don Quijote, y el duque en un hermoso caballo, pusieron a la duquesa en medio y encaminaron al castillo. Mandó la duquesa a Sancho que fuese junto a ella, porque gustaba infinito de oír sus discreciones. No se hizo de rogar Sancho, y entretejióse entre los tres, y hizo cuarto en la conversación, con gran gusto de la duquesa y del duque, que tuvieron a gran ventura acoger en su castillo tal caballero andante y tal escudero andado.

Capítulo XXXI

Que trata de muchas y grandes cosas

SUMA era la alegría que llevaba consigo Sancho, viéndose, a su parecer, en privanza con la duquesa, porque se le figuraba que había de hallar en su castillo lo que en la casa de don Diego y en la de Basilio, siempre aficionado a la buena vida; y así, tomaba la ocasión por la melena en esto del regalarse cada y cuando que se le ofrecía.

Cuenta, pues, la historia, que antes que a la casa de placer o castillo llegasen, se adelantó el duque y dio orden a todos sus criados del modo que habían de tratar a don Quijote; el cual, como llegó con la duquesa a las puertas del castillo, al instante salieron dél dos lacayos o palafreneros, vestidos hasta en pies de unas ropas que llaman de levantar, de finísimo raso carmesí, y, cogiendo a don Quijote en brazos, sin ser oído ni visto, le dijeron:

-Vaya la vuestra grandeza a apearse a mi señora la duquesa.

Don Quijote lo hizo, y hubo grandes comedimientos entre los dos sobre el caso; pero, en efecto, venció la porfía de la duquesa, y no quiso decender o bajar del palafrén sino en los brazos del duque, diciendo que no se hallaba digna de dar a tan gran caballero tan inútil carga. En fin, salió el duque a apearse; y al entrar en un gran patio, llegaron dos hermosas doncellas y echaron sobre los hombros a don Quijote un gran mantón de finísima escarlata, y en un instante se coronaron todos los corredores del patio de criados y criadas de aquellos señores, diciendo a grandes voces:

-¡Bien sea venido la flor y la nata de los caballeros andantes!

Y todos, o los más, derramaban pomos de aguas olorosas sobre don Quijote y sobre los duques, de todo lo cual se admiraba don Quijote; y aquél fue el primer día que de todo en todo conoció y creyó ser caballero andante verdadero, y no fantástico, viéndose tratar del mismo modo que él había leído se trataban los tales caballeros en los pasados siglos.

Sancho, desamparando al rucio, se cosió con la duquesa y se entró en el castillo; y, remordiéndole la conciencia de que dejaba al jumento solo, se llegó a una reverenda dueña, que con otras a recibir a la duquesa había salido, y con voz baja le dijo:

-Señora González, o como es su gracia de vuesa merced...

-Doña Rodríguez de Grijalba me llamo -respondió la dueña-. ¿Qué es lo que mandáis, hermano?

A lo que respondió Sancho:

-Querría que vuesa merced me la hiciese de salir a la puerta del castillo, donde hallará un asno rucio mío; vuesa merced sea servida de mandarle poner, o ponerle, en la caballeriza, porque el pobrecito es un poco medroso, y no se hallará a estar solo en ninguna de las maneras.

-Si tan discreto es el amo como el mozo -respondió la dueña-, ¡medradas estamos! Andad, hermano, mucho de enhoramala para vos y para quien acá os trujo, y tened cuenta con vuestro jumento, que las dueñas desta casa no estamos acostumbradas a semejantes haciendas.

-Pues en verdad -respondió Sancho-que he oído yo decir a mi señor, que es zahorí de las historias, contando aquella de Lanzarote, cuando de Bretaña vino,

que damas curaban dél,
y dueñas del su rocino;

y que en el particular de mi asno, que no le trocara yo con el rocín del señor Lanzarote.

-Hermano, si sois juglar -replicó la dueña-, guardad vuestras gracias para donde lo parezcan y se os paguen, que de mi no podréis llevar sino una higa.

-¡Aun bien -respondió Sancho-que será bien madura, pues no perderá vuesa merced la quínola de sus años por punto menos!

-Hijo de puta -dijo la dueña, toda ya encendida en cólera-, si soy vieja o no, a Dios daré la cuenta, que no a vos, bellaco, harto de ajos.

Y esto dijo en voz tan alta, que lo oyó la duquesa; y, volviendo y viendo a la dueña tan alborotada y tan encarnizados los ojos, le preguntó con quién las había.

-Aquí las he -respondió la dueña-con este buen hombre, que me ha pedido encarecidamente que vaya a poner en la caballeriza a un asno suyo que está a la puerta del castillo, trayéndome por ejemplo que así lo hicieron no sé dónde, que unas damas curaron a un tal Lanzarote, y unas dueñas a su rocino; y, sobre todo, por buen término me ha llamado vieja.

-Eso tuviera yo por afrenta -respondió la duquesa-, más que cuantas pudieran decirme.

Y, hablando con Sancho, le dijo:

-Advertid, Sancho amigo, que doña Rodríguez es muy moza, y que aquellas tocas más las trae por autoridad y por la usanza que por los años.

-Malos sean los que me quedan por vivir -respondió Sancho-, si lo dije por tanto; sólo lo dije porque es tan grande el cariño que tengo a mi jumento, que me pareció que no podía encomendarle a persona más caritativa que a la señora doña Rodríguez.

Don Quijote, que todo lo oía, le dijo:

-¿Pláticas son éstas, Sancho, para este lugar?

-Señor -respondió Sancho-, cada uno ha de hablar de su menester dondequiera que estuviere; aquí se me acordó del rucio, y aquí hablé dél; y si en la caballeriza se me acordara, allí hablara.

A lo que dijo el duque:

-Sancho está muy en lo cierto, y no hay que culparle en nada; al rucio se le dará recado a pedir de boca, y descuide Sancho, que se le tratará como a su misma persona.

Con estos razonamientos, gustosos a todos sino a don Quijote, llegaron a lo alto y entraron a don Quijote en una sala adornada de telas riquísimas de oro y de brocado; seis doncellas le desarmaron y sirvieron de pajes, todas industriadas y advertidas del duque y de la duquesa de lo que habían de hacer, y de cómo habían de tratar a don Quijote, para que imaginase y viese que le trataban como caballero andante. Quedó don Quijote, después de desarmado, en sus estrechos greguescos y en su jubón de camuza, seco, alto, tendido, con las quijadas, que por de dentro se besaba la una con la otra; figura que, a no tener cuenta las doncellas que le servían con disimular la risa -que fue una de las precisas órdenes que sus señores les habían dado-, reventaran riendo.

Pidiéronle que se dejase desnudar para una camisa, pero nunca lo consintió, diciendo que la honestidad parecía tan bien en los caballeros andantes como la valentía. Con todo, dijo que diesen la camisa a Sancho, y, encerrándose con él en una cuadra donde estaba un rico lecho, se desnudó y vistió la camisa; y, viéndose solo con Sancho, le dijo:

-Dime, truhán moderno y majadero antiguo: ¿parécete bien deshonorar y afrentar a una dueña tan veneranda y tan digna de respeto como aquélla? ¿Tiempos eran aquéllos para acordarte del rucio, o señores son éstos para dejar mal pasar a las bestias, tratando tan elegantemente a sus dueños? Por quien Dios es, Sancho, que te reportes, y que no descubras la hilaza de manera que caigan en la cuenta de que eres de villana y grosera tela tejido. Mira, pecador de ti, que en tanto más es tenido el señor cuanto tiene más honrados y bien nacidos criados, y que una de las ventajas mayores que llevan los príncipes a los demás hombres es que se sirven de criados tan buenos como ellos. ¿No adviertes, angustiado de ti, y malaventurado de mí, que si veen que tú eres un grosero villano, o un mentecato gracioso, pensarán que yo soy algún echacuervos, o algún caballero de mohatra? No, no, Sancho amigo, huye, huye destos inconvenientes, que quien tropieza en hablador y en gracioso, al primer puntapié cae y da en truhán desgraciado. Enfrena la lengua, considera y rumia las palabras antes que te salgan de la boca, y advierte que hemos llegado a parte donde, con el favor de Dios y valor de mi brazo, hemos de salir mejorados en tercio y quinto en fama y en hacienda.

Sancho le prometió con muchas veras de coserse la boca, o morderse la lengua, antes de hablar palabra que no fuese muy a propósito y bien considerada, como él se lo mandaba, y que descuidase acerca de lo tal, que nunca por él se descubriría quién ellos eran.

Vistióse don Quijote, púsose su tahalí con su espada, echóse el mantón de escarlata a cuestras, púsose una montera de raso verde que las doncellas le dieron, y con este adorno salió a la gran sala, adonde halló a las doncellas puestas en ala, tantas a una parte como a otra, y todas con aderezo de darle aguamanos, la cual le dieron con muchas reverencias y ceremonias.

Luego llegaron doce pajes con el maestresala, para llevarle a comer, que ya los señores le aguardaban. Cogieronle en medio, y, lleno de pompa y majestad, le llevaron a otra sala, donde estaba puesta una rica mesa con solos cuatro servicios. La duquesa y el duque salieron a la puerta de la sala a recibirle, y con ellos un grave eclesiástico, destos que gobiernan las casas de los príncipes; destos que, como no nacen príncipes, no aciertan a enseñar cómo lo han de ser los que lo son; destos que quieren que la grandeza de los grandes se mida con la estrechez de sus ánimos; destos que, queriendo mostrar a los que ellos gobiernan a ser limitados, les hacen ser miserables; destos tales, digo que debía de ser el grave religioso que con los duques salió a recibir a don Quijote. Hiciéronse mil cortesés comedimientos, y, finalmente, cogiendo a don Quijote en medio, se fueron a sentar a la mesa.

Convidó el duque a don Quijote con la cabecera de la mesa, y aunque él lo rehusó, las importunaciones del duque fueron tantas que la hubo de tomar. El eclesiástico se sentó frontero, y el duque y la duquesa a los dos lados.

A todo estaba presente Sancho, embobado y atónito de ver la honra que a su señor aquellos príncipes le hacían; y, viendo las muchas ceremonias y ruegos que pasaron entre el duque y don Quijote para hacerle sentar a la cabecera de la mesa, dijo:

-Si sus mercedes me dan licencia, les contaré un cuento que pasó en mi pueblo acerca de esto de los asientos.

Apenas hubo dicho esto Sancho, cuando don Quijote tembló, creyendo sin duda alguna que había de decir alguna necedad. Miróle Sancho y entendióle, y

dijo:

-No tema vuesa merced, señor mío, que yo me desmande, ni que diga cosa que no venga muy a pelo, que no se me han olvidado los consejos que poco ha vuesa merced me dio sobre el hablar mucho o poco, o bien o mal.

-Yo no me acuerdo de nada, Sancho -respondió don Quijote-; di lo que quisieres, como lo digas presto.

-Pues lo que quiero decir -dijo Sancho-es tan verdad, que mi señor don Quijote, que está presente, no me dejará mentir.

-Por mí -replicó don Quijote-, miente tú, Sancho, cuanto quisieres, que yo no te iré a la mano, pero mira lo que vas a decir.

-Tan mirado y remirado lo tengo, que a buen salvo está el que repica, como se verá por la obra.

-Bien será -dijo don Quijote-que vuestras grandezas manden echar de aquí a este tonto, que dirá mil patochadas.

-Por vida del duque -dijo la duquesa-, que no se ha de apartar de mí Sancho un punto: quiérole yo mucho, porque sé que es muy discreto.

-Discretos días -dijo Sancho-viva vuestra santidad por el buen crédito que de mí tiene, aunque en mí no lo haya. Y el cuento que quiero decir es éste: «Convidó un hidalgo de mi pueblo, muy rico y principal, porque venía de los Álamos de Medina del Campo, que casó con doña Mencía de Quiñones, que fue hija de don Alonso de Marañón, caballero del hábito de Santiago, que se ahogó en la Herradura, por quien hubo aquella pendencia años ha en nuestro lugar, que, a lo que entiendo, mi señor don Quijote se halló en ella, de donde salió herido Tomasillo el Travieso, el hijo de Balbastro el herrero...» ¿No es verdad todo esto, señor nuestro amo? Dígalo, por su vida, porque estos señores no me tengan por algún hablador mentiroso.

-Hasta ahora -dijo el eclesiástico-, más os tengo por hablador que por mentiroso, pero de aquí adelante no sé por lo que os tendré.

-Tú das tantos testigos, Sancho, y tantas señas, que no puedo dejar de decir que debes de decir verdad. Pasa adelante y acorta el cuento, porque llevas camino de no acabar en dos días.

-No ha de acortar tal -dijo la duquesa-, por hacerme a mí placer; antes, le ha de contar de la manera que le sabe, aunque no le acabe en seis días; que si tantos fuesen, serían para mí los mejores que hubiese llevado en mi vida.

-«Digo, pues, señores míos -prosiguió Sancho-, que este tal hidalgo, que yo conozco como a mis manos, porque no hay de mi casa a la suya un tiro de ballesta, convidó un labrador pobre, pero honrado.»

-Adelante, hermano -dijo a esta sazón el religioso-, que camino lleváis de no parar con vuestro cuento hasta el otro mundo.

-A menos de la mitad pararé, si Dios fuere servido -respondió Sancho-. «Y así, digo que, llegando el tal labrador a casa del dicho hidalgo convidador, que buen poso haya su ánima, que ya es muerto, y por más señas dicen que hizo una muerte de un ángel, que yo no me hallé presente, que había ido por aquel tiempo a segar a Tembleque...»

-Por vida vuestra, hijo, que volváis presto de Tembleque, y que, sin enterrar al hidalgo, si no queréis hacer más exequias, acabéis vuestro cuento.

-«Es, pues, el caso -replicó Sancho-que, estando los dos para asentarse a la mesa, que parece que ahora los veo más que nunca...»

Gran gusto recibían los duques del disgusto que mostraba tomar el buen religioso de la dilación y pausas con que Sancho contaba su cuento, y don Quijote se estaba consumiendo en cólera y en rabia.

-«Digo, así -dijo Sancho-, que, estando, como he dicho, los dos para sentarse a la mesa, el labrador porfiaba con el hidalgo que tomase la cabecera de la mesa, y el hidalgo porfiaba también que el labrador la tomase, porque en su casa se había de hacer lo que él mandase; pero el labrador, que presumía de cortés y bien criado, jamás quiso, hasta que el hidalgo, mohíno, poniéndole ambas manos sobre los hombros, le hizo sentar por fuerza, diciéndole: “Sentaos, majagranzas, que adondequiera que yo me siente será vuestra cabecera”.» Y éste es el cuento, y en verdad que creo que no ha sido aquí traído fuera de propósito.

Púsose don Quijote de mil colores, que sobre lo moreno le jaspeaban y se le parecían; los señores disimularon la risa, porque don Quijote no acabase de correrse, habiendo entendido la malicia de Sancho; y, por mudar de plática y hacer que Sancho no prosiguiese con otros disparates, preguntó la duquesa a don Quijote que qué nuevas tenía de la señora Dulcinea, y que si le había enviado aquellos días algunos presentes de gigantes o malandrines, pues no podía dejar de haber vencido muchos. A lo que don Quijote respondió:

-Señora mía, mis desgracias, aunque tuvieron principio, nunca tendrán fin. Gigantes he vencido, y follones y malandrines le he enviado, pero ¿adónde la habían de hallar, si está encantada y vuelta en la más fea labradora que imaginar se puede?

-No sé -dijo Sancho Panza-, a mí me parece la más hermosa criatura del mundo; a lo menos, en la ligereza y en el brincar bien sé yo que no dará ella la ventaja a un volteador; a buena fe, señora duquesa, así salta desde el suelo sobre una borrica como si fuera un gato.

-¿Habéisla visto vos encantada, Sancho? -preguntó el duque.

-Y ¡cómo si la he visto! -respondió Sancho-. Pues, ¿quién diablos sino yo fue el primero que cayó en el achaque del encantorio? ¡Tan encantada está como mi padre!

El eclesiástico, que oyó decir de gigantes, de follones y de encantos, cayó en la cuenta de que aquél debía de ser don Quijote de la Mancha, cuya historia leía el duque de ordinario, y él se lo había reprehendido muchas veces, diciéndole que era disparate leer tales disparates; y, enterándose ser verdad lo que sospechaba, con mucha cólera, hablando con el duque, le dijo:

-Vuestra Excelencia, señor mío, tiene que dar cuenta a Nuestro Señor de lo que hace este buen hombre. Este don Quijote, o don Tonto, o como se llama, imagino yo que no debe de ser tan mentecato como Vuestra Excelencia quiere que sea, dándole ocasiones a la mano para que lleve adelante sus sandeces y vaciedades.

Y, volviendo la plática a don Quijote, le dijo:

-Y a vos, alma de cántaro, ¿quién os ha encajado en el cerebro que sois caballero andante y que vencéis gigantes y prendéis malandrines? Andad en hora buena, y en tal se os diga: volveos a vuestra casa, y criad vuestros hijos, si los tenéis, y curad de vuestra hacienda, y dejad de andar vagando por el mundo, papando viento y dando que reír a cuantos os conocen y no conocen. ¿En dónde, nora tal, habéis vos hallado que hubo ni hay ahora caballeros andantes? ¿Dónde hay gigantes en España, o malandrines en la Mancha, ni Dulcineas encantadas, ni toda la caterva de las simplicidades que de vos se cuentan?

Atento estuvo don Quijote a las razones de aquel venerable varón, y, viendo que ya callaba, sin guardar respeto a los duques, con semblante airado y alborotado rostro, se puso en pie y dijo...

Pero esta respuesta capítulo por sí merece.

Capítulo XXXII

LEVANTADO, pues, en pie don Quijote, temblando de los pies a la cabeza como azogado, con presurosa y turbada lengua, dijo:

-El lugar donde estoy, y la presencia ante quien me hallo y el respeto que siempre tuve y tengo al estado que vuesa merced profesa tienen y atan las manos de mi justo enojo; y, así por lo que he dicho como por saber que saben todos que las armas de los togados son las mismas que las de la mujer, que son la lengua, entraré con la mía en igual batalla con vuesa merced, de quien se debía esperar antes buenos consejos que infames vituperios. Las reprehensiones santas y bien intencionadas otras circunstancias requieren y otros puntos piden: a lo menos, el haberme reprendido en público y tan ásperamente ha pasado todos los límites de la buena reprehensión, pues las primeras mejor asientan sobre la blandura que sobre la aspereza, y no es bien que, sin tener conocimiento del pecado que se reprehende, llamar al pecador, sin más ni más, mentecato y tonto. Si no, dígame vuesa merced: ¿por cuál de las mentecaterías que en mí ha visto me condena y vitupera, y me manda que me vaya a mi casa a tener cuenta en el gobierno della y de mi mujer y de mis hijos, sin saber si la tengo o los tengo? ¿No hay más sino a troche moche entrarse por las casas ajenas a gobernar sus dueños, y, habiéndose criado algunos en la estrechez de algún pupilaje, sin haber visto más mundo que el que puede contenerse en veinte o treinta leguas de distrito, meterse de rondón a dar leyes a la caballería y a juzgar de los caballeros andantes? ¿Por ventura es asunto vano o es tiempo mal gastado el que se gasta en vagar por el mundo, no buscando los regalos dél, sino las asperezas por donde los buenos suben al asiento de la inmortalidad? Si me tuvieran por tonto los caballeros, los magníficos, los generosos, los altamente nacidos, tuviéralo por afrenta irreparable; pero de que me tengan por sandio los estudiantes, que nunca entraron ni pisaron las sendas de la caballería, no se me da un ardite: caballero soy y caballero he de morir si place al Altísimo. Unos van por el ancho campo de la ambición soberbia; otros, por el de la adulación servil y baja; otros, por el de la hipocresía engañosa, y algunos, por el de la verdadera religión; pero yo, inclinado de mi estrella, voy por la angosta senda de la caballería andante, por cuyo ejercicio desprecio la hacienda, pero no la honra. Yo he satisfecho agravios, enderezado tuertos, castigado insolencias, vencido gigantes y atropellado vestiglos; yo soy enamorado, no más de porque es forzoso que los caballeros andantes lo sean; y, siéndolo, no soy de los enamorados viciosos, sino de los platónicos continentes. Mis intenciones siempre las enderezo a buenos fines, que son de hacer bien a todos y mal a ninguno; si el que esto entiende, si el que esto obra, si el que desto trata merece ser llamado bobo, díganlo vuestras grandezas, duque y duquesa excelentes.

-¡Bien, por Dios! -dijo Sancho-. No diga más vuestra merced, señor y amo mío, en su abono, porque no hay más que decir, ni más que pensar, ni más que perseverar en el mundo. Y más, que, negando este señor, como ha negado, que no ha habido en el mundo, ni los hay, caballeros andantes, ¿qué mucho que no sepa ninguna de las cosas que ha dicho?

-¿Por ventura -dijo el eclesiástico-sois vos, hermano, aquel Sancho Panza que dicen, a quien vuestro amo tiene prometida una ínsula?

-Sí soy -respondió Sancho-; y soy quien la merece tan bien como otro cualquiera; soy quien «júntate a los buenos y serás uno dellos», y soy yo de aquellos «no con quien naces, sino con quien paces», y de los «quien a buen árbol se arrima, buena sombra le cobija». Yo me he arrimado a buen señor, y ha muchos meses que ando en su compañía, y he de ser otro como él, Dios queriendo; y viva él y viva yo: que ni a él le faltarán imperios que mandar ni a mí ínsulas que gobernar.

-No, por cierto, Sancho amigo -dijo a esta sazón el duque-, que yo, en nombre del señor don Quijote, os mando el gobierno de una que tengo de nones, de no pequeña calidad.

-Híncate de rodillas, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, y besa los pies a Su Excelencia por la merced que te ha hecho.

Hízolo así Sancho; lo cual visto por el eclesiástico, se levantó de la mesa, mohíno además, diciendo:

-Por el hábito que tengo, que estoy por decir que es tan sandio Vuestra Excelencia como estos pecadores. ¡Mirad si no han de ser ellos locos, pues los cuerdos canonizan sus locuras! Quédese Vuestra Excelencia con ellos; que, en tanto que estuvieren en casa, me estaré yo en la mía, y me escusaré de reprehender lo que no puedo remediar.

Y, sin decir más ni comer más, se fue, sin que fuesen parte a detenerle los ruegos de los duques; aunque el duque no le dijo mucho, impedido de la risa que su impertinente cólera le había causado. Acabó de reír y dijo a don Quijote:

-Vuesa merced, señor Caballero de los Leones, ha respondido por sí tan altamente que no le queda cosa por satisfacer deste que, aunque parece agravio, no lo es en ninguna manera; porque, así como no agravian las mujeres, no agravian los eclesiásticos, como vuesa merced mejor sabe.

-Así es -respondió don Quijote-, y la causa es que el que no puede ser agraviado no puede agraviar a nadie. Las mujeres, los niños y los eclesiásticos, como no pueden defenderse, aunque sean ofendidos, no pueden ser afrentados; porque entre el agravio y la afrenta hay esta diferencia, como mejor Vuestra Excelencia sabe: la afrenta viene de parte de quien la puede hacer, y la hace y la sustenta; el agravio puede venir de cualquier parte, sin que afrente. Sea ejemplo: está uno en la calle descuidado, llegan diez con mano armada, y, dándole de palos, pone mano a la espada y hace su deber, pero la muchedumbre de los contrarios se le opone, y no le deja salir con su intención, que es de vengarse; este tal queda agraviado, pero no afrentado. Y lo mismo confirmará otro ejemplo: está uno vuelto de espaldas, llega otro y dale de palos, y en dándoselos huye y no espera, y el otro le sigue y no alcanza; este que recibió los palos, recibió agravio, mas no afrenta, porque la afrenta ha de ser sustentada. Si el que le dio los palos, aunque se los dio a hurtacordel, pusiera mano a su espada y se estuviera quedo, haciendo rostro a su enemigo, quedara el apaleado agraviado y afrentado juntamente: agraviado, porque le dieron a traición; afrentado, porque el que le dio sustentó lo que había hecho, sin volver las espaldas y a pie quedo. Y así, según las leyes del maldito duelo, yo puedo estar agraviado, mas no afrentado; porque los niños no sienten, ni las mujeres, ni pueden huir, ni tienen para qué esperar, y lo mismo los constituidos en la sacra religión, porque estos tres géneros de gente carecen de armas ofensivas y defensivas; y así, aunque naturalmente estén obligados a defenderse, no lo están para ofender a nadie. Y, aunque poco ha dije que yo podía estar agraviado, agora digo que no, en ninguna manera, porque quien no puede recibir afrenta, menos la puede dar; por las cuales razones yo no debo sentir, ni siento, las que aquel buen hombre me ha dicho; sólo quisiera que esperara algún poco, para darle a entender en el error en que está en pensar y decir que no ha habido, ni los hay, caballeros andantes en el mundo; que si lo tal oyera Amadís, o uno de los infinitos de su linaje, yo sé que no le fuera bien a su merced.

-Eso juro yo bien -dijo Sancho-: cuchillada le hubieran dado que le abrieran de arriba abajo como una granada, o como a un melón muy maduro. ¡Bonitos eran ellos para sufrir semejantes cosquillas! Para mi santiguada, que tengo por cierto que si Reinaldos de Montalbán hubiera oído estas razones al hombrecito, tapaboca le hubiera dado que no hablara más en tres años. ¡No, sino tomárase con ellos y viera cómo escapaba de sus manos!

Perecía de risa la duquesa en oyendo hablar a Sancho, y en su opinión le tenía por más gracioso y por más loco que a su amo; y muchos hubo en aquel tiempo que fueron deste mismo parecer. Finalmente, don Quijote se sosegó, y la comida se acabó, y, en levantando los manteles, llegaron cuatro doncellas, la una con una fuente de plata, y la otra con un aguamanil, asimismo de plata, y la otra con dos blanquísimas y riquísimas toallas al hombro, y la cuarta descubiertos los brazos hasta la mitad, y en sus blancas manos -que sin duda eran blancas-una redonda pella de jabón napolitano. Llegó la de la fuente, y con gentil donaire y desenvoltura encajó la fuente debajo de la barba de don Quijote; el cual, sin hablar palabra, admirado de semejante ceremonia, creyendo que debía ser usanza de aquella tierra en lugar de las manos lavar las barbas, y así tendió la suya todo cuanto pudo, y al mismo punto comenzó a llover el aguamanil, y la doncella del jabón le manoseó las barbas con mucha priesa, levantando copos de nieve, que no eran menos blancas las jabonaduras, no sólo por las barbas, mas por todo el rostro y por los ojos del obediente caballero, tanto, que se los hicieron cerrar por fuerza.

El duque y la duquesa, que de nada desto eran sabidores, estaban esperando en qué había de parar tan extraordinario lavatorio. La doncella barbera, cuando le tuvo con un palmo de jabonadura, fingió que se le había acabado el agua, y mandó a la del aguamanil fuese por ella, que el señor don Quijote esperaría. Hízolo así, y quedó don Quijote con la más estraña figura y más para hacer reír que se pudiera imaginar.

Mirábanle todos los que presentes estaban, que eran muchos, y como le veían con media vara de cuello, más que medianamente moreno, los ojos cerrados y las barbas llenas de jabón, fue gran maravilla y mucha discreción poder disimular la risa; las doncellas de la burla tenían los ojos bajos, sin osar mirar a sus señores; a ellos les retozaba la cólera y la risa en el cuerpo, y no sabían a qué acudir: o a castigar el atrevimiento de las muchachas, o darles premio por el gusto que recibían de ver a don Quijote de aquella suerte.

Finalmente, la doncella del aguamanil vino, y acabaron de lavar a don Quijote, y luego la que traía las toallas le limpió y le enjugó muy reposadamente; y, haciéndole todas cuatro a la par una grande y profunda inclinación y reverencia, se querían ir; pero el duque, porque don Quijote no cayese en la burla, llamó a la doncella de la fuente, diciéndole:

-Venid y lavadme a mí, y mirad que no se os acabe el agua.

La muchacha, aguda y diligente, llegó y puso la fuente al duque como a don Quijote, y, dándose prisa, le lavaron y jabonaron muy bien, y, dejándole enjuto y limpio, haciendo reverencias se fueron. Después se supo que había jurado el duque que si a él no le lavaran como a don Quijote, había de castigar su desenvoltura, lo cual habían enmendado discretamente con haberle a él jabonado.

Estaba atento Sancho a las ceremonias de aquel lavatorio, y dijo entre sí:

-¡Válame Dios! ¿Si será también usanza en esta tierra lavar las barbas a los escuderos como a los caballeros? Porque, en Dios y en mi ánima que lo he bien menester, y aun que si me las rapasen a navaja, lo tendría a más beneficio.

-¿Qué decís entre vos, Sancho? -preguntó la duquesa.

-Digo, señora -respondió él-, que en las cortes de los otros príncipes siempre he oído decir que en levantando los manteles dan agua a las manos, pero no lejía a las barbas; y que por eso es bueno vivir mucho, por ver mucho; aunque también dicen que el que larga vida vive mucho mal ha de pasar, puesto que pasar por un lavatorio de éstos antes es gusto que trabajo.

-No tengáis pena, amigo Sancho -dijo la duquesa-, que yo haré que mis doncellas os laven, y aun os metan en colada, si fuere menester.

-Con las barbas me contento -respondió Sancho-, por ahora a lo menos, que andando el tiempo, Dios dijo lo que será.

-Mirad, maestresala -dijo la duquesa-, lo que el buen Sancho pide, y cumplidle su voluntad al pie de la letra.

El maestresala respondió que en todo sería servido el señor Sancho, y con esto se fue a comer, y llevó consigo a Sancho, quedándose a la mesa los duques y don Quijote, hablando en muchas y diversas cosas; pero todas tocantes al ejercicio de las armas y de la andante caballería.

La duquesa rogó a don Quijote que le delinease y describiese, pues parecía tener felice memoria, la hermosura y facciones de la señora Dulcinea del Toboso; que, según lo que la famaregonaba de su belleza, tenía por entendido que debía de ser la más bella criatura del orbe, y aun de toda la Mancha. Sospiró don Quijote, oyendo lo que la duquesa le mandaba, y dijo:

-Si yo pudiera sacar mi corazón y ponerle ante los ojos de vuestra grandeza, aquí, sobre esta mesa y en un plato, quitara el trabajo a mi lengua de decir lo que apenas se puede pensar, porque Vuestra Excelencia la viera en él toda retratada; pero, ¿para qué es ponerme yo ahora a delinear y describir punto por punto y parte por parte la hermosura de la sin par Dulcinea, siendo carga digna de otros hombros que de los míos, empresa en quien se debían ocupar los pinceles de Parrasio, de Timantes y de Apeles, y los buriles de Lisipo, para pintarla y grabarla en tablas, en mármoles y en bronces, y la retórica ciceroniana y demostina para alabarla?

-¿Qué quiere decir demostina, señor don Quijote -preguntó la duquesa-, que es vocablo que no le he oído en todos los días de mi vida?

-Retórica demostina -respondió don Quijote-es lo mismo que decir retórica de Demóstenes, como ciceroniana, de Cicerón, que fueron los dos mayores retóricos del mundo.

-Así es -dijo el duque-, y habéis andado deslumbrada en la tal pregunta. Pero, con todo eso, nos daría gran gusto el señor don Quijote si nos la pintase; que a buen seguro que, aunque sea en rasguño y bosquejo, que ella salga tal, que la tengan envidia las más hermosas.

-Sí hiciera, por cierto -respondió don Quijote-, si no me la hubiera borrado de la idea la desgracia que poco ha que le sucedió, que es tal, que más estoy para llorarla que para describirla; porque habrán de saber vuestras grandezas que, yendo los días pasados a besarle las manos, y a recibir su bendición, beneplácito y licencia para esta tercera salida, hallé otra de la que buscaba: halléla encantada y convertida de princesa en labradora, de hermosa en fea, de ángel en diablo, de olorosa en pestífera, de bien hablada en rústica, de reposada en brincadora, de luz en tinieblas, y, finalmente, de Dulcinea del Toboso en una villana de Sayago.

-¡Válame Dios! -dando una gran voz, dijo a este instante el duque-. ¿Quién ha sido el que tanto mal ha hecho al mundo? ¿Quién ha quitado dél la belleza que le alegraba, el donaire que le entretenía y la honestidad que le acreditaba?

-¿Quién? -respondió don Quijote-. ¿Quién puede ser sino algún maligno encantador de los muchos invidiosos que me persiguen? Esta raza maldita, nacida en el mundo para escurecer y aniquilar las hazañas de los buenos, y para dar luz y levantar los fechos de los malos. Perseguido me han encantadores, encantadores me persiguen y encantadores me persiguirán hasta dar conmigo y con mis altas caballerías en el profundo abismo del olvido; y en aquella parte me dañan y hieren donde veen que más lo siento, porque quitarle a un caballero andante su dama es quitarle los ojos con que mira, y el sol con que se alumbra, y el sustento con que se mantiene. Otras muchas veces lo he dicho, y ahora lo vuelvo a decir: que el caballero andante sin dama es como el árbol sin hojas, el edificio sin cimiento y la sombra sin cuerpo de quien se cause.

-No hay más que decir -dijo la duquesa-; pero si, con todo eso, hemos de dar crédito a la historia que del señor don Quijote de pocos días a esta parte ha salido a la luz del mundo, con general aplauso de las gentes, della se colige, si mal no me acuerdo, que nunca vuesa merced ha visto a la señora Dulcinea, y que esta tal señora no es en el mundo, sino que es dama fantástica, que vuesa merced la engendró y parió en su entendimiento, y la pintó con todas aquellas gracias y perfecciones que quiso.

-En eso hay mucho que decir -respondió don Quijote-. Dios sabe si hay Dulcinea o no en el mundo, o si es fantástica o no es fantástica; y éstas no son de las cosas cuya averiguación se ha de llevar hasta el cabo. Ni yo engendré ni parí a mi señora, puesto que la contemplo como conviene que sea una dama que contenga en sí las partes que puedan hacerla famosa en todas las del mundo, como son: hermosa, sin tacha, grave sin soberbia, amorosa con honestidad, agradecida por cortés, cortés por bien criada, y, finalmente, alta por linaje, a causa que sobre la buena sangre resplandece y campea la hermosura con más grados de perfección que en las hermosas humildemente nacidas.

-Así es -dijo el duque-; pero hame de dar licencia el señor don Quijote para que diga lo que me fuerza a decir la historia que de sus hazañas he leído, de donde se infiere que, puesto que se conceda que hay Dulcinea, en el Toboso o fuera dél, y que sea hermosa en el sumo grado que vuesa merced nos la pinta, en lo de la alteza del linaje no corre parejas con las Orianas, con las Alastrajareas, con las Madásimas, ni con otras deste jaez, de quien están llenas las historias que vuesa merced bien sabe.

-A eso puedo decir -respondió don Quijote-que Dulcinea es hija de sus obras, y que las virtudes adoban la sangre, y que en más se ha de estimar y tener un humilde virtuoso que un vicioso levantado; cuanto más, que Dulcinea tiene un jirón que la puede llevar a ser reina de corona y ceptro; que el merecimiento de una mujer hermosa y virtuosa a hacer mayores milagros se estiende, y, aunque no formalmente, virtualmente tiene en sí encerradas mayores venturas.

-Digo, señor don Quijote -dijo la duquesa-, que en todo cuanto vuestra merced dice va con pie de plomo, y, como suele decirse, con la sonda en la mano; y que yo desde aquí adelante creeré y haré creer a todos los de mi casa, y aun al duque mi señor, si fuere menester, que hay Dulcinea en el Toboso, y que vive hoy día, y es hermosa, y principalmente nacida y merecedora que un tal caballero como es el señor don Quijote la sirva; que es lo más que puedo ni sé encarecer. Pero no puedo dejar de formar un escrúpulo, y tener algún no sé qué de ojeriza contra Sancho Panza: el escrúpulo es que dice la historia referida que el tal Sancho Panza halló a la tal señora Dulcinea, cuando de parte de vuestra merced le llevó una epístola, ahechando un costal de trigo, y, por más señas, dice que era rubión: cosa que me hace dudar en la alteza de su linaje.

A lo que respondió don Quijote:

-Señora mía, sabrá la vuestra grandeza que todas o las más cosas que a mí me suceden van fuera de los términos ordinarios de las que a los otros caballeros andantes acontecen, o ya sean encaminadas por el querer inescrutable de los hados, o ya vengan encaminadas por la malicia de algún encantador envidioso; y, como es cosa ya averiguada que todos o los más caballeros andantes y famosos, uno tenga gracia de no poder ser encantado, otro de ser de tan impenetrables carnes que no pueda ser herido, como lo fue el famoso Roldán, uno de los doce Pares de Francia, de quien se cuenta que no podía ser ferido sino por la planta del pie izquierdo, y que esto había de ser con la punta de un alfiler gordo, y no con otra suerte de arma alguna; y así, cuando Bernardo del Carpio le mató en Roncesvalles, viendo que no le podía llagar con fierro, le levantó del suelo entre los brazos y le ahogó, acordándose entonces de la muerte que dio Hércules a Anteón, aquel feroz gigante que decían ser hijo de la Tierra. Quiero inferir de lo dicho, que podría ser que yo tuviese alguna gracia destas, no del no poder ser ferido, porque muchas veces la experiencia me ha mostrado que soy de carnes blandas y no nada impenetrables, ni la de no poder ser encantado, que ya me he visto metido en una jaula, donde todo el mundo no fuera poderoso a encerrarme, si no fuera a fuerzas de encantamientos; pero, pues de aquél me libré, quiero creer que no ha de haber otro alguno que me empezca; y así, viendo estos encantadores que con mi persona no pueden usar de sus malas mañas, vénganse en las cosas que más quiero, y quieren quitarme la vida maltratando la de Dulcinea, por quien yo vivo; y así, creo que, cuando mi escudero le llevó mi embajada, se la convirtieron en villana y ocupada en tan bajo ejercicio como es el de ahechar trigo; pero ya tengo yo dicho que aquel trigo ni era rubión ni trigo, sino granos de perlas orientales; y para prueba desta verdad quiero decir a vuestras magnitudes cómo, viniendo poco ha por el Toboso, jamás pude hallar los palacios de Dulcinea; y que otro día, habiéndola visto Sancho, mi escudero, en su misma figura, que es la más bella del orbe, a mí me pareció una labradora tosca y fea, y no nada bien razonada, siendo la discreción del mundo; y, pues yo no estoy encantado, ni lo puedo estar, según buen discurso, ella es la encantada, la ofendida y la mudada, trocada y trastrocada, y en ella se han vengado de mí mis enemigos, y por ella viviré yo en perpetuas lágrimas, hasta verla en su prístino estado. Todo esto he dicho para que nadie repare en lo que Sancho dijo del cernido ni del ahecho de Dulcinea; que, pues a mí me la mudaron, no es maravilla que a él se la cambiasen. Dulcinea es principal y bien nacida, y de los hidalgos linajes que hay en el Toboso, que son muchos, antiguos y muy buenos, a buen seguro que no le cabe poca parte a la sin par Dulcinea, por quien su lugar será famoso y nombrado en los venideros siglos, como lo ha sido Troya por Elena, y España por la Cava, aunque con mejor título y fama. Por otra parte, quiero que entiendan vuestras señorías que Sancho Panza es uno de los más graciosos escuderos que jamás sirvió a caballero andante; tiene a veces unas simplicidades tan agudas, que el pensar si es simple o agudo causa no pequeño contento; tiene malicias que le condenan por bellaco, y descuidos que le confirman por bobo; duda de todo y créelo todo; cuando pienso que se va a despeñar de tonto, sale con unas discreciones, que le levantan al cielo. Finalmente, yo no le trocaría con otro escudero, aunque me diesen de añadidura una ciudad; y así, estoy en duda si será bien enviarle al gobierno de quien vuestra grandeza le ha hecho merced; aunque veo en él una cierta aptitud para esto de gobernar, que atusándole tantico el entendimiento, se saldría con cualquiera gobierno, como el rey con sus alcabalas; y más, que ya por muchas experiencias sabemos que no es menester ni mucha habilidad ni muchas letras para ser uno gobernador, pues hay por ahí ciento que apenas saber leer, y gobiernan como unos girifaltes; el toque está en que tengan buena intención y deseen acertar en todo; que nunca les faltará quien les aconseje y encamine en lo que han de hacer, como los gobernadores caballeros y no letrados, que sentencian con asesor. Aconsejaríale yo que ni tome cohecho, ni pierda derecho, y otras cosillas que me quedan en el estómago, que saldrán a su tiempo, para utilidad de Sancho y provecho de la ínsula que gobernaré.

A este punto llegaban de su coloquio el duque, la duquesa y don Quijote, cuando oyeron muchas voces y gran rumor de gente en el palacio; y a deshora entró Sancho en la sala, todo asustado, con un cernadero por babador, y tras él muchos mozos, o, por mejor decir, pícaros de cocina y otra gente menuda, y uno venía con un artesoncillo de agua, que en la color y poca limpieza mostraba ser de fregar; seguía y perseguía el de la artesa, y procuraba con toda solicitud ponérsela y encajársela debajo de las barbas, y otro pícaro mostraba querérselas lavar.

-¿Qué es esto, hermanos? -preguntó la duquesa-. ¿Qué es esto? ¿Qué queréis a ese buen hombre? ¿Cómo y no consideráis que está electo gobernador?

A lo que respondió el pícaro barbero:

-No quiere este señor dejarse lavar, como es usanza, y como se la lavó el duque mi señor y el señor su amo.

-Sí quiero -respondió Sancho con mucha cólera-, pero querría que fuese con toallas más limpias, con lejía mas clara y con manos no tan sucias; que no hay tanta diferencia de mí a mi amo, que a él le laven con agua de ángeles y a mí con lejía de diablos. Las usanzas de las tierras y de los palacios de los príncipes tanto son buenas cuanto no dan pesadumbre, pero la costumbre del lavatorio que aquí se usa peor es que de diciplinantes. Yo estoy limpio de barbas y no tengo necesidad de semejantes refrigerios; y el que se llegare a lavarme ni a tocarme a un pelo de la cabeza, digo, de mi barba, hablando con el debido acatamiento, le daré tal puñada que le deje el puño engastado en los cascos; que estas tales ceremonias y jabonaduras más parecen burlas que gasajos de huéspedes.

Perecida de risa estaba la duquesa, viendo la cólera y oyendo las razones de Sancho, pero no dio mucho gusto a don Quijote verle tan mal adeliñado con la jaspeada toalla, y tan rodeado de tantos entretenidos de cocina; y así, haciendo una profunda reverencia a los duques, como que les pedía licencia para hablar, con voz reposada dijo a la canalla:

-¡Hola, señores caballeros! Vuestas mercedes dejen al mancebo, y vuélvanse por donde vinieron, o por otra parte si se les antojare, que mi escudero es limpio tanto como otro, y esas artesillas son para él estrechas y penantes búcaros.

Tomen mi consejo y déjenle, porque ni él ni yo sabemos de achaque de burlas.

Cogióle la razón de la boca Sancho, y prosiguió diciendo:

-¡No, sino lléguese a hacer burla del mostrenco, que así lo sufriré como ahora es de noche! Traigan aquí un peine, o lo que quisieren, y almohácenme estas barbas, y si sacaren dellas cosa que ofenda a la limpieza, que me trasquilen a cruces.

A esta sazón, sin dejar la risa, dijo la duquesa:

-Sancho Panza tiene razón en todo cuanto ha dicho, y la tendrá en todo cuanto dijere: él es limpio, y, como él dice, no tiene necesidad de lavarse; y si nuestra usanza no le contenta, su alma en su palma, cuanto más, que vosotros, ministros de la limpieza, habéis andado demasiadamente de remisos y descuidados, y no sé si diga atrevidos, a traer a tal personaje y a tales barbas, en lugar de fuentes y aguamaniles de oro puro y de alemanas toallas, artesillas y dornajos de palo y rodillas de aparadores. Pero, en fin, sois malos y mal nacidos, y no podéis dejar, como malandrines que sois, de mostrar la ojeriza que tenéis con los escuderos de los andantes caballeros.

Creyeron los apicarados ministros, y aun el maestresala, que venía con ellos, que la duquesa hablaba de veras; y así, quitaron el cernadero del pecho de Sancho, y todos confusos y casi corridos se fueron y le dejaron; el cual, viéndose fuera de aquel, a su parecer, sumo peligro, se fue a hincar de rodillas ante la duquesa y dijo:

-De grandes señoras, grandes mercedes se esperan; esta que la vuestra merced hoy me ha fecho no puede pagarse con menos, si no es con desear verme armado caballero andante, para ocuparme todos los días de mi vida en servir a tan alta señora. Labrador soy, Sancho Panza me llamo, casado soy, hijos tengo y de escudero sirvo: si con alguna destas cosas puedo servir a vuestra grandeza, menos tardaré yo en obedecer que vuestra señoría en mandar.

-Bien parece, Sancho -respondió la duquesa-, que habéis aprendido a ser cortés en la escuela de la misma cortesía; bien parece, quiero decir, que os habéis criado a los pechos del señor don Quijote, que debe de ser la nata de los comedimientos y la flor de las ceremonias, o cirimonias, como vos decís. Bien haya tal señor y tal criado: el uno, por norte de la andante caballería; y el otro, por estrella de la escuderil fidelidad. Levantaos, Sancho amigo, que yo satisfaré vuestras cortesías con hacer que el duque mi señor, lo más presto que pudiere, os cumpla la merced prometida del gobierno.

Con esto cesó la plática, y don Quijote se fue a reposar la siesta, y la duquesa pidió a Sancho que, si no tenía mucha gana de dormir, viniese a pasar la tarde con ella y con sus doncellas en una muy fresca sala. Sancho respondió que, aunque era verdad que tenía por costumbre dormir cuatro o cinco horas las siestas del verano, que, por servir a su bondad, él procuraría con todas sus fuerzas no dormir aquel día ninguna, y vendría obediente a su mandado, y fuese. El duque dio nuevas órdenes como se tratase a don Quijote como a caballero andante, sin salir un punto del estilo como cuentan que se trataban los antiguos caballeros.

Capítulo XXXIII

De la sabrosa plática que la duquesa y sus doncellas pasaron con Sancho Panza, digna de que se lea y de que se note

CUENTA, pues, la historia, que Sancho no durmió aquella siesta, sino que, por cumplir su palabra, vino en comiendo a ver a la duquesa; la cual, con el gusto que tenía de oírle, le hizo sentar junto a sí en una silla baja, aunque Sancho, de puro bien criado, no quería sentarse; pero la duquesa le dijo que se sentase como gobernador y hablase como escudero, puesto que por entrambas cosas merecía el mismo escaño del Cid Ruy Díaz Campeador.

Encogió Sancho los hombros, obedeció y sentóse, y todas las doncellas y dueñas de la duquesa la rodearon, atentas, con grandísimo silencio, a escuchar lo que diría; pero la duquesa fue la que habló primero, diciendo:

-Ahora que estamos solos, y que aquí no nos oye nadie, querría yo que el señor gobernador me asolviese ciertas dudas que tengo, nacidas de la historia que del gran don Quijote anda ya impresa; una de las cuales dudas es que, pues el buen Sancho nunca vio a Dulcinea, digo, a la señora Dulcinea del Toboso, ni le llevó la carta del señor don Quijote, porque se quedó en el libro de memoria en Sierra Morena, cómo se atrevió a fingir la respuesta, y aquello de que la halló ahechando trigo, siendo todo burla y mentira, y tan en daño de la buena opinión de la sin par Dulcinea, y todas que no vienen bien con la calidad y fidelidad de los buenos escuderos.

A estas razones, sin responder con alguna, se levantó Sancho de la silla, y, con pasos quedos, el cuerpo agobiado y el dedo puesto sobre los labios, anduvo por toda la sala levantando los doseles; y luego, esto hecho, se volvió a sentar y dijo:

-Ahora, señora mía, que he visto que no nos escucha nadie de solapa, fuera de los circunstantes, sin temor ni sobresalto responderé a lo que se me ha preguntado, y a todo aquello que se me preguntare; y lo primero que digo es que yo tengo a mi señor don Quijote por loco rematado, puesto que algunas veces dice cosas que, a mi parecer, y aun de todos aquellos que le escuchan, son tan discretas y por tan buen carril encaminadas, que el mismo Satanás no las podría decir mejores; pero, con todo esto, verdaderamente y sin escrúpulo, a mí se me ha asentado que es un mentecato. Pues, como yo tengo esto en el magín, me atrevo a hacerle creer lo que no lleva pies ni cabeza, como fue aquello de la respuesta de la carta, y lo de habrá seis o ocho días, que aún no está en historia;

conviene a saber: lo del encanto de mi señora doña Dulcinea, que le he dado a entender que está encantada, no siendo más verdad que por los cerros de Úbeda.

Rogóle la duquesa que le contase aquel encantamento o burla, y Sancho se lo contó todo del mismo modo que había pasado, de que no poco gusto recibieron los oyentes; y, prosiguiendo en su plática, dijo la duquesa:

-De lo que el buen Sancho me ha contado me anda brincando un escrúpulo en el alma y un cierto susurro llega a mis oídos, que me dice: «Pues don Quijote de la Mancha es loco, menguado y mentecato, y Sancho Panza su escudero lo conoce, y, con todo eso, le sirve y le sigue y va atendido a las vanas promesas tuyas, sin duda alguna debe de ser él más loco y tonto que su amo; y, siendo esto así, como lo es, mal contado te será, señora duquesa, si al tal Sancho Panza le das ínsula que gobierne, porque el que no sabe gobernarse a sí, ¿cómo sabrá gobernar a otros?»

-Par Dios, señora -dijo Sancho-, que ese escrúpulo viene con parto derecho; pero dígame vuesa merced que hable claro, o como quisiere, que yo conozco que dice verdad: que si yo fuera discreto, días ha que había de haber dejado a mi amo. Pero ésta fue mi suerte, y ésta mi malandanza; no puedo más, seguirle tengo: somos de un mismo lugar, he comido su pan, quiérole bien, es agradecido, diome sus pollinos, y, sobre todo, yo soy fiel; y así, es imposible que nos pueda apartar otro suceso que el de la pala y azadón. Y si vuestra altanería no quisiere que se me dé el prometido gobierno, de menos me hizo Dios, y podría ser que el no dármele redundase en pro de mi conciencia; que, maguera tonto, se me entiende aquel refrán de «por su mal le nacieron alas a la hormiga»; y aun podría ser que se fuese más aína Sancho escudero al cielo, que no Sancho gobernador. Tan buen pan hacen aquí como en Francia; y de noche todos los gatos son pardos, y asaz de desdichada es la persona que a las dos de la tarde no se ha desayunado; y no hay estómago que sea un palmo mayor que otro, el cual se puede llenar, como suele decirse, de paja y de heno; y las avechitas del campo tienen a Dios por su proveedor y dispensero; y más calientan cuatro varas de paño de Cuenca que otras cuatro de límiste de Segovia; y al dejar este mundo y meternos la tierra adentro, por tan estrecha senda va el príncipe como el jornalero, y no ocupa más pies de tierra el cuerpo del Papa que el del sacristán, aunque sea más alto el uno que el otro; que al entrar en el hoyo todos nos ajustamos y encogemos, o nos hacen ajustar y encoger, mal que nos pese y a buenas noches. Y torno a decir que si vuestra señoría no me quisiere dar la ínsula por tonto, yo sabré no dárseme nada por discreto; y yo he oído decir que detrás de la cruz está el diablo, y que no es oro todo lo que reluce, y que de entre los bueyes, arados y coyundas sacaron al labrador Wamba para ser rey de España, y de entre los brocados, pasatiempos y riquezas sacaron a Rodrigo para ser comido de culebras, si es que las trovas de los romances antiguos no mienten.

-Y ¡cómo que no mienten! -dijo a esta sazón doña Rodríguez la dueña, que era una de las escuchantes-: que un romance hay que dice que metieron al rey Rodrigo, vivo vivo, en una tumba llena de sapos, culebras y lagartos, y que de allí a dos días dijo el rey desde dentro de la tumba, con voz doliente y baja:

Ya me comen, ya me comen
por do más pecado había;

y, según esto, mucha razón tiene este señor en decir que quiere más ser más labrador que rey, si le han de comer sabandijas.

No pudo la duquesa tener la risa, oyendo la simplicidad de su dueña, ni dejó de admirarse en oír las razones y refranes de Sancho, a quien dijo:

-Ya sabe el buen Sancho que lo que una vez promete un caballero procura cumplirlo, aunque le cueste la vida. El duque, mi señor y marido, aunque no es de los andantes, no por eso deja de ser caballero, y así, cumplirá la palabra de la prometida ínsula, a pesar de la envidia y de la malicia del mundo. Está Sancho de buen ánimo, que cuando menos lo piense se verá sentado en la silla de su ínsula y en la de su estado, y empuñará su gobierno, que con otro de brocado de tres altos lo deseche. Lo que yo le encargo es que mire cómo gobierna sus vasallos, advirtiéndole que todos son leales y bien nacidos.

-Eso de gobernarlos bien -respondió Sancho-no hay para qué encargármelo, porque yo soy caritativo de mío y tengo compasión de los pobres; y a quien cuece y amasa, no le hurtes hogaza; y para mi santiguada que no me han de echar dado falso; soy perro viejo, y entiendo todo tus, tus, y sé despabilarme a sus tiempos, y no consiento que me anden musarañas ante los ojos, porque sé dónde me aprieta el zapato: dígoles porque los buenos tendrán conmigo mano y concavidad, y los malos, ni pie ni entrada. Y paréceme a mí que en esto de los gobiernos todo es comenzar, y podría ser que a quince días de gobernador me comiese las manos tras el oficio y supiese más dél que de la labor del campo, en que me he criado.

-Vos tenéis razón razón, Sancho -dijo la duquesa-, que nadie nace enseñado, y de los hombres se hacen los obispos, que no de las piedras. Pero, volviendo a la plática que poco ha tratábamos del encanto de la señora Dulcinea, tengo por cosa cierta y más que averiguada que aquella imaginación que Sancho tuvo de burlar a su señor y darle a entender que la labradora era Dulcinea, y que si su señor no la conocía debía de ser por estar encantada, toda fue invención de alguno de los encantadores que al señor don Quijote persiguen; porque real y verdaderamente yo sé de buena parte que la villana que dio el brinco sobre la pollina era y es Dulcinea del Toboso, y que el buen Sancho, pensando ser el engañador, es el engañado; y no hay poner más duda en esta verdad que en las cosas que nunca vimos; y sepa el señor Sancho Panza que también tenemos acá encantadores que nos quieren bien, y nos dicen lo que pasa por el mundo, pura y sencillamente, sin enredos ni máquinas; y créame Sancho que la villana brincadora era y es Dulcinea del Toboso, que está encantada como la madre que la parió; y cuando menos nos pensemos, la habemos de ver en su propia figura, y entonces saldrá Sancho del engaño en que vive.

-Bien puede ser todo eso -dijo Sancho Panza-; y agora quiero creer lo que mi amo cuenta de lo que vio en la cueva de Montesinos, donde dice que vio a la señora Dulcinea del Toboso en el mismo traje y hábito que yo dije que la había visto cuando la encanté por solo mi gusto; y todo debió de ser al revés, como vuesa merced, señora mía, dice, porque de mi ruin ingenio no se puede ni debe presumir que fabricase en un instante tan agudo embuste, ni creo yo que mi amo es tan loco que con tan flaca y magra persuasión como la mía creyese una cosa tan fuera de todo término. Pero, señora, no por esto será bien que vuestra bondad me tenga por malévolo, pues no está obligado un porro como yo a taladrar los pensamientos y malicias de los pésimos encantadores: yo fingí aquello por escaparme de las riñas de mi señor don Quijote, y no con intención de ofenderle; y si ha salido al revés, Dios está en el cielo, que juzga los corazones.

-Así es la verdad -dijo la duquesa-; pero dígame agora, Sancho, qué es esto que dice de la cueva de Montesinos, que gustaría saberlo.

Entonces Sancho Panza le contó punto por punto lo que queda dicho acerca de la tal aventura. Oyendo lo cual la duquesa, dijo:

-Deste suceso se puede inferir que, pues el gran don Quijote dice que vio allí a la misma labradora que Sancho vio a la salida del Toboso, sin duda es Dulcinea, y que andan por aquí los encantadores muy listos y demasiadamente curiosos.

-Eso digo yo -dijo Sancho Panza-, que si mi señora Dulcinea del Toboso está encantada, su daño; que yo no me tengo de tomar, yo, con los enemigos de mi amo, que deben de ser muchos y malos. Verdad sea que la que yo vi fue una labradora, y por labradora la tuve, y por tal labradora la juzgué; y si aquélla era Dulcinea, no ha de estar a mi cuenta, ni ha de correr por mí, o sobre ello, morena. No, sino ándense a cada triquete conmigo a dime y direte, «Sancho lo dijo, Sancho lo hizo, Sancho tornó y Sancho volvió», como si Sancho fuese algún quienquiera, y no fuese el mismo Sancho Panza, el que anda ya en libros por ese mundo adelante, según me dijo Sansón Carrasco, que, por lo menos, es persona bachillerada por Salamanca, y los tales no pueden mentir si no es cuando se les antoja o les viene muy a cuento; así que, no hay para qué nadie se tome conmigo, y pues que tengo buena fama, y, según oí decir a mi señor, que más vale el buen nombre que las muchas riquezas, encájense ese gobierno y verán maravillas; que quien ha sido buen escudero será buen gobernador.

-Todo cuanto aquí ha dicho el buen Sancho -dijo la duquesa-son sentencias catonianas, o, por lo menos, sacadas de las mismas entrañas del mismo Micael Verino, florentibus occidit annis. En fin, en fin, hablando a su modo, debajo de mala capa suele haber buen bebedor.

-En verdad, señora -respondió Sancho-, que en mi vida he bebido de malicia; con sed bien podría ser, porque no tengo nada de hipócrita: bebo cuando tengo gana, y cuando no la tengo y cuando me lo dan, por no parecer o melindroso o malcriado; que a un brindis de un amigo, ¿qué corazón ha de haber tan de mármol que no haga la razón? Pero, aunque las calzo, no las ensucio; cuanto más, que los escuderos de los caballeros andantes, casi de ordinario beben agua, porque siempre andan por florestas, selvas y prados, montañas y riscos, sin hallar una misericordia de vino, si dan por ella un ojo.

-Yo lo creo así -respondió la duquesa-. Y por ahora, váyase Sancho a reposar, que después hablaremos más largo y daremos orden como vaya presto a encajarse, como él dice, aquel gobierno.

De nuevo le besó las manos Sancho a la duquesa, y le suplicó le hiciese merced de que se tuviese buena cuenta con su rucio, porque era la lumbrera de sus ojos.

-¿Qué rucio es éste? -preguntó la duquesa.

-Mi asno -respondió Sancho-, que por no nombrarle con este nombre, le suelo llamar el rucio; y a esta señora dueña le rogué, cuando entré en este castillo, tuviese cuenta con él, y azoróse de manera como si la hubiera dicho que era fea o vieja, debiendo ser más propio y natural de las dueñas pensar jumentos que autorizar las salas. ¡Oh, váleme Dios, y cuán mal estaba con estas señoras un hidalgo de mi lugar!

-Sería algún villano -dijo doña Rodríguez, la dueña-, que si él fuera hidalgo y bien nacido, él las pusiera sobre el cuerno de la luna.

-Agora bien -dijo la duquesa-, no haya más: calle doña Rodríguez y sositéguese el señor Panza, y quédese a mi cargo el regalo del rucio; que, por ser alhaja de Sancho, le pondré yo sobre las niñas de mis ojos.

-En la caballeriza basta que esté -respondió Sancho-, que sobre las niñas de los ojos de vuestra grandeza ni él ni yo somos dignos de estar sólo un momento, y así lo consintiría yo como darme de puñaladas; que, aunque dice mi señor que en las cortesías antes se ha de perder por carta de más que de menos, en las jumentiles y así niñas se ha de ir con el compás en la mano y con medido término.

-Llévele -dijo la duquesa-Sancho al gobierno, y allá le podrá regalar como quisiere, y aun jubilarle del trabajo.

-No piense vuesa merced, señora duquesa, que ha dicho mucho -dijo Sancho-; que yo he visto ir más de dos asnos a los gobiernos, y que llevase yo el mío no sería cosa nueva.

Las razones de Sancho renovaron en la duquesa la risa y el contento; y, enviándole a reposar, ella fue a dar cuenta al duque de lo que con él había pasado, y entre los dos dieron traza y orden de hacer una burla a don Quijote que fuese famosa y viniese bien con el estilo caballeresco, en el cual le hicieron muchas, tan propias y discretas, que son las mejores aventuras que en esta grande historia se contienen.

Capítulo XXXIV

Que cuenta de la noticia que se tuvo de cómo se había de desencantar la sin par Dulcinea del Toboso, que es una de las aventuras más famosas deste libro

GRANDE era el gusto que recibían el duque y la duquesa de la conversación de don Quijote y de la de Sancho Panza; y, confirmándose en la intención que tenían de hacerles algunas burlas que llevasen vislumbres y apariencias de aventuras, tomaron motivo de la que don Quijote ya les había contado de la cueva de Montesinos, para hacerle una que fuese famosa (pero de lo que más la duquesa se admiraba era que la simplicidad de Sancho fuese tanta que hubiese venido a creer ser verdad infalible que Dulcinea del Toboso estuviese encantada, habiendo sido él mismo el encantador y el embustero de aquel negocio); y así, habiendo dado orden a sus criados de todo lo que habían de hacer, de allí a seis días le llevaron a caza de montería, con tanto aparato de monteros y cazadores como pudiera llevar un rey coronado. Diéronle a don Quijote un vestido de monte y a Sancho otro verde, de finísimo paño; pero don Quijote no se le quiso poner, diciendo que otro día había de volver al duro ejercicio de las armas y que no podía llevar consigo guardarropas ni reposterías. Sancho sí tomó el que le dieron, con intención de venderle en la primera ocasión que pudiese.

Llegado, pues, el esperado día, armóse don Quijote, vistióse Sancho, y, encima de su rucio, que no le quiso dejar aunque le daban un caballo, se metió entre la tropa de los monteros. La duquesa salió bizarramente aderezada, y don Quijote, de puro cortés y comedido, tomó la rienda de su palafrén, aunque el duque no quería consentirlo, y, finalmente, llegaron a un bosque que entre dos altísimas montañas estaba, donde, tomados los puestos, paranzas y veredas, y repartida la gente por diferentes puestos, se comenzó la caza con grande estruendo, grita y vocería, de manera que unos a otros no podían oírse, así por el ladrido de los perros como por el son de las bocinas.

Apeóse la duquesa, y, con un agudo venablo en las manos, se puso en un puesto por donde ella sabía que solían venir algunos jabalíes. Apeóse asimismo el duque y don Quijote, y pusiéronse a sus lados; Sancho se puso detrás de todos, sin apearse del rucio, a quien no osara desamparar, porque no le sucediese algún desmán. Y, apenas habían sentado el pie y puesto en ala con otros muchos criados suyos, cuando, acosado de los perros y seguido de los cazadores, vieron que hacia ellos venía un desmesurado jabalí, crujiendo dientes y colmillos y arrojando espuma por la boca; y en viéndole, embrazando su escudo y puesta mano a su espada, se adelantó a recibirle don Quijote. Lo mismo hizo el duque con su venablo; pero a todos se adelantara la duquesa, si el duque no se lo estorbara. Sólo Sancho, en viendo al valiente animal, desamparó al rucio y dio a correr cuanto pudo, y, procurando subirse sobre una alta encina, no fue posible; antes, estando ya a la mitad dél, asido de una rama, pugnando subir a la cima, fue tan corto de ventura y tan desgraciado, que se desgajó la rama, y, al venir al suelo, se quedó en el aire, asido de un gancho de la encina, sin poder llegar al suelo. Y, viéndose así, y que el sayo verde se le rasgaba, y pareciéndole que si aquel fiero animal allí allegaba le podía alcanzar, comenzó a dar tantos gritos y a pedir socorro con tanto ahínco, que todos los que le oían y no le veían creyeron que estaba entre los dientes de alguna fiera.

Finalmente, el colmilludo jabalí quedó atravesado de las cuchillas de muchos venablos que se le pusieron delante; y, volviendo la cabeza don Quijote a los gritos de Sancho, que ya por ellos le había conocido, vio pendiente de la encina y la cabeza abajo, y al rucio junto a él, que no le desamparó en su calamidad; y dice Cide Hamete que pocas veces vio a Sancho Panza sin ver al rucio, ni al rucio sin ver a Sancho: tal era la amistad y buena fe que entre los dos se guardaban.

Llegó don Quijote y descolgó a Sancho; el cual, viéndose libre y en el suelo, miró lo desgarrado del sayo de monte, y pesóle en el alma; que pensó que tenía en el vestido un mayorazgo. En esto, atravesaron al jabalí poderoso sobre una acémila, y, cubriéndole con matas de romero y con ramas de mirto, le llevaron, como en señal de vitoriosos despojos, a unas grandes tiendas de campaña que en la mitad del bosque estaban puestas, donde hallaron las mesas en orden y la comida aderezada, tan sumptuosa y grande, que se echaba bien de ver en ella la grandeza y magnificencia de quien la daba. Sancho, mostrando las llagas a la duquesa de su roto vestido, dijo:

-Si esta caza fuera de liebres o de pajarillos, seguro estuviera mi sayo de verse en este extremo. Yo no sé qué gusto se recibe de esperar a un animal que, si os alcanza con un colmillo, os puede quitar la vida; yo me acuerdo haber oído cantar un romance antiguo que dice:

De los osos seas comido, como Favila el nombrado.

-Ése fue un rey godo -dijo don Quijote-, que, yendo a caza de montería, le comió un oso.

-Eso es lo que yo digo -respondió Sancho-: que no querría yo que los príncipes y los reyes se pusiesen en semejantes peligros, a trueco de un gusto que parece que no le había de ser, pues consiste en matar a un animal que no ha cometido delito alguno.

-Antes os engañáis, Sancho -respondió el duque-, porque el ejercicio de la caza de monte es el más conveniente y necesario para los reyes y príncipes que otro alguno. La caza es una imagen de la guerra: hay en ella estratagemas, astucias, insidias para vencer a su salvo al enemigo; padécense en ella fríos grandísimos y calores intolerables; menoscábase el ocio y el sueño, corrobóranse las fuerzas, agilitanse los miembros del que la usa, y, en resolución, es ejercicio que se puede hacer sin perjuicio de nadie y con gusto de muchos; y lo mejor que él tiene es que no es para todos, como lo es el de los otros géneros de caza, excepto el de la volatería, que también es sólo para reyes y grandes señores. Así que, ¡oh Sancho!, mudad de opinión, y, cuando seáis gobernador, ocupaos en la caza y veréis como os vale un pan por ciento.

-Eso no -respondió Sancho-: el buen gobernador, la pierna quebrada y en casa. ¡Bueno sería que viniesen los negociantes a buscarle fatigados y él estuviese en el monte holgándose! ¡Así enhoramala andaría el gobierno! Mía fe, señor, la caza y los pasatiempos más han de ser para los holgazanes que para los gobernadores. En lo que yo pienso entretenerme es en jugar al triunfo envidado las pascuas, y a los bolos los domingos y fiestas; que esas cazas ni cazos no dicen con mi condición ni hacen con mi conciencia.

-Plega a Dios, Sancho, que así sea, porque del dicho al hecho hay gran trecho.

-Haya lo que hubiere -replicó Sancho-, que al buen pagador no le duelen prendas, y más vale al que Dios ayuda que al que mucho madruga, y tripas llevan pies, que no pies a tripas; quiero decir que si Dios me ayuda, y yo hago lo que debo con buena intención, sin duda que gobernaré mejor que un gerifalte. ¡No, sino pónganme el dedo en la boca y verán si aprieto o no!

-¡Maldito seas de Dios y de todos sus santos, Sancho maldito -dijo don Quijote-, y cuándo será el día, como otras muchas veces he dicho, donde yo te vea hablar sin refranes una razón corriente y concertada! Vuestras grandezas dejen a este tonto, señores míos, que les molera las almas, no sólo puestas entre dos, sino entre dos mil refranes, traídos tan a sazón y tan a tiempo cuanto le dé Dios a él la salud, o a mí si los querría escuchar.

-Los refranes de Sancho Panza -dijo la duquesa-, puesto que son más que los del Comendador Griego, no por eso son en menos de estimar, por la brevedad de las sentencias. De mí sé decir que me dan más gusto que otros, aunque sean mejor traídos y con más sazón acomodados.

Con estos y otros entretenidos razonamientos, salieron de la tienda al bosque, y en requerir algunas paranzas, y presto, se les pasó el día y se les vino la noche, y no tan clara ni tan sesga como la sazón del tiempo pedía, que era en la mitad del verano; pero un cierto claroescuro que trujo consigo ayudó mucho a la intención de los duques; y, así como comenzó a anochecer, un poco más adelante del crepúsculo, a deshora pareció que todo el bosque por todas cuatro partes se ardía, y luego se oyeron por aquí y por allí, y por acá y por acullá, infinitas cornetas y otros instrumentos de guerra, como de muchas tropas de caballería que por el bosque pasaba. La luz del fuego, el son de los bélicos instrumentos, casi cegaron y atronaron los ojos y los oídos de los circunstantes, y aun de todos los que en el bosque estaban. Luego se oyeron infinitos lelilíes, al uso de moros cuando entran en las batallas, sonaron trompetas y clarines, retumbaron tambores, resonaron pífaros, casi todos a un tiempo, tan contino y tan apriesa, que no tuviera sentido el que no quedara sin él al son confuso de tantos instrumentos. Pasmóse el duque, suspendióse la duquesa, admiróse don Quijote, tembló Sancho Panza, y, finalmente, aun hasta los mismos sabidores de la causa se espantaron. Con el temor les cogió el silencio, y un postillón que en traje de demonio les pasó por delante, tocando en voz de corneta un hueco y desmesurado cuerno, que un ronco y espantoso son despedía.

-¡Hola, hermano correo! -dijo el duque-, ¿quién sois, adónde vais, y qué gente de guerra es la que por este bosque parece que atraviesa?

A lo que respondió el correo con voz horrisona y desenfadada:

-Yo soy el Diablo; voy a buscar a don Quijote de la Mancha; la gente que por aquí viene son seis tropas de encantadores, que sobre un carro triunfante traen a la sin par Dulcinea del Toboso. Encantada viene con el gallardo francés Montesinos, a dar orden a don Quijote de cómo ha de ser desencantada la tal señora.

-Si vos fuéades diablo, como decís y como vuestra figura muestra, ya hubiérades conocido al tal caballero don Quijote de la Mancha, pues le tenéis delante.

-En Dios y en mi conciencia -respondió el Diablo-que no miraba en ello, porque traigo en tantas cosas divertidos los pensamientos, que de la principal a que venía se me olvidaba.

-Sin duda -dijo Sancho-que este demonio debe de ser hombre de bien y buen cristiano, porque, a no serlo, no jurara en Dios y en mi conciencia. Ahora yo tengo para mí que aun en el mismo infierno debe de haber buena gente.

Luego el Demonio, sin apear, encaminando la vista a don Quijote, dijo:

-A ti, el Caballero de los Leones (que entre las garras dellos te vea yo), me envía el desgraciado pero valiente caballero Montesinos, mandándome que de su parte te diga que le esperes en el mismo lugar que te topare, a causa que trae consigo a la que llaman Dulcinea del Toboso, con orden de darte la que es menester para desencantarla. Y, por no ser para más mi venida, no ha de ser más mi estada: los demonios como yo queden contigo, y los ángeles buenos con estos señores.

Y, en diciendo esto, tocó el desaforado cuerno, y volvió las espaldas y fuese, sin esperar respuesta de ninguno.

Renovóse la admiración en todos, especialmente en Sancho y don Quijote: en Sancho, en ver que, a despecho de la verdad, querían que estuviese encantada Dulcinea; en don Quijote, por no poder asegurarse si era verdad o no lo que le había pasado en la cueva de Montesinos. Y, estando elevado en estos pensamientos, el duque le dijo:

-¿Piensa vuestra merced esperar, señor don Quijote?

-Pues ¿no? -respondió él-. Aquí esperaré intrépido y fuerte, si me viniese a embestir todo el infierno.

-Pues si yo veo otro diablo y oigo otro cuerno como el pasado, así esperaré yo aquí como en Flandes -dijo Sancho.

En esto, se cerró más la noche, y comenzaron a discurrir muchas luces por el bosque, bien así como discurren por el cielo las exhalaciones secas de la tierra, que parecen a nuestra vista estrellas que corren. Oyóse asimismo un espantoso ruido, al modo de aquel que se causa de las ruedas macizas que suelen traer los carros de bueyes, de cuyo chirrío áspero y continuado se dice que huyen los lobos y los osos, si los hay por donde pasan. Añadióse a toda esta tempestad otra que las aumentó todas, que fue que parecía verdaderamente que a las cuatro partes del bosque se estaban dando a un mismo tiempo cuatro rencuentros o batallas, porque allí sonaba el duro estruendo de espantosa artillería, acullá se disparaban infinitas escopetas, cerca casi sonaban las voces de los combatientes, lejos se reiteraban los lililíes agarenos.

Finalmente, las cornetas, los cuernos, las bocinas, los clarines, las trompetas, los tambores, la artillería, los arcabuces, y, sobre todo, el temeroso ruido de los carros, formaban todos juntos un son tan confuso y tan horrendo, que fue menester que don Quijote se valiese de todo su corazón para sufrirle; pero el de Sancho vino a tierra, y dio con él desmayado en las faldas de la duquesa, la cual le recibió en ellas, y a gran prisa mandó que le echasen agua en el rostro. Hízose así, y él volvió en su acuerdo, a tiempo que ya un carro de las rechinantes ruedas llegaba a aquel puesto.

Tirábanle cuatro perezosos bueyes, todos cubiertos de paramentos negros; en cada cuerno traían atada y encendida una grande hacha de cera, y encima del carro venía hecho un asiento alto, sobre el cual venía sentado un venerable viejo, con una barba más blanca que la misma nieve, y tan luenga que le pasaba de la cintura; su vestidura era una ropa larga de negro bocací, que, por venir el carro lleno de infinitas luces, se podía bien divisar y discernir todo lo que en él venía. Guiábanle dos feos demonios vestidos del mismo bocací, con tan feos rostros, que Sancho, habiéndolos visto una vez, cerró los ojos por no verlos otra. Llegando, pues, el carro a igualar al puesto, se levantó de su alto asiento el viejo venerable, y, puesto en pie, dando una gran voz, dijo:

-Yo soy el sabio Lirgandeo.

Y pasó el carro adelante, sin hablar más palabra. Tras éste pasó otro carro de la misma manera, con otro viejo entronizado; el cual, haciendo que el carro se detuviese, con voz no menos grave que el otro, dijo:

-Yo soy el sabio Alquife, el grande amigo de Urganda la Desconocida.

Y pasó adelante.

Luego, por el mismo continente, llegó otro carro; pero el que venía sentado en el trono no era viejo como los demás, sino hombrón robusto y de mala catadura, el cual, al llegar, levantándose en pie, como los otros, dijo con voz más ronca y más endiablada:

-Yo soy Arcaláus el encantador, enemigo mortal de Amadís de Gaula y de toda su parentela.

Y pasó adelante. Poco desviados de allí hicieron alto estos tres carros, y cesó el enfadoso ruido de sus ruedas, y luego se oyó otro, no ruido, sino un son de una suave y concertada música formado, con que Sancho se alegró, y lo tuvo a buena señal; y así, dijo a la duquesa, de quien un punto ni un paso se apartaba:

-Señora, donde hay música no puede haber cosa mala.

-Tampoco donde hay luces y claridad -respondió la duquesa.

A lo que replicó Sancho:

-Luz da el fuego y claridad las hogueras, como lo vemos en las que nos cercan, y bien podría ser que nos abrasasen, pero la música siempre es indicio de regocijos y de fiestas.

-Ello dirá -dijo don Quijote, que todo lo escuchaba.

Y dijo bien, como se muestra en el capítulo siguiente.

Capítulo XXXV

Donde se prosigue la noticia que tuvo don Quijote del desencanto de Dulcinea, con otros admirables sucesos

AL COMPÁS de la agradable música vieron que hacia ellos venía un carro de los que llaman triunfales tirado de seis mulas pardas, encubiertas, empero, de lienzo blanco, y sobre cada una venía un diciplinante de luz, asimesmo vestido de blanco, con una hacha de cera grande encendida en la mano. Era el carro dos veces, y aun tres, mayor que los pasados, y los lados, y encima dél, ocupaban doce otros diciplinantes albos como la nieve, todos con sus hachas encendidas, vista que admiraba y espantaba juntamente; y en un levantado trono venía sentada una ninfa, vestida de mil velos de tela de plata, brillando por todos ellos infinitas hojas de argentería de oro, que la hacían, si no rica, a lo menos vistosamente vestida. Traía el rostro cubierto con un transparente y delicado cendal, de modo que, sin impedirlo sus lizos, por entre ellos se descubría un hermosísimo rostro de doncella, y las muchas luces daban lugar para distinguir la belleza y los años, que, al parecer, no llegaban a veinte ni bajaban de diez y siete.

Junto a ella venía una figura vestida de una ropa de las que llaman rozagantes, hasta los pies, cubierta la cabeza con un velo negro; pero, al punto que llegó el carro a estar frente a frente de los duques y de don Quijote, cesó la música de las chirimías, y luego la de las arpas y laúdes que en el carro sonaban; y, levantándose en pie la figura de la ropa, la apartó a entrambos lados, y, quitándose el velo del rostro, descubrió patentemente ser la misma figura de la muerte, descarnada y fea, de que don Quijote recibió pesadumbre y Sancho miedo, y los duques hicieron algún sentimiento temeroso. Alzada y puesta en pie esta muerte viva, con voz algo dormida y con lengua no muy despierta, comenzó a decir desta manera: -Yo soy Merlín, aquel que las historias

(mentira autorizada de los tiempos), príncipe de la Mágica y monarca
y archivo de la ciencia zoroástrica, 5 émulo a las edades y a los siglos que solapar pretenden las hazañas de los andantes bravos caballeros

a quien yo tuve y tengo gran cariño.
Y, puesto que es de los encantadores, 10 de los magos o mágicos contino dura la condición, áspera y fuerte, la mía es tierna, blanda y amorosa,
y amiga de hacer bien a todas gentes.

En las cavernas lóbregas de Dite, 15
donde estaba mi alma entretenida en formar ciertos rombos y caracteres, llegó la voz doliente de la bella
y sin par Dulcinea del Toboso.
Supe su encantamento y su desgracia, 20
y su trasformación de gentil dama en rústica aldeana; condolíme, y, encerrando mi espíritu en el hueco desta espantosa y fiera notomía, después de haber revuelto cien mil libros 25

desta mi ciencia endemoniada y torpe, vengo a dar el remedio que conviene
a tamaño dolor, a mal tamaño.

¡Oh tú, gloria y honor de cuantos visten las túnicas de acero y de diamante, 30 luz y farol, sendero, norte y guía de aquellos que, dejando el torpe sueño
y las ociosas plumas, se acomodan a usar el ejercicio intolerable de las sangrientas y pesadas armas! 35
A ti digo ¡oh varón, como se debe por jamás alabado!, a ti, valiente juntamente y discreto don Quijote, de la Mancha esplendor, de España estrella, que para recobrar su estado primo 40
la sin par Dulcinea del Toboso, es menester que Sancho, tu escudero, se dé tres mil azotes y treientos en ambas sus valientes posaderas, al aire descubiertas, y de modo 45 que le escuezan, le amarguen y le enfaden.

Y en esto se resuelven todos cuantos de su desgracia han sido los autores, y a esto es mi venida, mis señores.

-¡Voto a tal! -dijo a esta sazón Sancho-. No digo yo tres mil azotes, pero así me daré yo tres como tres puñaladas. ¡Válate el diablo por modo de desencantar! ¡Yo no sé qué tienen que ver mis posas con los encantos! ¡Par Dios que si el señor Merlín no ha hallado otra manera como desencantar a la señora Dulcinea del Toboso, encantada se podrá ir a la sepultura!

-Tomaros he yo -dijo don Quijote-, don villano, hartos de ajos, y amarraros he a un árbol, desnudo como vuestra madre os parió; y no digo yo tres mil y trescientos, sino seis mil y seiscientos azotes os daré, tan bien pegados que no se os caigan a tres mil y trescientos tirones. Y no me repliquéis palabra, que os arrancaré el alma.

Oyendo lo cual Merlín, dijo:

-No ha de ser así, porque los azotes que ha de recibir el buen Sancho han de ser por su voluntad, y no por fuerza, y en el tiempo que él quisiere; que no se le pone término señalado; pero permítesele que si él quisiere redimir su vejación por la mitad de este vapulamiento, puede dejar que se los dé ajena mano, aunque sea algo pesada.

-Ni ajena, ni propia, ni pesada, ni por pesar -replicó Sancho-: a mí no me ha de tocar alguna mano. ¿Parí yo, por ventura, a la señora Dulcinea del Toboso, para que paguen mis posas lo que pecaron sus ojos? El señor mi amo sí, que es parte suya, pues la llama a cada paso mi vida, mi alma, sustento y arrimo suyo, se puede y debe azotar por ella y hacer todas las diligencias necesarias para su desencanto; pero, ¿azotarme yo...? ¡Abernuncio!

Apenas acabó de decir esto Sancho, cuando, levantándose en pie la argentada ninfa que junto al espíritu de Merlín venía, quitándose el sutil velo del rostro, le descubrió tal, que a todos pareció mas que demasiadamente hermoso, y, con un desenfado varonil y con una voz no muy adamada, hablando derechamente con Sancho Panza, dijo: -¡Oh malaventurado escudero, alma de cántaro, corazón de alcornoque, de entrañas guiñeñas y apedernaladas! Si te mandaran, ladrón desuellacaras, que te arrojaras de una alta torre al suelo; si te pidieran, enemigo del género humano, que te comieras una docena de sapos, dos de lagartos y tres de culebras; si te persuadieran a que mataras a tu mujer y a tus hijos con algún truculento y agudo alfanje, no fuera maravilla que te mostraras melindroso y esquivo; pero hacer caso de tres mil y trescientos azotes, que no hay niño de la doctrina, por ruin que sea, que no se los lleve cada mes, admira, adarva, espanta a todas las entrañas piadosas de los que lo escuchan, y aun las de todos aquellos que lo vinieren a saber con el discurso del tiempo. Pon, ¡oh miserable y endurecido animal!, pon, digo, esos tus ojos de machuelo espantadizo en las niñas destos míos, comparados a rutilantes estrellas, y veráslos llorar hilo a hilo y madeja a madeja, haciendo surcos, carreras y sendas por los hermosos campos de mis mejillas. Muévate, socarrón y malintencionado monstruo, que la edad tan florida mía, que aún se está todavía en el diez y... de los años, pues tengo diez y nueve y no llego a veinte, se consume y marchita debajo de la corteza de una rústica labradora; y si ahora no lo parezco, es merced particular que me ha hecho el señor Merlín, que está presente, sólo porque te entenezca mi belleza; que las lágrimas de una afligida hermosura vuelven en algodón los riscos, y los tigres en ovejas. Date, date en esas carnazas, bestión indómito, y saca de harón ese brío, que a sólo comer y más comer te inclina, y pon en libertad la lisura de mis carnes, la mansedumbre de mi condición y la belleza de mi faz; y si por mí no quieres ablandarte ni reducirte a algún razonable término, hazlo por ese pobre caballero que a tu lado tienes; por tu amo, digo, de quien estoy viendo el alma, que la tiene atravesada en la garganta, no diez dedos de los labios, que no espera sino tu rígida o blanda repuesta, o para salirse por la boca, o para volverse al estómago.

Tentóse, oyendo esto, la garganta don Quijote y dijo, volviéndose al duque: - Por Dios, señor, que Dulcinea ha dicho la verdad, que aquí tengo el alma atravesada en la garganta, como una nuez de ballesta.

-¿Qué decís vos a esto, Sancho? -preguntó la duquesa.

-Digo, señora -respondió Sancho-, lo que tengo dicho: que de los azotes, abrenuncio.

-Abrenuncio habéis de decir, Sancho, y no como decís -dijo el duque.

-Déjeme vuestra grandeza -respondió Sancho-, que no estoy agora para mirar en sotilezas ni en letras más a menos; porque me tienen tan turbado estos azotes que me han de dar, o me tengo de dar, que no sé lo que me digo, ni lo que me hago. Pero querría yo saber de la señora mi señora doña Dulcinea del Toboso adónde aprendió el modo de rogar que tiene: viene a pedirme que me abra las carnes a azotes, y llámame alma de cántaro y bestión indómito, con una tiramira de malos nombres, que el diablo los sufra. ¿Por ventura son mis carnes de bronce, o vame a mí algo en que se desencante o no? ¿Qué canasta de ropa blanca, de camisas, de tocadores y de escarpines, aunque no los gasto, trae delante de sí para ablandarme, sino un vituperio y otro, sabiendo aquel refrán que dicen por ahí, que un asno cargado de oro sube ligero por una montaña, y que dádivas quebrantan peñas, y a Dios rogando y con el mazo dando, y que más vale un «toma» que dos «te daré»? Pues el señor mi amo, que había de traerme la mano por el cerro y halagarme para que yo me hiciese de lana y de algodón cardado, dice que si me coge me amarrará desnudo a un árbol y me doblará la parada de los azotes; y habían de considerar estos lastimados señores que no solamente piden que se azote un escudero, sino un gobernador; como quien dice: «bebe con guindas». Aprendan, aprendan mucho de enhoramala a saber rogar, y a saber pedir, y a tener crianza, que no son todos los tiempos unos, ni están los hombres siempre de un buen humor. Estoy yo ahora reventando de pena por ver mi sayo verde roto, y vienen a pedirme que me azote de mi voluntad, estando ella tan ajena dello como de volverme cacique.

-Pues en verdad, amigo Sancho -dijo el duque-, que si no os ablandáis más que una breva madura, que no habéis de empuñar el gobierno. ¡Bueno sería que yo enviase a mis insulanos un gobernador cruel, de entrañas pedernalinas, que no se doblega a las lágrimas de las afligidas doncellas, ni a los ruegos de discretos, imperiosos y antiguos encantadores y sabios! En resolución, Sancho, o vos habéis de ser azotado, o os han de azotar, o no habéis de ser gobernador.

-Señor -respondió Sancho-, ¿no se me darían dos días de término para pensar lo que me está mejor?

-No, en ninguna manera -dijo Merlín-; aquí, en este instante y en este lugar, ha de quedar asentado lo que ha de ser deste negocio, o Dulcinea volverá a la cueva de Montesinos y a su prístino estado de labradora, o ya, en el ser que está, será llevada a los Elíseos Campos, donde estará esperando se cumpla el número del vúpulo.

-Ea, buen Sancho -dijo la duquesa-, buen ánimo y buena correspondencia al pan que habéis comido del señor don Quijote, a quien todos debemos servir y agradar, por su buena condición y por sus altas caballerías. Dad el sí, hijo, desta azotaina, y váyase el diablo para diablo y el temor para mezquino; que un buen corazón quebranta mala ventura, como vos bien sabéis.

A estas razones respondió con éstas disparatadas Sancho, que, hablando con Merlín, le preguntó: -Dígame vuesa merced, señor Merlín: cuando llegó aquí el diablo correo y dio a mi amo un recado del señor Montesinos, mandándole de su parte que le esperase aquí, porque venía a dar orden de que la señora doña Dulcinea del Toboso se desencantase, y hasta agora no hemos visto a Montesinos, ni a sus semejanzas.

A lo cual respondió Merlín:

-El Diablo, amigo Sancho, es un ignorante y un grandísimo bellaco: yo le envié en busca de vuestro amo, pero no con recado de Montesinos, sino mío, porque Montesinos se está en su cueva entendiendo, o, por mejor decir, esperando su desencanto, que aún le falta la cola por desollar. Si os debe algo, o tenéis alguna cosa que negociar con él, yo os lo traeré y pondré donde vos más quisiéredes. Y, por agora, acabad de dar el sí desta diciplina, y creedme que os será de mucho provecho, así para el alma como para el cuerpo: para el alma, por la caridad con que la haréis; para el cuerpo, porque yo sé que sois de complexión sanguínea, y no os podrá hacer daño sacaros un poco de sangre.

-Muchos médicos hay en el mundo: hasta los encantadores son médicos - replicó Sancho-; pero, pues todos me lo dicen, aunque yo no me lo veo, digo que soy contento de darme los tres mil y trecientos azotes, con condición que me los tengo de dar cada y cuando que yo quisiere, sin que se me ponga tasa en los días ni en el tiempo; y yo procuraré salir de la deuda lo más presto que sea posible, porque goce el mundo de la hermosura de la señora doña Dulcinea del Toboso, pues, según parece, al revés de lo que yo pensaba, en efecto es hermosa. Ha de ser también condición que no he de estar obligado a sacarme sangre con la diciplina, y que si algunos azotes fueren de mosqueo, se me han de tomar en cuenta. Iten, que si me errare en el número, el señor Merlín, pues lo sabe todo, ha de tener cuidado de contarlos y de avisarme los que me faltan o los que me sobran.

-De las sobras no habrá que avisar -respondió Merlín-, porque, llegando al cabal número, luego quedará de improviso desencantada la señora Dulcinea, y vendrá a buscar, como agradecida, al buen Sancho, y a darle gracias, y aun premios, por la buena obra. Así que no hay de qué tener escrúpulo de las sobras ni de las faltas, ni el cielo permita que yo engañe a nadie, aunque sea en un pelo de la cabeza.

-¡Ea, pues, a la mano de Dios! -dijo Sancho-. Yo consiento en mi mala ventura; digo que yo acepto la penitencia con las condiciones apuntadas.

Apenas dijo estas últimas palabras Sancho, cuando volvió a sonar la música de las chirimías y se volvieron a disparar infinitos arcabuces, y don Quijote se colgó del cuello de Sancho, dándole mil besos en la frente y en las mejillas. La duquesa y el duque y todos los circunstantes dieron muestras de haber recibido grandísimo contento, y el carro comenzó a caminar; y, al pasar, la hermosa Dulcinea inclinó la cabeza a los duques y hizo una gran reverencia a Sancho.

Y ya, en esto, se venía a más andar el alba, alegre y risueña: las florecillas de los campos se descollaban y erguían, y los líquidos cristales de los arroyuelos, murmurando por entre blancas y pardas guijas, iban a dar tributo a los ríos que los esperaban. La tierra alegre, el cielo claro, el aire limpio, la luz serena, cada uno por sí y todos juntos, daban manifiestas señales que el día, que al aurora venía pisando las faldas, había de ser sereno y claro. Y, satisfechos los duques de la caza y de haber conseguido su intención tan discreta y felicemente, se volvieron a su castillo, con prosupuesto de segundar en sus burlas, que para ellos no había veras que más gusto les diesen.

Capítulo XXXVI

Donde se cuenta la estraña y jamás imaginada aventura de la dueña Dolorida, alias de la condesa Trifaldi, con una carta que Sancho Panza escribió a su mujer Teresa Panza

TENÍA un mayordomo el duque de muy burlesco y desenfadado ingenio, el cual hizo la figura de Merlín y acomodó todo el aparato de la aventura pasada, compuso los versos y hizo que un paje hiciese a Dulcinea. Finalmente, con intervención de sus señores, ordenó otra del más gracioso y estraño artificio que puede imaginarse.

Preguntó la duquesa a Sancho otro día si había comenzado la tarea de la penitencia que había de hacer por el desencanto de Dulcinea. Dijo que sí, y que aquella noche se había dado cinco azotes. Preguntóle la duquesa que con qué se los había dado. Respondió que con la mano.

-Eso -replicó la duquesa-más es darse de palmadas que de azotes. Yo tengo para mí que el sabio Merlín no estará contento con tanta blandura; menester será que el buen Sancho haga alguna diciplina de abrojos, o de las de canelones, que se dejen sentir; porque la letra con sangre entra, y no se ha de dar tan barata la libertad de una tan gran señora como lo es Dulcinea por tan poco precio; y advierta Sancho que las obras de caridad que se hacen tibia y flojamente no tienen mérito ni valen nada.

A lo que respondió Sancho:

-Déme vuestra señoría alguna diciplina o ramal conveniente, que yo me daré con él como no me duela demasiado, porque hago saber a vuesa merced que, aunque soy rústico, mis carnes tienen más de algodón que de esparto, y no será bien que yo me descrie por el provecho ajeno.

-Sea en buena hora -respondió la duquesa-: yo os daré mañana una diciplina que os venga muy al justo y se acomode con la ternura de vuestras carnes, como si fueran sus hermanas propias.

A lo que dijo Sancho:

-Sepa vuestra alteza, señora mía de mi ánima, que yo tengo escrita una carta a mi mujer Teresa Panza, dándole cuenta de todo lo que me ha sucedido después que me aparté della; aquí la tengo en el seno, que no le falta más de ponerle el sobreescrito; querría que vuestra discreción la leyese, porque me parece que va conforme a lo de gobernador, digo, al modo que deben de escribir los gobernadores.

-¿Y quién la notó? -preguntó la duquesa.

-¿Quién la había de notar sino yo, pecador de mí? -respondió Sancho.

-¿Y escribístesla vos? -dijo la duquesa.

-Ni por pienso -respondió Sancho-, porque yo no sé leer ni escribir, puesto que sé firmar.

-Veámosla -dijo la duquesa-, que a buen seguro que vos mostréis en ella la calidad y suficiencia de vuestro ingenio.

Sacó Sancho una carta abierta del seno, y, tomándola la duquesa, vio que decía desta manera:

CARTA DE SANCHO PANZA A TERESA PANZA, SU MUJER

Si buenos azotes me daban, bien caballero me iba; si buen gobierno me tengo, buenos azotes me cuesta. Esto no lo entenderás tú, Teresa mía, por ahora; otra vez lo sabrás. Has de saber, Teresa, que tengo determinado que andes en coche, que es lo que hace al caso, porque todo otro andar es andar a gatas. Mujer de un gobernador eres, ¡mira si te roerá nadie los zancajos! Ahí te envío un vestido verde de cazador, que me dio mi señora la duquesa; acomódale en modo que sirva de saya y cuerpos a nuestra hija. Don Quijote, mi amo, según he oído decir en esta tierra, es un loco cuerdo y un mentecato gracioso, y que yo no le voy en zaga. Hemos estado en la cueva de Montesinos, y el sabio Merlín ha echado mano de mí para el desencanto de Dulcinea del Toboso, que por allá se llama Aldonza Lorenzo: con tres mil y trescientos azotes, menos cinco, que me he de dar, quedará desencantada como la madre que la parió. No dirás desto nada a nadie, porque pon lo tuyo en concejo, y unos dirán que es blanco y otros que es negro. De aquí a pocos días me partiré al gobierno, adonde voy con grandísimo deseo de hacer dineros, porque me han dicho que todos los gobernadores nuevos van con este mismo deseo; tomaréle el pulso, y avisaréte si has de venir a estar conmigo o no. El rucio está bueno, y se te encomienda mucho; y no le pienso dejar, aunque me llevaran a ser Gran Turco. La duquesa mi señora te besa mil veces las manos; vuélvele el retorno con dos mil, que no hay cosa que menos cueste ni valga más barata, según dice mi amo, que los buenos comedimientos. No ha sido Dios servido de depararme otra maleta con otros cien escudos, como la de marras, pero no te dé pena, Teresa mía, que en salvo está el que repica, y todo saldrá en la colada del gobierno; sino que me ha dado gran pena que me dicen que si una vez le pruebo, que me tengo de comer las manos tras él; y si así fuese, no me costaría muy barato, aunque los estropeados y mancos ya se tienen su calonjía en la limosna que piden; así que, por una vía o por otra, tú has de ser rica, de buena ventura. Dios te la dé, como puede, y a mí me guarde para servirte. Deste castillo, a veinte de julio de 1614.

Tu marido el gobernador,

Sancho Panza.

En acabando la duquesa de leer la carta, dijo a Sancho:

-En dos cosas anda un poco descaminado el buen gobernador: la una, en decir o dar a entender que este gobierno se le han dado por los azotes que se ha de dar, sabiendo él, que no lo puede negar, que cuando el duque, mi señor, se le prometió, no se soñaba haber azotes en el mundo; la otra es que se muestra en ella muy codicioso, y no querría que orégano fuese, porque la codicia rompe el saco, y el gobernador codicioso hace la justicia desgobernada.

-Yo no lo digo por tanto, señora -respondió Sancho-; y si a vuesa merced le parece que la tal carta no va como ha de ir, no hay sino rasgarla y hacer otra nueva, y podría ser que fuese peor si me lo dejan a mi caletre.

-No, no -replicó la duquesa-, buena está ésta, y quiero que el duque la vea.

Con esto se fueron a un jardín, donde habían de comer aquel día. Mostró la duquesa la carta de Sancho al duque, de que recibió grandísimo contento. Comieron, y después de alzado los manteles, y después de haberse entretenido un buen espacio con la sabrosa conversación de Sancho, a deshora se oyó el son tristísimo de un pífaro y el de un ronco y destemplado tambor. Todos mostraron alborotarse con la confusa, marcial y triste armonía, especialmente don Quijote, que no cabía en su asiento de puro alborotado; de Sancho no hay que decir sino que el miedo le llevó a su acostumbrado refugio, que era el lado o faldas de la duquesa, porque real y verdaderamente el son que se escuchaba era tristísimo y malencólico.

Y, estando todos así suspensos, vieron entrar por el jardín adelante dos hombres vestidos de luto, tan luengo y tendido que les arrastraba por el suelo; éstos venían tocando dos grandes tambores, asimismo cubiertos de negro. A su lado venía el pífaro, negro y pizmiento como los demás. Seguía a los tres un personaje de cuerpo agigantado, amantado, no que vestido, con una negrísima loba, cuya falda era asimismo desaforada de grande. Por encima de la loba le ceñía y atravesaba un ancho tahelí, también negro, de quien pendía un desmesurado alfanje de guarniciones y vaina negra. Venía cubierto el rostro con un trasparente velo negro, por quien se entreparecía una longísima barba, blanca como la nieve. Movía el paso al son de los tambores con mucha gravedad y reposo. En fin, su grandeza, su contoneo, su negrura y su acompañamiento pudiera y pudo suspender a todos aquellos que sin conocerle le miraron.

Llegó, pues, con el espacio y prosopopeya referida a hincarse de rodillas ante el duque, que en pie, con los demás que allí estaban, le atendía; pero el duque en ninguna manera le consintió hablar hasta que se levantase. Hízolo así el espantajo prodigioso, y, puesto en pie, alzó el antifaz del rostro y hizo patente la más horrenda, la más larga, la más blanca y más poblada barba que hasta entonces humanos ojos habían visto, y luego desencajó y arrancó del ancho y dilatado pecho una voz grave y sonora, y, poniendo los ojos en el duque, dijo:

-Altísimo y poderoso señor, a mí me llaman Trifaldín el de la Barba Blanca; soy escudero de la condesa Trifaldi, por otro nombre llamada la Dueña Dolorida, de parte de la cual traigo a vuestra grandeza una embajada, y es que la vuestra magnificencia sea servida de darla facultad y licencia para entrar a decirle su cuita, que es una de las más nuevas y más admirables que el más cuitado pensamiento del orbe pueda haber pensado. Y primero quiere saber si está en este vuestro castillo el valeroso y jamás vencido caballero don Quijote de la Mancha, en cuya busca viene a pie y sin desayunarse desde el reino de Candaya hasta este vuestro estado, cosa que se puede y debe tener a milagro o a fuerza de encantamento. Ella queda a la puerta desta fortaleza o casa de campo, y no aguarda para entrar sino vuestro beneplácito. Dije.

Y tosió luego y manoseóse la barba de arriba abajo con entrambas manos, y con mucho sosiego estuvo atendiendo la respuesta del duque, que fue:

-Ya, buen escudero Trifaldín de la Blanca Barba, ha muchos días que tenemos noticia de la desgracia de mi señora la condesa Trifaldi, a quien los encantadores la hacen llamar la Dueña Dolorida; bien podéis, estupendo escudero, decirle que entre y que aquí está el valiente caballero don Quijote de la Mancha, de cuya condición generosa puede prometerse con seguridad todo amparo y toda ayuda; y asimismo le podréis decir de mi parte que si mi favor le fuere necesario, no le ha de faltar, pues ya me tiene obligado a dársele el ser caballero, a quien es anejo y concerniente favorecer a toda suerte de mujeres, en especial a las dueñas viudas, menoscabadas y doloridas, cual lo debe estar su señoría.

Oyendo lo cual Trifaldín, inclinó la rodilla hasta el suelo, y, haciendo al pífaros y tambores señal que tocasen, al mismo son y al mismo paso que había entrado, se volvió a salir del jardín, dejando a todos admirados de su presencia y compostura. Y, volviéndose el duque a don Quijote, le dijo:

-En fin, famoso caballero, no pueden las tinieblas de la malicia ni de la ignorancia encubrir y escurecer la luz del valor y de la virtud. Digo esto porque apenas ha seis días que la vuestra bondad está en este castillo, cuando ya os vienen a buscar de lueñas y apartadas tierras, y no en carrozas ni en dromedarios, sino a pie y en ayunas; los tristes, los afligidos, confiados que han de hallar en ese fortísimo brazo el remedio de sus cuitas y trabajos, merced a vuestras grandes hazañas, que corren y rodean todo lo descubierto de la tierra.

-Quisiera yo, señor duque -respondió don Quijote-, que estuviera aquí presente aquel bendito religioso que a la mesa el otro día mostró tener tan mal talante y tan mala ojeriza contra los caballeros andantes, para que viera por vista de ojos si los tales caballeros son necesarios en el mundo: tocara, por lo menos, con la mano que los extraordinariamente afligidos y desconsolados, en casos grandes y en desdichas inormes no van a buscar su remedio a las casas de los letrados, ni a la de los sacristanes de las aldeas, ni al caballero que nunca ha acertado a salir de los términos de su lugar, ni al perezoso cortesano que antes busca nuevas para referirlas y contarlas, que procura hacer obras y hazañas para que otros las cuenten y las escriban; el remedio de las cuitas, el socorro de las necesidades, el amparo de las doncellas, el consuelo de las viudas, en ninguna suerte de personas se halla mejor que en los caballeros andantes, y de serlo yo doy infinitas gracias al cielo, y doy por muy bien empleado cualquier desmán y trabajo que en este tan honroso ejercicio pueda sucederme. Venga esta dueña y pida lo que quisiere, que yo le libraré su remedio en la fuerza de mi brazo y en la intrépida resolución de mi animoso espíritu.

Capítulo XXXVII

EN ESTREMO se holgaron el duque y la duquesa de ver cuán bien iba respondiendo a su intención don Quijote, y a esta sazón dijo Sancho:

-No querría yo que esta señora dueña pusiese algún tropiezo a la promesa de mi gobierno, porque yo he oído decir a un boticario toledano que hablaba como un silguero que donde interviniesen dueñas no podía suceder cosa buena. ¡Válame Dios, y qué mal estaba con ellas el tal boticario! De lo que yo saco que, pues todas las dueñas son enfadosas e impertinentes, de cualquiera calidad y condición que sean, ¿qué serán las que son doloridas, como han dicho que es esta condesa Tres Faldas, o Tres Colas?; que en mi tierra faldas y colas, colas y faldas, todo es uno.

-Calla, Sancho amigo -dijo don Quijote-, que, pues esta señora dueña de tan lueños tierras viene a buscarme, no debe ser de aquellas que el boticario tenía en su número, cuanto más que ésta es condesa, y cuando las condesas sirven de dueñas, será sirviendo a reinas y a emperatrices, que en sus casas son señorísimas que se sirven de otras dueñas.

A esto respondió doña Rodríguez, que se halló presente:

-Dueñas tiene mi señora la duquesa en su servicio, que pudieran ser condesas si la fortuna quisiera, pero allá van leyes do quieren reyes; y nadie diga mal de las dueñas, y más de las antiguas y doncellas; que, aunque yo no lo soy, bien se me alcanza y se me trasluce la ventaja que hace una dueña doncella a una dueña viuda; y quien a nosotras trasquiló, las tijeras le quedaron en la mano.

-Con todo eso -replicó Sancho-, hay tanto que trasquilar en las dueñas, según mi barbero, cuanto será mejor no menear el arroz, aunque se pegue.

-Siempre los escuderos -respondió doña Rodríguez-son enemigos nuestros; que, como son duendes de las antesalas y nos veen a cada paso, los ratos que no rezan, que son muchos, los gastan en murmurar de nosotras, desenterrándonos los huesos y enterrándonos la fama. Pues mándoles yo a los leños movibles, que, mal que les pese, hemos de vivir en el mundo, y en las casas principales, aunque muramos de hambre y cubramos con un negro monjil nuestras delicadas o no delicadas carnes, como quien cubre o tapa un muladar con un tapiz en día de procesión. A fe que si me fuera dado, y el tiempo lo pidiera, que yo diera a entender, no sólo a los presentes, sino a todo el mundo, cómo no hay virtud que no se encierre en una dueña.

-Yo creo -dijo la duquesa-que mi buena doña Rodríguez tiene razón, y muy grande; pero conviene que aguarde tiempo para volver por sí y por las demás dueñas, para confundir la mala opinión de aquel mal boticario, y desarraigar la que tiene en su pecho el gran Sancho Panza.

A lo que Sancho respondió:

-Después que tengo humos de gobernador se me han quitado los váguidos de escudero, y no se me da por cuantas dueñas hay un cabrahígo.

Adelante pasaran con el coloquio dueñesco, si no oyeran que el pífaros y los tambores volvían a sonar, por donde entendieron que la dueña Dolorida entraba. Preguntó la duquesa al duque si sería bien ir a recibirla, pues era condesa y persona principal.

-Por lo que tiene de condesa -respondió Sancho, antes que el duque respondiese-, bien estoy en que vuestras grandezas salgan a recibirla; pero por lo de dueña, soy de parecer que no se muevan un paso.

-¿Quién te mete a ti en esto, Sancho? -dijo don Quijote.

-¿Quién, señor? -respondió Sancho-. Yo me meto, que puedo meterme, como escudero que ha aprendido los términos de la cortesía en la escuela de vuesa merced, que es el más cortés y bien criado caballero que hay en toda la cortesanía; y en estas cosas, según he oído decir a vuesa merced, tanto se pierde por carta de más como por carta de menos; y al buen entendedor, pocas palabras.

-Así es, como Sancho dice -dijo el duque-: veremos el talle de la condesa, y por él tantearemos la cortesía que se le debe.

En esto, entraron los tambores y el pífaros, como la vez primera.

Y aquí, con este breve capítulo, dio fin el autor, y comenzó el otro, siguiendo la misma aventura, que es una de las más notables de la historia.

Capítulo XXXVIII

Donde se cuenta la que dio de su mala andanza la dueña Dolorida

DETRÁS de los tristes músicos comenzaron a entrar por el jardín adelante hasta cantidad de doce dueñas, repartidas en dos hileras, todas vestidas de unos monjiles anchos, al parecer, de anascote batanado, con unas tocas blancas de delgado canequí, tan luengas que sólo el ribete del monjil descubrían. Tras ellas venía la condesa Trifaldi, a quien traía de la mano el escudero Trifaldín de la Blanca Barba, vestida de finísima y negra bayeta por frisar, que, a venir frisada, descubriera cada grano del grandor de un garbanzo de los buenos de Martos. La cola, o falda, o como llamarla quisieren, era de tres puntas, las cuales se sustentaban en las manos de tres pajes, asimesmo vestidos de luto, haciendo una vistosa y matemática figura con aquellos tres ángulos acutos que las tres puntas formaban, por lo cual cayeron todos los que la falda puntiaguda miraron que por ella se debía llamar la condesa Trifaldi, como si dijésemos la condesa de las Tres Faldas; y así dice Benengeli que fue verdad, y que de su propio apellido se llama la condesa Lobuna, a causa que se criaban en su condado muchos lobos, y que si como eran lobos fueran zorras, la llamaran la condesa Zorruna, por ser costumbre en aquellas partes tomar los señores la denominación de sus nombres de la cosa o cosas en que más sus estados abundan; empero esta condesa, por favorecer la novedad de su falda, dejó el Lobuna y tomó el Trifaldi.

Venían las doce dueñas y la señora a paso de procesión, cubiertos los rostros con unos velos negros y no transparentes como el de Trifaldín, sino tan apretados que ninguna cosa se traslucían.

Así como acabó de parecer el dueñesco escuadrón, el duque, la duquesa y don Quijote se pusieron en pie, y todos aquellos que la espaciosa procesión miraban. Pararon las doce dueñas y hicieron calle, por medio de la cual la Dolorida se adelantó, sin dejarla de la mano Trifaldín, viendo lo cual el duque, la duquesa y don Quijote, se adelantaron obra de doce pasos a recibirla. Ella, puesta las rodillas en el suelo, con voz antes basta y ronca que sutil y dilicada, dijo:

-Vuestras grandezas sean servidas de no hacer tanta cortesía a este su criado; digo, a esta su criada, porque, según soy de dolorida, no acertaré a responder a lo que debo, a causa que mi estraña y jamás vista desdicha me ha llevado el entendimiento no sé adónde, y debe de ser muy lejos, pues cuanto más le busco menos le hallo.

-Sin él estaría -respondió el duque-, señora condesa, el que no descubriese por vuestra persona vuestro valor, el cual, sin más ver, es merecedor de toda la nata de la cortesía y de toda la flor de las bien criadas ceremonias.

Y, levantándola de la mano, la llevó a asentar en una silla junto a la duquesa, la cual la recibió asimismo con mucho comedimiento.

Don Quijote callaba, y Sancho andaba muerto por ver el rostro de la Trifaldi y de alguna de sus muchas dueñas, pero no fue posible hasta que ellas de su grado y voluntad se descubrieron.

Sosegados todos y puestos en silencio, estaban esperando quién le había de romper, y fue la dueña Dolorida con estas palabras:

-Confiada estoy, señor poderosísimo, hermosísima señora y discretísimos circunstantes, que ha de hallar mi cuitísima en vuestros valerosísimos pechos acogimiento no menos plácido que generoso y doloroso, porque ella es tal, que es bastante a enternecer los mármoles, y a ablandar los diamantes, y a molificar los aceros de los más endurecidos corazones del mundo; pero, antes que salga a la plaza de vuestros oídos, por no decir orejas, quisiera que me hicieran sabidora si está en este gremio, corro y compañía el acendradísimo caballero don Quijote de la Manchísima y su escuderísimo Panza.

-El Panza -antes que otro respondiese, dijo Sancho-aquí esta, y el don Quijotísimo asimismo; y así, podréis, dolorosísima dueñísima, decir lo que quisieridísimis, que todos estamos prontos y aparejadísimos a ser vuestros servidorísimos.

En esto se levantó don Quijote, y, encaminando sus razones a la Dolorida dueña, dijo:

-Si vuestras cuitas, angustiada señora, se pueden prometer alguna esperanza de remedio por algún valor o fuerzas de algún andante caballero, aquí están las mías, que, aunque flacas y breves, todas se emplearán en vuestro servicio. Yo soy don Quijote de la Mancha, cuyo asumpto es acudir a toda suerte de menesterosos, y, siendo esto así, como lo es, no habéis menester, señora, captar benevolencias ni buscar preámbulos, sino, a la llana y sin rodeos, decir vuestros males, que oídos os escuchan que sabrán, si no remediarlos, dolerse dellos.

Oyendo lo cual, la Dolorida dueña hizo señal de querer arrojarle a los pies de don Quijote, y aun se arrojó, y, pugnando por abrazárselos, decía:

-Ante estos pies y piernas me arrojó, ¡oh caballero invicto!, por ser los que son basas y columnas de la andante caballería; estos pies quiero besar, de cuyos pasos pende y cuelga todo el remedio de mi desgracia, ¡oh valeroso andante, cuyas verdaderas fazañas dejan atrás y escurecen las fabulosas de los Amadis, Esplandianes y Belianises!

Y, dejando a don Quijote, se volvió a Sancho Panza, y, asiéndole de las manos, le dijo:

-¡Oh tú, el más leal escudero que jamás sirvió a caballero andante en los presentes ni en los pasados siglos, más luengo en bondad que la barba de Trifaldín, mi acompañador, que está presente!, bien puedes preciarte que en servir al gran don Quijote sirves en cifra a toda la caterva de caballeros que han tratado las armas en el mundo. Conjúrote, por lo que debes a tu bondad fidelísima, me seas buen intercesor con tu dueño, para que luego favorezca a esta humilísima y desdichadísima condesa.

A lo que respondió Sancho:

-De que sea mi bondad, señoría mía, tan larga y grande como la barba de vuestro escudero, a mí me hace muy poco al caso; barbada y con bigotes tenga yo mi alma cuando desta vida vaya, que es lo que importa, que de las barbas de acá poco o nada me curo; pero, sin esas socaliñas ni plegarias, yo rogaré a mi amo, que sé que me quiere bien, y más agora que me ha menester para cierto negocio, que favorezca y ayude a vuesa merced en todo lo que pudiere. Vuesa merced desembaúle su cuita y cuéntenosla, y deje hacer, que todos nos entenderemos.

Reventaban de risa con estas cosas los duques, como aquellos que habían tomado el pulso a la tal aventura, y alababan entre sí la agudeza y disimulación de la Trifaldi, la cual, volviéndose a sentar, dijo:

-«Del famoso reino de Candaya, que cae entre la gran Trapobana y el mar del Sur, dos leguas más allá del cabo Comorín, fue señora la reina doña Maguncia, viuda del rey Archipiela, su señor y marido, de cuyo matrimonio tuvieron y procrearon a la infanta Antonomasia, heredera del reino, la cual dicha infanta Antonomasia se crió y creció debajo de mi tutela y doctrina, por ser yo la más antigua y la más principal dueña de su madre. Sucedió, pues, que, yendo días y viniendo días, la niña Antonomasia llegó a edad de catorce años, con tan gran perfección de hermosura, que no la pudo subir más de punto la naturaleza. ¡Pues digamos agora que la discreción era mocosa! Así era discreta como bella, y era la más bella del mundo, y lo es, si ya los hados invidiosos y las parcas endurecidas no la han cortado la estambre de la vida. Pero no habrán, que no han de permitir los cielos que se haga tanto mal a la tierra como sería llevarse en agraz el racimo del más hermoso veduño del suelo. De esta hermosura, y no como se debe encarecida de mi torpe lengua, se enamoró un número infinito de príncipes, así naturales como extranjeros, entre los cuales osó levantar los pensamientos al cielo de tanta belleza un caballero particular que en la corte estaba, confiado en su mocedad y en su bizarría, y en sus muchas habilidades y gracias, y facilidad y felicidad de ingenio; porque hago saber a vuestras grandezas, si no lo tienen por enojo, que tocaba una guitarra que la hacía hablar, y más que era poeta y gran bailarín, y sabía hacer una jaula de pájaros, que solamente a hacerlas pudiera ganar la vida cuando se viera en extrema necesidad, que todas estas partes y gracias son bastantes a derribar una montaña, no que una delicada doncella. Pero toda su gentileza y buen donaire y todas sus gracias y habilidades fueran poca o ninguna parte para rendir la fortaleza de mi niña, si el ladrón desuellacaros no usara del remedio de rendirme a mí primero. Primero quiso el malandrín y desalmado vagamundo granjearme la voluntad y cohecharme el gusto, para que yo, mal alcaide, le entregase las llaves de la fortaleza que guardaba. En resolución: él me aduló el entendimiento y me rindió la voluntad con no sé qué dijes y brincos que me dio, pero lo que más me hizo postrar y dar conmigo por el suelo fueron unas coplas que le oí cantar una noche desde una reja que caía a una callejuela donde él estaba, que, si mal no me acuerdo, decían:

De la dulce mi enemiga
nace un mal que al alma hiere, y, por más tormento, quiere que se sienta y no se diga.

Parecióme la trova de perlas, y su voz de almíbar, y después acá, digo, desde entonces, viendo el mal en que caí por estos y otros semejantes versos, he considerado que de las buenas y concertadas repúblicas se habían de desterrar los poetas, como aconsejaba Platón, a lo menos, los lascivos, porque escriben unas coplas, no como las del marqués de Mantua, que entretienen y hacen llorar los niños y a las mujeres, sino unas agudezas que, a modo de blandas espinas, os atraviesan el alma, y como rayos os hieren en ella, dejando sano el vestido. Y otra vez cantó:

Ven, muerte, tan escondida que no te sienta venir, porque el placer del morir
no me torne a dar la vida.

Y deste jaez otras coplitas y estrambotes, que cantados encantan y escritos suspenden. Pues, ¿qué cuando se humillan a componer un género de verso que en Candaya se usaba entonces, a quien ellos llamaban seguidillas? Allí era el brincar de las almas, el retozar de la risa, el desasosiego de los cuerpos y, finalmente, el azogue de todos los sentidos. Y así, digo, señores míos, que los tales trovadores con justo título los debían desterrar a las islas de los Lagartos. Pero no tienen ellos la culpa, sino los simples que los alaban y las bobas que los creen; y si yo fuera la buena dueña que debía, no me habrían de mover sus trasnochados conceptos, ni había de creer ser verdad aquel decir: “Vivo muriendo, ardo en el yelo, tiemblo en el fuego, espero sin esperanza, pártome y quédome”, con otros imposibles desta ralea, de que están sus escritos llenos. Pues, ¿qué cuando prometen el fénix de Arabia, la corona de Aridiana, los caballos del Sol, del Sur las perlas, de Tíbar el oro y de Pancaya el bálsamo? Aquí es donde ellos alargan más la pluma, como les cuesta poco prometer lo que jamás piensan ni pueden cumplir. Pero, ¿dónde me divierto? ¡Ay de mí, desdichada! ¿Qué locura o qué desatino me lleva a contar las ajenas faltas, teniendo tanto que decir de las mías? ¡Ay de mí, otra vez, sin ventura!, que no me rindieron los versos, sino mi simplicidad; no me ablandaron las músicas, sino mi liviandad: mi mucha ignorancia y mi poco advertimiento abrieron el camino y desembarazaron la senda a los pasos de don Clavijo, que éste es el nombre del referido caballero; y así, siendo yo la medianera, él se halló una y muy muchas veces en la estancia de la por mí, y no por él, engañada Antonomasia, debajo del título de verdadero esposo; que, aunque pecadora, no consintiera que sin ser su marido la llegara a la vira de la suela de sus zapatillas. ¡No, no, eso no: el matrimonio ha de ir adelante en cualquier negocio destes que por mí se tratare! Solamente hubo un daño en este negocio, que fue el de la desigualdad, por ser don Clavijo un caballero particular, y la infanta Antonomasia heredera, como ya he dicho, del reino. Algunos días estuvo encubierta y solapada en la sagacidad de mi recato esta maraña, hasta que me pareció que la iba descubriendo a más andar no sé qué hinchazón del vientre de Antonomasia, cuyo temor nos hizo entrar en bureo a los tres, y salió dél que, antes que se saliese a luz el mal recado, don Clavijo pidiese ante el vicario por su mujer a Antonomasia, en fe de una cédula que de ser su esposa la infanta le había hecho, notada por mi ingenio, con tanta fuerza, que las de Sansón no pudieran romperla. Hiciéronse las diligencias, vio el vicario la cédula, tomó el tal vicario la confesión a la señora, confesó de plano, mandóla depositar en casa de un alguacil de corte muy honrado...»

A esta sazón, dijo Sancho:

-También en Candaya hay alguaciles de corte, poetas y seguidillas, por lo que puedo jurar que imagino que todo el mundo es uno. Pero dése vuesa merced priesa, señora Trifaldi, que es tarde y ya me muero por saber el fin desta tan larga historia.

-Sí haré -respondió la condesa.

Capítulo XXXIX

Donde la Trifaldi prosigue su estupenda y memorable historia

DE CUALQUIERA palabra que Sancho decía, la duquesa gustaba tanto como se desesperaba don Quijote; y, mandándole que callase, la Dolorida prosiguió diciendo:

-«En fin, al cabo de muchas demandas y respuestas, como la infanta se estaba siempre en sus trece, sin salir ni variar de la primera declaración, el vicario sentenció en favor de don Clavijo, y se la entregó por su legítima esposa, de lo que recibió tanto enojo la reina doña Maguncia, madre de la infanta Antonomasia, que dentro de tres días la enterramos.»

-Debió de morir, sin duda -dijo Sancho.

-¡Claro está! -respondió Trifaldín-, que en Candaya no se entierran las personas vivas, sino las muertas.

-Ya se ha visto, señor escudero -replicó Sancho-, enterrar un desmayado creyendo ser muerto, y parecíame a mí que estaba la reina Maguncia obligada a desmayarse antes que a morirse; que con la vida muchas cosas se remedian, y no fue tan grande el disparate de la infanta que obligase a sentirle tanto. Cuando se hubiera casado esa señora con algún paje suyo, o con otro criado de su casa, como han hecho otras muchas, según he oído decir, fuera el daño sin remedio; pero el haberse casado con un caballero tan gentilhomme y tan entendido como aquí nos le han pintado, en verdad en verdad que, aunque fue necedad, no fue tan grande como se piensa; porque, según las reglas de mi señor, que está presente y no me dejará mentir, así como se hacen de los hombres letrados los obispos, se pueden hacer de los caballeros, y más si son andantes, los reyes y los emperadores.

-Razón tienes, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, porque un caballero andante, como tenga dos dedos de ventura, está en potencia propincua de ser el mayor señor del mundo. Pero, pase adelante la señora Dolorida, que a mí se me trasluce que le falta por contar lo amargo desta hasta aquí dulce historia.

-Y ¡cómo si queda lo amargo! -respondió la condesa-, y tan amargo que en su comparación son dulces las tueras y sabrosas las adelfas. «Muerta, pues, la reina, y no desmayada, la enterramos; y, apenas la cubrimos con la tierra y apenas le dimos el último vale, cuando, quis talia fando temperet a lachrymis?,

puesto sobre un caballo de madera, pareció encima de la sepultura de la reina el gigante Malambruno, primo cormano de Maguncia, que junto con ser cruel era encantador, el cual con sus artes, en venganza de la muerte de su cormana, y por castigo del atrevimiento de don Clavijo, y por despecho de la demasía de Antonomasia, los dejó encantados sobre la misma sepultura: a ella, convertida en una jimia de bronce, y a él, en un espantoso cocodrilo de un metal no conocido, y entre los dos está un padrón, asimismo de metal, y en él escritas en lengua siríaca unas letras que, habiéndose declarado en la candayesca, y ahora en la castellana, encierran esta sentencia: “No cobrarán su primera forma estos dos atrevidos amantes hasta que el valeroso manchego venga conmigo a las manos en singular batalla, que para solo su gran valor guardan los hados esta nunca vista aventura”. Hecho esto, sacó de la vaina un ancho y desmesurado alfanje, y, asiéndome a mí por los cabellos, hizo finta de querer segarme la gola y cortarme cercen la cabeza. Turbéme, pegóseme la voz a la garganta, quedé mohína en todo extremo, pero, con todo, me esforcé lo más que pude, y, con voz tembladora y doliente, le dije tantas y tales cosas, que le hicieron suspender la ejecución de tan riguroso castigo. Finalmente, hizo traer ante sí todas las dueñas de palacio, que fueron estas que están presentes, y, después de haber exagerado nuestra culpa y vituperado las condiciones de las dueñas, sus malas mañas y peores trazas, y cargando a todas la culpa que yo sola tenía, dijo que no quería con pena capital castigarnos, sino con otras penas dilatadas, que nos diesen una muerte civil y continua; y, en aquel mismo momento y punto que acabó de decir esto, sentimos todas que se nos abrían los poros de la cara, y que por toda ella nos punzaban como con puntas de agujas. Acudimos luego con las manos a los rostros, y hallámonos de la manera que ahora veréis.»

Y luego la Dolorida y las demás dueñas alzaron los antifaces con que cubiertas venían, y descubrieron los rostros, todos poblados de barbas, cuáles rubias, cuáles negras, cuáles blancas y cuáles albarrazadas, de cuya vista mostraron quedar admirados el duque y la duquesa, pasmados don Quijote y Sancho, y atónitos todos los presentes.

Y la Trifaldi prosiguió:

-«Desta manera nos castigó aquel follón y malintencionado de Malambruno, cubriendo la blandura y morbidez de nuestros rostros con la aspereza destas cerdas, que pluguiera al cielo que antes con su desmesurado alfanje nos hubiera derribado las testas, que no que nos asombrara la luz de nuestras caras con esta borra que nos cubre; porque si entramos en cuenta, señores míos (y esto que voy a decir agora lo quisiera decir hechos mis ojos fuentes, pero la consideración de nuestra desgracia, y los mares que hasta aquí han llovido, los tienen sin humor y secos como aristas, y así, lo diré sin lágrimas), digo, pues, que ¿adónde podrá ir una dueña con barbas? ¿Qué padre o qué madre se dolerá della? ¿Quién la dará ayuda? Pues, aun cuando tiene la tez lisa y el rostro martirizado con mil suertes de menjurjes y mudas, apenas halla quien bien la quiera, ¿qué hará cuando descubra hecho un bosque su rostro? ¡Oh dueñas y compañeras mías, en desdichado punto nacimos, en hora menguada nuestros padres nos engendraron!»

Capítulo XL

De cosas que atañen y tocan a esta aventura y a esta memorable historia

REAL y verdaderamente, todos los que gustan de semejantes historias como ésta deben de mostrarse agradecidos a Cide Hamete, su autor primero, por la curiosidad que tuvo en contarnos las semínimas della, sin dejar cosa, por menuda que fuese, que no la sacase a luz distintamente: pinta los pensamientos, descubre las imaginaciones, responde a las tácitas, aclara las dudas, resuelve los argumentos; finalmente, los átomos del más curioso deseo manifiesta. ¡Oh autor celeberrimo! ¡Oh don Quijote dichoso! ¡Oh Dulcinea famosa! ¡Oh Sancho Panza gracioso! Todos juntos y cada uno de por sí viváis siglos infinitos, para gusto y general pasatiempo de los vivientes.

Dice, pues, la historia que, así como Sancho vio desmayada a la Dolorida, dijo:

-Por la fe de hombre de bien, juro, y por el siglo de todos mis pasados los Panzas, que jamás he oído ni visto, ni mi amo me ha contado, ni en su pensamiento ha cabido, semejante aventura como ésta. Válgate mil satanases, por no maldecirte por encantador y gigante, Malambruno; y ¿no hallaste otro género de castigo que dar a estas pecadoras sino el de barbarlas? ¿Cómo y no fuera mejor, y a ellas les estuviera más a cuento, quitarles la mitad de las narices de medio arriba, aunque hablaran gangoso, que no ponerles barbas? Apostaré yo que no tienen hacienda para pagar a quien las rape.

-Así es la verdad, señor -respondió una de las doce-, que no tenemos hacienda para mondarnos; y así, hemos tomado algunas de nosotras por remedio ahorrativo de usar de unos pegotes o parches pegajosos, y aplicándolos a los rostros, y tirando de golpe, quedamos rasas y lisas como fondo de mortero de piedra; que, puesto que hay en Candaya mujeres que andan de casa en casa a quitar el vello y a pulir las cejas y hacer otros menjurjes tocantes a mujeres, nosotras las dueñas de mi señora por jamás quisimos admitirlas, porque las más oliscan a terceras, habiendo dejado de ser primas; y si por el señor don Quijote no somos remediadas, con barbas nos llevarán a la sepultura.

-Yo me pelaría las mías -dijo don Quijote- en tierra de moros, si no remediase las vuestras.

A este punto, volvió de su desmayo la Trifaldi y dijo:

-El retintín desa promesa, valeroso caballero, en medio de mi desmayo llegó a mis oídos, y ha sido parte para que yo dél vuelva y cobre todos mis sentidos; y así, de nuevo os suplico, andante ínclito y señor indomable, vuestra graciosa promesa se convierta en obra.

-Por mí no quedará -respondió don Quijote-: ved, señora, qué es lo que tengo de hacer, que el ánimo está muy pronto para serviros.

-Es el caso -respondió la Dolorida -que desde aquí al reino de Candaya, si se va por tierra, hay cinco mil leguas, dos más a menos; pero si se va por el aire y por la línea recta, hay tres mil y docientas y veinte y siete. Es también de saber que Malambruno me dijo que cuando la suerte me deparase al caballero nuestro libertador, que él le enviaría una cabalgadura harto mejor y con menos malicias que las que son de retorno, porque ha de ser aquel mismo caballo de madera sobre quien llevó el valeroso Pierres robada a la linda Magalona, el cual caballo se rige por una clavija que tiene en la frente, que le sirve de freno, y vuela por el aire con tanta ligereza que parece que los mismos diablos le llevan. Este tal caballo, según es tradición antigua, fue compuesto por aquel sabio Merlín; prestósele a Pierres, que era su amigo, con el cual hizo grandes viajes, y robó, como se ha dicho, a la linda Magalona, llevándola a las ancas por el aire, dejando embobados a cuantos desde la tierra los miraban; y no le prestaba sino a quien él quería, o mejor se lo pagaba; y desde el gran Pierres hasta ahora no sabemos que haya subido alguno en él. De allí le ha sacado Malambruno con sus artes, y le tiene en su poder, y se sirve dél en sus viajes, que los hace por momentos, por diversas partes del mundo, y hoy está aquí y mañana en Francia y otro día en Potosí; y es lo bueno que el tal caballo ni come, ni duerme ni gasta herraduras, y lleva un portante por los aires, sin tener alas, que el que lleva encima puede llevar una taza llena de agua en la mano sin que se le derrame gota, según camina llano y reposado; por lo cual la linda Magalona se holgaba mucho de andar caballera en él.

A esto dijo Sancho:

-Para andar reposado y llano, mi rucio, puesto que no anda por los aires; pero por la tierra, yo le cutiré con cuantos portantes hay en el mundo.

Rieronse todos, y la Dolorida prosiguió:

-Y este tal caballo, si es que Malambruno quiere dar fin a nuestra desgracia, antes que sea media hora entrada la noche, estará en nuestra presencia, porque él me significó que la señal que me daría por donde yo entendiese que había hallado el caballero que buscaba, sería enviarme el caballo, donde fuese con comodidad y presteza.

-Y ¿cuántos caben en ese caballo? -preguntó Sancho.

La Dolorida respondió:

-Dos personas: la una en la silla y la otra en las ancas; y, por la mayor parte, estas tales dos personas son caballero y escudero, cuando falta alguna robada doncella.

-Querría yo saber, señora Dolorida -dijo Sancho-, qué nombre tiene ese caballo.

-El nombre -respondió la Dolorida-no es como el caballo de Belorofonte, que se llamaba Pegaso, ni como el del Magno Alejandro, llamado Bucéfalo, ni como el del furioso Orlando, cuyo nombre fue Brilladoro, ni menos Bayarte, que fue el de Reinaldos de Montalbán, ni Frontino, como el de Rugero, ni Bootes ni Peritoa, como dicen que se llaman los del Sol, ni tampoco se llama Orelia, como el caballo en que el desdichado Rodrigo, último rey de los godos, entró en la batalla donde perdió la vida y el reino.

-Yo apostaré -dijo Sancho-que, pues no le han dado ninguno desos famosos nombres de caballos tan conocidos, que tampoco le habrán dado el de mi amo, Rocinante, que en ser propio excede a todos los que se han nombrado.

-Así es -respondió la barbada condesa-, pero todavía le cuadra mucho, porque se llama Clavileño el Alígero, cuyo nombre conviene con el ser de leño, y con la clavija que trae en la frente, y con la ligereza con que camina; y así, en cuanto al nombre, bien puede competir con el famoso Rocinante.

-No me descontenta el nombre -replicó Sancho-, pero ¿con qué freno o con qué jáquima se gobierna?

-Ya he dicho -respondió la Trifaldi-que con la clavija, que, volviéndola a una parte o a otra, el caballero que va encima le hace caminar como quiere, o ya por los aires, o ya rastreando y casi barriendo la tierra, o por el medio, que es el que se busca y se ha de tener en todas las acciones bien ordenadas.

-Ya lo querría ver -respondió Sancho-, pero pensar que tengo de subir en él, ni en la silla ni en las ancas, es pedir peras al olmo. ¡Bueno es que apenas puedo tenerme en mi rucio, y sobre un albarda más blanda que la misma seda, y querrían ahora que me tuviese en unas ancas de tabla, sin cojín ni almohada alguna! Pardiez, yo no me pienso moler por quitar las barbas a nadie: cada cual se rape como más le viniere a cuento, que yo no pienso acompañar a mi señor en tan largo viaje. Cuanto más, que yo no debo de hacer al caso para el rapamiento destas barbas como lo soy para el desencanto de mi señora Dulcinea.

-Sí sois, amigo -respondió la Trifaldi-, y tanto, que, sin vuestra presencia, entiendo que no haremos nada.

-¡Aquí del rey! -dijo Sancho-: ¿qué tienen que ver los escuderos con las aventuras de sus señores? ¿Hanse de llevar ellos la fama de las que acaban, y hemos de llevar nosotros el trabajo? ¡Cuerpo de mí! Aun si dijesen los historiadores: «El tal caballero acabó la tal y tal aventura, pero con ayuda de fulano, su escudero, sin el cual fuera imposible el acabarla». Pero, ¡que escriban a secas: «Don Paralipomenón de las Tres Estrellas acabó la aventura de los seis vestiglos», sin nombrar la persona de su escudero, que se halló presente a todo, como si no fuera en el mundo! Ahora, señores, vuelvo a decir que mi señor se puede ir solo, y buen provecho le haga, que yo me quedaré aquí, en compañía de la duquesa mi señora, y podría ser que cuando volviese hallase mejorada la causa de la señora Dulcinea en tercio y quinto; porque pienso, en los ratos ociosos y desocupados, darme una tanda de azotes que no me la cubra pelo.

-Con todo eso, le habéis de acompañar si fuere necesario, buen Sancho, porque os lo rogarán buenos; que no han de quedar por vuestro inútil temor tan poblados los rostros destas señoras; que, cierto, sería mal caso.

-¡Aquí del rey otra vez! -replicó Sancho-. Cuando esta caridad se hiciera por algunas doncellas recogidas, o por algunas niñas de la doctrina, pudiera el hombre aventurarse a cualquier trabajo, pero que lo sufra por quitar las barbas a dueñas, ¡mal año! Mas que las viese yo a todas con barbas, desde la mayor hasta la menor, y de la más melindrosa hasta la más repulgada.

-Mal estáis con las dueñas, Sancho amigo -dijo la duquesa-: mucho os vais tras la opinión del boticario toledano. Pues a fe que no tenéis razón; que dueñas hay en mi casa que pueden ser ejemplo de dueñas, que aquí está mi doña Rodríguez, que no me dejará decir otra cosa.

-Mas que la diga vuestra excelencia -dijo Rodríguez-, que Dios sabe la verdad de todo, y buenas o malas, barbadadas o lampiñas que seamos las dueñas, también nos parió nuestra madre como a las otras mujeres; y, pues Dios nos echó en el mundo, Él sabe para qué, y a su misericordia me atengo, y no a las barbas de nadie.

-Ahora bien, señora Rodríguez -dijo don Quijote-, y señora Trifaldi y compañía, yo espero en el cielo que mirará con buenos ojos vuestras cuitas, que Sancho hará lo que yo le mandare, ya viniese Clavileño y ya me viese con Malambruno; que yo sé que no habría navaja que con más facilidad rapase a vuestras mercedes como mi espada raparía de los hombros la cabeza de Malambruno; que Dios sufre a los malos, pero no para siempre.

-¡Ay! -dijo a esta sazón la Dolorida-, con benignos ojos miren a vuestra grandeza, valeroso caballero, todas las estrellas de las regiones celestes, e infundan en vuestro ánimo toda prosperidad y valentía para ser escudo y amparo del vituperoso y abatido género dueñesco, abominado de boticarios, murmurado de escuderos y socaliñado de pajes; que mal haya la bellaca que en la flor de su edad no se metió primero a ser monja que a dueña. ¡Desdichadas de nosotras las dueñas, que, aunque vengamos por línea recta, de varón en varón, del mismo Héctor el troyano, no dejaran de echaros un vos nuestras señoras, si pensasen por ello ser reinas! ¡Oh gigante Malambruno, que, aunque eres encantador, eres certísimo en tus promesas!, envíanos ya al sin par Clavileño, para que nuestra desdicha se acabe, que si entra el calor y estas nuestras barbas duran, ¡guay de nuestra ventura!

Dijo esto con tanto sentimiento la Trifaldi, que sacó las lágrimas de los ojos de todos los circunstantes, y aun arrasó los de Sancho, y propuso en su corazón de acompañar a su señor hasta las últimas partes del mundo, si es que en ello consistiese quitar la lana de aquellos venerables rostros.

Capítulo XLI

De la venida de Clavileño, con el fin desta dilatada aventura

LLEGÓ en esto la noche, y con ella el punto determinado en que el famoso caballo Clavileño viniese, cuya tardanza fatigaba ya a don Quijote, pareciéndole que, pues Malambruno se detenía en enviarle, o que él no era el caballero para quien estaba guardada aquella aventura, o que Malambruno no osaba venir con él a singular batalla. Pero veis aquí cuando a deshora entraron por el jardín cuatro salvajes, vestidos todos de verde yedra, que sobre sus hombros traían un gran caballo de madera. Pusiéronle de pies en el suelo, y uno de los salvajes dijo:

-Suba sobre esta máquina el que tuviere ánimo para ello.

-Aquí -dijo Sancho- yo no subo, porque ni tengo ánimo ni soy caballero.

Y el salvaje prosiguió diciendo:

-Y ocupe las ancas el escudero, si es que lo tiene, y fíese del valeroso Malambruno, que si no fuere de su espada, de ninguna otra, ni de otra malicia, será ofendido; y no hay más que torcer esta clavija que sobre el cuello trae puesta, que él los llevará por los aires adonde los atiende Malambruno; pero, porque la alteza y sublimidad del camino no les cause váguidos, se han de cubrir los ojos hasta que el caballo relinche, que será señal de haber dado fin a su viaje.

Esto dicho, dejando a Clavileño, con gentil continente se volvieron por donde habían venido. La Dolorida, así como vio al caballo, casi con lágrimas dijo a don Quijote:

-Valeroso caballero, las promesas de Malambruno han sido ciertas: el caballo está en casa, nuestras barbas crecen, y cada una de nosotras y con cada pelo dellas te suplicamos nos rapen y tundas, pues no está en más sino en que subas en él con tu escudero y des felice principio a vuestro nuevo viaje.

-Eso haré yo, señora condesa Trifaldi, de muy buen grado y de mejor talante, sin ponerme a tomar cojín, ni calzarme espuelas, por no detenerme: tanta es la gana que tengo de veros a vos, señora, y a todas estas dueñas rasas y mondas.

-Eso no haré yo -dijo Sancho-, ni de malo ni de buen talante, en ninguna manera; y si es que este rapamiento no se puede hacer sin que yo suba a las ancas, bien puede buscar mi señor otro escudero que le acompañe, y estas señoras otro modo de alisarse los rostros; que yo no soy brujo, para gustar de andar por los aires. Y ¿qué dirán mis insulanos cuando sepan que su gobernador se anda paseando por los vientos? Y otra cosa más: que habiendo tres mil y tantas leguas de aquí a Candaya, si el caballo se cansa o el gigante se enoja, tardaremos en dar la vuelta media docena de años, y ya ni habrá ínsula ni ínsulos en el mundo que me conozan; y, pues se dice comúnmente que en la tardanza va el peligro, y que cuando te dieran la vaquilla acudas con la soguilla, perdónenme las barbas destas señoras, que bien se está San Pedro en Roma; quiero decir que bien me estoy en esta casa, donde tanta merced se me hace y de cuyo dueño tan gran bien espero como es verme gobernador.

A lo que el duque dijo:

-Sancho amigo, la ínsula que yo os he prometido no es movable ni fugitiva: raíces tiene tan hondas, echadas en los abismos de la tierra, que no la arrancarán ni mudarán de donde está a tres tirones; y, pues vos sabéis que sé yo que no hay ninguno género de oficio destos de mayor cantía que no se granjee con alguna suerte de cohecho, cuál más, cuál menos, el que yo quiero llevar por este gobierno es que vais con vuestro señor don Quijote a dar cima y cabo a esta memorable aventura; que ahora volváis sobre Clavileño con la brevedad que su ligereza promete, ora la contraria fortuna os traiga y vuelva a pie, hecho romero, de mesón en mesón y de venta en venta, siempre que volviéredes hallaréis vuestra ínsula donde la dejáis, y a vuestros insulanos con el mismo deseo de recebiros por su gobernador que siempre han tenido, y mi voluntad será la misma; y no pongáis duda en esta verdad, señor Sancho, que sería hacer notorio agravio al deseo que de serviros tengo.

-No más, señor -dijo Sancho-: yo soy un pobre escudero y no puedo llevar a cuestras tantas cortesías; suba mi amo, tápenme estos ojos y encomiéndenme a Dios, y avísenme si cuando vamos por esas altanerías podré encomendarme a Nuestro Señor o invocar los ángeles que me favorezcan.

A lo que respondió Trifaldi:

-Sancho, bien podéis encomendaros a Dios o a quien quisiéredes, que Malambruno, aunque es encantador, es cristiano, y hace sus encantamientos con mucha sagacidad y con mucho tiento, sin meterse con nadie.

-¡Ea, pues -dijo Sancho-, Dios me ayude y la Santísima Trinidad de Gaeta!

-Desde la memorable aventura de los batanes -dijo don Quijote-, nunca he visto a Sancho con tanto temor como ahora, y si yo fuera tan agorero como otros, su pusilanimidad me hiciera algunas cosquillas en el ánimo. Pero llegaos aquí, Sancho, que con licencia destos señores os quiero hablar aparte dos palabras.

Y, apartando a Sancho entre unos árboles del jardín y asiéndole ambas las manos, le dijo:

-Ya vees, Sancho hermano, el largo viaje que nos espera, y que sabe Dios cuándo volveremos dél, ni la comodidad y espacio que nos darán los negocios;

así, querría que ahora te retirases en tu aposento, como que vas a buscar alguna cosa necesaria para el camino, y, en un daga las pajas, te dices, a buena cuenta de los tres mil y trescientos azotes a que estás obligado, siquiera quinientos, que dados te los tendrás, que el comenzar las cosas es tenerlas medio acabadas.

-¡Par Dios -dijo Sancho-, que vuestra merced debe de ser menguado! Esto es como aquello que dicen: «¡en priesa me vees y doncellez me demandas!» ¿Ahora que tengo de ir sentado en una tabla rasa, quiere vuestra merced que me lastime las posas? En verdad en verdad que no tiene vuestra merced razón. Vamos ahora a rapar estas dueñas, que a la vuelta yo le prometo a vuestra merced, como quien soy, de darme tanta priesa a salir de mi obligación, que vuestra merced se contente, y no le digo más.

-Pues con esa promesa, buen Sancho, voy consolado, y creo que la cumplirás, porque, en efecto, aunque tonto, eres hombre verídico.

-No soy verde, sino moreno -dijo Sancho-, pero aunque fuera de mezcla, cumpliera mi palabra.

Y con esto se volvieron a subir en Clavileño, y al subir dijo don Quijote:

-Tapaos, Sancho, y subid, Sancho, que quien de tan lueñes tierras envía por nosotros no será para engañarnos, por la poca gloria que le puede redundar de engañar a quien dél se fía; y, puesto que todo sucediese al revés de lo que imagino, la gloria de haber emprendido esta hazaña no la podrá escurecer malicia alguna.

-Vamos, señor -dijo Sancho-, que las barbas y lágrimas destas señoras las tengo clavadas en el corazón, y no comeré bocado que bien me sepa hasta verlas en su primera lisura. Suba vuesa merced y tápese primero, que si yo tengo de ir a las ancas, claro está que primero sube el de la silla.

-Así es la verdad -replicó don Quijote.

Y, sacando un pañuelo de la faldriquera, pidió a la Dolorida que le cubriese muy bien los ojos, y, habiéndoselos cubierto, se volvió a descubrir y dijo:

-Si mal no me acuerdo, yo he leído en Virgilio aquello del Paladión de Troya, que fue un caballo de madera que los griegos presentaron a la diosa Palas, el cual iba preñado de caballeros armados, que después fueron la total ruina de Troya; y así, será bien ver primero lo que Clavileño trae en su estómago.

-No hay para qué -dijo la Dolorida-, que yo le fío y sé que Malambruno no tiene nada de malicioso ni de traidor; vuesa merced, señor don Quijote, suba sin pavor alguno, y a mi daño si alguno le sucediere.

Parecióle a don Quijote que cualquiera cosa que replicase acerca de su seguridad sería poner en detrimento su valentía; y así, sin más altercar, subió sobre Clavileño y le tentó la clavija, que fácilmente se rodeaba; y, como no tenía estribos y le colgaban las piernas, no parecía sino figura de tapiz flamenco pintada o tejida en algún romano triunfo. De mal talante y poco a poco llegó a subir Sancho, y, acomodándose lo mejor que pudo en las ancas, las halló algo duras y no nada blandas, y pidió al duque que, si fuese posible, le acomodasen de algún cojín o de alguna almohada, aunque fuese del estrado de su señora la duquesa, o del lecho de algún paje, porque las ancas de aquel caballo más parecían de mármol que de leño.

A esto dijo la Trifaldi que ningún jaez ni ningún género de adorno sufría sobre sí Clavileño; que lo que podía hacer era ponerse a mujeriegas, y que así no sentiría tanto la dureza. Hízolo así Sancho, y, diciendo «a Dios», se dejó vendar los ojos, y, ya después de vendados, se volvió a descubrir, y, mirando a todos los del jardín tiernamente y con lágrimas, dijo que le ayudasen en aquel trance con sendos paternostres y sendas avemarías, porque Dios deparase quien por ellos los dijese cuando en semejantes trances se viesen. A lo que dijo don Quijote:

-Ladrón, ¿estás puesto en la horca por ventura, o en el último término de la vida, para usar de semejantes plegarias? ¿No estás, desalmada y cobarde criatura, en el mismo lugar que ocupó la linda Magalona, del cual decendió, no a la sepultura, sino a ser reina de Francia, si no mienten las historias? Y yo, que voy a tu lado, ¿no puedo ponerme al del valeroso Pierres, que oprimió este mismo lugar que yo ahora oprimo? Cúbrete, cúbrete, animal descorazonado, y no te salga a la boca el temor que tienes, a lo menos en presencia mía.

-Tápenme -respondió Sancho-; y, pues no quieren que me encomiende a Dios ni que sea encomendado, ¿qué mucho que tema no ande por aquí alguna región de diablos que den con nosotros en Peralvillo?

Cubriéronse, y, sintiendo don Quijote que estaba como había de estar, tentó la clavija, y, apenas hubo puesto los dedos en ella, cuando todas las dueñas y cuantos estaban presentes levantaron las voces, diciendo:

-¡Dios te guíe, valeroso caballero!

-¡Dios sea contigo, escudero intrépido!

-¡Ya, ya vais por esos aires, rompiéndolos con más velocidad que una saeta!

-¡Ya comenzáis a suspender y admirar a cuantos desde la tierra os están mirando!

-¡Tente, valeroso Sancho, que te bamboleas! ¡Mira no cayas, que será peor tu caída que la del atrevido mozo que quiso regir el carro del Sol, su padre!

Oyó Sancho las voces, y, apretándose con su amo y ciñiéndole con los brazos, le dijo:

-Señor, ¿cómo dicen éstos que vamos tan altos, si alcanzan acá sus voces, y no parecen sino que están aquí hablando junto a nosotros?

-No repares en eso, Sancho, que, como estas cosas y estas volaterías van fuera de los cursos ordinarios, de mil leguas verás y oirás lo que quisieres. Y no me aprietes tanto, que me derribas; y en verdad que no sé de qué te turbas ni te espantas, que osaré jurar que en todos los días de mi vida he subido en cabalgadura de paso más llano: no parece sino que no nos movemos de un lugar. Destierra, amigo, el miedo, que, en efecto, la cosa va como ha de ir y el viento llevamos en popa.

-Así es la verdad -respondió Sancho-, que por este lado me da un viento tan recio, que parece que con mil fuelles me están soplando.

Y así era ello, que unos grandes fuelles le estaban haciendo aire: tan bien trazada estaba la tal aventura por el duque y la duquesa y su mayordomo, que no le faltó requisito que la dejase de hacer perfecta.

Sintiéndose, pues, soplar don Quijote, dijo:

-Sin duda alguna, Sancho, que ya debemos de llegar a la segunda región del aire, adonde se engendra el granizo, las nieves; los truenos, los relámpagos y los rayos se engendran en la tercera región, y si es que desta manera vamos subiendo, presto daremos en la región del fuego, y no sé yo cómo templar esta clavija para que no subamos donde nos abrasemos.

En esto, con unas estopas ligeras de encenderse y apagarse, desde lejos, pendientes de una caña, les calentaban los rostros. Sancho, que sintió el calor, dijo:

-Que me maten si no estamos ya en el lugar del fuego, o bien cerca, porque una gran parte de mi barba se me ha chamuscado, y estoy, señor, por descubrirme y ver en qué parte estamos.

-No hagas tal -respondió don Quijote-, y acuérdate del verdadero cuento del licenciado Torralba, a quien llevaron los diablos en volandas por el aire, caballero en una caña, cerrados los ojos, y en doce horas llegó a Roma, y se apeó en Torre de Nona, que es una calle de la ciudad, y vio todo el fracaso y asalto y muerte de Borbón, y por la mañana ya estaba de vuelta en Madrid, donde dio cuenta de todo lo que había visto; el cual asimismo dijo que cuando iba por el aire le mandó el diablo que abriese los ojos, y los abrió, y se vio tan cerca, a su parecer, del cuerpo de la luna, que la pudiera asir con la mano, y que no osó mirar a la tierra por no desvanecerse. Así que, Sancho, no hay para qué descubrirnos; que, el que nos lleva a cargo, él dará cuenta de nosotros, y quizá vamos tomando puntas y subiendo en alto para dejarnos caer de una sobre el reino de Candaya, como hace el sacre o neblí sobre la garza para cogerla, por más que se remonte; y, aunque nos parece que no ha media hora que nos partimos del jardín, créeme que debemos de haber hecho gran camino.

-No sé lo que es -respondió Sancho Panza-, sólo sé decir que si la señora Magallanes o Magalona se contentó destas ancas, que no debía de ser muy tierna de carnes.

Todas estas pláticas de los dos valientes oían el duque y la duquesa y los del jardín, de que recibían extraordinario contento; y, queriendo dar remate a la estraña y bien fabricada aventura, por la cola de Clavileño le pegaron fuego con unas estopas, y al punto, por estar el caballo lleno de cohetes tronadores, voló por los aires, con estraño ruido, y dio con don Quijote y con Sancho Panza en el suelo, medio chamuscados.

En este tiempo ya se habían desaparecido del jardín todo el barbado escuadrón de las dueñas y la Trifaldi y todo, y los del jardín quedaron como desmayados, tendidos por el suelo. Don Quijote y Sancho se levantaron maltrechos, y, mirando a todas partes, quedaron atónitos de verse en el mismo jardín de donde habían partido y de ver tendido por tierra tanto número de gente; y creció más su admiración cuando a un lado del jardín vieron hincada una gran lanza en el suelo y pendiente della y de dos cordones de seda verde un pergamino liso y blanco, en el cual, con grandes letras de oro, estaba escrito lo siguiente:

y acabó la aventura de la condesa Trifaldi, por otro nombre llamada la dueña Dolorida, y compañía, con sólo intentarla.
Malambruno se da por contento y satisfecho a toda su voluntad, y las barbas de las dueñas ya quedan lisas y mondas, y los reyes don Clavijo y Antonomasia en su prístino estado. Y, cuando se cumpliere el escuderil vápulo, la blanca paloma se verá libre de los pestíferos girifaltes que la persiguen, y en brazos de su querido arrullador; que así está ordenado por el sabio Merlín, protoencantador de los encantadores.*

Habiendo, pues, don Quijote leído las letras del pergamino, claro entendió que del desencanto de Dulcinea hablaban; y, dando muchas gracias al cielo de que con tan poco peligro hubiese acabado tan gran fecho, reduciendo a su pasada tez los rostros de las venerables dueñas, que ya no parecían, se fue adonde el duque y la duquesa aún no habían vuelto en sí, y, trabando de la mano al duque, le dijo:

-¡Ea, buen señor, buen ánimo; buen ánimo, que todo es nada! La aventura es ya acabada sin daño de barras, como lo muestra claro el escrito que en aquel padrón está puesto.

El duque, poco a poco, y como quien de un pesado sueño recuerda, fue volviendo en sí, y por el mismo tenor la duquesa y todos los que por el jardín estaban caídos, con tales muestras de maravilla y espanto, que casi se podían dar a entender haberles acontecido de veras lo que tan bien sabían fingir de burlas. Leyó el duque el cartel con los ojos medio cerrados, y luego, con los brazos abiertos, fue a abrazar a don Quijote, diciéndole ser el más buen caballero que en ningún siglo se hubiese visto.

Sancho andaba mirando por la Dolorida, por ver qué rostro tenía sin las barbas, y si era tan hermosa sin ellas como su gallarda disposición prometía, pero dijéronle que, así como Clavileño bajó ardiendo por los aires y dio en el suelo, todo el escuadrón de las dueñas, con la Trifaldi, había desaparecido, y que ya iban rapadas y sin cañones. Preguntó la duquesa a Sancho que cómo le había ido en aquel largo viaje. A lo cual Sancho respondió:

-Yo, señora, sentí que íbamos, según mi señor me dijo, volando por la región del fuego, y quise descubrirme un poco los ojos, pero mi amo, a quien pedí licencia para descubrirme, no la consintió; mas yo, que tengo no sé qué briznas de curioso y de desear saber lo que se me estorba y impide, bonitamente y sin que nadie lo viese, por junto a las narices aparté tanto cuanto el pañizuelo que me tapaba los ojos, y por allí miré hacia la tierra, y parecióme que toda ella no era mayor que un grano de mostaza, y los hombres que andaban sobre ella, poco mayores que avellanas; porque se vea cuán altos debíamos de ir entonces.

A esto dijo la duquesa:

-Sancho amigo, mirad lo que decís, que, a lo que parece, vos no visteis la tierra, sino los hombres que andaban sobre ella; y está claro que si la tierra os pareció como un grano de mostaza, y cada hombre como una avellana, un hombre solo había de cubrir toda la tierra.

-Así es verdad -respondió Sancho-, pero, con todo eso, la descubrí por un ladito, y la vi toda.

-Mirad, Sancho -dijo la duquesa-, que por un ladito no se ve el todo de lo que se mira.

-Yo no sé esas miradas -replicó Sancho-: sólo sé que será bien que vuestra señoría entienda que, pues volábamos por encantamento, por encantamento podía yo ver toda la tierra y todos los hombres por doquiera que los mirara; y si esto no se me cree, tampoco creará vuestra merced cómo, descubriéndome por junto a las cejas, me vi tan junto al cielo que no había de mí a él palmo y medio, y por lo que puedo jurar, señora mía, que es muy grande además. Y sucedió que íbamos por parte donde están las siete cabrillas; y en Dios y en mi ánima que, como yo en mi niñez fui en mi tierra cabrerizo, que así como las vi, ¡me dio una gana de entretenerme con ellas un rato...! Y si no le cumpliera me parece que reventara. Vengo, pues, y tomo, y ¿qué hago? Sin decir nada a nadie, ni a mi señor tampoco, bonita y pasitamente me apeé de Clavileño, y me entretuve con las cabrillas, que son como unos alhelíes y como unas flores, casi tres cuartos de hora, y Clavileño no se movió de un lugar, ni pasó adelante.

-Y, en tanto que el buen Sancho se entretenía con las cabras -preguntó el duque-, ¿en qué se entretenía el señor don Quijote?

A lo que don Quijote respondió:

-Como todas estas cosas y estos tales sucesos van fuera del orden natural, no es mucho que Sancho diga lo que dice. De mí sé decir que ni me descubrí por alto ni por bajo, ni vi el cielo ni la tierra, ni la mar ni las arenas. Bien es verdad que sentí que pasaba por la región del aire, y aun que tocaba a la del fuego; pero que pasásemos de allí no lo puedo creer, pues, estando la región del fuego entre el cielo de la luna y la última región del aire, no podíamos llegar al cielo donde están las siete cabrillas que Sancho dice, sin abrasarnos; y, pues no nos asuramos, o Sancho miente o Sancho sueña.

-Ni miento ni sueño -respondió Sancho-: si no, pregúntenme las señas de las tales cabras, y por ellas verán si digo verdad o no.

-Dígalas, pues, Sancho -dijo la duquesa.

-Son -respondió Sancho-las dos verdes, las dos encarnadas, las dos azules, y la una de mezcla.

-Nueva manera de cabras es ésa -dijo el duque-, y por esta nuestra región del suelo no se usan tales colores; digo, cabras de tales colores.

-Bien claro está eso -dijo Sancho-; sí, que diferencia ha de haber de las cabras del cielo a las del suelo.

-Decidme, Sancho -preguntó el duque-: ¿vistes allá en entre esas cabras algún cabrón?

-No, señor -respondió Sancho-, pero oí decir que ninguno pasaba de los cuernos de la luna.

No quisieron preguntarle más de su viaje, porque les pareció que llevaba Sancho hilo de pasearse por todos los cielos, y dar nuevas de cuanto allá pasaba, sin haberse movido del jardín.

En resolución, éste fue el fin de la aventura de la dueña Dolorida, que dio que reír a los duques, no sólo aquel tiempo, sino el de toda su vida, y que contar a Sancho siglos, si los viviera; y, llegándose don Quijote a Sancho, al oído le dijo:

-Sancho, pues vos queréis que se os crea lo que habéis visto en el cielo, yo quiero que vos me creáis a mí lo que vi en la cueva de Montesinos; y no os digo más.

Capítulo XLII

De los consejos que dio don Quijote a Sancho Panza antes que fuese a gobernar la ínsula, con otras cosas bien consideradas

CON EL FELICE y gracioso suceso de la aventura de la Dolorida, quedaron tan contentos los duques, que determinaron pasar con las burlas adelante, viendo el acomodado sujeto que tenían para que se tuviesen por veras; y así, habiendo dado la traza y órdenes que sus criados y sus vasallos habían de guardar con Sancho en el gobierno de la ínsula prometida, otro día, que fue el que sucedió al vuelo de Clavileño, dijo el duque a Sancho que se adeliñase y compusiese para ir a ser gobernador, que ya sus insulanos le estaban esperando como el agua de mayo. Sancho se le humilló y le dijo:

-Después que bajé del cielo, y después que desde su alta cumbre miré la tierra y la vi tan pequeña, se templó en parte en mí la gana que tenía tan grande de ser gobernador; porque, ¿qué grandeza es mandar en un grano de mostaza, o qué dignidad o imperio el gobernar a media docena de hombres tamaños como avellanas, que, a mi parecer, no había más en toda la tierra? Si vuestra señoría fuese servido de darme una tantica parte del cielo, aunque no fuese más de media legua, la tomaría de mejor gana que la mayor ínsula del mundo.

-Mirad, amigo Sancho -respondió el duque-: yo no puedo dar parte del cielo a nadie, aunque no sea mayor que una uña, que a solo Dios están reservadas esas mercedes y gracias. Lo que puedo dar os doy, que es una ínsula hecha y derecha, redonda y bien proporcionada, y sobremanera fértil y abundosa, donde si vos os sabéis dar maña, podéis con las riquezas de la tierra granjear las del cielo.

-Ahora bien -respondió Sancho-, venga esa ínsula, que yo pugnaré por ser tal gobernador que, a pesar de bellacos, me vaya al cielo; y esto no es por codicia que yo tenga de salir de mis casillas ni de levantarme a mayores, sino por el deseo que tengo de probar a qué sabe el ser gobernador.

-Si una vez lo probáis, Sancho -dijo el duque-, comeréis heis las manos tras el gobierno, por ser dulcísima cosa el mandar y ser obedecido. A buen seguro que cuando vuestro dueño llegue a ser emperador, que lo será sin duda, según van encaminadas sus cosas, que no se lo arranquen comoquiera, y que le duela y le pese en la mitad del alma del tiempo que hubiere dejado de serlo.

-Señor -replicó Sancho-, yo imagino que es bueno mandar, aunque sea a un ható de ganado.

-Con vos me entierren, Sancho, que sabéis de todo -respondió el duque-, y yo espero que seréis tal gobernador como vuestro juicio promete, y quédese esto aquí y advertid que mañana en ese mismo día habéis de ir al gobierno de la ínsula, y esta tarde os acomodarán del traje conveniente que habéis de llevar y de todas las cosas necesarias a vuestra partida.

-Vístanme -dijo Sancho- como quisieren, que de cualquier manera que vaya vestido seré Sancho Panza.

-Así es verdad -dijo el duque-, pero los trajes se han de acomodar con el oficio o dignidad que se profesa, que no sería bien que un jurisperito se vistiese como soldado, ni un soldado como un sacerdote. Vos, Sancho, iréis vestido parte de letrado y parte de capitán, porque en la ínsula que os doy tanto son menester las armas como las letras, y las letras como las armas.

-Letras -respondió Sancho-, pocas tengo, porque aún no sé el A, B, C; pero bástame tener el Christus en la memoria para ser buen gobernador. De las armas manejaré las que me dieren, hasta caer, y Dios delante.

-Con tan buena memoria -dijo el duque-, no podrá Sancho errar en nada.

En esto llegó don Quijote, y, sabiendo lo que pasaba y la celeridad con que Sancho se había de partir a su gobierno, con licencia del duque le tomó por la mano y se fue con él a su estancia, con intención de aconsejarle cómo se había de haber en su oficio.

Entrados, pues, en su aposento, cerró tras sí la puerta, y hizo casi por fuerza que Sancho se sentase junto a él, y con reposada voz le dijo:

-Infinitas gracias doy al cielo, Sancho amigo, de que, antes y primero que yo haya encontrado con alguna buena dicha, te haya salido a ti a recibir y a encontrar la buena ventura. Yo, que en mi buena suerte te tenía librada la paga de tus servicios, me veo en los principios de aventajarme, y tú, antes de tiempo, contra la ley del razonable discurso, te vees premiado de tus deseos. Otros cohechan, importunan, solicitan, madrugan, ruegan, porfían, y no alcanzan lo que pretenden; y llega otro, y sin saber cómo ni cómo no, se halla con el cargo y oficio que otros muchos pretendieron; y aquí entra y encaja bien el decir que hay buena y mala fortuna en las pretensiones. Tú, que para mí, sin duda alguna, eres un porro, sin madrugar ni trasnochar y sin hacer diligencia alguna, con solo el aliento que te ha tocado de la andante caballería, sin más ni más te vees gobernador de una ínsula, como quien no dice nada. Todo esto digo, ¡oh Sancho!, para que no atribuyas a tus merecimientos la merced recebida, sino que des gracias al cielo, que dispone suavemente las cosas, y después las darás a la grandeza que en sí encierra la profesión de la caballería andante. Dispuesto, pues, el corazón a creer lo que te he dicho, está, ¡oh hijo!, atento a este tu Catón, que quiere aconsejarte y ser norte y guía que te encamine y saque a seguro puerto deste mar proceloso donde vas a engolfarte; que los oficios y grandes cargos no son otra cosa sino un golfo profundo de confusiones. Primeramente, ¡oh hijo!, has de temer a Dios, porque en el temerle está la sabiduría, y siendo sabio no podrás errar en nada. Lo segundo, has de poner los ojos en quien eres, procurando conocerte a ti mismo, que es el más difícil conocimiento que puede imaginarse. Del conocerte saldrá el no hincharte como la rana que quiso igualarse con el buey, que si esto haces, vendrá a ser feos pies de la rueda de tu locura la consideración de haber guardado puercos en tu tierra.

-Así es la verdad -respondió Sancho-, pero fue cuando muchacho; pero después, algo hombrecillo, gansos fueron los que guardé, que no puercos; pero esto paréceme a mí que no hace al caso, que no todos los que gobiernan vienen de casta de reyes.

-Así es verdad -replicó don Quijote-, por lo cual los no de principios nobles deben acompañar la gravedad del cargo que ejercitan con una blanda suavidad que, guiada por la prudencia, los libre de la murmuración maliciosa, de quien no hay estado que se escape. Haz gala, Sancho, de la humildad de tu linaje, y no te desprecies de decir que vienes de labradores; porque, viendo que no te corres, ninguno se pondrá a correrte; y préciate más de ser humilde virtuoso que pecador soberbio. Innumerables son aquellos que, de baja estirpe nacidos, han subido a la suma dignidad pontificia e imperatoria; y desta verdad te pudiera traer tantos ejemplos, que te cansaran. Mira, Sancho: si tomas por medio a la virtud, y te precias de hacer hechos virtuosos, no hay para qué tener envidia a los que los tienen de príncipes y señores, porque la sangre se hereda y la virtud se aquista, y la virtud vale por sí sola lo que la sangre no vale. Siendo esto así, como lo es, que si acaso viniere a verte cuando estés en tu ínsula alguno de tus parientes, no le deseches ni le afrentes; antes le has de acoger, agasajar y regalar, que con esto satisfacerás al cielo, que gusta que nadie se desprecie de lo que él hizo, y corresponderás a lo que debes a la naturaleza bien concertada. Si trujeres a tu mujer contigo (porque no es bien que los que asisten a gobiernos de mucho tiempo estén sin las propias), enséñala, doctrínala y desbástala de su natural rudeza, porque todo lo que suele adquirir un gobernador discreto suele perder y derramar una mujer rústica y tonta. Si acaso enviudares, cosa que puede suceder, y con el cargo mejorares de consorte, no la tomes tal, que te sirva de anzuelo y de caña de pescar, y del no quiero de tu capilla, porque en verdad te digo que de todo aquello que la mujer del juez recibiere ha de dar cuenta el marido en la residencia universal, donde pagará con el cuatro tanto en la muerte las partidas de que no se hubiere hecho cargo en la vida. Nunca te guíes por la ley del encaje, que suele tener mucha cabida con los ignorantes que presumen de agudos. Hallen en ti más compasión las lágrimas del pobre, pero no más justicia, que las informaciones del rico. Procura descubrir la verdad por entre las promesas y dádivas del rico, como por entre los sollozos e importunidades del pobre. Cuando pudiere y debiere tener lugar la equidad, no cargues todo el rigor de la ley al delincuente, que no es mejor la fama del juez riguroso que la del compasivo. Si acaso doblares la vara de la justicia, no sea con el peso de la dádiva, sino con el de la misericordia. Cuando te sucediere juzgar algún pleito de algún tu enemigo, aparta las mientes de tu injuria y ponlas en la verdad del caso. No te ciegue la pasión propia en la causa ajena, que los yerros que en ella hicieres, las más veces, serán sin remedio; y si le tuvieren, será a costa de tu crédito, y aun de tu hacienda. Si alguna mujer hermosa veniere a pedirte justicia, quita los ojos de sus lágrimas y tus oídos de sus gemidos, y considera de espacio la sustancia de lo que pide, si no quieres que se anegue tu razón en su llanto y tu bondad en sus suspiros. Al que has de castigar con obras no trates mal con palabras, pues le basta al desdichado la pena del suplicio, sin la añadidura de las malas razones. Al culpado que cayere debajo de tu jurisdicción considéralo hombre miserable, sujeto a las condiciones de la depravada naturaleza nuestra, y en todo cuanto fuere de tu parte, sin hacer agravio a la contraria, muéstratele piadoso y clemente, porque, aunque los atributos de Dios todos son iguales, más resplandece y campea a nuestro ver el de la misericordia que el de la justicia. Si estos preceptos y estas reglas sigues, Sancho, serán luengos tus días, tu fama será eterna, tus premios colmados, tu felicidad indecible, casarás tus hijos como quisieres, títulos tendrán ellos y tus nietos, vivirás en paz y beneplácito de las gentes, y en los últimos pasos de la vida te alcanzará el de la muerte, en vejez suave y madura, y cerrarán tus ojos las tiernas y delicadas manos de tus terceros netezuelos. Esto que hasta aquí te he dicho son documentos que han de adornar tu alma; escucha ahora los que han de servir para adorno del cuerpo.

Capítulo XLIII

De los consejos segundos que dio don Quijote a Sancho Panza

¿QUIÉN oyera el pasado razonamiento de don Quijote que no le tuviera por persona muy cuerda y mejor intencionada? Pero, como muchas veces en el progreso desta grande historia queda dicho, solamente disparaba en tocándole en la caballería, y en los demás discursos mostraba tener claro y desenfadado entendimiento, de manera que a cada paso desacreditaban sus obras su juicio, y su juicio sus obras; pero en ésta destos segundos documentos que dio a Sancho, mostró tener gran donaire, y puso su discreción y su locura en un levantado punto.

Atentísimamente le escuchaba Sancho, y procuraba conservar en la memoria sus consejos, como quien pensaba guardarlos y salir por ellos a buen parto de la preñez de su gobierno. Prosiguió, pues, don Quijote, y dijo:

-En lo que toca a cómo has de gobernar tu persona y casa, Sancho, lo primero que te encargo es que seas limpio, y que te cortes las uñas, sin dejarlas crecer, como algunos hacen, a quien su ignorancia les ha dado a entender que las uñas largas les hermosean las manos, como si aquel escremento y añadidura que se dejan de cortar fuese uña, siendo antes garras de cernícalo lagartijero: puerco y extraordinario abuso. No andes, Sancho, desceñido y flojo, que el vestido descompuesto da indicios de ánimo desmazelado, si ya la descompostura y flojedad no cae debajo de socarronería, como se juzgó en la de Julio César. Toma con discreción el pulso a lo que pudiere valer tu oficio, y si sufriere que des librea a tus criados, dásela honesta y provechosa más que vistosa y bizarra, y repártela entre tus criados y los pobres: quiero decir que si has de vestir seis pajes, viste tres y otros tres pobres, y así tendrás pajes para el cielo y para el suelo; y este nuevo modo de dar librea no la alcanzan los vanagloriosos. No comas ajos ni cebollas, porque no saquen por el olor tu villanería. Anda despacio; habla con reposo, pero no de manera que parezca que te escuchas a ti mismo, que toda afectación es mala. Come poco y cena más poco, que la salud de todo el cuerpo se fragua en la oficina del estómago. Sé templado en el beber, considerando que el vino demasiado ni guarda secreto ni cumple palabra. Ten cuenta, Sancho, de no mascar a dos carrillos, ni de erutar delante de nadie.

-Eso de erutar no entiendo -dijo Sancho.

Y don Quijote le dijo:

-Erutar, Sancho, quiere decir regoldar, y éste es uno de los más torpes vocablos que tiene la lengua castellana, aunque es muy sinificativo; y así, la gente curiosa se ha acogido al latín, y al regoldar dice erutar, y a los regüeldos, erutaciones; y, cuando algunos no entienden estos términos, importa poco, que el uso los irá introduciendo con el tiempo, que con facilidad se entiendan; y esto es enriquecer la lengua, sobre quien tiene poder el vulgo y el uso.

-En verdad, señor -dijo Sancho-, que uno de los consejos y avisos que pienso llevar en la memoria ha de ser el de no regoldar, porque lo suelo hacer muy a menudo.

-Erutar, Sancho, que no regoldar -dijo don Quijote.

-Erutar diré de aquí adelante -respondió Sancho-, y a fee que no se me olvide.

-También, Sancho, no has de mezclar en tus pláticas la muchedumbre de refranes que sueles; que, puesto que los refranes son sentencias breves, muchas veces los traes tan por los cabellos, que más parecen disparates que sentencias.

-Eso Dios lo puede remediar -respondió Sancho-, porque sé más refranes que un libro, y viénense tantos juntos a la boca cuando hablo, que riñen por salir unos con otros, pero la lengua va arrojando los primeros que encuentra, aunque no vengan a pelo. Mas yo tendré cuenta de aquí adelante de decir los que convengan a la gravedad de mi cargo, que en casa llena presto se guisa la cena, y quien destaja no baraja, y a buen salvo está el que repica, y el dar y el tener seso ha menester.

-¡Eso sí, Sancho! -dijo don Quijote-: ¡encaja, ensarta, enhila refranes, que nadie te va a la mano! ¡Castígame mi madre, y yo trómpogelas! Estoyte diciendo que escuses refranes, y en un instante has echado aquí una letanía dellos, que así cuadran con lo que vamos tratando como por los cerros de Úbeda. Mira, Sancho, no te digo yo que parece mal un refrán traído a propósito, pero cargar y ensartar refranes a troche moche hace la plática desmayada y baja. Cuando subieres a caballo, no vayas echando el cuerpo sobre el arzón postrero, ni lleves las piernas tiesas y tiradas y desviadas de la barriga del caballo, ni tampoco vayas tan flojo que parezca que vas sobre el rucio: que el andar a caballo a unos hace caballeros; a otros, caballerizos. Sea moderado tu sueño, que el que no madruga con el sol, no goza del día; y advierte, ¡oh Sancho!, que la diligencia es madre de la buena ventura, y la pereza, su contraria, jamás llegó al término que pide un buen deseo. Este último consejo que ahora darte quiero, puesto que no sirva para adorno del cuerpo, quiero que le lleves muy en la memoria, que creo que no te será de menos provecho que los que hasta aquí te he dado; y es que jamás te pongas a disputar de linajes, a lo menos, comparándolos entre sí, pues, por fuerza, en los que se comparan uno ha de ser el mejor, y del que abatieres serás aborrecido, y del que levatares en ninguna manera premiado. Tu vestido será calza entera, ropilla larga, herreruelo un poco más largo; greguescos, ni por pienso, que no les están bien ni a los caballeros ni a los gobernadores. Por ahora, esto se me ha ofrecido, Sancho, que aconsejarte; andará el tiempo, y, según las ocasiones, así serán mis documentos, como tú tengas cuidado de avisarme el estado en que te hallares.

-Señor -respondió Sancho-, bien veo que todo cuanto vuestra merced me ha dicho son cosas buenas, santas y provechosas, pero ¿de qué han de servir, si de ninguna me acuerdo? Verdad sea que aquello de no dejarme crecer las uñas y de casarme otra vez, si se ofreciere, no se me pasará del magín, pero esotros badulaques y enredos y revoltillos, no se me acuerda ni acordará más dellos que de las nubes de antaño, y así, será menester que se me den por escrito, que, puesto que no sé leer ni escribir, yo se los daré a mi confesor para que me los encaje y recapacite cuando fuere menester.

-¡Ah, pecador de mí -respondió don Quijote-, y qué mal parece en los gobernadores el no saber leer ni escribir!; porque has de saber, ¡oh Sancho!, que no saber un hombre leer, o ser zurdo, arguye una de dos cosas: o que fue hijo de padres demasiado de humildes y bajos, o él tan travieso y malo que no pudo entrar en el buen uso ni la buena doctrina. Gran falta es la que llevas contigo, y así, querría que aprendieses a firmar siquiera.

-Bien sé firmar mi nombre -respondió Sancho-, que cuando fui prioste en mi lugar, aprendí a hacer unas letras como de marca de fardo, que decían que decía mi nombre; cuanto más, que fingiré que tengo tullida la mano derecha, y haré que firme otro por mí; que para todo hay remedio, si no es para la muerte; y, teniendo yo el mando y el palo, haré lo que quisiere; cuanto más, que el que tiene el padre alcalde... Y, siendo yo gobernador, que es más que ser alcalde, ¡llegaos, que la dejan ver! No, sino popen y calóñenme, que vendrán por lana y volverán trasquilados; y a quien Dios quiere bien, la casa le sabe; y las necedades del rico por sentencias pasan en el mundo; y, siéndolo yo, siendo gobernador y juntamente liberal, como lo pienso ser, no habrá falta que se me parezca. No, sino haceos miel, y paparos han moscas; tanto vales cuanto tienes, decía una mi agüela, y del hombre arraigado no te verás vengado.

-¡Oh, maldito seas de Dios, Sancho! -dijo a esta sazón don Quijote-. ¡Sesenta mil satanases te lleven a ti y a tus refranes! Una hora ha que los estás ensartando y dándome con cada uno tragos de tormento. Yo te aseguro que estos refranes te han de llevar un día a la horca; por ellos te han de quitar el gobierno tus vasallos, o ha de haber entre ellos comunidades. Dime, ¿dónde los hallas, ignorante, o cómo los aplicas, mentecato, que para decir yo uno y aplicarle bien, sudo y trabajo como si cavase?

-Por Dios, señor nuestro amo -replicó Sancho-, que vuesa merced se queja de bien pocas cosas. ¿A qué diablos se pudre de que yo me sirva de mi hacienda, que ninguna otra tengo, ni otro caudal alguno, sino refranes y más refranes? Y ahora se me ofrecen cuatro que venían aquí pintiparados, o como peras en tabaque, pero no los diré, porque al buen callar llaman Sancho.

-Ese Sancho no eres tú -dijo don Quijote-, porque no sólo no eres buen callar, sino mal hablar y mal porfiar; y, con todo eso, querría saber qué cuatro refranes te ocurrían ahora a la memoria que venían aquí a propósito, que yo ando recorriendo la mía, que la tengo buena, y ninguno se me ofrece.

-¿Qué mejores -dijo Sancho- que «entre dos muelas cordales nunca pongas tus pulgares», y «a idos de mi casa y qué queréis con mi mujer, no hay responder», y «si da el cántaro en la piedra o la piedra en el cántaro, mal para el cántaro», todos los cuales vienen a pelo? Que nadie se tome con su gobernador ni con el que le manda, porque saldrá lastimado, como el que pone el dedo entre dos muelas cordales, y aunque no sean cordales, como sean muelas, no importa; y a lo que dijere el gobernador no hay que replicar, como al «salíos de mi casa y qué queréis con mi mujer». Pues lo de la piedra en el cántaro un ciego lo verá. Así que, es menester que el que vee la mota en el ojo ajeno, vea la viga en el suyo, porque no se diga por él: «espantóse la muerta de la degollada», y vuestra merced sabe bien que más sabe el necio en su casa que el cuerdo en la ajena.

-Eso no, Sancho -respondió don Quijote-, que el necio en su casa ni en la ajena sabe nada, a causa que sobre el aumento de la necedad no asienta ningún discreto edificio. Y dejemos esto aquí, Sancho, que si mal gobernares, tuya será la culpa, y mía la vergüenza; mas consuélome que he hecho lo que debía en aconsejarte con las veras y con la discreción a mí posible: con esto salgo de mi obligación y de mi promesa. Dios te guíe, Sancho, y te gobierne en tu gobierno, y a mí me saque del escrúpulo que me queda que has de dar con toda la ínsula patas arriba, cosa que pudiera yo escusar con descubrir al duque quién eres, diciéndole que toda esa gordura y esa personilla que tienes no es otra cosa que un costal lleno de refranes y de malicias.

-Señor -replicó Sancho-, si a vuestra merced le parece que no soy de pro para este gobierno, desde aquí le suelto, que más quiero un solo negro de la uña de mi alma que a todo mi cuerpo; y así me sustentaré Sancho a secas con pan y cebolla, como gobernador con perdices y capones; y más que, mientras se duerme, todos son iguales, los grandes y los menores, los pobres y los ricos; y si vuestra merced mira en ello, verá que sólo vuestra merced me ha puesto en esto de gobernar: que yo no sé más de gobiernos de ínsulas que un buitre; y si se imagina que por ser gobernador me ha de llevar el diablo, más me quiero ir Sancho al cielo que gobernador al infierno.

-Por Dios, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, que, por solas estas últimas razones que has dicho, juzgo que mereces ser gobernador de mil ínsulas: buen natural tienes, sin el cual no hay ciencia que valga; encomiéndate a Dios, y procura no errar en la primera intención; quiero decir que siempre tengas intento y firme propósito de acertar en cuantos negocios te ocurrieren, porque siempre favorece el cielo los buenos deseos. Y vámonos a comer, que creo que ya estos señores nos aguardan.

Capítulo XLIV

Cómo Sancho Panza fue llevado al gobierno, y de la estraña aventura que en el castillo sucedió a don Quijote

DICEN que en el propio original desta historia se lee que, llegando Cide Hamete a escribir este capítulo, no le tradujo su intérprete como él le había escrito, que fue un modo de queja que tuvo el moro de sí mismo, por haber tomado entre manos una historia tan seca y tan limitada como esta de don Quijote, por parecerle que siempre había de hablar dél y de Sancho, sin osar estenderse a otras digresiones y episodios más graves y más entretenidos; y decía que el ir siempre atenido el entendimiento, la mano y la pluma a escribir de un solo sujeto y hablar por las bocas de pocas personas era un trabajo incomfortable, cuyo fruto no redundaba en el de su autor, y que, por huir deste inconveniente, había usado en la primera parte del artificio de algunas novelas, como fueron la del Curioso impertinente y la del Capitán cautivo, que están como separadas de la historia, puesto que las demás que allí se cuentan son casos sucedidos al mismo don Quijote, que no podían dejar de escribirse. También pensó, como él dice, que muchos, llevados de la atención que piden las hazañas de don Quijote, no la darían a las novelas, y pasarían por ellas, o con priesa o con enfado, sin advertir la gala y artificio que en sí contienen, el cual se mostrara bien al descubierto cuando, por sí solas, sin arrimarse a las locuras de don Quijote ni a las sandeces de Sancho, salieran a luz. Y así, en esta segunda parte no quiso ingerir novelas sueltas ni pegadizas, sino algunos episodios que lo pareciesen, nacidos de los mismos sucesos que la verdad ofrece; y aun éstos, limitadamente y con solas las palabras que bastan a declararlos; y, pues se contiene y cierra en los estrechos límites de la narración, teniendo habilidad, suficiencia y entendimiento para tratar del universo todo, pide no se desprecie su trabajo, y se le den alabanzas, no por lo que escribe, sino por lo que ha dejado de escribir.

Y luego prosigue la historia diciendo que, en acabando de comer don Quijote, el día que dio los consejos a Sancho, aquella tarde se los dio escritos, para que él buscase quien se los leyese; pero, apenas se los hubo dado, cuando se le cayeron y vinieron a manos del duque, que los comunicó con la duquesa, y los dos se admiraron de nuevo de la locura y del ingenio de don Quijote; y así, llevando adelante sus burlas, aquella tarde enviaron a Sancho con mucho acompañamiento al lugar que para él había de ser ínsula.

Acaeció, pues, que el que le llevaba a cargo era un mayordomo del duque, muy discreto y muy gracioso -que no puede haber gracia donde no hay discreción-, el cual había hecho la persona de la condesa Trifaldi, con el donaire que queda referido; y con esto, y con ir industriado de sus señores de cómo se había de haber con Sancho, salió con su intento maravillosamente. Digo, pues, que acaeció que, así como Sancho vio al tal mayordomo, se le figuró en su rostro el mismo de la Trifaldi, y, volviéndose a su señor, le dijo: -Señor, o a mí me ha de llevar el diablo de aquí de donde estoy, en justo y en creyente, o vuestra merced me ha de confesar que el rostro deste mayordomo del duque, que aquí está, es el mismo de la Dolorida.

Miró don Quijote atentamente al mayordomo, y, habiéndole mirado, dijo a Sancho: -No hay para qué te lleve el diablo, Sancho, ni en justo ni en creyente, que no sé lo que quieres decir; que el rostro de la Dolorida es el del mayordomo, pero no por eso el mayordomo es la Dolorida; que, a serlo, implicaría contradicción muy grande, y no es tiempo ahora de hacer estas averiguaciones, que sería entrarnos en intrincados laberintos. Créeme, amigo, que es menester rogar a Nuestro Señor muy de veras que nos libre a los dos de malos hechiceros y de malos encantadores.

-No es burla, señor -replicó Sancho-, sino que denantes le oí hablar, y no pareció sino que la voz de la Trifaldi me sonaba en los oídos. Ahora bien, yo callaré, pero no dejaré de andar advertido de aquí adelante, a ver si descubre otra señal que confirme o desfaga mi sospecha.

-Así lo has de hacer, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, y darásme aviso de todo lo que en este caso descubrieres y de todo aquello que en el gobierno te sucediere.

Salió, en fin, Sancho, acompañado de mucha gente, vestido a lo letrado, y encima un gabán muy ancho de chamelote de aguas leonado, con una montera de lo mismo, sobre un macho a la jineta, y detrás dél, por orden del duque, iba el rucio con jaeces y ornamentos jumentiles de seda y flamantes. Volvía Sancho la cabeza de cuando en cuando a mirar a su asno, con cuya compañía iba tan contento que no se trocara con el emperador de Alemaña.

Al despedirse de los duques, les besó las manos, y tomó la bendición de su señor, que se la dio con lágrimas, y Sancho la recibió con pucheritos.

Deja, lector amable, ir en paz y en hora buena al buen Sancho, y espera dos fanegas de risa, que te ha de causar el saber cómo se portó en su cargo, y, en tanto, atiende a saber lo que le pasó a su amo aquella noche; que si con ello no rieres, por lo menos desplegarás los labios con risa de jimia, porque los sucesos de don Quijote, o se han de celebrar con admiración, o con risa.

Cuéntase, pues, que, apenas se hubo partido Sancho, cuando don Quijote sintió su soledad; y si le fuera posible revocarle la comisión y quitarle el gobierno, lo hiciera. Conoció la duquesa su melancolía, y preguntóle que de qué estaba triste; que si era por la ausencia de Sancho, que escuderos, dueñas y doncellas había en su casa que le servirían muy a satisfacción de su deseo.

-Verdad es, señora mía -respondió don Quijote-, que siento la ausencia de Sancho, pero no es ésa la causa principal que me hace parecer que estoy triste, y, de los muchos ofrecimientos que Vuestra Excelencia me hace, solamente acepto y escojo el de la voluntad con que se me hacen, y, en lo demás, suplico a Vuestra Excelencia que dentro de mi aposento consienta y permita que yo solo sea el que me sirva.

-En verdad -dijo la duquesa-, señor don Quijote, que no ha de ser así: que le han de servir cuatro doncellas de las mías, hermosas como unas flores.

-Para mí -respondió don Quijote- no serán ellas como flores, sino como espinas que me punquen el alma. Así entrarán ellas en mi aposento, ni cosa que lo parezca, como volar. Si es que vuestra grandeza quiere llevar adelante el hacerme merced sin yo merecerla, déjeme que yo me las haya conmigo, y que yo me sirva de mis puertas adentro, que yo ponga una muralla en medio de mis deseos y de mi honestidad; y no quiero perder esta costumbre por la liberalidad que vuestra alteza quiere mostrar conmigo. Y, en resolución, antes dormiré vestido que consentir que nadie me desnude.

-No más, no más, señor don Quijote -replicó la duquesa-. Por mí digo que daré orden que ni aun una mosca entre en su estancia, no que una doncella; no soy yo persona, que por mí se ha de descabalar la decencia del señor don Quijote; que, según se me ha traslucido, la que más campea entre sus muchas virtudes es la de la honestidad. Desnúdese vuesa merced y vístase a sus solas y a su modo, como y cuando quisiere, que no habrá quien lo impida, pues dentro de su aposento hallará los vasos necesarios al menester del que duerme a puerta cerrada, porque ninguna natural necesidad le obligue a que la abra. Viva mil siglos la gran Dulcinea del Toboso, y sea su nombre estendido por toda la redondez de la tierra, pues mereció ser amada de tan valiente y tan honesto caballero, y los benignos cielos infundan en el corazón de Sancho Panza, nuestro gobernador, un deseo de acabar presto sus diciplinas, para que vuelva a gozar el mundo de la belleza de tan gran señora.

A lo cual dijo don Quijote:

-Vuestra altitud ha hablado como quien es, que en la boca de las buenas señoras no ha de haber ninguna que sea mala; y más venturosa y más conocida será en el mundo Dulcinea por haberla alabado vuestra grandeza, que por todas las alabanzas que puedan darle los más elocuentes de la tierra.

-Agora bien, señor don Quijote -replicó la duquesa-, la hora de cenar se llega, y el duque debe de esperar: venga vuesa merced y cenemos, y acostarése temprano, que el viaje que ayer hizo de Candaya no fue tan corto que no haya causado algún molimiento.

-No siento ninguno, señora -respondió don Quijote-, porque osaré jurar a Vuestra Excelencia que en mi vida he subido sobre bestia más reposada ni de mejor paso que Clavileño; y no sé yo qué le pudo mover a Malambruno para deshacerse de tan ligera y tan gentil cabalgadura, y abrasarla así, sin más ni más.

-A eso se puede imaginar -respondió la duquesa-que, arrepentido del mal que había hecho a la Trifaldi y compañía, y a otras personas, y de las maldades que como hechicero y encantador debía de haber cometido, quiso concluir con todos los instrumentos de su oficio, y, como a principal y que más le traía desasosegado, vagando de tierra en tierra, abrasó a Clavileño; que con sus abrasadas cenizas y con el trofeo del cartel queda eterno el valor del gran don Quijote de la Mancha.

De nuevo nuevas gracias dio don Quijote a la duquesa, y, en cenando, don Quijote se retiró en su aposento solo, sin consentir que nadie entrase con él a servirle: tanto se temía de encontrar ocasiones que le moviesen o forzasen a perder el honesto decoro que a su señora Dulcinea guardaba, siempre puesta en la imaginación la bondad de Amadís, flor y espejo de los andantes caballeros. Cerró tras sí la puerta, y a la luz de dos velas de cera se desnudó, y al descalzarse -¡oh desgracia indigna de tal persona!- se le soltaron, no suspiros, ni otra cosa, que desacreditasen la limpieza de su policía, sino hasta dos docenas de puntos de una media, que quedó hecha celosía. Afligióse en extremo el buen señor, y diera él por tener allí un adarme de seda verde una onza de plata; digo seda verde porque las medias eran verdes.

Aquí exclamó Benengeli, y, escribiendo, dijo «¡Oh pobreza, pobreza! ¡No sé yo con qué razón se movió aquel gran poeta cordobés a llamarte dádiva santa desagradecida!

Yo, aunque moro, bien sé, por la comunicación que he tenido con cristianos, que la santidad consiste en la caridad, humildad, fee, obediencia y pobreza; pero, con todo eso, digo que ha de tener mucho de Dios el que se viniere a contentar con ser pobre, si no es de aquel modo de pobreza de quien dice uno de sus mayores santos: “Tened todas las cosas como si no las tuviédeses”; y a esto llaman pobreza de espíritu; pero tú, segunda pobreza, que eres de la que yo hablo, ¿por qué quieres estrellarte con los hidalgos y bien nacidos más que con la otra gente? ¿Por qué los obligas a dar pantalia a los zapatos, y a que los botones de sus ropillas unos sean de seda, otros de cerdas, y otros de vidro? ¿Por qué sus cuellos, por la mayor parte, han de ser siempre escarolados, y no abiertos con molde?» Y en esto se echará de ver que es antiguo el uso del almidón y de los cuellos abiertos. Y prosiguió: «¡Miserable del bien nacido que va dando pistos a su honra, comiendo mal y a puerta cerrada, haciendo hipócrita al palillo de dientes con que sale a la calle después de no haber comido cosa que le obligue a limpiárselos! ¡Miserable de aquel, digo, que tiene la honra espantadiza, y piensa que desde una legua se le descubre el remiendo del zapato, el trasudor del sombrero, la hilaza del herreruelo y la hambre de su estómago!»

Todo esto se le renovó a don Quijote en la soltura de sus puntos, pero consolóse con ver que Sancho le había dejado unas botas de camino, que pensó ponerse otro día. Finalmente, él se recostó pensativo y pesaroso, así de la falta que Sancho le hacía como de la irreparable desgracia de sus medias, a quien tomara los puntos, aunque fuera con seda de otra color, que es una de las mayores señales de miseria que un hidalgo puede dar en el discurso de su prolija estrechez. Mató las velas; hacía calor y no podía dormir; levantóse del lecho y abrió un poco la ventana de una reja que daba sobre un hermoso jardín, y, al abrirla, sintió y oyó que andaba y hablaba gente en el jardín. Púsose a escuchar atentamente. Levantaron la voz los de abajo, tanto, que pudo oír estas razones: - No me porfíes, ¡oh Emerencia!, que cante, pues sabes que, desde el punto que este forastero entró en este castillo y mis ojos le miraron, yo no sé cantar, sino llorar; cuanto más, que el sueño de mi señora tiene más de ligero que de pesado, y no querría que nos hallase aquí por todo el tesoro del mundo. Y, puesto caso que durmiese y no despertase, en vano sería mi canto si duerme y no despierta para oírle este nuevo Eneas, que ha llegado a mis regiones para dejarme escarnida.

-No des en eso, Altisidora amiga -respondieron-, que sin duda la duquesa y cuantos hay en esa casa duermen, si no es el señor de tu corazón y el despertador de tu alma, porque ahora sentí que abría la ventana de la reja de su estancia, y sin duda debe de estar despierto; canta, lastimada mía, en tono bajo y suave al son de tu arpa, y, cuando la duquesa nos sienta, le echaremos la culpa al calor que hace.

-No está en eso el punto, ¡oh Emerencia! -respondió la Altisidora-, sino en que no querría que mi canto descubriese mi corazón y fuese juzgada de los que no tienen noticia de las fuerzas poderosas de amor por doncella antojadiza y liviana. Pero venga lo que viniere, que más vale vergüenza en cara que mancilla en corazón.

Y, en esto, sintió tocar una arpa suavísimamente. Oyendo lo cual, quedó don Quijote pasmado, porque en aquel instante se le vinieron a la memoria las infinitas aventuras semejantes a aquélla, de ventanas, rejas y jardines, músicas, requiebros y desvanecimientos que en los sus desvanecidos libros de caballerías había leído. Luego imaginó que alguna doncella de la duquesa estaba dél enamorada, y que la honestidad la forzaba a tener secreta su voluntad; temió no le rindiese, y propuso en su pensamiento el no dejarse vencer; y, encomendándose de todo buen ánimo y buen talante a su señora Dulcinea del Toboso, determinó de escuchar la música; y, para dar a entender que allí estaba, dio un fingido estornudo, de que no poco se alegraron las doncellas, que otra cosa no deseaban sino que don Quijote las oyese. Recorrida, pues, y afinada la arpa, Altisidora dio principio a este romance: -¡Oh, tú, que estás en tu lecho, entre sábanas de holanda,

durmiendo a pierna tendida
de la noche a la mañana, caballero el más valiente 5 que ha producido la Mancha, más honesto y más bendito que el oro fino de Arabia!

Oye a una triste doncella, bien crecida y mal lograda, 10 que en la luz de tus dos soles se siente abrasar el alma.

Tú buscas tus aventuras,
y ajenas desdichas hallas;
das las heridas, y niegas 15
el remedio de sanarlas.

Dime, valeroso joven, que Dios prospere tus ansias,
si te criaste en la Libia,
o en las montañas de Jaca; 20

si sierpes te dieron leche; si, a dicha, fueron tus amas la aspereza de las selvas
y el horror de las montañas.

Muy bien puede Dulcinea, 25
doncella rolliza y sana, preciarse de que ha rendido

a una tigre y fiera brava.

Por esto será famosa desde Henares a Jarama, 30
desde el Tajo a Manzanares, desde Pisuerga hasta Arlanza.

Trocáreme yo por ella,
y diera encima una saya
de las más gayadas mías, 35 que de oro le adornan franjas.

¡Oh, quién se viera en tus brazos,
o si no, junto a tu cama, rascándote la cabeza
y matándote la caspa! 40

Mucho pido, y no soy digna de merced tan señalada:
los pies quisiera traerte, que a una humilde esto le basta.

¡Oh, qué de cofias te diera, 45
qué de escarpines de plata, qué de calzas de damasco,
qué de herreruelos de holanda!

¡Qué de finísimas perlas, cada cual como una agalla, 50 que, a no tener compañeras,
Las solas fueran llamadas!

No mires de tu Tarpeya este incendio que me abrasa, Nerón manchego del mundo, 55
ni le avives con tu saña.

Niña soy, pulcela tierna, mi edad de quince no pasa:

catorce tengo y tres meses, te juro en Dios y en mi ánima. 60

No soy renca, ni soy coja, ni tengo nada de manca;
los cabellos, como lirios, que, en pie, por el suelo arrastran.

Y, aunque es mi boca aguileña 65
y la nariz algo chata, ser mis dientes de topacios mi belleza al cielo ensalza.

Mi voz, ya ves, si me escuchas, que a la que es más dulce iguala, 70
y soy de disposición
algo menos que mediana.

Estas y otras gracias mías, son despojos de tu aljaba;
desta casa soy doncella, 75
y Altisidora me llaman.

Aquí dio fin el canto de la malferida Altisidora, y comenzó el asombro del requerido don Quijote, el cual, dando un gran suspiro, dijo entre sí: -¡Que tengo de ser tan desdichado andante, que no ha de haber doncella que me mire que de mí no se enamore...! ¡Que tenga de ser tan corta de ventura la sin par Dulcinea del Toboso, que no la han de dejar a solas gozar de la incomparable firmeza mía...! ¿Qué la queréis, reinas? ¿A qué la perseguís, emperatrices? ¿Para qué la acosáis, doncellas de a catorce a quince años? Dejad, dejad a la miserable que triunfe, se goce y ufane con la suerte que Amor quiso darle en rendirle mi corazón y entregarle mi alma. Mirad, caterva enamorada, que para sola Dulcinea soy de masa y de alfenique, y para todas las demás soy de pedernal; para ella soy miel, y para vosotras acíbar; para mí sola Dulcinea es la hermosa, la discreta, la honesta, la gallarda y la bien nacida, y las demás, las feas, las necias, las livianas y las de peor linaje; para ser yo suyo, y no de otra alguna, me arrojó la naturaleza al mundo. Llore o cante Altisidora; desespérese Madama, por quien me aporrearón en el castillo del moro encantado, que yo tengo de ser de Dulcinea, cocido o asado, limpio, bien criado y honesto, a pesar de todas las potestades hechiceras de la tierra.

Y, con esto, cerró de golpe la ventana, y, despechado y pesaroso, como si le hubiera acontecido alguna gran desgracia, se acostó en su lecho, donde le dejaremos por ahora, porque nos está llamando el gran Sancho Panza, que quiere dar principio a su famoso gobierno.

Capítulo XLV

De cómo el gran Sancho Panza tomó la posesión de su ínsula, y del modo que comenzó a gobernar

¡OH PERPETUO descubridor de los antípodas, hacha del mundo, ojo del cielo, meneo dulce de las cantimploras, Timbrio aquí, Febo allí, tirador acá, médico acullá, padre de la Poesía, inventor de la Música: tú que siempre sales, y, aunque lo parece, nunca te pones! A ti digo, ¡oh sol, con cuya ayuda el hombre engendra al hombre!; a ti digo que me favorezcas, y alumbres la escuridad de mi ingenio, para que pueda discurrir por sus puntos en la narración del gobierno del gran Sancho Panza; que sin ti, yo me siento tibio, desmazelado y confuso.

Digo, pues, que con todo su acompañamiento llegó Sancho a un lugar de hasta mil vecinos, que era de los mejores que el duque tenía. Diéronle a entender que se llamaba la ínsula Barataria, o ya porque el lugar se llamaba Baratario, o ya por el barato con que se le había dado el gobierno. Al llegar a las puertas de la villa, que era cercada, salió el regimiento del pueblo a recibirle; tocaron las campanas, y todos los vecinos dieron muestras de general alegría, y con mucha pompa le llevaron a la iglesia mayor a dar gracias a Dios, y luego, con algunas ridículas ceremonias, le entregaron las llaves del pueblo, y le admitieron por perpetuo gobernador de la ínsula Barataria.

El traje, las barbas, la gordura y pequeñez del nuevo gobernador tenía admirada a toda la gente que el busilis del cuento no sabía, y aun a todos los que lo sabían, que eran muchos. Finalmente, en sacándole de la iglesia, le llevaron a la silla del juzgado y le sentaron en ella; y el mayordomo del duque le dijo:

-Es costumbre antigua en esta ínsula, señor gobernador, que el que viene a tomar posesión desta famosa ínsula está obligado a responder a una pregunta que se le hiciere, que sea algo intrincada y dificultosa, de cuya respuesta el pueblo toma y toca el pulso del ingenio de su nuevo gobernador; y así, o se alegra o se entristece con su venida.

En tanto que el mayordomo decía esto a Sancho, estaba él mirando unas grandes y muchas letras que en la pared frontera de su silla estaban escritas; y, como él no sabía leer, preguntó que qué eran aquellas pinturas que en aquella pared estaban. Fuele respondido:

-Señor, allí está escrito y notado el día en que Vuestra Señoría tomó posesión desta ínsula, y dice el epitafio: Hoy día, a tantos de tal mes y de tal año, tomó la posesión desta ínsula el señor don Sancho Panza, que muchos años la goce.

-Y ¿a quién llaman don Sancho Panza? -preguntó Sancho.

-A vuestra señoría -respondió el mayordomo-, que en esta ínsula no ha entrado otro Panza sino el que está sentado en esa silla.

-Pues advertid, hermano -dijo Sancho-, que yo no tengo don, ni en todo mi linaje le ha habido: Sancho Panza me llaman a secas, y Sancho se llamó mi padre, y Sancho mi agüelo, y todos fueron Panzas, sin añadiduras de dones ni donas; y yo imagino que en esta ínsula debe de haber más dones que piedras; pero basta: Dios me entiende, y podrá ser que, si el gobierno me dura cuatro días, yo escardaré estos dones, que, por la muchedumbre, deben de enfadar como los mosquitos. Pase adelante con su pregunta el señor mayordomo, que yo responderé lo mejor que supiere, ora se entristezca o no se entristezca el pueblo.

A este instante entraron en el juzgado dos hombres, el uno vestido de labrador y el otro de sastre, porque traía unas tijeras en la mano, y el sastre dijo:

-Señor gobernador, yo y este hombre labrador venimos ante vuestra merced en razón que este buen hombre llegó a mi tienda ayer (que yo, con perdón de los presentes, soy sastre examinado, que Dios sea bendito), y, poniéndome un pedazo de paño en las manos, me preguntó: «Señor, ¿habría en esto paño hartos para hacerme una caperuza?» Yo, tanteando el paño, le respondí que sí; él debióse de imaginar, a lo que yo imagino, e imaginé bien, que sin duda yo le quería hurtar alguna parte del paño, fundándose en su malicia y en la mala opinión de los sastres, y replicóme que mirase si habría para dos; adivinéle el pensamiento y díjele que sí; y él, caballero en su dañada y primera intención, fue añadiendo caperuzas, y yo añadiendo síes, hasta que llegamos a cinco caperuzas, y ahora en este punto acaba de venir por ellas: yo se las doy, y no me quiere pagar la hechura, antes me pide que le pague o vuelva su paño.

-¿Es todo esto así, hermano? -preguntó Sancho.

-Sí, señor -respondió el hombre-, pero hágale vuestra merced que muestre las cinco caperuzas que me ha hecho.

-De buena gana -respondió el sastre.

Y, sacando encontinente la mano debajo del herreruelo, mostró en ella cinco caperuzas puestas en las cinco cabezas de los dedos de la mano, y dijo:

-He aquí las cinco caperuzas que este buen hombre me pide, y en Dios y en mi conciencia que no me ha quedado nada del paño, y yo daré la obra a vista de veedores del oficio.

Todos los presentes se rieron de la multitud de las caperuzas y del nuevo pleito. Sancho se puso a considerar un poco, y dijo:

-Paréceme que en este pleito no ha de haber largas dilaciones, sino juzgar luego a juicio de buen varón; y así, yo doy por sentencia que el sastre pierda las hechuras, y el labrador el paño, y las caperuzas se lleven a los presos de la cárcel, y no haya más.

Si la sentencia pasada de la bolsa del ganadero movió a admiración a los circunstantes, ésta les provocó a risa; pero, en fin, se hizo lo que mandó el gobernador; ante el cual se presentaron dos hombres ancianos; el uno traía una cañaheja por báculo, y el sin báculo dijo:

-Señor, a este buen hombre le presté días ha diez escudos de oro en oro, por hacerle placer y buena obra, con condición que me los volviese cuando se los pidiese; pasáronse muchos días sin pedírselos, por no ponerle en mayor necesidad de volvérmelos que la que él tenía cuando yo se los presté; pero, por parecerme que se descuidaba en la paga, se los he pedido una y muchas veces, y no solamente no me los vuelve, pero me los niega y dice que nunca tales diez escudos le presté, y que si se los presté, que ya me los ha vuelto. Yo no tengo testigos ni del prestado ni de la vuelta, porque no me los ha vuelto; querría que vuestra merced le tomase juramento, y si jurare que me los ha vuelto, yo se los perdono para aquí y para delante de Dios.

-¿Qué decís vos a esto, buen viejo del báculo? -dijo Sancho.

A lo que dijo el viejo:

-Yo, señor, confieso que me los prestó, y baje vuestra merced esa vara; y, pues él lo deja en mi juramento, yo juraré como se los he vuelto y pagado real y verdaderamente.

Bajó el gobernador la vara, y, en tanto, el viejo del báculo dio el báculo al otro viejo, que se le tuviese en tanto que juraba, como si le embarazara mucho, y luego puso la mano en la cruz de la vara, diciendo que era verdad que se le habían prestado aquellos diez escudos que se le pedían; pero que él se los había vuelto de su mano a la suya, y que por no caer en ello se los volvía a pedir por momentos. Viendo lo cual el gran gobernador, preguntó al acreedor qué respondía a lo que decía su contrario; y dijo que sin duda alguna su deudor debía de decir verdad, porque le tenía por hombre de bien y buen cristiano, y que a él se le debía de haber olvidado el cómo y cuándo se los había vuelto, y que desde allí en adelante jamás le pediría nada. Tornó a tomar su báculo el deudor, y, bajando la cabeza, se salió del juzgado. Visto lo cual Sancho, y que sin más ni más se iba, y viendo también la paciencia del demandante, inclinó la cabeza sobre el pecho, y, poniéndose el índice de la mano derecha sobre las cejas y las narices, estuvo como pensativo un pequeño espacio, y luego alzó la cabeza y mandó que le llamasen al viejo del báculo, que ya se había ido. Trujéronsele, y, en viéndole Sancho, le dijo:

-Dadme, buen hombre, ese báculo, que le he menester.

-De muy buena gana -respondió el viejo-: hele aquí, señor.

Y púsosele en la mano. Tomóle Sancho, y, dándosele al otro viejo, le dijo:

-Andad con Dios, que ya vais pagado.

-¿Yo, señor? -respondió el viejo-. Pues, ¿vale esta cañaheja diez escudos de oro?

-Sí -dijo el gobernador-; o si no, yo soy el mayor porro del mundo. Y ahora se verá si tengo yo caletre para gobernar todo un reino.

Y mandó que allí, delante de todos, se rompiese y abriese la caña. Hízose así, y en el corazón della hallaron diez escudos en oro. Quedaron todos admirados, y tuvieron a su gobernador por un nuevo Salomón.

Preguntáronle de dónde había colegido que en aquella cañaheja estaban aquellos diez escudos, y respondió que de haberle visto dar el viejo que juraba, a su contrario, aquel báculo, en tanto que hacía el juramento, y jurar que se los había dado real y verdaderamente, y que, en acabando de jurar, le tornó a pedir el báculo, le vino a la imaginación que dentro dél estaba la paga de lo que pedían. De donde se podía colegir que los que gobiernan, aunque sean unos tontos, tal vez los encamina Dios en sus juicios; y más, que él había oído contar otro caso como aquél al cura de su lugar, y que él tenía tan gran memoria, que, a no olvidársele todo aquello de que quería acordarse, no hubiera tal memoria en toda la ínsula. Finalmente, el un viejo corrido y el otro pagado, se fueron, y los presentes quedaron admirados, y el que escribía las palabras, hechos y movimientos de Sancho no acababa de determinarse si le tendría y pondría por tonto o por discreto.

Luego, acabado este pleito, entró en el juzgado una mujer asida fuertemente de un hombre vestido de ganadero rico, la cual venía dando grandes voces, diciendo:

-¡Justicia, señor gobernador, justicia, y si no la hallo en la tierra, la iré a buscar al cielo! Señor gobernador de mi ánima, este mal hombre me ha cogido en la mitad dese campo, y se ha aprovechado de mi cuerpo como si fuera trapo mal lavado, y, ¡desdichada de mí!, me ha llevado lo que yo tenía guardado más de veinte y tres años ha, defendiéndolo de moros y cristianos, de naturales y extranjeros; y yo, siempre dura como un alcornoque, conservándome entera como la salamanquesa en el fuego, o como la lana entre las zarzas, para que este buen hombre llegase ahora con sus manos limpias a manosearme.

-Aun eso está por averiguar: si tiene limpias o no las manos este galán -dijo Sancho.

Y, volviéndose al hombre, le dijo qué decía y respondía a la querella de aquella mujer. El cual, todo turbado, respondió:

-Señores, yo soy un pobre ganadero de ganado de cerda, y esta mañana salía deste lugar de vender, con perdón sea dicho, cuatro puercos, que me llevaron de alcabalas y socaliñas poco menos de lo que ellos valían; volvíame a mi aldea, topé en el camino a esta buena dueña, y el diablo, que todo lo añasca y todo lo cuece, hizo que yogásemos juntos; paguéle lo suficiente, y ella, mal contenta, asió de mí, y no me ha dejado hasta traerme a este puesto. Dice que la forcé, y miente, para el juramento que hago o pienso hacer; y ésta es toda la verdad, sin faltar meaja.

Entonces el gobernador le preguntó si traía consigo algún dinero en plata; él dijo que hasta veinte ducados tenía en el seno, en una bolsa de cuero. Mandó que la sacase y se la entregase, así como estaba, a la querellante; él lo hizo temblando; tomóla la mujer, y, haciendo mil zalemas a todos y rogando a Dios por la vida y salud del señor gobernador, que así miraba por las huérfanas menesterosas y doncellas; y con esto se salió del juzgado, llevando la bolsa asida con entrambas manos, aunque primero miró si era de plata la moneda que llevaba dentro.

Apenas salió, cuando Sancho dijo al ganadero, que ya se le saltaban las lágrimas, y los ojos y el corazón se iban tras su bolsa:

-Buen hombre, id tras aquella mujer y quitadle la bolsa, aunque no quiera, y volved aquí con ella.

Y no lo dijo a tonto ni a sordo, porque luego partió como un rayo y fue a lo que se le mandaba. Todos los presentes estaban suspensos, esperando el fin de aquel pleito, y de allí a poco volvieron el hombre y la mujer más asidos y aferrados que la vez primera: ella la saya levantada y en el regazo puesta la bolsa, y el hombre pugnando por quitársela; mas no era posible, según la mujer la defendía, la cual daba voces diciendo:

-¡Justicia de Dios y del mundo! Mire vuestra merced, señor gobernador, la poca vergüenza y el poco temor deste desalmado, que, en mitad de poblado y en mitad de la calle, me ha querido quitar la bolsa que vuestra merced mandó darme.

-Y ¿háosla quitado? -preguntó el gobernador.

-¿Cómo quitar? -respondió la mujer-. Antes me dejara yo quitar la vida que me quiten la bolsa. ¡Bonita es la niña! ¡Otros gatos me han de echar a las barbas, que no este desventurado y asqueroso! ¡Tenazas y martillos, mazos y escoplos no serán bastantes a sacármela de las uñas, ni aun garras de leones: antes el ánima de en mitad en mitad de las carnes!

-Ella tiene razón -dijo el hombre-, y yo me doy por rendido y sin fuerzas, y confieso que las mías no son bastantes para quitársela, y déjola.

Entonces el gobernador dijo a la mujer:

-Mostrad, honrada y valiente, esa bolsa.

Ella se la dio luego, y el gobernador se la volvió al hombre, y dijo a la esforzada y no forzada:

-Hermana mía, si el mismo aliento y valor que habéis mostrado para defender esta bolsa le mostrárades, y aun la mitad menos, para defender vuestro cuerpo, las fuerzas de Hércules no os hicieran fuerza. Andad con Dios, y mucho de enhoramala, y no paréis en toda esta ínsula ni en seis leguas a la redonda, so pena de docientos azotes. ¡Andad luego digo, churrillera, desvergonzada y embaidora!

Espantóse la mujer y fuese cabizbaja y mal contenta, y el gobernador dijo al hombre:

-Buen hombre, andad con Dios a vuestro lugar con vuestro dinero, y de aquí adelante, si no le queréis perder, procurad que no os venga en voluntad de yogar con nadie.

El hombre le dio las gracias lo peor que supo, y fuese, y los circunstantes quedaron admirados de nuevo de los juicios y sentencias de su nuevo gobernador. Todo lo cual, notado de su coronista, fue luego escrito al duque, que con gran deseo lo estaba esperando.

Y quédese aquí el buen Sancho, que es mucha la priesa que nos da su amo, alborozado con la música de Altisidora.

Capítulo XLVI

Del temeroso espanto cencerril y gatuno que recibió don Quijote en el discurso de los amores de la enamorada Altisidora

DEJAMOS al gran don Quijote envuelto en los pensamientos que le habían causado la música de la enamorada doncella Altisidora. Acostóse con ellos, y, como si fueran pulgas, no le dejaron dormir ni sosegar un punto, y juntábansele los que le faltaban de sus medias; pero, como es ligero el tiempo, y no hay barranco que le detenga, corrió caballero en las horas, y con mucha presteza llegó la de la mañana. Lo cual visto por don Quijote, dejó las blandas plumas, y, no nada perezoso, se vistió su acamuzado vestido y se calzó sus botas de camino, por encubrir la desgracia de sus medias; arrojóse encima su mantón de escarlata y púsose en la cabeza una montera de terciopelo verde, guarnecida de pasamanos de plata; colgó el tahelí de sus hombros con su buena y tajadora espada, asió un gran rosario que consigo continuo traía, y con gran prosopopeya y contoneo salió a la antesala, donde el duque y la duquesa estaban ya vestidos y como esperándole; y, al pasar por una galería, estaban aposta esperándole Altisidora y la otra doncella su amiga, y, así como Altisidora vio a don Quijote, fingió desmayarse, y su amiga la recogió en sus faldas, y con gran presteza la iba a desabrochar el pecho. Don Quijote, que lo vio, llegándose a ellas, dijo: -Ya sé yo de qué proceden estos accidentes.

-No sé yo de qué -respondió la amiga-, porque Altisidora es la doncella más sana de toda esta casa, y yo nunca la he sentido un ¡ay! en cuanto ha que la conozco, que mal hayan cuantos caballeros andantes hay en el mundo, si es que todos son desagradecidos. Váyase vuesa merced, señor don Quijote, que no volverá en sí esta pobre niña en tanto que vuesa merced aquí estuviere.

A lo que respondió don Quijote:

-Haga vuesa merced, señora, que se me ponga un laúd esta noche en mi aposento, que yo consolaré lo mejor que pudiere a esta lastimada doncella; que en los principios amorosos los desengaños prestos suelen ser remedios calificados.

Y con esto se fue, porque no fuese notado de los que allí le viesan. No se hubo bien apartado, cuando, volviendo en sí la desmayada Altisidora, dijo a su compañera: -Menester será que se le ponga el laúd, que sin duda don Quijote quiere darnos música, y no será mala, siendo suya.

Fueron luego a dar cuenta a la duquesa de lo que pasaba y del laúd que pedía don Quijote, y ella, alegre sobremodo, concertó con el duque y con sus doncellas de hacerle una burla que fuese más risueña que dañosa, y con mucho contento esperaban la noche, que se vino tan apriesa como se había venido el día, el cual pasaron los duques en sabrosas pláticas con don Quijote. Y la duquesa aquel día real y verdaderamente despachó a un paje suyo, que había hecho en la selva la figura encantada de Dulcinea, a Teresa Panza, con la carta de su marido Sancho Panza, y con el lío de ropa que había dejado para que se le enviase, encargándole le trujese buena relación de todo lo que con ella pasase.

Hecho esto, y llegadas las once horas de la noche, halló don Quijote una vihuela en su aposento; templóla, abrió la reja, y sintió que andaba gente en el jardín; y, habiendo recorrido los trastes de la vihuela y afinándola lo mejor que supo, escupió y remondóse el pecho, y luego, con una voz ronquilla, aunque entonada, cantó el siguiente romance, que él mismo aquel día había compuesto: -
Suelen las fuerzas de amor sacar de quicio a las almas, tomando por instrumento

la ociosidad descuidada.

Suele el coser y el labrar, 5
y el estar siempre ocupada, de las amorosas ansias.

Aquí llegaba don Quijote de su canto, a quien estaban escuchando el duque y la duquesa, Altisidora y casi toda la gente del castillo, cuando de improviso, desde encima de un corredor que sobre la reja de don Quijote a plomo caía, descolgaron un cordel donde venían más de cien cencerros asidos, y luego, tras ellos, derramaron un gran saco de gatos, que asimismo traían cencerros menores atados a las colas. Fue tan grande el ruido de los cencerros y el mayar de los gatos, que, aunque los duques habían sido inventores de la burla, todavía les sobresaltó; y, temeroso, don Quijote quedó pasmado. Y quiso la suerte que dos o tres gatos se entraron por la reja de su estancia, y, dando de una parte a otra, parecía que una región de diablos andaba en ella. Apagaron las velas que en el aposento ardían, y andaban buscando por do escaparse. El descolgar y subir del cordel de los grandes cencerros no cesaba; la mayor parte de la gente del castillo, que no sabía la verdad del caso, estaba suspensa y admirada.

Levantóse don Quijote en pie, y, poniendo mano a la espada, comenzó a tirar estocadas por la reja y a decir a grandes voces: -¡Afuera, malignos encantadores! ¡Afuera, canalla hechiceresca, que yo soy don Quijote de la Mancha, contra quien no valen ni tienen fuerza vuestras malas intenciones!

Y, volviéndose a los gatos que andaban por el aposento, les tiró muchas cuchilladas; ellos acudieron a la reja, y por allí se salieron, aunque uno, viéndose tan acosado de las cuchilladas de don Quijote, le saltó al rostro y le asió de las narices con las uñas y los dientes, por cuyo dolor don Quijote comenzó a dar los mayores gritos que pudo. Oyendo lo cual el duque y la duquesa, y considerando lo que podía ser, con mucha presteza acudieron a su estancia, y, abriendo con llave maestra, vieron al pobre caballero pugnando con todas sus fuerzas por arrancar el gato de su rostro. Entraron con luces y vieron la desigual pelea; acudió el duque a despartirla, y don Quijote dijo a voces: -¡No me le quite nadie! ¡Déjenme mano a mano con este demonio, con este hechicero, con este encantador, que yo le daré a entender de mí a él quién es don Quijote de la Mancha!

Pero el gato, no curándose destas amenazas, gruñía y apretaba. Mas, en fin, el duque se le desarraigó y le echó por la reja.

Quedó don Quijote acribado el rostro y no muy sanas las narices, aunque muy despechado porque no le habían dejado fenecer la batalla que tan trabada tenía con aquel malandrín encantador. Hicieron traer aceite de Aparicio, y la misma Altisidora, con sus blanquísimas manos, le puso unas vendas por todo lo herido; y, al ponérselas, con voz baja le dijo: -Todas estas malandanzas te suceden, empedernido caballero, por el pecado de tu dureza y pertinacia; y plega a Dios que se le olvide a Sancho tu escudero el azotarse, porque nunca salga de su encanto esta tan amada tuya Dulcinea, ni tú lo goces, ni llegues a tálamo con ella, a lo menos viviendo yo, que te adoro.

A todo esto no respondió don Quijote otra palabra si no fue dar un profundo suspiro, y luego se tendió en su lecho, agradeciendo a los duques la merced, no porque él tenía temor de aquella canalla gatesca, encantadora y cencerruna, sino porque había conocido la buena intención con que habían venido a socorrerle. Los duques le dejaron sosegar, y se fueron, pesarosos del mal suceso de la burla; que no creyeron que tan pesada y costosa le saliera a don Quijote aquella aventura, que le costó cinco días de encerramiento y de cama, donde le sucedió otra aventura más gustosa que la pasada, la cual no quiere su historiador contar ahora, por acudir a Sancho Panza, que andaba muy solícito y muy gracioso en su gobierno.

Capítulo XLVII

Donde se prosigue cómo se portaba Sancho Panza en su gobierno

CUENTA la historia que desde el juzgado llevaron a Sancho Panza a un suntuoso palacio, adonde en una gran sala estaba puesta una real y limpiísima mesa; y, así como Sancho entró en la sala, sonaron chirimías, y salieron cuatro pajes a darle aguamanos, que Sancho recibió con mucha gravedad.

Cesó la música, sentóse Sancho a la cabecera de la mesa, porque no había más de aquel asiento, y no otro servicio en toda ella. Púsose a su lado en pie un personaje, que después mostró ser médico, con una varilla de ballena en la mano. Levantaron una riquísima y blanca toalla con que estaban cubiertas las frutas y mucha diversidad de platos de diversos manjares; uno que parecía estudiante echó la bendición, y un paje puso un babador randado a Sancho; otro que hacía el oficio de maestresala, llegó un plato de fruta delante; pero, apenas hubo comido un bocado, cuando el de la varilla tocando con ella en el plato, se le quitaron de delante con grandísima celeridad; pero el maestresala le llegó otro de otro manjar. Iba a probarle Sancho; pero, antes que llegase a él ni le gustase, ya la varilla había tocado en él, y un paje alzádole con tanta presteza como el de la fruta. Visto lo cual por Sancho, quedó suspenso, y, mirando a todos, preguntó si se había de comer aquella comida como juego de maesecoral. A lo cual respondió el de la vara:

-No se ha de comer, señor gobernador, sino como es uso y costumbre en las otras ínsulas donde hay gobernadores. Yo, señor, soy médico, y estoy asalariado en esta ínsula para serlo de los gobernadores della, y miro por su salud mucho más que por la mía, estudiando de noche y de día, y tanteando la complexión del gobernador, para acertar a curarle cuando cayere enfermo; y lo principal que hago es asistir a sus comidas y cenas, y a dejarle comer de lo que me parece que le conviene, y a quitarle lo que imagino que le ha de hacer daño y ser nocivo al estómago; y así, mandé quitar el plato de la fruta, por ser demasiadamente húmeda, y el plato del otro manjar también le mandé quitar, por ser demasiadamente caliente y tener muchas especies, que acrecientan la sed; y el que mucho bebe mata y consume el húmedo radical, donde consiste la vida.

-Desa manera, aquel plato de perdices que están allí asadas, y, a mi parecer, bien sazonadas, no me harán algún daño.

A lo que el médico respondió:

-Ésas no comerá el señor gobernador en tanto que yo tuviere vida.

-Pues, ¿por qué? -dijo Sancho.

Y el médico respondió:

-Porque nuestro maestro Hipócrates, norte y luz de la medicina, en un aforismo suyo, dice: Omnis saturatio mala, perdices autem pessima. Quiere decir: «Toda hartazgo es mala; pero la de las perdices, malísima».

-Si eso es así -dijo Sancho-, vea el señor doctor de cuantos manjares hay en esta mesa cuál me hará más provecho y cuál menos daño, y déjeme comer dél sin que me le apalee; porque, por vida del gobernador, y así Dios me le deje gozar, que me muero de hambre, y el negarme la comida, aunque le pese al señor doctor y él más me diga, antes será quitarme la vida que aumentármela.

-Vuestra merced tiene razón, señor gobernador -respondió el médico-; y así, es mi parecer que vuestra merced no coma de aquellos conejos guisados que allí están, porque es manjar peliagudo. De aquella ternera, si no fuera asada y en adobo, aún se pudiera probar, pero no hay para qué.

Y Sancho dijo:

-Aquel platonazo que está más adelante vahando me parece que es olla podrida, que por la diversidad de cosas que en las tales ollas podridas hay, no podré dejar de topar con alguna que me sea de gusto y de provecho.

-Absit! -dijo el médico-. Vaya lejos de nosotros tan mal pensamiento: no hay cosa en el mundo de peor mantenimiento que una olla podrida. Allá las ollas podridas para los canónigos, o para los retores de colegios, o para las bodas labradorescas, y déjenos libres las mesas de los gobernadores, donde ha de asistir todo primor y toda atildadura; y la razón es porque siempre y a doquiera y de quienquiera son más estimadas las medicinas simples que las compuestas, porque en las simples no se puede errar y en las compuestas sí, alterando la cantidad de las cosas de que son compuestas; mas lo que yo sé que ha de comer el señor gobernador ahora, para conservar su salud y corroborarla, es un ciento de cañutillos de suplicaciones y unas tajadicas subtiles de carne de membrillo, que le asienten el estómago y le ayuden a la digestión.

Oyendo esto Sancho, se arrimó sobre el espaldar de la silla y miró de hito en hito al tal médico, y con voz grave le preguntó cómo se llamaba y dónde había estudiado. A lo que él respondió:

-Yo, señor gobernador, me llamo el doctor Pedro Recio de Agüero, y soy natural de un lugar llamado Tirteafuera, que está entre Caracuel y Almodóvar del Campo, a la mano derecha, y tengo el grado de doctor por la universidad de Osuna.

A lo que respondió Sancho, todo encendido en cólera:

-Pues, señor doctor Pedro Recio de Mal Agüero, natural de Tirteafuera, lugar que está a la derecha mano como vamos de Caracuel a Almodóvar del Campo, graduado en Osuna, quíteseme luego delante, si no, voto al sol que tome un garrote y que a garrotazos, comenzando por él, no me ha de quedar médico en toda la ínsula, a lo menos de aquellos que yo entienda que son ignorantes; que a los médicos sabios, prudentes y discretos los pondré sobre mi cabeza y los honraré como a personas divinas. Y vuelvo a decir que se me vaya, Pedro Recio, de aquí; si no, tomaré esta silla donde estoy sentado y se la estrellaré en la cabeza; y pídanmelo en residencia, que yo me descargaré con decir que hice servicio a Dios en matar a un mal médico, verdugo de la república. Y denme de comer, o si no, tómense su gobierno, que oficio que no da de comer a su dueño no vale dos habas.

Alborotóse el doctor, viendo tan colérico al gobernador, y quiso hacer tirteafuera de la sala, sino que en aquel instante sonó una corneta de posta en la calle, y, asomándose el maestresala a la ventana, volvió diciendo:

-Correo viene del duque mi señor; algún despacho debe de traer de importancia.

Entró el correo sudando y asustado, y, sacando un pliego del seno, le puso en las manos del gobernador, y Sancho le puso en las del mayordomo, a quien mandó leyese el sobreescrito, que decía así: A don Sancho Panza, gobernador de la ínsula Barataria, en su propia mano o en las de su secretario. Oyendo lo cual, Sancho dijo:

-¿Quién es aquí mi secretario?

Y uno de los que presentes estaban respondió:

-Yo, señor, porque sé leer y escribir, y soy vizcaíno.

-Con esa añadidura -dijo Sancho-, bien podéis ser secretario del mismo emperador. Abrid ese pliego, y mirad lo que dice.

Hízolo así el recién nacido secretario, y, habiendo leído lo que decía, dijo que era negocio para tratarle a solas. Mandó Sancho despejar la sala, y que no quedasen en ella sino el mayordomo y el maestresala, y los demás y el médico se fueron; y luego el secretario leyó la carta, que así decía:

A mi noticia ha llegado, señor don Sancho Panza, que unos enemigos míos y desa ínsula la han de dar un asalto furioso, no sé qué noche; conviene velar y estar alerta, porque no le tomen desapercibido. Sé también, por espías verdaderas, que han entrado en ese lugar cuatro personas disfrazadas para quitaros la vida, porque se temen de vuestro ingenio; abrid el ojo, y mirad quién llega a hablaros, y no comáis de cosa que os presentaren. Yo tendré cuidado de socorremos si os viéredes en trabajo, y en todo haréis como se espera de vuestro entendimiento. Deste lugar, a 16 de agosto, a las cuatro de la mañana.

Vuestro amigo,

El Duque.

Quedó atónito Sancho, y mostraron quedarlo asimismo los circunstantes; y, volviéndose al mayordomo, le dijo:

-Lo que agora se ha de hacer, y ha de ser luego, es meter en un calabozo al doctor Recio; porque si alguno me ha de matar, ha de ser él, y de muerte adminícula y pésima, como es la de la hambre.

-También -dijo el maestresala-me parece a mí que vuesa merced no coma de todo lo que está en esta mesa, porque lo han presentado unas monjas, y, como suele decirse, detrás de la cruz está el diablo.

-No lo niego -respondió Sancho-, y por ahora denme un pedazo de pan y obra de cuatro libras de uvas, que en ellas no podrá venir veneno; porque, en efecto, no puedo pasar sin comer, y si es que hemos de estar prontos para estas batallas que nos amenazan, menester será estar bien mantenidos, porque tripas llevan corazón, que no corazón tripas. Y vos, secretario, responded al duque mi señor y decidle que se cumplirá lo que manda como lo manda, sin faltar punto; y daréis de mi parte un besamanos a mi señora la duquesa, y que le suplico no se le olvide de enviar con un propio mi carta y mi lío a mi mujer Teresa Panza, que en ello recibirá mucha merced, y tendré cuidado de servirla con todo lo que mis fuerzas alcanzaren; y de camino podéis encajar un besamanos a mi señor don Quijote de la Mancha, porque vea que soy pan agradecido; y vos, como buen secretario y como buen vizcaíno, podéis añadir todo lo que quisiéredes y más viniere a cuento. Y álcense estos manteles, y denme a mí de comer, que yo me avendré con cuantas espías y matadores y encantadores vinieren sobre mí y sobre mi ínsula.

En esto entró un paje, y dijo:

-Aquí está un labrador negociante que quiere hablar a Vuestra Señoría en un negocio, según él dice, de mucha importancia.

-Estraño caso es éste -dijo Sancho-destos negociantes. ¿Es posible que sean tan necios, que no echen de ver que semejantes horas como éstas no son en las que han de venir a negociar? ¿Por ventura los que gobernamos, los que somos jueces, no somos hombres de carne y de hueso, y que es menester que nos dejen descansar el tiempo que la necesidad pide, sino que quieren que seamos hechos de piedra mármol? Por Dios y en mi conciencia que si me dura el gobierno (que no durará, según se me trasluce), que yo ponga en pretina a más de un negociante. Agora decid a ese buen hombre que entre; pero adviértase primero no sea alguno de los espías, o matador mío.

-No, señor -respondió el paje-, porque parece una alma de cántaro, y yo sé poco, o él es tan bueno como el buen pan.

-No hay que temer -dijo el mayordomo-, que aquí estamos todos.

-¿Sería posible -dijo Sancho-, maestresala, que agora que no está aquí el doctor Pedro Recio, que comiese yo alguna cosa de peso y de sustancia, aunque fuese un pedazo de pan y una cebolla?

-Esta noche, a la cena, se satisfará la falta de la comida, y quedará Vuestra Señoría satisfecho y pagado -dijo el maestresala.

-Dios lo haga -respondió Sancho.

Y, en esto, entró el labrador, que era de muy buena presencia, y de mil leguas se le echaba de ver que era bueno y buena alma. Lo primero que dijo fue:

-¿Quién es aquí el señor gobernador?

-¿Quién ha de ser -respondió el secretario-, sino el que está sentado en la silla?

-Humíllome, pues, a su presencia -dijo el labrador.

Y, poniéndose de rodillas, le pidió la mano para besársela. Negósela Sancho, y mandó que se levantase y dijese lo que quisiese. Hízolo así el labrador, y luego dijo:

-Yo, señor, soy labrador, natural de Miguel Turra, un lugar que está dos leguas de Ciudad Real.

-¡Otro Tirteafuera tenemos! -dijo Sancho-. Decid, hermano, que lo que yo os sé decir es que sé muy bien a Miguel Turra, y que no está muy lejos de mi pueblo.

-Es, pues, el caso, señor -prosiguió el labrador-, que yo, por la misericordia de Dios, soy casado en paz y en haz de la Santa Iglesia Católica Romana; tengo dos hijos estudiantes que el menor estudia para bachiller y el mayor para licenciado; soy viudo, porque se murió mi mujer, o, por mejor decir, me la mató un mal médico, que la purgó estando preñada, y si Dios fuera servido que saliera a luz el parto, y fuera hijo, yo le pusiere a estudiar para doctor, porque no tuviera envidia a sus hermanos el bachiller y el licenciado.

-De modo -dijo Sancho- que si vuestra mujer no se hubiera muerto, o la hubieran muerto, vos no fuéades agora viudo.

-No, señor, en ninguna manera -respondió el labrador.

-¡Medrados estamos! -replicó Sancho-. Adelante, hermano, que es hora de dormir más que de negociar.

-Digo, pues -dijo el labrador-, que este mi hijo que ha de ser bachiller se enamoró en el mismo pueblo de una doncella llamada Clara Perlerina, hija de Andrés Perlerino, labrador riquísimo; y este nombre de Perlerines no les viene de abolengo ni otra alcurnia, sino porque todos los deste linaje son perláticos, y por mejorar el nombre los llaman Perlerines; aunque, si va decir la verdad, la doncella es como una perla oriental, y, mirada por el lado derecho, parece una flor del campo; por el izquierdo no tanto, porque le falta aquel ojo, que se le saltó de viruelas; y, aunque los hoyos del rostro son muchos y grandes, dicen los que la quieren bien que aquéllos no son hoyos, sino sepulturas donde se sepultan las almas de sus amantes. Es tan limpia que, por no ensuciar la cara, trae las narices, como dicen, arremangadas, que no parece sino que van huyendo de la boca; y, con todo esto, parece bien por extremo, porque tiene la boca grande, y, a no faltarle diez o doce dientes y muelas, pudiera pasar y echar raya entre las más bien formadas. De los labios no tengo qué decir, porque son tan sutiles y delicados que, si se usaran aspar labios, pudieran hacer dellos una madeja; pero, como tienen diferente color de la que en los labios se usa comúnmente, parecen milagrosos, porque son jaspeados de azul y verde y aberenjenado; y perdóneme el señor gobernador si por tan menudo voy pintando las partes de la que al fin al fin ha de ser mi hija, que la quiero bien y no me parece mal.

-Pintad lo que quisiéredes -dijo Sancho-, que yo me voy recreando en la pintura, y si hubiera comido, no hubiera mejor postre para mí que vuestro retrato.

-Eso tengo yo por servir -respondió el labrador-, pero tiempo vendrá en que seamos, si ahora no somos. Y digo, señor, que si pudiera pintar su gentileza y la altura de su cuerpo, fuera cosa de admiración; pero no puede ser, a causa de que ella está agobiada y encogida, y tiene las rodillas con la boca, y, con todo eso, se echa bien de ver que si se pudiera levantar, diera con la cabeza en el techo; y ya ella hubiera dado la mano de esposa a mi bachiller, sino que no la puede estender, que está añudada; y, con todo, en las uñas largas y acanaladas se muestra su bondad y buena hechura.

-Está bien -dijo Sancho-, y haced cuenta, hermano, que ya la habéis pintado de los pies a la cabeza. ¿Qué es lo que queréis ahora? Y venid al punto sin rodeos ni callejuelas, ni retazos ni añadiduras.

-Querría, señor -respondió el labrador-, que vuestra merced me hiciese merced de darme una carta de favor para mi consuegro, suplicándole sea servido de que este casamiento se haga, pues no somos desiguales en los bienes de fortuna, ni en los de la naturaleza; porque, para decir la verdad, señor gobernador, mi hijo es endemoniado, y no hay día que tres o cuatro veces no le atormenten los malignos espíritus; y de haber caído una vez en el fuego, tiene el rostro arrugado como pergamino, y los ojos algo llorosos y manantiales; pero tiene una condición de un ángel, y si no es que se aporrea y se da de puñadas él mismo a sí mismo, fuera un bendito.

-¿Queréis otra cosa, buen hombre? -replicó Sancho.

-Otra cosa querría -dijo el labrador-, sino que no me atrevo a decirlo; pero vaya, que, en fin, no se me ha de podrir en el pecho, pegue o no pegue. Digo, señor, que querría que vuesa merced me diese trecientos o seiscientos ducados para ayuda a la dote de mi bachiller; digo para ayuda de poner su casa, porque, en fin, han de vivir por sí, sin estar sujetos a las impertinencias de los suegros.

-Mirad si queréis otra cosa -dijo Sancho-, y no la dejéis de decir por empacho ni por vergüenza.

-No, por cierto -respondió el labrador.

Y, apenas dijo esto, cuando, levantándose en pie el gobernador, asió de la silla en que estaba sentado y dijo:

-¡Voto a tal, don patán rústico y mal mirado, que si no os apartáis y ascondéis luego de mi presencia, que con esta silla os rompa y abra la cabeza! Hideputa bellaco, pintor del mismo demonio, ¿y a estas horas te vienes a pedirme seiscientos ducados?; y ¿dónde los tengo yo, hediondo?; y ¿por qué te los había de dar, aunque los tuviera, socarrón y mentecato?; y ¿qué se me da a mí de Miguel Turra, ni de todo el linaje de los Perlerines? ¡Va de mí, digo; si no, por vida del duque mi señor, que haga lo que tengo dicho! Tú no debes de ser de Miguel Turra, sino algún socarrón que, para tentarme, te ha enviado aquí el infierno. Dime, desalmado, aún no ha día y medio que tengo el gobierno, y ¿ya quieres que tenga seiscientos ducados?

Hizo de señas el maestresala al labrador que se saliese de la sala, el cual lo hizo cabizbajo y, al parecer, temeroso de que el gobernador no ejecutase su cólera, que el bellacón supo hacer muy bien su oficio.

Pero dejemos con su cólera a Sancho, y ándese la paz en el corro, y volvamos a don Quijote, que le dejamos vendado el rostro y curado de las gatascas heridas, de las cuales no sanó en ocho días, en uno de los cuales le sucedió lo que Cide Hamete promete de contar con la puntualidad y verdad que suele contar las cosas desta historia, por mínimas que sean.

Capítulo XLVIII

De lo que le sucedió a don Quijote con doña Rodríguez, la dueña de la duquesa, con otros acontecimientos dignos de escritura y de memoria eterna

ADEMÁS estaba mohíno y malencólico el malferido don Quijote, vendado el rostro y señalado, no por la mano de Dios, sino por las uñas de un gato, desdichas anejas a la andante caballería. Seis días estuvo sin salir en público, en una noche de las cuales, estando despierto y desvelado, pensando en sus desgracias y en el perseguimiento de Altisidora, sintió que con una llave abrían la puerta de su aposento, y luego imaginó que la enamorada doncella venía para sobresaltar su honestidad y ponerle en condición de faltar a la fee que guardar debía a su señora Dulcinea del Toboso.

-No -dijo creyendo a su imaginación, y esto, con voz que pudiera ser oída-; no ha de ser parte la mayor hermosura de la tierra para que yo deje de adorar la que tengo grabada y estampada en la mitad de mi corazón y en lo más escondido de mis entrañas, ora estés, señora mía, transformada en cebolluda labradora, ora en ninfa del dorado Tajo, tejiendo telas de oro y sirgo compuestas, ora te tenga Merlín, o Montesinos, donde ellos quisieren; que, adondequiera eres mía, y adoquiera he sido yo, y he de ser, tuyo.

El acabar estas razones y el abrir de la puerta fue todo uno. Púsose en pie sobre la cama, envuelto de arriba abajo en una colcha de raso amarillo, una galocha en la cabeza, y el rostro y los bigotes vendados: el rostro, por los aruños; los bigotes, porque no se le desmayasen y cayesen; en el cual traje parecía la más extraordinaria fantasma que se pudiera pensar.

Clavó los ojos en la puerta, y, cuando esperaba ver entrar por ella a la rendida y lastimada Altisidora, vio entrar a una reverendísima dueña con unas tocas blancas repulgadas y luengas, tanto, que la cubrían y enmantaban desde los pies a la cabeza. Entre los dedos de la mano izquierda traía una media vela encendida, y con la derecha se hacía sombra, porque no le diese la luz en los ojos, a quien cubrían unos muy grandes anteojos. Venía pisando quedito, y movía los pies blandamente.

Miróla don Quijote desde su atalaya, y cuando vio su adeliño y notó su silencio, pensó que alguna bruja o maga venía en aquel traje a hacer en él alguna mala fechoría, y comenzó a santiguarse con mucha priesa. Fuese llegando la visión, y, cuando llegó a la mitad del aposento, alzó los ojos y vio la priesa con que se estaba haciendo cruces don Quijote; y si él quedó medroso en ver tal figura, ella quedó espantada en ver la suya, porque, así como le vio tan alto y tan amarillo, con la colcha y con las vendas, que le desfiguraban, dio una gran voz, diciendo:

-¡Jesús! ¿Qué es lo que veo?

Y con el sobresalto se le cayó la vela de las manos; y, viéndose a oscuras, volvió las espaldas para irse, y con el miedo tropezó en sus faldas y dio consigo una gran caída. Don Quijote, temeroso, comenzó a decir:

-Conjúrote, fantasma, o lo que eres, que me digas quién eres, y que me digas qué es lo que de mí quieres. Si eres alma en pena, dímelo, que yo haré por ti todo cuanto mis fuerzas alcanzaren, porque soy católico cristiano y amigo de hacer bien a todo el mundo; que para esto tomé la orden de la caballería andante que profeso, cuyo ejercicio aun hasta hacer bien a las ánimas de purgatorio se estiende.

La brumada dueña, que oyó conjurarse, por su temor coligió el de don Quijote, y con voz afligida y baja le respondió:

-Señor don Quijote, si es que acaso vuestra merced es don Quijote, yo no soy fantasma, ni visión, ni alma de purgatorio, como vuestra merced debe de haber pensado, sino doña Rodríguez, la dueña de honor de mi señora la duquesa, que, con una necesidad de aquellas que vuestra merced suele remediar, a vuestra merced vengo.

-Dígame, señora doña Rodríguez -dijo don Quijote-: ¿por ventura viene vuestra merced a hacer alguna tercería? Porque le hago saber que no soy de provecho para nadie, merced a la sin par belleza de mi señora Dulcinea del Toboso. Digo, en fin, señora doña Rodríguez, que, como vuestra merced salve y deje a una parte todo recado amoroso, puede volver a encender su vela, y vuelva, y departiremos de todo lo que más mandare y más en gusto le viniere, salvando, como digo, todo incitativo melindre.

-¿Yo recado de nadie, señor mío? -respondió la dueña-. Mal me conoce vuestra merced; sí, que aún no estoy en edad tan prolongada que me acoja a semejantes niñerías, pues, Dios loado, mi alma me tengo en las carnes, y todos mis dientes y muelas en la boca, amén de unos pocos que me han usurpado unos catarros, que en esta tierra de Aragón son tan ordinarios. Pero espéreme vuestra merced un poco; saldré a encender mi vela, y volveré en un instante a contar mis cuitas, como a remediador de todas las del mundo.

Y, sin esperar respuesta, se salió del aposento, donde quedó don Quijote sosegado y pensativo esperándola; pero luego le sobrevinieron mil pensamientos acerca de aquella nueva aventura, y parecía ser mal hecho y peor pensado ponerse en peligro de romper a su señora la fee prometida, y decíase a sí mismo:

-¿Quién sabe si el diablo, que es sutil y mañoso, querrá engañarme agora con una dueña, lo que no ha podido con emperatrices, reinas, duquesas, marquesas ni condesas? Que yo he oído decir muchas veces y a muchos discretos que, si él puede, antes os la dará roma que aguileña. Y ¿quién sabe si esta soledad, esta ocasión y este silencio despertará mis deseos que duermen, y harán que al cabo de mis años venga a caer donde nunca he tropezado? Y, en casos semejantes, mejor es huir que esperar la batalla. Pero yo no debo de estar en mi juicio, pues tales disparates digo y pienso; que no es posible que una dueña toquiblanca, larga y antojuna pueda mover ni levantar pensamiento lascivo en el más desalmado pecho del mundo. ¿Por ventura hay dueña en la tierra que tenga buenas carnes? ¿Por ventura hay dueña en el orbe que deje de ser impertinente, fruncida y melindrosa? ¡Afuera, pues, caterva dueñesca, inútil para ningún humano regalo! ¡Oh, cuán bien hacía aquella señora de quien se dice que tenía dos dueñas de bulto con sus antojos y almohadillas al cabo de su estrado, como que estaban labrando, y tanto le servían para la autoridad de la sala aquellas estatuas como las dueñas verdaderas!

Y, diciendo esto, se arrojó del lecho, con intención de cerrar la puerta y no dejar entrar a la señora Rodríguez; mas, cuando la llegó a cerrar, ya la señora Rodríguez volvía, encendida una vela de cera blanca, y cuando ella vio a don Quijote de más cerca, envuelto en la colcha, con las vendas, galocha o becoquín, temió de nuevo, y, retirándose atrás como dos pasos, dijo:

-¿Estamos seguras, señor caballero? Porque no tengo a muy honesta señal haberse vuesa merced levantado de su lecho.

-Eso mesmo es bien que yo pregunte, señora -respondió don Quijote-; y así, pregunto si estaré yo seguro de ser acometido y forzado.

-¿De quién o a quién pedís, señor caballero, esa seguridad? -respondió la dueña.

-A vos y de vos la pido -replicó don Quijote-, porque ni yo soy de mármol ni vos de bronce, ni ahora son las diez del día, sino media noche, y aun un poco más, según imagino, y en una estancia más cerrada y secreta que lo debió de ser la cueva donde el traidor y atrevido Eneas gozó a la hermosa y piadosa Dido. Pero dadme, señora, la mano, que yo no quiero otra seguridad mayor que la de mi continencia y recato, y la que ofrecen esas reverendísimas tocas.

Y, diciendo esto, besó su derecha mano, y le asió de la suya, que ella le dio con las mismas ceremonias.

Aquí hace Cide Hamete un paréntesis, y dice que por Mahoma que diera, por ver ir a los dos así asidos y trabados desde la puerta al lecho, la mejor almalafa de dos que tenía.

Entróse, en fin, don Quijote en su lecho, y quedóse doña Rodríguez sentada en una silla, algo desviada de la cama, no quitándose los antojos ni la vela. Don Quijote se acorruco y se cubrió todo, no dejando más de el rostro descubierto; y, habiéndose los dos sosegado, el primero que rompió el silencio fue don Quijote, diciendo:

-Puede vuesa merced ahora, mi señora doña Rodríguez, descoserse y desbuchar todo aquello que tiene dentro de su cuitado corazón y lastimadas entrañas, que será de mí escuchada con castos oídos, y socorrida con piadosas obras.

-Así lo creo yo -respondió la dueña-, que de la gentil y agradable presencia de vuesa merced no se podía esperar sino tan cristiana respuesta. «Es, pues, el caso, señor don Quijote, que, aunque vuesa merced me vee sentada en esta silla y en la mitad del reino de Aragón, y en hábito de dueña aniquilada y asendereada, soy natural de las Asturias de Oviedo, y de linaje que atraviesan por él muchos de los mejores de aquella provincia; pero mi corta suerte y el descuido de mis padres, que empobrecieron antes de tiempo, sin saber cómo ni cómo no, me trujeron a la corte, a Madrid, donde por bien de paz y por escusar mayores desventuras, mis padres me acomodaron a servir de doncella de labor a una principal señora; y quiero hacer sabidor a vuesa merced que en hacer vainillas y labor blanca ninguna me ha echado el pie adelante en toda la vida. Mis padres me dejaron sirviendo y se volvieron a su tierra, y de allí a pocos años se debieron de ir al cielo, porque eran además buenos y católicos cristianos. Quedé huérfana, y atendida al miserable salario y a las angustiadas mercedes que a las tales criadas se suele dar en palacio; y, en este tiempo, sin que diese yo ocasión a ello, se enamoró de mi un escudero de casa, hombre ya en días, barbudo y apersonado, y, sobre todo, hidalgo como el rey, porque era montañés. No tratamos tan secretamente nuestros amores que no viniesen a noticia de mi señora, la cual, por escusar dimes y diretes, nos casó en paz y en haz de la Santa Madre Iglesia Católica Romana, de cuyo matrimonio nació una hija para rematar con mi ventura, si alguna tenía; no porque yo muriese del parto, que le tuve derecho y en sazón, sino porque desde allí a poco murió mi esposo de un cierto espanto que tuvo, que, a tener ahora lugar para contarle, yo sé que vuestra merced se admirara.»

-Perdóneme vuestra merced, señor don Quijote, que no va más en mi mano, porque todas las veces que me acuerdo de mi mal logrado se me arrasan los ojos de lágrimas. ¡Válame Dios, y con qué autoridad llevaba a mi señora a las ancas de una poderosa mula, negra como el mismo azabache! Que entonces no se usaban coches ni sillas, como agora dicen que se usan, y las señoras iban a las ancas de sus escuderos. Esto, a lo menos, no puedo dejar de contarle, porque se note la crianza y puntualidad de mi buen marido. «Al entrar de la calle de Santiago, en Madrid, que es algo estrecha, venía a salir por ella un alcalde de corte con dos alguaciles delante, y, así como mi buen escudero le vio, volvió las riendas a la mula, dando señal de volver a acompañarle. Mi señora, que iba a las ancas, con voz baja le decía: “-¿Qué hacéis, desventurado? ¿No veis que voy aquí?” El alcalde, de comedido, detuvo la rienda al caballo y díjole: “-Seguid, señor, vuestro camino, que yo soy el que debo acompañar a mi señora doña Casilda”, que así era el nombre de mi ama. Todavía porfiaba mi marido, con la gorra en la mano, a querer ir acompañando al alcalde, viendo lo cual mi señora, llena de cólera y enojo, sacó un alfiler gordo, o creo que un punzón, del estuche, y clavósele por los lomos, de manera que mi marido dio una gran voz y torció el cuerpo, de suerte que dio con su señora en el suelo. Acudieron dos lacayos suyos a levantarla, y lo mismo hizo el alcalde y los alguaciles; alborotóse la Puerta de Guadalajara, digo, la gente baldía que en ella estaba; vínose a pie mi ama, y mi marido acudió en casa de un barbero diciendo que llevaba pasadas de parte a parte las entrañas. Divulgóse la cortesía de mi esposo, tanto, que los muchachos le corrían por las calles, y por esto y porque él era algún tanto corto de vista, mi señora la duquesa le despidió, de cuyo pesar, sin duda alguna, tengo para mí que se le causó el mal de la muerte. Quedé yo viuda y desamparada, y con hija auestas, que iba creciendo en hermosura como la espuma de la mar. Finalmente, como yo tuviese fama de gran labrandería, mi señora la duquesa, que estaba recién casada con el duque mi señor, quiso traerme consigo a este reino de Aragón y a mi hija ni más ni menos, adonde, yendo días y viniendo días, creció mi hija, y con ella todo el donaire del mundo: canta como una calandria, danza como el pensamiento, baila como una perdida, lee y escribe como un maestro de escuela, y cuenta como un avariento. De su limpieza no digo nada: que el agua que corre no es más limpia, y debe de tener agora, si mal no me acuerdo, diez y seis años, cinco meses y tres días, uno más a menos. En resolución: de esta mi muchacha se enamoró un hijo de un labrador riquísimo que está en una aldea del duque mi señor, no muy lejos de aquí. En efecto, no sé cómo ni cómo no, ellos se juntaron, y, debajo de la palabra de ser su esposo, burló a mi hija, y no se la quiere cumplir; y, aunque el duque mi señor lo sabe, porque yo me he quejado a él, no una, sino muchas veces, y pedídle mande que el tal labrador se case con mi hija, hace orejas de mercader y apenas quiere oírme; y es la causa que, como el padre del burlador es tan rico y le presta dineros, y le sale por fiador de sus trampas por momentos, no le quiere descontentar ni dar pesadumbre en ningún modo.» Querría, pues, señor mío, que vuesa merced tomase a cargo el deshacer este agravio, o ya por ruegos, o ya por armas, pues, según todo el mundo dice, vuesa merced nació en él para deshacerlos y para enderezar los tuertos y amparar los miserables; y póngasele a vuesa merced por delante la orfandad de mi hija, su gentileza, su mocedad, con todas las buenas partes que he dicho que tiene; que en Dios y en mi conciencia que de cuantas doncellas tiene mi señora, que no hay ninguna que llegue a la suela de su zapato, y que una que llaman Altisidora, que es la que tienen por más desenvuelta y gallarda, puesta en comparación de mi hija, no la llega con dos leguas. Porque quiero que sepa vuesa merced, señor mío, que no es todo oro lo que reluce; porque esta Altisidorilla tiene más de presunción que de hermosura, y más de desenvuelta que de recogida, además que no está muy sana: que tiene un cierto allento cansado, que no hay sufrir el estar junto a ella un momento. Y aun mi señora la duquesa... Quiero callar, que se suele decir que las paredes tienen oídos.

-¿Qué tiene mi señora la duquesa, por vida mía, señora doña Rodríguez? -preguntó don Quijote.

-Con ese conjuro -respondió la dueña-, no puedo dejar de responder a lo que se me pregunta con toda verdad. ¿Vee vuesa merced, señor don Quijote, la hermosura de mi señora la duquesa, aquella tez de rostro, que no parece sino de una espada acicalada y tersa, aquellas dos mejillas de leche y de carmín, que en la una tiene el sol y en la otra la luna, y aquella gallardía con que va pisando y aun despreciando el suelo, que no parece sino que va derramando salud donde pasa? Pues sepa vuesa merced que lo puede agradecer, primero, a Dios, y luego, a dos fuentes que tiene en las dos piernas, por donde se desagua todo el mal humor de quien dicen los médicos que está llena.

-¡Santa María! -dijo don Quijote-. Y ¿es posible que mi señora la duquesa tenga tales desaguaderos? No lo creyera si me lo dijeran frailes descalzos; pero, pues la señora doña Rodríguez lo dice, debe de ser así. Pero tales fuentes, y en tales lugares, no deben de manar humor, sino ámbar líquido. Verdaderamente que ahora acabo de creer que esto de hacerse fuentes debe de ser cosa importante para salud.

Apenas acabó don Quijote de decir esta razón, cuando con un gran golpe abrieron las puertas del aposento, y del sobresalto del golpe se le cayó a doña Rodríguez la vela de la mano, y quedó la estancia como boca de lobo, como suele decirse. Luego sintió la pobre dueña que la asían de la garganta con dos manos, tan fuertemente que no la dejaban gañir, y que otra persona, con mucha presteza, sin hablar palabra, le alzaba las faldas, y con una, al parecer, chinela, le comenzó a dar tantos azotes, que era una compasión; y, aunque don Quijote se la tenía, no se meneaba del lecho, y no sabía qué podía ser aquello, y estábase quedo y callando, y aun temiendo no viniese por él la tanda y tunda azotesca. Y no fue vano su temor, porque, en dejando molida a la dueña los callados verdugos (la cual no osaba quejarse), acudieron a don Quijote, y, desenvolviéndole de la sábana y de la colcha, le pellizcaron tan a menudo y tan reciamente, que no pudo dejar de defenderse a puñadas, y todo esto en silencio admirable. Duró la batalla casi media hora; saliéronse las fantasmas, recogió doña Rodríguez sus faldas, y, gimiendo su desgracia, se salió por la puerta afuera, sin decir palabra a don Quijote, el cual, doloroso y pellizcado, confuso y pensativo, se quedó solo, donde le dejaremos deseoso de saber quién había sido el perverso encantador que tal le había puesto. Pero ello se dirá a su tiempo, que Sancho Panza nos llama, y el buen concierto de la historia lo pide.

Capítulo XLIX

De lo que le sucedió a Sancho Panza rondando su ínsula

DEJAMOS al gran gobernador enojado y mohíno con el labrador pintor y socarrón, el cual, industriado del mayordomo, y el mayordomo del duque, se burlaban de Sancho; pero él se las tenía tiesas a todos, maguera tonto, bronco y rollizo, y dijo a los que con él estaban, y al doctor Pedro Recio, que, como se acabó el secreto de la carta del duque, había vuelto a entrar en la sala:

-Ahora verdaderamente que entiendo que los jueces y gobernadores deben de ser, o han de ser, de bronce, para no sentir las importunidades de los negociantes, que a todas horas y a todos tiempos quieren que los escuchen y despachen, atendiendo sólo a su negocio, venga lo que viniere; y si el pobre del juez no los escucha y despacha, o porque no puede o porque no es aquél el tiempo diputado para darles audiencia, luego les maldicen y murmuran, y les roen los huesos, y aun les deslindan los linajes. Negociante necio, negociante mentecato, no te apresures; espera sazón y coyuntura para negociar: no vengas a la hora del comer ni a la del dormir, que los jueces son de carne y de hueso y han de dar a la naturaleza lo que naturalmente les pide, si no es yo, que no le doy de comer a la mía, merced al señor doctor Pedro Recio Tirteafuera, que está delante, que quiere que muera de hambre, y afirma que esta muerte es vida, que así se la dé Dios a él y a todos los de su ralea: digo, a la de los malos médicos, que la de los buenos, palmas y lauros merecen.

Todos los que conocían a Sancho Panza se admiraban, oyéndole hablar tan elegantemente, y no sabían a qué atribuirlo, sino a que los oficios y cargos graves, o adoban o entorpecen los entendimientos. Finalmente, el doctor Pedro Recio Agüero de Tirteafuera prometió de darle de cenar aquella noche, aunque excediese de todos los aforismos de Hipócrates. Con esto quedó contento el gobernador, y esperaba con grande ansia llegase la noche y la hora de cenar; y, aunque el tiempo, al parecer suyo, se estaba quedo, sin moverse de un lugar, todavía se llegó por él el tanto deseado, donde le dieron de cenar un salpicón de vaca con cebolla, y unas manos cocidas de ternera algo entrada en días. Entregóse en todo con más gusto que si le hubieran dado francolines de Milán, faisanes de Roma, ternera de Sorrento, perdices de Morón, o gansos de Lavajos; y, entre la cena, volviéndose al doctor, le dijo:

regaladas ni manjares esquisitos, porque será sacar a mi estómago de sus quicios, el cual está acostumbrado a cabra, a vaca, a tocino, a cecina, a nabos y a cebollas; y, si acaso le dan otros manjares de palacio, los recibe con melindre, y algunas veces con asco. Lo que el maestresala puede hacer es traerme estas que llaman ollas podridas, que mientras más podridas son, mejor huelen, y en ellas puede embaular y encerrar todo lo que él quisiere, como sea de comer, que yo se lo agradeceré y se lo pagaré algún día; y no se burle nadie conmigo, porque o somos o no somos: vivamos todos y comamos en buena paz compañía, pues, cuando Dios amanece, para todos amanece. Yo gobernaré esta ínsula sin perdonar derecho ni llevar cohecho, y todo el mundo traiga el ojo alerta y mire por el virote, porque les hago saber que el diablo está en Cantillana, y que, si me dan ocasión, han de ver maravillas. No, sino haceos miel, y comeros han moscas.

-Por cierto, señor gobernador -dijo el maestresala-, que vuesa merced tiene mucha razón en cuanto ha dicho, y que yo ofrezco en nombre de todos los insulanos desta ínsula que han de servir a vuestra merced con toda puntualidad, amor y benevolencia, porque el suave modo de gobernar que en estos principios vuesa merced ha dado no les da lugar de hacer ni de pensar cosa que en deservicio de vuesa merced redunde.

-Yo lo creo -respondió Sancho-, y serían ellos unos necios si otra cosa hiciesen o pensasen. Y vuelvo a decir que se tenga cuenta con mi sustento y con el de mi rucio, que es lo que en este negocio importa y hace más al caso; y, en siendo hora, vamos a rondar, que es mi intención limpiar esta ínsula de todo género de inmundicia y de gente vagamunda, holgazanes, y mal entretenida; porque quiero que sepáis, amigos, que la gente baldía y perezosa es en la república lo mismo que los zánganos en las colmenas, que se comen la miel que las trabajadoras abejas hacen. Pienso favorecer a los labradores, guardar sus preeminencias a los hidalgos, premiar los virtuosos y, sobre todo, tener respeto a la religión y a la honra de los religiosos. ¿Qué os parece desto, amigos? ¿Digo algo, o quiébrome la cabeza?

-Dice tanto vuesa merced, señor gobernador -dijo el mayordomo-, que estoy admirado de ver que un hombre tan sin letras como vuesa merced, que, a lo que creo, no tiene ninguna, diga tales y tantas cosas llenas de sentencias y de avisos, tan fuera de todo aquello que del ingenio de vuesa merced esperaban los que nos enviaron y los que aquí venimos. Cada día se veen cosas nuevas en el mundo: las burlas se vuelven en veras y los burladores se hallan burlados.

Llegó la noche, y cenó el gobernador, con licencia del señor doctor Recio. Aderezáronse de ronda; salió con el mayordomo, secretario y maestresala, y el coronista que tenía cuidado de poner en memoria sus hechos, y alguaciles y escribanos, tantos que podían formar un mediano escuadrón. Iba Sancho en medio, con su vara, que no había más que ver, y pocas calles andadas del lugar, sintieron ruido de cuchilladas; acudieron allá, y hallaron que eran dos solos hombres los que reñían, los cuales, viendo venir a la justicia, se estuvieron quedos; y el uno dellos dijo:

-¡Aquí de Dios y del rey! ¿Cómo y que se ha de sufrir que roben en poblado en este pueblo, y que salga a saltar en él en la mitad de las calles?

-Sosegaos, hombre de bien -dijo Sancho-, y contadme qué es la causa desta pendencia, que yo soy el gobernador.

El otro contrario dijo:

-Señor gobernador, yo la diré con toda brevedad. Vuestra merced sabrá que este gentilhombre acaba de ganar ahora en esta casa de juego que está aquí frontero más de mil reales, y sabe Dios cómo; y, hallándome yo presente, juzgué más de una suerte dudosa en su favor, contra todo aquello que me dictaba la conciencia; alzóse con la ganancia, y, cuando esperaba que me había de dar algún escudo, por lo menos, de barato, como es uso y costumbre darle a los hombres principales como yo, que estamos asistentes para bien y mal pasar, y para apoyar sinrazones y evitar pendencias, él embolsó su dinero y se salió de la casa. Yo vine despechado tras él, y con buenas y corteses palabras le he pedido que me diese siquiera ocho reales, pues sabe que yo soy hombre honrado y que no tengo oficio ni beneficio, porque mis padres no me le enseñaron ni me le dejaron, y el socarrón, que no es más ladrón que Caco, ni más fullero que Andradilla, no quería darme más de cuatro reales; ¡porque vea vuestra merced, señor gobernador, qué poca vergüenza y qué poca conciencia! Pero a fee que, si vuesa merced no llegara, que yo le hiciera vomitar la ganancia, y que había de saber con cuántas entraba la romana.

-¿Qué decís vos a esto? -preguntó Sancho.

Y el otro respondió que era verdad cuanto su contrario decía, y no había querido darle más de cuatro reales porque se los daba muchas veces; y los que esperan barato han de ser comedidos y tomar con rostro alegre lo que les dieren, sin ponerse en cuentas con los gananciosos, si ya no supiesen de cierto que son fulleros y que lo que ganan es mal ganado; y que, para señal que él era hombre de bien y no ladrón, como decía, ninguna había mayor que el no haberle querido dar nada; que siempre los fulleros son tributarios de los mirones que los conocen.

-Así es -dijo el mayordomo-. Vea vuestra merced, señor gobernador, qué es lo que se ha de hacer destos hombres.

-Lo que se ha de hacer es esto -respondió Sancho-: vos, ganancioso, bueno, o malo, o indiferente, dad luego a este vuestro acuchillador cien reales, y más, habéis de desembolsar treinta para los pobres de la cárcel; y vos, que no tenéis oficio ni beneficio y andáis de nones en esta ínsula, tomad luego esos cien reales, y mañana en todo el día salid desta ínsula desterrado por diez años, so pena, si lo quebrantáredes, los cumpláis en la otra vida, colgándoos yo de una picota, o, a lo menos, el verdugo por mi mandado; y ninguno me replique, que le asentaré la mano.

Desembolsó el uno, recibió el otro, éste se salió de la ínsula, y aquél se fue a su casa, y el gobernador quedó diciendo:

-Ahora, yo podré poco, o quitaré estas casas de juego, que a mí se me trasluce que son muy perjudiciales.

-Ésta, a lo menos -dijo un escribano-, no la podrá vuesa merced quitar, porque la tiene un gran personaje, y más es sin comparación lo que él pierde al año que lo que saca de los naipes. Contra otros garitos de menor cantía podrá vuestra merced mostrar su poder, que son los que más daño hacen y más insolencias encubren; que en las casas de los caballeros principales y de los señores no se atreven los famosos fulleros a usar de sus tretas; y, pues el vicio del juego se ha vuelto en ejercicio común, mejor es que se juegue en casas principales que no en la de algún oficial, donde cogen a un desdichado de media noche abajo y le desuellan vivo.

-Agora, escribano -dijo Sancho-, yo sé que hay mucho que decir en eso.

Y, en esto, llegó un corchete que traía asido a un mozo, y dijo:

-Señor gobernador, este mancebo venía hacia nosotros, y, así como columbró la justicia, volvió las espaldas y comenzó a correr como un gamo, señal que debe de ser algún delincuente. Yo partí tras él, y, si no fuera porque tropezó y cayó, no le alcanzara jamás.

-¿Por qué huías, hombre? -preguntó Sancho.

A lo que el mozo respondió:

-Señor, por escusar de responder a las muchas preguntas que las justicias hacen.

-¿Qué oficio tienes?

-Tejedor.

-¿Y qué tejes?

-Hierros de lanzas, con licencia buena de vuestra merced.

-¿Graciosico me sois? ¿De chocarrero os picáis? ¡Está bien! Y ¿adónde íbades ahora?

-Señor, a tomar el aire.

-Y ¿adónde se toma el aire en esta ínsula?

-Adonde sopla.

-¡Bueno: respondéis muy a propósito! Discreto sois, mancebo; pero haced cuenta que yo soy el aire, y que os soplo en popa, y os encamino a la cárcel. ¡Asilde, hola, y llevadle, que yo haré que duerma allí sin aire esta noche!

-¡Par Dios -dijo el mozo-, así me haga vuestra merced dormir en la cárcel como hacerme rey!

-Pues ¿por qué no te haré yo dormir en la cárcel? -respondió Sancho-. ¿No tengo yo poder para prenderte y soltarte cada y cuando que quisiere?

-Por más poder que vuestra merced tenga -dijo el mozo-, no será bastante para hacerme dormir en la cárcel.

-¿Cómo que no? -replicó Sancho-. Llevalde luego donde verá por sus ojos el desengaño, aunque más el alcaide quiera usar con él de su interesal liberalidad; que yo le pondré pena de dos mil ducados si te deja salir un paso de la cárcel.

-Todo eso es cosa de risa -respondió el mozo-. El caso es que no me harán dormir en la cárcel cuantos hoy viven.

-Dime, demonio -dijo Sancho-, ¿tienes algún ángel que te saque y que te quite los grillos que te pienso mandar echar?

-Ahora, señor gobernador -respondió el mozo con muy buen donaire-, estemos a razón y vengamos al punto. Prosuponga vuestra merced que me manda llevar a la cárcel, y que en ella me echan grillos y cadenas, y que me meten en un calabozo, y se le ponen al alcaide graves penas si me deja salir, y que él lo cumple como se le manda; con todo esto, si yo no quiero dormir, y estarme despierto toda la noche, sin pegar pestaña, ¿será vuestra merced bastante con todo su poder para hacerme dormir, si yo no quiero?

-No, por cierto -dijo el secretario-, y el hombre ha salido con su intención.

-De modo -dijo Sancho- que no dejaréis de dormir por otra cosa que por vuestra voluntad, y no por contravenir a la mía.

-No, señor -dijo el mozo-, ni por pienso.

-Pues andad con Dios -dijo Sancho-; idos a dormir a vuestra casa, y Dios os dé buen sueño, que yo no quiero quitárosle; pero aconséjoos que de aquí adelante no os burléis con la justicia, porque toparéis con alguna que os dé con la burla en los cascós.

Fuese el mozo, y el gobernador prosiguió con su ronda, y de allí a poco vinieron dos corchetes que traían a un hombre asido, y dijeron:

-Señor gobernador, este que parece hombre no lo es, sino mujer, y no fea, que viene vestida en hábito de hombre.

Llegáronle a los ojos dos o tres lanternas, a cuyas luces descubrieron un rostro de una mujer, al parecer, de diez y seis o pocos más años, recogidos los cabellos con una redecilla de oro y seda verde, hermosa como mil perlas. Miráronla de arriba abajo, y vieron que venía con unas medias de seda encarnada, con ligas de tafetán blanco y rapacejos de oro y aljófar; los greguescos eran verdes, de tela de oro, y una saltaembarca o ropilla de lo mismo, suelta, debajo de la cual traía un jubón de tela finísima de oro y blanco, y los zapatos eran blancos y de hombre. No traía espada ceñida, sino una riquísima daga, y en los dedos, muchos y muy buenos anillos. Finalmente, la moza parecía bien a todos, y ninguno la conoció de cuantos la vieron, y los naturales del lugar dijeron que no podían pensar quién fuese, y los consabidores de las burlas que se habían de hacer a Sancho fueron los que más se admiraron, porque aquel suceso y hallazgo no venía ordenado por ellos; y así, estaban dudosos, esperando en qué pararía el caso.

Sancho quedó pasmado de la hermosura de la moza, y preguntóle quién era, adónde iba y qué ocasión le había movido para vestirse en aquel hábito. Ella, puestos los ojos en tierra con honestísima vergüenza, respondió:

-No puedo, señor, decir tan en público lo que tanto me importaba fuera secreto; una cosa quiero que se entienda: que no soy ladrón ni persona facinorosa, sino una doncella desdichada a quien la fuerza de unos celos ha hecho romper el decoro que a la honestidad se debe.

Oyendo esto el mayordomo, dijo a Sancho:

-Haga, señor gobernador, apartar la gente, porque esta señora con menos empacho pueda decir lo que quisiere.

Mandólo así el gobernador; apartáronse todos, si no fueron el mayordomo, maestresala y el secretario. Viéndose, pues, solos, la doncella prosiguió diciendo:

-«Yo, señores, soy hija de Pedro Pérez Mazorca, arrendador de las lanas deste lugar, el cual suele muchas veces ir en casa de mi padre.»

-Eso no lleva camino -dijo el mayordomo-, señora, porque yo conozco muy bien a Pedro Pérez y sé que no tiene hijo ninguno, ni varón ni hembra; y más, que decís que es vuestro padre, y luego añadís que suele ir muchas veces en casa de vuestro padre.

-Ya yo había dado en ello -dijo Sancho.

-Ahora, señores, yo estoy turbada, y no sé lo que me digo -respondió la doncella-; pero la verdad es que yo soy hija de Diego de la Llana, que todos vuestas mercedes deben de conocer.

-Aún eso lleva camino -respondió el mayordomo-, que yo conozco a Diego de la Llana, y sé que es un hidalgo principal y rico, y que tiene un hijo y una hija, y que después que enviudó no ha habido nadie en todo este lugar que pueda decir que ha visto el rostro de su hija; que la tiene tan encerrada que no da lugar al sol que la vea; y, con todo esto, la fama dice que es en extremo hermosa.

-Así es la verdad -respondió la doncella-, y esa hija soy yo; si la fama miente o no en mi hermosura ya os habréis, señores, desengañado, pues me habéis visto.

Y, en esto, comenzó a llorar tiernamente; viendo lo cual el secretario, se llegó al oído del maestresala y le dijo muy paso:

-Sin duda alguna que a esta pobre doncella le debe de haber sucedido algo de importancia, pues en tal traje, y a tales horas, y siendo tan principal, anda fuera de su casa.

-No hay dudar en eso -respondió el maestresala-; y más, que esa sospecha la confirman sus lágrimas.

Sancho la consoló con las mejores razones que él supo, y le pidió que sin temor alguno les dijese lo que le había sucedido; que todos procurarían remediarlo con muchas veras y por todas las vías posibles.

-«Es el caso, señores -respondió ella-, que mi padre me ha tenido encerrada diez años ha, que son los mismos que a mi madre come la tierra. En casa dicen misa en un rico oratorio, y yo en todo este tiempo no he visto que el sol del cielo de día, y la luna y las estrellas de noche, ni sé qué son calles, plazas, ni templos, ni aun hombres, fuera de mi padre y de un hermano mío, y de Pedro Pérez el arrendador, que, por entrar de ordinario en mi casa, se me antojó decir que era mi padre, por no declarar el mío. Este encerramiento y este negarme el salir de casa, siquiera a la iglesia, ha muchos días y meses que me trae muy desconsolada; quisiera yo ver el mundo, o, a lo menos, el pueblo donde nací, pareciéndome que este deseo no iba contra el buen decoro que las doncellas principales deben guardar a sí mismas. Cuando oía decir que corrían toros y jugaban cañas, y se representaban comedias, preguntaba a mi hermano, que es un año menor que yo, que me dijese qué cosas eran aquéllas y otras muchas que yo no he visto; él me lo declaraba por los mejores modos que sabía, pero todo era encenderme más el deseo de verlo. Finalmente, por abreviar el cuento de mi perdición, digo que yo rogué y pedí a mi hermano, que nunca tal pidiera ni tal rogara...»

Y tornó a renovar el llanto. El mayordomo le dijo:

-Prosiga vuestra merced, señora, y acabe de decirnos lo que le ha sucedido, que nos tienen a todos suspensos sus palabras y sus lágrimas.

-Pocas me quedan por decir -respondió la doncella-, aunque muchas lágrimas sí que llorar, porque los mal colocados deseos no pueden traer consigo otros descuentos que los semejantes.

Habíase sentado en el alma del maestresala la belleza de la doncella, y llegó otra vez su lanterna para verla de nuevo; y parecióle que no eran lágrimas las que lloraba, sino aljófar o rocío de los prados, y aun las subía de punto y las llegaba a perlas orientales, y estaba deseando que su desgracia no fuese tanta como daban a entender los indicios de su llanto y de sus suspiros. Desesperábase el gobernador de la tardanza que tenía la moza en dilatar su historia, y díjole que acabase de tenerlos más suspensos, que era tarde y faltaba mucho que andar del pueblo. Ella, entre interrotos sollozos y mal formados suspiros, dijo:

-«No es otra mi desgracia, ni mi infortunio es otro sino que yo rogué a mi hermano que me vistiese en hábitos de hombre con uno de sus vestidos y que me sacase una noche a ver todo el pueblo, cuando nuestro padre durmiese; él, importunado de mis ruegos, condecidió con mi deseo, y, poniéndome este vestido y él vistiéndose de otro mío, que le está como nacido, porque él no tiene pelo de barba y no parece sino una doncella hermosísima, esta noche, debe de haber una hora, poco más o menos, nos salimos de casa; y, guiados de nuestro mozo y desbaratado discurso, hemos rodeado todo el pueblo, y cuando queríamos volver a casa, vimos venir un gran tropel de gente, y mi hermano me dijo: “Hermana, ésta debe de ser la ronda: aligera los pies y pon alas en ellos, y vente tras mí corriendo, porque no nos conozcan, que nos será mal contado”. Y, diciendo esto, volvió las espaldas y comenzó, no digo a correr, sino a volar; yo, a menos de seis pasos, caí, con el sobresalto, y entonces llegó el ministro de la justicia que me trujo ante vuestras mercedes, adonde, por mala y antojadiza, me veo avergonzada ante tanta gente.»

-¿En efecto, señora -dijo Sancho-, no os ha sucedido otro desmán alguno, ni celos, como vos al principio de vuestro cuento dijistes, no os sacaron de vuestra casa?

-No me ha sucedido nada, ni me sacaron celos, sino sólo el deseo de ver mundo, que no se extendía a más que a ver las calles de este lugar.

Y acabó de confirmar ser verdad lo que la doncella decía llegar los corchetes con su hermano preso, a quien alcanzó uno dellos cuando se huyó de su hermana. No traía sino un faldellín rico y una mantellina de damasco azul con pasamanos de oro fino, la cabeza sin toca ni con otra cosa adornada que con sus mismos cabellos, que eran sortijas de oro, según eran rubios y enrizados. Apartáronse con el gobernador, mayordomo y maestresala, y, sin que lo oyese su hermana, le preguntaron cómo venía en aquel traje, y él, con no menos vergüenza y empacho, contó lo mismo que su hermana había contado, de que recibió gran gusto el enamorado maestresala. Pero el gobernador les dijo:

-Por cierto, señores, que ésta ha sido una gran rapacería, y para contar esta necedad y atrevimiento no eran menester tantas largas, ni tantas lágrimas y suspiros; que con decir: «Somos fulano y fulana, que nos salimos a espaciar de casa de nuestros padres con esta invención, sólo por curiosidad, sin otro designio alguno», se acabara el cuento, y no gemidicos, y lloramicos, y darle.

-Así es la verdad -respondió la doncella-, pero sepan vuesas mercedes que la turbación que he tenido ha sido tanta, que no me ha dejado guardar el término que debía.

-No se ha perdido nada -respondió Sancho-. Vamos, y dejaremos a vuesas mercedes en casa de su padre; quizá no los habrá echado menos. Y, de aquí adelante, no se muestren tan niños, ni tan deseosos de ver mundo, que la doncella honrada, la pierna quebrada, y en casa; y la mujer y la gallina, por andar se pierden aína; y la que es deseosa de ver, también tiene deseo de ser vista. No digo más.

El mancebo agradeció al gobernador la merced que quería hacerles de volverlos a su casa, y así, se encaminaron hacia ella, que no estaba muy lejos de allí. Llegaron, pues, y, tirando el hermano una china a una reja, al momento bajó una criada, que los estaba esperando, y les abrió la puerta, y ellos se entraron, dejando a todos admirados, así de su gentileza y hermosura como del deseo que tenían de ver mundo, de noche y sin salir del lugar; pero todo lo atribuyeron a su poca edad.

Quedó el maestresala traspasado su corazón, y propuso de luego otro día pedírsela por mujer a su padre, teniendo por cierto que no se la negaría, por ser él criado del duque; y aun a Sancho le vinieron deseos y barruntos de casar al mozo con Sanchica, su hija, y determinó de ponerlo en plática a su tiempo, dándose a entender que a una hija de un gobernador ningún marido se le podía negar.

Con esto, se acabó la ronda de aquella noche, y de allí a dos días el gobierno, con que se destroncaron y borraron todos sus designios, como se verá adelante.

Capítulo L

Donde se declara quién fueron los encantadores y verdugos que azotaron a la dueña y pellizcaron y arañaron a don Quijote, con el suceso que tuvo el paje que llevó la carta a Teresa Sancho, mujer de Sancho Panza

DICE Cide Hamete, puntualísimo escudriñador de los átomos desta verdadera historia, que al tiempo que doña Rodríguez salió de su aposento para ir a la estancia de don Quijote, otra dueña que con ella dormía lo sintió, y que, como todas las dueñas son amigas de saber, entender y oler, se fue tras ella, con tanto silencio, que la buena Rodríguez no lo echó de ver; y, así como la dueña la vio entrar en la estancia de don Quijote, porque no faltase en ella la general costumbre que todas las dueñas tienen de ser chismosas, al momento lo fue a poner en pico a su señora la duquesa, de cómo doña Rodríguez quedaba en el aposento de don Quijote.

La duquesa se lo dijo al duque, y le pidió licencia para que ella y Altisidora viniesen a ver lo que aquella dueña quería con don Quijote; el duque se la dio, y las dos, con gran tiento y sosiego, paso ante paso, llegaron a ponerse junto a la puerta del aposento, y tan cerca, que oían todo lo que dentro hablaban; y, cuando oyó la duquesa que Rodríguez había echado en la calle el Aranjuez de sus fuentes, no lo pudo sufrir, ni menos Altisidora; y así, llenas de cólera y deseosas de venganza, entraron de golpe en el aposento, y acrebillaron a don Quijote y vapularon a la dueña del modo que queda contado; porque las afrentas que van derechas contra la hermosura y presunción de las mujeres, despierta en ellas en gran manera la ira y enciende el deseo de vengarse.

Contó la duquesa al duque lo que le había pasado, de lo que se holgó mucho, y la duquesa, prosiguiendo con su intención de burlarse y recibir pasatiempo con don Quijote, despachó al paje que había hecho la figura de Dulcinea en el concierto de su desencanto -que tenía bien olvidado Sancho Panza con la ocupación de su gobierno-a Teresa Panza, su mujer, con la carta de su marido, y con otra suya, y con una gran sarta de corales ricos presentados.

Dice, pues, la historia, que el paje era muy discreto y agudo, y, con deseo de servir a sus señores, partió de muy buena gana al lugar de Sancho; y, antes de entrar en él, vio en un arroyo estar lavando cantidad de mujeres, a quien preguntó si le sabrían decir si en aquel lugar vivía una mujer llamada Teresa Panza, mujer de un cierto Sancho Panza, escudero de un caballero llamado don

Quijote de la Mancha, a cuya pregunta se levantó en pie una mozuela que estaba lavando, y dijo:

-Esa Teresa Panza es mi madre, y ese tal Sancho, mi señor padre, y el tal caballero, nuestro amo.

-Pues venid, doncella -dijo el paje-, y mostradme a vuestra madre, porque le traigo una carta y un presente del tal vuestro padre.

-Eso haré yo de muy buena gana, señor mío -respondió la moza, que mostraba ser de edad de catorce años, poco más a menos.

Y, dejando la ropa que lavaba a otra compañera, sin tocarse ni calzarse, que estaba en piernas y desgredada, saltó delante de la cabalgadura del paje, y dijo:

-Venga vuesa merced, que a la entrada del pueblo está nuestra casa, y mi madre en ella, con harta pena por no haber sabido muchos días ha de mi señor padre.

-Pues yo se las llevo tan buenas -dijo el paje-que tiene que dar bien gracias a Dios por ellas.

Finalmente, saltando, corriendo y brincando, llegó al pueblo la muchacha, y, antes de entrar en su casa, dijo a voces desde la puerta:

-Salga, madre Teresa, salga, salga, que viene aquí un señor que trae cartas y otras cosas de mi buen padre.

A cuyas voces salió Teresa Panza, su madre, hilando un copo de estopa, con una saya parda. Parecía, según era de corta, que se la habían cortado por vergonzoso lugar, con un corpezuelo asimismo pardo y una camisa de pechos. No era muy vieja, aunque mostraba pasar de los cuarenta, pero fuerte, tiesa, nervuda y avellanada; la cual, viendo a su hija, y al paje a caballo, le dijo:

-¿Qué es esto, niña? ¿Qué señor es éste?

-Es un servidor de mi señora doña Teresa Panza -respondió el paje.

Y, diciendo y haciendo, se arrojó del caballo y se fue con mucha humildad a poner de hinojos ante la señora Teresa, diciendo:

-Déme vuestra merced sus manos, mi señora doña Teresa, bien así como mujer legítima y particular del señor don Sancho Panza, gobernador propio de la ínsula Barataria.

-¡Ay, señor mío, quítese de ahí; no haga eso -respondió Teresa-, que yo no soy nada palaciega, sino una pobre labradora, hija de un estripaterrones y mujer de un escudero andante, y no de gobernador alguno!

-Vuesa merced -respondió el paje-es mujer dignísima de un gobernador archidignísimo; y, para prueba desta verdad, reciba vuesa merced esta carta y este presente.

Y sacó al instante de la faldriquera una sarta de corales con extremos de oro, y se la echó al cuello y dijo:

-Esta carta es del señor gobernador, y otra que traigo y estos corales son de mi señora la duquesa, que a vuestra merced me envía.

Quedó pasmada Teresa, y su hija ni más ni menos, y la muchacha dijo:

-Que me maten si no anda por aquí nuestro señor amo don Quijote, que debe de haber dado a padre el gobierno o condado que tantas veces le había prometido.

-Así es la verdad -respondió el paje-: que, por respeto del señor don Quijote, es ahora el señor Sancho gobernador de la ínsula Barataria, como se verá por esta carta.

-Léamela vuesa merced, señor gentilhomme -dijo Teresa-, porque, aunque yo sé hilar, no sé leer migaja.

-Ni yo tampoco -añadió Sanchica-; pero espérenme aquí, que yo iré a llamar quien la lea, ora sea el cura mismo, o el bachiller Sansón Carrasco, que vendrán de muy buena gana, por saber nuevas de mi padre.

-No hay para qué se llame a nadie, que yo no sé hilar, pero sé leer, y la leeré.

Y así, se la leyó toda, que, por quedar ya referida, no se pone aquí; y luego sacó otra de la duquesa, que decía desta manera:

Amiga Teresa:

Las buenas partes de la bondad y del ingenio de vuestro marido Sancho me movieron y obligaron a pedir a mi marido el duque le diese un gobierno de una ínsula, de muchas que tiene. Tengo noticia que gobierna como un girifalte, de lo que yo estoy muy contenta, y el duque mi señor, por el consiguiente; por lo que doy muchas gracias al cielo de no haberme engañado en haberle escogido para el tal gobierno; porque quiero que sepa la señora Teresa que con dificultad se halla un buen gobernador en el mundo, y tal me haga a mí Dios como Sancho gobierna.

Ahí le envío, querida mía, una sarta de corales con extremos de oro; yo me holgara que fuera de perlas orientales, pero quien te da el hueso, no te querría ver muerta: tiempo vendrá en que nos conozcamos y nos comuniquemos, y Dios sabe lo que será. Encomiéndeme a Sanchica, su hija, y dígale de mi parte que se apareje, que la tengo de casar altamente cuando menos lo piense.

Dícenme que en ese lugar hay bellotas gordas: envíeme hasta dos docenas, que las estimaré en mucho, por ser de su mano, y escríbame largo, avisándome de su salud y de su bienestar; y si hubiere menester alguna cosa, no tiene que hacer más que boquear: que su boca será medida, y Dios me la guarde. Deste lugar.

Su amiga, que bien la quiere,

-¡Ay -dijo Teresa en oyendo la carta-, y qué buena y qué llana y qué humilde señora! Con estas tales señoras me entierren a mí, y no las hidalgas que en este pueblo se usan, que piensan que por ser hidalgas no las ha de tocar el viento, y van a la iglesia con tanta fantasía como si fuesen las mismas reinas, que no parece sino que tienen a deshonra el mirar a una labradora; y veis aquí donde esta buena señora, con ser duquesa, me llama amiga, y me trata como si fuera su igual, que igual la vea yo con el más alto campanario que hay en la Mancha. Y, en lo que toca a las bellotas, señor mío, yo le enviaré a su señoría un celemín, que por gordas las pueden venir a ver a la mira y a la maravilla. Y por ahora, Sanchica, atiende a que se regale este señor: pon en orden este caballo, y saca de la caballeriza güevos, y corta tocino adunia, y démosle de comer como a un príncipe, que las buenas nuevas que nos ha traído y la buena cara que él tiene lo merece todo; y, en tanto, saldré yo a dar a mis vecinas las nuevas de nuestro contento, y al padre cura y a maese Nicolás el barbero, que tan amigos son y han sido de tu padre.

-Sí haré, madre -respondió Sanchica-; pero mire que me ha de dar la mitad desa sarta; que no tengo yo por tan boba a mi señora la duquesa, que se la había de enviar a ella toda.

-Todo es para ti, hija -respondió Teresa-, pero déjamela traer algunos días al cuello, que verdaderamente parece que me alegra el corazón.

-También se alegrarán -dijo el paje-cuando vean el lío que viene en este portamanteo, que es un vestido de paño finísimo que el gobernador sólo un día llevó a caza, el cual todo le envía para la señora Sanchica.

-Que me viva él mil años -respondió Sanchica-, y el que lo trae, ni más ni menos, y aun dos mil, si fuere necesidad.

Salióse en esto Teresa fuera de casa, con las cartas, y con la sarta al cuello, y iba tañendo en las cartas como si fuera en un pandero; y, encontrándose acaso con el cura y Sansón Carrasco, comenzó a bailar y a decir:

-¡A fee que agora que no hay pariente pobre! ¡Gobiernito tenemos! ¡No, sino tómese conmigo la más pintada hidalga, que yo la pondré como nueva!

-¿Qué es esto, Teresa Panza? ¿Qué locuras son éstas, y qué papeles son éstos?

-No es otra la locura sino que éstas son cartas de duquesas y de gobernadores, y estos que traigo al cuello son corales finos; las avemarías y los padres nuestros son de oro de martillo, y yo soy gobernadora.

-De Dios en ayuso, no os entendemos, Teresa, ni sabemos lo que os decís.

-Ahí lo podrán ver ellos -respondió Teresa.

Y dioles las cartas. Leyólas el cura de modo que las oyó Sansón Carrasco, y Sansón y el cura se miraron el uno al otro, como admirados de lo que habían leído; y preguntó el bachiller quién había traído aquellas cartas. Respondió Teresa que se viniesen con ella a su casa y verían el mensajero, que era un mancebo como un pino de oro, y que le traía otro presente que valía más de tanto. Quitóle el cura los corales del cuello, y mirólos y remirólos, y, certificándose que eran finos, tornó a admirarse de nuevo, y dijo:

-Por el hábito que tengo, que no sé qué me diga ni qué me piense de estas cartas y destos presentes: por una parte, veo y toco la fineza de estos corales, y por otra, leo que una duquesa envía a pedir dos docenas de bellotas.

-¡Aderézame esas medidas! -dijo entonces Carrasco-. Agora bien, vamos a ver al portador deste pliego, que dél nos informaremos de las dificultades que se nos ofrecen.

Hiciéronlo así, y volvióse Teresa con ellos. Hallaron al paje cribando un poco de cebada para su cabalgadura, y a Sanchica cortando un torrezno para empedrarle con güevos y dar de comer al paje, cuya presencia y buen adorno contentó mucho a los dos; y, después de haberle saludado cortésmente, y él a ellos, le preguntó Sansón les dijese nuevas así de don Quijote como de Sancho Panza; que, puesto que habían leído las cartas de Sancho y de la señora duquesa, todavía estaban confusos y no acababan de atinar qué sería aquello del gobierno de Sancho, y más de una ínsula, siendo todas o las más que hay en el mar Mediterráneo de Su Majestad. A lo que el paje respondió:

-De que el señor Sancho Panza sea gobernador, no hay que dudar en ello; de que sea ínsula o no la que gobierna, en eso no me entremeto, pero basta que sea un lugar de más de mil vecinos; y, en cuanto a lo de las bellotas, digo que mi señora la duquesa es tan llana y tan humilde, que no -decía él-enviar a pedir bellotas a una labradora, pero que le acontecía enviar a pedir un peine prestado a una vecina suya. Porque quiero que sepan vuestras mercedes que las señoras de Aragón, aunque son tan principales, no son tan puntuosas y levantadas como las señoras castellanas; con más llaneza tratan con las gentes.

Estando en la mitad destas pláticas, saltó Sanchica con un halda de güevos, y preguntó al paje:

-Dígame, señor: ¿mi señor padre trae por ventura calzas atacadas después que es gobernador?

-No he mirado en ello -respondió el paje-, pero sí debe de traer.

-¡Ay Dios mío -replicó Sanchica-, y que será de ver a mi padre con pedorreras! ¿No es bueno sino que desde que nací tengo deseo de ver a mi padre con calzas atacadas?

-Como con esas cosas le verá vuestra merced si vive -respondió el paje-. Par Dios, términos lleva de caminar con papahígo, con solos dos meses que le dure el gobierno.

Bien echaron de ver el cura y el bachiller que el paje hablaba socarronamente, pero la fineza de los corales y el vestido de caza que Sancho enviaba lo deshacía todo; que ya Teresa les había mostrado el vestido. Y no dejaron de reírse del deseo de Sanchica, y más cuando Teresa dijo:

-Señor cura, eche cata por ahí si hay alguien que vaya a Madrid, o a Toledo, para que me compre un verdugado redondo, hecho y derecho, y sea al uso y de los mejores que hubiere; que en verdad en verdad que tengo de honrar el gobierno de mi marido en cuanto yo pudiere, y aun que si me enoja, me tengo de ir a esa corte, y echar un coche, como todas; que la que tiene marido gobernador muy bien le puede traer y sustentar.

-Y ¡cómo, madre! -dijo Sanchica-. Pluguiese a Dios que fuese antes hoy que mañana, aunque dijese los que me vieses ir sentada con mi señora madre en aquel coche: «¡Mirad la tal por cual, hija del harto de ajos, y cómo va sentada y tendida en el coche, como si fuera una papesa!» Pero pisen ellos los lodos, y ándeme yo en mi coche, levantados los pies del suelo. ¡Mal año y mal mes para cuantos murmuradores hay en el mundo, y ándeme yo caliente, y ríase la gente! ¿Digo bien, madre mía?

-Y ¡cómo que dices bien, hija! -respondió Teresa-. Y todas estas venturas, y aun mayores, me las tiene profetizadas mi buen Sancho, y verás tú, hija, cómo no para hasta hacerme condesa: que todo es comenzar a ser venturosas; y, como yo he oído decir muchas veces a tu buen padre, que así como lo es tuyo lo es de los refranes, cuando te dieren la vaquilla, corre con soguilla: cuando te dieren un gobierno, cógele; cuando te dieren un condado, agárrale, y cuando te hicieren tus, tus, con alguna buena dádiva, envásala. ¡No, sino dormíos, y no respondáis a las venturas y buenas dichas que están llamando a la puerta de vuestra casa!

-Y ¿qué se me da a mí -añadió Sanchica- que diga el que quisiere cuando me vea entonada y fantasiosa: «Viose el perro en bragas de cerro...», y lo demás?

Oyendo lo cual el cura, dijo:

-Yo no puedo creer sino que todos los deste linaje de los Panzas nacieron cada uno con un costal de refranes en el cuerpo: ninguno dellos he visto que no los derrame a todas horas y en todas las pláticas que tienen.

-Así es la verdad -dijo el paje-, que el señor gobernador Sancho a cada paso los dice, y, aunque muchos no vienen a propósito, todavía dan gusto, y mi señora la duquesa y el duque los celebran mucho.

-¿Que todavía se afirma vuestra merced, señor mío -dijo el bachiller-, ser verdad esto del gobierno de Sancho, y de que hay duquesa en el mundo que le envíe presentes y le escriba? Porque nosotros, aunque tocamos los presentes y hemos leído las cartas, no lo creemos, y pensamos que ésta es una de las cosas de don Quijote, nuestro compatriota, que todas piensa que son hechas por encantamento; y así, estoy por decir que quiero tocar y palpar a vuestra merced, por ver si es embajador fantástico o hombre de carne y hueso.

-Señores, yo no sé más de mí -respondió el paje-sino que soy embajador verdadero, y que el señor Sancho Panza es gobernador efectivo, y que mis señores duque y duquesa pueden dar, y han dado, el tal gobierno; y que he oído decir que en él se porta valentísimamente el tal Sancho Panza; si en esto hay encantamento o no, vuestras mercedes lo disputen allá entre ellos, que yo no sé otra cosa, para el juramento que hago, que es por vida de mis padres, que los tengo vivos y los amo y los quiero mucho.

-Bien podrá ello ser así -replicó el bachiller-, pero dubitat Augustinus.

-Dude quien dudare -respondió el paje-, la verdad es la que he dicho, y esta que ha de andar siempre sobre la mentira, como el aceite sobre el agua; y si no, operibus credite, et non verbis: véngase alguno de vuestras mercedes conmigo, y verán con los ojos lo que no creen por los oídos.

-Esa ida a mí toca -dijo Sanchica-: lléveme vuestra merced, señor, a las ancas de su rocín, que yo iré de muy buena gana a ver a mi señor padre.

-Las hijas de los gobernadores no han de ir solas por los caminos, sino acompañadas de carrozas y literas y de gran número de sirvientes.

-Par Dios -respondió Sancha-, tan bien me vaya yo sobre una pollina como sobre un coche. ¡Hallado la habéis la melindrosa!

-Calla, mochacha -dijo Teresa-, que no sabes lo que te dices, y este señor está en lo cierto: que tal el tiempo, tal el tiento; cuando Sancho, Sancha, y cuando gobernador, señora, y no sé si diga algo.

-Más dice la señora Teresa de lo que piensa -dijo el paje-; y denme de comer y despáchenme luego, porque pienso volverme esta tarde.

A lo que dijo el cura:

-Vuestra merced se vendrá a hacer penitencia conmigo, que la señora Teresa más tiene voluntad que alhajas para servir a tan buen huésped.

Rehusólo el paje; pero, en efecto, lo hubo de conceder por su mejora, y el cura le llevó consigo de buena gana, por tener lugar de preguntarle de espacio por don Quijote y sus hazañas.

El bachiller se ofreció de escribir las cartas a Teresa de la respuesta, pero ella no quiso que el bachiller se metiese en sus cosas, que le tenía por algo burlón; y así, dio un bollo y dos huevos a un monacillo que sabía escribir, el cual le escribió dos cartas, una para su marido y otra para la duquesa, notadas de su mismo caletre, que no son las peores que en esta grande historia se ponen, como se verá adelante.

Capítulo LI

AMANECIÓ el día que se siguió a la noche de la ronda del gobernador, la cual el maestresala pasó sin dormir, ocupado el pensamiento en el rostro, brío y belleza de la disfrazada doncella; y el mayordomo ocupó lo que della faltaba en escribir a sus señores lo que Sancho Panza hacía y decía, tan admirado de sus hechos como de sus dichos: porque andaban mezcladas sus palabras y sus acciones, con asomos discretos y tontos.

Levantóse, en fin, el señor gobernador, y, por orden del doctor Pedro Recio, le hicieron desayunar con un poco de conserva y cuatro tragos de agua fría, cosa que la trocara Sancho con un pedazo de pan y un racimo de uvas; pero, viendo que aquello era más fuerza que voluntad, pasó por ello, con harto dolor de su alma y fatiga de su estómago, haciéndole creer Pedro Recio que los manjares pocos y delicados avivaban el ingenio, que era lo que más convenía a las personas constituidas en mandos y en oficios graves, donde se han de aprovechar no tanto de las fuerzas corporales como de las del entendimiento.

Con esta sofistería padecía hambre Sancho, y tal, que en su secreto maldecía el gobierno y aun a quien se le había dado; pero, con su hambre y con su conserva, se puso a juzgar aquel día, y lo primero que se le ofreció fue una pregunta que un forastero le hizo, estando presentes a todo el mayordomo y los demás acólitos, que fue:

-Señor, un caudaloso río dividía dos términos de un mismo señorío (y esté vuestra merced atento, porque el caso es de importancia y algo dificultoso). Digo, pues, que sobre este río estaba una puente, y al cabo della, una horca y una como casa de audiencia, en la cual de ordinario había cuatro jueces que juzgaban la ley que puso el dueño del río, de la puente y del señorío, que era en esta forma: «Si alguno pasare por esta puente de una parte a otra, ha de jurar primero adónde y a qué va; y si jurare verdad, déjenle pasar; y si dijere mentira, muera por ello ahorcado en la horca que allí se muestra, sin remisión alguna». Sabida esta ley y la rigurosa condición della, pasaban muchos, y luego en lo que juraban se echaba de ver que decían verdad, y los jueces los dejaban pasar libremente. Sucedió, pues, que, tomando juramento a un hombre, juró y dijo que para el juramento que hacía, que iba a morir en aquella horca que allí estaba, y no a otra cosa. Repararon los jueces en el juramento y dijeron: «Si a este hombre le dejamos pasar libremente, mintió en su juramento, y, conforme a la ley, debe morir; y si le ahorcamos, él juró que iba a morir en aquella horca, y, habiendo jurado verdad, por la misma ley debe ser libre». Pídesse a vuestra merced, señor gobernador, qué harán los jueces del tal hombre; que aun hasta agora están dudosos y suspensos. Y, habiendo tenido noticia del agudo y elevado entendimiento de vuestra merced, me enviaron a mí a que suplicase a vuestra merced de su parte diese su parecer en tan intrincado y dudoso caso.

A lo que respondió Sancho:

-Por cierto que esos señores jueces que a mí os envían lo pudieran haber escusado, porque yo soy un hombre que tengo más de mostrenco que de agudo; pero, con todo eso, repetidme otra vez el negocio de modo que yo le entienda: quizá podría ser que diese en el hito.

Volvió otra y otra vez el preguntante a referir lo que primero había dicho, y Sancho dijo:

-A mi parecer, este negocio en dos paletas le declararé yo, y es así: el tal hombre jura que va a morir en la horca, y si muere en ella, juró verdad, y por la ley puesta merece ser libre y que pase la puente; y si no le ahorcan, juró mentira, y por la misma ley merece que le ahorquen.

-Así es como el señor gobernador dice -dijo el mensajero-; y cuanto a la entereza y entendimiento del caso, no hay más que pedir ni que dudar.

-Digo yo, pues, agora -replicó Sancho- que deste hombre aquella parte que juró verdad la dejen pasar, y la que dijo mentira la ahorquen, y desta manera se cumplirá al pie de la letra la condición del pasaje.

-Pues, señor gobernador -replicó el preguntador-, será necesario que el tal hombre se divida en partes, en mentirosa y verdadera; y si se divide, por fuerza ha de morir, y así no se consigue cosa alguna de lo que la ley pide, y es de necesidad espresa que se cumpla con ella.

-Venid acá, señor buen hombre -respondió Sancho-; este pasajero que decís, o yo soy un porro, o él tiene la misma razón para morir que para vivir y pasar la puente; porque si la verdad le salva, la mentira le condena igualmente; y, siendo esto así, como lo es, soy de parecer que digáis a esos señores que a mí os enviaron que, pues están en un fil las razones de condenarle o asolverle, que le dejen pasar libremente, pues siempre es alabado más el hacer bien que mal, y esto lo diera firmado de mi nombre, si supiera firmar; y yo en este caso no he hablado de mí, sino que se me vino a la memoria un precepto, entre otros muchos que me dio mi amo don Quijote la noche antes que viniese a ser gobernador desta ínsula: que fue que, cuando la justicia estuviese en duda, me decantase y acogiese a la misericordia; y ha querido Dios que agora se me acordase, por venir en este caso como de molde.

-Así es -respondió el mayordomo-, y tengo para mí que el mismo Licurgo, que dio leyes a los lacedemonios, no pudiera dar mejor sentencia que la que el gran Panza ha dado. Y acábase con esto la audiencia desta mañana, y yo daré orden como el señor gobernador coma muy a su gusto.

-Eso pido, y barras derechas -dijo Sancho-: denme de comer, y lluevan casos y dudas sobre mí, que yo las despabilaré en el aire.

Cumplió su palabra el mayordomo, pareciéndole ser cargo de conciencia matar de hambre a tan discreto gobernador; y más, que pensaba concluir con él aquella misma noche haciéndole la burla última que traía en comisión de hacerle.

Sucedió, pues, que, habiendo comido aquel día contra las reglas y aforismos del doctor Tirteafuera, al levantar de los manteles, entró un correo con una carta de don Quijote para el gobernador. Mandó Sancho al secretario que la leyese para sí, y que si no viniese en ella alguna cosa digna de secreto, la leyese en voz alta. Hízolo así el secretario, y, repasándola primero, dijo:

-Bien se puede leer en voz alta, que lo que el señor don Quijote escribe a vuestra merced merece estar estampado y escrito con letras de oro, y dice así:

CARTA DE DON QUIJOTE DE LA MANCHA A SANCHE PANZA, GOBERNADOR DE LA ÍNSULA BARATARIA

Cuando esperaba oír nuevas de tus descuidos e impertinencias, Sancho amigo, las oí de tus discreciones, de que di por ello gracias particulares al cielo, el cual del estiércol sabe levantar los pobres, y de los tontos hacer discretos. Dícneme que gobiernas como si fueses hombre, y que eres hombre como si fueses bestia, según es la humildad con que te tratas; y quiero que adviertas, Sancho, que muchas veces conviene y es necesario, por la autoridad del oficio, ir contra la humildad del corazón; porque el buen adorno de la persona que está puesta en graves cargos ha de ser conforme a lo que ellos piden, y no a la medida de lo que su humilde condición le inclina. Vístete bien, que un palo compuesto no parece palo. No digo que traigas dijes ni galas, ni que siendo juez te vistas como soldado, sino que te adornes con el hábito que tu oficio requiere, con tal que sea limpio y bien compuesto.

Para ganar la voluntad del pueblo que gobiernas, entre otras has de hacer dos cosas: la una, ser bien criado con todos, aunque esto ya otra vez te lo he dicho; y la otra, procurar la abundancia de los mantenimientos; que no hay cosa que más fatigue el corazón de los pobres que la hambre y la carestía.

No hagas muchas pragmáticas; y si las hicieres, procura que sean buenas, y, sobre todo, que se guarden y cumplan; que las pragmáticas que no se guardan, lo mismo es que si no lo fuesen; antes dan a entender que el príncipe que tuvo discreción y autoridad para hacerlas, no tuvo valor para hacer que se guardasen; y las leyes que atemorizan y no se ejecutan, vienen a ser como la viga, rey de las ranas: que al principio las espantó, y con el tiempo la menospreciaron y se subieron sobre ella.

Sé padre de las virtudes y padrastro de los vicios. No seas siempre riguroso, ni siempre blando, y escoge el medio entre estos dos extremos, que en esto está el punto de la discreción. Visita las cárceles, las carnicerías y las plazas, que la presencia del gobernador en lugares tales es de mucha importancia: consuela a los presos, que esperan la brevedad de su despacho; es coco a los carniceros, que por entonces igualan los pesos, y es espantajo a las plaseras, por la misma razón. No te muestres, aunque por ventura lo seas -lo cual yo no creo-, codicioso, mujeriego ni glotón; porque, en sabiendo el pueblo y los que te tratan tu inclinación determinada, por allí te darán batería, hasta derribarte en el profundo de la perdición.

Mira y remira, pasa y repasa los consejos y documentos que te di por escrito antes que de aquí partieses a tu gobierno, y verás como hallas en ellos, si los guardas, una ayuda de costa que te sobrelleve los trabajos y dificultades que a cada paso a los gobernadores se les ofrecen. Escribe a tus señores y muéstrateles agradecido, que la ingratitud es hija de la soberbia, y uno de los mayores pecados que se sabe, y la persona que es agradecida a los que bien le han hecho, da indicio que también lo será a Dios, que tantos bienes le hizo y de continuo le hace.

La señora duquesa despachó un propio con tu vestido y otro presente a tu mujer Teresa Panza; por momentos esperamos respuesta.

Yo he estado un poco mal dispuesto de un cierto gateamiento que me sucedió no muy a cuento de mis narices; pero no fue nada, que si hay encantadores que me maltraten, también los hay que me defiendan.

Avísame si el mayordomo que está contigo tuvo que ver en las acciones de la Trifaldi, como tú sospechaste, y de todo lo que te sucediere me irás dando aviso, pues es tan corto el camino; cuanto más, que yo pienso dejar presto esta vida ociosa en que estoy, pues no nací para ella.

Un negocio se me ha ofrecido, que creo que me ha de poner en desgracia destos señores; pero, aunque se me da mucho, no se me da nada, pues, en fin en fin, tengo de cumplir antes con mi profesión que con su gusto, conforme a lo que suele decirse: amicus Plato, sed magis amica veritas. Dígote este latín porque me doy a entender que, después que eres gobernador, lo habrás aprendido. Y a Dios, el cual te guarde de que ninguno te tenga lástima.

Tu amigo,

Don Quijote de la Mancha.

Oyó Sancho la carta con mucha atención, y fue celebrada y tenida por discreta de los que la oyeron; y luego Sancho se levantó de la mesa, y, llamando al secretario, se encerró con él en su estancia, y, sin dilatarlo más, quiso responder luego a su señor don Quijote, y dijo al secretario que, sin añadir ni quitar cosa alguna, fuese escribiendo lo que él le dijese, y así lo hizo; y la carta de la respuesta fue del tenor siguiente:

CARTA DE SANCHO PANZA A DON QUIJOTE DE LA MANCHA

La ocupación de mis negocios es tan grande que no tengo lugar para rascarme la cabeza, ni aun para cortarme las uñas; y así, las traigo tan crecidas cual Dios lo remedie. Digo esto, señor mío de mi alma, porque vuesa merced no se espante si hasta agora no he dado aviso de mi bien o mal estar en este gobierno, en el cual tengo más hambre que cuando andábamos los dos por las selvas y por los despoblados.

Escribióme el duque, mi señor, el otro día, dándome aviso que habían entrado en esta ínsula ciertas espías para matarme, y hasta agora yo no he descubierto otra que un cierto doctor que está en este lugar asalariado para matar a cuantos gobernadores aquí vinieren: llámase el doctor Pedro Recio, y es natural de Tirteafuera: ¡porque vea vuesa merced qué nombre para no temer que he de morir a sus manos! Este tal doctor dice él mismo de sí mismo que él no cura las enfermedades cuando las hay, sino que las previene, para que no vengán; y las medecinas que usa son dieta y más dieta, hasta poner la persona en los huesos mondos, como si no fuese mayor mal la flaqueza que la calentura. Finalmente, él me va matando de hambre, y yo me voy muriendo de despecho, pues cuando pensé venir a este gobierno a comer caliente y a beber frío, y a recrear el cuerpo entre sábanas de holanda, sobre colchones de pluma, he venido a hacer penitencia, como si fuera ermitaño; y, como no la hago de mi voluntad, pienso que, al cabo al cabo, me ha de llevar el diablo.

Hasta agora no he tocado derecho ni llevado cohecho, y no puedo pensar en qué va esto; porque aquí me han dicho que los gobernadores que a esta ínsula suelen venir, antes de entrar en ella, o les han dado o les han prestado los del pueblo muchos dineros, y que ésta es ordinaria usanza en los demás que van a gobiernos, no solamente en éste.

Anoche, andando de ronda, topé una muy hermosa doncella en traje de varón y un hermano suyo en hábito de mujer; de la moza se enamoró mi maestresala, y la escogió en su imaginación para su mujer, según él ha dicho, y yo escogí al mozo para mi yerno; hoy los dos pondremos en plática nuestros pensamientos con el padre de entrambos, que es un tal Diego de la Llana, hidalgo y cristiano viejo cuanto se quiere.

Yo visito las plazas, como vuestra merced me lo aconseja, y ayer hallé una tendera que vendía avellanas nuevas, y averigüéle que había mezclado con una hanega de avellanas nuevas otra de viejas, vanas y podridas; apliquélas todas para los niños de la doctrina, que las sabrían bien distinguir, y sentenciéla que por quince días no entrase en la plaza. Hanme dicho que lo hice valerosamente; lo que sé decir a vuestra merced es que es fama en este pueblo que no hay gente más mala que las placentas, porque todas son desvergonzadas, desalmadas y atrevidas, y yo así lo creo, por las que he visto en otros pueblos.

De que mi señora la duquesa haya escrito a mi mujer Teresa Panza y enviándole el presente que vuestra merced dice, estoy muy satisfecho, y procuraré de mostrarme agradecido a su tiempo: bésele vuestra merced las manos de mi parte, diciendo que digo yo que no lo ha echado en saco roto, como lo verá por la obra.

No querría que vuestra merced tuviese trabacuentas de disgusto con esos mis señores, porque si vuestra merced se enoja con ellos, claro está que ha de redundar en mi daño, y no será bien que, pues se me da a mí por consejo que sea agradecido, que vuestra merced no lo sea con quien tantas mercedes le tiene hechas y con tanto regalo ha sido tratado en su castillo.

Aquello del gateado no entiendo, pero imagino que debe de ser alguna de las malas fechorías que con vuestra merced suelen usar los malos encantadores; yo lo sabré cuando nos veamos.

Quisiera enviarle a vuestra merced alguna cosa, pero no sé qué envíe, si no es algunos cañutos de jeringas, que para con vejigas los hacen en esta ínsula muy curiosos; aunque si me dura el oficio, yo buscaré qué enviar de haldas o de mangas.

Si me escribiere mi mujer Teresa Panza, pague vuestra merced el porte y envíeme la carta, que tengo grandísimo deseo de saber del estado de mi casa, de mi mujer y de mis hijos. Y con esto, Dios libre a vuestra merced de mal intencionados encantadores, y a mí me saque con bien y en paz deste gobierno, que lo dudo, porque le pienso dejar con la vida, según me trata el doctor Pedro Recio.

Criado de vuestra merced,
Sancho Panza, el Gobernador.

Cerró la carta el secretario y despachó luego al correo; y, juntándose los burladores de Sancho, dieron orden entre sí cómo despacharle del gobierno; y aquella tarde la pasó Sancho en hacer algunas ordenanzas tocantes al buen gobierno de la que él imaginaba ser ínsula, y ordenó que no hubiese regatones de los bastimentos en la república, y que pudiesen meter en ella vino de las partes que quisiesen, con aditamento que declarasen el lugar de donde era, para ponerle el precio según su estimación, bondad y fama, y el que lo aguase o le mudase el nombre, perdiese la vida por ello.

Moderó el precio de todo calzado, principalmente el de los zapatos, por parecerle que corría con exorbitancia; puso tasa en los salarios de los criados, que caminaban a rienda suelta por el camino del interese; puso gravísimas penas a los que cantasen cantares lascivos y descompuestos, ni de noche ni de día. Ordenó que ningún ciego cantase milagro en coplas si no trujese testimonio auténtico de ser verdadero, por parecerle que los más que los ciegos cantan son fingidos, en perjuicio de los verdaderos. Hizo y creó un alguacil de pobres, no para que los persiguiese, sino para que los examinase si lo eran, porque a la sombra de la manquedad fingida y de la llaga falsa andan los brazos ladrones y la salud borracha. En resolución: él ordenó cosas tan buenas que hasta hoy se guardan en aquel lugar, y se nombran Las constituciones del gran gobernador Sancho Panza.

Capítulo LII

CUENTA Cide Hamete que estando ya don Quijote sano de sus aruños, le pareció que la vida que en aquel castillo tenía era contra toda la orden de caballería que profesaba, y así, determinó de pedir licencia a los duques para partirse a Zaragoza, cuyas fiestas llegaban cerca, adonde pensaba ganar el arnés que en las tales fiestas se conquista.

Y, estando un día a la mesa con los duques, y comenzando a poner en obra su intención y pedir la licencia, veis aquí a deshora entrar por la puerta de la gran sala dos mujeres, como después pareció, cubiertas de luto de los pies a la cabeza, y la una dellas, llegándose a don Quijote, se le echó a los pies tendida de largo a largo, la boca cosida con los pies de don Quijote, y daba unos gemidos tan tristes, tan profundos y tan dolorosos, que puso en confusión a todos los que la oían y miraban; y, aunque los duques pensaron que sería alguna burla que sus criados querían hacer a don Quijote, todavía, viendo con el ahínco que la mujer suspiraba, gemía y lloraba, los tuvo dudosos y suspensos, hasta que don Quijote, compasivo, la levantó del suelo y hizo que se descubriese y quitase el manto de sobre la faz llorosa.

Ella lo hizo así, y mostró ser lo que jamás se pudiera pensar, porque descubrió el rostro de doña Rodríguez, la dueña de casa, y la otra enlutada era su hija, la burlada del hijo del labrador rico. Admiráronse todos aquellos que la conocían, y más los duques que ninguno; que, puesto que la tenían por boba y de buena pasta, no por tanto que viniese a hacer locuras. Finalmente, doña Rodríguez, volviéndose a los señores, les dijo:

-Vuestas excelencias sean servidos de darme licencia que yo departa un poco con este caballero, porque así conviene para salir con bien del negocio en que me ha puesto el atrevimiento de un mal intencionado villano.

El duque dijo que él se la daba, y que departiese con el señor don Quijote cuanto le viniese en deseo. Ella, enderezando la voz y el rostro a don Quijote, dijo:

-Días ha, valeroso caballero, que os tengo dada cuenta de la sinrazón y alevosía que un mal labrador tiene fecha a mi muy querida y amada hija, que es esta desdichada que aquí está presente, y vos me habedes prometido de volver por ella, enderezándole el tuerto que le tienen fecho, y agora ha llegado a mi noticia que os queredes partir deste castillo, en busca de las buenas venturas que Dios os depare; y así, querría que, antes que os escurriésedes por esos caminos, desafiásedes a este rústico indómito, y le hiciésedes que se casase con mi hija, en cumplimiento de la palabra que le dio de ser su esposo, antes y primero que yogase con ella; porque pensar que el duque mi señor me ha de hacer justicia es pedir peras al olmo, por la ocasión que ya a vuesa merced en puridad tengo declarada. Y con esto, Nuestro Señor dé a vuesa merced mucha salud, y a nosotras no nos desampare.

A cuyas razones respondió don Quijote, con mucha gravedad y prosopopeya:

-Buena dueña, templad vuestras lágrimas, o, por mejor decir, enjugadlas y ahorrad de vuestros suspiros, que yo tomo a mi cargo el remedio de vuestra hija, a la cual le hubiera estado mejor no haber sido tan fácil en creer promesas de enamorados, las cuales, por la mayor parte, son ligeras de prometer y muy pesadas de cumplir; y así, con licencia del duque mi señor, yo me partiré luego en busca dese desalmado mancebo, y le hallaré, y le desafiaré, y le mataré cada y cuando que se escusare de cumplir la prometida palabra; que el principal asunto de mi profesión es perdonar a los humildes y castigar a los soberbios; quiero decir: acorrer a los miserables y destruir a los rigurosos.

-No es menester -respondió el duque-que vuesa merced se ponga en trabajo de buscar al rústico de quien esta buena dueña se queja, ni es menester tampoco que vuesa merced me pida a mí licencia para desafiarme; que yo le doy por desafiado, y tomo a mi cargo de hacerle saber este desafío, y que le acete, y venga a responder por sí a este mi castillo, donde a entrambos daré campo seguro, guardando todas las condiciones que en tales actos suelen y deben guardarse, guardando igualmente su justicia a cada uno, como están obligados a guardarla todos aquellos príncipes que dan campo franco a los que se combaten en los términos de sus señoríos.

-Pues con ese seguro y con buena licencia de vuestra grandeza -replicó don Quijote-, desde aquí digo que por esta vez renuncio a mi hidalguía, y me allano y ajusto con la llaneza del dañador, y me hago igual con él, habilitándole para poder combatir conmigo; y así, aunque ausente, le desafío y repto, en razón de que hizo mal en defraudar a esta pobre, que fue doncella y ya por su culpa no lo es, y que le ha de cumplir la palabra que le dio de ser su legítimo esposo, o morir en la demanda.

Y luego, descalzándose un guante, le arrojó en mitad de la sala, y el duque le alzó, diciendo que, como ya había dicho, él acetaba el tal desafío en nombre de su vasallo, y señalaba el plazo de allí a seis días; y el campo, en la plaza de aquel castillo; y las armas, las acostumbradas de los caballeros: lanza y escudo, y arnés tranzado, con todas las demás piezas, sin engaño, superchería o superstición alguna, examinadas y vistas por los jueces del campo.

-Pero, ante todas cosas, es menester que esta buena dueña y esta mala doncella pongan el derecho de su justicia en manos del señor don Quijote; que de otra manera no se hará nada, ni llegará a debida ejecución el tal desafío.

-Yo sí pongo -respondió la dueña.

-Y yo también -añadió la hija, toda llorosa y toda vergonzosa y de mal talante.

Tomado, pues, este apuntamiento, y habiendo imaginado el duque lo que había de hacer en el caso, las enlutadas se fueron, y ordenó la duquesa que de allí adelante no las tratasen como a sus criadas, sino como a señoras aventureras que venían a pedir justicia a su casa; y así, les dieron cuarto aparte y las sirvieron como a forasteras, no sin espanto de las demás criadas, que no sabían en qué había de parar la sandez y desenvoltura de doña Rodríguez y de su malandante hija.

Estando en esto, para acabar de regocijar la fiesta y dar buen fin a la comida, veis aquí donde entró por la sala el paje que llevó las cartas y presentes a Teresa Panza, mujer del gobernador Sancho Panza, de cuya llegada recibieron gran contento los duques, deseosos de saber lo que le había sucedido en su viaje; y, preguntádoselo, respondió el paje que no lo podía decir tan en público ni con breves palabras: que sus excelencias fuesen servidos de dejarlo para a solas, y que entretanto se entretuviesen con aquellas cartas. Y, sacando dos cartas, las puso en manos de la duquesa. La una decía en el sobreescrito: Carta para mi señora la duquesa tal, de no sé dónde, y la otra: A mi marido Sancho Panza, gobernador de la ínsula Barataria, que Dios prospere más años que a mí. No se le cocía el pan, como suele decirse, a la duquesa hasta leer su carta, y abriéndola y leído para sí, y viendo que la podía leer en voz alta para que el duque y los circunstantes la oyesen, leyó desta manera:

CARTA DE TERESA PANZA A LA DUQUESA

Mucho contento me dio, señora mía, la carta que vuesa grandeza me escribió, que en verdad que la tenía bien deseada. La sarta de corales es muy buena, y el vestido de caza de mi marido no le va en zaga. De que vuestra señoría haya hecho gobernador a Sancho, mi consorte, ha recibido mucho gusto todo este lugar, puesto que no hay quien lo crea, principalmente el cura, y mase Nicolás el barbero, y Sansón Carrasco el bachiller; pero a mí no se me da nada; que, como ello sea así, como lo es, diga cada uno lo que quisiere; aunque, si va a decir verdad, a no venir los corales y el vestido, tampoco yo lo creyera, porque en este pueblo todos tienen a mi marido por un porro, y que, sacado de gobernar un hato de cabras, no pueden imaginar para qué gobierno pueda ser bueno. Dios lo haga, y lo encamine como vea que lo han menester sus hijos.

Yo, señora de mi alma, estoy determinada, con licencia de vuesa merced, de meter este buen día en mi casa, yéndome a la corte a tenderme en un coche, para quebrar los ojos a mil envidiosos que ya tengo; y así, suplico a vuesa excelencia mande a mi marido me envíe algún dinerillo, y que sea algo qué, porque en la corte son los gastos grandes: que el pan vale a real, y la carne, la libra, a treinta maravedís, que es un juicio; y si quisiere que no vaya, que me lo avise con tiempo, porque me están bullendo los pies por ponerme en camino; que me dicen mis amigas y mis vecinas que, si yo y mi hija andamos orondas y pomposas en la corte, vendrá a ser conocido mi marido por mí más que yo por él, siendo forzoso que pregunten muchos: «¿Quién son estas señoras deste coche?» Y un criado mío responder: «La mujer y la hija de Sancho Panza, gobernador de la ínsula Barataria»; y desta manera será conocido Sancho, y yo seré estimada, y a Roma por todo.

Pésame, cuanto pesarme puede, que este año no se han cogido bellotas en este pueblo; con todo eso, envío a vuesa alteza hasta medio celemín, que una a una las fui yo a coger y a escoger al monte, y no las hallé más mayores; yo quisiera que fueran como huevos de avestruz.

No se le olvide a vuestra pomposidad de escribirme, que yo tendré cuidado de la respuesta, avisando de mi salud y de todo lo que hubiere que avisar deste lugar, donde quedo rogando a Nuestro Señor guarde a vuestra grandeza, y a mí no olvide. Sancha, mi hija, y mi hijo besan a vuestra merced las manos.

La que tiene más deseo de ver a vuestra señoría que de escribirla, su criada,
Teresa Panza.

Grande fue el gusto que todos recibieron de oír la carta de Teresa Panza, principalmente los duques, y la duquesa pidió parecer a don Quijote si sería bien abrir la carta que venía para el gobernador, que imaginaba debía de ser bonísima. Don Quijote dijo que él la abriría por darles gusto, y así lo hizo, y vio que decía desta manera:

CARTA DE TERESA PANZA A SANCHO PANZA SU MARIDO

Tu carta recibí, Sancho mío de mi alma, y yo te prometo y juro como católica cristiana que no faltaron dos dedos para volverme loca de contento. Mira, hermano: cuando yo llegué a oír que eres gobernador, me pensé allí caer muerta de puro gozo, que ya sabes tú que dicen que así mata la alegría súbita como el dolor grande. A Sanchica, tu hija, se le fueron las aguas sin sentirlo, de puro contento. El vestido que me enviaste tenía delante, y los corales que me envió mi señora la duquesa al cuello, y las cartas en las manos, y el portador dellas allí presente, y, con todo eso, creía y pensaba que era todo sueño lo que veía y lo que tocaba; porque, ¿quién podía pensar que un pastor de cabras había de venir a ser gobernador de ínsulas? Ya sabes tú, amigo, que decía mi madre que era menester vivir mucho para ver mucho: dígolo porque pienso ver más si vivo más; porque no pienso parar hasta verte arrendador o alcabalero, que son oficios que, aunque lleva el diablo a quien mal los usa, en fin en fin, siempre tienen y manejan dineros. Mi señora la duquesa te dirá el deseo que tengo de ir a la corte; mírate en ello, y avísame de tu gusto, que yo procuraré honrarte en ella andando en coche.

El cura, el barbero, el bachiller y aun el sacristán no pueden creer que eres gobernador, y dicen que todo es embeleco, o cosas de encantamento, como son todas las de don Quijote tu amo; y dice Sansón que ha de ir a buscarte y a sacarte el gobierno de la cabeza, y a don Quijote la locura de los cascos; yo no hago sino reírme, y mirar mi sarta, y dar traza del vestido que tengo de hacer del tuyo a nuestra hija.

Unas bellotas envié a mi señora la duquesa; yo quisiera que fueran de oro. Envíame tú algunas sarta de perlas, si se usan en esa ínsula.

Las nuevas deste lugar son que la Berrueca casó a su hija con un pintor de mala mano, que llegó a este pueblo a pintar lo que saliese; mandóle el Concejo pintar las armas de Su Majestad sobre las puertas del Ayuntamiento, pidió dos ducados, diéronselos adelantados, trabajó ocho días, al cabo de los cuales no pintó nada, y dijo que no acertaba a pintar tantas baratijas; volvió el dinero, y, con todo eso, se casó a título de buen oficial; verdad es que ya ha dejado el pincel y tomado el azada, y va al campo como gentilhombre. El hijo de Pedro de Lobo se ha ordenado de grados y corona, con intención de hacerse clérigo; súpolo Minguilla, la nieta de Mingo Silvato, y hale puesto demanda de que la tiene dada palabra de casamiento; malas lenguas quieren decir que ha estado encinta dél, pero él lo niega a pies juntillas.

Hogaño no hay aceitunas, ni se halla una gota de vinagre en todo este pueblo. Por aquí pasó una compañía de soldados; lleváronse de camino tres mozas deste pueblo; no te quiero decir quién son: quizá volverán, y no faltará quien las tome por mujeres, con sus tachas buenas o malas.

Sanchica hace puntas de randas; gana cada día ocho maravedís horros, que los va echando en una alcancía para ayuda a su ajuar; pero ahora que es hija de un gobernador, tú le darás la dote sin que ella lo trabaje. La fuente de la plaza se secó; un rayo cayó en la picota, y allí me las den todas.

Espero respuesta desta y la resolución de mi ida a la corte; y, con esto, Dios te me guarde más años que a mí o tantos, porque no querría dejarte sin mí en este mundo.

Tu mujer,

Teresa Panza.

Las cartas fueron solenizadas, reídas, estimadas y admiradas; y, para acabar de echar el sello, llegó el correo, el que traía la que Sancho enviaba a don Quijote, que asimesmo se leyó públicamente, la cual puso en duda la sandez del gobernador.

Retiróse la duquesa, para saber del paje lo que le había sucedido en el lugar de Sancho, el cual se lo contó muy por estenso, sin dejar circunstancia que no refiriese; diole las bellotas, y más un queso que Teresa le dio, por ser muy bueno, que se aventajaba a los de Tronchón. Recibiólo la duquesa con grandísimo gusto, con el cual la dejaremos, por contar el fin que tuvo el gobierno del gran Sancho Panza, flor y espejo de todos los insulanos gobernadores.

Capítulo LIII

Del fatigado fin y remate que tuvo el gobierno de Sancho Panza

«PENSAR que en esta vida las cosas della han de durar siempre en un estado es pensar en lo escusado; antes parece que ella anda todo en redondo, digo, a la redonda: la primavera sigue al verano, el verano al estío, el estío al otoño, y el otoño al invierno, y el invierno a la primavera, y así torna a andarse el tiempo con esta rueda continua; sola la vida humana corre a su fin ligera más que el tiempo, sin esperar renovarse si no es en la otra, que no tiene términos que la limiten». Esto dice Cide Hamete, filósofo mahomético; porque esto de entender la ligereza e inestabilidad de la vida presente, y de la duración de la eterna que se espera, muchos sin lumbre de fe, sino con la luz natural, lo han entendido; pero aquí, nuestro autor lo dice por la presteza con que se acabó, se consumió, se deshizo, se fue como en sombra y humo el gobierno de Sancho.

El cual, estando la séptima noche de los días de su gobierno en su cama, no harto de pan ni de vino, sino de juzgar y dar pareceres y de hacer estatutos y pragmáticas, cuando el sueño, a despecho y pesar de la hambre, le comenzaba a cerrar los párpados, oyó tan gran ruido de campanas y de voces, que no parecía sino que toda la ínsula se hundía. Sentóse en la cama, y estuvo atento y escuchando, por ver si daba en la cuenta de lo que podía ser la causa de tan grande alboroto; pero no sólo no lo supo, pero, añadiéndose al ruido de voces y campanas el de infinitas trompetas y atambores, quedó más confuso y lleno de temor y espanto; y, levantándose en pie, se puso unas chinelas, por la humedad del suelo, y, sin ponerse sobrerropa de levantar, ni cosa que se pareciese, salió a la puerta de su aposento, a tiempo cuando vio venir por unos corredores más de veinte personas con hachas encendidas en las manos y con las espadas desenvainadas, gritando todos a grandes voces:

-¡Arma, arma, señor gobernador, arma!; que han entrado infinitos enemigos en la ínsula, y somos perdidos si vuestra industria y valor no nos socorre.

Con este ruido, furia y alboroto llegaron donde Sancho estaba, atónito y embelesado de lo que oía y veía; y, cuando llegaron a él, uno le dijo:

-¡Ármese luego vuestra señoría, si no quiere perderse y que toda esta ínsula se pierda!

-¿Qué me tengo de armar -respondió Sancho-, ni qué sé yo de armas ni de socorros? Estas cosas mejor será dejarlas para mi amo don Quijote, que en dos paletas las despachará y pondrá en cobro; que yo, pecador fui a Dios, no se me entiende nada destas priesas.

-¡Ah, señor gobernador! -dijo otro-. ¿Qué relente es ése? Ármese vuesa merced, que aquí le traemos armas ofensivas y defensivas, y salga a esa plaza, y sea nuestra guía y nuestro capitán, pues de derecho le toca el serlo, siendo nuestro gobernador.

-Ármenme norabuena -replicó Sancho.

Y al momento le trujeron dos paveses, que venían proveídos dellos, y le pusieron encima de la camisa, sin dejarle tomar otro vestido, un pavés delante y otro detrás, y, por unas concavidades que traían hechas, le sacaron los brazos, y le liaron muy bien con unos cordeles, de modo que quedó emparedado y entablado, derecho como un huso, sin poder doblar las rodillas ni menearse un solo paso. Pusiéronle en las manos una lanza, a la cual se arrimó para poder tenerse en pie. Cuando así le tuvieron, le dijeron que caminase, y los guiase y animase a todos; que, siendo él su norte, su lanterna y su lucero, tendrían buen fin sus negocios.

-¿Cómo tengo de caminar, desventurado yo -respondió Sancho-, que no puedo jugar las choquezuelas de las rodillas, porque me lo impiden estas tablas que tan cosidas tengo con mis carnes? Lo que han de hacer es llevarme en brazos y ponerme, atravesado o en pie, en algún postigo, que yo le guardaré, o con esta lanza o con mi cuerpo.

-Ande, señor gobernador -dijo otro-, que más el miedo que las tablas le impiden el paso; acabe y menéese, que es tarde, y los enemigos crecen, y las voces se aumentan y el peligro carga.

Por cuyas persuaciones y vituperios probó el pobre gobernador a moverse, y fue dar consigo en el suelo tan gran golpe, que pensó que se había hecho pedazos. Quedó como galápago encerrado y cubierto con sus conchas, o como medio tocino metido entre dos artesas, o bien así como barca que da al través en la arena; y no por verle caído aquella gente burladora le tuvieron compasión alguna; antes, apagando las antorchas, tornaron a reforzar las voces, y a reiterar el ¡arma! con tan gran priesa, pasando por encima del pobre Sancho, dándole infinitas cuchilladas sobre los paveses, que si él no se recogiera y encogiera, metiendo la cabeza entre los paveses, lo pasara muy mal el pobre gobernador, el cual, en aquella estrechez recogido, sudaba y trasudaba, y de todo corazón se encomendaba a Dios que de aquel peligro le sacase.

Unos tropezaban en él, otros caían, y tal hubo que se puso encima un buen espacio, y desde allí, como desde atalaya, gobernaba los ejércitos, y a grandes voces decía:

-¡Aquí de los nuestros, que por esta parte cargan más los enemigos! ¡Aquel portillo se guarde, aquella puerta se cierre, aquellas escalas se tranquilen! ¡Vengan alcancías, pez y resina en calderas de aceite ardiendo! ¡Trinchéense las calles con colchones!

En fin, él nombraba con todo ahínco todas las baratijas e instrumentos y pertrechos de guerra con que suele defenderse el asalto de una ciudad, y el molido Sancho, que lo escuchaba y sufría todo, decía entre sí:

-¡Oh, si mi Señor fuese servido que se acabase ya de perder esta ínsula, y me viese yo o muerto o fuera desta grande angustia!

Oyó el cielo su petición, y, cuando menos lo esperaba, oyó voces que decían:

-¡Vitoria, vitoria! ¡Los enemigos van de vencida! ¡Ea, señor gobernador, levántese vuesa merced y venga a gozar del vencimiento y a repartir los despojos que se han tomado a los enemigos, por el valor dese invencible brazo!

-Levántenme -dijo con voz doliente el dolorido Sancho.

Ayudáronle a levantar, y, puesto en pie, dijo:

-El enemigo que yo hubiere vencido quiero que me le claven en la frente. Yo no quiero repartir despojos de enemigos, sino pedir y suplicar a algún amigo, si es que le tengo, que me dé un trago de vino, que me seco, y me enjague este sudor, que me hago agua.

Limpiáronle, trujéronle el vino, desliáronle los paveses, sentóse sobre su lecho y desmayóse del temor, del sobresalto y del trabajo. Ya les pesaba a los de la burla de habérsela hecho tan pesada; pero el haber vuelto en sí Sancho les templó la pena que les había dado su desmayo. Preguntó qué hora era, respondiéronle que ya amanecía. Calló, y, sin decir otra cosa, comenzó a vestirse, todo sepultado en silencio, y todos le miraban y esperaban en qué había de parar la priesa con que se vestía. Vistióse, en fin, y poco a poco, porque estaba molido y no podía ir mucho a mucho, se fue a la caballeriza, siguiéndole todos los que allí se hallaban, y, llegándose al rucio, le abrazó y le dio un beso de paz en la frente, y, no sin lágrimas en los ojos, le dijo:

-Venid vos acá, compañero mío y amigo mío, y conllevador de mis trabajos y miserias: cuando yo me avenía con vos y no tenía otros pensamientos que los que me daban los cuidados de remendar vuestros aparejos y de sustentar vuestro corpezuelo, dichas eran mis horas, mis días y mis años; pero, después que os dejé y me subí sobre las torres de la ambición y de la soberbia, se me han entrado por el alma adentro mil miserias, mil trabajos y cuatro mil desasosiegos.

Y, en tanto que estas razones iba diciendo, iba asimesmo enalbardando el asno, sin que nadie nada le dijese. Enalbardado, pues, el rucio, con gran pena y pesar subió sobre él, y, encaminando sus palabras y razones al mayordomo, al secretario, al maestresala y a Pedro Recio el doctor, y a otros muchos que allí presentes estaban, dijo:

-Abrid camino, señores míos, y dejadme volver a mi antigua libertad; dejadme que vaya a buscar la vida pasada, para que me resucite de esta muerte presente. Yo no nací para ser gobernador, ni para defender ínsulas ni ciudades de los enemigos que quisieren acometerlas. Mejor se me entiende a mí de arar y cavar, podar y ensarmentar las viñas, que de dar leyes ni de defender provincias ni reinos. Bien se está San Pedro en Roma: quiero decir, que bien se está cada uno usando el oficio para que fue nacido. Mejor me está a mí una hoz en la mano que un cetro de gobernador; más quiero hartarme de gazpachos que estar sujeto a la miseria de un médico impertinente que me mate de hambre; y más quiero recostarme a la sombra de una encina en el verano y arroparme con un zamarro de dos pelos en el invierno, en mi libertad, que acostarme con la sujeción del gobierno entre sábanas de Holanda y vestirme de martas cebollinas. Vuestras mercedes se queden con Dios, y digan al duque mi señor que, desnudo nací, desnudo me hallo: ni pierdo ni gano; quiero decir, que sin blanca entré en este gobierno y sin ella salgo, bien al revés de como suelen salir los gobernadores de otras ínsulas. Y apártense: déjenme ir, que me voy a bizmar; que creo que tengo brumadas todas las costillas, merced a los enemigos que esta noche se han paseado sobre mí.

-No ha de ser así, señor gobernador -dijo el doctor Recio-, que yo le daré a vuesa merced una bebida contra caídas y molimientos, que luego le vuelva en su prístina entereza y vigor; y, en lo de la comida, yo prometo a vuesa merced de enmendarme, dejándole comer abundantemente de todo aquello que quisiere.

-¡Tarde piache! -respondió Sancho-. Así dejaré de irme como volverme turco. No son estas burlas para dos veces. Por Dios que así me quede en éste, ni admita otro gobierno, aunque me le diesen entre dos platos, como volar al cielo sin alas. Yo soy del linaje de los Panzas, que todos son testarudos, y si una vez dicen nones, nones han de ser, aunque sean pares, a pesar de todo el mundo. Quédense en esta caballeriza las alas de la hormiga, que me levantaron en el aire para que me comiesen vencejos y otros pájaros, y volvámonos a andar por el suelo con pie llano, que, si no le adornaren zapatos picados de cordobán, no le faltarán alpargatas toscas de cuerda. Cada oveja con su pareja, y nadie tienda más la pierna de cuanto fuere larga la sábana; y déjenme pasar, que se me hace tarde.

A lo que el mayordomo dijo:

-Señor gobernador, de muy buena gana dejáramos ir a vuesa merced, puesto que nos pesará mucho de perderle, que su ingenio y su cristiano proceder obligan a desearle; pero ya se sabe que todo gobernador está obligado, antes que se ausente de la parte donde ha gobernado, dar primero residencia: déla vuesa merced de los diez días que ha que tiene el gobierno, y váyase a la paz de Dios.

-Nadie me la puede pedir -respondió Sancho-, si no es quien ordenare el duque mi señor; yo voy a verme con él, y a él se la daré de molde; cuanto más que, saliendo yo desnudo, como salgo, no es menester otra señal para dar a entender que he gobernado como un ángel.

-Par Dios que tiene razón el gran Sancho -dijo el doctor Recio-, y que soy de parecer que le dejemos ir, porque el duque ha de gustar infinito de verle.

Todos vinieron en ello, y le dejaron ir, ofreciéndole primero compañía y todo aquello que quisiese para el regalo de su persona y para la comodidad de su viaje. Sancho dijo que no quería más de un poco de cebada para el rucio y medio queso y medio pan para él; que, pues el camino era tan corto, no había menester mayor ni mejor repostería. Abrazáronle todos, y él, llorando, abrazó a todos, y los dejó admirados, así de sus razones como de su determinación tan resoluta y tan discreta.

Capítulo LIV

Que trata de cosas tocantes a esta historia, y no a otra alguna

RESOLVIÉRONSE el duque y la duquesa de que el desafío que don Quijote hizo a su vasallo, por la causa ya referida, pasase adelante; y, puesto que el mozo estaba en Flandes, adonde se había ido huyendo, por no tener por suegra a doña Rodríguez, ordenaron de poner en su lugar a un lacayo gascón, que se llamaba Tosilos, industriándole primero muy bien de todo lo que había de hacer.

De allí a dos días dijo el duque a don Quijote como desde allí a cuatro vendría su contrario, y se presentaría en el campo, armado como caballero, y sustentaría como la doncella mentía por mitad de la barba, y aun por toda la barba entera, si se afirmaba que él le hubiese dado palabra de casamiento. Don Quijote recibió mucho gusto con las tales nuevas, y se prometió a sí mismo de hacer maravillas en el caso, y tuvo a gran ventura habérsele ofrecido ocasión donde aquellos señores pudiesen ver hasta dónde se extendía el valor de su poderoso brazo; y así, con alborozo y contento, esperaba los cuatro días, que se le iban haciendo, a la cuenta de su deseo, cuatrocientos siglos.

Dejémoslos pasar nosotros, como dejamos pasar otras cosas, y vamos a acompañar a Sancho, que entre alegre y triste venía caminando sobre el rucio a buscar a su amo, cuya compañía le agradaba más que ser gobernador de todas las ínsulas del mundo.

Sucedió, pues, que, no habiéndose alongado mucho de la ínsula del su gobierno -que él nunca se puso a averiguar si era ínsula, ciudad, villa o lugar la que gobernaba-, vio que por el camino por donde él iba venían seis peregrinos con sus bordones, de estos extranjeros que piden la limosna cantando, los cuales, en llegando a él, se pusieron en ala, y, levantando las voces todos juntos, comenzaron a cantar en su lengua lo que Sancho no pudo entender, si no fue una palabra que claramente pronunciaba limosna, por donde entendió que era limosna la que en su canto pedían; y como él, según dice Cide Hamete, era caritativo además, sacó de sus alforjas medio pan y medio queso, de que venía proveído, y dióselo, diciéndoles por señas que no tenía otra cosa que darles. Ellos lo recibieron de muy buena gana, y dijeron:

-¡Guelte! ¡Guelte!

-No entiendo -respondió Sancho-qué es lo que me pedís, buena gente.

Entonces uno de ellos sacó una bolsa del seno y mostrósela a Sancho, por donde entendió que le pedían dineros; y él, poniéndose el dedo pulgar en la garganta y estendiendo la mano arriba, les dio a entender que no tenía ostugo de moneda, y, picando al rucio, rompió por ellos; y, al pasar, habiéndole estado mirando uno dellos con mucha atención, arremetió a él, echándole los brazos por la cintura; en voz alta y muy castellana, dijo:

-¡Válame Dios! ¿Qué es lo que veo? ¿Es posible que tengo en mis brazos al mi caro amigo, al mi buen vecino Sancho Panza? Sí tengo, sin duda, porque yo ni duermo, ni estoy ahora borracho.

Admiróse Sancho de verse nombrar por su nombre y de verse abrazar del extranjero peregrino, y, después de haberle estado mirando sin hablar palabra, con mucha atención, nunca pudo conocerle; pero, viendo su suspensión el peregrino, le dijo:

-¿Cómo, y es posible, Sancho Panza hermano, que no conoces a tu vecino Ricote el morisco, tendero de tu lugar?

Entonces Sancho le miró con más atención y comenzó a rafigurarle, y, finalmente, le vino a conocer de todo punto, y, sin apearse del jumento, le echó los brazos al cuello, y le dijo:

-¿Quién diablos te había de conocer, Ricote, en ese traje de moharracho que traes? Dime: ¿quién te ha hecho franchote, y cómo tienes atrevimiento de volver a España, donde si te cogen y conocen tendrás harta mala ventura?

-Si tú no me descubres, Sancho -respondió el peregrino-, seguro estoy que en este traje no habrá nadie que me conozca; y apartémonos del camino a aquella alameda que allí parece, donde quieren comer y reposar mis compañeros, y allí comerás con ellos, que son muy apacible gente. Yo tendré lugar de contarte lo que me ha sucedido después que me partí de nuestro lugar, por obedecer el bando de Su Majestad, que con tanto rigor a los desdichados de mi nación amenazaba, según oíste.

Hízolo así Sancho, y, hablando Ricote a los demás peregrinos, se apartaron a la alameda que se parecía, bien desviados del camino real. Arrojaron los bordones, quitáronse las mucetas o esclavinas y quedaron en pelota, y todos ellos eran mozos y muy gentileshombres, excepto Ricote, que ya era hombre entrado en años. Todos traían alforjas, y todas, según pareció, venían bien proveídas, a lo menos, de cosas incitativas y que llaman a la sed de dos leguas.

Tendiéronse en el suelo, y, haciendo manteles de las yerbas, pusieron sobre ellas pan, sal, cuchillos, nueces, rajas de queso, huesos mondos de jamón, que si no se dejaban mascar, no defendían el ser chupados. Pusieron asimismo un manjar negro que dicen que se llama cavial, y es hecho de huevos de pescados, gran despertador de la colambre. No faltaron aceitunas, aunque secas y sin adobo alguno, pero sabrosas y entretenidas. Pero lo que más campeó en el campo de aquel banquete fueron seis botas de vino, que cada uno sacó la suya de su alforja; hasta el buen Ricote, que se había transformado de morisco en alemán o en tudesco, sacó la suya, que en grandeza podía competir con las cinco.

Comenzaron a comer con grandísimo gusto y muy de espacio, saboreándose con cada bocado, que le tomaban con la punta del cuchillo, y muy poquito de cada cosa, y luego, al punto, todos a una, levantaron los brazos y las botas en el aire; puestas las bocas en su boca, clavados los ojos en el cielo, no parecía sino que ponían en él la puntería; y desta manera, meneando las cabezas a un lado y a otro, señales que acreditaban el gusto que recebían, se estuvieron un buen espacio, trasegando en sus estómagos las entrañas de las vasijas.

Todo lo miraba Sancho, y de ninguna cosa se dolía; antes, por cumplir con el refrán, que él muy bien sabía, de «cuando a Roma fueres, haz como vieres», pidió a Ricote la bota, y tomó su puntería como los demás, y no con menos gusto que ellos.

Cuatro veces dieron lugar las botas para ser empinadas; pero la quinta no fue posible, porque ya estaban más enjutas y secas que un esparto, cosa que puso mustia la alegría que hasta allí habían mostrado. De cuando en cuando, juntaba alguno su mano derecha con la de Sancho, y decía:

-Español y tudesqui, tuto uno: bon compañero.

Y Sancho respondía:

-Bon compañero, jura Di!

Y disparaba con una risa que le duraba un hora, sin acordarse entonces de nada de lo que le había sucedido en su gobierno; porque sobre el rato y tiempo cuando se come y bebe, poca jurisdicción suelen tener los cuidados. Finalmente, el acabársele el vino fue principio de un sueño que dio a todos, quedándose dormidos sobre las mismas mesas y manteles; solos Ricote y Sancho quedaron alerta, porque habían comido más y bebido menos; y, apartando Ricote a Sancho, se sentaron al pie de una haya, dejando a los peregrinos sepultados en dulce sueño; y Ricote, sin tropezar nada en su lengua morisca, en la pura castellana le dijo las siguientes razones:

-«Bien sabes, ¡oh Sancho Panza, vecino y amigo mío!, como el pregón y bando que Su Majestad mandó publicar contra los de mi nación puso terror y espanto en todos nosotros; a lo menos, en mí le puso de suerte que me parece que antes del tiempo que se nos concedía para que hiciésemos ausencia de España, ya tenía el rigor de la pena ejecutado en mi persona y en la de mis hijos. Ordené, pues, a mi parecer como prudente, bien así como el que sabe que para tal tiempo le han de quitar la casa donde vive y se provee de otra donde mudarse; ordené, digo, de salir yo solo, sin mi familia, de mi pueblo, y ir a buscar donde llevarla con comodidad y sin la priesa con que los demás salieron; porque bien

vi, y vieron todos nuestros ancianos, que aquellos pregones no eran sólo amenazas, como algunos decían, sino verdaderas leyes, que se habían de poner en ejecución a su determinado tiempo; y forzábame a creer esta verdad saber yo los ruines y disparatados intentos que los nuestros tenían, y tales, que me parece que fue inspiración divina la que movió a Su Majestad a poner en efecto tan gallarda resolución, no porque todos fuésemos culpados, que algunos había cristianos firmes y verdaderos; pero eran tan pocos que no se podían oponer a los que no lo eran, y no era bien criar la sierpe en el seno, teniendo los enemigos dentro de casa. Finalmente, con justa razón fuimos castigados con la pena del destierro, blanda y suave al parecer de algunos, pero al nuestro, la más terrible que se nos podía dar. Doquiera que estamos lloramos por España, que, en fin, nacimos en ella y es nuestra patria natural; en ninguna parte hallamos el acogimiento que nuestra desventura desea, y en Berbería, y en todas las partes de África, donde esperábamos ser recibidos, acogidos y regalados, allí es donde más nos ofenden y maltratan. No hemos conocido el bien hasta que le hemos perdido; y es el deseo tan grande, que casi todos tenemos de volver a España, que los más de aquellos, y son muchos, que saben la lengua como yo, se vuelven a ella, y dejan allá sus mujeres y sus hijos desamparados: tanto es el amor que la tienen; y agora conozco y experimento lo que suele decirse: que es dulce el amor de la patria. Salí, como digo, de nuestro pueblo, entré en Francia, y, aunque allí nos hacían buen acogimiento, quise verlo todo. Pasé a Italia y llegué a Alemania, y allí me pareció que se podía vivir con más libertad, porque sus habitantes no miran en muchas delicadezas: cada uno vive como quiere, porque en la mayor parte della se vive con libertad de conciencia. Dejé tomada casa en un pueblo junto a Augusta; juntéme con estos peregrinos, que tienen por costumbre de venir a España muchos dellos, cada año, a visitar los santuarios della, que los tienen por sus Indias, y por certísima granjería y conocida ganancia. Ándanla casi toda, y no hay pueblo ninguno de donde no salgan comidos y bebidos, como suele decirse, y con un real, por lo menos, en dineros, y al cabo de su viaje salen con más de cien escudos de sobra que, trocados en oro, o ya en el hueco de los bordones, o entre los remiendos de las esclavinas, o con la industria que ellos pueden, los sacan del reino y los pasan a sus tierras, a pesar de las guardas de los puestos y puertos donde se registran. Ahora es mi intención, Sancho, sacar el tesoro que dejé enterrado, que por estar fuera del pueblo lo podré hacer sin peligro y escribir o pasar desde Valencia a mi hija y a mi mujer, que sé que está en Argel, y dar traza como traerlas a algún puerto de Francia, y desde allí llevarlas a Alemania, donde esperaremos lo que Dios quisiere hacer de nosotros; que, en resolución, Sancho, yo sé cierto que la Ricota mi hija y Francisca Ricota, mi mujer, son católicas cristianas, y, aunque yo no lo soy tanto, todavía tengo más de cristiano que de moro, y ruego siempre a Dios me abra los ojos del entendimiento y me dé a conocer cómo le tengo de servir. Y lo que me tiene admirado es no saber por qué se fue mi mujer y mi hija antes a Berbería que a Francia, adonde podía vivir como cristiana.»

A lo que respondió Sancho:

-Mira, Ricote, eso no debió estar en su mano, porque las llevó Juan Tiopieyo, el hermano de tu mujer; y, como debe de ser fino moro, fuese a lo más bien parado, y séte decir otra cosa: que creo que vas en balde a buscar lo que dejaste encerrado; porque tuvimos nuevas que habían quitado a tu cuñado y tu mujer muchas perlas y mucho dinero en oro que llevaban por registrar.

-Bien puede ser eso -replicó Ricote-, pero yo sé, Sancho, que no tocaron a mi encierro, porque yo no les descubrí dónde estaba, temeroso de algún desmán; y así, si tú, Sancho, quieres venir conmigo y ayudarme a sacarlo y a encubrirlo, yo te daré docientos escudos, con que podrás remediar tus necesidades, que ya sabes que sé yo que las tienes muchas.

-Yo lo hiciera -respondió Sancho-, pero no soy nada codicioso; que, a serlo, un oficio dejé yo esta mañana de las manos, donde pudiera hacer las paredes de mi casa de oro, y comer antes de seis meses en platos de plata; y, así por esto como por parecerme haría traición a mi rey en dar favor a sus enemigos, no fuera contigo, si como me prometes docientos escudos, me dieras aquí de contado cuatrocientos.

-Y ¿qué oficio es el que has dejado, Sancho? -preguntó Ricote.

-He dejado de ser gobernador de una ínsula -respondió Sancho-, y tal, que a buena fee que no hallen otra como ella a tres tirones.

-¿Y dónde está esa ínsula? -preguntó Ricote.

-¿Adónde? -respondió Sancho-. Dos leguas de aquí, y se llama la ínsula Barataria.

-Calla, Sancho -dijo Ricote-, que las ínsulas están allá dentro de la mar; que no hay ínsulas en la tierra firme.

-¿Cómo no? -replicó Sancho-. Dígote, Ricote amigo, que esta mañana me partí della, y ayer estuve en ella gobernando a mi placer, como un sagitario; pero, con todo eso, la he dejado, por parecerme oficio peligroso el de los gobernadores.

-Y ¿qué has ganado en el gobierno? -preguntó Ricote.

-He ganado -respondió Sancho- el haber conocido que no soy bueno para gobernar, si no es un hato de ganado, y que las riquezas que se ganan en los tales gobiernos son a costa de perder el descanso y el sueño, y aun el sustento; porque en las ínsulas deben de comer poco los gobernadores, especialmente si tienen médicos que miren por su salud.

-Yo no te entiendo, Sancho -dijo Ricote-, pero paréceme que todo lo que dices es disparate; que, ¿quién te había de dar a ti ínsulas que gobernases? ¿Faltaban hombres en el mundo más hábiles para gobernadores que tú eres? Calla, Sancho, y vuelve en ti, y mira si quieres venir conmigo, como te he dicho, a ayudarme a sacar el tesoro que dejé escondido; que en verdad que es tanto, que se puede llamar tesoro, y te daré con que vivas, como te he dicho.

-Ya te he dicho, Ricote -replicó Sancho-, que no quiero; conténtate que por mí no serás descubierto, y prosigue en buena hora tu camino, y déjame seguir el mío; que yo sé que lo bien ganado se pierde, y lo malo, ello y su dueño.

-No quiero porfiar, Sancho -dijo Ricote-, pero dime: ¿hallástete en nuestro lugar, cuando se partió dél mi mujer, mi hija y mi cuñado?

-Sí hallé -respondió Sancho-, y séte decir que salió tu hija tan hermosa que salieron a verla cuantos había en el pueblo, y todos decían que era la más bella criatura del mundo. Iba llorando y abrazaba a todas sus amigas y conocidas, y a cuantos llegaban a verla, y a todos pedía la encomendasen a Dios y a Nuestra Señora su madre; y esto, con tanto sentimiento, que a mí me hizo llorar, que no suelo ser muy llorón. Y a fee que muchos tuvieron deseo de esconderla y salir a quitársela en el camino; pero el miedo de ir contra el mandado del rey los detuvo. Principalmente se mostró más apasionado don Pedro Gregorio, aquel mancebo mayorazgo rico que tú conoces, que dicen que la quería mucho, y después que ella se partió, nunca más él ha parecido en nuestro lugar, y todos pensamos que iba tras ella para robarla; pero hasta ahora no se ha sabido nada.

-Siempre tuve yo mala sospecha -dijo Ricote- de que ese caballero adamaba a mi hija; pero, fiado en el valor de mi Ricota, nunca me dio pesadumbre el saber que la quería bien; que ya habrás oído decir, Sancho, que las moriscas pocas o ninguna vez se mezclaron por amores con cristianos viejos, y mi hija, que, a lo que yo creo, atendía a ser más cristiana que enamorada, no se curaría de las solicitudes de ese señor mayorazgo.

-Dios lo haga -replicó Sancho-, que a entrambos les estaría mal. Y déjame partir de aquí, Ricote amigo, que quiero llegar esta noche adonde está mi señor don Quijote.

-Dios vaya contigo, Sancho hermano, que ya mis compañeros se rebullen, y también es hora que prosigamos nuestro camino.

Y luego se abrazaron los dos, y Sancho subió en su rucio, y Ricote se arrimó a su bordón, y se apartaron.

Capítulo LV

De cosas sucedidas a Sancho en el camino, y otras que no hay más que ver

EL HABERSE detenido Sancho con Ricote no le dio lugar a que aquel día llegase al castillo del duque, puesto que llegó media legua dél, donde le tomó la noche, algo oscura y cerrada; pero, como era verano, no le dio mucha pesadumbre; y así, se apartó del camino con intención de esperar la mañana; y quiso su corta y desventurada suerte que, buscando lugar donde mejor acomodarse, cayeron él y el rucio en una honda y escurísima sima que entre unos edificios muy antiguos estaba, y al tiempo del caer, se encomendó a Dios de todo corazón, pensando que no había de parar hasta el profundo de los abismos. Y no fue así, porque a poco más de tres estados dio fondo el rucio, y él se halló encima dél, sin haber recibido lisió ni daño alguno.

Tentóse todo el cuerpo, y recogió el aliento, por ver si estaba sano o agujereado por alguna parte; y, viéndose bueno, entero y católico de salud, no se hartaba de dar gracias a Dios Nuestro Señor de la merced que le había hecho, porque sin duda pensó que estaba hecho mil pedazos. Tentó asimismo con las manos por las paredes de la sima, por ver si sería posible salir della sin ayuda de nadie; pero todas las halló rasas y sin asidero alguno, de lo que Sancho se congojó mucho, especialmente cuando oyó que el rucio se quejaba tierna y dolorosamente; y no era mucho, ni se lamentaba de vicio, que, a la verdad, no estaba muy bien parado.

-¡Ay -dijo entonces Sancho Panza-, y cuán no pensados sucesos suelen suceder a cada paso a los que viven en este miserable mundo! ¿Quién dijera que el que ayer se vio entronizado gobernador de una ínsula, mandando a sus sirvientes y a sus vasallos, hoy se había de ver sepultado en una sima, sin haber persona alguna que le remedie, ni criado ni vasallo que acuda a su socorro? Aquí habremos de perecer de hambre yo y mi jumento, si ya no nos morimos antes, él de molido y quebrantado, y yo de pesaroso. A lo menos, no seré yo tan venturoso como lo fue mi señor don Quijote de la Mancha cuando decendió y bajó a la cueva de aquel encantado Montesinos, donde halló quien le regalase mejor que en su casa, que no parece sino que se fue a mesa puesta y a cama hecha. Allí vio él visiones hermosas y apacibles, y yo veré aquí, a lo que creo, sapos y culebras. ¡Desdichado de mí, y en qué han parado mis locuras y fantasías! De aquí sacarán mis huesos, cuando el cielo sea servido que me descubran, mondos, blancos y raídos, y los de mi buen rucio con ellos, por donde quizá se echará de ver quién somos, a lo menos de los que tuvieren noticia que nunca Sancho Panza se apartó de su asno, ni su asno de Sancho Panza. Otra vez digo: ¡miserables de nosotros, que no ha querido nuestra corta suerte que muriésemos en nuestra patria y entre los nuestros, donde ya que no hallara remedio nuestra desgracia, no faltara quien dello se doliera, y en la hora última de nuestro pasamiento nos cerrara los ojos! ¡Oh compañero y amigo mío, qué mal pago te he dado de tus buenos servicios! Perdóname y pide a la fortuna, en el mejor modo que supieres, que nos saque deste miserable trabajo en que estamos puestos los dos; que yo prometo de ponerte una corona de laurel en la cabeza, que no parezcas sino un laureado poeta, y de darte los piensos doblados.

Desta manera se lamentaba Sancho Panza, y su jumento le escuchaba sin responderle palabra alguna: tal era el aprieto y angustia en que el pobre se hallaba. Finalmente, habiendo pasado toda aquella noche en miserables quejas y lamentaciones, vino el día, con cuya claridad y resplandor vio Sancho que era imposible de toda imposibilidad salir de aquel pozo sin ser ayudado, y comenzó a lamentarse y dar voces, por ver si alguno le oía; pero todas sus voces eran dadas en desierto, pues por todos aquellos contornos no había persona que pudiese escucharle, y entonces se acabó de dar por muerto.

Estaba el rucio boca arriba, y Sancho Panza le acomodó de modo que le puso en pie, que apenas se podía tener; y, sacando de las alforjas, que también habían corrido la misma fortuna de la caída, un pedazo de pan, lo dio a su jumento, que no le supo mal, y díjole Sancho, como si lo entendiera:

-Todos los duelos con pan son buenos.

En esto, descubrió a un lado de la sima un agujero, capaz de caber por él una persona, si se agobiaba y encogía. Acudió a él Sancho Panza, y, agazapándose, se entró por él y vio que por de dentro era espacioso y largo, y púdolo ver, porque por lo que se podía llamar techo entraba un rayo de sol que lo descubría todo. Vio también que se dilataba y alargaba por otra concavidad espaciosa; viendo lo cual, volvió a salir adonde estaba el jumento, y con una piedra comenzó a desmoronar la tierra del agujero, de modo que en poco espacio hizo lugar donde con facilidad pudiese entrar el asno, como lo hizo; y, cogiéndole del cabestro, comenzó a caminar por aquella gruta adelante, por ver si hallaba alguna salida por otra parte. A veces iba a oscuras, y a veces sin luz, pero ninguna vez sin miedo.

-¡Válame Dios todopoderoso! -decía entre sí-. Esta que para mí es desventura, mejor fuera para aventura de mi amo don Quijote. Él sí que tuviera estas profundidades y mazmorras por jardines floridos y por palacios de Galiana, y esperara salir de esta escuridad y estrechez a algún florido prado; pero yo, sin ventura, falto de consejo y menoscabado de ánimo, a cada paso pienso que debajo de los pies de improviso se ha de abrir otra sima más profunda que la otra, que acabe de tragarme. ¡Bien vengas mal, si vienes solo!

Desta manera y con estos pensamientos le pareció que habría caminado poco más de media legua, al cabo de la cual descubrió una confusa claridad, que pareció ser ya de día, y que por alguna parte entraba, que daba indicio de tener fin abierto aquel, para él, camino de la otra vida.

Aquí le deja Cide Hamete Benengeli, y vuelve a tratar de don Quijote, que, alborozado y contento, esperaba el plazo de la batalla que había de hacer con el robador de la honra de la hija de doña Rodríguez, a quien pensaba enderezar el tuerto y desaguizado que malamente le tenían fecho.

Sucedió, pues, que, saliéndose una mañana a imponerse y ensayarse en lo que había de hacer en el trance en que otro día pensaba verse, dando un repelón o arremetida a Rocinante, llegó a poner los pies tan junto a una cueva, que, a no tirarle fuertemente las riendas, fuera imposible no caer en ella. En fin, le detuvo y no cayó, y, llegándose algo más cerca, sin apearse, miró aquella hondura; y, estándola mirando, oyó grandes voces dentro; y, escuchando atentamente, pudo perceber y entender que el que las daba decía:

-¡Ah de arriba! ¿Hay algún cristiano que me escuche, o algún caballero caritativo que se duela de un pecador enterrado en vida, o un desdichado desgobernado gobernador?

Parecióle a don Quijote que oía la voz de Sancho Panza, de que quedó suspenso y asombrado, y, levantando la voz todo lo que pudo, dijo:

-¿Quién está allá bajo? ¿Quién se queja?

-¿Quién puede estar aquí, o quién se ha de quejar -respondieron-, sino el asendereado de Sancho Panza, gobernador, por sus pecados y por su mala andanza, de la ínsula Baratara, escudero que fue del famoso caballero don Quijote de la Mancha?

Oyendo lo cual don Quijote, se le dobló la admiración y se le acrecentó el pasmo, viniéndosele al pensamiento que Sancho Panza debía de ser muerto, y que estaba allí penando su alma, y llevado desta imaginación dijo:

-Conjúrote por todo aquello que puedo conjurarte como católico cristiano, que me digas quién eres; y si eres alma en pena, dime qué quieres que haga por ti; que, pues es mi profesión favorecer y acorrer a los necesitados deste mundo, también lo seré para acorrer y ayudar a los menesterosos del otro mundo, que no pueden ayudarse por sí propios.

-Desa manera -respondieron-, vuestra merced que me habla debe de ser mi señor don Quijote de la Mancha, y aun en el órgano de la voz no es otro, sin duda.

-Don Quijote soy -replicó don Quijote-, el que profeso socorrer y ayudar en sus necesidades a los vivos y a los muertos. Por eso dime quién eres, que me tienes atónito; porque si eres mi escudero Sancho Panza, y te has muerto, como no te hayan llevado los diablos, y, por la misericordia de Dios, estés en el purgatorio, sufragios tiene nuestra Santa Madre la Iglesia Católica Romana bastantes a sacarte de las penas en que estás, y yo, que lo solicitaré con ella, por mi parte, con cuanto mi hacienda alcanzare; por eso, acaba de declararte y dime quién eres.

-¡Voto a tal! -respondieron-, y por el nacimiento de quien vuesa merced quisiere, juro, señor don Quijote de la Mancha, que yo soy su escudero Sancho Panza, y que nunca me he muerto en todos los días de mi vida; sino que, habiendo dejado mi gobierno por cosas y causas que es menester más espacio para decirlas, anoche caí en esta sima donde yago, el rucio conmigo, que no me dejará mentir, pues, por más señas, está aquí conmigo.

Y hay más: que no parece sino que el jumento entendió lo que Sancho dijo, porque al momento comenzó a rebuznar, tan recio, que toda la cueva retumbaba.

-¡Famoso testigo! -dijo don Quijote-. El rebuzno conozco como si le pariera, y tu voz oigo, Sancho mío. Espérame; iré al castillo del duque, que está aquí cerca, y traeré quien te saque desta sima, donde tus pecados te deben de haber puesto.

-Vaya vuesa merced -dijo Sancho-, y vuelva presto, por un solo Dios, que ya no lo puedo llevar el estar aquí sepultado en vida, y me estoy muriendo de miedo.

Dejóle don Quijote, y fue al castillo a contar a los duques el suceso de Sancho Panza, de que no poco se maravillaron, aunque bien entendieron que debía de haber caído por la correspondencia de aquella gruta que de tiempos inmemoriales estaba allí hecha; pero no podían pensar cómo había dejado el gobierno sin tener ellos aviso de su venida. Finalmente, como dicen, llevaron sogas y maromas; y, a costa de mucha gente y de mucho trabajo, sacaron al rucio y a Sancho Panza de aquellas tinieblas a la luz del sol. Viole un estudiante, y dijo:

-Desta manera habían de salir de sus gobiernos todos los malos gobernadores, como sale este pecador del profundo del abismo: muerto de hambre, descolorido, y sin blanca, a lo que yo creo.

Oyólo Sancho, y dijo:

-Ocho días o diez ha, hermano murmurador, que entré a gobernar la ínsula que me dieron, en los cuales no me vi harto de pan siquiera un hora; en ellos me han perseguido médicos, y enemigos me han brumado los güesos; ni he tenido lugar de hacer cohechos, ni de cobrar derechos; y, siendo esto así, como lo es, no

merecía yo, a mi parecer, salir de esta manera; pero el hombre pone y Dios dispone, y Dios sabe lo mejor y lo que le está bien a cada uno; y cual el tiempo, tal el tiento; y nadie diga «desta agua no beberé», que adonde se piensa que hay tocinos, no hay estacas; y Dios me entiende, y basta, y no digo más, aunque pudiera.

-No te enojés, Sancho, ni recibas pesadumbre de lo que oyes, que será nunca acabar: ven tú con segura conciencia, y digan lo que dijeren; y es querer atar las lenguas de los maldicientes lo mismo que querer poner puertas al campo. Si el gobernador sale rico de su gobierno, dicen dél que ha sido un ladrón, y si sale pobre, que ha sido un para poco y un mentecato.

-A buen seguro -respondió Sancho- que por esta vez antes me han de tener por tonto que por ladrón.

En estas pláticas llegaron, rodeados de muchachos y de otra mucha gente, al castillo, adonde en unos corredores estaban ya el duque y la duquesa esperando a don Quijote y a Sancho, el cual no quiso subir a ver al duque sin que primero no hubiese acomodado al rucio en la caballeriza, porque decía que había pasado muy mala noche en la posada; y luego subió a ver a sus señores, ante los cuales, puesto de rodillas, dijo:

-Yo, señores, porque lo quiso así vuestra grandeza, sin ningún merecimiento mío, fui a gobernar vuestra ínsula Barataria, en la cual entré desnudo, y desnudo me hallo: ni pierdo, ni gano. Si he gobernado bien o mal, testigos he tenido delante, que dirán lo que quisieren. He declarado dudas, sentenciado pleitos, siempre muerto de hambre, por haberlo querido así el doctor Pedro Recio, natural de Tirteafuera, médico insulano y gobernadoresco. Acometiéronnos enemigos de noche, y, habiéndonos puesto en grande aprieto, dicen los de la ínsula que salieron libres y con vitoria por el valor de mi brazo, que tal salud les dé Dios como ellos dicen verdad. En resolución, en este tiempo yo he tanteado las cargas que trae consigo, y las obligaciones, el gobernar, y he hallado por mi cuenta que no las podrán llevar mis hombros, ni son peso de mis costillas, ni flechas de mi aljaba; y así, antes que diese conmigo al través el gobierno, he querido yo dar con el gobierno al través, y ayer de mañana dejé la ínsula como la hallé: con las mismas calles, casas y tejados que tenía cuando entré en ella. No he pedido prestado a nadie, ni metí dome en granjerías; y, aunque pensaba hacer algunas ordenanzas provechosas, no hice ninguna, temeroso que no se habían de guardar: que es lo mismo hacerlas que no hacerlas. Salí, como digo, de la ínsula sin otro acompañamiento que el de mi rucio; caí en una sima, víneme por ella adelante, hasta que, esta mañana, con la luz del sol, vi la salida, pero no tan fácil que, a no depararme el cielo a mi señor don Quijote, allí me quedara hasta la fin del mundo. Así que, mis señores duque y duquesa, aquí está vuestro gobernador

Sancho Panza, que ha granjeado en solos diez días que ha tenido el gobierno a conocer que no se le ha de dar nada por ser gobernador, no que de una ínsula, sino de todo el mundo; y, con este presupuesto, besando a vuestras mercedes los pies, imitando al juego de los muchachos, que dicen «Salta tú, y dámela tú», doy un salto del gobierno, y me paso al servicio de mi señor don Quijote; que, en fin, en él, aunque como el pan con sobresalto, hártome, a lo menos, y para mí, como yo esté hartó, eso me hace que sea de zanahorias que de perdices.

Con esto dio fin a su larga plática Sancho, temiendo siempre don Quijote que había de decir en ella millares de disparates; y, cuando le vio acabar con tan pocos, dio en su corazón gracias al cielo, y el duque abrazó a Sancho, y le dijo que le pesaba en el alma de que hubiese dejado tan presto el gobierno; pero que él haría de suerte que se le diese en su estado otro oficio de menos carga y de más provecho. Abrazóle la duquesa asimismo, y mandó que le regalasen, porque daba señales de venir mal molido y peor parado.

Capítulo LVI

De la descomunal y nunca vista batalla que pasó entre don Quijote de la Mancha y el lacayo Tosilos, en la defensa de la hija de la dueña doña Rodríguez

NO QUEDARON arrepentidos los duques de la burla hecha a Sancho Panza del gobierno que le dieron; y más, que aquel mismo día vino su mayordomo, y les contó punto por punto, todas casi, las palabras y acciones que Sancho había dicho y hecho en aquellos días, y finalmente les encareció el asalto de la ínsula, y el miedo de Sancho, y su salida, de que no pequeño gusto recibieron.

Después desto, cuenta la historia que se llegó el día de la batalla aplazada, y, habiendo el duque una y muy muchas veces advertido a su lacayo Tosilos cómo se había de avenir con don Quijote para vencerle sin matarle ni herirle, ordenó que se quitasen los hierros a las lanzas, diciendo a don Quijote que no permitía la cristiandad, de que él se preciaba, que aquella batalla fuese con tanto riesgo y peligro de las vidas, y que se contentase con que le daba campo franco en su tierra, puesto que iba contra el decreto del Santo Concilio, que prohíbe los tales desafíos, y no quisiese llevar por todo rigor aquel trance tan fuerte.

Don Quijote dijo que Su Excelencia dispusiese las cosas de aquel negocio como más fuese servido; que él le obedecería en todo. Llegado, pues, el temeroso día, y habiendo mandado el duque que delante de la plaza del castillo se hiciese un espacioso cadahalso, donde estuviesen los jueces del campo y las dueñas, madre y hija, demandantes, había acudido de todos los lugares y aldeas circunvecinas infinita gente, a ver la novedad de aquella batalla; que nunca otra tal no habían visto, ni oído decir en aquella tierra los que vivían ni los que habían muerto.

El primero que entró en el campo y estacada fue el maestro de las ceremonias, que tanteó el campo, y le paseó todo, porque en él no hubiese algún engaño, ni cosa encubierta donde se tropezase y cayese; luego entraron las dueñas y se sentaron en sus asientos, cubiertas con los mantos hasta los ojos y aun hasta los pechos, con muestras de no pequeño sentimiento. Presente don Quijote en la estacada, de allí a poco, acompañado de muchas trompetas, asomó por una parte de la plaza, sobre un poderoso caballo, hundiéndola toda, el grande lacayo Tosilos, calada la visera y todo encambronado, con unas fuertes y lucientes armas. El caballo mostraba ser frisón, ancho y de color tordillo; de cada mano y pie le pendía una arroba de lana.

Venía el valeroso combatiente bien informado del duque su señor de cómo se había de portar con el valeroso don Quijote de la Mancha, advertido que en ninguna manera le matase, sino que procurase huir el primer encuentro por escusar el peligro de su muerte, que estaba cierto si de lleno en lleno le encontrase. Paseó la plaza, y, llegando donde las dueñas estaban, se puso algún tanto a mirar a la que por esposo le pedía. Llamó el maese de campo a don Quijote, que ya se había presentado en la plaza, y junto con Tosilos habló a las dueñas, preguntándoles si consentían que volviese por su derecho don Quijote de la Mancha. Ellas dijeron que sí, y que todo lo que en aquel caso hiciese lo daban por bien hecho, por firme y por valedero.

Ya en este tiempo estaban el duque y la duquesa puestos en una galería que caía sobre la estacada, toda la cual estaba coronada de infinita gente, que esperaba ver el riguroso trance nunca visto. Fue condición de los combatientes que si don Quijote vencía, su contrario se había de casar con la hija de doña Rodríguez; y si él fuese vencido, quedaba libre su contendor de la palabra que se le pedía, sin dar otra satisfacción alguna.

Partióles el maestro de las ceremonias el sol, y puso a los dos cada uno en el puesto donde habían de estar. Sonaron los atambores, llenó el aire el son de las trompetas, temblaba debajo de los pies la tierra; estaban suspensos los corazones de la mirante turba, temiendo unos y esperando otros el bueno o el mal suceso de aquel caso. Finalmente, don Quijote, encomendándose de todo su corazón a Dios Nuestro Señor y a la señora Dulcinea del Toboso, estaba aguardando que se le diese señal precisa de la arremetida; empero, nuestro lacayo tenía diferentes pensamientos: no pensaba él sino en lo que agora diré:

Parece ser que, cuando estuvo mirando a su enemiga, le pareció la más hermosa mujer que había visto en toda su vida, y el niño ceguezuelo, a quien suelen llamar de ordinario Amor por esas calles, no quiso perder la ocasión que se le ofreció de triunfar de una alma lacayuna y ponerla en la lista de sus trofeos; y así, llegándose a él bonitamente, sin que nadie le viese, le envasó al pobre lacayo una flecha de dos varas por el lado izquierdo, y le pasó el corazón de parte a parte; y púdolo hacer bien al seguro, porque el Amor es invisible, y entra y sale por do quiere, sin que nadie le pida cuenta de sus hechos.

Digo, pues, que, cuando dieron la señal de la arremetida, estaba nuestro lacayo transportado, pensando en la hermosura de la que ya había hecho señora de su libertad, y así, no atendió al son de la trompeta, como hizo don Quijote, que, apenas la hubo oído, cuando arremetió, y, a todo el correr que permitía Rocinante, partió contra su enemigo; y, viéndole partir su buen escudero Sancho, dijo a grandes voces:

-¡Dios te guíe, nata y flor de los andantes caballeros! ¡Dios te dé la vitoria, pues llevas la razón de tu parte!

Y, aunque Tosilos vio venir contra sí a don Quijote, no se movió un paso de su puesto; antes, con grandes voces, llamó al maese de campo, el cual venido a ver lo que quería, le dijo:

-Señor, ¿esta batalla no se hace porque yo me case, o no me case, con aquella señora?

-Así es -le fue respondido.

-Pues yo -dijo el lacayo-soy temeroso de mi conciencia, y pondría en gran cargo si pasase adelante en esta batalla; y así, digo que yo me doy por vencido y que quiero casarme luego con aquella señora.

Quedó admirado el maese de campo de las razones de Tosilos; y, como era uno de los sabidores de la máquina de aquel caso, no le supo responder palabra. Detúvose don Quijote en la mitad de su carrera, viendo que su enemigo no le acometía. El duque no sabía la ocasión porque no se pasaba adelante en la batalla, pero el maese de campo le fue a declarar lo que Tosilos decía, de lo que quedó suspenso y colérico en extremo.

En tanto que esto pasaba, Tosilos se llegó adonde doña Rodríguez estaba, y dijo a grandes voces:

-Yo, señora, quiero casarme con vuestra hija, y no quiero alcanzar por pleitos ni contiendas lo que puedo alcanzar por paz y sin peligro de la muerte.

Oyó esto el valeroso don Quijote, y dijo:

-Pues esto así es, yo quedo libre y suelto de mi promesa: cásenle en hora buena, y, pues Dios Nuestro Señor se la dio, San Pedro se la bendiga.

El duque había bajado a la plaza del castillo, y, llegándose a Tosilos, le dijo:

-¿Es verdad, caballero, que os dais por vencido, y que, instigado de vuestra temerosa conciencia, os queréis casar con esta doncella?

-Sí, señor -respondió Tosilos.

-Él hace muy bien -dijo a esta sazón Sancho Panza-, porque lo que has de dar al mur, dalo al gato, y sacarte ha de cuidado.

Íbase Tosilos desenlazando la celada, y rogaba que apriesa le ayudasen, porque le iban faltando los espíritus del aliento, y no podía verse encerrado tanto tiempo en la estrechez de aquel aposento. Quitáronse apriesa, y quedó descubierto y patente su rostro de lacayo. Viendo lo cual doña Rodríguez y su hija, dando grandes voces, dijeron:

-¡Éste es engaño, engaño es éste! ¡A Tosilos, el lacayo del duque mi señor, nos han puesto en lugar de mi verdadero esposo! ¡Justicia de Dios y del Rey, de tanta malicia, por no decir bellaquería!

-No vos acuitéis, señoras -dijo don Quijote-, que ni ésta es malicia ni es bellaquería; y si la es, y no ha sido la causa el duque, sino los malos encantadores que me persiguen, los cuales, invidiosos de que yo alcanzase la gloria deste vencimiento, han convertido el rostro de vuestro esposo en el de este que decís que es lacayo del duque. Tomad mi consejo, y, a pesar de la malicia de mis enemigos, casaos con él, que sin duda es el mismo que vos deseáis alcanzar por esposo.

El duque, que esto oyó, estuvo por romper en risa toda su cólera, y dijo:

-Son tan extraordinarias las cosas que suceden al señor don Quijote que estoy por creer que este mi lacayo no lo es; pero usemos deste ardid y maña: dilatemos el casamiento quince días, si quieren, y tengamos encerrado a este personaje que nos tiene dudosos, en los cuales podría ser que volviese a su prístina figura; que no ha de durar tanto el rancor que los encantadores tienen al señor don Quijote, y más, yéndoles tan poco en usar estos embelecocos y transformaciones.

-¡Oh señor! -dijo Sancho-, que ya tienen estos malandrines por uso y costumbre de mudar las cosas, de unas en otras, que tocan a mi amo. Un caballero que venció los días pasados, llamado el de los Espejos, le volvieron en la figura del bachiller Sansón Carrasco, natural de nuestro pueblo y grande amigo nuestro, y a mi señora Dulcinea del Toboso la han vuelto en una rústica labradora; y así, imagino que este lacayo ha de morir y vivir lacayo todos los días de su vida.

A lo que dijo la hija de Rodríguez:

-Séase quien fuere este que me pide por esposa, que yo se lo agradezco; que más quiero ser mujer legítima de un lacayo que no amiga y burlada de un caballero, puesto que el que a mí me burló no lo es.

En resolución, todos estos cuentos y sucesos pararon en que Tosilos se recogiese, hasta ver en qué paraba su transformación; aclamaron todos la vitoria por don Quijote, y los más quedaron tristes y melancólicos de ver que no se habían hecho pedazos los tan esperados combatientes, bien así como los mochachos quedan tristes cuando no sale el ahorcado que esperan, porque le ha perdonado, o la parte, o la justicia. Fuese la gente, volviéronse el duque y don Quijote al castillo, encerraron a Tosilos, quedaron doña Rodríguez y su hija contentísimas de ver que, por una vía o por otra, aquel caso había de parar en casamiento, y Tosilos no esperaba menos.

Capítulo LVII

Que trata de cómo don Quijote se despidió del duque, y de lo que le sucedió con la discreta y desenvuelta Altisidora, doncella de la duquesa

YA LE PARECIÓ a don Quijote que era bien salir de tanta ociosidad como la que en aquel castillo tenía; que se imaginaba ser grande la falta que su persona hacía en dejarse estar encerrado y perezoso entre los infinitos regalos y deleites que como a caballero andante aquellos señores le hacían, y parecíale que había de dar cuenta estrecha al cielo de aquella ociosidad y encerramiento; y así, pidió un día licencia a los duques para partirse. Diéronsele, con muestras de que en gran manera les pesaba de que los dejase. Dio la duquesa las cartas de su mujer a Sancho Panza, el cual lloró con ellas, y dijo: -¿Quién pensara que esperanzas tan grandes como las que en el pecho de mi mujer Teresa Panza engendraron las nuevas de mi gobierno habían de parar en volverme yo agora a las arrastradas aventuras de mi amo don Quijote de la Mancha? Con todo esto, me contento de ver que mi Teresa correspondió a ser quien es, enviando las bellotas a la duquesa; que, a no habérselas enviado, quedando yo pesaroso, se mostrara ella desagradecida. Lo que me consuela es que esta dádiva no se le puede dar nombre de cohecho, porque ya tenía yo el gobierno cuando ella las envió, y está puesto en razón que los que reciben algún beneficio, aunque sea con niñerías, se muestren agradecidos. En efecto, yo entré desnudo en el gobierno y salgo desnudo dél; y así, podré decir con segura conciencia, que no es poco: «Desnudo nací, desnudo me hallo: ni pierdo ni gano».

Esto pasaba entre sí Sancho el día de la partida; y, saliendo don Quijote, habiéndose despedido la noche antes de los duques, una mañana se presentó armado en la plaza del castillo. Mirábanle de los corredores toda la gente del castillo, y asimismo los duques salieron a verle. Estaba Sancho sobre su rucio, con sus alforjas, maleta y repuesto, contentísimo, porque el mayordomo del duque, el que fue la Trifaldi, le había dado un bolsico con docientos escudos de oro, para suplir los menesteres del camino, y esto aún no lo sabía don Quijote.

Estando, como queda dicho, mirándole todos, a deshora, entre las otras dueñas y doncellas de la duquesa, que le miraban, alzó la voz la desenvuelta y discreta Altisidora, y en son lastimero dijo: -Escucha, mal caballero; detén un poco las riendas; no fatigues las ijadas de tu mal regida bestia.

Mira, falso, que no huyas 5 de alguna serpiente fiera, sino de una corderilla que está muy lejos de oveja.
Tú has burlado, monstruo horrendo, la más hermosa doncella 10 que Dïana vio en sus montes, que Venus miró en sus selvas.
Cruel Vireno, fugitivo Eneas,
Barrabás te acompañe; allá te avengas.

Tú llevas, ¡llevar impío!, 15 en las garras de tus cerras las entrañas de una humilde, como enamorada, tierna.

Llévaste tres tocadores, y unas ligas, de unas piernas 20 que al mármol puro se igualan en lisas, blancas y negras.
Llévaste dos mil suspiros, que, a ser de fuego, pudieran abrasar a dos mil Troyas, 25
si dos mil Troyas hubiera.
Cruel Vireno, fugitivo Eneas,
Barrabás te acompañe; allá te avengas.

De ese Sancho, tu escudero, las entrañas sean tan tercas 30
y tan duras, que no salga de su encanto Dulcinea.
De la culpa que tú tienes lleve la triste la pena; que justos por pecadores 35 tal vez pagan en mi tierra.
Tus más finas aventuras en desventuras se vuelvan, en sueños tus pasatiempos, en olvidos tus firmezas. 40
Cruel Vireno, fugitivo Eneas,
Barrabás te acompañe; allá te avengas.

Seas tenido por falso desde Sevilla a Marchena, desde Granada hasta Loja, 45 de Londres a Inglaterra.
Si jugares al reinado, los cientos, o la primera, los reyes huyan de ti; ases ni sietes no veas. 50

Si te cortares los callos, sangre las heridas viertan, y quédente los raigones si te sacares las muelas.
Cruel Vireno, fugitivo Eneas, 55
Barrabás te acompañe; allá te avengas.

En tanto que, de la suerte que se ha dicho, se quejaba la lastimada Altisidora, la estuvo mirando don Quijote, y, sin responderla palabra, volviendo el rostro a Sancho, le dijo: -Por el siglo de tus pasados, Sancho mío, te conjuro que me digas una verdad. Dime, ¿llevas por ventura los tres tocadores y las ligas que esta enamorada doncella dice?

A lo que Sancho respondió: -Los tres tocadores sí llevo; pero las ligas, como por los cerros de Úbeda.

Quedó la duquesa admirada de la desenvoltura de Altisidora, que, aunque la tenía por atrevida, graciosa y desenvuelta, no en grado que se atreviera a semejantes desenvolturas; y, como no estaba advertida desta burla, creció más su admiración. El duque quiso reforzar el donaire, y dijo: -No me parece bien, señor caballero, que, habiendo recibido en este mi castillo el buen acogimiento que en él se os ha hecho, os hayáis atrevido a llevaros tres tocadores, por lo menos, si por lo más las ligas de mi doncella; indicios son de mal pecho y muestras que no corresponden a vuestra fama. Volvedle las ligas; si no, yo os desafío a mortal batalla, sin tener temor que malandrines encantadores me vuelvan ni muden el rostro, como han hecho en el de Tosilos mi lacayo, el que entró con vos en batalla.

-No quiera Dios -respondió don Quijote-que yo desenvaine mi espada contra vuestra ilustrísima persona, de quien tantas mercedes he recibido; los tocadores volveré, porque dice Sancho que los tiene; las ligas es imposible, porque ni yo las he recibido ni él tampoco; y si esta vuestra doncella quisiere mirar sus escondrijos, a buen seguro que las halle. Yo, señor duque, jamás he sido ladrón, ni lo pienso ser en toda mi vida, como Dios no me deje de su mano. Esta doncella habla, como ella dice, como enamorada, de lo que yo no le tengo culpa; y así, no tengo de qué pedirle perdón ni a ella ni a Vuestra Excelencia, a quien suplico me tenga en mejor opinión, y me dé de nuevo licencia para seguir mi camino.

-Déosle Dios tan bueno -dijo la duquesa-, señor don Quijote, que siempre oigamos buenas nuevas de vuestras fechorías. Y andad con Dios; que, mientras más os detenéis, más aumentáis el fuego en los pechos de las doncellas que os miran; y a la mía yo la castigaré de modo, que de aquí adelante no se desmande con la vista ni con las palabras.

-Una no más quiero que me escuches, ¡oh valeroso don Quijote! -dijo entonces Altisidora-; y es que te pido perdón del latrocinio de las ligas, porque, en Dios y en mi ánima que las tengo puestas, y he caído en el descuido del que yendo sobre el asno, le buscaba.

-¿No lo dije yo? -dijo Sancho-. ¡Bonico soy yo para encubrir hurtos! Pues, a quererlos hacer, de paleta me había venido la ocasión en mi gobierno.

Abajó la cabeza don Quijote y hizo reverencia a los duques y a todos los circunstantes, y, volviendo las riendas a Rocinante, siguiéndole Sancho sobre el rucio, se salió del castillo, enderezando su camino a Zaragoza.

Capítulo LVIII

Que trata de cómo menudearon sobre don Quijote aventuras tantas, que no se daban vagar unas a otras

CUANDO don Quijote se vio en la campaña rasa, libre y desembarazado de los requiebros de Altisidora, le pareció que estaba en su centro, y que los espíritus se le renovaban para proseguir de nuevo el asunto de sus caballerías, y, volviéndose a Sancho, le dijo:

-La libertad, Sancho, es uno de los más preciosos dones que a los hombres dieron los cielos; con ella no pueden igualarse los tesoros que encierra la tierra ni el mar encubre; por la libertad, así como por la honra, se puede y debe aventurar la vida, y, por el contrario, el cautiverio es el mayor mal que puede venir a los hombres. Digo esto, Sancho, porque bien has visto el regalo, la abundancia que en este castillo que dejamos hemos tenido; pues en mitad de aquellos banquetes sazonados y de aquellas bebidas de nieve, me parecía a mí que estaba metido entre las estrechezas de la hambre, porque no lo gozaba con la libertad que lo gozara si fueran míos; que las obligaciones de las recompensas de los beneficios y mercedes recibidas son ataduras que no dejan campear al ánimo libre. ¡Venturoso aquél a quien el cielo dio un pedazo de pan, sin que le quede obligación de agradecerlo a otro que al mismo cielo!

-Con todo eso -dijo Sancho- que vuesa merced me ha dicho, no es bien que se quede sin agradecimiento de nuestra parte docientos escudos de oro que en una bolsilla me dio el mayordomo del duque, que como píctima y confortativo la llevo puesta sobre el corazón, para lo que se ofreciere; que no siempre hemos de hallar castillos donde nos regalen, que tal vez toparemos con algunas ventas donde nos apaleen.

En estos y otros razonamientos iban los andantes, caballero y escudero, cuando vieron, habiendo andado poco más de una legua, que encima de la yerba de un pradillo verde, encima de sus capas, estaban comiendo hasta una docena de hombres, vestidos de labradores. Junto a sí tenían unas como sábanas blancas, con que cubrían alguna cosa que debajo estaba; estaban empinadas y tendidas, y de trecho a trecho puestas. Llegó don Quijote a los que comían, y, saludándolos primero cortésmente, les preguntó que qué era lo que aquellos lienzos cubrían. Uno dellos le respondió:

-Señor, debajo destos lienzos están unas imágenes de relieve y entabladura que han de servir en un retablo que hacemos en nuestra aldea; llevámoslas cubiertas, porque no se desfloren, y en hombros, porque no se quiebren.

-Si sois servidos -respondió don Quijote-, holgaría de verlas, pues imágenes que con tanto recato se llevan, sin duda deben de ser buenas.

-Y ¡cómo si lo son! -dijo otro-. Si no, dígalo lo que cuesta: que en verdad que no hay ninguna que no esté en más de cincuenta ducados; y, porque vea vuestra merced esta verdad, espere vuestra merced, y verla ha por vista de ojos.

Y, levantándose, dejó de comer y fue a quitar la cubierta de la primera imagen, que mostró ser la de San Jorge puesto a caballo, con una serpiente enroscada a los pies y la lanza atravesada por la boca, con la fiereza que suele pintarse. Toda la imagen parecía una ascua de oro, como suele decirse. Viéndola don Quijote, dijo:

-Este caballero fue uno de los mejores andantes que tuvo la milicia divina: llamóse don San Jorge, y fue además defensor de doncellas. Veamos esta otra.

Descubrióla el hombre, y pareció ser la de San Martín puesto a caballo, que partía la capa con el pobre; y, apenas la hubo visto don Quijote, cuando dijo:

-Este caballero también fue de los aventureros cristianos, y creo que fue más liberal que valiente, como lo puedes echar de ver, Sancho, en que está partiendo la capa con el pobre y le da la mitad; y sin duda debía de ser entonces invierno, que, si no, él se la diera toda, según era de caritativo.

-No debió de ser eso -dijo Sancho-, sino que se debió de atener al refrán que dicen: que para dar y tener, seso es menester.

Rióse don Quijote y pidió que quitasen otro lienzo, debajo del cual se descubrió la imagen del Patrón de las Españas a caballo, la espada ensangrentada, atropellando moros y pisando cabezas; y, en viéndola, dijo don Quijote:

-Éste sí que es caballero, y de las escuadras de Cristo; éste se llama don San Diego Matamoros, uno de los más valientes santos y caballeros que tuvo el mundo y tiene agora el cielo.

Luego descubrieron otro lienzo, y pareció que encubría la caída de San Pablo del caballo abajo, con todas las circunstancias que en el retablo de su conversión suelen pintarse. Cuando le vido tan al vivo, que dijeran que Cristo le hablaba y Pablo respondía.

-Éste -dijo don Quijote- fue el mayor enemigo que tuvo la Iglesia de Dios Nuestro Señor en su tiempo, y el mayor defensor suyo que tendrá jamás: caballero andante por la vida, y santo a pie quedo por la muerte, trabajador incansable en la viña del Señor, doctor de las gentes, a quien sirvieron de escuelas los cielos y de catedrático y maestro que le enseñase el mismo Jesucristo.

No había más imágenes, y así, mandó don Quijote que las volviesen a cubrir, y dijo a los que las llevaban:

-Por buen agüero he tenido, hermanos, haber visto lo que he visto, porque estos santos y caballeros profesaron lo que yo profeso, que es el ejercicio de las armas; sino que la diferencia que hay entre mí y ellos es que ellos fueron santos y pelearon a lo divino, y yo soy pecador y peleo a lo humano. Ellos conquistaron el cielo a fuerza de brazos, porque el cielo padece fuerza, y yo hasta agora no sé lo que conquisto a fuerza de mis trabajos; pero si mi Dulcinea del Toboso saliese de los que padece, mejorándose mi ventura y adobándoseme el juicio, podría ser que encaminase mis pasos por mejor camino del que llevo.

-Dios lo oiga y el pecado sea sordo -dijo Sancho a esta ocasión.

Admiráronse los hombres, así de la figura como de las razones de don Quijote, sin entender la mitad de lo que en ellas decir quería. Acabaron de comer, cargaron con sus imágenes, y, despidiéndose de don Quijote, siguieron su viaje.

Quedó Sancho de nuevo como si jamás hubiera conocido a su señor, admirado de lo que sabía, pareciéndole que no debía de haber historia en el mundo ni suceso que no lo tuviese cifrado en la uña y clavado en la memoria, y díjole:

-En verdad, señor nuestramo, que si esto que nos ha sucedido hoy se puede llamar aventura, ella ha sido de las más suaves y dulces que en todo el discurso de nuestra peregrinación nos ha sucedido: della habemos salido sin palos y sobresalto alguno, ni hemos echado mano a las espadas, ni hemos batido la tierra con los cuerpos, ni quedamos hambrientos. Bendito sea Dios, que tal me ha dejado ver con mis propios ojos.

-Tú dices bien, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, pero has de advertir que no todos los tiempos son unos, ni corren de una misma suerte, y esto que el vulgo suele llamar comúnmente agüeros, que no se fundan sobre natural razón alguna, del que es discreto han de ser tenidos y juzgar por buenos acontecimientos. Levántase uno destos agoreros por la mañana, sale de su casa, encuéntrase con un fraile de la orden del bienaventurado San Francisco, y, como si hubiera encontrado con un grifo, vuelve las espaldas y vuélvese a su casa. Derrámasele al otro Mendoza la sal encima de la mesa, y derrámasele a él la melancolía por el corazón, como si estuviese obligada la naturaleza a dar señales de las venideras desgracias con cosas tan de poco momento como las referidas. El discreto y cristiano no ha de andar en puntillos con lo que quiere hacer el cielo. Llega Cipión a África, tropieza en saltando en tierra, tiénenlo por mal agüero sus soldados; pero él, abrazándose con el suelo, dijo: «No te me podrás huir, África, porque te tengo asida y entre mis brazos». Así que, Sancho, el haber encontrado con estas imágenes ha sido para mí felicísimo acontecimiento.

-Yo así lo creo -respondió Sancho-, y querría que vuestra merced me dijese qué es la causa por que dicen los españoles cuando quieren dar alguna batalla, invocando aquel San Diego Matamoros: «¡Santiago, y cierra, España!» ¿Está por ventura España abierta, y de modo que es menester cerrarla, o qué ceremonia es ésta?

-Simplicísimo eres, Sancho -respondió don Quijote-; y mira que este gran caballero de la cruz bermeja háselo dado Dios a España por patrón y amparo suyo, especialmente en los rigurosos trances que con los moros los españoles han tenido; y así, le invocan y llaman como a defensor suyo en todas las batallas que acometen, y muchas veces le han visto visiblemente en ellas, derribando, atropellando, destruyendo y matando los agarenos escuadrones; y desta verdad te pudiera traer muchos ejemplos que en las verdaderas historias españolas se cuentan.

Mudó Sancho plática, y dijo a su amo:

-Maravillado estoy, señor, de la desenvoltura de Altisidora, la doncella de la duquesa: bravamente la debe de tener herida y traspasada aquel que llaman Amor, que dicen que es un rapaz ceguezuelo que, con estar lagañoso, o, por mejor decir, sin vista, si toma por blanco un corazón, por pequeño que sea, le acierta y traspasa de parte a parte con sus flechas. He oído decir también que en la vergüenza y recato de las doncellas se despuntan y embotan las amorosas saetas, pero en esta Altisidora más parece que se aguzan que despuntan.

-Advierte, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, que el amor ni mira respetos ni guarda términos de razón en sus discursos, y tiene la misma condición que la muerte: que así acomete los altos alcázares de los reyes como las humildes chozas de los pastores, y cuando toma entera posesión de una alma, lo primero que hace es quitarle el temor y la vergüenza; y así, sin ella declaró Altisidora sus deseos, que engendraron en mi pecho antes confusión que lástima.

-¡Crueldad notoria! -dijo Sancho-. ¡Desagradecimiento inaudito! Yo de mí sé decir que me rindiera y avasallara la más mínima razón amorosa suya. ¡Hideputa, y qué corazón de mármol, qué entrañas de bronce y qué alma de argamasa! Pero no puedo pensar qué es lo que vio esta doncella en vuestra merced que así la rindiese y avasallase: qué gala, qué brío, qué donaire, qué rostro, que cada cosa por sí destas, o todas juntas, le enamoraron; que en verdad en verdad que muchas veces me paro a mirar a vuestra merced desde la punta del pie hasta el último cabello de la cabeza, y que veo más cosas para espantar que para enamorar; y, habiendo yo también oído decir que la hermosura es la primera y principal parte que enamora, no teniendo vuestra merced ninguna, no sé yo de qué se enamoró la pobre.

-Advierte, Sancho -respondió don Quijote-, que hay dos maneras de hermosura: una del alma y otra del cuerpo; la del alma campea y se muestra en el entendimiento, en la honestidad, en el buen proceder, en la liberalidad y en la buena crianza, y todas estas partes caben y pueden estar en un hombre feo; y cuando se pone la mira en esta hermosura, y no en la del cuerpo, suele nacer el amor con ímpetu y con ventajas. Yo, Sancho, bien veo que no soy hermoso, pero también conozco que no soy disforme; y bástale a un hombre de bien no ser monstruo para ser bien querido, como tenga los dotes del alma que te he dicho.

En estas razones y pláticas se iban entrando por una selva que fuera del camino estaba, y a deshora, sin pensar en ello, se halló don Quijote enredado entre unas redes de hilo verde, que desde unos árboles a otros estaban tendidas; y, sin poder imaginar qué pudiese ser aquello, dijo a Sancho:

-Paréceme, Sancho, que esto destas redes debe de ser una de las más nuevas aventuras que pueda imaginar. Que me maten si los encantadores que me persiguen no quieren enredarme en ellas y detener mi camino, como en venganza de la riguridad que con Altisidora he tenido. Pues mándoles yo que, aunque estas redes, si como son hechas de hilo verde fueran de durísimos diamantes, o más fuertes que aquélla con que el celoso dios de los herreros enredó a Venus y a Marte, así la rompiera como si fuera de juncos marinos o de hilachas de algodón.

Y, queriendo pasar adelante y romperlo todo, al improviso se le ofrecieron delante, saliendo de entre unos árboles, dos hermosísimas pastoras; a lo menos, vestidas como pastoras, sino que los pellicos y sayas eran de fino brocado, digo, que las sayas eran riquísimos faldellines de tabí de oro. Traían los cabellos sueltos por las espaldas, que en rubios podían competir con los rayos del mismo sol; los cuales se coronaban con dos guirnaldas de verde laurel y de rojo amaranto tejidas. La edad, al parecer, ni bajaba de los quince ni pasaba de los diez y ocho.

Vista fue ésta que admiró a Sancho, suspendió a don Quijote, hizo parar al sol en su carrera para verlas, y tuvo en maravilloso silencio a todos cuatro. En fin, quien primero habló fue una de las dos zagalas, que dijo a don Quijote:

-Detened, señor caballero, el paso, y no rompáis las redes, que no para daño vuestro, sino para nuestro pasatiempo, ahí están tendidas; y, porque sé que nos habéis de preguntar para qué se han puesto y quién somos, os lo quiero decir en breves palabras. En una aldea que está hasta dos leguas de aquí, donde hay mucha gente principal y muchos hidalgos y ricos, entre muchos amigos y parientes se concertó que con sus hijos, mujeres y hijas, vecinos, amigos y parientes, nos viniésemos a holgar a este sitio, que es uno de los más agradables de todos estos contornos, formando entre todos una nueva y pastoril Arcadia, vistiéndonos las doncellas de zagalas y los mancebos de pastores. Traemos estudiadas dos églogas, una del famoso poeta Garcilaso, y otra del excelentísimo Camoes, en su misma lengua portuguesa, las cuales hasta agora no hemos representado. Ayer fue el primero día que aquí llegamos; tenemos entre estos ramos plantadas algunas tiendas, que dicen se llaman de campaña, en el margen de un abundoso arroyo que todos estos prados fertiliza; tendimos la noche pasada estas redes de estos árboles para engañar los simples pajarillos, que, ojeados con nuestro ruido, vinieren a dar en ellas. Si gustáis, señor, de ser nuestro huésped, seréis agasajado liberal y cortésmente; porque por agora en este sitio no ha de entrar la pesadumbre ni la melancolía.

Calló y no dijo más. A lo que respondió don Quijote:

-Por cierto, hermosísima señora, que no debió de quedar más suspenso ni admirado Anteón cuando vio al improviso bañarse en las aguas a Diana, como yo he quedado atónito en ver vuestra belleza. Alabo el asunto de vuestros entretenimientos, y el de vuestros ofrecimientos agradezco; y, si os puedo servir, con seguridad de ser obedecidas me lo podéis mandar; porque no es ésta la profesión mía, sino de mostrarme agradecido y bienhechor con todo género de gente, en especial con la principal que vuestras personas representa; y, si como estas redes, que deben de ocupar algún pequeño espacio, ocuparan toda la redondez de la tierra, buscara yo nuevos mundos por do pasar sin romperlas; y porque deis algún crédito a esta mi exageración, ved que os lo promete, por lo menos, don Quijote de la Mancha, si es que ha llegado a vuestros oídos este nombre.

-¡Ay, amiga de mi alma -dijo entonces la otra zagala-, y qué ventura tan grande nos ha sucedido! ¿Ves este señor que tenemos delante? Pues hágote saber que es el más valiente, y el más enamorado, y el más comedido que tiene el mundo, si no es que nos miente y nos engaña una historia que de sus hazañas anda impresa y yo he leído. Yo apostaré que este buen hombre que viene consigo es un tal Sancho Panza, su escudero, a cuyas gracias no hay ningunas que se le igualen.

-Así es la verdad -dijo Sancho-: que yo soy ese gracioso y ese escudero que vuestra merced dice, y este señor es mi amo, el mismo don Quijote de la Mancha historiado y referido.

-¡Ay! -dijo la otra-. Supliquémosle, amiga, que se quede; que nuestros padres y nuestros hermanos gustarán infinito dello, que también he oído yo decir de su valor y de sus gracias lo mismo que tú me has dicho, y, sobre todo, dicen dél que es el más firme y más leal enamorado que se sabe, y que su dama es una tal Dulcinea del Toboso, a quien en toda España la dan la palma de la hermosura.

-Con razón se la dan -dijo don Quijote-, si ya no lo pone en duda vuestra sin igual belleza. No os canséis, señoras, en detenerme, porque las precisas obligaciones de mi profesión no me dejan reposar en ningún cabo.

Llegó, en esto, adonde los cuatro estaban un hermano de una de las dos pastoras, vestido asimismo de pastor, con la riqueza y galas que a las de las zagalas correspondía; contáronle ellas que el que con ellas estaba era el valeroso don Quijote de la Mancha, y el otro, su escudero Sancho, de quien tenía él ya noticia, por haber leído su historia. Ofreciósele el gallardo pastor, pidióle que se viniese con él a sus tiendas; húbolo de conceder don Quijote, y así lo hizo.

Llegó, en esto, el ojeo, llenáronse las redes de pajarillos diferentes que, engañados de la color de las redes, caían en el peligro de que iban huyendo. Juntáronse en aquel sitio más de treinta personas, todas bizarramente de pastores y pastoras vestidas, y en un instante quedaron enteradas de quiénes eran don Quijote y su escudero, de que no poco contento recibieron, porque ya tenían dél noticia por su historia. Acudieron a las tiendas, hallaron las mesas puestas, ricas, abundantes y limpias; honraron a don Quijote dándole el primer lugar en ellas; mirábanle todos, y admirábanse de verle.

-Entre los pecados mayores que los hombres cometen, aunque algunos dicen que es la soberbia, yo digo que es el desagradecimiento, ateniéndome a lo que suele decirse: que de los desagradecidos está lleno el infierno. Este pecado, en cuanto me ha sido posible, he procurado yo huir desde el instante que tuve uso de razón; y si no puedo pagar las buenas obras que me hacen con otras obras, pongo en su lugar los deseos de hacerlas, y cuando éstos no bastan, las publico; porque quien dice y publica las buenas obras que recibe, también las recompensara con otras, si pudiera; porque, por la mayor parte, los que reciben son inferiores a los que dan; y así, es Dios sobre todos, porque es dador sobre todos y no pueden corresponder las dádivas del hombre a las de Dios con igualdad, por infinita distancia; y esta estrechez y cortedad, en cierto modo, la suple el agradecimiento. Yo, pues, agradecido a la merced que aquí se me ha hecho, no pudiendo corresponder a la misma medida, conteniéndome en los estrechos límites de mi poderío, ofrezco lo que puedo y lo que tengo de mi cosecha; y así, digo que sustentaré dos días naturales en mitad de ese camino real que va a Zaragoza, que estas señoras zagalas contrahechas que aquí están son las más hermosas doncellas y más corteses que hay en el mundo, excetado sólo a la sin par Dulcinea del Toboso, única señora de mis pensamientos, con paz sea dicho de cuantos y cuantas me escuchan.

Oyendo lo cual, Sancho, que con grande atención le había estado escuchando, dando una gran voz, dijo:

-¿Es posible que haya en el mundo personas que se atrevan a decir y a jurar que este mi señor es loco? Digan vuestras mercedes, señores pastores: ¿hay cura de aldea, por discreto y por estudiante que sea, que pueda decir lo que mi amo ha dicho, ni hay caballero andante, por más fama que tenga de valiente, que pueda ofrecer lo que mi amo aquí ha ofrecido?

Volvióse don Quijote a Sancho, y, encendido el rostro y colérico, le dijo:

-¿Es posible, ¡oh Sancho!, que haya en todo el orbe alguna persona que diga que no eres tonto, aforrado de lo mismo, con no sé qué ribetes de malicioso y de bellaco? ¿Quién te mete a ti en mis cosas, y en averiguar si soy discreto o majadero? Calla y no me repliques, sino ensilla, si está desensillado Rocinante: vamos a poner en efecto mi ofrecimiento, que, con la razón que va de mi parte, puedes dar por vencidos a todos cuantos quisieren contradecirla.

Y, con gran furia y muestras de enojo, se levantó de la silla, dejando admirados a los circunstantes, haciéndoles dudar si le podían tener por loco o por cuerdo. Finalmente, habiéndole persuadido que no se pusiese en tal demanda, que ellos daban por bien conocida su agradecida voluntad y que no eran menester nuevas demostraciones para conocer su ánimo valeroso, pues bastaban las que en la historia de sus hechos se referían, con todo esto, salió don Quijote con su intención; y, puesto sobre Rocinante, abrazando su escudo y tomando su lanza, se puso en la mitad de un real camino que no lejos del verde prado estaba. Siguióle Sancho sobre su rucio, con toda la gente del pastoral rebaño, deseosos de ver en qué paraba su arrogante y nunca visto ofrecimiento.

Puesto, pues, don Quijote en mitad del camino -como os he dicho-, hirió el aire con semejantes palabras:

-¡Oh vosotros, pasajeros y viandantes, caballeros, escuderos, gente de a pie y de a caballo que por este camino pasáis, o habéis de pasar en estos dos días siguientes! Sabed que don Quijote de la Mancha, caballero andante, está aquí puesto para defender que a todas las hermosuras y cortesías del mundo exceden las que se encierran en las ninfas habitadoras destos prados y bosques, dejando a un lado a la señora de mi alma Dulcinea del Toboso. Por eso, el que fuere de parecer contrario, acuda, que aquí le espero.

Dos veces repitió estas mismas razones, y dos veces no fueron oídas de ningún aventurero; pero la suerte, que sus cosas iba encaminando de mejor en mejor, ordenó que de allí a poco se descubriese por el camino muchedumbre de hombres de a caballo, y muchos dellos con lanzas en las manos, caminando todos apiñados, de tropel y a gran priesa. No los hubieron bien visto los que con don Quijote estaban, cuando, volviendo las espaldas, se apartaron bien lejos del camino, porque conocieron que si esperaban les podía suceder algún peligro; sólo don Quijote, con intrépido corazón, se estuvo quedo, y Sancho Panza se escudó con las ancas de Rocinante.

Llegó el tropel de los lanceros, y uno dellos, que venía más delante, a grandes voces comenzó a decir a don Quijote:

-¡Apártate, hombre del diablo, del camino, que te harán pedazos estos toros!

-¡Ea, canalla -respondió don Quijote-, para mí no hay toros que valgan, aunque sean de los más bravos que cría Jarama en sus riberas! Confesad, malandrines, así a carga cerrada, que es verdad lo que yo aquí he publicado; si no, conmigo sois en batalla.

No tuvo lugar de responder el vaquero, ni don Quijote le tuvo de desviarse, aunque quisiera; y así, el tropel de los toros bravos y el de los mansos cabestros, con la multitud de los vaqueros y otras gentes que a encerrar los llevaban a un lugar donde otro día habían de correrse, pasaron sobre don Quijote, y sobre Sancho, Rocinante y el rucio, dando con todos ellos en tierra, echándole a rodar por el suelo. Quedó molido Sancho, espantado don Quijote, aporreado el rucio y no muy católico Rocinante; pero, en fin, se levantaron todos, y don Quijote, a gran prisa, tropezando aquí y cayendo allí, comenzó a correr tras la vacada, diciendo a voces:

-¡Deteneos y esperad, canalla malandrina, que un solo caballero os espera, el cual no tiene condición ni es de parecer de los que dicen que al enemigo que huye, hacerle la puente de plata!

Pero no por eso se detuvieron los apresurados corredores, ni hicieron más caso de sus amenazas que de las nubes de antaño. Detúvole el cansancio a don Quijote, y, más enojado que vengado, se sentó en el camino, esperando a que Sancho, Rocinante y el rucio llegasen. Llegaron, volvieron a subir amo y mozo, y, sin volver a despedirse de la Arcadia fingida o contrahecha, y con más vergüenza que gusto, siguieron su camino.

Capítulo LIX

Donde se cuenta del extraordinario suceso, que se puede tener por aventura, que le sucedió a don Quijote

AL POLVO y al cansancio que don Quijote y Sancho sacaron del descomedimiento de los toros, socorrió una fuente clara y limpia que entre una fresca arboleda hallaron, en el margen de la cual, dejando libres, sin jáquima y freno, al rucio y a Rocinante, los dos asendereados amo y mozo se sentaron. Acudió Sancho a la repostería de su alforjas, y dellas sacó de lo que él solía llamar condumio; enjuagóse la boca, lavóse don Quijote el rostro, con cuyo refrigerio cobraron aliento los espíritus desalentados. No comía don Quijote, de puro pesaroso, ni Sancho no osaba tocar a los manjares que delante tenía, de puro comedido, y esperaba a que su señor hiciese la salva; pero, viendo que, llevado de sus imaginaciones, no se acordaba de llevar el pan a la boca, no abrió la suya, y, atropellando por todo género de crianza, comenzó a embaular en el estómago el pan y queso que se le ofrecía.

-Come, Sancho amigo -dijo don Quijote-, sustenta la vida, que más que a mí te importa, y déjame morir a mí a manos de mis pensamientos y a fuerzas de mis desgracias. Yo, Sancho, nací para vivir muriendo, y tú para morir comiendo; y, porque veas que te digo verdad en esto, considérame impreso en historias, famoso en las armas, comedido en mis acciones, respetado de príncipes, solicitado de doncellas; al cabo al cabo, cuando esperaba palmas, triunfos y coronas, granjeadas y merecidas por mis valerosas hazañas, me he visto esta mañana pisado y acoceado y molido de los pies de animales inmundos y soeces. Esta consideración me embota los dientes, entorpece las muelas, y entomece las manos, y quita de todo en todo la gana del comer, de manera que pienso dejarme morir de hambre: muerte la más cruel de las muertes.

-Desa manera -dijo Sancho, sin dejar de mascar apriesa-no aprobará vuestra merced aquel refrán que dicen: «muera Marta, y muera harta». Yo, a lo menos, no pienso matarme a mí mismo; antes pienso hacer como el zapatero, que tira el cuero con los dientes hasta que le hace llegar donde él quiere; yo tiraré mi vida comiendo hasta que llegue al fin que le tiene determinado el cielo; y sepa, señor, que no hay mayor locura que la que toca en querer desesperarse como vuestra merced, y créame, y después de comido, échese a dormir un poco sobre los colchones verdes destas yerbas, y verá como cuando despierte se halla algo más

Hízolo así don Quijote, pareciéndole que las razones de Sancho más eran de filósofo que de mentecato, y díjole:

-Si tú, ¡oh Sancho!, quisieses hacer por mí lo que yo ahora te diré, serían mis alivios más ciertos y mis pesadumbres no tan grandes; y es que, mientras yo duermo, obedeciendo tus consejos, tú te desviases un poco lejos de aquí, y con las riendas de Rocinante, echando al aire tus carnes, te dieses trecientos o cuatrocientos azotes a buena cuenta de los tres mil y tantos que te has de dar por el desencanto de Dulcinea; que es lástima no pequeña que aquella pobre señora esté encantada por tu descuido y negligencia.

-Hay mucho que decir en eso -dijo Sancho-. Durmamos, por ahora, entrambos, y después, Dios dijo lo que será. Sepa vuestra merced que esto de azotarse un hombre a sangre fría es cosa recia, y más si caen los azotes sobre un cuerpo mal sustentado y peor comido: tenga paciencia mi señora Dulcinea, que, cuando menos se cate, me verá hecho una criba, de azotes; y hasta la muerte, todo es vida; quiero decir que aún yo la tengo, junto con el deseo de cumplir con lo que he prometido.

Agradeciéndoselo don Quijote, comió algo, y Sancho mucho, y echáronse a dormir entrambos, dejando a su albedrío y sin orden alguna pacer del abundosa yerba de que aquel prado estaba lleno a los dos continuos compañeros y amigos Rocinante y el rucio. Despertaron algo tarde, volvieron a subir y a seguir su camino, dándose prisa para llegar a una venta que, al parecer, una legua de allí se descubría. Digo que era venta porque don Quijote la llamó así, fuera del uso que tenía de llamar a todas las ventas castillos.

Llegaron, pues, a ella; preguntaron al huésped si había posada. Fueles respondido que sí, con toda la comodidad y regalo que pudiera hallar en Zaragoza. Apeáronse y recogió Sancho su repostería en un aposento, de quien el huésped le dio la llave; llevó las bestias a la caballeriza, echóles sus piensos, salió a ver lo que don Quijote, que estaba sentado sobre un poyo, le mandaba, dando particulares gracias al cielo de que a su amo no le hubiese parecido castillo aquella venta.

Llegóse la hora del cenar; recogieron a su estancia; preguntó Sancho al huésped que qué tenía para darles de cenar, a lo que el huésped respondió que su boca sería medida; y así, que pidiese lo que quisiese: que de las pajaricas del aire, de las aves de la tierra y de los pescados del mar estaba proveída aquella venta.

-No es menester tanto -respondió Sancho-, que con un par de pollos que nos asen tendremos lo suficiente, porque mi señor es delicado y come poco, y yo no soy tragantón en demasía.

Respondióle el huésped que no tenía pollos, porque los milanos los tenían asolados.

-Pues mande el señor huésped -dijo Sancho-asar una polla que sea tierna.

-¿Polla? ¡Mi padre! -respondió el huésped-. En verdad en verdad que envié ayer a la ciudad a vender más de cincuenta; pero, fuera de pollas, pida vuestra merced lo que quisiere.

-Desa manera -dijo Sancho-, no faltará ternera o cabrito.

-En casa, por ahora -respondió el huésped-, no lo hay, porque se ha acabado; pero la semana que viene lo habrá de sobra.

-¡Medrados estamos con eso! -respondió Sancho-. Yo pondré que se vienen a resumirse todas estas faltas en las sobras que debe de haber de tocino y huevos.

-¡Por Dios -respondió el huésped-, que es gentil relente el que mi huésped tiene!, pues hele dicho que ni tengo pollas ni gallinas, y ¿quiere que tenga huevos? Discurra, si quisiere, por otras delicadezas, y déjese de pedir gallinas.

-Resolvámonos, cuerpo de mí -dijo Sancho-, y dígame finalmente lo que tiene, y déjese de discurrimientos, señor huésped.

Dijo el ventero:

-Lo que real y verdaderamente tengo son dos uñas de vaca que parecen manos de ternera, o dos manos de ternera que parecen uñas de vaca; están cocidas con sus garbanzos, cebollas y tocino, y la hora de ahora están diciendo: «¡Coméme! ¡Coméme!»

-Por mías las marco desde aquí -dijo Sancho-; y nadie las toque, que yo las pagaré mejor que otro, porque para mí ninguna otra cosa pudiera esperar de más gusto, y no se me daría nada que fuesen manos, como fuesen uñas.

-Nadie las tocará -dijo el ventero-, porque otros huéspedes que tengo, de puro principales, traen consigo cocinero, dispensero y repostería.

-Si por principales va -dijo Sancho-, ninguno más que mi amo; pero el oficio que él trae no permite despensas ni botillerías: ahí nos tendemos en mitad de un prado y nos hartamos de bellotas o de nísperos.

Esta fue la plática que Sancho tuvo con el ventero, sin querer Sancho pasar adelante en responderle; que ya le había preguntado qué oficio o qué ejercicio era el de su amo.

Llegóse, pues, la hora del cenar, recogióse a su estancia don Quijote, trujo el huésped la olla, así como estaba, y sentóse a cenar muy de propósito. Parece ser que en otro aposento que junto al de don Quijote estaba, que no le dividía más que un sutil tabique, oyó decir don Quijote:

-Por vida de vuestra merced, señor don Jerónimo, que en tanto que trae la cena leamos otro capítulo de la segunda parte de Don Quijote de la Mancha.

Apenas oyó su nombre don Quijote, cuando se puso en pie, y con oído alerta escuchó lo que dél trataban, y oyó que el tal don Jerónimo referido respondió:

-¿Para qué quiere vuestra merced, señor don Juan, que leamos estos disparates? Y el que hubiere leído la primera parte de la historia de don Quijote de la Mancha no es posible que pueda tener gusto en leer esta segunda.

-Con todo eso -dijo el don Juan-, será bien leerla, pues no hay libro tan malo que no tenga alguna cosa buena. Lo que a mí en éste más desplace es que pinta a don Quijote ya desenamorado de Dulcinea del Toboso.

Oyendo lo cual don Quijote, lleno de ira y de despecho, alzó la voz y dijo:

-Quienquiera que dijere que don Quijote de la Mancha ha olvidado, ni puede olvidar, a Dulcinea del Toboso, yo le haré entender con armas iguales que va muy lejos de la verdad; porque la sin par Dulcinea del Toboso ni puede ser olvidada, ni en don Quijote puede caber olvido: su blasón es la firmeza, y su profesión, el guardarla con suavidad y sin hacerse fuerza alguna.

-¿Quién es el que nos responde? -respondieron del otro aposento.

-¿Quién ha de ser -respondió Sancho-sino el mismo don Quijote de la Mancha, que hará bueno cuanto ha dicho, y aun cuanto dijere?; que al buen pagador no le duelen prendas.

Apenas hubo dicho esto Sancho, cuando entraron por la puerta de su aposento dos caballeros, que tales lo parecían, y uno dellos echando los brazos al cuello de don Quijote, le dijo:

-Ni vuestra presencia puede desmentir vuestro nombre, ni vuestro nombre puede no acreditar vuestra presencia: sin duda, vos, señor, sois el verdadero don Quijote de la Mancha, norte y lucero de la andante caballería, a despecho y pesar del que ha querido usurpar vuestro nombre y aniquilar vuestras hazañas, como lo ha hecho el autor deste libro que aquí os entrego.

Y, poniéndole un libro en las manos, que traía su compañero, le tomó don Quijote, y, sin responder palabra, comenzó a hojearle, y de allí a un poco se le volvió, diciendo:

-En esto poco que he visto he hallado tres cosas en este autor dignas de reprehensión. La primera es algunas palabras que he leído en el prólogo; la otra, que el lenguaje es aragonés, porque tal vez escribe sin artículos, y la tercera, que más le confirma por ignorante, es que yerra y se desvía de la verdad en lo más principal de la historia; porque aquí dice que la mujer de Sancho Panza mi escudero se llama Mari Gutiérrez, y no llama tal, sino Teresa Panza; y quien en esta parte tan principal yerra, bien se podrá temer que yerra en todas las demás de la historia.

A esto dijo Sancho:

-¡Donosa cosa de historiador! ¡Por cierto, bien debe de estar en el cuento de nuestros sucesos, pues llama a Teresa Panza, mi mujer, Mari Gutiérrez! Torne a tomar el libro, señor, y mire si ando yo por ahí y si me ha mudado el nombre.

-Por lo que he oído hablar, amigo -dijo don Jerónimo-, sin duda debéis de ser Sancho Panza, el escudero del señor don Quijote.

-Sí soy -respondió Sancho-, y me precio dello.

-Pues a fe -dijo el caballero-que no os trata este autor moderno con la limpieza que en vuestra persona se muestra: píntaos comedor, y simple, y no nada gracioso, y muy otro del Sancho que en la primera parte de la historia de vuestro amo se describe.

-Dios se lo perdone -dijo Sancho-. Dejárame en mi rincón, sin acordarse de mí, porque quien las sabe las tañe, y bien se está San Pedro en Roma.

Los dos caballeros pidieron a don Quijote se pasase a su estancia a cenar con ellos, que bien sabían que en aquella venta no había cosas pertenecientes para su persona. Don Quijote, que siempre fue comedido, condecendió con su demanda y cenó con ellos; quedóse Sancho con la olla con mero mixto imperio; sentóse en cabecera de mesa, y con él el ventero, que no menos que Sancho estaba de sus manos y de sus uñas aficionado.

En el discurso de la cena preguntó don Juan a don Quijote qué nuevas tenía de la señora Dulcinea del Toboso: si se había casado, si estaba parida o preñada, o si, estando en su entereza, se acordaba -guardando su honestidad y buen decoro- de los amorosos pensamientos del señor don Quijote. A lo que él respondió:

-Dulcinea se está entera, y mis pensamientos, más firmes que nunca; las correspondencias, en su sequedad antigua; su hermosura, en la de una soez labradora transformada.

Y luego les fue contando punto por punto el encanto de la señora Dulcinea, y lo que le había sucedido en la cueva de Montesinos, con la orden que el sabio Merlín le había dado para desencantarla, que fue la de los azotes de Sancho.

Sumo fue el contento que los dos caballeros recibieron de oír contar a don Quijote los estraños sucesos de su historia, y así quedaron admirados de sus disparates como del elegante modo con que los contaba. Aquí le tenían por discreto, y allí se les deslizaba por mentecato, sin saber determinarse qué grado le darían entre la discreción y la locura.

Acabó de cenar Sancho, y, dejando hecho equis al ventero, se pasó a la estancia de su amo; y, en entrando, dijo:

-Que me maten, señores, si el autor deste libro que vuestas mercedes tienen quiere que no comamos buenas migas juntos; yo querría que, ya que me llama comilón, como vuestas mercedes dicen, no me llamase también borracho.

-Sí llama -dijo don Jerónimo-, pero no me acuerdo en qué manera, aunque sé que son malsonantes las razones, y además, mentirosas, según yo echo de ver en la fisonomía del buen Sancho que está presente.

-Créanme vuestas mercedes -dijo Sancho-que el Sancho y el don Quijote de esa historia deben de ser otros que los que andan en aquella que compuso Cide Hamete Benengeli, que somos nosotros: mi amo, valiente, discreto y enamorado; y yo, simple gracioso, y no comedor ni borracho.

-Yo así lo creo -dijo don Juan-; y si fuera posible, se había de mandar que ninguno fuera osado a tratar de las cosas del gran don Quijote, si no fuese Cide Hamete, su primer autor, bien así como mandó Alejandro que ninguno fuese osado a retratarle sino Apeles.

-Retráteme el que quisiere -dijo don Quijote-, pero no me maltrate; que muchas veces suele caerse la paciencia cuando la cargan de injurias.

-Ninguna -dijo don Juan-se le puede hacer al señor don Quijote de quien él no se pueda vengar, si no la repara en el escudo de su paciencia, que, a mi parecer, es fuerte y grande.

En estas y otras pláticas se pasó gran parte de la noche; y, aunque don Juan quisiera que don Quijote leyera más del libro, por ver lo que discantaba, no lo pudieron acabar con él, diciendo que él lo daba por leído y lo confirmaba por todo necio, y que no quería, si acaso llegase a noticia de su autor que le había tenido en sus manos, se alegrase con pensar que le había leído; pues de las cosas obscenas y torpes, los pensamientos se han de apartar, cuanto más los ojos. Preguntáronle que adónde llevaba determinado su viaje. Respondió que a Zaragoza, a hallarse en las justas del arnés, que en aquella ciudad suelen hacerse todos los años. Díjole don Juan que aquella nueva historia contaba como don Quijote, sea quien se quisiere, se había hallado en ella en una sortija, falta de invención, pobre de letras, pobrísima de libreas, aunque rica de simplicidades.

-Por el mismo caso -respondió don Quijote-, no pondré los pies en Zaragoza, y así sacaré a la plaza del mundo la mentira dese historiador moderno, y echarán de ver las gentes como yo no soy el don Quijote que él dice.

-Hará muy bien -dijo don Jerónimo-; y otras justas hay en Barcelona, donde podrá el señor don Quijote mostrar su valor.

-Así lo pienso hacer -dijo don Quijote-; y vuestas mercedes me den licencia, pues ya es hora para irme al lecho, y me tengan y pongan en el número de sus mayores amigos y servidores.

-Y a mí también -dijo Sancho-: quizá seré bueno para algo.

Con esto se despidieron, y don Quijote y Sancho se retiraron a su aposento, dejando a don Juan y a don Jerónimo admirados de ver la mezcla que había hecho de su discreción y de su locura; y verdaderamente creyeron que éstos eran los verdaderos don Quijote y Sancho, y no los que describía su autor aragonés.

Madrugó don Quijote, y, dando golpes al tabique del otro aposento, se despidió de sus huéspedes. Pagó Sancho al ventero magníficamente, y aconsejóle que alabase menos la provisión de su venta, o la tuviese más proveída.

Capítulo LX

De lo que sucedió a don Quijote yendo a Barcelona

ERA FRESCA la mañana, y daba muestras de serlo asimesmo el día en que don Quijote salió de la venta, informándose primero cuál era el más derecho camino para ir a Barcelona sin tocar en Zaragoza: tal era el deseo que tenía de sacar mentiroso aquel nuevo historiador que tanto decían que le vituperaba.

Sucedió, pues, que en más de seis días no le sucedió cosa digna de ponerse en escritura, al cabo de los cuales, yendo fuera de camino, le tomó la noche entre unas espesas encinas o alcornoques; que en esto no guarda la puntualidad Cide Hamete que en otras cosas suele.

Apeáronse de sus bestias amo y mozo, y, acomodándose a los troncos de los árboles, Sancho, que había merendado aquel día, se dejó entrar de rondón por las puertas del sueño; pero don Quijote, a quien desvelaban sus imaginaciones mucho más que la hambre, no podía pegar sus ojos; antes iba y venía con el pensamiento por mil géneros de lugares. Ya le parecía hallarse en la cueva de Montesinos; ya ver brincar y subir sobre su pollina a la convertida en labradora Dulcinea; ya que le sonaban en los oídos las palabras del sabio Merlín que le referían las condiciones y diligencias que se habían de hacer y tener en el desencanto de Dulcinea. Desesperábase de ver la flojedad y caridad poca de Sancho su escudero, pues, a lo que creía, solos cinco azotes se había dado, número desigual y pequeño para los infinitos que le faltaban; y desto recibió tanta pesadumbre y enojo, que hizo este discurso:

-Si nudo gordiano cortó el Magno Alejandro, diciendo: «Tanto monta cortar como desatar», y no por eso dejó de ser universal señor de toda la Asia, ni más ni menos podría suceder ahora en el desencanto de Dulcinea, si yo azotase a Sancho a pesar suyo; que si la condición deste remedio está en que Sancho reciba los tres mil y tantos azotes, ¿qué se me da a mí que se los dé él, o que se los dé otro, pues la sustancia está en que él los reciba, lleguen por do llegaren?

Con esta imaginación se llegó a Sancho, habiendo primero tomado las riendas de Rocinante, y acomodádaslas en modo que pudiese azotarle con ellas, comenzóle a quitar las cintas, que es opinión que no tenía más que la delantera, en que se sustentaban los greguescos; pero, apenas hubo llegado, cuando Sancho despertó en todo su acuerdo, y dijo:

-¿Qué es esto? ¿Quién me toca y desencinta?

-Yo soy -respondió don Quijote-, que vengo a suplir tus faltas y a remediar mis trabajos: véngote a azotar, Sancho, y a descargar, en parte, la deuda a que te obligaste. Dulcinea perece; tú vives en descuido; yo muero deseando; y así, desatácate por tu voluntad, que la mía es de darte en esta soledad, por lo menos, dos mil azotes.

-Eso no -dijo Sancho-; vuesa merced se esté quedo; si no, por Dios verdadero que nos han de oír los sordos. Los azotes a que yo me obligué han de ser voluntarios, y no por fuerza, y ahora no tengo gana de azotarme; basta que doy a vuesa merced mi palabra de vapularme y mosquearme cuando en voluntad me viniere.

-No hay dejarlo a tu cortesía, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, porque eres duro de corazón, y, aunque villano, blando de carnes.

Y así, procuraba y pugnaba por desenlazarle. Viendo lo cual Sancho Panza, se puso en pie, y, arremetiendo a su amo, se abrazó con él a brazo partido, y, echándole una zancadilla, dio con él en el suelo boca arriba; púsole la rodilla derecha sobre el pecho, y con las manos le tenía las manos, de modo que ni le dejaba rodear ni alentar. Don Quijote le decía:

-¿Cómo, traidor? ¿Contra tu amo y señor natural te desmandas? ¿Con quien te da su pan te atreves?

-Ni quito rey, ni pongo rey -respondió Sancho-, sino ayúdome a mí, que soy mi señor. Vuesa merced me prometa que se estará quedo, y no tratará de azotarme por agora, que yo le dejaré libre y desembarazado; donde no, aquí morirás, traidor,

enemigo de doña Sancha.

Prometióselo don Quijote, y juró por vida de sus pensamientos no tocarle en el pelo de la ropa, y que dejaría en toda su voluntad y albedrío el azotarse cuando quisiese.

Levantóse Sancho, y desvióse de aquel lugar un buen espacio; y, yendo a arrimarse a otro árbol, sintió que le tocaban en la cabeza, y, alzando las manos, topó con dos pies de persona, con zapatos y calzas. Tembló de miedo; acudió a otro árbol, y sucedióle lo mismo. Dio voces llamando a don Quijote que le favoreciese. Hízolo así don Quijote, y, preguntándole qué le había sucedido y de qué tenía miedo, le respondió Sancho que todos aquellos árboles estaban llenos de pies y de piernas humanas. Tentólos don Quijote, y cayó luego en la cuenta de lo que podía ser, y díjole a Sancho:

-No tienes de qué tener miedo, porque estos pies y piernas que tientas y no vees, sin duda son de algunos forajidos y bandoleros que en estos árboles están ahorcados; que por aquí los suele ahorcar la justicia cuando los coge, de veinte en veinte y de treinta en treinta; por donde me doy a entender que debo de estar cerca de Barcelona.

Y así era la verdad como él lo había imaginado.

Al parecer alzaron los ojos, y vieron los racimos de aquellos árboles, que eran cuerpos de bandoleros. Ya, en esto, amanecía, y si los muertos los habían espantado, no menos los atribularon más de cuarenta bandoleros vivos que de improviso les rodearon, diciéndoles en lengua catalana que estuviesen quedos, y se detuviesen, hasta que llegase su capitán.

Hallóse don Quijote a pie, su caballo sin freno, su lanza arrimada a un árbol, y, finalmente, sin defensa alguna; y así, tuvo por bien de cruzar las manos e inclinar la cabeza, guardándose para mejor sazón y coyuntura.

Acudieron los bandoleros a espulgar al rucio, y a no dejarle ninguna cosa de cuantas en las alforjas y la maleta traía; y avínole bien a Sancho que en una ventrera que tenía ceñida venían los escudos del duque y los que habían sacado de su tierra, y, con todo eso, aquella buena gente le escardara y le mirara hasta lo que entre el cuero y la carne tuviera escondido, si no llegara en aquella sazón su capitán, el cual mostró ser de hasta edad de treinta y cuatro años, robusto, más que de mediana proporción, de mirar grave y color morena. Venía sobre un poderoso caballo, vestida la acerada cota, y con cuatro pistoletas -que en aquella tierra se llaman pedreñales-a los lados. Vio que sus escuderos, que así llaman a los que andan en aquel ejercicio, iban a despojar a Sancho Panza; mandóles que no lo hiciesen, y fue luego obedecido; y así se escapó la ventrera. Admiróle ver lanza arrimada al árbol, escudo en el suelo, y a don Quijote armado y pensativo, con la más triste y melancólica figura que pudiera formar la misma tristeza. Llegóse a él diciéndole:

-No estéis tan triste, buen hombre, porque no habéis caído en las manos de algún cruel Osiris, sino en las de Roque Guinart, que tienen más de compasivas que de rigurosas.

-No es mi tristeza -respondió don Quijote-haber caído en tu poder, ¡oh valeroso Roque, cuya fama no hay límites en la tierra que la encierren!, sino por haber sido tal mi descuido, que me hayan cogido tus soldados sin el freno, estando yo obligado, según la orden de la andante caballería, que profeso, a vivir continuo alerta, siendo a todas horas centinela de mí mismo; porque te hago saber, ¡oh gran Roque!, que si me hallaran sobre mi caballo, con mi lanza y con mi escudo, no les fuera muy fácil rendirme, porque yo soy don Quijote de la Mancha, aquel que de sus hazañas tiene lleno todo el orbe.

Luego Roque Guinart conoció que la enfermedad de don Quijote tocaba más en locura que en valentía, y, aunque algunas veces le había oído nombrar, nunca tuvo por verdad sus hechos, ni se pudo persuadir a que semejante humor reinase en corazón de hombre; y holgóse en extremo de haberle encontrado, para tocar de cerca lo que de lejos dél había oído; y así, le dijo:

-Valeroso caballero, no os despechéis ni tengáis a siniestra fortuna ésta en que os halláis, que podía ser que en estos tropiezos vuestra torcida suerte se enderezase; que el cielo, por estraños y nunca vistos rodeos, de los hombres no imaginados, suele levantar los caídos y enriquecer los pobres.

Ya le iba a dar las gracias don Quijote, cuando sintieron a sus espaldas un ruido como de tropel de caballos, y no era sino un solo, sobre el cual venía a toda furia un mancebo, al parecer de hasta veinte años, vestido de damasco verde, con pasamanos de oro, greguescos y saltaembarca, con sombrero terciado, a la valona, botas enceradas y justas, espuelas, daga y espada doradas, una escopeta pequeña en las manos y dos pistolas a los lados. Al ruido volvió Roque la cabeza y vio esta hermosa figura, la cual, en llegando a él, dijo:

-En tu busca venía, ¡oh valeroso Roque!, para hallar en ti, si no remedio, a lo menos alivio en mi desdicha; y, por no tenerte suspenso, porque sé que no me has conocido, quiero decirte quién soy: y soy Claudia Jerónima, hija de Simón Forte, tu singular amigo y enemigo particular de Clauquel Torrellas, que asimismo lo es tuyo, por ser uno de los de tu contrario bando; y ya sabes que este Torrellas tiene un hijo que don Vicente Torrellas se llama, o, a lo menos, se llamaba no ha dos horas. Éste, pues, por abreviar el cuento de mi desventura, te diré en breves palabras la que me ha causado. Viome, requebróme, escuchéle, enamoréme, a hurto de mi padre; porque no hay mujer, por retirada que esté y recatada que sea, a quien no le sobre tiempo para poner en ejecución y efecto sus atropellados deseos. Finalmente, él me prometió de ser mi esposo, y yo le di la palabra de ser suya, sin que en obras pasásemos adelante. Supe ayer que, olvidado de lo que me debía, se casaba con otra, y que esta mañana iba a desposarse, nueva que me turbó el sentido y acabó la paciencia; y, por no estar mi padre en el lugar, le tuve yo de ponerme en el traje que vees, y apresurando el paso a este caballo, alcancé a don Vicente obra de una legua de aquí; y, sin ponerme a dar quejas ni a oír disculpas, le disparé estas escopetas, y, por añadidura, estas dos pistolas; y, a lo que creo, le debí de encerrar más de dos balas en el cuerpo, abriéndole puertas por donde envuelta en su sangre saliese mi honra. Allí le dejo entre sus criados, que no osaron ni pudieron ponerse en su defensa. Vengo a buscarte para que me pases a Francia, donde tengo parientes con quien viva, y asimesmo a rogarte defiendas a mi padre, porque los muchos de don Vicente no se atrevan a tomar en él desaforada venganza.

Roque, admirado de la gallardía, bizarría, buen talle y suceso de la hermosa Claudia, le dijo:

-Ven, señora, y vamos a ver si es muerto tu enemigo, que después veremos lo que más te importare.

Don Quijote, que estaba escuchando atentamente lo que Claudia había dicho y lo que Roque Guinart respondió, dijo:

-No tiene nadie para qué tomar trabajo en defender a esta señora, que lo tomo yo a mi cargo: denme mi caballo y mis armas, y espérenme aquí, que yo iré a buscar a ese caballero, y, muerto o vivo, le haré cumplir la palabra prometida a tanta belleza.

-Nadie dude de esto -dijo Sancho-, porque mi señor tiene muy buena mano para casamentero, pues no ha muchos días que hizo casar a otro que también negaba a otra doncella su palabra; y si no fuera porque los encantadores que le persiguen le mudaron su verdadera figura en la de un lacayo, ésta fuera la hora que ya la tal doncella no lo fuera.

Roque, que atendía más a pensar en el suceso de la hermosa Claudia que en las razones de amo y mozo, no las entendió; y, mandando a sus escuderos que volviesen a Sancho todo cuanto le habían quitado del rucio, mandándoles asimesmo que se retirasen a la parte donde aquella noche habían estado alojados, y luego se partió con Claudia a toda priesa a buscar al herido, o muerto, don Vicente. Llegaron al lugar donde le encontró Claudia, y no hallaron en él sino recién derramada sangre; pero, tendiendo la vista por todas partes, descubrieron por un recuesto arriba alguna gente, y diéronse a entender, como era la verdad, que debía ser don Vicente, a quien sus criados, o muerto o vivo, llevaban, o para curarle, o para enterrarle; diéronse priesa a alcanzarlos, que, como iban de espacio, con facilidad lo hicieron.

Hallaron a don Vicente en los brazos de sus criados, a quien con cansada y debilitada voz rogaba que le dejasen allí morir, porque el dolor de las heridas no consentía que más adelante pasase.

Arrojáronse de los caballos Claudia y Roque, llegó a él, temieron los criados la presencia de Roque, y Claudia se turbó en ver la de don Vicente; y así, entre enternecida y rigurosa, se llegó a él, y asiéndole de las manos, le dijo:

-Si tú me dieras éstas, conforme a nuestro concierto, nunca tú te vieras en este paso.

Abrió los casi cerrados ojos el herido caballero, y, conociendo a Claudia, le dijo:

-Bien veo, hermosa y engañada señora, que tú has sido la que me has muerto: pena no merecida ni debida a mis deseos, con los cuales, ni con mis obras, jamás quise ni supe ofenderte.

-Luego, ¿no es verdad -dijo Claudia-que ibas esta mañana a desposarte con Leonora, la hija del rico Balvastro?

-No, por cierto -respondió don Vicente-; mi mala fortuna te debió de llevar estas nuevas, para que, celosa, me quitases la vida, la cual, pues la dejo en tus manos y en tus brazos, tengo mi suerte por venturosa. Y, para asegurarte desta verdad, aprieta la mano y recíbeme por esposo, si quisieres, que no tengo otra mayor satisfacción que darte del agravio que piensas que de mí has recibido.

Apretóle la mano Claudia, y apretósele a ella el corazón, de manera que sobre la sangre y pecho de don Vicente se quedó desmayada, y a él le tomó un mortal parasismo. Confuso estaba Roque, y no sabía qué hacerse. Acudieron los criados a buscar agua que echarles en los rostros, y trujéronla, con que se los bañaron. Volvió de su desmayo Claudia, pero no de su parasismo don Vicente, porque se le acabó la vida. Visto lo cual de Claudia, habiéndose enterado que ya su dulce esposo no vivía, rompió los aires con suspiros, hirió los cielos con quejas, maltrató sus cabellos, entregándolos al viento, afeó su rostro con sus propias manos, con todas las muestras de dolor y sentimiento que de un lastimado pecho pudieran imaginarse.

-¡Oh cruel e inconsiderada mujer -decía-, con qué facilidad te moviste a poner en ejecución tan mal pensamiento! ¡Oh fuerza rabiosa de los celos, a qué desesperado fin conducís a quien os da acogida en su pecho! ¡Oh esposo mío, cuya desdichada suerte, por ser prenda mía, te ha llevado del tálamo a la sepultura!

Tales y tan tristes eran las quejas de Claudia, que sacaron las lágrimas de los ojos de Roque, no acostumbrados a verterlas en ninguna ocasión. Lloraban los criados, desmayábase a cada paso Claudia, y todo aquel circuito parecía campo de tristeza y lugar de desgracia. Finalmente, Roque Guinart ordenó a los criados de don Vicente que llevasen su cuerpo al lugar de su padre, que estaba allí cerca, para que le diesen sepultura. Claudia dijo a Roque que querría irse a un monasterio donde era abadesa una tía suya, en el cual pensaba acabar la vida, de otro mejor esposo y más eterno acompañada. Alabóle Roque su buen propósito, ofreciósele de acompañarla hasta donde quisiese, y de defender a su padre de los parientes y de todo el mundo, si ofenderle quisiese. No quiso su compañía Claudia, en ninguna manera, y, agradeciendo sus ofrecimientos con las mejores razones que supo, se despidió dél llorando. Los criados de don Vicente llevaron su cuerpo, y Roque se volvió a los suyos, y este fin tuvieron los amores de Claudia Jerónima. Pero, ¿qué mucho, si tejieron la trama de su lamentable historia las fuerzas invencibles y rigurosas de los celos?

Halló Roque Guinart a sus escuderos en la parte donde les había ordenado, y a don Quijote entre ellos, sobre Rocinante, haciéndoles una plática en que les persuadía dejasen aquel modo de vivir tan peligroso, así para el alma como para el cuerpo; pero, como los más eran gascones, gente rústica y desbaratada, no les entraba bien la plática de don Quijote. Llegado que fue Roque, preguntó a Sancho Panza si le habían vuelto y restituido las alhajas y preseas que los suyos del rucio le habían quitado. Sancho respondió que sí, sino que le faltaban tres tocadores, que valían tres ciudades.

-¿Qué es lo que dices, hombre? -dijo uno de los presentes-, que yo los tengo, y no valen tres reales.

-Así es -dijo don Quijote-, pero estímalo mi escudero en lo que ha dicho, por habérmelos dado quien me los dio.

Mandóselos volver al punto Roque Guinart, y, mandando poner los suyos en ala, mandó traer allí delante todos los vestidos, joyas, y dineros, y todo aquello que desde la última repartición habían robado; y, haciendo brevemente el tanteo, volviendo lo no repartible y reduciéndolo a dineros, lo repartió por toda su compañía, con tanta legalidad y prudencia que no pasó un punto ni defraudó nada de la justicia distributiva. Hecho esto, con lo cual todos quedaron contentos, satisfechos y pagados, dijo Roque a don Quijote:

-Si no se guardase esta puntualidad con éstos, no se podría vivir con ellos.

A lo que dijo Sancho:

-Según lo que aquí he visto, es tan buena la justicia, que es necesaria que se use aun entre los mismos ladrones.

Oyólo un escudero, y enarboló el mocho de un arcabuz, con el cual, sin duda, le abriera la cabeza a Sancho, si Roque Guinart no le diera voces que se detuviese. Pasmóse Sancho, y propuso de no descoser los labios en tanto que entre aquella gente estuviese.

Llegó, en esto, uno o algunos de aquellos escuderos que estaban puestos por centinelas por los caminos para ver la gente que por ellos venía y dar aviso a su mayor de lo que pasaba, y éste dijo:

-Señor, no lejos de aquí, por el camino que va a Barcelona, viene un gran tropel de gente.

A lo que respondió Roque:

-¿Has echado de ver si son de los que nos buscan, o de los que nosotros buscamos?

-No, sino de los que buscamos -respondió el escudero.

-Pues salid todos -replicó Roque-, y traédmelos aquí luego, sin que se os escape ninguno.

Hiciéronlo así, y, quedándose solos don Quijote, Sancho y Roque, aguardaron a ver lo que los escuderos traían; y, en este entretanto, dijo Roque a don Quijote:

-Nueva manera de vida le debe de parecer al señor don Quijote la nuestra, nuevas aventuras, nuevos sucesos, y todos peligrosos; y no me maravillo que así le parezca, porque realmente le confieso que no hay modo de vivir más inquieto ni más sobresaltado que el nuestro. A mí me han puesto en él no sé qué deseos de venganza, que tienen fuerza de turbar los más sosegados corazones; yo, de mi natural, soy compasivo y bien intencionado; pero, como tengo dicho, el querer vengarme de un agravio que se me hizo, así da con todas mis buenas inclinaciones en tierra, que persevero en este estado, a despecho y pesar de lo que entiendo; y, como un abismo llama a otro y un pecado a otro pecado, hanse eslabonado las venganzas de manera que no sólo las mías, pero las ajenas tomo a mi cargo; pero Dios es servido de que, aunque me veo en la mitad del laberinto de mis confusiones, no pierdo la esperanza de salir dél a puerto seguro.

Admirado quedó don Quijote de oír hablar a Roque tan buenas y concertadas razones, porque él se pensaba que, entre los de oficios semejantes de robar, matar y saltar no podía haber alguno que tuviese buen discurso, y respondióle:

-Señor Roque, el principio de la salud está en conocer la enfermedad y en querer tomar el enfermo las medicinas que el médico le ordena: vuestra merced está enfermo, conoce su dolencia, y el cielo, o Dios, por mejor decir, que es nuestro médico, le aplicará medicinas que le sanen, las cuales suelen sanar poco a poco y no de repente y por milagro; y más, que los pecadores discretos están más cerca de enmendarse que los simples; y, pues vuestra merced ha mostrado en sus razones su prudencia, no hay sino tener buen ánimo y esperar mejoría de la enfermedad de su conciencia; y si vuestra merced quiere ahorrar camino y ponerse con facilidad en el de su salvación, véngase conmigo, que yo le enseñaré a ser caballero andante, donde se pasan tantos trabajos y desventuras que, tomándolas por penitencia, en dos paletas le pondrán en el cielo.

Rióse Roque del consejo de don Quijote, a quien, mudando plática, contó el trágico suceso de Claudia Jerónima, de que le pesó en extremo a Sancho, que no le había parecido mal la belleza, desenvoltura y brío de la moza.

Llegaron, en esto, los escuderos de la presa, trayendo consigo dos caballeros a caballo, y dos peregrinos a pie, y un coche de mujeres con hasta seis criados, que a pie y a caballo las acompañaban, con otros dos mozos de mulas que los caballeros traían. Cogieronlos los escuderos en medio, guardando vencidos y vencedores gran silencio, esperando a que el gran Roque Guinart hablase, el cual preguntó a los caballeros que quién eran y adónde iban, y qué dinero llevaban. Uno dellos le respondió:

-Señor, nosotros somos dos capitanes de infantería española; tenemos nuestras compañías en Nápoles y vamos a embarcarnos en cuatro galeras, que dicen están en Barcelona con orden de pasar a Sicilia; llevamos hasta docientos o trecientos escudos, con que, a nuestro parecer, vamos ricos y contentos, pues la estrechez ordinaria de los soldados no permite mayores tesoros.

Preguntó Roque a los peregrinos lo mismo que a los capitanes; fuele respondido que iban a embarcarse para pasar a Roma, y que entre entrambos podían llevar hasta sesenta reales. Quiso saber también quién iba en el coche, y adónde, y el dinero que llevaban; y uno de los de a caballo dijo:

-Mi señora doña Guiomar de Quiñones, mujer del regente de la Vicaría de Nápoles, con una hija pequeña, una doncella y una dueña, son las que van en el coche; acompañámosla seis criados, y los dineros son seiscientos escudos.

-De modo -dijo Roque Guinart-, que ya tenemos aquí novecientos escudos y sesenta reales; mis soldados deben de ser hasta sesenta; mírese a cómo le cabe a cada uno, porque yo soy mal contador.

Oyendo decir esto los salteadores, levantaron la voz, diciendo:

-¡Viva Roque Guinart muchos años, a pesar de los lladres que su perdición procuran!

Mostraron afligirse los capitanes, entristeciéndose la señora regenta, y no se holgaron nada los peregrinos, viendo la confiscación de sus bienes. Túvolos así un rato suspensos Roque, pero no quiso que pasase adelante su tristeza, que ya se podía conocer a tiro de arcabuz, y, volviéndose a los capitanes, dijo:

-Vuestas mercedes, señores capitanes, por cortesía, sean servidos de prestarme sesenta escudos, y la señora regenta ochenta, para contentar esta escuadra que me acompaña, porque el abad, de lo que canta yanta, y luego puédense ir su camino libre y desembarazadamente, con un salvoconduto que yo les daré, para que, si toparen otras de algunas escuadras mías que tengo divididas por estos contornos, no les hagan daño; que no es mi intención de agraviar a soldados ni a mujer alguna, especialmente a las que son principales.

Infinitas y bien dichas fueron las razones con que los capitanes agradecieron a Roque su cortesía y liberalidad, que, por tal la tuvieron, en dejarles su mismo dinero. La señora doña Guiomar de Quiñones se quiso arrojar del coche para besar los pies y las manos del gran Roque, pero él no lo consintió en ninguna manera; antes le pidió perdón del agravio que le hacía, forzado de cumplir con las obligaciones precisas de su mal oficio. Mandó la señora regenta a un criado suyo diese luego los ochenta escudos que le habían repartido, y ya los capitanes habían desembolsado los sesenta. Iban los peregrinos a dar toda su miseria, pero Roque les dijo que se estuviesen quedos, y volviéndose a los suyos, les dijo:

-Destos escudos dos tocan a cada uno, y sobran veinte: los diez se den a estos peregrinos, y los otros diez a este buen escudero, porque pueda decir bien de esta aventura.

Y, trayéndole aderezo de escribir, de que siempre andaba proveído, Roque les dio por escrito un salvoconduto para los mayores de sus escuadras, y, despidiéndose dellos, los dejó ir libres, y admirados de su nobleza, de su gallarda disposición y extraño proceder, teniéndole más por un Alejandro Magno que por ladrón conocido. Uno de los escuderos dijo en su lengua gascona y catalana:

-Este nuestro capitán más es para frade que para bandolero: si de aquí adelante quisiere mostrarse liberal séalo con su hacienda y no con la nuestra.

No lo dijo tan paso el desventurado que dejase de oírlo Roque, el cual, echando mano a la espada, le abrió la cabeza casi en dos partes, diciéndole:

-Desta manera castigo yo a los deslenguados y atrevidos.

Pasmáronse todos, y ninguno le osó decir palabra: tanta era la obediencia que le tenían.

Apartóse Roque a una parte y escribió una carta a un su amigo, a Barcelona, dándole aviso como estaba consigo el famoso don Quijote de la Mancha, aquel caballero andante de quien tantas cosas se decían; y que le hacía saber que era el más gracioso y el más entendido hombre del mundo, y que de allí a cuatro días, que era el de San Juan Bautista, se le pondría en mitad de la playa de la ciudad, armado de todas sus armas, sobre Rocinante, su caballo, y a su escudero Sancho sobre un asno, y que diese noticia desto a sus amigos los Niarros, para que con él se solazasen; que él quisiera que carecieran deste gusto los Cadells, sus contrarios, pero que esto era imposible, a causa que las locuras y discreciones de don Quijote y los donaires de su escudero Sancho Panza no podían dejar de dar gusto general a todo el mundo. Despachó estas cartas con uno de sus escuderos, que, mudando el traje de bandolero en el de un labrador, entró en Barcelona y la dio a quien iba.

Capítulo LXI

De lo que le sucedió a don Quijote en la entrada de Barcelona, con otras cosas que tienen más de lo verdadero que de lo discreto

TRES DÍAS y tres noches estuvo don Quijote con Roque, y si estuviera trecientos años, no le faltara qué mirar y admirar en el modo de su vida: aquí amanecían, acullá comían; unas veces huían, sin saber de quién, y otras esperaban, sin saber a quién. Dormían en pie, interrompiendo el sueño, mudándose de un lugar a otro. Todo era poner espías, escuchar centinelas, soplar las cuerdas de los arcabuces, aunque traían pocos, porque todos se servían de pedreñales. Roque pasaba las noches apartado de los suyos, en partes y lugares donde ellos no pudiesen saber dónde estaba; porque los muchos bandos que el visorrey de Barcelona había echado sobre su vida le traían inquieto y temeroso, y no se osaba fiar de ninguno, temiendo que los mismos suyos, o le habían de matar, o entregar a la justicia: vida, por cierto, miserable y enfadosa.

En fin, por caminos desusados, por atajos y sendas encubiertas, partieron Roque, don Quijote y Sancho con otros seis escuderos a Barcelona. Llegaron a su playa la víspera de San Juan en la noche, y, abrazando Roque a don Quijote y a Sancho, a quien dio los diez escudos prometidos, que hasta entonces no se los había dado, los dejó, con mil ofrecimientos que de la una a la otra parte se hicieron.

Volvióse Roque; quedóse don Quijote esperando el día, así, a caballo, como estaba, y no tardó mucho cuando comenzó a descubrirse por los balcones del Oriente la faz de la blanca aurora, alegrando las yerbas y las flores, en lugar de alegrar el oído; aunque al mismo instante alegraron también el oído el son de muchas chirimías y atabales, ruido de cascabeles, «¡trapa, trapa, aparta, aparta!» de corredores, que, al parecer, de la ciudad salían. Dio lugar la aurora al sol, que, un rostro mayor que el de una rodela, por el más bajo horizonte, poco a poco, se iba levantando.

Tendieron don Quijote y Sancho la vista por todas partes: vieron el mar, hasta entonces dellos no visto; parecióles espaciosísimo y largo, harto más que las lagunas de Ruidera, que en la Mancha habían visto; vieron las galeras que estaban en la playa, las cuales, abatiendo las tiendas, se descubrieron llenas de flámulas y gallardetes, que tremolaban al viento y besaban y barrían el agua; dentro sonaban clarines, trompetas y chirimías, que cerca y lejos llenaban el aire de suaves y belicosos acentos. Comenzaron a moverse y a hacer modo de escaramuza por las sosegadas aguas, correspondiéndoles casi al mismo modo infinitos caballeros que de la ciudad sobre hermosos caballos y con vistosas libreas salían. Los soldados de las galeras disparaban infinita artillería, a quien respondían los que estaban en las murallas y fuertes de la ciudad, y la artillería gruesa con espantoso estruendo rompía los vientos, a quien respondían los cañones de crujía de las galeras. El mar alegre, la tierra jocunda, el aire claro, sólo tal vez turbio del humo de la artillería, parece que iba infundiendo y engendrando gusto súbito en todas las gentes.

No podía imaginar Sancho cómo pudiesen tener tantos pies aquellos bultos que por el mar se movían. En esto, llegaron corriendo, con grita, lililíes y algazara, los de las libreas adonde don Quijote suspenso y atónito estaba, y uno dellos, que era el avisado de Roque, dijo en alta voz a don Quijote:

-Bien sea venido a nuestra ciudad el espejo, el farol, la estrella y el norte de toda la caballería andante, donde más largamente se contiene. Bien sea venido, digo, el valeroso don Quijote de la Mancha: no el falso, no el ficticio, no el apócrifo que en falsas historias estos días nos han mostrado, sino el verdadero, el legal y el fiel que nos describió Cide Hamete Benengeli, flor de los historiadores.

No respondió don Quijote palabra, ni los caballeros esperaron a que la respondiese, sino, volviéndose y revolviéndose con los demás que los seguían, comenzaron a hacer un revuelto caracol al derredor de don Quijote; el cual, volviéndose a Sancho, dijo:

-Éstos bien nos han conocido: yo apostaré que han leído nuestra historia y aun la del aragonés recién impresa.

Volvió otra vez el caballero que habló a don Quijote, y díjole:

-Vuesa merced, señor don Quijote, se venga con nosotros, que todos somos sus servidores y grandes amigos de Roque Guinart.

A lo que don Quijote respondió:

-Si cortesías engendran cortesías, la vuestra, señor caballero, es hija o parienta muy cercana de las del gran Roque. Llevadme do quisiéredes, que yo no tendré otra voluntad que la vuestra, y más si la queréis ocupar en vuestro servicio.

Con palabras no menos comedidas que éstas le respondió el caballero, y, encerrándole todos en medio, al son de las chirimías y de los atabales, se encaminaron con él a la ciudad, al entrar de la cual, el malo, que todo lo malo ordena, y los muchachos, que son más malos que el malo, dos dellos traviesos y atrevidos se entraron por toda la gente, y, alzando el uno de la cola del rucio y el otro la de Rocinante, les pusieron y encajaron sendos manojos de aliagas. Sintieron los pobres animales las nuevas espuelas, y, apretando las colas, aumentaron su disgusto, de manera que, dando mil corcovos, dieron con sus dueños en tierra. Don Quijote, corrido y afrentado, acudió a quitar el plumaje de la cola de su matalote, y Sancho, el de su rucio. Quisieran los que guiaban a don Quijote castigar el atrevimiento de los muchachos, y no fue posible, porque se encerraron entre más de otros mil que los seguían.

Volvieron a subir don Quijote y Sancho; con el mismo aplauso y música llegaron a la casa de su guía, que era grande y principal, en fin, como de caballero rico; donde le dejaremos por agora, porque así lo quiere Cide Hamete.

Capítulo LXII

Que trata de la aventura de la cabeza encantada, con otras niñerías que no pueden dejar de contarse

DON ANTONIO Moreno se llamaba el huésped de don Quijote, caballero rico y discreto, y amigo de holgarse a lo honesto y afable, el cual, viendo en su casa a don Quijote, andaba buscando modos como, sin su perjuicio, sacase a plaza sus locuras; porque no son burlas las que duelen, ni hay pasatiempos que valgan si son con daño de tercero. Lo primero que hizo fue hacer desarmar a don Quijote y sacarle a vistas con aquel su estrecho y acamuzado vestido -como ya otras veces le hemos descrito y pintado-a un balcón que salía a una calle de las más principales de la ciudad, a vista de las gentes y de los muchachos, que como a mona le miraban. Corrieron de nuevo delante dél los de las libreas, como si para él solo, no para alegrar aquel festivo día, se las hubieran puesto; y Sancho estaba contentísimo, por parecerle que se había hallado, sin saber cómo ni cómo no, otras bodas de Camacho, otra casa como la de don Diego de Miranda y otro castillo como el del duque.

Comieron aquel día con don Antonio algunos de sus amigos, honrando todos y tratando a don Quijote como a caballero andante, de lo cual, hueco y pomposo, no cabía en sí de contento. Los donaires de Sancho fueron tantos, que de su boca andaban como colgados todos los criados de casa y todos cuantos le oían. Estando a la mesa, dijo don Antonio a Sancho:

-Acá tenemos noticia, buen Sancho, que sois tan amigo de manjar blanco y de albondiguillas, que, si os sobran, las guardáis en el seno para el otro día.

-No, señor, no es así -respondió Sancho-, porque tengo más de limpio que de goloso, y mi señor don Quijote, que está delante, sabe bien que con un puño de bellotas, o de nueces, nos solemos pasar entrambos ocho días. Verdad es que si tal vez me sucede que me den la vaquilla, corro con la soguilla; quiero decir que como lo que me dan, y uso de los tiempos como los hallo; y quienquiera que hubiere dicho que yo soy comedor aventajado y no limpio, téngase por dicho que no acierta; y de otra manera dijera esto si no mirara a las barbas honradas que están a la mesa.

-Por cierto -dijo don Quijote-, que la parsimonia y limpieza con que Sancho come se puede escribir y grabar en láminas de bronce, para que quede en memoria eterna de los siglos venideros. Verdad es que, cuando él tiene hambre, parece algo tragón, porque come apriesa y masca a dos carrillos; pero la limpieza siempre la tiene en su punto, y en el tiempo que fue gobernador aprendió a comer a lo melindroso: tanto, que comía con tenedor las uvas y aun los granos de la granada.

-¡Cómo! -dijo don Antonio-. ¿Gobernador ha sido Sancho?

-Sí -respondió Sancho-, y de una ínsula llamada la Barataria. Diez días la goberné a pedir de boca; en ellos perdí el sosiego, y aprendí a despreciar todos los gobiernos del mundo; salí huyendo della, caí en una cueva, donde me tuve por muerto, de la cual salí vivo por milagro.

Contó don Quijote por menudo todo el suceso del gobierno de Sancho, con que dio gran gusto a los oyentes.

Levantados los manteles, y tomando don Antonio por la mano a don Quijote, se entró con él en un apartado aposento, en el cual no había otra cosa de adorno que una mesa, al parecer de jaspe, que sobre un pie de lo mismo se sostenía, sobre la cual estaba puesta, al modo de las cabezas de los emperadores romanos, de los pechos arriba, una que semejaba ser de bronce. Paseóse don Antonio con don Quijote por todo el aposento, rodeando muchas veces la mesa, después de lo cual dijo:

-Agora, señor don Quijote, que estoy enterado que no nos oye y escucha alguno, y está cerrada la puerta, quiero contar a vuestra merced una de las más raras aventuras, o, por mejor decir, novedades que imaginarse pueden, con condición que lo que a vuestra merced dijere lo ha de depositar en los últimos retretes del secreto.

-Así lo juro -respondió don Quijote-, y aun le echaré una losa encima, para más seguridad; porque quiero que sepa vuestra merced, señor don Antonio -que ya sabía su nombre-, que está hablando con quien, aunque tiene oídos para oír, no tiene lengua para hablar; así que, con seguridad puede vuestra merced trasladar lo que tiene en su pecho en el mío y hacer cuenta que lo ha arrojado en los abismos del silencio.

-En fee de esa promesa -respondió don Antonio-, quiero poner a vuestra merced en admiración con lo que viere y oyere, y darme a mí algún alivio de la pena que me causa no tener con quien comunicar mis secretos, que no son para fiarse de todos.

Suspenso estaba don Quijote, esperando en qué habían de parar tantas prevenciones. En esto, tomándole la mano don Antonio, se la paseó por la cabeza de bronce y por toda la mesa, y por el pie de jaspe sobre que se sostenía, y luego dijo:

-Esta cabeza, señor don Quijote, ha sido hecha y fabricada por uno de los mayores encantadores y hechiceros que ha tenido el mundo, que creo era polaco de nación y discípulo del famoso Escotillo, de quien tantas maravillas se cuentan; el cual estuvo aquí en mi casa, y por precio de mil escudos que le di, labró esta cabeza, que tiene propiedad y virtud de responder a cuantas cosas al oído le preguntaren. Guardó rumbos, pintó caracteres, observó astros, miró puntos, y, finalmente, la sacó con la perfección que veremos mañana, porque los viernes está muda, y hoy, que lo es, nos ha de hacer esperar hasta mañana. En este tiempo podrá vuestra merced prevenirse de lo que querrá preguntar, que por experiencia sé que dice verdad en cuanto responde.

Admirado quedó don Quijote de la virtud y propiedad de la cabeza, y estuvo por no creer a don Antonio; pero, por ver cuán poco tiempo había para hacer la experiencia, no quiso decirle otra cosa sino que le agradecía el haberle descubierto tan gran secreto. Salieron del aposento, cerró la puerta don Antonio con llave, y fuéronse a la sala, donde los demás caballeros estaban. En este tiempo les había contado Sancho muchas de las aventuras y sucesos que a su amo habían acontecido.

Aquella tarde sacaron a pasear a don Quijote, no armado, sino de rúa, vestido un balandrán de paño leonado, que pudiera hacer sudar en aquel tiempo al mismo yelo. Ordenaron con sus criados que entretuviesen a Sancho de modo que no le dejasen salir de casa. Iba don Quijote, no sobre Rocinante, sino sobre un gran macho de paso llano, y muy bien aderezado. Pusiéronle el balandrán, y en las espaldas, sin que lo viese, le cosieron un pargamino, donde le escribieron con letras grandes: Éste es don Quijote de la Mancha. En comenzando el paseo, llevaba el rétulo los ojos de cuantos venían a verle, y como leían: Éste es don Quijote de la Mancha, admirábase don Quijote de ver que cuantos le miraban le nombraban y conocían; y, volviéndose a don Antonio, que iba a su lado, le dijo:

-Grande es la prerrogativa que encierra en sí la andante caballería, pues hace conocido y famoso al que la profesa por todos los términos de la tierra; si no, mire vuestra merced, señor don Antonio, que hasta los muchachos desta ciudad, sin nunca haberme visto, me conocen.

-Así es, señor don Quijote -respondió don Antonio-, que, así como el fuego no puede estar escondido y encerrado, la virtud no puede dejar de ser conocida, y la que se alcanza por la profesión de las armas resplandece y campea sobre todas las otras.

Acaeció, pues, que, yendo don Quijote con el aplauso que se ha dicho, un castellano que leyó el rétulo de las espaldas, alzó la voz, diciendo:

-¡Válgate el diablo por don Quijote de la Mancha! ¿Cómo que hasta aquí has llegado, sin haberte muerto los infinitos palos que tienes a cuestras? Tu eres loco, y si lo fueras a solas y dentro de las puertas de tu locura, fuera menos mal; pero tienes propiedad de volver locos y mentecatos a cuantos te tratan y comunican; si no, mírenlo por estos señores que te acompañan. Vuélvete, mentecato, a tu casa, y mira por tu hacienda, por tu mujer y tus hijos, y déjate destas vaciedades que te carcomen el seso y te desnatan el entendimiento.

-Hermano -dijo don Antonio-, seguid vuestro camino, y no deis consejos a quien no os los pide. El señor don Quijote de la Mancha es muy cuerdo, y nosotros, que le acompañamos, no somos necios; la virtud se ha de honrar dondequiera que se hallare, y andad en hora mala, y no os metáis donde no os llaman.

-Pardiez, vuesa merced tiene razón -respondió el castellano-, que aconsejar a este buen hombre es dar coces contra el aguijón; pero, con todo eso, me da muy gran lástima que el buen ingenio que dicen que tiene en todas las cosas este mentecato se le desagüe por la canal de su andante caballería; y la enhoramala que vuesa merced dijo, sea para mí y para todos mis descendientes si de hoy más, aunque viviese más años que Matusalén, diere consejo a nadie, aunque me lo pida.

Apartóse el consejero; siguió adelante el paseo; pero fue tanta la priesa que los muchachos y toda la gente tenía leyendo el rétulo, que se le hubo de quitar don Antonio, como que le quitaba otra cosa.

Llegó la noche, volviéronse a casa; hubo sarao de damas, porque la mujer de don Antonio, que era una señora principal y alegre, hermosa y discreta, convidó a otras sus amigas a que viniesen a honrar a su huésped y a gustar de sus nunca vistas locuras. Vinieron algunas, cenóse espléndidamente y comenzóse el sarao casi a las diez de la noche. Entre las damas había dos de gusto pícaro y burlonas, y, con ser muy honestas, eran algo descompuestas, por dar lugar que las burlas alegrasen sin enfado. Éstas dieron tanta priesa en sacar a danzar a don Quijote, que le molieron, no sólo el cuerpo, pero el ánima. Era cosa de ver la figura de don Quijote, largo, tendido, flaco, amarillo, estrecho en el vestido, desairado, y, sobre todo, no nada ligero. Requebrábanle como a hurto las damiselas, y él, también como a hurto, las desdeñaba; pero, viéndose apretar de requiebros, alzó la voz y dijo:

-Fugite, partes adversae!: dejadme en mi sosiego, pensamientos mal venidos. Allá os avenid, señoras, con vuestros deseos, que la que es reina de los míos, la sin par Dulcinea del Toboso, no consiente que ningunos otros que los suyos me avasallen y rindan.

Y, diciendo esto, se sentó en mitad de la sala, en el suelo, molido y quebrantado de tan bailador ejercicio. Hizo don Antonio que le llevasen en peso a su lecho, y el primero que asió dél fue Sancho, diciéndole:

-¡Nora en tal, señor nuestro amo, lo habéis bailado! ¿Pensáis que todos los valientes son danzadores y todos los andantes caballeros bailarines? Digo que si lo pensáis, que estáis engañado; hombre hay que se atreverá a matar a un gigante antes que hacer una cabriola. Si hubiérades de zapatear, yo supliría vuestra falta, que zapateo como un girifalte; pero en lo del danzar, no doy puntada.

Con estas y otras razones dio que reír Sancho a los del sarao, y dio con su amo en la cama, arrojándole para que sudase la frialdad de su baile.

Otro día le pareció a don Antonio ser bien hacer la experiencia de la cabeza encantada, y con don Quijote, Sancho y otros dos amigos, con las dos señoras que habían molido a don Quijote en el baile, que aquella propia noche se habían quedado con la mujer de don Antonio, se encerró en la estancia donde estaba la cabeza. Contóles la propiedad que tenía, encargóles el secreto y díjoles que aquél era el primero día donde se había de probar la virtud de la tal cabeza encantada; y si no eran los dos amigos de don Antonio, ninguna otra persona sabía el busilis del encanto, y aun si don Antonio no se le hubiera descubierto primero a sus amigos, también ellos cayeran en la admiración en que los demás cayeron, sin ser posible otra cosa: con tal traza y tal orden estaba fabricada.

El primero que se llegó al oído de la cabeza fue el mismo don Antonio, y díjole en voz sumisa, pero no tanto que de todos no fuese entendida:

-Dime, cabeza, por la virtud que en ti se encierra: ¿qué pensamientos tengo yo ahora?

Y la cabeza le respondió, sin mover los labios, con voz clara y distinta, de modo que fue de todos entendida, esta razón:

-Yo no juzgo de pensamientos.

Oyendo lo cual, todos quedaron atónitos, y más viendo que en todo el aposento ni al derredor de la mesa no había persona humana que responder pudiese.

-¿Cuántos estamos aquí? -tornó a preguntar don Antonio.

Y fuele respondido por el propio tenor, paso:

-Estáis tú y tu mujer, con dos amigos tuyos, y dos amigas della, y un caballero famoso llamado don Quijote de la Mancha, y un su escudero que Sancho Panza tiene por nombre.

¡Aquí sí que fue el admirarse de nuevo, aquí sí que fue el erizarse los cabellos a todos de puro espanto! Y, apartándose don Antonio de la cabeza, dijo:

-Esto me basta para darme a entender que no fui engañado del que te me vendió, ¡cabeza sabia, cabeza habladora, cabeza respondona y admirable cabeza! Llegue otro y pregúntele lo que quisiere.

Y, como las mujeres de ordinario son presurosas y amigas de saber, la primera que se llegó fue una de las dos amigas de la mujer de don Antonio, y lo que le preguntó fue:

-Dime, cabeza, ¿qué haré yo para ser muy hermosa?

Y fuele respondido:

-Sé muy honesta.

-No te pregunto más -dijo la preguntanta.

Llegó luego la compañera, y dijo:

-Querría saber, cabeza, si mi marido me quiere bien, o no.

Y respondiéronle:

-Mira las obras que te hace, y echarlo has de ver.

Apartóse la casada diciendo:

-Esta respuesta no tenía necesidad de pregunta, porque, en efecto, las obras que se hacen declaran la voluntad que tiene el que las hace.

Luego llegó uno de los dos amigos de don Antonio, y preguntóle:

-¿Quién soy yo?

Y fuele respondido:

-Tú lo sabes.

-No te pregunto eso -respondió el caballero-, sino que me digas si me conoces tú.

-Sí conozco -le respondieron-, que eres don Pedro Noriz.

-No quiero saber más, pues esto basta para entender, ¡oh cabeza!, que lo sabes todo.

Y, apartándose, llegó el otro amigo y preguntóle:

-Dime, cabeza, ¿qué deseos tiene mi hijo el mayorazgo?

-Ya yo he dicho -le respondieron- que yo no juzgo de deseos, pero, con todo eso, te sé decir que los que tu hijo tiene son de enterrarte.

-Eso es -dijo el caballero-: lo que veo por los ojos, con el dedo lo señalo.

Y no preguntó más. Llegóse la mujer de don Antonio, y dijo:

-Yo no sé, cabeza, qué preguntarte; sólo querría saber de ti si gozaré muchos años de buen marido.

Y respondiéronle:

-Sí gozarás, porque su salud y su templanza en el vivir prometen muchos años de vida, la cual muchos suelen acortar por su destemplanza.

Llegóse luego don Quijote, y dijo:

-Dime tú, el que respondes: ¿fue verdad o fue sueño lo que yo cuento que me pasó en la cueva de Montesinos? ¿Serán ciertos los azotes de Sancho mi escudero? ¿Tendrá efecto el desencanto de Dulcinea?

-A lo de la cueva -respondieron- hay mucho que decir: de todo tiene; los azotes de Sancho irán de espacio, el desencanto de Dulcinea llegará a debida ejecución.

-No quiero saber más -dijo don Quijote-; que como yo vea a Dulcinea desencantada, haré cuenta que vienen de golpe todas las venturas que acertare a desear.

El último preguntante fue Sancho, y lo que preguntó fue:

-¿Por ventura, cabeza, tendré otro gobierno? ¿Saldré de la estrechez de escudero? ¿Volveré a ver a mi mujer y a mis hijos?

A lo que le respondieron:

-Gobernarás en tu casa; y si vuelves a ella, verás a tu mujer y a tus hijos; y, dejando de servir, dejarás de ser escudero.

-¡Bueno, par Dios! -dijo Sancho Panza-. Esto yo me lo dijera: no dijera más el profeta Perogrullo.

-Bestia -dijo don Quijote-, ¿qué quieres que te respondan? ¿No basta que las respuestas que esta cabeza ha dado correspondan a lo que se le pregunta?

-Sí basta -respondió Sancho-, pero quisiera yo que se declarara más y me dijera más.

Con esto se acabaron las preguntas y las respuestas, pero no se acabó la admiración en que todos quedaron, excepto los dos amigos de don Antonio, que el caso sabían. El cual quiso Cide Hamete Benengeli declarar luego, por no tener suspenso al mundo, creyendo que algún hechicero y extraordinario misterio en la tal cabeza se encerraba; y así, dice que don Antonio Moreno, a imitación de otra cabeza que vio en Madrid, fabricada por un estampero, hizo ésta en su casa, para entretenerse y suspender a los ignorantes; y la fábrica era de esta suerte: la tabla de la mesa era de palo, pintada y barnizada como jaspe, y el pie sobre que se sostenía era de lo mismo, con cuatro garras de águila que dél salían, para mayor firmeza del peso. La cabeza, que parecía medalla y figura de emperador romano, y de color de bronce, estaba toda hueca, y ni más ni menos la tabla de la mesa, en que se encajaba tan justamente, que ninguna señal de juntura se parecía. El pie de la tabla era ansimesmo hueco, que respondía a la garganta y pechos de la cabeza, y todo esto venía a responder a otro aposento que debajo de la estancia de la cabeza estaba. Por todo este hueco de pie, mesa, garganta y pechos de la medalla y figura referida se encaminaba un cañón de hoja de lata, muy justo, que de nadie podía ser visto. En el aposento de abajo correspondiente al de arriba se ponía el que había de responder, pegada la boca con el mismo cañón, de modo que, a modo de cerbatana, iba la voz de arriba abajo y de abajo arriba, en palabras articuladas y claras; y de esta manera no era posible conocer el embuste. Un sobrino de don Antonio, estudiante agudo y discreto, fue el respondiente; el cual, estando avisado de su señor tío de los que habían de entrar con él en aquel día en el aposento de la cabeza, le fue fácil responder con presteza y puntualidad a la primera pregunta; a las demás respondió por conjeturas, y, como discreto, discretamente. Y dice más Cide Hamete: que hasta diez o doce días duró esta maravillosa máquina; pero que, divulgándose por la ciudad que don Antonio tenía en su casa una cabeza encantada, que a cuantos le preguntaban respondía, temiendo no llegase a los oídos de las despiertas centinelas de nuestra Fe, habiendo declarado el caso a los señores inquisidores, le mandaron que lo deshiciese y no pasase más adelante, porque el vulgo ignorante no se escandalizase; pero en la opinión de don Quijote y de Sancho Panza, la cabeza quedó por encantada y por respondona, más a satisfacción de don Quijote que de Sancho.

Los caballeros de la ciudad, por complacer a don Antonio y por agasajar a don Quijote y dar lugar a que descubriese sus sandeces, ordenaron de correr sortija de allí a seis días; que no tuvo efecto por la ocasión que se dirá adelante. Diole gana a don Quijote de pasear la ciudad a la llana y a pie, temiendo que, si iba a caballo, le habían de perseguir los mochachos, y así, él y Sancho, con otros dos criados que don Antonio le dio, salieron a pasearse.

Sucedió, pues, que, yendo por una calle, alzó los ojos don Quijote, y vio escrito sobre una puerta, con letras muy grandes: Aquí se imprimen libros; de lo que se contentó mucho, porque hasta entonces no había visto emprenta alguna, y deseaba saber cómo fuese. Entró dentro, con todo su acompañamiento, y vio tirar en una parte, corregir en otra, componer en ésta, enmendar en aquélla, y, finalmente, toda aquella máquina que en las emprentas grandes se muestra. Llegábase don Quijote a un cajón y preguntaba qué era aquéllo que allí se hacía; dábanle cuenta los oficiales, admirábase y pasaba adelante. Llegó en otras a uno, y preguntóle qué era lo que hacía. El oficial le respondió:

-Señor, este caballero que aquí está -y enseñóle a un hombre de muy buen talle y parecer y de alguna gravedad-ha traducido un libro toscano en nuestra lengua castellana, y estoyle yo componiendo, para darle a la estampa.

-¿Qué título tiene el libro? -preguntó don Quijote.

-A lo que el autor respondió:

-Señor, el libro, en toscano, se llama Le bagatele.

-Y ¿qué responde le bagatele en nuestro castellano? -preguntó don Quijote.

-Le bagatele -dijo el autor-es como si en castellano dijésemos los juguetes; y, aunque este libro es en el nombre humilde, contiene y encierra en sí cosas muy buenas y sustanciales.

-Yo -dijo don Quijote-sé algún tanto de el toscano, y me precio de cantar algunas estancias del Ariosto. Pero dígame vuesa merced, señor mío, y no digo esto porque quiero examinar el ingenio de vuestra merced, sino por curiosidad no más: ¿ha hallado en su escritura alguna vez nombrar piñata?

-Sí, muchas veces -respondió el autor.

-Y ¿cómo la traduce vuestra merced en castellano? -preguntó don Quijote.

-¿Cómo la había de traducir -replicó el autor-, sino diciendo olla?

-¡Cuerpo de tal -dijo don Quijote-, y qué adelante está vuesa merced en el toscano idioma! Yo apostaré una buena apuesta que adonde diga en el toscano piache, dice vuesa merced en el castellano place; y adonde diga più, dice más, y el su declara con arriba, y el giù con abajo.

-Sí declaro, por cierto -dijo el autor-, porque ésas son sus propias correspondencias.

-Osaré yo jurar -dijo don Quijote- que no es vuesa merced conocido en el mundo, enemigo siempre de premiar los floridos ingenios ni los loables trabajos. ¡Qué de habilidades hay perdidas por ahí! ¡Qué de ingenios arrinconados! ¡Qué de virtudes menospreciadas! Pero, con todo esto, me parece que el traducir de una lengua en otra, como no sea de las reinas de las lenguas, griega y latina, es como quien mira los tapices flamencos por el revés, que, aunque se veen las figuras, son llenas de hilos que las escurecen, y no se veen con la lisura y tez de la haz; y el traducir de lenguas fáciles, ni arguye ingenio ni elocución, como no le arguye el que traslada ni el que copia un papel de otro papel. Y no por esto quiero inferir que no sea loable este ejercicio del traducir; porque en otras cosas peores se podría ocupar el hombre, y que menos provecho le trujesen. Fuera desta cuenta van los dos famosos traductores: el uno, el doctor Cristóbal de Figueroa, en su Pastor Fido, y el otro, don Juan de Jáuriguí, en su Aminta, donde felizmente ponen en duda cuál es la traducción o cuál el original. Pero dígame vuestra merced: este libro, ¿imprímese por su cuenta, o tiene ya vendido el privilegio a algún librero?

-Por mi cuenta lo imprimo -respondió el autor-, y pienso ganar mil ducados, por lo menos, con esta primera impresión, que ha de ser de dos mil cuerpos, y se han de despachar a seis reales cada uno, en daca las pajas.

-¡Bien está vuesa merced en la cuenta! -respondió don Quijote-. Bien parece que no sabe las entradas y salidas de los impresores, y las correspondencias que hay de unos a otros; yo le prometo que, cuando se vea cargado de dos mil cuerpos de libros, vea tan molido su cuerpo, que se espante, y más si el libro es un poco avieso y no nada picante.

-Pues, ¿qué? -dijo el autor-. ¿Quiere vuesa merced que se lo dé a un librero, que me dé por el privilegio tres maravedís, y aún piensa que me hace merced en dármelos? Yo no imprimo mis libros para alcanzar fama en el mundo, que ya en él soy conocido por mis obras: provecho quiero, que sin él no vale un cuatrín la buena fama.

-Dios le dé a vuesa merced buena manderecha -respondió don Quijote.

Y pasó adelante a otro cajón, donde vio que estaban corrigiendo un pliego de un libro que se intitulaba Luz del alma; y, en viéndole, dijo:

-Estos tales libros, aunque hay muchos deste género, son los que se deben imprimir, porque son muchos los pecadores que se usan, y son menester infinitas luces para tantos desalumbrados.

Pasó adelante y vio que asimesmo estaban corrigiendo otro libro; y, preguntando su título, le respondieron que se llamaba la Segunda parte del Ingenioso Hidalgo don Quijote de la Mancha, compuesta por un tal vecino de Tordesillas.

-Ya yo tengo noticia deste libro -dijo don Quijote-, y en verdad y en mi conciencia que pensé que ya estaba quemado y hecho polvos, por impertinente; pero su San Martín se le llegará, como a cada puerco, que las historias fingidas tanto tienen de buenas y de deleitables cuanto se llegan a la verdad o la semejanza della, y las verdaderas tanto son mejores cuanto son más verdaderas.

Y, diciendo esto, con muestras de algún despecho, se salió de la emprenta. Y aquel mismo día ordenó don Antonio de llevarle a ver las galeras que en la playa estaban, de que Sancho se regocijó mucho, a causa que en su vida las había visto. Avisó don Antonio al cuatralbo de las galeras como aquella tarde había de llevar a verlas a su huésped el famoso don Quijote de la Mancha, de quien ya el cuatralbo y todos los vecinos de la ciudad tenían noticia; y lo que le sucedió en ellas se dirá en el siguiente capítulo.

Capítulo LXIII

De lo mal que le avino a Sancho Panza con la visita de las galeras, y la nueva aventura de la hermosa morisca

GRANDES eran los discursos que don Quijote hacía sobre la respuesta de la encantada cabeza, sin que ninguno dellos diese en el embuste, y todos paraban con la promesa, que él tuvo por cierto, del desencanto de Dulcinea. Allí iba y venía, y se alegraba entre sí mismo, creyendo que había de ver presto su cumplimiento; y Sancho, aunque aborrecía el ser gobernador, como queda dicho, todavía deseaba volver a mandar y a ser obedecido; que esta mala ventura trae consigo el mando, aunque sea de burlas.

En resolución, aquella tarde don Antonio Moreno, su huésped, y sus dos amigos, con don Quijote y Sancho, fueron a las galeras. El cuatralbo, que estaba avisado de su buena venida, por ver a los dos tan famosos Quijote y Sancho, apenas llegaron a la marina, cuando todas las galeras abatieron tienda, y sonaron las chirimías; arrojaron luego el esquife al agua, cubierto de ricos tapetes y de almohadas de terciopelo carmesí, y, en poniendo que puso los pies en él don Quijote, disparó la capitana el cañón de crujía, y las otras galeras hicieron lo mismo, y, al subir don Quijote por la escala derecha, toda la chusma le saludó como es usanza cuando una persona principal entra en la galera, diciendo: «¡Hu, hu, hu!» tres veces. Diole la mano el general, que con este nombre le llamaremos, que era un principal caballero valenciano; abrazó a don Quijote, diciéndole:

-Este día señalaré yo con piedra blanca, por ser uno de los mejores que pienso llevar en mi vida, habiendo visto al señor don Quijote de la Mancha: tiempo y señal que nos muestra que en él se encierra y cifra todo el valor del andante caballería.

Con otras no menos corteses razones le respondió don Quijote, alegre sobremanera de verse tratar tan a lo señor. Entraron todos en la popa, que estaba muy bien aderezada, y sentáronse por los bandines, pasóse el cómitre en crujía, y dio señal con el pito que la chusma hiciese fuera ropa, que se hizo en un instante. Sancho, que vio tanta gente en cueros, quedó pasmado, y más cuando vio hacer tienda con tanta priesa, que a él le pareció que todos los diablos andaban allí trabajando; pero esto todo fueron tortas y pan pintado para lo que ahora diré. Estaba Sancho sentado sobre el estanterol, junto al espalder de la mano derecha, el cual ya avisado de lo que había de hacer, asió de Sancho, y, levantándole en los brazos, toda la chusma puesta en pie y alerta, comenzando de la derecha banda, le fue dando y volteando sobre los brazos de la chusma de banco en banco, con tanta priesa, que el pobre Sancho perdió la vista de los ojos, y sin duda pensó que los mismos demonios le llevaban, y no pararon con él hasta volverle por la siniestra banda y ponerle en la popa. Quedó el pobre molido, y jadeando, y trasudando, sin poder imaginar qué fue lo que sucedido le había.

Don Quijote, que vio el vuelo sin alas de Sancho, preguntó al general si eran ceremonias aquéllas que se usaban con los primeros que entraban en las galeras; porque si acaso lo fuese, él, que no tenía intención de profesar en ellas, no quería hacer semejantes ejercicios, y que votaba a Dios que, si alguno llegaba a asirle para voltearle, que le había de sacar el alma a puntillazos; y, diciendo esto, se levantó en pie y empuñó la espada.

A este instante abatieron tienda, y con grandísimo ruido dejaron caer la entena de alto abajo. Pensó Sancho que el cielo se desencajaba de sus quicios y venía a dar sobre su cabeza; y, agobiándola, lleno de miedo, la puso entre las piernas. No las tuvo todas consigo don Quijote; que también se estremeció y encogió de hombros y perdió la color del rostro. La chusma izó la entena con la misma priesa y ruido que la habían amainado, y todo esto, callando, como si no tuvieran voz ni aliento. Hizo señal el cómitre que zarpasen el ferro, y, saltando en mitad de la crujía con el corbacho o rebenque, comenzó a mosquear las espaldas de la chusma, y a largarse poco a poco a la mar. Cuando Sancho vio a una moverse tantos pies colorados, que tales pensó él que eran los remos, dijo entre sí:

-Éstas sí son verdaderamente cosas encantadas, y no las que mi amo dice. ¿Qué han hecho estos desdichados, que así los azotan, y cómo este hombre solo, que anda por aquí silbando, tiene atrevimiento para azotar a tanta gente? Ahora yo digo que éste es infierno, o, por lo menos, el purgatorio.

Don Quijote, que vio la atención con que Sancho miraba lo que pasaba, le dijo:

-¡Ah Sancho amigo, y con qué brevedad y cuán a poca costa os podíades vos, si quisiédeses, desnudar de medio cuerpo arriba, y ponerlos entre estos señores, y acabar con el desencanto de Dulcinea! Pues con la miseria y pena de tantos, no sentiríades vos mucho la vuestra; y más, que podría ser que el sabio Merlín tomase en cuenta cada azote déstos, por ser dados de buena mano, por diez de los que vos finalmente os habéis de dar.

Preguntar quería el general qué azotes eran aquéllos, o qué desencanto de Dulcinea, cuando dijo el marinero:

-Señal hace Monjuí de que hay bajel de remos en la costa por la banda del poniente.

Esto oído, saltó el general en la crujía, y dijo:

-¡Ea hijos, no se nos vaya! Algún bergantín de cosarios de Argel debe de ser éste que la atalaya nos señala.

Llegáronse luego las otras tres galeras a la capitana, a saber lo que se les ordenaba. Mandó el general que las dos saliesen a la mar, y él con la otra iría tierra a tierra, porque ansí el bajel no se les escaparía. Apretó la chusma los remos, impeliendo las galeras con tanta furia, que parecía que volaban. Las que salieron a la mar, a obra de dos millas descubrieron un bajel, que con la vista le marcaron por de hasta catorce o quince bancos, y así era la verdad; el cual bajel, cuando descubrió las galeras, se puso en caza, con intención y esperanza de escaparse por su ligereza; pero avínole mal, porque la galera capitana era de los más ligeros bajeles que en la mar navegaban, y así le fue entrando, que claramente los del bergantín conocieron que no podían escaparse; y así, el arráez quisiera que dejaran los remos y se entregaran, por no irritar a enojo al capitán que nuestras galeras regía. Pero la suerte, que de otra manera lo guiaba, ordenó que, ya que la capitana llegaba tan cerca que podían los del bajel oír las voces que desde ella les decían que se rindiesen, dos toraquís, que es como decir dos turcos borrachos, que en el bergantín venían con estos doce, dispararon dos escopetas, con que dieron muerte a dos soldados que sobre nuestras arrumbadas venían. Viendo lo cual, juró el general de no dejar con vida a todos cuantos en el bajel tomase, y, llegando a embestir con toda furia, se le escapó por debajo de la palamenta. Pasó la galera adelante un buen trecho; los del bajel se vieron perdidos, hicieron vela en tanto que la galera volvía, y de nuevo, a vela y a remo, se pusieron en caza; pero no les aprovechó su diligencia tanto como les dañó su atrevimiento, porque, alcanzándoles la capitana a poco más de media milla, les echó la palamenta encima y los cogió vivos a todos.

Llegaron en esto las otras dos galeras, y todas cuatro con la presa volvieron a la playa, donde infinita gente los estaba esperando, deseosos de ver lo que traían. Dio fondo el general cerca de tierra, y conoció que estaba en la marina el virrey de la ciudad. Mandó echar el esquife para traerle, y mandó amainar la entena para ahorcar luego al arráez y a los demás turcos que en el bajel había cogido, que serían hasta treinta y seis personas, todos gallardos, y los más, escopeteros turcos. Preguntó el general quién era el arráez del bergantín y fuele respondido por uno de los cautivos, en lengua castellana, que después pareció ser renegado español:

-Este mancebo, señor, que aquí vees es nuestro arráez.

Y mostróle uno de los más bellos y gallardos mozos que pudiera pintar la humana imaginación. La edad, al parecer, no llegaba a veinte años. Preguntóle el general:

-Dime, mal aconsejado perro, ¿quién te movió a matarme mis soldados, pues veías ser imposible el escaparte? ¿Ese respeto se guarda a las capitanas? ¿No sabes tú que no es valentía la temeridad? Las esperanzas dudosas han de hacer a los hombres atrevidos, pero no temerarios.

Responder quería el arráez; pero no pudo el general, por entonces, oír la respuesta, por acudir a recibir al virrey, que ya entraba en la galera, con el cual entraron algunos de sus criados y algunas personas del pueblo.

-¡Buena ha estado la caza, señor general! -dijo el virrey.

-Y tan buena -respondió el general-cual la verá Vuestra Excelencia agora colgada de esta entena.

-¿Cómo así? -replicó el virrey.

-Porque me han muerto -respondió el general-, contra toda ley y contra toda razón y usanza de guerra, dos soldados de los mejores que en estas galeras venían, y yo he jurado de ahorcar a cuantos he cautivado, principalmente a este mozo, que es el arráez del bergantín.

Y enseñóle al que ya tenía atadas las manos y echado el cordel a la garganta, esperando la muerte.

Miróle el virrey, y, viéndole tan hermoso, y tan gallardo, y tan humilde, dándole en aquel instante una carta de recomendación su hermosura, le vino deseo de excusar su muerte; y así, le preguntó:

-Dime, arráez, ¿eres turco de nación, o moro, o renegado?

A lo cual el mozo respondió, en lengua asimesmo castellana:

-Ni soy turco de nación, ni moro, ni renegado.

-Pues, ¿qué eres? -replicó el virrey.

-Mujer cristiana -respondió el mancebo.

-¿Mujer y cristiana, y en tal traje y en tales pasos? Más es cosa para admirarla que para creerla.

-Suspended -dijo el mozo-, ¡oh señores!, la ejecución de mi muerte, que no se perderá mucho en que se dilate vuestra venganza en tanto que yo os cuente mi vida.

¿Quién fuera el de corazón tan duro que con estas razones no se ablandara, o, a lo menos, hasta oír las que el triste y lastimado mancebo decir quería? El general le dijo que dijese lo que quisiese, pero que no esperase alcanzar perdón de su conocida culpa. Con esta licencia, el mozo comenzó a decir desta manera:

-«De aquella nación más desdichada que prudente, sobre quien ha llovido estos días un mar de desgracias, nací yo, de moriscos padres engendrada. En la corriente de su desventura fui yo por dos tíos míos llevada a Berbería, sin que me aprovechase decir que era cristiana, como, en efecto, lo soy, y no de las fingidas ni aparentes, sino de las verdaderas y católicas. No me valió, con los que tenían a cargo nuestro miserable destierro, decir esta verdad, ni mis tíos quisieron creerla; antes la tuvieron por mentira y por invención para quedarme en la tierra donde había nacido, y así, por fuerza más que por grado, me trujeron consigo. Tuve una madre cristiana y un padre discreto y cristiano, ni más ni menos; mamé la fe católica en la leche; criéme con buenas costumbres; ni en la lengua ni en ellas jamás, a mi parecer, di señales de ser morisca. Al par y al paso destas virtudes, que yo creo que lo son, creció mi hermosura, si es que tengo alguna; y, aunque mi recato y mi encerramiento fue mucho, no debió de ser tanto que no tuviese lugar de verme un mancebo caballero, llamado don Gaspar Gregorio, hijo mayorazgo de un caballero que junto a nuestro lugar otro suyo tiene. Cómo me vio, cómo nos hablamos, cómo se vio perdido por mí y cómo yo no muy ganada por él, sería largo de contar, y más en tiempo que estoy temiendo que, entre la lengua y la garganta, se ha de atravesar el riguroso cordel que me amenaza; y así, sólo diré cómo en nuestro destierro quiso acompañarme don Gregorio. Mezclóse con los moriscos que de otros lugares salieron, porque sabía muy bien la lengua, y en el viaje se hizo amigo de dos tíos míos que consigo me traían; porque mi padre, prudente y prevenido, así como oyó el primer bando de nuestro destierro, se salió del lugar y se fue a buscar alguno en los reinos estraños que nos acogiese. Dejó encerradas y enterradas, en una parte de quien yo sola tengo noticia, muchas perlas y piedras de gran valor, con algunos dineros en cruzados y doblones de oro. Mandóme que no tocase al tesoro que dejaba en ninguna manera, si acaso antes que él volviese nos desterraban. Hícelo así, y con mis tíos, como tengo dicho, y otros parientes y allegados pasamos a Berbería; y el lugar donde hicimos asiento fue en Argel, como si le hiciéramos en el mismo infierno. Tuvo noticia el rey de mi hermosura, y la fama se la dio de mis riquezas, que, en parte, fue ventura mía. Llamóme ante sí, preguntóme de qué parte de España era y qué dineros y qué joyas traía. Díjele el lugar, y que las joyas y dineros quedaban en él enterrados, pero que con facilidad se podrían cobrar si yo misma volviese por ellos. Todo esto le dije, temerosa de que no le cegase mi hermosura, sino su codicia. Estando conmigo en estas pláticas, le llegaron a decir cómo venía conmigo uno de los más gallardos y hermosos mancebos que se podía imaginar. Luego entendí que lo decían por don Gaspar Gregorio, cuya belleza se deja atrás las mayores que encarecer se pueden. Turbéme, considerando el peligro que don Gregorio corría, porque entre aquellos bárbaros turcos en más se tiene y estima un mochacho o mancebo hermoso que una mujer, por bellísima que sea. Mandó luego el rey que se le trujesen allí delante para verle, y preguntóme si era verdad lo que de aquel mozo le decían. Entonces yo, casi como prevenida del cielo, le dije que sí era; pero que le hacía saber que no era varón, sino mujer como yo, y que le suplicaba me la dejase ir a vestir en su natural traje, para que de todo en todo mostrase su belleza y con menos empacho pareciese ante su presencia. Díjome que fuese en buena hora, y que otro día hablaríamos en el modo que se podía tener para que yo volviese a España a sacar el escondido tesoro. Hablé con don Gaspar, contéle el peligro que corría el mostrar ser hombre; vestíle de mora, y aquella mesma tarde le truje a la presencia del rey, el cual, en viéndole, quedó admirado y hizo disignio de guardarla para hacer presente della al Gran Señor; y, por huir del peligro que en el serrallo de sus mujeres podía tener y temer de sí mismo, la mandó poner en casa de unas principales moras que la guardasen y la sirviesen, adonde le llevaron luego. Lo que los dos sentimos (que no puedo negar que no le quiero) se deje a la consideración de los que se apartan si bien se quieren. Dio luego traza el rey de que yo volviese a España en este bergantín y que me acompañasen dos turcos de nación, que fueron los que mataron vuestros soldados. Vino también conmigo este renegado español -señalando al que había hablado primero-, del cual sé yo bien que es cristiano encubierto y que viene con más deseo de quedarse en España que de volver a Berbería; la demás chusma del bergantín son moros y turcos, que no sirven de más que de bogar al remo. Los dos turcos, codiciosos e insolentes, sin guardar el orden que traíamos de que a mí y a este renegado en la primer parte de España, en hábito de cristianos, de que venimos proveídos, nos echasen en tierra, primero quisieron barrer esta costa y hacer alguna presa, si pudiesen, temiendo que si primero nos echaban en tierra, por algún accidente que a los dos nos sucediese, podríamos descubrir que quedaba el bergantín en la mar, y si acaso hubiese galeras por esta costa, los tomasen. Anoche descubrimos esta playa, y, sin tener noticia destas cuatro galeras, fuimos descubiertos, y nos ha sucedido lo que habéis visto. En resolución: don Gregorio queda en hábito de mujer entre mujeres, con manifiesto peligro de perderse, y yo me veo atadas las manos, esperando, o, por mejor decir, temiendo perder la vida, que ya me cansa.» Éste es, señores, el fin de mi lamentable historia, tan verdadera como desdichada; lo que os ruego es que me dejéis morir como cristiana, pues, como ya he dicho, en ninguna cosa he sido culpante de la culpa en que los de mi nación han caído.

Y luego calló, preñados los ojos de tiernas lágrimas, a quien acompañaron muchas de los que presentes estaban. El virrey, tierno y compasivo, sin hablarle palabra, se llegó a ella y le quitó con sus manos el cordel que las hermosas de la mora ligaba.

En tanto, pues, que la morisca cristiana su peregrina historia trataba, tuvo clavados los ojos en ella un anciano peregrino que entró en la galera cuando entró el virrey; y, apenas dio fin a su plática la morisca, cuando él se arrojó a sus pies, y, abrazado dellos, con interrumpidas palabras de mil sollozos y suspiros, le dijo:

-¡Oh Ana Félix, desdichada hija mía! Yo soy tu padre Ricote, que volvía a buscarte por no poder vivir sin ti, que eres mi alma.

A cuyas palabras abrió los ojos Sancho, y alzó la cabeza (que inclinada tenía, pensando en la desgracia de su paseo), y, mirando al peregrino, conoció ser el mismo Ricote que topó el día que salió de su gobierno, y confirmóse que aquélla era su hija, la cual, ya desatada, abrazó a su padre, mezclando sus lágrimas con las suyas; el cual dijo al general y al virrey:

-Ésta, señores, es mi hija, más desdichada en sus sucesos que en su nombre. Ana Félix se llama, con el sobrenombre de Ricote, famosa tanto por su hermosura como por mi riqueza. Yo salí de mi patria a buscar en reinos estraños quien nos albergase y recogiese, y, habiéndole hallado en Alemania, volví en este hábito de peregrino, en compañía de otros alemanes, a buscar mi hija y a desenterrar muchas riquezas que dejé escondidas. No hallé a mi hija; hallé el tesoro, que conmigo traigo, y agora, por el estraño rodeo que habéis visto, he hallado el tesoro que más me enriquece, que es a mi querida hija. Si nuestra poca culpa y sus lágrimas y las mías, por la integridad de vuestra justicia, pueden abrir puertas a la misericordia, usadla con nosotros, que jamás tuvimos pensamiento de ofenderos, ni convenimos en ningún modo con la intención de los nuestros, que justamente han sido desterrados.

Entonces dijo Sancho:

-Bien conozco a Ricote, y sé que es verdad lo que dice en cuanto a ser Ana Félix su hija; que en esotras zarandajas de ir y venir, tener buena o mala intención, no me entremeto.

Admirados del estraño caso todos los presentes, el general dijo:

-Una por una vuestras lágrimas no me dejarán cumplir mi juramento: vivid, hermosa Ana Félix, los años de vida que os tiene determinados el cielo, y lleven la pena de su culpa los insolentes y atrevidos que la cometieron.

Y mandó luego ahorcar de la entena a los dos turcos que a sus dos soldados habían muerto; pero el virrey le pidió encarecidamente no los ahorcase, pues más locura que valentía había sido la suya. Hizo el general lo que el virrey le pedía, porque no se ejecutan bien las venganzas a sangre helada. Procuraron luego dar traza de sacar a don Gaspar Gregorio del peligro en que quedaba. Ofreció Ricote para ello más de dos mil ducados que en perlas y en joyas tenía. Diéronse muchos medios, pero ninguno fue tal como el que dio el renegado español que se ha dicho, el cual se ofreció de volver a Argel en algún barco pequeño, de hasta seis bancos, armado de remeros cristianos, porque él sabía dónde, cómo y cuándo podía y debía desembarcar, y asimismo no ignoraba la casa donde don Gaspar quedaba. Dudaron el general y el virrey el fiarse del renegado, ni confiar de los cristianos que habían de bogar el remo; fióle Ana Félix, y Ricote, su padre, dijo que salía a dar el rescate de los cristianos, si acaso se perdiesen.

Firmados, pues, en este parecer, se desembarcó el virrey, y don Antonio Moreno se llevó consigo a la morisca y a su padre, encargándole el virrey que los regalase y acariciase cuanto le fuese posible; que de su parte le ofrecía lo que en su casa hubiese para su regalo. Tanta fue la benevolencia y caridad que la hermosura de Ana Félix infundió en su pecho.

Capítulo LXIV

Que trata de la aventura que más pesadumbre dio a don Quijote de cuantas hasta entonces le habían sucedido

LA MUJER de don Antonio Moreno cuenta la historia que recibió grandísimo contento de ver a Ana Félix en su casa. Recibióla con mucho agrado, así enamorada de su belleza como de su discreción, porque en lo uno y en lo otro era estremada la morisca, y toda la gente de la ciudad, como a campana tañida, venían a verla.

Dijo don Quijote a don Antonio que el parecer que habían tomado en la libertad de don Gregorio no era bueno, porque tenía más de peligroso que de conveniente, y que sería mejor que le pusiesen a él en Berbería con sus armas y caballo; que él le sacaría a pesar de toda la morisma, como había hecho don Gaiferos a su esposa Melisendra.

-Advierta vuesa merced -dijo Sancho, oyendo esto-que el señor don Gaiferos sacó a su esposa de tierra firme y la llevó a Francia por tierra firme; pero aquí, si acaso sacamos a don Gregorio, no tenemos por dónde traerle a España, pues está la mar en medio.

-Para todo hay remedio, si no es para la muerte -respondió don Quijote-; pues, llegando el barco a la marina, nos podremos embarcar en él, aunque todo el mundo lo impida.

-Muy bien lo pinta y facilita vuestra merced -dijo Sancho-, pero del dicho al hecho hay gran trecho, y yo me atengo al renegado, que me parece muy hombre de bien y de muy buenas entrañas.

Don Antonio dijo que si el renegado no saliese bien del caso, se tomaría el espediente de que el gran don Quijote pasase en Berbería.

De allí a dos días partió el renegado en un ligero barco de seis remos por banda, armado de valentísima chusma; y de allí a otros dos se partieron las galeras a Levante, habiendo pedido el general al visorrey fuese servido de avisarle de lo que sucediese en la libertad de don Gregorio y en el caso de Ana Félix; quedó el visorrey de hacerlo así como se lo pedía.

Y una mañana, saliendo don Quijote a pasearse por la playa armado de todas sus armas, porque, como muchas veces decía, ellas eran sus arreos, y su descanso el pelear, y no se hallaba sin ellas un punto, vio venir hacía él un caballero, armado asimismo de punta en blanco, que en el escudo traía pintada una luna resplandeciente; el cual, llegándose a trecho que podía ser oído, en altas voces, encaminando sus razones a don Quijote, dijo:

-Insigne caballero y jamás como se debe alabado don Quijote de la Mancha, yo soy el Caballero de la Blanca Luna, cuyas inauditas hazañas quizá te le habrán traído a la memoria. Vengo a contender contigo y a probar la fuerza de tus brazos, en razón de hacerte conocer y confesar que mi dama, sea quien fuere, es sin comparación más hermosa que tu Dulcinea del Toboso; la cual verdad si tú la confiesas de llano en llano, escusarás tu muerte y el trabajo que yo he de tomar en dártela; y si tú peleares y yo te venciere, no quiero otra satisfacción sino que, dejando las armas y absteniéndote de buscar aventuras, te recojas y retires a tu lugar por tiempo de un año, donde has de vivir sin echar mano a la espada, en paz tranquila y en provechoso sosiego, porque así conviene al aumento de tu hacienda y a la salvación de tu alma; y si tú me vencieres, quedará a tu discreción mi cabeza, y serán tuyos los despojos de mis armas y caballo, y pasará a la tuya la fama de mis hazañas. Mira lo que te está mejor, y respóndeme luego, porque hoy todo el día traigo de término para despachar este negocio.

Don Quijote quedó suspenso y atónito, así de la arrogancia del Caballero de la Blanca Luna como de la causa por que le desafiaba; y con reposo y ademán severo le respondió:

-Caballero de la Blanca Luna, cuyas hazañas hasta agora no han llegado a mi noticia, yo osaré jurar que jamás habéis visto a la ilustre Dulcinea; que si visto la hubiéradades, yo sé que procurarades no ponerlos en esta demanda, porque su vista os desengañara de que no ha habido ni puede haber belleza que con la suya comparar se pueda; y así, no diciéndoos que mentís, sino que no acertáis en lo propuesto, con las condiciones que habéis referido, aceto vuestro desafío, y luego, porque no se pase el día que traéis determinado; y sólo exceto de las condiciones la de que se pase a mí la fama de vuestras hazañas, porque no sé cuáles ni qué tales sean: con las mías me contento, tales cuales ellas son. Tomad, pues, la parte del campo que quisiéredes, que yo haré lo mesmo, y a quien Dios se la diere, San Pedro se la bendiga.

Habían descubierto de la ciudad al Caballero de la Blanca Luna, y díchoselo al visorrey que estaba hablando con don Quijote de la Mancha. El visorrey, creyendo sería alguna nueva aventura fabricada por don Antonio Moreno, o por otro algún caballero de la ciudad, salió luego a la playa con don Antonio y con otros muchos caballeros que le acompañaban, a tiempo cuando don Quijote volvía las riendas a Rocinante para tomar del campo lo necesario.

Viendo, pues, el visorrey que daban los dos señales de volverse a encontrar, se puso en medio, preguntándoles qué era la causa que les movía a hacer tan de improviso batalla. El Caballero de la Blanca Luna respondió que era precedencia de hermosura, y en breves razones le dijo las mismas que había dicho a don Quijote, con la acetación de las condiciones del desafío hechas por entrambas partes. Llegóse el visorrey a don Antonio, y preguntóle paso si sabía quién era el tal Caballero de la Blanca Luna, o si era alguna burla que querían hacer a don Quijote. Don Antonio le respondió que ni sabía quién era, ni si era de burlas ni de veras el tal desafío. Esta respuesta tuvo perplejo al visorrey en si les dejaría o no pasar adelante en la batalla; pero, no pudiéndose persuadir a que fuese sino burla, se apartó diciendo:

-Señores caballeros, si aquí no hay otro remedio sino confesar o morir, y el señor don Quijote está en sus trece y vuestra merced el de la Blanca Luna en sus catorce, a la mano de Dios, y dense.

Agradeció el de la Blanca Luna con corteses y discretas razones al visorrey la licencia que se les daba, y don Quijote hizo lo mesmo; el cual, encomendándose al cielo de todo corazón y a su Dulcinea -como tenía de costumbre al comenzar de las batallas que se le ofrecían-, tornó a tomar otro poco más del campo, porque vio que su contrario hacía lo mesmo, y, sin tocar trompeta ni otro instrumento bélico que les diese señal de arremeter, volvieron entrambos a un mesmo punto las riendas a sus caballos; y, como era más ligero el de la Blanca Luna, llegó a don Quijote a dos tercios andados de la carrera, y allí le encontró con tan poderosa fuerza, sin tocarle con la lanza (que la levantó, al parecer, de propósito), que dio con Rocinante y con don Quijote por el suelo una peligrosa caída. Fue luego sobre él, y, poniéndole la lanza sobre la visera, le dijo:

-Vencido sois, caballero, y aun muerto, si no confesáis las condiciones de nuestro desafío.

Don Quijote, molido y aturdido, sin alzarse la visera, como si hablara dentro de una tumba, con voz debilitada y enferma, dijo:

-Dulcinea del Toboso es la más hermosa mujer del mundo, y yo el más desdichado caballero de la tierra, y no es bien que mi flaqueza defraude esta verdad. Aprieta, caballero, la lanza, y quítame la vida, pues me has quitado la honra.

-Eso no haré yo, por cierto -dijo el de la Blanca Luna-: viva, viva en su entereza la fama de la hermosura de la señora Dulcinea del Toboso, que sólo me contento con que el gran don Quijote se retire a su lugar un año, o hasta el tiempo que por mí le fuere mandado, como concertamos antes de entrar en esta batalla.

Todo esto oyeron el visorrey y don Antonio, con otros muchos que allí estaban, y oyeron asimismo que don Quijote respondió que como no le pidiese cosa que fuese en perjuicio de Dulcinea, todo lo demás cumpliría como caballero puntual y verdadero.

Hecha esta confesión, volvió las riendas el de la Blanca Luna, y, haciendo mesura con la cabeza al visorrey, a medio galope se entró en la ciudad.

Mandó el visorrey a don Antonio que fuese tras él, y que en todas maneras supiese quién era. Levantaron a don Quijote, descubriéronle el rostro y halláronle sin color y trasudando. Rocinante, de puro malparado, no se pudo mover por entonces. Sancho, todo triste, todo apesarado, no sabía qué decirse ni qué hacerse: parecíale que todo aquel suceso pasaba en sueños y que toda aquella máquina era cosa de encantamento. Veía a su señor rendido y obligado a no tomar armas en un año; imaginaba la luz de la gloria de sus hazañas escurecida, las esperanzas de sus nuevas promesas deshechas, como se deshace el humo con el viento. Temía si quedaría o no contrecto Rocinante, o deslocado su amo; que no fuera poca ventura si deslocado quedara. Finalmente, con una silla de manos, que mandó traer el visorrey, le llevaron a la ciudad, y el visorrey se volvió también a ella, con deseo de saber quién fuese el Caballero de la Blanca Luna, que de tan mal talante había dejado a don Quijote.

Capítulo LXV

Donde se da noticia quién era el de la Blanca Luna, con la libertad de Don Gregorio, y de otros sucesos

SIGUIÓ don Antonio Moreno al Caballero de la Blanca Luna, y siguiéronle también, y aun persiguiéronle, muchos muchachos, hasta que le cerraron en un mesón dentro de la ciudad. Entró el don Antonio con deseo de conocerle; salió un escudero a recibirle y a desarmarle; encerróse en una sala baja, y con él don Antonio, que no se le cocía el pan hasta saber quién fuese. Viendo, pues, el de la Blanca Luna que aquel caballero no le dejaba, le dijo:

-Bien sé, señor, a lo que venís, que es a saber quién soy; y, porque no hay para qué negároslo, en tanto que este mi criado me desarma os lo diré, sin faltar un punto a la verdad del caso. Sabed, señor, que a mí me llaman el bachiller Sansón Carrasco; soy del mismo lugar de don Quijote de la Mancha, cuya locura y sandez mueve a que le tengamos lástima todos cuantos le conocemos, y entre los que más se la han tenido he sido yo; y, creyendo que está su salud en su reposo y en que se esté en su tierra y en su casa, di traza para hacerle estar en ella; y así, habrá tres meses que le salí al camino como caballero andante, llamándome el Caballero de los Espejos, con intención de pelear con él y vencerle, sin hacerle daño, poniendo por condición de nuestra pelea que el vencido quedase a discreción del vencedor; y lo que yo pensaba pedirle, porque ya le juzgaba por vencido, era que se volviese a su lugar y que no saliese dél en todo un año, en el cual tiempo podría ser curado; pero la suerte lo ordenó de otra manera, porque él me venció a mí y me derribó del caballo, y así, no tuvo efecto mi pensamiento: él prosiguió su camino, y yo me volví, vencido, corrido y molido de la caída, que fue además peligrosa; pero no por esto se me quitó el deseo de volver a buscarle y a vencerle, como hoy se ha visto. Y como él es tan puntual en guardar las órdenes de la andante caballería, sin duda alguna guardará la que le he dado, en cumplimiento de su palabra. Esto es, señor, lo que pasa, sin que tenga que deciros otra cosa alguna; suplícoos no me descubráis ni le digáis a don Quijote quién soy, porque tengan efecto los buenos pensamientos míos y vuelva a cobrar su juicio un hombre que le tiene bonísimo, como le dejan las sandeces de la caballería.

-¡Oh señor -dijo don Antonio-, Dios os perdone el agravio que habéis hecho a todo el mundo en querer volver cuerdo al más gracioso loco que hay en él! ¿No veis, señor, que no podrá llegar el provecho que cause la cordura de don Quijote a lo que llega el gusto que da con sus desvaríos? Pero yo imagino que toda la industria del señor bachiller no ha de ser parte para volver cuerdo a un hombre tan rematadamente loco; y si no fuese contra caridad, diría que nunca sane don Quijote, porque con su salud, no solamente perdemos sus gracias, sino las de Sancho Panza, su escudero, que cualquiera dellas puede volver a alegrar a la misma melancolía. Con todo esto, callaré, y no le diré nada, por ver si salgo verdadero en sospechar que no ha de tener efecto la diligencia hecha por el señor Carrasco.

El cual respondió que ya una por una estaba en buen punto aquel negocio, de quien esperaba feliz suceso. Y, habiéndose ofrecido don Antonio de hacer lo que más le mandase, se despidió dél; y, hecho liar sus armas sobre un macho, luego al mismo punto, sobre el caballo con que entró en la batalla, se salió de la ciudad aquel mismo día y se volvió a su patria, sin sucederle cosa que obligue a contarla en esta verdadera historia.

Contó don Antonio al visorrey todo lo que Carrasco le había contado, de lo que el visorrey no recibió mucho gusto, porque en el recogimiento de don Quijote se perdía el que podían tener todos aquellos que de sus locuras tuviesen noticia.

Seis días estuvo don Quijote en el lecho, marrido, triste, pensativo y mal acondicionado, yendo y viniendo con la imaginación en el desdichado suceso de su vencimiento. Consolábale Sancho, y, entre otras razones, le dijo:

-Señor mío, alce vuestra merced la cabeza y alégrese, si puede, y dé gracias al cielo que, ya que le derribó en la tierra, no salió con alguna costilla quebrada; y, pues sabe que donde las dan las toman, y que no siempre hay tocinos donde hay estacas, dé una higa al médico, pues no le ha menester para que le cure en esta enfermedad: volvámonos a nuestra casa y dejémonos de andar buscando aventuras por tierras y lugares que no sabemos; y si bien se considera, yo soy aquí el más perdidoso, aunque es vuestra merced el más mal parado. Yo, que dejé con el gobierno los deseos de ser más gobernador, no dejé la gana de ser conde, que jamás tendrá efecto si vuesa merced deja de ser rey, dejando el ejercicio de su caballería; y así, vienen a volverse en humo mis esperanzas.

-Calla, Sancho, pues ves que mi reclusión y retirada no ha de pasar de un año; que luego volveré a mis honrados ejercicios, y no me ha de faltar reino que gane y algún condado que darte.

-Dios lo oiga -dijo Sancho-, y el pecado sea sordo, que siempre he oído decir que más vale buena esperanza que ruin posesión.

En esto estaban cuando entró don Antonio, diciendo con muestras de grandísimo contento:

-¡Albricias, señor don Quijote, que don Gregorio y el renegado que fue por él está en la playa! ¿Qué digo en la playa? Ya está en casa del visorrey, y será aquí al momento.

Alegróse algún tanto don Quijote, y dijo:

-En verdad que estoy por decir que me holgara que hubiera sucedido todo al revés, porque me obligara a pasar en Berbería, donde con la fuerza de mi brazo diera libertad no sólo a don Gregorio, sino a cuantos cristianos cautivos hay en Berbería. Pero, ¿qué digo, miserable? ¿No soy yo el vencido? ¿No soy yo el derribado? ¿No soy yo el que no puede tomar arma en un año? Pues, ¿qué prometo? ¿De qué me alabo, si antes me conviene usar de la rueca que de la espada?

-Déjese deso, señor -dijo Sancho-: viva la gallina, aunque con su pepita, que hoy por ti y mañana por mí; y en estas cosas de encuentros y porrazos no hay tomarles tiento alguno, pues el que hoy cae puede levantarse mañana, si no es que se quiere estar en la cama; quiero decir que se deje desmayar, sin cobrar nuevos bríos para nuevas pependencias. Y levántese vuestra merced agora para recibir a don Gregorio, que me parece que anda la gente alborotada, y ya debe de estar en casa.

Y así era la verdad; porque, habiendo ya dado cuenta don Gregorio y el renegado al visorrey de su ida y vuelta, deseoso don Gregorio de ver a Ana Félix, vino con el renegado a casa de don Antonio; y, aunque don Gregorio, cuando le sacaron de Argel, fue con hábitos de mujer, en el barco los trocó por los de un cautivo que salió consigo; pero en cualquiera que viniera, mostrara ser persona para ser codiciada, servida y estimada, porque era hermoso sobremanera, y la edad, al parecer, de diez y siete o diez y ocho años. Ricote y su hija salieron a recibirle: el padre con lágrimas y la hija con honestidad. No se abrazaron unos a otros, porque donde hay mucho amor no suele haber demasiada desenvoltura. Las dos bellezas juntas de don Gregorio y Ana Félix admiraron en particular a todos juntos los que presentes estaban. El silencio fue allí el que habló por los dos amantes, y los ojos fueron las lenguas que descubrieron sus alegres y honestos pensamientos.

Contó el renegado la industria y medio que tuvo para sacar a don Gregorio; contó don Gregorio los peligros y aprietos en que se había visto con las mujeres con quien había quedado, no con largo razonamiento, sino con breves palabras, donde mostró que su discreción se adelantaba a sus años. Finalmente, Ricote pagó y satisfizo liberalmente así al renegado como a los que habían bogado al remo. Reincorporóse y redujose el renegado con la Iglesia, y, de miembro podrido, volvió limpio y sano con la penitencia y el arrepentimiento.

De allí a dos días trató el visorrey con don Antonio qué modo tendrían para que Ana Félix y su padre quedasen en España, pareciéndoles no ser de inconveniente alguno que quedasen en ella hija tan cristiana y padre, al parecer, tan bien intencionado. Don Antonio se ofreció venir a la corte a negociarlo, donde había de venir forzosamente a otros negocios, dando a entender que en ella, por medio del favor y de las dádivas, muchas cosas dificultosas se acaban.

-No -dijo Ricote, que se halló presente a esta plática-hay que esperar en favores ni en dádivas, porque con el gran don Bernardino de Velasco, conde de Salazar, a quien dio Su Majestad cargo de nuestra expulsión, no valen ruegos, no promesas, no dádivas, no lástimas; porque, aunque es verdad que él mezcla la misericordia con la justicia, como él ve que todo el cuerpo de nuestra nación está contaminado y podrido, usa con él antes del cauterio que abrasa que del ungüento que molifica; y así, con prudencia, con sagacidad, con diligencia y con miedos que pone, ha llevado sobre sus fuertes hombros a debida ejecución el peso desta gran máquina, sin que nuestras industrias, estratagemas, solicitudes y fraudes hayan podido deslumbrar sus ojos de Argos, que continuo tiene alerta, porque no se le quede ni encubra ninguno de los nuestros, que, como raíz escondida, que con el tiempo venga después a brotar, y a echar frutos venenosos en España, ya limpia, ya desembarazada de los temores en que nuestra muchedumbre la tenía. ¡Heroica resolución del gran Filipo Tercero, y inaudita prudencia en haberla encargado al tal don Bernardino de Velasco!

-Una por una, yo haré, puesto allá, las diligencias posibles, y haga el cielo lo que más fuere servido -dijo don Antonio-. Don Gregorio se irá conmigo a consolar la pena que sus padres deben tener por su ausencia; Ana Félix se quedará con mi mujer en mi casa, o en un monasterio, y yo sé que el señor visorrey gustará se quede en la suya el buen Ricote, hasta ver cómo yo negocio.

El visorrey consintió en todo lo propuesto, pero don Gregorio, sabiendo lo que pasaba, dijo que en ninguna manera podía ni quería dejar a doña Ana Félix; pero, teniendo intención de ver a sus padres, y de dar traza de volver por ella, vino en el decretado concierto. Quedóse Ana Félix con la mujer de don Antonio, y Ricote en casa del visorrey.

Llegóse el día de la partida de don Antonio, y el de don Quijote y Sancho, que fue de allí a otros dos; que la caída no le concedió que más presto se pusiese en camino. Hubo lágrimas, hubo suspiros, desmayos y sollozos al despedirse don Gregorio de Ana Félix. Ofrecióle Ricote a don Gregorio mil escudos, si los quería; pero él no tomó ninguno, sino solos cinco que le prestó don Antonio, prometiendo la paga dellos en la corte. Con esto, se partieron los dos, y don Quijote y Sancho después, como se ha dicho: don Quijote desarmado y de camino, Sancho a pie, por ir el rucio cargado con las armas.

Capítulo LXVI

Que trata de lo que verá el que lo leyere, o lo oirá el que lo escuchare leer

AL SALIR de Barcelona, volvió don Quijote a mirar el sitio donde había caído, y dijo:

-¡Aquí fue Troya! ¡Aquí mi desdicha, y no mi cobardía, se llevó mis alcanzadas glorias; aquí usó la fortuna conmigo de sus vueltas y revueltas; aquí se escurecieron mis hazañas; aquí, finalmente, cayó mi ventura para jamás levantarse!

Oyendo lo cual Sancho, dijo:

-Tan de valientes corazones es, señor mío, tener sufrimiento en las desgracias como alegría en las prosperidades; y esto lo juzgo por mí mismo, que si cuando era gobernador estaba alegre, agora que soy escudero de a pie, no estoy triste; porque he oído decir que esta que llaman por ahí Fortuna es una mujer borracha y antojadiza, y, sobre todo, ciega, y así, no ve lo que hace, ni sabe a quién derriba, ni a quién ensalza.

-Muy filósofo estás, Sancho -respondió don Quijote-, muy a lo discreto hablas: no sé quién te lo enseña. Lo que te sé decir es que no hay fortuna en el mundo, ni las cosas que en él suceden, buenas o malas que sean, vienen acaso, sino por particular providencia de los cielos, y de aquí viene lo que suele decirse: que cada uno es artífice de su ventura. Yo lo he sido de la mía, pero no con la prudencia necesaria, y así, me han salido al gallarín mis presunciones; pues debiera pensar que al poderoso grandor del caballo del de la Blanca Luna no podía resistir la flaqueza de Rocinante. Atrevíme en fin, hice lo que puede, derribáronme, y, aunque perdí la honra, no perdí, ni puedo perder, la virtud de cumplir mi palabra. Cuando era caballero andante, atrevido y valiente, con mis obras y con mis manos acreditaba mis hechos; y agora, cuando soy escudero pedestre, acreditaré mis palabras cumpliendo la que di de mi promesa. Camina, pues, amigo Sancho, y vamos a tener en nuestra tierra el año del noviciado, con cuyo encerramiento cobraremos virtud nueva para volver al nunca de mí olvidado ejercicio de las armas.

-Señor -respondió Sancho-, no es cosa tan gustosa el caminar a pie, que me mueva e incite a hacer grandes jornadas. Dejemos estas armas colgadas de algún árbol, en lugar de un ahorcado, y, ocupando yo las espaldas del rucio, levantados los pies del suelo, haremos las jornadas como vuestra merced las pidiere y midiere; que pensar que tengo de caminar a pie y hacerlas grandes es pensar en lo escusado.

-Bien has dicho, Sancho -respondió don Quijote-: cuélguense mis armas por trofeo, y al pie dellas, o alrededor dellas, grabaremos en los árboles lo que en el trofeo de las armas de Roldán estaba escrito:

NADIE LAS MUEVA

QUE ESTAR NO PUEDA CON ROLDÁN A PRUEBA.

-Todo eso me parece de perlas -respondió Sancho-; y, si no fuera por la falta que para el camino nos había de hacer Rocinante, también fuera bien dejarle colgado.

-¡Pues ni él ni las armas -replicó don Quijote-quiero que se ahorquen, porque no se diga que a buen servicio, mal galardón!

-Muy bien dice vuestra merced -respondió Sancho-, porque, según opinión de discretos, la culpa del asno no se ha de echar a la albarda; y, pues deste suceso vuestra merced tiene la culpa, castíguese a sí mismo, y no revienten sus iras por las ya rotas y sangrientas armas, ni por las mansedumbres de Rocinante, ni por la blandura de mis pies, queriendo que caminen más de lo justo.

En estas razones y pláticas se les pasó todo aquel día, y aun otros cuatro, sin sucederles cosa que estorbase su camino; y al quinto día, a la entrada de un lugar, hallaron a la puerta de un mesón mucha gente, que, por ser fiesta, se estaba allí solazando. Cuando llegaba a ellos don Quijote, un labrador alzó la voz diciendo:

-Alguno destos dos señores que aquí vienen, que no conocen las partes, dirá lo que se ha de hacer en nuestra apuesta.

-Sí diré, por cierto -respondió don Quijote-, con toda rectitud, si es que alcanzo a entenderla.

-«Es, pues, el caso -dijo el labrador-, señor bueno, que un vecino deste lugar, tan gordo que pesa once arrobas, desafió a correr a otro su vecino, que no pesa más que cinco. Fue la condición que habían de correr una carrera de cien pasos con pesos iguales; y, habiéndole preguntado al desafiador cómo se había de igualar el peso, dijo que el desafiado, que pesa cinco arrobas, se pusiese seis de hierro a cuestras, y así se igualarían las once arrobas del flaco con las once del gordo.»

-Eso no -dijo a esta sazón Sancho, antes que don Quijote respondiese-. Y a mí, que ha pocos días que salí de ser gobernador y juez, como todo el mundo sabe, toca averiguar estas dudas y dar parecer en todo pleito.

-Responde en buen hora -dijo don Quijote-, Sancho amigo, que yo no estoy para dar migas a un gato, según traigo alborotado y trastornado el juicio.

Con esta licencia, dijo Sancho a los labradores, que estaban muchos alrededor dél la boca abierta, esperando la sentencia de la suya:

-Hermanos, lo que el gordo pide no lleva camino, ni tiene sombra de justicia alguna; porque si es verdad lo que se dice, que el desafiado puede escoger las armas, no es bien que éste las escoja tales que le impidan ni estorben el salir vencedor; y así, es mi parecer que el gordo desafiador se escamonde, monde, entresaque, pula y atilde, y saque seis arrobas de sus carnes, de aquí o de allí de su cuerpo, como mejor le pareciere y estuviere; y desta manera, quedando en cinco arrobas de peso, se igualará y ajustará con las cinco de su contrario, y así podrán correr igualmente.

-¡Voto a tal -dijo un labrador que escuchó la sentencia de Sancho-que este señor ha hablado como un bendito y sentenciado como un canónigo! Pero a buen seguro que no ha de querer quitarse el gordo una onza de sus carnes, cuanto más seis arrobas.

-Lo mejor es que no corran -respondió otro-, porque el flaco no se muela con el peso, ni el gordo se descarne; y échese la mitad de la apuesta en vino, y llevemos estos señores a la taberna de lo caro, y sobre mí la capa cuando llueva.

-Yo, señores -respondió don Quijote-, os lo agradezco, pero no puedo detenerme un punto, porque pensamientos y sucesos tristes me hacen parecer descortés y caminar más que de paso.

Y así, dando de las espuelas a Rocinante, pasó adelante, dejándolos admirados de haber visto y notado así su estraña figura como la discreción de su criado, que por tal juzgaron a Sancho. Y otro de los labradores dijo:

-Si el criado es tan discreto, ¡cuál debe de ser el amo! Yo apostaré que si van a estudiar a Salamanca, que a un tris han de venir a ser alcaldes de corte; que todo es burla, sino estudiar y más estudiar, y tener favor y ventura; y cuando menos se piensa el hombre, se halla con una vara en la mano o con una mitra en la cabeza.

Aquella noche la pasaron amo y mozo en mitad del campo, al cielo raso y descubierto; y otro día, siguiendo su camino, vieron que hacia ellos venía un hombre de a pie, con unas alforjas al cuello y una azcona o chuzo en la mano, propio talle de correo de a pie; el cual, como llegó junto a don Quijote, adelantó el paso, y medio corriendo llegó a él, y, abrazándole por el muslo derecho, que no alcanzaba a más, le dijo, con muestras de mucha alegría:

-¡Oh mi señor don Quijote de la Mancha, y qué gran contento ha de llegar al corazón de mi señor el duque cuando sepa que vuestra merced vuelve a su castillo, que todavía se está en él con mi señora la duquesa!

-No os conozco, amigo -respondió don Quijote-, ni sé quién sois, si vos no me lo decís.

-Yo, señor don Quijote -respondió el correo-, soy Tosilos, el lacayo del duque mi señor, que no quise pelear con vuestra merced sobre el casamiento de la hija de doña Rodríguez.

-¡Válame Dios! -dijo don Quijote-. ¿Es posible que sois vos el que los encantadores mis enemigos transformaron en ese lacayo que decís, por defraudarme de la honra de aquella batalla?

-Calle, señor bueno -replicó el cartero-, que no hubo encanto alguno ni mudanza de rostro ninguna: tan lacayo Tosilos entré en la estacada como Tosilos lacayo salí della. Yo pensé casarme sin pelear, por haberme parecido bien la moza, pero sucedióme al revés mi pensamiento, pues, así como vuestra merced se partió de nuestro castillo, el duque mi señor me hizo dar cien palos por haber contravenido a las ordenanzas que me tenía dadas antes de entrar en la batalla, y todo ha parado en que la muchacha es ya monja, y doña Rodríguez se ha vuelto a Castilla, y yo voy ahora a Barcelona, a llevar un pliego de cartas al virrey, que le envía mi amo. Si vuestra merced quiere un traguito, aunque caliente, puro, aquí llevo una calabaza llena de lo caro, con no sé cuántas rajitas de queso de Tronchón, que servirán de llamativo y despertador de la sed, si acaso está durmiendo.

-Quiero el envite -dijo Sancho-, y échese el resto de la cortesía, y escancie el buen Tosilos, a despecho y pesar de cuantos encantadores hay en las Indias.

-En fin -dijo don Quijote-, tú eres, Sancho, el mayor glotón del mundo y el mayor ignorante de la tierra, pues no te persuades que este correo es encantado, y este Tosilos contrahecho. Quédate con él y hártate, que yo me iré adelante poco a poco, esperándote a que vengas.

Rióse el lacayo, desenvainó su calabaza, desalforjó sus rajas, y, sacando un panecillo, él y Sancho se sentaron sobre la yerba verde, y en buena paz compañía despabilaron y dieron fondo con todo el repuesto de las alforjas, con tan buenos alientos, que lamieron el pliego de las cartas, sólo porque olía a queso. Dijo Tosilos a Sancho:

-Sin duda este tu amo, Sancho amigo, debe de ser un loco.

-¿Cómo debe? -respondió Sancho-. No debe nada a nadie, que todo lo paga, y más cuando la moneda es locura. Bien lo veo yo, y bien se lo digo a él; pero, ¿qué aprovecha? Y más agora que va rematado, porque va vencido del Caballero de la Blanca Luna.

Rogóle Tosilos le contase lo que le había sucedido, pero Sancho le respondió que era descortesía dejar que su amo le esperase; que otro día, si se encontrasen, habría lugar para ello. Y, levantándose, después de haberse sacudido el sayo y las migajas de las barbas, antecogió al rucio, y, diciendo «a Dios», dejó a Tosilos y alcanzó a su amo, que a la sombra de un árbol le estaba esperando.

Capítulo LXVII

De la resolución que tomó don Quijote de hacerse pastor y seguir la vida del campo, en tanto que se pasaba el año de su promesa, con otros sucesos en verdad gustosos y buenos

SI MUCHOS pensamientos fatigaban a don Quijote antes de ser derribado, muchos más le fatigaron después de caído. A la sombra del árbol estaba, como se ha dicho, y allí, como moscas a la miel, le acudían y picaban pensamientos: unos iban al desencanto de Dulcinea y otros a la vida que había de hacer en su forzosa retirada. Llegó Sancho y alabóle la liberal condición del lacayo Tosilos.

-¿Es posible -le dijo don Quijote-que todavía, ¡oh Sancho!, pienses que aquél sea verdadero lacayo? Parece que se te ha ido de las mientes haber visto a Dulcinea convertida y transformada en labradora, y al Caballero de los Espejos en el bachiller Carrasco, obras todas de los encantadores que me persiguen. Pero dime ahora: ¿preguntaste a ese Tosilos que dices qué ha hecho Dios de Altisidora: si ha llorado mi ausencia, o si ha dejado ya en las manos del olvido los enamorados pensamientos que en mi presencia la fatigaban?

-No eran -respondió Sancho-los que yo tenía tales que me diesen lugar a preguntar boberías. ¡Cuerpo de mí!, señor, ¿está vuestra merced ahora en términos de inquirir pensamientos ajenos, especialmente amorosos?

-Mira, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, mucha diferencia hay de las obras que se hacen por amor a las que se hacen por agradecimiento. Bien puede ser que un caballero sea desamorado, pero no puede ser, hablando en todo rigor, que sea desagradecido. Quísome bien, al parecer, Altisidora; diome los tres tocadores que sabes, lloró en mi partida, maldíjome, vituperóme, quejóse, a despecho de la vergüenza, públicamente: señales todas de que me adoraba, que las iras de los amantes suelen parar en maldiciones. Yo no tuve esperanzas que darle, ni tesoros que ofrecerle, porque las mías las tengo entregadas a Dulcinea, y los tesoros de los caballeros andantes son, como los de los duendes, aparentes y falsos, y sólo puedo darle estos acuerdos que della tengo, sin perjuicio, pero, de los que tengo de Dulcinea, a quien tú agravias con la remisión que tienes en azotarte y en castigar esas carnes, que vea yo comidas de lobos, que quieren guardarse antes para los gusanos que para el remedio de aquella pobre señora.

-Señor -respondió Sancho-, si va a decir la verdad, yo no me puedo persuadir que los azotes de mis posaderas tengan que ver con los desencantos de los encantados, que es como si dijésemos: «Si os duele la cabeza, untaos las rodillas». A lo menos, yo osaré jurar que en cuantas historias vuesa merced ha leído que tratan de la andante caballería no ha visto algún desencantado por azotes; pero, por sí o por no, yo me los daré, cuando tenga gana y el tiempo me dé comodidad para castigarme.

-Dios lo haga -respondió don Quijote-, y los cielos te den gracia para que caigas en la cuenta y en la obligación que te corre de ayudar a mi señora, que lo es tuya, pues tú eres mío.

En estas pláticas iban siguiendo su camino, cuando llegaron al mismo sitio y lugar donde fueron atropellados de los toros. Reconoció don Quijote; dijo a Sancho: -Éste es el prado donde topamos a las bizarras pastoras y gallardos pastores que en él querían renovar e imitar a la pastoral Arcadia, pensamiento tan nuevo como discreto, a cuya imitación, si es que a ti te parece bien, quería, ¡oh Sancho!, que nos convirtiésemos en pastores, siquiera el tiempo que tengo de estar recogido. Yo compraré algunas ovejas, y todas las demás cosas que al pastoral ejercicio son necesarias, y llamándome yo el pastor Quijotiz, y tú el pastor Pancino, nos andaremos por los montes, por las selvas y por los prados, cantando aquí, endechando allí, bebiendo de los líquidos cristales de las fuentes, o ya de los limpios arroyuelos, o de los caudalosos ríos. Daránnos con abundantísima mano de su dulcísimo fruto las encinas, asiento los troncos de los durísimos alcornoques, sombra los sauces, olor las rosas, alfombras de mil colores matizadas los estendidos prados, aliento el aire claro y puro, luz la luna y las estrellas, a pesar de la escuridad de la noche, gusto el canto, alegría el lloro, Apolo versos, el amor conceptos, con que podremos hacernos eternos y famosos, no sólo en los presentes, sino en los venideros siglos.

-Pardiez -dijo Sancho-, que me ha cuadrado, y aun esquinado, tal género de vida; y más, que no la ha de haber aún bien visto el bachiller Sansón Carrasco y maese Nicolás el barbero, cuando la han de querer seguir, y hacerse pastores con nosotros; y aun quiera Dios no le venga en voluntad al cura de entrar también en el aprisco, según es de alegre y amigo de holgarse.

-Tú has dicho muy bien -dijo don Quijote-; y podrá llamarse el bachiller Sansón Carrasco, si entra en el pastoral gremio, como entrará sin duda, el pastor Sansonino, o ya el pastor Carrascón; el barbero Nicolás se podrá llamar Miculoso, como ya el antiguo Boscán se llamó Nemoroso; al cura no sé qué nombre le pongamos, si no es algún derivativo de su nombre, llamándole el pastor Curiambro. Las pastoras de quien hemos de ser amantes, como entre peras podremos escoger sus nombres; y, pues el de mi señora cuadra así al de pastora como al de princesa, no hay para qué cansarme en buscar otro que mejor le venga; tú, Sancho, pondrás a la tuya el que quisieres.

-No pienso -respondió Sancho-ponerle otro alguno sino el de Teresona, que le vendrá bien con su gordura y con el propio que tiene, pues se llama Teresa; y más, que, celebrándola yo en mis versos, vengo a descubrir mis castos deseos, pues no ando a buscar pan de trastrigo por las casas ajenas. El cura no será bien que tenga pastora, por dar buen ejemplo; y si quisiere el bachiller tenerla, su alma en su palma.

-¡Válame Dios -dijo don Quijote-, y qué vida nos hemos de dar, Sancho amigo! ¡Qué de churumbelas han de llegar a nuestros oídos, qué de gaitas zamoranas, qué de tamborines, y qué de sonajas, y qué de rabeles! Pues, ¡qué si destas diferencias de músicas resuena la de los albogues! Allí se verá casi todos los instrumentos pastorales.-¿Qué son albogues -preguntó Sancho-, que ni los he oído nombrar, ni los he visto en toda mi vida?

-Albogues son -respondió don Quijote-unas chapas a modo de candeleros de azófar, que, dando una con otra por lo vacío y hueco, hace un son, si no muy agradable ni armónico, no descontenta, y viene bien con la rusticidad de la gaita y del tamborín; y este nombre albogues es morisco, como lo son todos aquellos que en nuestra lengua castellana comienzan en al, conviene a saber: almohaza, almorzar, alhombra, alguacil, alhucema, almacén, alcancía, y otros semejantes, que deben ser pocos más; y solos tres tiene nuestra lengua que son moriscos y acaban en i, y son: borceguí, zaquizamí y maravedí. Alhelí y alfaquí, tanto por el al primero como por el i en que acaban, son conocidos por arábigos. Esto te he dicho, de paso, por habérmelo reducido a la memoria la ocasión de haber nombrado albogues; y hanos de ayudar mucho al parecer en perfección este ejercicio el ser yo algún tanto poeta, como tú sabes, y el serlo también en extremo el bachiller Sansón Carrasco. Del cura no digo nada; pero yo apostaré que debe de tener sus puntas y collares de poeta; y que las tenga también maese Nicolás, no dudo en ello, porque todos, o los más, son guitarristas y copleros. Yo me quejaré de ausencia; tú te alabarás de firme enamorado; el pastor Carrascón, de desdeñado; y el cura Curiambro, de lo que él más puede servirse, y así, andará la cosa que no haya más que desear.

A lo que respondió Sancho:

-Yo soy, señor, tan desgraciado que temo no ha de llegar el día en que en tal ejercicio me vea. ¡Oh, qué polidas cucharas tengo de hacer cuando pastor me vea! ¡Qué de migas, qué de natas, qué de guirnalda y qué de zarandajas pastoriles, que, puesto que no me granjeen fama de discreto, no dejarán de granjearme la de ingenioso! Sanchica mi hija nos llevará la comida al hato. Pero, ¡guarda!, que es de buen parecer, y hay pastores más maliciosos que simples, y no querría que fuese por lana y volviese trasquilada; y también suelen andar los amores y los no buenos deseos por los campos como por las ciudades, y por las pastorales chozas como por los reales palacios, y, quitada la causa se quita el pecado; y ojos que no veen, corazón que no quiebra; y más vale salto de mata que ruego de hombres buenos.

-No más refranes, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, pues cualquiera de los que has dicho basta para dar a entender tu pensamiento; y muchas veces te he aconsejado que no seas tan pródigo en refranes y que te vayas a la mano en decirlos; pero paréceme que es predicar en desierto, y «castígame mi madre, y yo trómpogelas».

-Paréceme -respondió Sancho-que vuesa merced es como lo que dicen: «Dijo la sartén a la caldera: Quítate allá ojinegra». Estáme reprehendiendo que no diga yo refranes, y ensártalos vuesa merced de dos en dos.

-Mira, Sancho -respondió don Quijote-: yo traigo los refranes a propósito, y vienen cuando los digo como anillo en el dedo; pero tráelos tan por los cabellos, que los arrastras, y no los guías; y si no me acuerdo mal, otra vez te he dicho que los refranes son sentencias breves, sacadas de la experiencia y especulación de nuestros antiguos sabios; y el refrán que no viene a propósito, antes es disparate que sentencia. Pero dejémonos desto, y, pues ya viene la noche, retirémonos del camino real algún trecho, donde pasaremos esta noche, y Dios sabe lo que será mañana.

Retiráronse, cenaron tarde y mal, bien contra la voluntad de Sancho, a quien se le representaban las estrechezas de la andante caballería usadas en las selvas y en los montes, si bien tal vez la abundancia se mostraba en los castillos y casas, así de don Diego de Miranda como en las bodas del rico Camacho, y de don Antonio Moreno; pero consideraba no ser posible ser siempre de día ni siempre de noche, y así, pasó aquélla durmiendo, y su amo velando.

Capítulo LXVIII

De la cerdosa aventura que le aconteció a don Quijote

ERA LA NOCHE algo oscura, puesto que la luna estaba en el cielo, pero no en parte que pudiese ser vista: que tal vez la señora Diana se va a pasear a los antípodas, y deja los montes negros y los valles oscuros. Cumplió don Quijote con la naturaleza durmiendo el primer sueño, sin dar lugar al segundo; bien al revés de Sancho, que nunca tuvo segundo, porque le duraba el sueño desde la noche hasta la mañana, en que se mostraba su buena complexión y pocos cuidados. Los de don Quijote le desvelaron de manera que despertó a Sancho y le dijo:

-Maravillado estoy, Sancho, de la libertad de tu condición: yo imagino que eres hecho de mármol, o de duro bronce, en quien no cabe movimiento ni sentimiento alguno. Yo velo cuando tú duermes, yo lloro cuando cantas, yo me desmayo de ayuno cuanto tú estás perezoso y desalentado de puro hartado. De buenos criados es conllevar las penas de sus señores y sentir sus sentimientos, por el bien parecer siquiera. Mira la serenidad desta noche, la soledad en que estamos, que nos convida a entremeter alguna vigilia entre nuestro sueño. Levántate, por tu vida, y desvíate algún trecho de aquí, y con buen ánimo y denuedo agradecido date trecientos o cuatrocientos azotes a buena cuenta de los del desencanto de Dulcinea; y esto rogando te lo suplico, que no quiero venir contigo a los brazos, como la otra vez, porque sé que los tienes pesados. Después que te hayas dado, pasaremos lo que resta de la noche cantando, yo mi ausencia y tú tu firmeza, dando desde agora principio al ejercicio pastoral que hemos de tener en nuestra aldea.

-Señor -respondió Sancho-, no soy yo religioso para que desde la mitad de mi sueño me levante y me discipline, ni menos me parece que del extremo del dolor de los azotes se pueda pasar al de la música. Vuesa merced me deje dormir y no me apriete en lo del azotarme; que me hará hacer juramento de no tocarme jamás al pelo del sayo, no que al de mis carnes.

-¡Oh alma endurecida! ¡Oh escudero sin piedad! ¡Oh pan mal empleado y mercedes mal consideradas las que te he hecho y pienso de hacerte! Por mí te has visto gobernador, y por mí te vees con esperanzas propincuas de ser conde, o tener otro título equivalente, y no tardará el cumplimiento de ellas más de cuanto tarde en pasar este año; que yo post tenebras spero lucem.

-No entiendo eso -replico Sancho-; sólo entiendo que, en tanto que duermo, ni tengo temor, ni esperanza, ni trabajo ni gloria; y bien haya el que inventó el sueño, capa que cubre todos los humanos pensamientos, manjar que quita la hambre, agua que ahuyenta la sed, fuego que calienta el frío, frío que templa el ardor, y, finalmente, moneda general con que todas las cosas se compran, balanza y peso que iguala al pastor con el rey y al simple con el discreto. Sola una cosa tiene mala el sueño, según he oído decir, y es que se parece a la muerte, pues de un dormido a un muerto hay muy poca diferencia.

-Nunca te he oído hablar, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, tan elegantemente como ahora, por donde vengo a conocer ser verdad el refrán que tú algunas veces sueles decir: «No con quien naces, sino con quien paces».

-¡Ah, pesia tal -replicó Sancho-, señor nuestro amo! No soy yo ahora el que ensarta refranes, que también a vuestra merced se le caen de la boca de dos en dos mejor que a mí, sino que debe de haber entre los míos y los suyos esta diferencia: que los de vuestra merced vendrán a tiempo y los míos a deshora; pero, en efecto, todos son refranes.

En esto estaban, cuando sintieron un sordo estruendo y un áspero ruido, que por todos aquellos valles se extendía. Levantóse en pie don Quijote y puso mano a la espada, y Sancho se agazapó debajo del rucio, poniéndose a los lados el lío de las armas, y la albarda de su jumento, tan temblando de miedo como alborotado don Quijote. De punto en punto iba creciendo el ruido, y, llegándose cerca a los dos temerosos; a lo menos, al uno, que al otro, ya se sabe su valentía.

Es, pues, el caso que llevaban unos hombres a vender a una feria más de seiscientos puercos, con los cuales caminaban a aquellas horas, y era tanto el ruido que llevaban y el gruñir y el bufar, que ensordecieron los oídos de don Quijote y de Sancho, que no advirtieron lo que ser podía. Llegó de tropel la estendida y gruñidora piara, y, sin tener respeto a la autoridad de don Quijote, ni a la de Sancho, pasaron por cima de los dos, deshaciendo las trincheas de Sancho, y derribando no sólo a don Quijote, sino llevando por añadidura a Rocinante. El tropel, el gruñir, la presteza con que llegaron los animales inmundos, puso en confusión y por el suelo a la albarda, a las armas, al rucio, a Rocinante, a Sancho y a don Quijote.

Levantóse Sancho como mejor pudo, y pidió a su amo la espada, diciéndole que quería matar media docena de aquellos señores y descomedidos puercos, que ya había conocido que lo eran. Don Quijote le dijo:

-Déjalos estar, amigo, que esta afrenta es pena de mi pecado, y justo castigo del cielo es que a un caballero andante vencido le coman adivas, y le piquen avispas y le hollen puercos.

-También debe de ser castigo del cielo -respondió Sancho- que a los escuderos de los caballeros vencidos los puncen moscas, los coman piojos y les embista la hambre. Si los escuderos fuéramos hijos de los caballeros a quien servimos, o parientes suyos muy cercanos, no fuera mucho que nos alcanzara la pena de sus culpas hasta la cuarta generación; pero, ¿qué tienen que ver los Panzas con los Quijotes? Ahora bien: tornémonos a acomodar y durmamos lo poco que queda de la noche, y amanecerá Dios y medraremos.

-Duerme tú, Sancho -respondió don Quijote-, que naciste para dormir; que yo, que nací para velar, en el tiempo que falta de aquí al día, daré rienda a mis pensamientos, y los desfogaré en un madrigalete, que, sin que tú lo sepas, anoche compuse en la memoria.

-A mí me parece -respondió Sancho-que los pensamientos que dan lugar a hacer coplas no deben de ser muchos. Vuesa merced coplee cuanto quisiere, que yo dormiré cuanto pudiere.

Y luego, tomando en el suelo cuanto quiso, se acurrucó y durmió a sueño suelto, sin que fianzas, ni deudas, ni dolor alguno se lo estorbase. Don Quijote, arrimado a un tronco de una haya o de un alcornoque -que Cide Hamete Benengeli no distingue el árbol que era-, al son de sus mismos suspiros, cantó de esta suerte:

-Amor, cuando yo pienso en el mal que me das, terrible y fuerte, voy corriendo a la muerte, pensando así acabar mi mal inmenso;

mas, en llegando al paso que es puerto en este mar de mi tormento, tanta alegría siento,
que la vida se esfuerza y no le paso.

Así el vivir me mata, que la muerte me torna a dar la vida.
¡Oh condición no oída, la que conmigo muerte y vida trata!

Cada verso déstos acompañaba con muchos suspiros y no pocas lágrimas, bien como aquél cuyo corazón tenía traspasado con el dolor del vencimiento y con la ausencia de Dulcinea.

Llegóse en esto el día, dio el sol con sus rayos en los ojos a Sancho, despertó y esperezóse, sacudiéndose y estirándose los perezosos miembros; miró el destrozo que habían hecho los puercos en su repostería, y maldijo la piara y aun más adelante. Finalmente, volvieron los dos a su comenzado camino, y al declinar de la tarde vieron que hacia ellos venían hasta diez hombres de a caballo y cuatro o cinco de a pie. Sobresaltóse el corazón de don Quijote y azoróse el de Sancho, porque la gente que se les llegaba traía lanzas y adargas y venía muy a punto de guerra. Volvióse don Quijote a Sancho, y díjole:

-Si yo pudiera, Sancho, ejercitar mis armas, y mi promesa no me hubiera atado los brazos, esta máquina que sobre nosotros viene la tuviera yo por tortas y pan pintado, pero podría ser fuese otra cosa de la que tememos.

Llegaron, en esto, los de a caballo, y arbolando las lanzas, sin hablar palabra alguna rodearon a don Quijote y se las pusieron a las espaldas y pechos, amenazándole de muerte. Uno de los de a pie, puesto un dedo en la boca, en señal de que callase, asió del freno de Rocinante y le sacó del camino; y los demás de a pie, antecogiendo a Sancho y al rucio, guardando todos maravilloso silencio, siguieron los pasos del que llevaba a don Quijote, el cual dos o tres veces quiso preguntar adónde le llevaban o qué querían; pero, apenas comenzaba a mover los labios, cuando se los iban a cerrar con los hierros de las lanzas; y a Sancho le acontecía lo mismo, porque, apenas daba muestras de hablar, cuando uno de los de a pie, con un aguijón, le punzaba, y al rucio ni más ni menos como si hablar quisiera. Cerró la noche, apresuraron el paso, creció en los dos presos el miedo, y más cuando oyeron que de cuando en cuando les decían:

-¡Caminad, trogloditas!

-¡Callad, bárbaros!

-¡Pagad, antropófagos!

-¡No os quejéis, scitas, ni abráis los ojos, Polifemos matadores, leones carniceros!

Y otros nombres semejantes a éstos, con que atormentaban los oídos de los miserables amo y mozo. Sancho iba diciendo entre sí:

-¿Nosotros tortolitas? ¿Nosotros barberos ni estropajos? ¿Nosotros perritas, a quien dicen cita, cita? No me contentan nada estos nombres: a mal viento va esta parva; todo el mal nos viene junto, como al perro los palos, y ¡ojalá parase en ellos lo que amenaza esta aventura tan desventurada!

Iba don Quijote embelesado, sin poder atinar con cuantos discursos hacía qué serían aquellos nombres llenos de vituperios que les ponían, de los cuales sacaba en limpio no esperar ningún bien y temer mucho mal. Llegaron, en esto, un hora casi de la noche, a un castillo, que bien conoció don Quijote que era el del duque, donde había poco que habían estado.

-¡Váleme Dios! -dijo, así como conoció la estancia-y ¿qué será esto? Sí que en esta casa todo es cortesía y buen comedimiento, pero para los vencidos el bien se vuelve en mal y el mal en peor.

Entraron al patio principal del castillo, y viéronle aderezado y puesto de manera que les acrecentó la admiración y les dobló el miedo, como se verá en el siguiente capítulo.

Capítulo LXIX

Del más raro y más nuevo suceso que en todo el discurso desta grande historia avino a don Quijote

APEÁRONSE los de a caballo, y, junto con los de a pie, tomando en peso y arrebatadamente a Sancho y a don Quijote, los entraron en el patio, alrededor del cual ardían casi cien hachas, puestas en sus blandones, y, por los corredores del patio, más de quinientas luminarias; de modo que, a pesar de la noche, que se mostraba algo oscura, no se echaba de ver la falta del día. En medio del patio se levantaba un túmulo como dos varas del suelo, cubierto todo con un grandísimo dosel de terciopelo negro, alrededor del cual, por sus gradas, ardían velas de cera blanca sobre más de cien candeleros de plata; encima del cual túmulo se mostraba un cuerpo muerto de una tan hermosa doncella, que hacía parecer con su hermosura hermosa a la misma muerte. Tenía la cabeza sobre una almohada de brocado, coronada con una guirnalda de diversas y odoríferas flores tejida, las manos cruzadas sobre el pecho, y, entre ellas, un ramo de amarilla y vencedora palma.

A un lado del patio estaba puesto un teatro, y en dos sillas sentados dos personajes, que, por tener coronas en la cabeza y ceptros en las manos, daban señales de ser algunos reyes, ya verdaderos o ya fingidos. Al lado deste teatro, adonde se subía por algunas gradas, estaban otras dos sillas, sobre las cuales los que trujeron los presos sentaron a don Quijote y a Sancho, todo esto callando y dándoles a entender con señales a los dos que asimismo callasen; pero, sin que se lo señalaran, callaron ellos, porque la admiración de lo que estaban mirando les tenía atadas las lenguas.

Subieron, en esto, al teatro, con mucho acompañamiento, dos principales personajes, que luego fueron conocidos de don Quijote ser el duque y la duquesa, sus huéspedes, los cuales se sentaron en dos riquísimas sillas, junto a los dos que parecían reyes. ¿Quién no se había de admirar con esto, añadiéndose a ello haber conocido don Quijote que el cuerpo muerto que estaba sobre el túmulo era el de la hermosa Altisidora?

Al subir el duque y la duquesa en el teatro, se levantaron don Quijote y Sancho y les hicieron una profunda humillación, y los duques hicieron lo mismo, inclinando algún tanto las cabezas.

Salió, en esto, de través un ministro, y, llegando a Sancho, le echó una ropa de bocacé negro encima, toda pintada con llamas de fuego, y, quitándole la caperuza, le puso en la cabeza una coraza, al modo de las que sacan los penitenciados por el Santo Oficio; y díjole al oído que no descosiese los labios, porque le echarían una mordaza, o le quitarían la vida. Mirábase Sancho de arriba abajo, veíase ardiendo en llamas, pero como no le quemaban, no las estimaba en dos ardites. Quitóse la coraza, viola pintada de diablos, volviósela a poner, diciendo entre sí:

-Aún bien, que ni ellas me abrasan ni ellos me llevan.

Mirábale también don Quijote, y, aunque el temor le tenía suspensos los sentidos, no dejó de reírse de ver la figura de Sancho. Comenzó, en esto, a salir, al parecer, debajo del túmulo un son sumiso y agradable de flautas, que, por no ser impedido de alguna humana voz, porque en aquel sitio el mismo silencio guardaba silencio a sí mismo, se mostraba blando y amoroso. Luego hizo de sí improvisa muestra, junto a la almohada del, al parecer, cadáver, un hermoso mancebo vestido a lo romano, que, al son de una arpa, que él mismo tocaba, cantó con suavísima y clara voz estas dos estancias:

-En tanto que en sí vuelve Altisidora, muerta por la crueldad de don Quijote,
y en tanto que en la corte encantadora se vistieren las damas de picote, y en tanto que a sus dueñas mi señora 5

vistiere de bayeta y de anascote, cantaré su belleza y su desgracia, con mejor plectro que el cantor de Tracia.

Y aun no se me figura que me toca aqueste oficio solamente en vida; 10
mas, con la lengua muerta y fría en la boca, pienso mover la voz a ti debida.
Libre mi alma de su estrecha roca, por el estigio lago conducida, celebrándote irá, y aquel sonido 15
hará parar las aguas del olvido.

-No más -dijo a esta sazón uno de los dos que parecían reyes-: no más, cantor divino; que sería proceder en infinito representarnos ahora la muerte y las gracias de la sin par Altisidora, no muerta, como el mundo ignorante piensa, sino

viva en las lenguas de la Fama, y en la pena que para volverla a la perdida luz ha de pasar Sancho Panza, que está presente; y así, ¡oh tú, Radamanto, que conmigo juzgas en las cavernas lóbregas de Lite!, pues sabes todo aquello que en los inescrutables hados está determinado acerca de volver en sí esta doncella, dilo y decláralo luego, porque no se nos dilate el bien que con su nueva vuelta esperamos.

Apenas hubo dicho esto Minos, juez y compañero de Radamanto, cuando, levantándose en pie Radamanto, dijo:

-¡Ea, ministros de esta casa, altos y bajos, grandes y chicos, acudid unos tras otros y sellad el rostro de Sancho con veinte y cuatro mamonas, y doce pellizcos y seis alfilerazos en brazos y lomos, que en esta ceremonia consiste la salud de Altisidora!

Oyendo lo cual Sancho Panza, rompió el silencio, y dijo:

-¡Voto a tal, así me deje yo sellar el rostro ni manosearme la cara como volverme moro! ¡Cuerpo de mí! ¿Qué tiene que ver manosearme el rostro con la resurrección desta doncella? Regostóse la vieja a los bledos. Encantan a Dulcinea, y azótanme para que se desencante; muérese Altisidora de males que Dios quiso darle, y hanla de resucitar hacerme a mí veinte y cuatro mamonas, y acribarme el cuerpo a alfilerazos y acardenalarme los brazos a pellizcos. ¡Esas burlas, a un cuñado, que yo soy perro viejo, y no hay conmigo tus, tus!

-¡Morirás! -dijo en alta voz Radamanto-. Ablándate, tigre; humíllate, Nembrot soberbio, y sufre y calla, pues no te piden imposibles. Y no te metas en averiguar las dificultades deste negocio: mamonado has de ser, acrebillado te has de ver, pellizcado has de gemir. ¡Ea, digo, ministros, cumplid mi mandamiento; si no, por la fe de hombre de bien, que habéis de ver para lo que nacistes!

Parecieron, en esto, que por el patio venían, hasta seis dueñas en procesión, una tras otra, las cuatro con antojos, y todas levantadas las manos derechas en alto, con cuatro dedos de muñecas de fuera, para hacer las manos más largas, como ahora se usa. No las hubo visto Sancho, cuando, bramando como un toro, dijo:

-Bien podré yo dejarme manosear de todo el mundo, pero consentir que me toquen dueñas, ¡eso no! Gatéenme el rostro, como hicieron a mi amo en este mesmo castillo; traspásenme el cuerpo con puntas de dagas buidas; atenácenme los brazos con tenazas de fuego, que yo lo llevaré en paciencia, o serviré a estos señores; pero que me toquen dueñas no lo consentiré, si me llevase el diablo.

Rompió también el silencio don Quijote, diciendo a Sancho:

-Ten paciencia, hijo, y da gusto a estos señores, y muchas gracias al cielo por haber puesto tal virtud en tu persona, que con el martirio della desencantes los encantados y resucites los muertos.

Ya estaban las dueñas cerca de Sancho, cuando él, más blando y más persuadido, poniéndose bien en la silla, dio rostro y barba a la primera, la cual la hizo una mamona muy bien sellada, y luego una gran reverencia.

-¡Menos cortesía; menos mudas, señora dueña -dijo Sancho-; que por Dios que traéis las manos oliendo a vinagrillo!

Finalmente, todas las dueñas le sellaron, y otra mucha gente de casa le pellizcaron; pero lo que él no pudo sufrir fue el punzamiento de los alfileres; y así, se levantó de la silla, al parecer mohíno, y, asiendo de una hacha encendida que junto a él estaba, dio tras las dueñas, y tras todos su verdugos, diciendo:

-¡Afuera, ministros infernales, que no soy yo de bronce, para no sentir tan extraordinarios martirios!

En esto, Altisidora, que debía de estar cansada por haber estado tanto tiempo supina, se volvió de un lado; visto lo cual por los circunstantes, casi todos a una voz dijeron:

-¡Viva es Altisidora! ¡Altisidora vive!

Mandó Radamanto a Sancho que depusiese la ira, pues ya se había alcanzado el intento que se procuraba.

Así como don Quijote vio rebullir a Altisidora, se fue a poner de rodillas delante de Sancho, diciéndole:

-Agora es tiempo, hijo de mis entrañas, no que escudero mío, que te des algunos de los azotes que estás obligado a dar por el desencanto de Dulcinea. Ahora, digo, que es el tiempo donde tienes sazónada la virtud, y con eficacia de obrar el bien que de ti se espera.

A lo que respondió Sancho:

-Esto me parece argado sobre argado, y no miel sobre hojuelas. Bueno sería que tras pellizcos, mamonas y alfilerazos viniesen ahora los azotes. No tienen más que hacer sino tomar una gran piedra, y atármela al cuello, y dar conmigo en un pozo, de lo que a mí no pesaría mucho, si es que para curar los males ajenos tengo yo de ser la vaca de la boda. Déjenme; si no, por Dios que lo arroje y lo eche todo a trece, aunque no se venda.

Ya en esto, se había sentado en el túmulo Altisidora, y al mismo instante sonaron las chirimías, a quien acompañaron las flautas y las voces de todos, que aclamaban:

-¡Viva Altisidora! ¡Altisidora viva!

Levantáronse los duques y los reyes Minos y Radamanto, y todos juntos, con don Quijote y Sancho, fueron a recibir a Altisidora y a bajarla del túmulo; la cual, haciendo de la desmayada, se inclinó a los duques y a los reyes, y, mirando de través a don Quijote, le dijo:

-Dios te lo perdone, desamorado caballero, pues por tu crueldad he estado en el otro mundo, a mi parecer, más de mil años; y a ti, ¡oh el más compasivo escudero que contiene el orbe!, te agradezco la vida que poseo. Dispón desde hoy más, amigo Sancho, de seis camisas más que te mando para que hagas otras seis para ti; y, si no son todas sanas, a lo menos son todas limpias.

Besóle por ello las manos Sancho, con la coraza en la mano y las rodillas en el suelo. Mandó el duque que se la quitasen, y le volviesen su caperuza, y le pusiesen el sayo, y le quitasen la ropa de las llamas. Suplicó Sancho al duque que le dejasen la ropa y mitra, que las quería llevar a su tierra, por señal y memoria de aquel nunca visto suceso. La duquesa respondió que sí dejarían, que ya sabía él cuán grande amiga suya era. Mandó el duque despejar el patio, y que todos se recogiesen a sus estancias, y que a don Quijote y a Sancho los llevasen a las que ellos ya se sabían.

Capítulo LXX

Que sigue al de sesenta y nueve, y trata de cosas no escusadas para la claridad desta historia

DURMIÓ Sancho aquella noche en una carriola, en el mesmo aposento de don Quijote, cosa que él quisiera escusarla, si pudiera, porque bien sabía que su amo no le había de dejar dormir a preguntas y a respuestas, y no se hallaba en disposición de hablar mucho, porque los dolores de los martirios pasados los tenía presentes, y no le dejaban libre la lengua, y viniérale más a cuento dormir en una choza solo, que no en aquella rica estancia acompañado. Salióle su temor tan verdadero y su sospecha tan cierta, que, apenas hubo entrado su señor en el lecho, cuando dijo:

-¿Qué te parece, Sancho, del suceso desta noche? Grande y poderosa es la fuerza del desdén desamorado, como por tus mismos ojos has visto muerta a Altisidora, no con otras saetas, ni con otra espada, ni con otro instrumento bélico, ni con venenos mortíferos, sino con la consideración del rigor y el desdén con que yo siempre la he tratado.

-Muriérase ella en hora buena cuanto quisiera y como quisiera -respondió Sancho-, y dejárame a mí en mi casa, pues ni yo la enamoré ni la desdeñé en mi vida. Yo no sé ni puedo pensar cómo sea que la salud de Altisidora, doncella más antojadiza que discreta, tenga que ver, como otra vez he dicho, con los martirios de Sancho Panza. Agora sí que vengo a conocer clara y distintamente que hay encantadores y encantos en el mundo, de quien Dios me libre, pues yo no me sé librar; con todo esto, suplico a vuestra merced me deje dormir y no me pregunte más, si no quiere que me arroje por una ventana abajo.

-Duerme, Sancho amigo -respondió don Quijote-, si es que te dan lugar los alfilerazos y pellizcos recibidos, y las mamonas hechas.

-Ningún dolor -replicó Sancho-llegó a la afrenta de las mamonas, no por otra cosa que por habérmelas hecho dueña, que confundidas sean; y torno a suplicar a vuesa merced me deje dormir, porque el sueño es alivio de las miserias de los que las tienen despiertas.

-Sea así -dijo don Quijote-, y Dios te acompañe.

Durmiéronse los dos, y en este tiempo quiso escribir y dar cuenta Cide Hamete, autor desta grande historia, qué les movió a los duques a levantar el edificio de la máquina referida. Y dice que, no habiéndosele olvidado al bachiller Sansón Carrasco cuando el Caballero de los Espejos fue vencido y derribado por don Quijote, cuyo vencimiento y caída borró y deshizo todos sus designios, quiso volver a probar la mano, esperando mejor suceso que el pasado; y así, informándose del paje que llevó la carta y presente a Teresa Panza, mujer de Sancho, adónde don Quijote quedaba, buscó nuevas armas y caballo, y puso en el escudo la blanca luna, llevándolo todo sobre un macho, a quien guiaba un labrador, y no Tomé Cecial, su antiguo escudero, porque no fuese conocido de Sancho ni de don Quijote.

Llegó, pues, al castillo del duque, que le informó el camino y derrota que don Quijote llevaba, con intento de hallarse en las justas de Zaragoza. Díjole asimismo las burlas que le había hecho con la traza del desencanto de Dulcinea, que había de ser a costa de las posaderas de Sancho. En fin, dio cuenta de la burla que Sancho había hecho a su amo, dándole a entender que Dulcinea estaba encantada y transformada en labradora, y cómo la duquesa su mujer había dado a entender a Sancho que él era el que se engañaba, porque verdaderamente estaba encantada Dulcinea; de que no poco se rió y admiró el bachiller, considerando la agudeza y simplicidad de Sancho, como del extremo de la locura de don Quijote.

Pidióle el duque que si le hallase, y le venciese o no, se volviese por allí a darle cuenta del suceso. Hízolo así el bachiller; partióse en su busca, no le halló en Zaragoza, pasó adelante y sucedióle lo que queda referido.

Volvióse por el castillo del duque y contóselo todo, con las condiciones de la batalla, y que ya don Quijote volvía a cumplir, como buen caballero andante, la palabra de retirarse un año en su aldea, en el cual tiempo podía ser, dijo el bachiller, que sanase de su locura; que ésta era la intención que le había movido a hacer aquellas transformaciones, por ser cosa de lástima que un hidalgo tan bien entendido como don Quijote fuese loco. Con esto, se despidió del duque, y se volvió a su lugar, esperando en él a don Quijote, que tras él venía.

De aquí tomó ocasión el duque de hacerle aquella burla: tanto era lo que gustaba de las cosas de Sancho y de don Quijote; y haciendo tomar los caminos cerca y lejos del castillo por todas las partes que imaginó que podría volver don Quijote, con muchos criados suyos de a pie y de a caballo, para que por fuerza o de grado le trujesen al castillo, si le hallasen. Halláronle, dieron aviso al duque, el cual, ya prevenido de todo lo que había de hacer, así como tuvo noticia de su llegada, mandó encender las hachas y las luminarias del patio y poner a Altisidora sobre el túmulo, con todos los aparatos que se han contado, tan al vivo, y tan bien hechos, que de la verdad a ellos había bien poca diferencia.

Y dice más Cide Hamete: que tiene para sí ser tan locos los burladores como los burlados, y que no estaban los duques dos dedos de parecer tontos, pues tanto ahínco ponían en burlarse de dos tontos.

Los cuales, el uno durmiendo a sueño suelto, y el otro velando a pensamientos desatados, les tomó el día y la gana de levantarse; que las ociosas plumas, ni vencido ni vencedor, jamás dieron gusto a don Quijote.

Altisidora -en la opinión de don Quijote, vuelta de muerte a vida-, siguiendo el humor de sus señores, coronada con la misma guirnalda que en el túmulo tenía, y vestida una tunicela de tafetán blanco, sembrada de flores de oro, y sueltos los cabellos por las espaldas, arrimada a un báculo de negro y finísimo ébano, entró en el aposento de don Quijote, con cuya presencia turbado y confuso, se encogió y cubrió casi todo con las sábanas y colchas de la cama, muda la lengua, sin que acertase a hacerle cortesía ninguna. Sentóse Altisidora en una silla, junto a su cabecera, y, después de haber dado un gran suspiro, con voz tierna y debilitada le dijo:

-Cuando las mujeres principales y las recatadas doncellas atropellan por la honra, y dan licencia a la lengua que rompa por todo inconveniente, dando noticia en público de los secretos que su corazón encierra, en estrecho término se hallan. Yo, señor don Quijote de la Mancha, soy una destas, apretada, vencida y enamorada; pero, con todo esto, sufrida y honesta; tanto que, por serlo tanto, reventó mi alma por mi silencio y perdí la vida. Dos días ha que con la consideración del rigor con que me has tratado, empedernido caballero!, he estado muerta, o, a lo menos, juzgada por tal de los que me han visto; y si no fuera porque el Amor, condoliéndose de mí, depositó mi remedio en los martirios deste buen escudero, allá me quedara en el otro mundo.

-Bien pudiera el Amor -dijo Sancho-depositarlos en los de mi asno, que yo se lo agradeciera. Pero dígame, señora, así el cielo la acomode con otro más blando amante que mi amo: ¿qué es lo que vio en el otro mundo? ¿Qué hay en el infierno? Porque quien muere desesperado, por fuerza ha de tener aquel paradero.

-La verdad que os diga -respondió Altisidora-, yo no debí de morir del todo, pues no entré en el infierno; que, si allá entrara, una por una no pudiera salir dél, aunque quisiera. La verdad es que llegué a la puerta, adonde estaban jugando hasta una docena de diablos a la pelota, todos en calzas y en jubón, con valonas guarnecidas con puntas de randas flamencas, y con unas vueltas de lo mismo, que les servían de puños, con cuatro dedos de brazo de fuera, porque pareciesen las manos más largas, en las cuales tenían unas palas de fuego; y lo que más me admiró fue que les servían, en lugar de pelotas, libros, al parecer, llenos de viento y de borra, cosa maravillosa y nueva; pero esto no me admiró tanto como el ver que, siendo natural de los jugadores el alegrarse los gananciosos y entristecerse los que pierden, allí en aquel juego todos gruñían, todos regañaban y todos se maldecían.

-Eso no es maravilla -respondió Sancho-, porque los diablos, jueguen o no jueguen, nunca pueden estar contentos, ganen o no ganen.

-Así debe de ser -respondió Altisidora-; mas hay otra cosa que también me admira, quiero decir me admiró entonces, y fue que al primer voleo no quedaba pelota en pie, ni de provecho para servir otra vez; y así, menudeaban libros nuevos y viejos, que era una maravilla. A uno dellos, nuevo, flamante y bien encuadernado, le dieron un papirotazo que le sacaron las tripas y le esparcieron las hojas. Dijo un diablo a otro: «Mirad qué libro es éste». Y el diablo le respondió: «Ésta es la Segunda parte de la historia de don Quijote de la Mancha, no compuesta por Cide Hamete, su primer autor, sino por un aragonés, que él dice ser natural de Tordesillas». «Quitádmele de ahí -respondió el otro diablo-, y metedle en los abismos del infierno: no le vean más mis ojos». «¿Tan malo es?», respondió el otro. «Tan malo -replicó el primero-, que si de propósito yo mismo me pusiera a hacerle peor, no acertara». Prosiguieron su juego, peloteando otros libros, y yo, por haber oído nombrar a don Quijote, a quien tanto adamo y quiero, procuré que se me quedase en la memoria esta visión.

-Visión debió de ser, sin duda -dijo don Quijote-, porque no hay otro yo en el mundo, y ya esa historia anda por acá de mano en mano, pero no para en ninguna, porque todos la dan del pie. Yo no me he alterado en oír que ando como cuerpo fantástico por las tinieblas del abismo, ni por la claridad de la tierra, porque no soy aquel de quien esa historia trata. Si ella fuere buena, fiel y verdadera, tendrá siglos de vida; pero si fuere mala, de su parto a la sepultura no será muy largo el camino.

-Muchas veces os he dicho, señora, que a mí me pesa de que hayáis colocado en mí vuestros pensamientos, pues de los míos antes pueden ser agradecidos que remediados; yo nací para ser de Dulcinea del Toboso, y los hados, si los hubiera, me dedicaron para ella; y pensar que otra alguna hermosura ha de ocupar el lugar que en mi alma tiene es pensar lo imposible. Suficiente desengaño es éste para que os retiréis en los límites de vuestra honestidad, pues nadie se puede obligar a lo imposible.

Oyendo lo cual Altisidora, mostrando enojarse y alterarse, le dijo:

-¡Vive el Señor, don bacallao, alma de almirez, cuesco de dátíl, más terco y duro que villano rogado cuando tiene la suya sobre el hito, que si arremeto a vos, que os tengo de sacar los ojos! ¿Pensáis por ventura, don vencido y don molido a palos, que yo me he muerto por vos? Todo lo que habéis visto esta noche ha sido fingido; que no soy yo mujer que por semejantes camellos había de dejar que me doliese un negro de la uña, cuanto más morirme.

-Eso creo yo muy bien -dijo Sancho-, que esto del morirse los enamorados es cosa de risa: bien lo pueden ellos decir, pero hacer, créalo Judas.

Estando en estas pláticas, entró el músico, cantor y poeta que había cantado las dos ya referidas estancias, el cual, haciendo una gran reverencia a don Quijote, dijo:

-Vuestra merced, señor caballero, me cuente y tenga en el número de sus mayores servidores, porque ha muchos días que le soy muy aficionado, así por su fama como por sus hazañas.

Don Quijote le respondió:

-Vuestra merced me diga quién es, porque mi cortesía responda a sus merecimientos.

El mozo respondió que era el músico y panegírico de la noche antes.

-Por cierto -replicó don Quijote-, que vuestra merced tiene estremada voz, pero lo que cantó no me parece que fue muy a propósito; porque, ¿qué tienen que ver las estancias de Garcilaso con la muerte desta señora?

-No se maraville vuestra merced deso -respondió el músico-, que ya entre los intonsos poetas de nuestra edad se usa que cada uno escriba como quisiere, y hurte de quien quisiere, venga o no venga a pelo de su intento, y ya no hay necesidad que canten o escriban que no se atribuya a licencia poética.

Responder quisiera don Quijote, pero estorbáronlo el duque y la duquesa, que entraron a verle, entre los cuales pasaron una larga y dulce plática, en la cual dijo Sancho tantos donaires y tantas malicias, que dejaron de nuevo admirados a los duques, así con su simplicidad como con su agudeza. Don Quijote les suplicó le diesen licencia para partirse aquel mismo día, pues a los vencidos caballeros, como él, más les convenía habitar una zahúrda que no reales palacios. Diéronsele de muy buena gana, y la duquesa le preguntó si quedaba en su gracia Altisidora. Él le respondió:

-Señora mía, sepa Vuestra Señoría que todo el mal desta doncella nace de ociosidad, cuyo remedio es la ocupación honesta y continua. Ella me ha dicho aquí que se usan randas en el infierno; y, pues ella las debe de saber hacer, no las deje de la mano, que, ocupada en menear los palillos, no se menearán en su imaginación la imagen o imágenes de lo que bien quiere; y ésta es la verdad, éste mi parecer y éste es mi consejo.

-Y el mío -añadió Sancho-, pues no he visto en toda mi vida randera que por amor se haya muerto; que las doncellas ocupadas más ponen sus pensamientos en acabar sus tareas que en pensar en sus amores. Por mí lo digo, pues, mientras estoy cavando, no me acuerdo de mi oíslo; digo, de mi Teresa Panza, a quien quiero más que a las pestañas de mis ojos.

-Vos decís muy bien, Sancho -dijo la duquesa-, y yo haré que mi Altisidora se ocupe de aquí adelante en hacer alguna labor blanca, que la sabe hacer por extremo.

-No hay para qué, señora -respondió Altisidora-, usar dese remedio, pues la consideración de las crueldades que conmigo ha usado este malandrín mostrenco me le borrarán de la memoria sin otro artificio alguno. Y, con licencia de vuestra grandeza, me quiero quitar de aquí, por no ver delante de mis ojos ya no su triste figura, sino su fea y abominable catadura.

-Eso me parece -dijo el duque-a lo que suele decirse:

Porque aquel que dice injurias, cerca está de perdonar.

Hizo Altisidora muestra de limpiarse las lágrimas con un pañuelo, y, haciendo reverencia a sus señores, se salió del aposento.

-Mándote yo -dijo Sancho-, pobre doncella, mándote, digo, mala ventura, pues las has habido con una alma de esparto y con un corazón de encina. ¡A fee que si las hubieras conmigo, que otro gallo te cantara!

Acabóse la plática, vistióse don Quijote, comió con los duques, y partióse aquella tarde.

Capítulo LXXI

De lo que a don Quijote le sucedió con su escudero Sancho yendo a su aldea

IBA EL VENCIDO y asendereado don Quijote pensativo además por una parte, y muy alegre por otra. Causaba su tristeza el vencimiento; y la alegría, el considerar en la virtud de Sancho, como lo había mostrado en la resurrección de Altisidora, aunque con algún escrúpulo se persuadía a que la enamorada doncella fuese muerta de veras. No iba nada Sancho alegre, porque le entristecía ver que Altisidora no le había cumplido la palabra de darle las camisas; y, yendo y viniendo en esto, dijo a su amo:

-En verdad, señor, que soy el más desgraciado médico que se debe de hallar en el mundo, en el cual hay físicos que, con matar al enfermo que curan, quieren ser pagados de su trabajo, que no es otro sino firmar una cedula de algunas medicinas, que no las hace él, sino el boticario, y cátao cantusado; y a mí, que la salud ajena me cuesta gotas de sangre, mamonas, pellizcos, alfilerazos y azotes, no me dan un ardite. Pues yo les voto a tal que si me traen a las manos otro algún enfermo, que, antes que le cure, me han de untar las mías; que el abad de donde canta yanta, y no quiero creer que me haya dado el cielo la virtud que tengo para que yo la comunique con otros de bóbilis, bóbilis.

-Tú tienes razón, Sancho amigo -respondió don Quijote-, y halo hecho muy mal Altisidora en no haberte dado las prometidas camisas; y, puesto que tu virtud es gratis data, que no te ha costado estudio alguno, más que estudio es recibir martirios en tu persona. De mí te sé decir que si quisieras paga por los azotes del desencanto de Dulcinea, ya te la hubiera dado tal como buena; pero no sé si vendrá bien con la cura la paga, y no quería que impidiese el premio a la medicina. Con todo eso, me parece que no se perderá nada en probarlo: mira, Sancho, el que quieres, y azótate luego, y págate de contado y de tu propia mano, pues tienes dineros míos.

A cuyos ofrecimientos abrió Sancho los ojos y las orejas de un palmo, y dio consentimiento en su corazón a azotarse de buena gana; y dijo a su amo:

-Agora bien, señor, yo quiero disponerme a dar gusto a vuestra merced en lo que desea, con provecho mío; que el amor de mis hijos y de mi mujer me hace que me muestre interesado. Dígame vuestra merced: ¿cuánto me dará por cada azote que me diere?

-Si yo te hubiera de pagar, Sancho -respondió don Quijote-, conforme lo que merece la grandeza y calidad deste remedio, el tesoro de Venecia, las minas del Potosí fueran poco para pagarte; toma tú el tanto a lo que llevas mío, y pon el precio a cada azote.

-Ellos -respondió Sancho-son tres mil y trecientos y tantos; de ellos me he dado hasta cinco: quedan los demás; entren entre los tantos estos cinco, y vengamos a los tres mil y trecientos, que a cuartillo cada uno, que no llevaré menos si todo el mundo me lo mandase, montan tres mil y trecientos cuartillos, que son los tres mil, mil y quinientos medios reales, que hacen setecientos y cincuenta reales; y los trecientos hacen ciento y cincuenta medios reales, que vienen a hacer setenta y cinco reales, que, juntándose a los setecientos y cincuenta, son por todos ochocientos y veinte y cinco reales. Éstos desfalcaré yo de los que tengo de vuestra merced, y entraré en mi casa rico y contento, aunque bien azotado; porque no se toman truchas..., y no digo más.

-¡Oh Sancho bendito! ¡Oh Sancho amable -respondió don Quijote-, y cuán obligados hemos de quedar Dulcinea y yo a servirte todos los días que el cielo nos diere de vida! Si ella vuelve al ser perdido, que no es posible sino que vuelva, su desdicha habrá sido dicha, y mi vencimiento, felicísimo triunfo. Y mira, Sancho, cuándo quieres comenzar la disciplina, que porque la abrevies te añado cien reales.

-¿Cuándo? -replicó Sancho-. Esta noche, sin falta. Procure vuestra merced que la tengamos en el campo, al cielo abierto, que yo me abriré mis carnes.

Llegó la noche, esperada de don Quijote con la mayor ansia del mundo, pareciéndole que las ruedas del carro de Apolo se habían quebrado, y que el día se alargaba más de lo acostumbrado, bien así como acontece a los enamorados, que jamás ajustan la cuenta de sus deseos. Finalmente, se entraron entre unos amenos árboles que poco desviados del camino estaban, donde, dejando vacías la silla y albarda de Rocinante y el rucio, se tendieron sobre la verde yerba y cenaron del repuesto de Sancho; el cual, haciendo del cabestro y de la jáquima del rucio un poderoso y flexible azote, se retiró hasta veinte pasos de su amo, entre unas hayas. Don Quijote, que le vio ir con denuedo y con brío, le dijo:

-Mira, amigo, que no te hagas pedazos; da lugar que unos azotes aguarden a otros; no quieras apresurarte tanto en la carrera, que en la mitad della te falte el aliento; quiero decir que no te des tan recio que te falte la vida antes de llegar al número deseado. Y, porque no pierdas por carta de más ni de menos, yo estaré desde aparte contando por este mi rosario los azotes que te dieres. Favorézcate el cielo conforme tu buena intención merece.

-Al buen pagador no le duelen prendas -respondió Sancho-: yo pienso darme de manera que, sin matarme, me duela; que en esto debe de consistir la sustancia deste milagro.

Desnudóse luego de medio cuerpo arriba, y, arrebatando el cordel, comenzó a darse, y comenzó don Quijote a contar los azotes.

Hasta seis o ocho se habría dado Sancho, cuando le pareció ser pesada la burla y muy barato el precio della, y, deteniéndose un poco, dijo a su amo que se llamaba a engaño, porque merecía cada azote de aquéllos ser pagado a medio real, no que a cuartillo.

-Prosigue, Sancho amigo, y no desmayes -le dijo don Quijote-, que yo doblo la parada del precio.

-Dese modo -dijo Sancho-, ¡a la mano de Dios, y lluevan azotes!

Pero el socarrón dejó de dárselos en las espaldas, y daba en los árboles, con unos suspiros de cuando en cuando, que parecía que con cada uno dellos se le arrancaba el alma. Tierna la de don Quijote, temeroso de que no se le acabase la vida, y no consiguiese su deseo por la imprudencia de Sancho, le dijo:

-Por tu vida, amigo, que se quede en este punto este negocio, que me parece muy áspera esta medicina, y será bien dar tiempo al tiempo; que no se ganó Zamora en un hora. Más de mil azotes, si yo no he contado mal, te has dado: bastan por agora; que el asno, hablando a lo grosero, sufre la carga, mas no la sobrecarga.

-No, no, señor -respondió Sancho-, no se ha de decir por mí: «a dineros pagados, brazos quebrados». Apártese vuestra merced otro poco y déjeme dar otros mil azotes siquiera, que a dos levadas déstas habremos cumplido con esta partida, y aún nos sobrará ropa.

-Pues tú te hallas con tan buena disposición -dijo don Quijote-, el cielo te ayude, y pégate, que yo me aparto.

Volvió Sancho a su tarea con tanto denuedo, que ya había quitado las cortezas a muchos árboles: tal era la riguridad con que se azotaba; y, alzando una vez la voz, y dando un desaforado azote en una haya, dijo:

-¡Aquí morirás, Sansón, y cuantos con él son!

Acudió don Quijote luego al son de la lastimada voz y del golpe del riguroso azote, y, asiendo del torcido cabestro que le servía de corbacho a Sancho, le dijo:

-No permita la suerte, Sancho amigo, que por el gusto mío pierdas tú la vida, que ha de servir para sustentar a tu mujer y a tus hijos: espere Dulcinea mejor coyuntura, que yo me contendré en los límites de la esperanza propincua, y esperaré que cobres fuerzas nuevas, para que se concluya este negocio a gusto de todos.

-Pues vuestra merced, señor mío, lo quiere así -respondió Sancho-, sea en buena hora, y écheme su ferreruelo sobre estas espaldas, que estoy sudando y no querría resfriarme; que los nuevos diciplinantes corren este peligro.

Hízolo así don Quijote, y, quedándose en pelota, abrigó a Sancho, el cual se durmió hasta que le despertó el sol, y luego volvieron a proseguir su camino, a quien dieron fin, por entonces, en un lugar que tres leguas de allí estaba. Apeáronse en un mesón, que por tal le reconoció don Quijote, y no por castillo de cava honda, torres, rastrillos y puente levadiza; que, después que le vencieron, con más juicio en todas las cosas discurría, como agora se dirá. Alojáronle en una sala baja, a quien servían de guadameciles unas sargas viejas pintadas, como se usan en las aldeas. En una dellas estaba pintada de malísima mano el robo de Elena, cuando el atrevido huésped se la llevó a Menalao, y en otra estaba la historia de Dido y de Eneas, ella sobre una alta torre, como que hacía señas con una media sábana al fugitivo huésped, que por el mar, sobre una fragata o bergantín, se iba huyendo.

Notó en las dos historias que Elena no iba de muy mala gana, porque se reía a socapa y a lo socarrón; pero la hermosa Dido mostraba verter lágrimas del tamaño de nueces por los ojos. Viendo lo cual don Quijote, dijo:

-Estas dos señoras fueron desdichadísimas, por no haber nacido en esta edad, y yo sobre todos desdichado en no haber nacido en la suya: encontrara a aquestos señores, ni fuera abrasada Troya, ni Cartago destruida, pues con sólo que yo matara a Paris se escusaran tantas desgracias.

-Yo apostaré -dijo Sancho-que antes de mucho tiempo no ha de haber bodegón, venta ni mesón, o tienda de barbero, donde no ande pintada la historia de nuestras hazañas. Pero querría yo que la pintasen manos de otro mejor pintor que el que ha pintado a éstas.

-Tienes razón, Sancho -dijo don Quijote-, porque este pintor es como Orbaneja, un pintor que estaba en Úbeda; que, cuando le preguntaban qué pintaba, respondía: «Lo que saliere»; y si por ventura pintaba un gallo, escribía debajo: «Éste es gallo», porque no pensasen que era zorra. Desta manera me parece a mí, Sancho, que debe de ser el pintor o escritor, que todo es uno, que sacó a luz la historia deste nuevo don Quijote que ha salido: que pintó o escribió lo que saliere; o habrá sido como un poeta que andaba los años pasados en la corte, llamado Mauleón, el cual respondía de repente a cuanto le preguntaban; y, preguntándole uno que qué quería decir Deum de Deo, respondió: «Dé donde diere». Pero, dejando esto aparte, dime si piensas, Sancho, darte otra tanda esta noche, y si quieres que sea debajo de techado, o al cielo abierto.

-Pardiez, señor -respondió Sancho-, que para lo que yo pienso darme, eso se me da en casa que en el campo; pero, con todo eso, querría que fuese entre árboles, que parece que me acompañan y me ayudan a llevar mi trabajo maravillosamente.

-Pues no ha de ser así, Sancho amigo -respondió don Quijote-, sino que para que tomes fuerzas, lo hemos de guardar para nuestra aldea, que, a lo más tarde, llegaremos allá después de mañana.

Sancho respondió que hiciese su gusto, pero que él quisiera concluir con brevedad aquel negocio a sangre caliente y cuando estaba picado el molino, porque en la tardanza suele estar muchas veces el peligro; y a Dios rogando y con el mazo dando, y que más valía un «toma» que dos «te daré», y el pájaro en la mano que el buitre volando.

-No más refranes, Sancho, por un solo Dios -dijo don Quijote-, que parece que te vuelves al sicut erat; habla a lo llano, a lo liso, a lo no intricado, como muchas veces te he dicho, y verás como te vale un pan por ciento.

-No sé qué mala ventura es esta mía -respondió Sancho-, que no sé decir razón sin refrán, ni refrán que no me parezca razón; pero yo me emendaré, si pudiere.

Y, con esto, cesó por entonces su plática.

Capítulo LXXII

De cómo don Quijote y Sancho llegaron a su aldea

TODO aquel día, esperando la noche, estuvieron en aquel lugar y mesón don Quijote y Sancho: el uno, para acabar en la campaña rasa la tanda de su disciplina, y el otro, para ver el fin della, en el cual consistía el de su deseo. Llegó en esto al mesón un caminante a caballo, con tres o cuatro criados, uno de los cuales dijo al que el señor dellos parecía:

-Aquí puede vuestra merced, señor don Álvaro Tarfe, pasar hoy la siesta: la posada parece limpia y fresca.

Oyendo esto don Quijote, le dijo a Sancho:

-Mira, Sancho: cuando yo hojeé aquel libro de la segunda parte de mi historia, me parece que de pasada topé allí este nombre de don Álvaro Tarfe.

-Bien podrá ser -respondió Sancho-. Dejémosle apearse, que después se lo preguntaremos.

El caballero se apeó, y, frontero del aposento de don Quijote, la huéspeda le dio una sala baja, enjaezada con otras pintadas sargas, como las que tenía la estancia de don Quijote. Púsose el recién venido caballero a lo de verano, y, saliéndose al portal del mesón, que era espacioso y fresco, por el cual se paseaba don Quijote, le preguntó:

-¿Adónde bueno camina vuestra merced, señor gentilhomme?

Y don Quijote le respondió:

-A una aldea que está aquí cerca, de donde soy natural. Y vuestra merced, ¿dónde camina?

-Yo, señor -respondió el caballero-, voy a Granada, que es mi patria.

-¡Y buena patria! -replicó don Quijote-. Pero, dígame vuestra merced, por cortesía, su nombre, porque me parece que me ha de importar saberlo más de lo que buenamente podré decir.

-Mi nombre es don Álvaro Tarfe -respondió el huésped.

A lo que replicó don Quijote:

-Sin duda alguna pienso que vuestra merced debe de ser aquel don Álvaro Tarfe que anda impreso en la Segunda parte de la historia de don Quijote de la Mancha, recién impresa y dada a la luz del mundo por un autor moderno.

-El mismo soy -respondió el caballero-, y el tal don Quijote, sujeto principal de la tal historia, fue grandísimo amigo mío, y yo fui el que le sacó de su tierra, o, a lo menos, le moví a que viniese a unas justas que se hacían en Zaragoza, adonde yo iba; y, en verdad en verdad que le hice muchas amistades, y que le quité de que no le palmease las espaldas el verdugo, por ser demasiadamente atrevido.

-Y, dígame vuestra merced, señor don Álvaro, ¿parezco yo en algo a ese tal don Quijote que vuestra merced dice?

-No, por cierto -respondió el huésped-: en ninguna manera.

-Y ese don Quijote -dijo el nuestro-, ¿traía consigo a un escudero llamado Sancho Panza?

-Sí traía -respondió don Álvaro-; y, aunque tenía fama de muy gracioso, nunca le oí decir gracia que la tuviese.

-Eso creo yo muy bien -dijo a esta sazón Sancho-, porque el decir gracias no es para todos, y ese Sancho que vuestra merced dice, señor gentilhombre, debe de ser algún grandísimo bellaco, frión y ladrón juntamente, que el verdadero Sancho Panza soy yo, que tengo más gracias que llovidas; y si no, haga vuestra merced la experiencia, y ándese tras de mí, por los menos un año, y verá que se me caen a cada paso, y tales y tantas que, sin saber yo las más veces lo que me digo, hago reír a cuantos me escuchan; y el verdadero don Quijote de la Mancha, el famoso, el valiente y el discreto, el enamorado, el desfacedor de agravios, el tutor de pupilos y huérfanos, el amparo de las viudas, el matador de las doncellas, el que tiene por única señora a la sin par Dulcinea del Toboso, es este señor que está presente, que es mi amo; todo cualquier otro don Quijote y cualquier otro Sancho Panza es burlería y cosa de sueño.

-¡Por Dios que lo creo! -respondió don Álvaro-, porque más gracias habéis dicho vos, amigo, en cuatro razones que habéis hablado, que el otro Sancho Panza en cuantas yo le oí hablar, que fueron muchas. Más tenía de comilón que de bien hablado, y más de tonto que de gracioso, y tengo por sin duda que los encantadores que persiguen a don Quijote el bueno han querido perseguirme a mí con don Quijote el malo. Pero no sé qué me diga; que osaré yo jurar que le dejo metido en la casa del Nuncio, en Toledo, para que le curen, y agora remanece aquí otro don Quijote, aunque bien diferente del mío.

-Yo -dijo don Quijote-no sé si soy bueno, pero sé decir que no soy el malo; para prueba de lo cual quiero que sepa vuesa merced, mi señor don Álvaro Tarfe, que en todos los días de mi vida no he estado en Zaragoza; antes, por haberme dicho que ese don Quijote fantástico se había hallado en las justas desa ciudad, no quise yo entrar en ella, por sacar a las barbas del mundo su mentira; y así, me pasé de claro a Barcelona, archivo de la cortesía, albergue de los extranjeros, hospital de los pobres, patria de los valientes, venganza de los ofendidos y correspondencia grata de firmes amistades, y, en sitio y en belleza, única. Y, aunque los sucesos que en ella me han sucedido no son de mucho gusto, sino de mucha pesadumbre, los llevo sin ella, sólo por haberla visto. Finalmente, señor don Álvaro Tarfe, yo soy don Quijote de la Mancha, el mismo que dice la fama, y no ese desventurado que ha querido usurpar mi nombre y honrarse con mis pensamientos. A vuestra merced suplico, por lo que debe a ser caballero, sea servido de hacer una declaración ante el alcalde deste lugar, de que vuestra merced no me ha visto en todos los días de su vida hasta agora, y de que yo no soy el don Quijote impreso en la segunda parte, ni este Sancho Panza mi escudero es aquél que vuestra merced conoció.

-Eso haré yo de muy buena gana -respondió don Álvaro-, puesto que cause admiración ver dos don Quijotes y dos Sanchos a un mismo tiempo, tan conformes en los nombres como diferentes en las acciones; y vuelvo a decir y me afirmo que no he visto lo que he visto, ni ha pasado por mí lo que ha pasado.

-Sin duda -dijo Sancho- que vuestra merced debe de estar encantado, como mi señora Dulcinea del Toboso, y pluguiera al cielo que estuviera su desencanto de vuestra merced en darme otros tres mil y tantos azotes como me doy por ella, que yo me los diera sin interés alguno.

-No entiendo eso de azotes -dijo don Álvaro.

Y Sancho le respondió que era largo de contar, pero que él se lo contaría si acaso iban un mesmo camino.

Llegóse en esto la hora de comer; comieron juntos don Quijote y don Álvaro. Entró acaso el alcalde del pueblo en el mesón, con un escribano, ante el cual alcalde pidió don Quijote, por una petición, de que a su derecho convenía de que don Álvaro Tarfe, aquel caballero que allí estaba presente, declarase ante su merced como no conocía a don Quijote de la Mancha, que asimismo estaba allí presente, y que no era aquél que andaba impreso en una historia intitulada: Segunda parte de don Quijote de la Mancha, compuesta por un tal de Avellaneda, natural de Tordesillas. Finalmente, el alcalde proveyó jurídicamente; la declaración se hizo con todas las fuerzas que en tales casos debían hacerse, con lo que quedaron don Quijote y Sancho muy alegres, como si les importara mucho semejante declaración y no mostrara claro la diferencia de los dos don Quijotes y la de los dos Sanchos sus obras y sus palabras. Muchas de cortesías y ofrecimientos pasaron entre don Álvaro y don Quijote, en las cuales mostró el gran manchego su discreción, de modo que desengañó a don Álvaro Tarfe del error en que estaba; el cual se dio a entender que debía de estar encantado, pues tocaba con la mano dos tan contrarios don Quijotes.

Llegó la tarde, partiéronse de aquel lugar, y a obra de media legua se apartaban dos caminos diferentes, el uno que guiaba a la aldea de don Quijote, y el otro el que había de llevar don Álvaro. En este poco espacio le contó don Quijote la desgracia de su vencimiento y el encanto y el remedio de Dulcinea, que todo puso en nueva admiración a don Álvaro, el cual, abrazando a don Quijote y a Sancho, siguió su camino, y don Quijote el suyo, que aquella noche la pasó entre otros árboles, por dar lugar a Sancho de cumplir su penitencia, que la cumplió del mismo modo que la pasada noche, a costa de las cortezas de las hayas, harto más que de sus espaldas, que las guardó tanto, que no pudieran quitar los azotes una mosca, aunque la tuviera encima.

No perdió el engañado don Quijote un solo golpe de la cuenta, y halló que con los de la noche pasada era tres mil y veinte y nueve. Parece que había madrugado el sol a ver el sacrificio, con cuya luz volvieron a proseguir su camino, tratando entre los dos del engaño de don Álvaro y de cuán bien acordado había sido tomar su declaración ante la justicia, y tan auténticamente.

Aquel día y aquella noche caminaron sin sucederles cosa digna de contarse, si no fue que en ella acabó Sancho su tarea, de que quedó don Quijote contento sobremodo, y esperaba el día, por ver si en el camino topaba ya desencantada a Dulcinea su señora; y, siguiendo su camino, no topaba mujer ninguna que no iba a reconocer si era Dulcinea del Toboso, teniendo por infalible no poder mentir las promesas de Merlín.

Con estos pensamientos y deseos subieron una cuesta arriba, desde la cual descubrieron su aldea, la cual, vista de Sancho, se hincó de rodillas y dijo:

-Abre los ojos, deseada patria, y mira que vuelve a ti Sancho Panza, tu hijo, si no muy rico, muy bien azotado. Abre los brazos y recibe también tu hijo don Quijote, que si viene vencido de los brazos ajenos, viene vencedor de sí mismo; que, según él me ha dicho, es el mayor vencimiento que desearse puede. Dineros llevo, porque si buenos azotes me daban, bien caballero me iba.

-Déjate desas sandeces -dijo don Quijote-, y vamos con pie derecho a entrar en nuestro lugar, donde daremos vado a nuestras imaginaciones, y la traza que en la pastoral vida pensamos ejercitar.

Con esto, bajaron de la cuesta y se fueron a su pueblo.

Capítulo LXXIII

De los agüeros que tuvo don Quijote al entrar de su aldea, con otros sucesos que adornan y acreditan esta grande historia

A la entrada del cual, según dice Cide Hamete, vio don Quijote que en las eras del lugar estaban riñendo dos mochachos, y el uno dijo al otro:

-No te canses Periquillo, que no la has de ver en todos los días de tu vida.

Oyólo don Quijote, y dijo a Sancho:

-¿No adviertes, amigo, lo que aquel mochacho ha dicho: «no la has de ver en todos los días de tu vida»?

-Pues bien, ¿qué importa -respondió Sancho- que haya dicho eso el mochacho?

-¿Qué? -replicó don Quijote-. ¿No vees tú que, aplicando aquella palabra a mi intención, quiere significar que no tengo de ver más a Dulcinea?

Queríale responder Sancho, cuando se lo estorbó ver que por aquella campaña venía huyendo una liebre, seguida de muchos galgos y cazadores, la cual, temerosa, se vino a recoger y a agazapar debajo de los pies del rucio. Cogióla Sancho a mano salva y presentósele a don Quijote, el cual estaba diciendo:

-Malum signum! Malum signum! Liebre huye, galgos la siguen: ¡Dulcinea no parece!

-Estraño es vuesa merced -dijo Sancho-. Presupongamos que esta liebre es Dulcinea del Toboso y estos galgos que la persiguen son los malandrines encantadores que la transformaron en labradora: ella huye, yo la cojo y la pongo en poder de vuesa merced, que la tiene en sus brazos y la regala: ¿qué mala señal es ésta, ni qué mal agüero se puede tomar de aquí?

Los dos mochachos de la pendencia se llegaron a ver la liebre, y al uno dellos preguntó Sancho que por qué reñían. Y fuele respondido por el que había dicho «no la verás más en toda tu vida», que él había tomado al otro mochacho una jaula de grillos, la cual no pensaba volvérsela en toda su vida. Sacó Sancho cuatro cuartos de la faltriquera y dióselos al mochacho por la jaula, y púsosela en las manos a don Quijote, diciendo:

-He aquí, señor, rompidos y desbaratados estos agüeros, que no tienen que ver más con nuestros sucesos, según que yo imagino, aunque tonto, que con las nubes de antaño. Y si no me acuerdo mal, he oído decir al cura de nuestro pueblo que no es de personas cristianas ni discretas mirar en estas niñerías; y aun vuesa merced mismo me lo dijo los días pasados, dándome a entender que eran tontos todos aquellos cristianos que miraban en agüeros. Y no es menester hacer hincapié en esto, sino pasemos adelante y entremos en nuestra aldea.

Llegaron los cazadores, pidieron su liebre, y dióselo don Quijote; pasaron adelante, y, a la entrada del pueblo, toparon en un pradecillo rezando al cura y al bachiller Carrasco. Y es de saber que Sancho Panza había echado sobre el rucio y sobre el lío de las armas, para que sirviese de repostero, la túnica de bocacé pintada de llamas de fuego que le vistieron en el castillo del duque la noche que volvió en sí Altisidora. Acomodóle también la coraza en la cabeza, que fue la más nueva transformación y adorno con que se vio jamás jumento en el mundo.

Fueron luego conocidos los dos del cura y del bachiller, que se vinieron a ellos con los brazos abiertos. Apeóse don Quijote y abrazólos estrechamente; y los mochachos, que son linceos no escusados, divisaron la coraza del jumento y acudieron a verle, y decían unos a otros:

-Venid, mochachos, y veréis el asno de Sancho Panza más galán que Mingo, y la bestia de don Quijote más flaca hoy que el primer día.

Finalmente, rodeados de mochachos y acompañados del cura y del bachiller, entraron en el pueblo, y se fueron a casa de don Quijote, y hallaron a la puerta della al ama y a su sobrina, a quien ya habían llegado las nuevas de su venida. Ni más ni menos se las habían dado a Teresa Panza, mujer de Sancho, la cual, desgredada y medio desnuda, trayendo de la mano a Sanchica, su hija, acudió a ver a su marido; y, viéndole no tan bien adeliñado como ella se pensaba que había de estar un gobernador, le dijo:

-¿Cómo venís así, marido mío, que me parece que venís a pie y despeado, y más traéis semejanza de desgobernado que de gobernador?

-Calla, Teresa -respondió Sancho-, que muchas veces donde hay estacas no hay tocinos, y vámonos a nuestra casa, que allá oirás maravillas. Dineros traigo, que es lo que importa, ganados por mi industria y sin daño de nadie.

-Traed vos dinero, mi buen marido -dijo Teresa-, y sean ganados por aquí o por allí, que, comoquiera que los hayáis ganado, no habréis hecho usanza nueva en el mundo.

Abrazó Sanchica a su padre, y preguntóle si traía algo, que le estaba esperando como el agua de mayo; y, asíéndole de un lado del cinto, y su mujer de la mano, tirando su hija al rucio, se fueron a su casa, dejando a don Quijote en la suya, en poder de su sobrina y de su ama, y en compañía del cura y del bachiller.

Don Quijote, sin guardar términos ni horas, en aquel mismo punto se apartó a solas con el bachiller y el cura, y en breves razones les contó su vencimiento, y la obligación en que había quedado de no salir de su aldea en un año, la cual pensaba guardar al pie de la letra, sin traspasarla en un átomo, bien así como caballero andante, obligado por la puntualidad y orden de la andante caballería, y que tenía pensado de hacerse aquel año pastor, y entretenerse en la soledad de los campos, donde a rienda suelta podía dar vado a sus amorosos pensamientos, ejercitándose en el pastoral y virtuoso ejercicio; y que les suplicaba, si no tenían mucho que hacer y no estaban impedidos en negocios más importantes, quisiesen ser sus compañeros; que él compraría ovejas y ganado suficiente que les diese nombre de pastores; y que les hacía saber que lo más principal de aquel negocio estaba hecho, porque les tenía puestos los nombres, que les vendrían como de molde. Díjole el cura que los dijese. Respondió don Quijote que él se había de llamar el pastor Quijotiz; y el bachiller, el pastor Carrascón; y el cura, el pastor Curambro; y Sancho Panza, el pastor Pancino.

Pasmáronse todos de ver la nueva locura de don Quijote; pero, porque no se les fuese otra vez del pueblo a sus caballerías, esperando que en aquel año podría ser curado, concedieron con su nueva intención, y aprobaron por discreta su locura, ofreciéndosele por compañeros en su ejercicio.

-Y más -dijo Sansón Carrasco-, que, como ya todo el mundo sabe, yo soy celeberrimo poeta y a cada paso compondré versos pastoriles, o cortesanos, o como más me viniere a cuento, para que nos entretengamos por esos andurriales donde habemos de andar; y lo que más es menester, señores míos, es que cada uno escoja el nombre de la pastora que piensa celebrar en sus versos, y que no dejemos árbol, por duro que sea, donde no la retule y grave su nombre, como es uso y costumbre de los enamorados pastores.

-Eso está de molde -respondió don Quijote-, puesto que yo estoy libre de buscar nombre de pastora fingida, pues está ahí la sin par Dulcinea del Toboso, gloria de estas riberas, adorno de estos prados, sustento de la hermosura, nata de los donaires, y, finalmente, sujeto sobre quien puede asentar bien toda alabanza, por hipérbole que sea.

-Así es verdad -dijo el cura-, pero nosotros buscaremos por ahí pastoras mañeruelas, que si no nos cuadraren, nos esquinen.

A lo que añadió Sansón Carrasco:

-Y cuando faltaren, darémosles los nombres de las estampadas e impresas, de quien está lleno el mundo: Fílicas, Amarilis, Dianas, Fléridas, Galateas y Belisardas; que, pues las venden en las plazas, bien las podemos comprar nosotros y tenerlas por nuestras. Si mi dama, o, por mejor decir, mi pastora, por ventura se llamare Ana, la celebraré debajo del nombre de Anarda; y si Francisca, la llamaré yo Francenia; y si Lucía, Lucinda, que todo se sale allá; y Sancho Panza, si es que ha de entrar en esta cofadría, podrá celebrar a su mujer Teresa Panza con nombre de Teresaina.

Rióse don Quijote de la aplicación del nombre, y el cura le alabó infinito su honesta y honrada resolución, y se ofreció de nuevo a hacerle compañía todo el tiempo que le vacase de atender a sus forzosas obligaciones. Con esto, se despidieron dél, y le rogaron y aconsejaron tuviese cuenta con su salud, con regalarse lo que fuese bueno.

Quiso la suerte que su sobrina y el ama oyeron la plática de los tres; y, así como se fueron, se entraron entrambas con don Quijote, y la sobrina le dijo:

-¿Qué es esto, señor tío? ¿Ahora que pensábamos nosotras que vuestra merced volvía a reducirse en su casa, y pasar en ella una vida quieta y honrada, se quiere meter en nuevos laberintos, haciéndose

Pastorcillo, tú que vienes, pastorcico, tú que vas?

Pues en verdad que está ya duro el alcacel para zampoñas.

A lo que añadió el ama:

Y ¿podrá vuestra merced pasar en el campo las siestas del verano, los serenos del invierno, el aullido de los lobos? No, por cierto, que éste es ejercicio y oficio de hombres robustos, curtidos y criados para tal ministerio casi desde las fajas y mantillas. Aun, mal por mal, mejor es ser caballero andante que pastor. Mire, señor, tome mi consejo, que no se le doy sobre estar harta de pan y vino, sino en ayunas, y sobre cincuenta años que tengo de edad: estése en su casa, atienda a su hacienda, confiese a menudo, favorezca a los pobres, y sobre mi ánimo si mal le fuere.

-Callad, hijas -les respondió don Quijote-, que yo sé bien lo que me cumple. Llevadme al lecho, que me parece que no estoy muy bueno, y tened por cierto que, ahora sea caballero andante o pastor por andar, no dejaré siempre de acudir a lo que hubiéredes menester, como lo veréis por la obra.

Y las buenas hijas -que lo eran sin duda ama y sobrina-le llevaron a la cama, donde le dieron de comer y regalaron lo posible.

Capítulo LXXIV

De cómo don Quijote cayó malo, y del testamento que hizo, y su muerte

COMO las cosas humanas no sean eternas, yendo siempre en declinación de sus principios hasta llegar a su último fin, especialmente las vidas de los hombres, y como la de don Quijote no tuviese privilegio del cielo para detener el curso de la suya, llegó su fin y acabamiento cuando él menos lo pensaba; porque, o ya fuese de la melancolía que le causaba el verse vencido, o ya por la disposición del cielo, que así lo ordenaba, se le arraigó una calentura que le tuvo seis días en la cama, en los cuales fue visitado muchas veces del cura, del bachiller y del barbero, sus amigos, sin quitársele de la cabecera Sancho Panza, su buen escudero.

Éstos, creyendo que la pesadumbre de verse vencido y de no ver cumplido su deseo en la libertad y desencanto de Dulcinea le tenía de aquella suerte, por todas las vías posibles procuraban alegrarle, diciéndole el bachiller que se animase y levantase, para comenzar su pastoral ejercicio, para el cual tenía ya compuesta una égloga, que mal año para cuantas Sanazaro había compuesto, y que ya tenía comprados de su propio dinero dos famosos perros para guardar el ganado: el uno llamado Barcino, y el otro Butrón, que se los había vendido un ganadero del Quintanar. Pero no por esto dejaba don Quijote sus tristezas.

Llamaron sus amigos al médico, tomóle el pulso, y no le contentó mucho, y dijo que, por sí o por no, atendiese a la salud de su alma, porque la del cuerpo corría peligro. Oyólo don Quijote con ánimo sosegado, pero no lo oyeron así su ama, su sobrina y su escudero, los cuales comenzaron a llorar tiernamente, como si ya le tuvieran muerto delante. Fue el parecer del médico que melancolías y desabrimientos le acababan. Rogó don Quijote que le dejaran solo, porque quería dormir un poco. Hiciéronlo así y durmió de un tirón, como dicen, más de seis horas; tanto, que pensaron el ama y la sobrina que se había de quedar en el sueño. Despertó al cabo del tiempo dicho, y, dando una gran voz, dijo:

-¡Bendito sea el poderoso Dios, que tanto bien me ha hecho! En fin, sus misericordias no tienen límite, ni las abrevian ni impiden los pecados de los hombres.

Estuvo atenta la sobrina a las razones del tío, y parecióle más concertadas que él solía decirlas, a lo menos, en aquella enfermedad, y preguntóle:

-¿Qué es lo que vuestra merced dice, señor? ¿Tenemos algo de nuevo? ¿Qué misericordias son éstas, o qué pecados de los hombres?

-Las misericordias -respondió don Quijote-, sobrina, son las que en este instante ha usado Dios conmigo, a quien, como dije, no las impiden mis pecados. Yo tengo juicio ya, libre y claro, sin las sombras caliginosas de la ignorancia, que sobre él me pusieron mi amarga y continua leyenda de los detestables libros de las caballerías. Ya conozco sus disparates y sus embelecocos, y no me pesa sino que este desengaño ha llegado tan tarde, que no me deja tiempo para hacer alguna recompensa, leyendo otros que sean luz del alma. Yo me siento, sobrina, a punto de muerte; querría hacerla de tal modo, que diese a entender que no había sido mi vida tan mala que dejase renombre de loco, que, puesto que lo he sido, no querría confirmar esta verdad en mi muerte. Llámame, amiga, a mis buenos amigos: el cura, al bachiller Sansón Carrasco y a maese Nicolás, el barbero, que quiero confesarme y hacer mi testamento.

Pero de este trabajo se escusó la sobrina con la entrada de los tres. Apenas los vio don Quijote, cuando dijo:

-Dadme albricias, buenos señores, de que ya yo no soy don Quijote de la Mancha, sino Alonso Quijano, a quien mis costumbres me dieron renombre de Bueno. Ya soy enemigo de Amadís de Gaula y de toda la infinita caterva de su linaje, ya me son odiosas todas las historias profanas del andante caballería, ya conozco mi necedad y el peligro en que me pusieron haberlas leído, ya, por misericordia de Dios, escarmentando en cabeza propia, las abomino.

Cuando esto le oyeron decir los tres, creyeron, sin duda, que alguna nueva locura le había tomado. Y Sansón le dijo:

-¿Ahora, señor don Quijote, que tenemos nueva que está desencantada la señora Dulcinea, sale vuestra merced con eso? Y ¿agora que estamos tan a pique de ser pastores, para pasar cantando la vida, como unos príncipes, quiere vuesa merced hacerse ermitaño? Calle, por su vida, vuelva en sí, y déjese de cuentos.

-Los de hasta aquí -replicó don Quijote-, que han sido verdaderos en mi daño, los ha de volver mi muerte, con ayuda del cielo, en mi provecho. Yo, señores, siento que me voy muriendo a toda priesa; déjense burlas aparte, y tráiganme un confesor que me confiese y un escribano que haga mi testamento, que en tales trances como éste no se ha de burlar el hombre con el alma; y así, suplico que, en tanto que el señor cura me confiesa, vayan por el escribano.

Miráronse unos a otros, admirados de las razones de don Quijote, y, aunque en duda, le quisieron creer; y una de las señales por donde conjeturaron se moría fue el haber vuelto con tanta facilidad de loco a cuerdo, porque a las ya dichas razones añadió otras muchas tan bien dichas, tan cristianas y con tanto concierto, que del todo les vino a quitar la duda, y a creer que estaba cuerdo.

Hizo salir la gente el cura, y quedóse solo con él, y confesóle.

El bachiller fue por el escribano, y de allí a poco volvió con él y con Sancho Panza; el cual Sancho, que ya sabía por nuevas del bachiller en qué estado estaba su señor, hallando a la ama y a la sobrina llorosas, comenzó a hacer pucheros y a derramar lágrimas. Acabóse la confesión, y salió el cura, diciendo:

-Verdaderamente se muere, y verdaderamente está cuerdo Alonso Quijano el Bueno; bien podemos entrar para que haga su testamento.

Estas nuevas dieron un terrible empujón a los ojos preñados de ama, sobrina y de Sancho Panza, su buen escudero, de tal manera, que los hizo reventar las lágrimas de los ojos y mil profundos suspiros del pecho; porque, verdaderamente, como alguna vez se ha dicho, en tanto que don Quijote fue Alonso Quijano el Bueno, a secas, y en tanto que fue don Quijote de la Mancha, fue siempre de apacible condición y de agradable trato, y por esto no sólo era bien querido de los de su casa, sino de todos cuantos le conocían.

Entró el escribano con los demás, y, después de haber hecho la cabeza del testamento y ordenado su alma don Quijote, con todas aquellas circunstancias cristianas que se requieren, llegando a las mandas, dijo:

-Ítem, es mi voluntad que de ciertos dineros que Sancho Panza, a quien en mi locura hice mi escudero, tiene, que, porque ha habido entre él y mí ciertas cuentas, y dares y tomares, quiero que no se le haga cargo dellos, ni se le pida cuenta alguna, sino que si sobrare alguno, después de haberse pagado de lo que le debo, el restante sea suyo, que será bien poco, y buen provecho le haga; y, si como estando yo loco fui parte para darle el gobierno de la ínsula, pudiera agora, estando cuerdo, darle el de un reino, se le diera, porque la sencillez de su condición y fidelidad de su trato lo merece.

Y, volviéndose a Sancho, le dijo:

-Perdóname, amigo, de la ocasión que te he dado de parecer loco como yo, haciéndote caer en el error en que yo he caído, de que hubo y hay caballeros andantes en el mundo.

-¡Ay! -respondió Sancho, llorando-: no se muera vuestra merced, señor mío, sino tome mi consejo y viva muchos años, porque la mayor locura que puede hacer un hombre en esta vida es dejarse morir, sin más ni más, sin que nadie le mate, ni otras manos le acaben que las de la melancolía. Mire no sea perezoso, sino levántese desahogada cama, y vámonos al campo vestidos de pastores, como tenemos concertado: quizá tras de alguna mata hallaremos a la señora doña Dulcinea desencantada, que no haya más que ver. Si es que se muere de pesar de verse vencido, écheme a mí la culpa, diciendo que por haber yo cinchado mal a Rocinante le derribaron; cuanto más, que vuestra merced habrá visto en sus libros de caballerías ser cosa ordinaria derribarse unos caballeros a otros, y el que es vencido hoy ser vencedor mañana.

-Así es -dijo Sansón-, y el buen Sancho Panza está muy en la verdad destos casos.

-Señores -dijo don Quijote-, vámonos poco a poco, pues ya en los nidos de antaño no hay pájaros hogaño: yo fui loco, y ya soy cuerdo; fui don Quijote de la Mancha, y soy agora, como he dicho, Alonso Quijano el Bueno. Pueda con vuestras mercedes mi arrepentimiento y mi verdad volverme a la estimación que de mí se tenía, y prosiga adelante el señor escribano.

»Ítem, mando toda mi hacienda, a puerta cerrada, a Antonia Quijana, mi sobrina, que está presente, habiendo sacado primero de lo más bien parado della lo que fuere menester para cumplir las mandas que dejo hechas; y la primera satisfacción que se haga quiero que sea pagar el salario que debo del tiempo que mi ama me ha servido, y más veinte ducados para un vestido. Dejo por mis albaceas al señor cura y al señor bachiller Sansón Carrasco, que están presentes.

»Ítem, es mi voluntad que si Antonia Quijana, mi sobrina, quisiere casarse, se case con hombre de quien primero se haya hecho información que no sabe qué cosas sean libros de caballerías; y, en caso que se averiguare que lo sabe, y, con todo eso, mi sobrina quisiere casarse con él, y se casare, pierda todo lo que le he mandado, lo cual puedan mis albaceas distribuir en obras pías a su voluntad.

»Ítem, suplico a los dichos señores mis albaceas que si la buena suerte les trujere a conocer al autor que dicen que compuso una historia que anda por ahí con el título de Segunda parte de las hazañas de don Quijote de la Mancha, de mi parte le pidan, cuan encarecidamente ser pueda, perdone la ocasión que sin yo pensarlo le di de haber escrito tantos y tan grandes disparates como en ella escribe, porque parto desta vida con escrúpulo de haberle dado motivo para escribirlos.

Cerró con esto el testamento, y, tomándole un desmayo, se tendió de largo a largo en la cama. Alborotáronse todos y acudieron a su remedio, y en tres días que vivió después deste donde hizo el testamento, se desmayaba muy a menudo. Andaba la casa alborotada; pero, con todo, comía la sobrina, brindaba el ama, y se regocijaba Sancho Panza; que esto del heredar algo borra o templea en el heredero la memoria de la pena que es razón que deje el muerto.

En fin, llegó el último de don Quijote, después de recibidos todos los sacramentos, y después de haber abominado con muchas y eficaces razones de los libros de caballerías. Hallóse el escribano presente, y dijo que nunca había leído en ningún libro de caballerías que algún caballero andante hubiese muerto en su lecho tan sosegadamente y tan cristiano como don Quijote; el cual, entre compasiones y lágrimas de los que allí se hallaron, dio su espíritu: quiero decir que se murió.

Viendo lo cual el cura, pidió al escribano le diese por testimonio como Alonso Quijano el Bueno, llamado comúnmente don Quijote de la Mancha, había pasado desta presente vida y muerto naturalmente; y que el tal testimonio pedía para quitar la ocasión de algún otro autor que Cide Hamete Benengeli le resucitase falsamente, y hiciese inacabables historias de sus hazañas.

Este fin tuvo el Ingenioso Hidalgo de la Mancha, cuyo lugar no quiso poner Cide Hamete puntualmente, por dejar que todas las villas y lugares de la Mancha contendiesen entre sí por ahijársele y tenérsele por suyo, como contendieron las siete ciudades de Grecia por Homero.

Déjanse de poner aquí los llantos de Sancho, sobrina y ama de don Quijote, los nuevos epitafios de su sepultura, aunque Sansón Carrasco le puso éste:

Yace aquí el Hidalgo fuerte que a tanto extremo llegó de valiente, que se advierte que la muerte no triunfó de su vida con su muerte. 5

Tuvo a todo el mundo en poco;
fue el espantajo y el coco del mundo, en tal coyuntura, que acreditó su ventura
morir cuerdo y vivir loco. 10

Y el prudentísimo Cide Hamete dijo a su pluma:

-Aquí quedarás, colgada desta espetera y deste hilo de alambre, ni sé si bien cortada o mal tajada péñola mía, adonde vivirás luengos siglos, si presuntuosos y malandrines historiadores no te descuelgan para profanarte. Pero, antes que a ti lleguen, les puedes advertir, y decirles en el mejor modo que pudieres:

De ninguno sea tocada;
porque esta impresa, buen rey,
para mí estaba guardada.

Para mí sola nació don Quijote, y yo para él; él supo obrar y yo escribir; solos los dos somos para en uno, a despecho y pesar del escritor fingido y tordesillesco que se atrevió, o se ha de atrever, a escribir con pluma de avestruz grosera y mal deliñada las hazañas de mi valeroso caballero, porque no es carga de sus hombros ni asunto de su resfriado ingenio; a quien advertirás, si acaso llegas a conocerle, que deje reposar en la sepultura los cansados y ya podridos huesos de don Quijote, y no le quiera llevar, contra todos los fueros de la muerte, a Castilla la Vieja, haciéndole salir de la fuesa donde real y verdaderamente yace tendido de largo a largo, imposibilitado de hacer tercera jornada y salida nueva; que, para hacer burla de tantas como hicieron tantos andantes caballeros, bastan las dos que él hizo, tan a gusto y beneplácito de las gentes a cuya noticia llegaron, así en éstos como en los estraños reinos». Y con esto cumplirás con tu cristiana profesión, aconsejando bien a quien mal te quiere, y yo quedaré satisfecho y ufano de haber sido el primero que gozó el fruto de sus escritos enteramente, como deseaba, pues no ha sido otro mi deseo que poner en aborrecimiento de los hombres las fingidas y disparatadas historias de los libros de caballerías, que, por las de mi verdadero don Quijote, van ya tropezando, y han de caer del todo, sin duda alguna. Vale.

Aprobación

Por mandado de Vuesa Alteza he visto el libro de Los trabajos de Persiles, de Miguel de Cervantes Saavedra, ilustre hijo de nuestra nación, y padre ilustre de tantos buenos hijos con que dichosamente la enobleció, y no hallo en él cosa contra nuestra santa fe católica y buenas costumbres; antes, muchas de honesta y apacible recreación, y por él se podría decir lo que San Jerónimo de Orígenes por el comentario sobre los Cantares: cum in omnibus omnes, in hoc seipsum superavit Origenes, pues, de cuantos nos dejó escritos, ninguno es más ingenioso, más culto ni más entretenido. En fin, cisne de su buena vejez, casi entre los aprietos de la muerte, cantó este parto de su venerando ingenio. Este es mi parecer. Salvo, etc. En Madrid, a nueve de setiembre de mil y seiscientos y diez y seis años.

El Maestro Joseph de Valdivieso.

De don Francisco de Urbina a Miguel de Cervantes, insigne y cristiano ingenio de nuestros tiempos, a quien llevaron los terceros de San Francisco a enterrar con la cara descubierta, como a tercero que era

Epitafio

Caminante, el peregrino Cervantes aquí se encierra; su cuerpo cubre la tierra, no su nombre, que es divino.

En fin, hizo su camino; 5 pero su fama no es muerta, ni sus obras, prenda cierta de que pudo a la partida, desde ésta a la eterna vida, ir la cara descubierta. 10

Soneto

En este, ¡oh caminante!, mármol breve, urna funesta, si no excelsa pira, cenizas de un ingenio santas mira, que olvido y tiempo a despreciar se atreve.

No tantas en su orilla arenas mueve 5 glorioso el Tajo, cuantas hoy admira lenguas la suya, por quien grata aspira a el lauro España que a su nombre debe.

Lucientes de sus libros gracias fueron, con dulce suspensión, su estilo grave, 10 religiosa invención, moral decoro.

A cuyo ingenio los de España dieron la sólida opinión que el mundo sabe, y a el cuerpo, ofrenda de perpetuo lloro.

A don Pedro Fernández de Castro, conde de Lemos, de Andrade, de Villalba; marqués de Sarriá, gentilhombre de la Cámara de su Majestad, presidente del Consejo Supremo de Italia, comendador de la Encomienda de la Zarza, de la Orden de Alcántara
Aquellas coplas antiguas, que fueron en su tiempo celebradas, que comienzan:
Puesto ya el pie en el estribo,

quisiera yo no vinieran tan a pelo en esta mi epístola, porque casi con las mismas palabras la puedo comenzar, diciendo:
Puesto ya el pie en el estribo,
con las ansias de la muerte,
gran señor, ésta te escribo.

Ayer me dieron la Estremaunción y hoy escribo ésta. El tiempo es breve, las ansias crecen, las esperanzas menguan, y, con todo esto, llevo la vida sobre el deseo que tengo de vivir, y quisiera yo ponerle coto hasta besar los pies a Vuesa Excelencia; que podría ser fuese tanto el contento de ver a Vuesa Excelencia bueno en España, que me volviese a dar la vida. Pero si está decretado que la haya de perder, cúmplase la voluntad de los cielos, y por lo menos sepa Vuesa Excelencia este mi deseo, y sepa que tuvo en mí un tan aficionado criado de servirle que quiso pasar aun más allá de la muerte, mostrando su intención. Con todo esto, como en profecía me alegro de la llegada de Vuesa Excelencia, regocíjome de verle señalar con el dedo, y realégrome de que salieron verdaderas mis esperanzas, dilatadas en la fama de las bondades de Vuesa Excelencia. Todavía me quedan en el alma ciertas reliquias y asomos de Las semanas del jardín, y del famoso Bernardo. Si a dicha, por buena ventura mía, que ya no sería ventura, sino milagro, me diese el cielo vida, las verá, y con ellas fin de La Galatea, de quien sé está aficionado Vuesa Excelencia. Y, con estas obras, continuando mi deseo, guarde Dios a Vuesa Excelencia como puede. De Madrid, a diez y nueve de abril de mil y seiscientos y diez y seis años.

Prólogo

Sucedió, pues, lector amantísimo, que, viniendo otros dos amigos y yo del famoso lugar de Esquivias, por mil causas famoso, una por sus ilustres linajes y otra por sus ilustrísimos vinos, sentí que a mis espaldas venía picando con gran priesa uno que, al parecer, traía deseo de alcanzarnos, y aun lo mostró dándonos voces que no picásemos tanto. Esperámosle, y llegó sobre una borrica un estudiante pardal, porque todo venía vestido de pardo, antiparas, zapato redondo y espada con contera, valona bruñida y con trenzas iguales; verdad es, no traía más de dos, porque se le venía a un lado la valona por momentos, y él traía sumo trabajo y cuenta de enderezarla.

Llegando a nosotros dijo:

-¡Vuestas mercedes van a alcanzar algún oficio o prebenda a la corte, pues allá está su Ilustrísima de Toledo y su Majestad, ni más ni menos, según la priesa con que caminan?; que en verdad que a mi burra se le ha cantado el víctor de caminante más de una vez.

A lo cual respondió uno de mis compañeros:

-El rocín del señor Miguel de Cervantes tiene la culpa desto, porque es algo qué pasilargo.

Apenas hubo oído el estudiante el nombre de Cervantes, cuando, apeándose de su cabalgadura, cayéndosele aquí el cojín y allí el portamanteo, que con toda esta autoridad caminaba, arremetió a mí, y, acudiendo asirme de la mano izquierda, dijo:

-¡Sí, sí; éste es el manco sano, el famoso todo, el escritor alegre, y, finalmente, el regocijo de las musas!

Yo, que en tan poco espacio vi el grande encomio de mis alabanzas, parecióme ser descortesía no corresponder a ellas. Y así, abrazándole por el cuello, donde le eché a perder de todo punto la valona, le dije:

-Ese es un error donde han caído muchos aficionados ignorantes. Yo, señor, soy Cervantes, pero no el regocijo de las musas, ni ninguno de las demás baratijas que ha dicho vuesa merced; vuelva a cobrar su burra y suba, y caminemos en buena conversación lo poco que nos falta del camino.

Hízolo así el comedido estudiante, tuvimos algún tanto más las riendas, y con paso asentado seguimos nuestro camino, en el cual se trató de mi enfermedad, y el buen estudiante me desahució al momento, diciendo:

-Esta enfermedad es de hidropesía, que no la sanará toda el agua del mar

Océano que dulcemente se bebiese. Vuesa merced, señor Cervantes, ponga tasa al beber, no olvidándose de comer, que con esto sanará sin otra medicina alguna.

-Eso me han dicho muchos -respondí yo-, pero así puedo dejar de beber a todo mi beneplácito, como si para sólo eso hubiera nacido. Mi vida se va acabando, y, al paso de las efeméridas de mis pulsos, que, a más tardar, acabarán su carrera este domingo, acabaré yo la de mi vida. En fuerte punto ha llegado vuesa merced a conocerme, pues no me queda espacio para mostrarme agradecido a la voluntad que vuesa merced me ha mostrado.

En esto, llegamos a la puente de Toledo, y yo entré por ella, y él se apartó a entrar por la de Segovia.

Lo que se dirá de mi suceso, tendrá la fama cuidado, mis amigos gana de decilla, y yo mayor gana de escuchalla.

Tornéle a abrazar, volvióseme ofrecer, picó a su burra, y dejóme tan mal dispuesto como él iba caballero en su burra, a quien había dado gran ocasión a mi pluma para escribir donaires; pero no son todos los tiempos unos: tiempo vendrá, quizá, donde, anudando este roto hilo, diga lo que aquí me falta, y lo que sé convenía.

¡Adiós, gracias; adiós, donaires; adiós, regocijados amigos; que yo me voy muriendo, y deseando veros presto contentos en la otra vida!

Capítulo primero

VOCES daba el bárbaro Corsicurbo a la estrecha boca de una profunda mazmorra, antes sepultura que prisión de muchos cuerpos vivos que en ella estaban sepultados; y, aunque su terrible y espantoso estruendo cerca y lejos se escuchaba, de nadie eran entendidas articuladamente las razones que pronunciaba, sino de la miserable Cloelia, a quien sus desventuras en aquella profundidad tenían encerrada.

-Haz, ¡oh Cloelia! -decía el bárbaro-, que así como está, ligadas las manos atrás, salga acá arriba, atado a esa cuerda que descuelgo, aquel mancebo que habrá dos días que te entregamos; y mira bien si, entre las mujeres de la pasada presa, hay alguna que merezca nuestra compañía y gozar de la luz del claro cielo que nos cubre y del aire saludable que nos rodea.

Descolgó en esto una gruesa cuerda de cáñamo, y, de allí a poco espacio, él y otros cuatro bárbaros tiraron hacia arriba, en la cual cuerda, ligado por debajo de los brazos, sacaron asido fuertemente a un mancebo, al parecer de hasta diez y nueve o veinte años, vestido de lienzo basto, como marinero, pero hermoso sobre todo encarecimiento.

Lo primero que hicieron los bárbaros fue requerir las esposas y cordeles con que a las espaldas traía ligadas las manos. Luego le sacudieron los cabellos, que, como infinitos anillos de puro oro, la cabeza le cubrían. Limpiáronle el rostro, que cubierto de polvo tenía, y descubrió una tan maravillosa hermosura, que suspendió y enterneció los pechos de aquellos que para ser sus verdugos le llevaban.

No mostraba el gallardo mozo en su semblante género de aflicción alguna; antes, con ojos al parecer alegres, alzó el rostro, y miró al cielo por todas partes, y con voz clara y no turbada lengua dijo:

-Gracias os hago, ¡oh inmensos y piadosos cielos!, de que me habéis traído a morir adonde vuestra luz vea mi muerte, y no adonde estos oscuros calabozos, de donde agora salgo, de sombras caliginosas la cubran. Bien querría yo no morir desesperado, a lo menos, porque soy cristiano; pero mis desdichas son tales, que me llaman y casi fuerzan a desearlo.

Ninguna destas razones fue entendida de los bárbaros, por ser dichas en diferente lenguaje que el suyo; y así, cerrando primero la boca de la mazmorra con una gran piedra y cogiendo al mancebo sin desatarle, entre los cuatro llegaron con él a la marina, donde tenían una balsa de maderos, y atados unos con otros con fuertes bejucos y flexibles mimbres. Este artificio les servía, como luego pareció, de bajel en que pasaban a otra isla, que no dos millas o tres de allí se parecía.

Saltaron luego en los maderos, y pusieron en medio dellos sentado al prisionero, y luego uno de los bárbaros asió de un grandísimo arco que en la balsa estaba; y, poniendo en él una desmesurada flecha, cuya punta era de pedernal, con mucha presteza le flechó, y, encarando al mancebo, le señaló por su blanco, dando señales y muestras de que ya le quería pasar el pecho. Los bárbaros que quedaban asieron de tres palos gruesos, cortados a manera de remos, y el uno se puso a ser timonero, y los dos a encaminar la balsa a la otra isla.

El hermoso mozo, que por instantes esperaba y temía el golpe de la flecha amenazadora, encogía los hombros, apretaba los labios, enarcaba las cejas, y, con silencio profundo, dentro en su corazón pedía al cielo, no que le librase de aquel tan cercano como cruel peligro, sino que le diese ánimo para sufrirlo. Viendo lo cual el bárbaro flechero, y sabiendo que no había de ser aquel el género de muerte con que le habían de quitar la vida, hallando la belleza del mozo piedad en la dureza de su corazón, no quiso darle dilatada muerte, teniéndole siempre encarada la flecha al pecho; y así, arrojó de sí el arco, y, llegándose a él, por señas, como mejor pudo, le dio a entender que no quería matarle.

En esto estaban, cuando los maderos llegaron a la mitad del estrecho que las dos islas formaban, en el cual de improviso se levantó una borrasca, que, sin poder remediallo los inexpertos marineros, los leños de la balsa se desligaron y dividieron en partes, quedando en la una, que sería de hasta seis maderos compuesta, el mancebo, que de otra muerte que de ser anegado, tan poco había que estaba temeroso. Levantaron remolinos las aguas, pelearon entre sí los contrapuestos vientos, anegáronse los bárbaros, salieron los leños del atado prisionero al mar abierto, pasábanle las olas por cima, no solamente impidiéndole ver el cielo, pero negándole el poder pedirle tuviese compasión de su desventura. Y sí tuvo, pues las continuas y furiosas ondas, que a cada punto le cubrían, no le arrancaron de los leños, y se le llevaron consigo a su abismo; que, como llevaba atadas las manos a las espaldas, ni podía asirse, ni usar de otro remedio alguno.

Desta manera que se ha dicho salió a lo raso del mar, que se mostró algún tanto sosegado y tranquilo al volver una punta de la isla, adonde los leños milagrosamente se encaminaron y del furioso mar se defendieron. Sentóse el fatigado joven, y, tendiendo la vista a todas partes, casi junto a él descubrió un navío que en aquel redoso del alterado mar, como en seguro puerto, se reparaba.

Descubrieron asimismo los del navío los maderos y el bulto que sobre ellos venía; y, por certificarse qué podía ser aquello, echaron el esquiife al agua y llegaron a verlo, y, hallando allí al tan desfigurado como hermoso mancebo, con diligencia y lástima le pasaron a su navío, dando con el nuevo hallazgo admiración a cuantos en él estaban.

Subió el mozo en brazos ajenos, y, no pudiendo tenerse en sus pies de puro flaco -porque había tres días que no había comido-y de puro molido y maltratado de las olas, dio consigo un gran golpe sobre la cubierta del navío, el capitán del cual, con ánimo generoso y compasión natural, mandó que le socorriesen. Acudieron luego unos a quitarle las ataduras, otros a traer conservas y odoríferos vinos, con cuyos remedios volvió en sí, como de muerte a vida, el desmayado mozo, el cual, poniendo los ojos en el capitán, cuya gentileza y rico traje le llevó tras sí la vista y aun la lengua, y le dijo:

-Los piadosos cielos te paguen, piadoso señor, el bien que me has hecho, que mal se pueden llevar las tristezas del ánimo, si no se esfuerzan los descaecimientos del cuerpo. Mis desdichas me tienen de manera que no te puedo hacer ninguna recompensa deste beneficio, si no es con el agradecimiento. Y si se sufre que un pobre afligido pueda decir de sí mismo alguna alabanza, yo sé que en ser agradecido ninguno en el mundo me podrá llevar alguna ventaja.

Y en esto probó a levantarse para ir a besarle los pies, mas la flaqueza no se lo permitió, porque tres veces lo probó y otras tantas volvió a dar consigo en el suelo. Viendo lo cual el capitán, mandó que le llevasen debajo de cubierta y le echasen en dos traspontines, y que, quitándole los mojados vestidos, le vistiesen otros enjutos y limpios, y le hiciesen descansar y dormir. Hízose lo que el capitán mandó. Obedeció, callando, el mozo, y en el capitán creció la admiración de nuevo, viéndolo levantar en pie, con la gallarda disposición que tenía, y luego le comenzó a fatigar el deseo de saber dél, lo más presto que pudiese, quién era, cómo se llamaba y de qué causas había nacido el efeto que en tanta estrechez le había puesto. Pero, excediendo su cortesía a su deseo, quiso que primero se acudiese a su debilidad, que cumplir la voluntad suya.

Capítulo segundo del libro primero

REPOSANDO dejaron los ministros de la nave al mancebo, en cumplimiento de lo que su señor les había mandado. Pero, como le acosaban varios y tristes pensamientos, no podía el sueño tomar posesión de sus sentidos, ni menos lo consintieron unos congojosos suspiros y unas angustiadas lamentaciones que a sus oídos llegaron, a su parecer, salidos de entre unas tablas de otro apartamiento que junto al suyo estaba. Y, poniéndose con grande atención a escucharlas, oyó que decían:

-¡En triste y menguado signo mis padres me engendraron, y en no benigna estrella mi madre me arrojó a la luz del mundo! ¡Y bien digo arrojó, porque nacimiento como el mío, antes se puede decir arrojar que nacer! Libre pensé yo que gozara de la luz del sol en esta vida, pero engañóme mi pensamiento, pues me veo a pique de ser vendida por esclava: desventura a quien ninguna puede compararse.

-¡Oh tú, quienquiera que seas! -dijo a esta sazón el mancebo-. Si es, como decirse suele, que las desgracias y trabajos cuando se comunican suelen aliviarse, llégate aquí, y, por entre los espacios descubiertos destas tablas, cuéntame los tuyos; que si en mí no hallares alivio, hallarás quien dellos se compadezca.

-Escucha, pues -le fue respondido-, que en las más breves razones te contaré las sinrazones que la fortuna me ha hecho. Pero querría saber primero a quién las cuento. Dime si eres, por ventura, un mancebo que poco ha hallaron medio muerto en unos maderos que dicen sirven de barcos a unos bárbaros que están en esta isla, donde hemos dado fondo, reparándonos de la borrasca que se ha levantado.

-El mismo soy -respondió el mancebo.

-Pues ¿quién eres? -preguntó la persona que hablaba.

-Dijératelo, si no quisiera que primero me obligaras con contarme tu vida, que por las palabras que poco ha que te oí decir, imagino que no debe de ser tan buena como quisieras.

A lo que le respondieron:

-Escucha, que en cifra te diré mis males. «El capitán y señor deste navío se llama Arnaldo, es hijo heredero del rey de Dinamarca, a cuyo poder vino por diferentes y estraños acontecimientos una principal doncella, a quien yo tuve por señora, a mi parecer, de tanta hermosura que entre las que hoy viven en el mundo, y entre aquellas que puede pintar en la imaginación el más agudo entendimiento, puede llevar la ventaja. Su discreción iguala a su belleza, y sus desdichas a su discreción y a su hermosura. Su nombre es Auristela. Sus padres, de linaje de reyes y de riquísimo estado.

»Ésta, pues, a quien todas estas alabanzas vienen cortas, se vio vendida, y comprada de Arnaldo, y con tanto ahínco y con tantas veras la amó y la ama que mil veces de esclava la quiso hacer su señora, admitiéndola por su legítima esposa; y esto con voluntad del rey, padre de Arnaldo, que juzgó que las raras virtudes y gentileza de Auristela mucho más que ser reina merecían. Pero ella se defendía, diciendo no ser posible romper un voto que tenía hecho de guardar virginidad toda su vida, y que no pensaba quebrarle en ninguna manera, si bien la solicitasen promesas o la amenazasen muertes. Pero no por esto ha dejado Arnaldo de entretener sus esperanzas con dudosas imaginaciones, arrimándolas a la variación de los tiempos y a la mudable condición de las mujeres, hasta que sucedió que, andando mi señora Auristela por la ribera del mar, solazándose, no como esclava, sino como reina, llegaron unos bajeles de cosarios, y la robaron y llevaron no se sabe adónde.

»El príncipe Arnaldo, imaginando que estos cosarios eran los mismos que la primera vez se la vendieron (los cuales cosarios andan por todos estos mares, ínsulas y riberas, robando o comprando las más hermosas doncellas que hallan, para traellas por granjería a vender a esta ínsula, donde dicen que estamos, la cual es habitada de unos bárbaros, gente indómita y cruel, los cuales tienen entre sí por cosa inviolable y cierta, persuadidos, o ya del demonio o ya de un antiguo hechicero a quien ellos tienen por sapientísimo varón, que de entre ellos ha de salir un rey que conquiste y gane gran parte del mundo; este rey que esperan no saben quién ha de ser, y para saberlo, aquel hechicero les dio esta orden: que sacrificasen todos los hombres que a su ínsula llegasen, de cuyos corazones, digo de cada uno de por sí, hiciesen polvos y los diesen a beber a los bárbaros más principales de la ínsula, con expresa orden que, el que los pasase sin torcer el rostro ni dar muestras de que le sabía mal, le alzasen por su rey; pero no ha de ser éste el que conquiste el mundo, sino un hijo suyo. También les mandó que tuviesen en la isla todas las doncellas que pudiesen o comprar o robar, y que la más hermosa dellas se la entregasen luego al bárbaro, cuya sucesión valerosa prometía la bebida de los polvos. Estas doncellas, compradas o robadas, son bien tratadas de ellos, que sólo en esto muestran no ser bárbaros, y las que compran, son a subidísimos precios, que los pagan en pedazos de oro sin cuño y en preciosísimas perlas, de que los mares de las riberas destas islas abundan: y a esta causa, llevados deste interés y ganancia, muchos se han hecho cosarios y mercaderes).

»Arnaldo, pues, que, como te he dicho, ha imaginado que en esta isla podría ser que estuviese Auristela, mitad de su alma sin la cual no puede vivir, ha ordenado, para certificarse desta duda, de venderme a mí a los bárbaros, porque, quedando yo entre ellos, sirva de espía de saber lo que desea, y no espera otra cosa sino que el mar se amanse, para hacer escala y concluir su venta. Mira, pues, si con razón me quejo, pues la ventura que me aguarda es venir a vivir entre bárbaros, que de mi hermosura no me puedo prometer venir a ser reina, especialmente si la corta suerte hubiese traído a esta tierra a mi señora, la sin par Auristela. De esta causa nacieron los suspiros que me has oído, y destos temores las quejas que me atormentan.»

Calló, en diciendo esto, y al mancebo se le atravesó un ñudo en la garganta; pegó la boca con las tablas, que humedeció con copiosas lágrimas, y al cabo de un pequeño espacio le preguntó si, por ventura, tenía algunos barruntos de que Arnaldo hubiese gozado de Auristela, o ya de que Auristela, por estar en otra parte prendada, desdeñase a Arnaldo, y no admitiese tan gran dádiva como la de un reino, porque a él le parecía que tal vez las leyes del gusto humano tienen más fuerza que las de la religión.

Respondióle que, aunque ella imaginaba que el tiempo había podido dar a Auristela ocasión de querer bien a un tal Periandro, que la había sacado de su patria (caballero generoso, dotado de todas las partes que le podían hacer amable de todos aquellos que le conociesen), nunca se le había oído nombrar en las continuas quejas que de sus desgracias daba al cielo, ni en otro modo alguno.

Preguntóle si conocía ella a aquel Periandro que decía.

Díjole que no, sino que por relación sabía ser el que llevó a su señora, a cuyo servicio ella había venido después que Periandro, por un extraño acontecimiento, la había dejado.

En esto estaban, cuando de arriba llamaron a Taurisa -que éste era el nombre de la que sus desgracias había contado-, la cual, oyéndose llamar, dijo:

-Sin duda alguna el mar está manso, y la borrasca quieta, pues me llaman para hacer de mí la desdichada entrega. A Dios te queda, quienquiera que seas, y los cielos te libren de ser entregado para que los polvos de tu abrasado corazón testifiquen esta vanidad e impertinente profecía; que también estos insolentes moradores desta ínsula buscan corazones que abrasar, como doncellas que guardar para lo que procuran.

Apartáronse. Subió Taurisa a la cubierta. Quedó el mancebo pensativo, y pidió que le diesen de vestir, que quería levantarse. Trujéronle un vestido de damasco verde, cortado al modo del que él había traído de lienzo. Subió arriba. Recibióle Arnaldo con agradable semblante. Sentóle junto a sí. Vistieron a Taurisa rica y gallardamente, al modo que suelen vestirse las ninfas de las aguas, o las amadríades de los montes. En tanto que esto se hacía con admiración del mozo, Arnaldo le contó todos sus amores y sus intentos, y aun le pidió consejo de lo que haría, y le preguntó si los medios que ponía para saber de Auristela iban bien encaminados.

El mozo, que del razonamiento que había tenido con Taurisa y de lo que Arnaldo le contaba tenía el alma llena de mil imaginaciones y sospechas, discurriendo con velocísimo curso del entendimiento lo que podía suceder si acaso Auristela entre aquellos bárbaros se hallase, le respondió:

-Señor, yo no tengo edad para saberte aconsejar, pero tengo voluntad que me mueve a servirte, que la vida que me has dado con el recibimiento y mercedes que me has hecho me obligan a emplearla en tu servicio. Mi nombre es Periandro, de nobilísimos padres nacido, y al par de mi nobleza corre mi desventura y mis desgracias, las cuales por ser tantas no conceden ahora lugar para contártelas. Esa Auristela que buscas es una hermana mía que también yo ando buscando, que, por varios acontecimientos, ha un año que nos perdimos. Por el nombre y por la hermosura que me encareces conozco sin duda que es mi perdida hermana, que daría por hallarla, no sólo la vida que poseo, sino el contento que espero recibir de haberla hallado, que es lo más que puedo encarecer. Y así, como tan interesado en este hallazgo, voy escogiendo, entre otros muchos medios que en la imaginación fabrico, éste, que, aunque venga a ser con más peligro de mi vida, será más cierto y más breve. Tú, señor Arnaldo, ¿estás determinado de vender esta doncella a estos bárbaros, para que, estando en su poder, vea si está en el suyo Auristela, de que te podrás informar volviendo otra vez a vender otra doncella a los mismos bárbaros, y a Taurisa no le faltará modo, o dará señales si está o no Auristela con las demás que para el efeto que se sabe los bárbaros guardan, y con tanta solicitud compran?

-Así es la verdad -dijo Arnaldo-, y he escogido antes a Taurisa que a otra, de cuatro que van en el navío para el mismo efeto, porque Taurisa la conoce, que ha sido su doncella.

-Todo eso está muy bien pensado -dijo Periandro-, pero yo soy de parecer que ninguna persona hará esa diligencia tan bien como yo, pues mi edad, mi rostro, el interés que se me sigue, juntamente con el conocimiento que tengo de Auristela, me está incitando a aconsejarme que tome sobre mis hombros esta empresa. Mira, señor, si vienes en este parecer, y no lo dilates, que, en los casos arduos y dificultosos, en un mismo punto han de andar el consejo y la obra.

Cuadráronle a Arnaldo las razones de Periandro, y, sin reparar en algunos inconvenientes que se le ofrecían, las puso en obra, y de muchos y ricos vestidos de que venía proveído por si hallaba a Auristela, vistió a Periandro, que quedó, al parecer, la más gallarda y hermosa mujer que hasta entonces los ojos humanos habían visto, pues si no era la hermosura de Auristela, ninguna otra podía igualársele. Los del navío quedaron admirados; Taurisa, atónita; el príncipe, confuso; el cual, a no pensar que era hermano de Auristela, el considerar que era varón le traspasara el alma con la dura lanza de los celos, cuya punta se atreve a entrar por las del más agudo diamante: quiero decir que los celos rompen toda seguridad y recato, aunque dél se armen los pechos enamorados. Finalmente, hecho el metamorfosis de Periandro, se hicieron un poco a la mar, para que de todo en todo de los bárbaros fuesen descubiertos.

La priesa con que Arnaldo quiso saber de Auristela no consintió en que preguntase primero a Periandro quién eran él y su hermana, y por qué trances habían venido al miserable en que le había hallado; que todo esto, según buen discurso, había de preceder a la confianza que dél hacía. Pero, como es propia condición de los amantes ocupar los pensamientos antes en buscar los medios de alcanzar el fin de su deseo que en otras curiosidades, no le dio lugar a que preguntase lo que fuera bien que supiera, y lo que supo después cuando no le estuvo bien el saberlo.

Alongados, pues, un tanto de la isla, como se ha dicho, adornaron la nave con flámulas y gallardetes, que ellos azotando el aire y ellas besando las aguas, hermosísima vista hacían. El mar tranquilo, el cielo claro, el son de las chirimías y de otros instrumentos, tan bélicos como alegres, suspendían los ánimos; y los bárbaros, que de no muy lejos lo miraban, quedaron más suspensos, y en un momento coronaron la ribera, armados de arcos y saetas de la grandeza que otra vez se ha dicho.

Poco menos de una milla llegaba la nave a la isla, cuando, disparando toda la artillería, que traía mucha y gruesa, arrojó el esquife al agua, y, entrando en él Arnaldo, Taurisa y Periandro, y otros seis marineros, pusieron en una lanza un lienzo blanco, señal de que venían de paz, como es costumbre casi en todas las naciones de la tierra. Y lo que en ésta les sucedió se cuenta en el capítulo que se sigue.

Capítulo tercero del primer libro

COMO se iba acercando el barco a la ribera, se iban apiñando los bárbaros, cada uno deseoso de saber, primero que viese, lo que en él venía; y, en señal que lo recibirían de paz, y no de guerra, sacaron muchos lienzos y los campearon por el aire, tiraron infinitas flechas al viento, y, con increíble ligereza, saltaban algunos de unas partes en otras.

No pudo llegar el barco a bordas con la tierra, por ser la mar baja, que en aquellas partes crece y mengua como en las nuestras; pero los bárbaros, hasta cantidad de veinte, se entraron a pie por la mojada arena, y llegaron a él casi a tocarse con las manos. Traían sobre los hombros a una mujer bárbara, pero de mucha hermosura, la cual, antes que otro alguno hablase, dijo en lengua polaca:

-A vosotros, quienquiera que seáis, pide nuestro príncipe, o por mejor decir, nuestro gobernador, que le digáis quién sois, a qué venís y qué es lo que buscáis. Si por ventura traéis alguna doncella que vender, se os será muy bien pagada, pero si son otras mercancías las vuestras, no las hemos menester, porque en esta nuestra isla, merced al cielo, tenemos todo lo necesario para la vida humana, sin tener necesidad de salir a otra parte a buscarlo.

Entendióla muy bien Arnaldo, y preguntóle si era bárbara de nación, o si acaso era de las compradas en aquella isla. A lo que le respondió:

-Respóndeme tú a lo que he preguntado, que estos mis amos no gustan que en otras pláticas me dilate, sino en aquellas que hacen al caso para su negocio.

Oyendo lo cual Arnaldo, respondió:

-Nosotros somos naturales del reino de Dinamarca, usamos el oficio de mercaderes y de cosarios, trocamos lo que podemos, vendemos lo que nos compran y despachamos lo que hurtamos; y, entre otras presas que a nuestras manos han venido, ha sido la de esta doncella -y señaló a Periandro-, la cual, por ser una de las más hermosas, o por mejor decir, la más hermosa del mundo, os la traemos a vender, que ya sabemos el efeto para que las compran en esta isla; y si es que ha de salir verdadero el vaticinio que vuestros sabios han dicho, bien podéis esperar desta sin igual belleza y disposición gallarda que os dará hijos hermosos y valientes.

Oyendo esto algunos de los bárbaros, preguntaron a la bárbara les dijese lo que decía. Díjolo ella, y al momento se partieron cuatro dellos, y fueron -a lo que pareció-a dar aviso a su gobernador. En este espacio que volvían, preguntó Arnaldo a la bárbara si tenían algunas mujeres compradas en la isla, y si había alguna entre ellas de belleza tanta que pudiese igualar a la que ellos traían para vender.

-No -dijo la bárbara-, porque, aunque hay muchas, ninguna dellas se me iguala, porque, en efeto, yo soy una de las desdichadas para ser reina destos bárbaros, que sería la mayor desventura que me pudiese venir.

Volvieron los que habían ido a la tierra, y con ellos otros muchos y su príncipe, que lo mostró ser en el rico adorno que traía.

Habíase echado sobre el rostro un delgado y trasparente velo Periandro, por no dar de improviso, como rayo, con la luz de sus ojos en los de aquellos bárbaros, que con grandísima atención le estaban mirando.

Habló el gobernador con la bárbara, de que resultó que ella dijo a Arnaldo que su príncipe decía que mandase alzar el velo a su doncella. Hízose así. Levantóse en pie Periandro, descubrió el rostro, alzó los ojos al cielo, mostró dolerse de su ventura, estendió los rayos de sus dos soles a una y otra parte, que, encontrándose con los del bárbaro capitán, dieron con él en tierra (a lo menos, así lo dio a entender el hincarse de rodillas, como se hincó, adorando a su modo en la hermosa imagen, que pensaba ser mujer); y, hablando con la bárbara, en pocas razones concertó la venta, y dio por ella todo lo que quiso pedir Arnaldo, sin replicar palabra alguna.

Partieron todos los bárbaros a la isla; en un instante volvieron con infinitos pedazos de oro, y con luengas sargas de finísimas perlas, que sin cuenta y a montón confuso se las entregaron a Arnaldo, el cual luego, tomando de la mano a Periandro, le entregó al bárbaro, y dijo a la intérprete dijese a su dueño que dentro de pocos días volvería a venderle otra doncella, si no tan hermosa, a lo menos tal que pudiese merecer ser comprada.

Abrazó Periandro a todos los que en el barco venían, casi preñados los ojos de lágrimas, que no le nacían de corazón afeminado, sino de la consideración de los rigurosos trances que por él habían pasado.

Hizo señal Arnaldo a la nave que disparase la artillería, y el bárbaro a los suyos que tocasen sus instrumentos, y en un instante atronó el cielo la artillería, y la música de los bárbaros llenaron los aires de confusos y diferentes sonos. Con este aplauso, llevado en hombros de los bárbaros, puso los pies en tierra Periandro; llegó a su nave Arnaldo y los que con él venían, quedando concertado entre Periandro y Arnaldo que, si el viento no le forzase, procuraría no desviarse de la isla sino lo que bastase para no ser de ella descubierto, y volver a ella a vender, si fuese necesario, a Taurisa, que, con la seña que Periandro le hiciese, se sabría el sí o el no del hallazgo de Auristela; y, en caso que no estuviese en la isla, no faltaría traza para libertar a Periandro, aunque fuese moviendo guerra a los bárbaros con todo su poder y el de sus amigos.

Capítulo cuarto del libro primero

ENTRE los que vinieron a concertar la compra de la doncella, vino con el capitán un bárbaro, llamado Bradamiro, de los más valientes y más principales de toda la isla, menospreciador de toda ley, arrogante sobre la misma arrogancia, y atrevido tanto como él mismo, porque no se halla con quién compararlo.

Éste, pues, desde el punto que vio a Periandro, creyendo ser mujer, como todos lo creyeron, hizo disinio en su pensamiento de escogerla para sí, sin esperar a que las leyes del vaticinio se probasen o cumpliesen.

Así como puso los pies en la ínsula Periandro, muchos bárbaros, a porfía, le tomaron en hombros, y, con muestras de infinita alegría, le llevaron a una gran tienda que, entre otras muchas pequeñas, en un apacible y deleitoso prado estaban puestas, todas cubiertas de pieles de animales, cuáles domésticos, cuáles selváticos. La bárbara que había servido de intérprete de la compra y venta no se le quitaba del lado, y con palabras y en lenguaje que él no entendía le consolaba.

Ordenó luego el gobernador que pasasen a la ínsula de la prisión, y trajesen de ella algún varón, si le hubiese, para hacer la prueba de su engañosa esperanza. Fue obedecido al punto, y al mismo instante tendieron por el suelo pieles curtidas, olorosas, limpias y lisas, de animales, para que de manteles sirviesen, sobre las cuales arrojaron y tendieron sin concierto ni policía alguna, diversos géneros de frutas secas; y, sentándose él y algunos de los principales bárbaros que allí estaban, comenzó a comer y a convidar por señas a Periandro que lo mismo hiciese. Sólo se quedó en pie Bradamiro, arrimado a su arco, clavados los ojos en la que pensaba ser mujer. Rogóle el gobernador se sentase, pero no quiso obedecerle; antes, dando un gran suspiro, volvió las espaldas, y se salió de la tienda.

En esto, llegó un bárbaro, que dijo al capitán que, al tiempo que habían llegado él y otros cuatro para pasar a la prisión, llegó a la marina una balsa, la cual traía un varón y a la mujer guardiana de la mazmorra, cuyas nuevas pusieron fin a la comida; y, levantándose el capitán, con todos los que allí estaban, acudió a ver la balsa. Quiso acompañarle Periandro, de lo que él fue muy contento.

Cuando llegaron, ya estaban en tierra el prisionero y la custodia. Miró atentamente Periandro, por ver si por ventura conocía al desdichado a quien su corta suerte había puesto en el mismo extremo en que él se había visto, pero no pudo verle el rostro de lleno en lleno, a causa que tenía inclinada la cabeza, y, como de industria, parecía que no dejaba verse de nadie; pero no dejó de conocer a la mujer que decían ser guardiana de la prisión, cuya vista y conocimiento le suspendió el alma y le alborotó los sentidos, porque claramente, y sin poner duda en ello, conoció ser Cloelia, ama de su querida Auristela. Quisiéramos hablar, pero no se atrevió, por no entender si acertaría o no en ello; y, así reprimiendo su deseo como sus labios, estuvo esperando en lo que pararía semejante acontecimiento.

El gobernador, con deseo de apresurar sus pruebas y dar felice compañía a Periandro, mandó que al momento se sacrificase aquel mancebo, de cuyo corazón se hiciesen los polvos de la ridícula y engañosa prueba.

Asieron al momento del mancebo muchos bárbaros; sin más ceremonias que atarle un lienzo por los ojos, le hicieron hincar de rodillas, atándole por atrás las manos, el cual, sin hablar palabra, como un manso cordero, esperaba el golpe que le había de quitar la vida. Visto lo cual por la antigua Cloelia, alzó la voz, y, con más aliento que de sus muchos años se esperaba, comenzó a decir:

-Mira, oh gran gobernador, lo que haces, porque ese varón que mandas sacrificar no lo es, ni puede aprovechar ni servir en cosa alguna a tu intención, porque es la más hermosa mujer que puede imaginarse. Habla, hermosísima Auristela, y no permitas, llevada de la corriente de tus desgracias, que te quiten la vida, poniendo tasa a la providencia de los cielos, que te la pueden guardar y conservar, para que felicemente la goces.

A estas razones, los crueles bárbaros detuvieron el golpe, que ya ya la sombra del cuchillo se señalaba en la garganta del arrodillado. Mandó el capitán desatarle y dar libertad a las manos y luz a los ojos; y, mirándole con atención, le pareció ver el más hermoso rostro de mujer que hubiese visto, y juzgó, aunque bárbaro, que si no era el de Periandro, ninguno otro en el mundo podría igualársele.

¿Qué lengua podrá decir, o qué pluma escribir, lo que sintió Periandro cuando conoció ser Auristela la condenada y la libre? Quitósele la vista de los ojos, cubriósele el corazón, y con pasos torcidos y flojos fue a abrazarse con Auristela, a quien dijo, teniéndola estrechamente entre sus brazos:

-¡Oh querida mitad de mi alma, oh firme columna de mis esperanzas, oh prenda, que no sé si diga por mi bien o por mi mal hallada, aunque no será sino por bien, pues de tu vista no puede proceder mal ninguno! Ves aquí a tu hermano Periandro.

Y esta razón dijo con voz tan baja que de nadie pudo ser oída, y prosiguió diciendo:

-Vive, señora y hermana mía, que en esta isla no hay muerte para las mujeres, y no quieras tú para contigo ser más cruel que sus moradores; confía en los cielos, que, pues te han librado hasta aquí de los infinitos peligros en que te debes de haber visto, te librarán de los que se pueden temer de aquí adelante.

-¡Ay, hermano! -respondió Auristela (que era la misma que por varón pensaba ser sacrificada)-. ¡Ay, hermano! -replicó otra vez-, ¡y cómo creo que éste en que nos hallamos ha de ser el último trance que de nuestras desventuras puede temerse! Suerte dichosa ha sido el hallarte, pero desdichada ser en tal lugar y en semejante traje.

Lloraban entrambos, cuyas lágrimas vio el bárbaro Bradamiro; y, creyendo que Periandro las vertía del dolor de la muerte de aquél, que pensó ser su conocido, pariente o amigo, determinó de libertarle, aunque se pusiese a romper por todo inconveniente. Y así, llegándose a los dos, asió de la una mano a Auristela y de la otra a Periandro, y, con semblante amenazador y ademán soberbio, en alta voz dijo:

-Ninguno sea osado, si es que estima en algo su vida, de tocar a estos dos, aun en un solo cabello. Esta doncella es mía, porque yo la quiero, y este hombre ha de ser libre, porque ella lo quiere.

Apenas hubo dicho esto, cuando el bárbaro gobernador, indignado e impaciente sobremanera, puso una grande y aguda flecha en el arco, y, desviándole de sí cuanto pudo estenderse el brazo izquierdo, puso la empulgüera con el derecho junto al diestro oído, y disparó la flecha con tan buen tino y con tanta furia que en un instante llegó a la boca de Bradamiro, y se la cerró, quitándole el movimiento de la lengua y sacándole el alma, con que dejó admirados, atónitos y suspensos a cuantos allí estaban.

Pero no hizo tan a su salvo el tiro, tan atrevido como certero, que no recibiese por el mismo estilo la paga de su atrevimiento; porque un hijo de Corsicurbo, el bárbaro que se ahogó en el pasaje de Periandro, pareciéndole ser más ligeros sus pies que las flechas de su arco, en dos brincos se puso junto al capitán, y, alzando el brazo, le envainó en el pecho un puñal, que, aunque de piedra, era más fuerte y agudo que si de acero forjado fuera.

Cerró el capitán en sempiterna noche los ojos, y dio con su muerte venganza a la de Bradamiro, alborotó los pechos y los corazones de los parientes de entrambos, puso las armas en las manos de todos, y en un instante, incitados de la venganza y cólera, comenzaron a enviar muertes en las flechas de unas partes a otras. Acabadas las flechas, como no se acabaron las manos ni los puñales, arremetieron los unos a los otros, sin respetar el hijo al padre ni el hermano al hermano; antes, como si de muchos tiempos atrás fueran enemigos mortales por muchas injurias recibidas, con las uñas se despedazaban y con los puñales se herían sin haber quién los pusiese en paz.

Entre estas flechas, entre estas heridas, entre estos golpes y entre estas muertes, estaban juntos la antigua Cloelia, la doncella intérprete, Periandro y Auristela, todos apiñados, y todos llenos de confusión y de miedo.

En mitad desta furia, llevados en vuelo algunos bárbaros, de los que debían de ser de la parcialidad de Bradamiro, se desviaron de la contienda y fueron a poner fuego a una selva, que estaba allí cerca, como a hacienda del gobernador. Comenzaron a arder los árboles y a favorecer la ira el viento, que, aumentando las llamas y el humo, todos temieron ser ciegos y abrasados.

Llegábase la noche, que, aunque fuera clara, se escureciera, cuanto más siendo oscura y tenebrosa. Los gemidos de los que morían, las voces de los que amenazaban, los estallidos del fuego, no en los corazones de los bárbaros ponían miedo alguno, porque estaban ocupados con la ira y la venganza; poníanle, sí, en los de los miserables apiñados, que no sabían qué hacerse, adónde irse o cómo valerse; y, en esta sazón tan confusa, no se olvidó el cielo de socorrerles por tan estraña novedad que la tuvieron por milagro.

Ya casi cerraba la noche, y, como se ha dicho, oscura y temerosa, y solas las llamas de la abrasada selva daban luz bastante para divisar las cosas, cuando un bárbaro mancebo se llegó a Periandro, y, en lengua castellana, que dél fue bien entendida, le dijo:

-Sígueme, hermosa doncella, y di que hagan lo mismo las personas que contigo están, que yo os pondré en salvo, si los cielos me ayudan.

No le respondió palabra Periandro, sino hizo que Auristela, Cloelia y la intérprete se animasen y le siguiesen; y así, pisando muertos y hollando armas, siguieron al joven bárbaro que les guiaba. Llevaban las llamas de la ardiente selva a las espaldas, que les servían de viento que el paso les aligerase. Los muchos años de Cloelia y los pocos de Auristela no permitían que al paso de su guía tendiesen el suyo. Viendo lo cual el bárbaro, robusto y de fuerzas, asió de Cloelia y se la echó al hombro, y Periandro hizo lo mismo de Auristela; la intérprete, menos tierna, más animosa, con varonil brío los seguía. Desta manera, cayendo y levantando, como decirse suele, llegaron a la marina, y, habiendo andado como una milla por ella hacia la banda del norte, se entró el bárbaro por una espaciosa cueva, en quien la saca del mar entraba y salía. Pocos pasos anduvieron por ella, torciéndose a una y otra parte, estrechándose en una y alargándose en otra, ya agazapados, ya inclinados, ya agobiados al suelo, y ya en pie y derechos, hasta que salieron, a su parecer, a un campo raso, pues les pareció que podían libremente enderezarse, que así se lo dijo su guiador, no pudiendo verlo ellos por la escuridad de la noche, y porque las luces de los encendidos montes, que entonces con más rigor ardían, allí llegar no podían.

-¡Bendito sea Dios -dijo el bárbaro en la misma lengua castellana- que nos ha traído a este lugar, que, aunque en él se puede temer algún peligro, no será de muerte!

En esto, vieron que hacia ellos venía corriendo una gran luz, bien así como cometa, o por mejor decir exhalación que por el aire camina. Esperáranla con temor, si el bárbaro no dijera:

-Este es mi padre, que viene a recebirme.

Periandro, que aunque no muy despiertamente sabía hablar la lengua castellana, le dijo:

-El cielo te pague, ¡oh ángel humano!, o quienquiera que seas, el bien que nos has hecho, que, aunque no sea otro que el dilatar nuestra muerte, lo tenemos por singular beneficio.

Llegó en esto la luz, que la traía uno, al parecer bárbaro, cuyo aspecto la edad de poco más de cincuenta años le señalaba. Llegando, puso la luz en tierra, que era un grueso palo de tea, y a brazos abiertos se fue a su hijo, a quien preguntó en castellano que qué le había sucedido, que con tal compañía volvía.

-Padre -respondió el mozo-vamos a nuestro rancho, que hay muchas cosas que decir y muchas más que pensar. La isla se abrasa, casi todos los moradores della quedan hechos ceniza o medio abrasados; estas pocas reliquias que aquí veis, por impulso del cielo las he hurtado a las llamas y al filo de los bárbaros puñales. Vamos, señor, como tengo dicho, a nuestro rancho, para que la caridad de mi madre y de mi hermana se muestre y ejercite en acariciar a estos mis cansados y temerosos huéspedes.

Guió el padre, siguiéronle todos, animóse Cloelia, pues caminó a pie, no quiso dejar Periandro la hermosa carga que llevaba, por no ser posible que le diese pesadumbre, siendo Auristela único bien suyo en la tierra.

Poco anduvieron, cuando llegaron a una altísima peña, al pie de la cual descubrieron un anchísimo espacio o cueva, a quien servían de techo y de paredes las mismas peñas. Salieron con teas encendidas en las manos dos mujeres vestidas al traje bárbaro: la una muchacha de hasta quince años, y la otra hasta treinta; ésta hermosa, pero la muchacha hermosísima.

La una dijo:

-¡Ay, padre y hermano mío!

Y la otra no dijo más sino:

-Seáis bien venido, regalado hijo de mi alma.

La intérprete estaba admirada de oír hablar en aquella parte, y a mujeres que parecían bárbaras, otra lengua de aquélla que en la isla se acostumbraba; y, cuando les iba a preguntar qué misterio tenía saber ellas aquel lenguaje, lo estorbó mandar el padre a su esposa y a su hija que aderezasen con lanudas pieles el suelo de la inculta cueva. Ellas le obedecieron, arrojando a las paredes las teas; en un instante, solícitas y diligentes, sacaron de otra cueva que más adentro se hacía, pieles de cabras y ovejas y de otros animales, con que quedó el suelo adornado, y se reparó el frío que comenzaba a fatigarles.

Capítulo quinto

De la cuenta que dio de sí el bárbaro español a sus nuevos huéspedes

PRESTA y breve fue la cena; pero, por cenarla sin sobresalto, la hizo sabrosa. Renovaron las teas, y, aunque quedó ahumado el aposento, quedó caliente. Las vajillas que en la cena sirvieron, ni fueron de plata ni de Pisa: las manos de la bárbara y bárbaro pequeños fueron los platos, y unas cortezas de árboles, un poco más agradables que de corcho, fueron los vasos. Quedóse Candia lejos, y sirvió en su lugar agua pura, limpia y frigidísima.

Quedóse dormida Cloelia, porque los luengos años más amigos son del sueño que de otra cualquiera conversación, por gustosa que sea. Acomodóla la bárbara grande en el segundo apartamento, haciéndole de pieles así colchones como frazadas; volvió a sentarse con los demás, a quien el español dijo en lengua castellana desta manera:

-Puesto que estaba en razón que yo supiera primero, señores míos, algo de vuestra hacienda y sucesos, antes que os dijera los míos, quiero, por obligaros, que los sepáis, porque los vuestros no se me encubran después que los míos hubiéredes oído.

«Yo, según la buena suerte quiso, nací en España, en una de las mejores provincias de ella. Echáronme al mundo padres medianamente nobles; criáronme como ricos. Llegué a las puertas de la gramática, que son aquéllas por donde se entra a las demás ciencias. Inclínome mi estrella, si bien en parte a las letras, mucho más a las armas. No tuve amistad en mis verdes años ni con Ceres ni con Baco; y así, en mí siempre estuvo Venus fría. Llevado, pues, de mi inclinación natural, dejé mi patria, y fuime a la guerra que entonces la majestad del César Carlo Quinto hacía en Alemania contra algunos potentados de ella. Fueme Marte favorable, alcancé nombre de buen soldado, honróme el Emperador, tuve amigos, y, sobre todo, aprendí a ser liberal y bien criado, que estas virtudes se aprenden en la escuela del Marte cristiano. Volví a mi patria honrado y rico, con propósito de estarme en ella algunos días gozando de mis padres, que aun vivían, y de los amigos que me esperaban. Pero esta que llaman Fortuna, que yo no sé lo que se sea, envidiosa de mi sosiego, volviendo la rueda que dicen que tiene, me derribó de su cumbre, adonde yo pensé que estaba puesto, al profundo de la miseria en que me veo, tomando por instrumento para hacerlo a un caballero, hijo segundo de un titulado que junto a mi lugar el de su estado tenía.

»Éste, pues, vino a mi pueblo a ver unas fiestas. Estando en la plaza en una rueda o corro de hidalgos y caballeros, donde yo también hacía número, volviéndose a mí, con ademán arrogante y risueño, me dijo: "Bravo estáis, señor Antonio: mucho le ha aprovechado la plática de Flandes y de Italia, porque en verdad que está bizarro. Y sepa el buen Antonio que yo le quiero mucho". Yo le respondí: "Porque yo soy aquel Antonio, beso a vuesa señoría las manos mil veces por la merced que me hace. En fin, vuesa señoría hace como quien es en honrar a sus compatriotas y servidores; pero, con todo eso, quiero que vuesa señoría entienda que las galas yo me las llevé de mi tierra a Flandes, y con la buena crianza nací del vientre de mi madre. Ansí que, por esto, ni merezco ser alabado ni vituperado; y, con todo, bueno o malo que yo sea, soy muy servidor de vuesa señoría, a quien suplico me honre, como merecen mis buenos deseos". Un hidalgo que estaba a mi lado, grande amigo mío, me dijo, y no tan bajo que no lo pudo oír el caballero: "Mirad, amigo Antonio, cómo habláis, que al señor don Fulano no le llamamos acá señoría". A lo que respondió el caballero, antes que yo respondiese: "El buen Antonio habla bien, porque me trata al modo de Italia, donde en lugar de merced dicen señoría". "Bien sé -dije yo- los usos y las ceremonias de cualquiera buena crianza, y el llamar a vuesa señoría, señoría, no es al modo de Italia, sino porque entiendo que el que me ha de llamar vos ha de ser señoría, a modo de España; y yo, por ser hijo de mis obras y de padres hidalgos, merezco el merced de cualquier señoría, y quien otra cosa dijere (y esto echando mano a mi espada) está muy lejos de ser bien criado".

»Y, diciendo y haciendo, le di dos cuchilladas en la cabeza muy bien dadas, con que le turbé de manera que no supo lo que le había acontecido, ni hizo cosa en su desagravio que fuese de provecho, y yo sustenté la ofensa, estándome quedo con mi espada desnuda en la mano. Pero, pasándosele la turbación, puso mano a su espada, y con gentil brío procuró vengar su injuria. Mas yo no le dejé poner en efeto su honrada determinación, ni a él la sangre que le corría de la cabeza, de una de las dos heridas. Alborotáronse los circunstantes, pusieron mano contra mí, retiréme a casa de mis padres, contéles el caso, y, advertidos del peligro en que estaba, me proveyeron de dineros y de un buen caballo, aconsejándome a que me pusiese en cobro, porque me había granjeado muchos, fuertes y poderosos enemigos. Hícelo ansí, y en dos días pisé la raya de Aragón, donde respiré algún tanto de mi no vista priesa. En resolución, con poco menos diligencia me puse en Alemania, donde volví a servir al Emperador. Allí me avisaron que mi enemigo me buscaba, con otros muchos, para matarme del modo que pudiese. Temí este peligro, como era razón que lo temiese; volvíme a España, porque no hay mejor asilo que el que promete la casa del mismo enemigo; vi a mis padres de noche, tornáronme a proveer de dineros y joyas, con que vine a Lisboa, y me embarqué en una nave que estaba con las velas en alto para partirse en Inglaterra, en la cual iban algunos caballeros ingleses, que habían venido, llevados de su curiosidad, a ver a España; y, habiéndola visto toda, o por lo menos las mejores ciudades della, se volvían a su patria.

»Sucedió, pues, que yo me revolví sobre una cosa de poca importancia con un marinero inglés, a quien fue forzoso darle un bofetón; llamó este golpe la cólera de los demás marineros y de toda la chusma de la nave, que comenzaron a tirarme todos los instrumentos arrojadizos que les vinieron a las manos. Retiréme al castillo de popa, y tomé por defensa a uno de los caballeros ingleses, poniéndome a sus espaldas, cuya defensa me valió de modo que no perdí luego la vida. Los demás caballeros sosegaron la turba, pero fue con condición que me arrojasen a la mar, o que me diesen el esquife o barquilla de la nave, en que me volviese a España, o adonde el cielo me llevase.

»Hízose así: diéronme la barca proveída con dos barriles de agua, uno de manteca y alguna cantidad de bizcocho. Agradecí a mis valedores la merced que me hacían, entré en la barca con solos dos remos, alargóse la nave, vino la noche oscura, halléme solo en la mitad de la inmensidad de aquellas aguas, sin tomar otro camino que aquel que le concedía el no contrastar contra las olas ni contra el viento. Alcé los ojos al cielo, encomendéme a Dios con la mayor devoción que pude, miré al norte, por donde distinguí el camino que hacía, pero no supe el paraje en que estaba. Seis días y seis noches anduve desta manera, confiando más en la benignidad de los cielos que en la fuerza de mis brazos, los cuales, ya cansados y sin vigor alguna del continuo trabajo, abandonaron los remos, que quité de los escálamos y los puse dentro la barca, para servirme dellos cuando el mar lo consintiese o las fuerzas me ayudasen.

»Deste no apacible sueño me despertó con sobresalto una furiosa ola del mar, que, pasando por cima de la barca, la llenó de agua. Reconocí el peligro; volví, como mejor pude, el mar al mar; torné a valerme de los remos, que ninguna cosa me aprovecharon. Vi que el mar se ensoberbecía, azotado y herido de un viento ábrego, que en aquellas partes parece que más que en otros mares muestra su poderío. Vi que era simpleza oponer mi débil barca a su furia, y, con mis flacas y desmayadas fuerzas, a su rigor. Y así, torné a recoger los remos, y a dejar correr la barca por donde las olas y el viento quisiesen llevarla. Reiteré plegarias, añadí promesas, aumenté las aguas del mar con las que derramaba de mis ojos, no de temor de la muerte, que tan cercana se me mostraba, sino por el de la pena que mis malas obras merecían. Finalmente, no sé a cabo de cuántos días y noches que anduve vagamundo por el mar, siempre más inquieto y alterado, me vine a hallar junto a una isla despoblada de gente humana, aunque llena de lobos, que por ella a manadas discurrían. Lleguéme al abrigo de una peña, que en la ribera estaba, sin osar saltar en tierra por temor de los animales que había visto. Comí del bizcocho ya remojado, que la necesidad y la hambre no reparan en nada. Llegó la noche, menos oscura que había sido la pasada; pareció que el mar se sosegaba, y prometía más quietud el venidero día; miré al cielo, vi las estrellas con aspecto de prometer bonanza en las aguas y sosiego en el aire.

»Estando en esto, me pareció, por entre la dudosa luz de la noche, que la peña que me servía de puerto se coronaba de los mismos lobos que en la marina había visto, y que uno dellos -como es la verdad-me dijo en voz clara y distinta, y en mi propia lengua: "Español, hazte a lo largo, y busca en otra parte tu ventura, si no quieres en ésta morir hecho pedazos por nuestras uñas y dientes; y no preguntes quién es el que esto te dice, sino da gracias al cielo de que has hallado piedad entre las mismas fieras".

»Si quedé espantado o no, a vuestra consideración lo dejo; pero no fue bastante la turbación mía para dejar de poner en obra el consejo que se me había dado. Apreté los escalamos, até los remos, esforcé los brazos y salí al mar descubierto. Mas, como suele acontecer que las desdichas y aflicciones turban la memoria de quien las padece, no os podré decir cuántos fueron los días que anduve por aquellos mares, tragando, no una, sino mil muertes a cada paso, hasta que, arrebatada mi barca en los brazos de una terrible borrasca, me hallé en esta isla, donde di al través con ella, en la misma parte y lugar adonde está la boca de la cueva por donde aquí entrastes. Llegó la barca a dar casi en seco por la cueva adentro, pero volvíala a sacar la resaca; viendo yo lo cual, me arrojé della, y, clavando las uñas en la arena, no di lugar a que la resaca al mar me volviese. Y, aunque con la barca me llevaba el mar la vida, pues me quitaba la esperanza de cobrarla, holgué de mudar género de muerte, y quedarme en tierra: que, como se dilate la vida, no se desmaya la esperanza.»

A este punto llegaba el bárbaro español, que este título le daba sus traje, cuando en la estancia más adentro, donde habían dejado a Cloelia, se oyeron tiernos gemidos y sollozos. Acudieron al instante con luces Auristela, Periandro y todos los demás a ver qué sería, y hallaron que Cloelia, arrimadas las espaldas a la peña, sentada en las pieles, tenía los ojos clavados en el cielo, y casi quebrados.

Llegóse a ella Auristela, y, a voces compasivas y dolorosas, le dijo:

-¿Qué es esto, ama mía? ¿Cómo; y es posible que me queréis dejar en esta soledad y a tiempo que más he menester valirme de vuestros consejos?

Volvió en sí algún tanto Cloelia, y, tomando la mano de Auristela, le dijo:

-Ves ahí, hija de mi alma, lo que tengo tuyo. Yo quisiera que mi vida durara hasta que la tuya se viera en el sosiego que merece; pero si no lo permite el cielo, mi voluntad se ajusta con la suya, y de la mejor que es en mi mano le ofrezco mi vida. Lo que te ruego es, señora mía, que, cuando la buena suerte quisiere -que sí querrá-que te veas en tu estado, y mis padres aún fueren vivos, o alguno de mis parientes, les digas cómo yo muero cristiana en la fe de Jesucristo, y en la que tiene, que es la misma, la santa Iglesia católica romana. Y no te digo más, porque no puedo.

Esto dicho, y muchas veces pronunciando el nombre de Jesús, cerró los ojos en tenebrosa noche, a cuyo espectáculo también cerró los suyos Auristela, con un profundo desmayo. Hiciéronse fuentes los de Periandro y ríos los de todos los circunstantes. Acudió Periandro a socorrer a Auristela, la cual, vuelta en sí, acrecentó las lágrimas y comenzó sospiros nuevos, y dijo razones que movieran a lástima a las piedras. Ordenóse que otro día la sepultasen, y, quedando en guarda del cuerpo muerto la doncella bárbara y su hermano, los demás se fueron a reposar lo poco que de la noche les faltaba.

Capítulo sexto

Donde el bárbaro español prosigue su historia

TARDÓ aquel día en mostrarse al mundo, al parecer, más de lo acostumbrado, a causa que el humo y pavesas del incendio de la isla, que aún duraba, impedía que los rayos del sol por aquella parte no pasasen a la tierra.

Mandó el bárbaro español a su hijo que saliese de aquel sitio, como otras veces solía, y se informase de lo que en la isla pasaba.

Con alborotado sueño pasaron los demás aquella noche, porque el dolor y sentimiento de la muerte de su ama Cloelia no consintió que Auristela dormiese, y el no dormir de Auristela tuvo en continua vigilia a Periandro, el cual con Auristela salió al raso de aquel sitio, y vio que era hecho y fabricado de la naturaleza como si la industria y el arte le hubieran compuesto. Era redondo, cercado de altísimas y peladas peñas, y, a su parecer, tanteó que bojaba poco más de una legua, todo lleno de árboles silvestres, que ofrecían frutos, si bien ásperos, comestibles a lo menos. Estaba crecida la yerba, porque las muchas aguas que de las peñas salían las tenían en perpetua verdura; todo lo cual le admiraba y suspendía.

Y llegó en esto el bárbaro español, y dijo:

-Venid, señores, y daremos sepultura a la difunta, y fin a mi comenzada historia.

Hiciéronlo así, y enterraron a Cloelia en lo hueco de una peña, cubriéndola con tierra y con otras peñas menores. Auristela le rogó que le pusiese una cruz encima, para señal de que aquel cuerpo había sido cristiano. El español respondió que él traería una gran cruz que en su estancia tenía, y la pondría encima de aquella sepultura. Diéronle todos el último vale; renovó el llanto Auristela, cuyas lágrimas sacaron al momento las de los ojos de Periandro.

En tanto, pues, que el mozo bárbaro volvía, se volvieron todos a encerrar en el cóncavo de la peña donde habían dormido, por defenderse del frío que con rigor amenazaba. Y, habiéndose sentado en las blandas pieles, pidió el bárbaro silencio, y prosiguió su cuento en esta forma:

-«Cuando me dejó la barca en que venía en la arena, y la mar tornó a cobrarla -ya dije que con ella se me fue la esperanza de la libertad, pues aun ahora no la tengo de cobrarla-, entré aquí dentro, vi este sitio y parecióme que la naturaleza le había hecho y formado para ser teatro donde se representase la tragedia de mis desgracias. Admiróme el no ver gente alguna, sino algunas cabras monteses y animales pequeños de diversos géneros. Rodeé todo el sitio, hallé esta cueva cavada en estas peñas, y señaléla para mi morada. Finalmente, habiéndolo rodeado todo, volví a la entrada, que aquí me había conducido, por ver si oía voz humana o descubría quién me dijese en qué parte estaba; y la buena suerte y los piadosos cielos, que aún del todo no me tenían olvidado, me depararon una muchacha bárbara de hasta edad de quince años, que por entre las peñas, riscos y escollos de la marina, pintadas conchas y apetitoso marisco andaba buscando.

»Pasmóse viéndome, pegáronsele los pies en la arena, soltó las cogidas conchuelas, y derramósele el marisco; y, cogiéndola entre mis brazos sin decirle palabra, ni ella a mí tampoco, me entré por la cueva adelante y la truje a este mismo lugar donde agora estamos. Púsela en el suelo, beséle las manos, halaguéle el rostro con las mías, y hice todas las señas y demostraciones que pude para mostrarme blando y amoroso con ella. Ella, pasado aquel primer espanto, con atentísimos ojos me estuvo mirando, y con las manos me tocaba todo el cuerpo, y de cuando en cuando, ya perdido el miedo, se reía y me abrazaba; y, sacando del seno una manera de pan hecho a su modo, que no era de trigo, me lo puso en la boca, y en su lengua me habló, y, a lo que después acá he sabido, en lo que decía me rogaba que comiese. Yo lo hice así porque lo había bien menester. Ella me asió por la mano, y me llevó a aquel arroyo que allí está, donde ansimismo, por señas, me rogó que bebiese. Yo no me hartaba de mirarla, pareciéndome antes ángel del cielo que bárbara de la tierra. Volví a la entrada de la cueva, y allí, con señas y con palabras, que ella no entendía, le supliqué, como si ella las entendiera, que volviese a verme. Con esto la abracé de nuevo, y ella, simple y piadosa, me besó en la frente, y me hizo claras y ciertas señas de que volvería a verme. Hecho esto, torné a pisar este sitio, y a requerir y probar la fruta de que algunos árboles estaban cargados, y hallé nueces y avellanas y algunas peras silvestres. Di gracias a Dios del hallazgo, y alenté las desmayadas esperanzas de mi remedio. Pasé aquella noche en este mismo lugar, esperé el día, y en él esperé también la vuelta de mi bárbara hermosa, de quien comencé a temer y a recelar que me había de descubrir y entregarme a los bárbaros, de quien imaginé estar llena esta isla; pero sacóme deste temor el verla volver algo entrado el día, bella como el sol, mansa como una cordera, no acompañada de bárbaros que me prendiesen, sino cargada de bastimentos que me sustentasen.»

Aquí llegaba de su historia el español gallardo, cuando llegó el que había ido a saber lo que en la isla pasaba, el cual dijo que casi toda estaba abrasada, y todos o los más de los bárbaros muertos, unos a hierro y otros a fuego, y que si algunos había vivos, eran los que en algunas balsas de maderos se habían entrado al mar por huir en el agua el fuego de la tierra; que bien podían salir de allí, y pasear la isla por la parte que el fuego les diese licencia, y que cada uno pensase qué remedio se tomaría para escapar de aquella tierra maldita; que por allí cerca había otras islas de gente menos bárbara habitadas; que quizá, mudando de lugar, mudarían de ventura.

-Sosiégate, hijo, un poco, que estoy dando cuenta a estos señores de mis sucesos, y no me falta mucho, aunque mis desgracias son infinitas.

-No te canses, señor mío -dijo la bárbara grande-, en referirlos tan por estenso, que podrá ser que te canses, o que canses. Déjame a mí que cuente lo que queda, a lo menos hasta este punto en que estamos.

-Soy contento -respondió el español-, porque me le dará muy grande el ver cómo las relatas.

-«Es, pues, el caso -replicó la bárbara-que mis muchas entradas y salidas en este lugar le dieron bastante para que de mí y de mi esposo naciesen esta muchacha y este niño. Llamo esposo a este señor, porque, antes que me conociese del todo, me dio palabra de serlo, al modo que él dice que se usa entre verdaderos cristianos. Hame enseñado su lengua, y yo a él la mía, y en ella ansimismo me enseñó la ley católica cristiana. Diome agua de bautismo en aquel arroyo, aunque no con las ceremonias que él me ha dicho que en su tierra se acostumbran. Declaróme su fe como él la sabe, la cual yo asenté en mi alma y en mi corazón, donde le he dado el crédito que he podido darle. Creo en la Santísima Trinidad, Dios Padre, Dios Hijo y Dios Espíritu Santo, tres personas distintas, y que todas tres son un solo Dios verdadero, y que, aunque es Dios el Padre, y Dios el Hijo, y Dios el Espíritu Santo, no son tres dioses distintos y apartados, sino un solo Dios verdadero. Finalmente, creo todo lo que tiene y cree la santa Iglesia católica romana, regida por el Espíritu Santo y gobernada por el Sumo Pontífice, vicario y visorrey de Dios en la tierra, sucesor legítimo de San Pedro, su primer pastor después de Jesucristo, primero y universal pastor de su esposa la Iglesia. Díjome grandezas de la siempre Virgen María, reina de los cielos y señora de los ángeles y nuestra, tesoro del Padre, relicario del Hijo y amor del Espíritu Santo, amparo y refugio de los pecadores. Con éstas me ha enseñado otras cosas, que no las digo por parecerme que las dichas bastan para que entendáis que soy católica cristiana. Yo, simple y compasiva, le entregué un alma rústica, y él (merced a los cielos) me la ha vuelta discreta y cristiana. Entreguéle mi cuerpo, no pensando que en ello ofendía a nadie, y deste entrego resultó haberle dado dos hijos, como los que aquí veis, que acrecientan el número de los que alaban al Dios verdadero. En veces le truje alguna cantidad de oro, de lo que abunda esta isla, y algunas perlas que yo tengo guardadas, esperando el día, que ha de ser tan dichoso, que nos saque desta prisión y nos lleve adonde con libertad y certeza, y sin escrúpulo, seamos unos de los del rebaño de Cristo, en quien adoro en aquella cruz que allí veis.» Esto que he dicho me pareció a mí era lo que le faltaba por decir a mi señor Antonio -que así se llamaba el español bárbaro. El cual dijo:

-Dices verdad, Ricla mía -que éste era el propio nombre de la bárbara.

Con cuya variable historia admiraron a los presentes, y despertaron mil alabanzas que les dieron, y mil buenas esperanzas que les anunciaron, especialmente Auristela, que quedó aficionadísima a las dos bárbaras, madre y hija.

El mozo bárbaro, que también, como su padre, se llamaba Antonio, dijo a esta sazón no ser bien estarse allí ociosos, sin dar traza y orden cómo salir de aquel encerramiento, porque si el fuego de la isla, que a más andar ardía, sobrepujase las altas sierras, o traídas del viento cayesen en aquel sitio, todos se abrasarían.

-Dices verdad, hijo -respondió el padre.

-Soy de parecer -dijo Ricla-que aguardemos dos días, porque de una isla que está tan cerca desta que algunas veces, estando el sol claro y el mar tranquilo, alcanzó la vista a verla, della vienen a ésta sus moradores a vender y a trocar lo que tienen con lo que tenemos, y a trueco por trueco. Yo saldré de aquí, y, pues ya no hay nadie que me escuche o que me impida, pues ni oyen ni impiden los muertos, concertaré que me vendan una barca, por el precio que quisieren, que la he menester para escaparme con mis hijos y mi marido, que encerrados en una cueva tengo de la riguridad del fuego. Pero quiero que sepáis que estas barcas son fabricadas de madera, y cubiertas de cueros fuertes de animales, bastantes a defender que no entre agua por los costados; pero, a lo que he visto y notado, nunca ellos navegan sino con mar sosegado, y no traen aquellos lienzos que he visto que traen otras barcas que suelen llegar a nuestras riberas a vender doncellas o varones para la vana superstición que habréis oído decir que en esta isla ha muchos tiempos que se acostumbra, por donde vengo a entender que estas tales barcas no son buenas para fiarlas del mar grande, y de las borrascas y tormentas que dicen que suceden a cada paso.

A lo que añadió Periandro:

-¿No ha usado el señor Antonio deste remedio en tantos años como ha que está aquí encerrado?

-No -respondió Ricla-, porque no me han dado lugar los muchos ojos que miran, para poder concertarme con los dueños de las barcas, y por no poder hallar excusa que dar para la compra.

-Así es -dijo Antonio-, y no por no fiarme de la debilidad de los bajeles; pero, agora que me ha dado el cielo este consejo, pienso tomarle, y mi hermosa Ricla estará atenta a ver cuando vengan los mercaderes de la otra isla; y, sin reparar en precio, comprará una barca con todo el necesario matalotaje, diciendo que la quiere para lo que tiene dicho.

En resolución, todos vinieron en este parecer, y, saliendo de aquel lugar, quedaron admirados de ver el estrago que el fuego había hecho y las armas. Vieron mil diferentes géneros de muertes, de quien la cólera, sinrazón y enojo suelen ser inventores. Vieron, asimismo, que los bárbaros que habían quedado vivos, reuniéndose a sus balsas, desde lejos estaban mirando el riguroso incendio de su patria, y algunos se habían pasado a la isla que servía de prisión a los cautivos. Quisiera Auristela que pasaran a la isla, a ver si en la oscura mazmorra quedaban algunos; pero no fue menester, porque vieron venir una balsa, y en ella hasta veinte personas, cuyo traje dio a entender ser los miserables que en la mazmorra estaban. Llegaron a la marina, besaron la tierra y casi dieron muestras de adorar el fuego, por haberles dicho el bárbaro que los sacó del calabozo oscuro, que la isla se abrasaba, y que ya no tenían que temer a los bárbaros.

Fueron recibidos de los libres amigablemente, y consolados en la mejor manera que les fue posible. Algunos contaron sus miserias, y otros las dejaron en silencio, por no hallar palabras para decirlas. Ricla se admiró de que hubiese habido bárbaro tan piadoso que los sacase, y de que no hubiesen pasado a la isla de la prisión parte de aquellos que a las balsas se habían recogido.

Uno de los prisioneros dijo que el bárbaro que los había libertado, en lengua italiana les había dicho todo el suceso miserable de la abrasada isla, aconsejándoles que pasaran a ella a satisfacerse de sus trabajos con el oro y perlas que en ella hallarían, y que él vendría en otra balsa, que allá quedaba, a tenerles compañía, y a dar traza en su libertad. Los sucesos que contaron fueron tan diferentes, tan extraños y tan desdichados, que unos les sacaban las lágrimas a los ojos y otros la risa del pecho.

En esto, vieron venir hacia la isla hasta seis barcas de aquellas de quien Ricla había dado noticia; hicieron escala, pero no sacaron mercadería alguna, por no parecer bárbaro que la comprase. Concertó Ricla todas las barcas con las mercancías, sin tener intención de llevarlas. No quisieron venderle sino las cuatro, porque les quedasen dos para volverse. Hízose el precio con liberalidad notable, sin que en él hubiese tanto más cuanto. Fue Ricla a su cueva, y, en pedazos de oro no acuñado, como se ha dicho, pagó todo lo que quisieron. Dieron dos barcas a los que habían salido de la mazmorra, y en otras dos se embarcaron, en la una todos los bastimentos que pudieron recoger, con cuatro personas de las recién libres, y en la otra se entraron Auristela, Periandro, Antonio el padre y Antonio el hijo, con la hermosa Ricla y la discreta Transila, y la gallarda Constanza, hija de Ricla y de Antonio. Quiso Auristela ir a despedirse de los huesos de su querida Cloelia; acompañáronla todos; lloró sobre la sepultura, y, entre lágrimas de tristeza y entre muestras de alegría, volvieron a embarcarse, habiendo primero en la marina hincándose de rodillas y suplicado al cielo, con tierna y devota oración, les diese felice viaje y los enseñase el camino que tomarían.

Sirvió la barca de Periandro de capitana, a quien siguieron los demás, y, al tiempo que querían dar los remos al agua, porque velas no las tenían, llegó a la orilla del mar un bárbaro gallardo, que a grandes voces, en lengua toscana, dijo:

-Si por ventura sois cristianos los que vais en esas barcas, recoged a este que lo es y por el verdadero Dios os lo suplica.

Uno de las otras barcas dijo:

-Este bárbaro, señores, es el que nos sacó de la mazmorra. Si queréis corresponder a la bondad que parece que tenéis -y esto encaminando su plática a los de la barca primera-, bien será que le paguéis el bien que nos hizo con el que le hacéis recogién-dole en nuestra compañía.

Oyendo lo cual Periandro, le mandó llegase su barca a tierra y le recogiese en la que llevaba los bastimentos. Hecho esto, alzaron las voces con alegres acentos, y, tomando los remos en las manos, dieron alegre principio a su viaje.

Capítulo séptimo del primer libro

CUATRO millas, poco más o menos, habrían navegado las cuatro barcas, cuando descubrieron una poderosa nave, que, con todas las velas tendidas y viento en popa, parecía que venía a embestirles. Periandro dijo, habiéndola visto:

-Sin duda, este navío debe de ser el de Arnaldo, que vuelve a saber de mi suceso, y tuviéralo yo por muy bueno agora no verle.

Había ya contado Periandro a Auristela todo lo que con Arnaldo le había pasado, y lo que entre los dos dejaron concertado. Turbóse Auristela, que no quisiera volver al poder de Arnaldo, de quien había dicho, aunque breve y sucintamente, lo que en un año que estuvo en su poder le había acontecido. No quisiera ver juntos a los dos amantes, que, puesto que Arnaldo estaría seguro con el fingido hermanazgo suyo y de Periandro, todavía el temor de que podía ser descubierto el parentesco la fatigaba, y más que ¿quién le quitaría a Periandro no estar celoso, viendo a los ojos tan poderoso contrario?; que no hay discreción que valga, ni amorosa fee que asegure al enamorado pecho, cuando por su desventura entran en él celosas sospechas. Pero de todas éstas le aseguró el viento, que volvió en un instante el soplo, que daba de lleno y en popa a las velas en contrario, de modo que a vista suya y en un momento breve dejó la nave derribar las velas de alto abajo, y en otro instante, casi invisible, las izaron y levantaron hasta las gavias, y la nave comenzó a correr en popa por el contrario rumbo que venía, alongándose de las barcas con toda priesa. Respiró Auristela, cobró nuevo aliento Periandro; pero los demás que en las barcas iban quisieran mudarlas, entrándose en la nave, que por su grandeza, más seguridad de las vidas y más felice viaje pudiera prometerles.

En menos de dos horas se les encubrió la nave, a quien quisieran seguir si pudieran; mas no les fue posible, ni pudieron hacer otra cosa que encaminarse a una isla, cuyas altas montañas, cubiertas de nieve, hacían parecer que estaban cerca, distando de allí más de seis leguas. Cerraba la noche algo oscura, picaba el viento largo y en popa, que fue alivio a los brazos, que, volviendo a tomar los remos, se dieron priesa a tomar la isla.

La media noche sería, según el tanteo que el bárbaro Antonio hizo del norte y de las guardas, cuando llegaron a ella, y por herir blandamente las aguas en la orilla, y ser la resaca de poca consideración, dieron con las barcas en tierra, y a fuerza de brazos las vararon.

Era la noche fría de tal modo, que les obligó a buscar reparos para el yelo, pero no hallaron ninguno. Ordenó Periandro que todas las mujeres se entrasen en la barca capitana, y, apiñándose en ella, con la compañía y estrechez, templasen el frío. Hízose así; y los hombres hicieron cuerpo de guarda a la barca, paseándose como centinelas de una parte a otra, esperando el día para descubrir en qué parte estaban, porque no pudieron saber por entonces si era o no despoblada la isla; y, como es cosa natural que los cuidados destierran el sueño, ninguno de aquella cuidadosa compañía pudo cerrar los ojos, lo cual visto por el bárbaro Antonio, dijo al bárbaro italiano que, para entretener el tiempo y no sentir tanto la pesadumbre de la mala noche, fuese servido de entretenerles, contándoles los sucesos de su vida, porque no podían dejar de ser peregrinos y raros, pues en tal traje y en tal lugar le habían puesto.

-Haré yo eso de muy buena gana -respondió el bárbaro italiano-, aunque temo que por ser mis desgracias tantas, tan nuevas y tan extraordinarias, no me habéis de dar crédito alguno.

A lo que dijo Periandro:

-En las que a nosotros nos han sucedido, nos hemos ensayado y dispuesto a creer cuantas nos contaren, puesto que tengan más de lo imposible que de lo verdadero.

-Lleguémonos aquí -respondió el bárbaro-, al borde desta barca donde están estas señoras; quizá alguna, al son de la voz de mi cuento, se quedará dormida, y quizá alguna, desterrando el sueño, se mostrará compasiva: que es alivio al que cuenta sus desventuras ver o oír que hay quien se duela dellas.

-A lo menos por mí -respondió Ricla de dentro de la barca-, y a pesar del sueño, tengo lágrimas que ofrecer a la compasión de vuestra corta suerte, del largo tiempo de vuestras fatigas.

Casi lo mismo dijo Auristela; y así, todos rodearon la barca, y con atento oído estuvieron escuchando lo que el que parecía bárbaro decía, el cual comenzó su historia desta manera:

Capítulo octavo

Donde Rutilio da cuenta de su vida

-«MI NOMBRE es Rutilio; mi patria, Sena, una de las más famosas ciudades de Italia; mi oficio, maestro de danzar, único en él, y venturoso si yo quisiera. Había en Sena un caballero rico, a quien el cielo dio una hija más hermosa que discreta, a la cual trató de casar su padre con un caballero florentín; y, por entregársela adornada de gracias adquiridas, ya que las del entendimiento le faltaban, quiso que yo la enseñase a danzar; que la gentileza, gallardía y disposición del cuerpo en los bailes honestos más que en otros pasos se señalan, y a las damas principales les está muy bien saberlos, para las ocasiones forzosas que les pueden suceder. Entré a enseñarla los movimientos del cuerpo, pero movíla los del alma, pues, como no discreta, como he dicho, rindió la suya a la mía, y la suerte, que de corriente larga traía encaminadas mis desgracias, hizo que, para que los dos nos gozásemos, yo la sacase de en casa de su padre y la llevase a Roma. Pero, como el amor no da baratos sus gustos, y los delitos llevan a las espaldas el castigo (pues siempre se teme), en el camino nos prendieron a los dos, por la diligencia que su padre puso en buscarnos. Su confesión y la mía, que fue decir que yo llevaba a mi esposa y ella se iba con su marido, no fue bastante para no agravar mi culpa: tanto, que obligó al juez, movió y convenció a sentenciarme a muerte. Apartáronme en la prisión con los ya condenados a ella por otros delitos no tan honrados como el mío. Visitóme en el calabozo una mujer, que decían estaba presa por fatucherie, que en castellano se llaman hechiceras, que la alcaidesa de la cárcel había hecho soltar de las prisiones y llevádola a su aposento, a título de que con yerbas y palabras había de curar a una hija suya de una enfermedad que los médicos no acertaban a curarla.

mitad de su silencio llegó a mí, y me dijo que asiese de la punta de una caña que me puso en la mano, diciéndome la siguiese. Turbéme algún tanto; pero como el interés era tan grande, moví los pies para seguirla, y hallélos sin grillos y sin cadenas, y las puertas de toda la prisión de par en par abiertas, y los prisioneros y guardas en profundísimo sueño sepultados.

»En saliendo a la calle, tendió en el suelo mi guiadora un manto, y, mandándome que pusiese los pies en él, me dijo que tuviese buen ánimo, que por entonces dejase mis devociones. Luego vi mala señal, luego conocí que quería llevarme por los aires, y aunque, como cristiano bien enseñado, tenía por burla todas estas hechicerías -como es razón que se tengan-, todavía el peligro de la muerte, como ya he dicho, me dejó atropellar por todo; y, en fin, puse los pies en la mitad del manto, y ella ni más ni menos, murmurando unas razones que yo no pude entender, y el manto comenzó a levantarse en el aire, y yo comencé a temer poderosamente, y en mi corazón no tuvo santo la letanía a quien no llamase en mi ayuda. Ella debió de conocer mi miedo, y presentir mis rogativas, y volvíome a mandar que las dejase. "¡Desdichado de mí! -dije-; ¿qué bien puedo esperar, si se me niega el pedirle a Dios, de quien todos los bienes vienen?"

»En resolución, cerré los ojos y dejéme llevar de los diablos, que no son otras las postas de las hechiceras, y, al parecer, cuatro horas o poco más había volado, cuando me hallé al crepúsculo del día en una tierra no conocida. Tocó el manto el suelo, y mi guiadora me dijo: "En parte estás, amigo Rutilio, que todo el género humano no podrá ofenderte". Y, diciendo esto, comenzó a abrazarme no muy honestamente. Apartéla de mí con los brazos, y, como mejor pude, divisé que la que me abrazaba era una figura de lobo, cuya visión me heló el alma, me turbó los sentidos y dio con mi mucho ánimo al través. Pero, como suele acontecer que en los grandes peligros la poca esperanza de vencerlos saca del ánimo desesperadas fuerzas, las pocas mías me pusieron en la mano un cuchillo, que acaso en el seno traía, y con furia y rabia se le hiqué por el pecho a la que pensé ser loba, la cual, cayendo en el suelo, perdió aquella fea figura, y hallé muerta y corriendo sangre a la desventurada encantadora.

»Estando en esta confusión, oí que venía hablando, por junto de donde estaba, alguna gente, y así fue verdad. Y, saliéndoles al encuentro, les pregunté en mi lengua toscana que me dijese qué tierra era aquella; y uno de ellos, asimismo en italiano, me respondió: "Esta tierra es Noruega; pero, ¿quién eres tú, que lo preguntas, y en lengua que en estas partes hay muy pocos que la entiendan?" "Yo soy -respondí-un miserable, que por huir de la muerte he venido a caer en sus manos". Y en breves razones le di cuenta de mi viaje, y aun de la muerte de la hechicera. Mostró condolerse el que me hablaba, y díjome: "Puedes, buen hombre, dar infinitas gracias al cielo por haberte librado del poder destas maléficas hechiceras, de las cuales hay mucha abundancia en estas setentrionales partes. Cuéntase dellas que se convierten en lobos, así machos como hembras, porque de entrambos géneros hay maléficos y encantadores. Cómo esto pueda ser yo lo ignoro, y como cristiano que soy católico no lo creo, pero la experiencia me muestra lo contrario. Lo que puedo alcanzar es que todas estas transformaciones son ilusiones del demonio, y permisión de Dios y castigo de los abominables pecados deste maldito género de gente".

»Preguntéle qué hora podría ser, porque me parecía que la noche se alargaba, y el día nunca venía. Respondióme que en aquellas partes remotas se repartía el año en cuatro tiempos: tres meses había de noche oscura, sin que el sol pareciese en la tierra en manera alguna; y tres meses había de crepúsculo del día, sin que bien fuese noche ni bien fuese día; otros tres meses había de día claro continuado, sin que el sol se escondiese, y otros tres de crepúsculo de la noche; y que la sazón en que estaban era la del crepúsculo del día: así que, esperar la claridad del sol por entonces era esperanza vana, y que también lo sería esperar yo volver a mi tierra tan presto, si no fuese cuando llegase la sazón del día grande, en la cual parten navíos de estas partes a Inglaterra, Francia y España con algunas mercancías. Preguntóme si tenía algún oficio en que ganar de comer, mientras llegaba tiempo de volverme a mi tierra. Díjele que era bailarín y grande hombre de hacer cabriolas, y que sabía jugar de manos sutilísimamente. Rióse de gana el hombre, y me dijo que aquellos ejercicios o oficios (o como llamarlos quisiese) no corrían en Noruega ni en todas aquellas partes. Preguntóme si sabría oficio de orífice. Díjele que tenía habilidad para aprender lo que me enseñase. "Pues veníos, hermano, conmigo, aunque primero será bien que demos sepultura a esta miserable".

»Hicímoslo así, y llevóme a una ciudad, donde toda la gente andaba por las calles con palos de tea encendidos en las manos, negociando lo que les importaba. Preguntéle en el camino que cómo o cuándo había venido a aquella tierra, y que si era verdaderamente italiano. Respondió que uno de sus pasados abuelos se había casado en ella, viniendo de Italia a negocios que le importaban, y a los hijos que tuvo les enseñó su lengua, y de uno en otro se extendió por todo su linaje, hasta llegar a él, que era uno de sus cuartos nietos. "Y así, como vecino y morador tan antiguo, llevado de la afición de mis hijos y mujer, me he quedado hecho carne y sangre entre esta gente, sin acordarme de Italia ni de los parientes que allá dijeron mis padres que tenían".

»Contar yo ahora la casa donde entré, la mujer e hijos que hallé, y criados (que tenía muchos), el gran caudal, el recibimiento y agasajo que me hicieron, sería proceder en infinito: basta decir, en suma, que yo aprendí su oficio, y en pocos meses ganaba de comer por mi trabajo. En este tiempo se llegó el de llegar el día grande, y mi amo y maestro -que así le puedo llamar-ordenó de llevar gran cantidad de su mercancía a otras islas por allí cercanas y a otras bien apartadas. Fuime con él, así por curiosidad como por vender algo que ya tenía de caudal, en el cual viaje vi cosas dignas de admiración y espanto, y otras de risa y contento; noté costumbres, advertí en ceremonias no vistas y de ninguna otra gente usadas. En fin, a cabo de dos meses, corrimos una borrasca que nos duró cerca de cuarenta días, al cabo de los cuales dimos en esta isla, de donde hoy salimos, entre unas peñas, donde nuestro bajel se hizo pedazos, y ninguno de los que en él venían quedó vivo, sino yo.

Capítulo nono

»LO primero que se me ofreció a la vista, antes que viese otra cosa alguna, fue un bárbaro pendiente y ahorcado de un árbol, por donde conocí que estaba en tierra de bárbaros salvajes, y luego el miedo me puso delante mil géneros de muertes; y, no sabiendo qué hacerme, alguna o todas juntas las temía y las esperaba. En fin, como la necesidad, según se dice, es maestra de sutilizar el ingenio, di en un pensamiento harto extraordinario, y fue que descolgué al bárbaro del árbol, y, habiéndome desnudado de todos mis vestidos, que enterré en la arena, me vestí de los suyos, que me vinieron bien, pues no tenían otra hechura que ser de pieles de animales, no cosidos ni cortados a medida, sino ceñidos por el cuerpo, como lo habéis visto. Para disimular la lengua, y que por ella no fuese conocido por extranjero, me fingí mudo y sordo, y con esta industria me entré por la isla adentro, saltando y haciendo cabriolas en el aire.

»A poco trecho descubrí una gran cantidad de bárbaros, los cuales me rodearon, y en su lengua unos y otros, con gran priesa me preguntaron -a lo que después acá he entendido-quién era, cómo me llamaba, adónde venía y adónde iba. Respondíles con callar y hacer todas las señales de mudo más aparentes que pude, y luego reiteraba los saltos y menudeaba las cabriolas. Salíme de entre ellos, siguiéronme los muchachos, que no me dejaban adonde quiera que iba. Con esta industria pasé por bárbaro y por mudo, y los muchachos, por verme saltar y hacer gestos, me daban de comer de lo que tenían. Desta manera he pasado tres años entre ellos, y aun pasara todos los de mi vida, sin ser conocido. Con la atención y curiosidad noté su lengua, y aprendí mucha parte de ella, supe la profecía que de la duración de su reino tenía profetizada un antiguo y sabio bárbaro, a quien ellos daban gran crédito. He visto sacrificar algunos varones para hacer la experiencia de su cumplimiento, y he visto comprar algunas doncellas para el mismo efeto, hasta que sucedió el incendio de la isla, que vosotros, señores, habéis visto. Guardéme de las llamas; fui a dar aviso a los prisioneros de la mazmorra, donde vosotros sin duda habréis estado; vi estas barcas, acudí a la marina; hallaron en vuestros generosos pechos lugar mis ruegos; recogístesme en ellas, por lo que os doy infinitas gracias, y agora espero en la del cielo, que, pues nos sacó de tanta miseria a todos, nos ha de dar en este que pretendemos felicísimo viaje.»

Aquí dio fin Rutilio a su plática, con que dejó admirados y contentos a los oyentes.

Llegóse el día áspero, turbio y con señales de nieve muy ciertas. Dióle Auristela a Periandro lo que Cloelia le había dado la noche que murió, que fueron dos pelotas de cera, que la una, como se vio, cubría una cruz de diamantes, tan rica que no acertaron a estimarla, por no agraviar su valor; y la otra, dos perlas redondas, asimismo de inestimable precio. Por estas joyas vinieron en conocimiento de que Auristela y Periandro eran gente principal, puesto que mejor declaraba esta verdad su gentil disposición y agradable trato.

El bárbaro Antonio, viniendo el día, se entró un poco por la isla, pero no descubrió otra cosa que montañas y sierras de nieve; y, volviendo a las barcas, dijo que la isla era despoblada, y que convenía partirse de allí luego a buscar otra parte donde recogerse del frío que amenazaba y proveerse de los mantenimientos que presto le harían falta.

Echaron con presteza las barcas al agua, embarcáronse todos, y pusieron las proas en otra isla, que no lejos de allí se descubría. En esto, yendo navegando, con el espacio que podían prometer dos remos, que no llevaba más cada barca, oyeron que de la una de las otras dos salía una voz blanda, suave, de manera que les hizo estar atentos a escuchalla. Notaron, especialmente el bárbaro Antonio el padre, que notó que lo que se cantaba era en lengua portuguesa, que él sabía muy bien. Calló la voz, y de allí a poco volvió a cantar en castellano, y no a otro tono de instrumentos que al de remos que sesgamente por el tranquilo mar las barcas impelían; y notó que lo que cantaron fue esto:

Mar sesgo, viento largo, estrella clara, camino, aunque no usado, alegre y cierto, al hermoso, al seguro, al capaz puerto llevan la nave vuestra, única y rara.

En Scilas ni en Caribdis no repara, 5 ni en peligro que el mar tenga encubierto, siguiendo su derrota al descubierto, que limpia honestidad su curso para.

Con todo, si os faltare la esperanza del llegar a este puerto, no por eso 10 giréis las velas, que será simpleza.

Que es enemigo amor de la mudanza,

y nunca tuvo próspero suceso el que no se quilata en la firmeza.

La bárbara Ricla dijo, en callando la voz:

-Despacio debe de estar y ocioso el cantor que en semejante tiempo da su voz a los vientos.

Pero no lo juzgaron así Periandro y Auristela, porque le tuvieron por más enamorado que ocioso al que cantado había; que los enamorados fácilmente reconcilian los ánimos, y traban amistad con los que conocen que padecen su misma enfermedad. Y así, con licencia de los demás que en su barca venían, aunque no fuera menester pedirla, hizo que el cantor se pasase a su barca, así por gozar de cerca de su voz como saber de sus sucesos, porque persona que en tales tiempos cantaba, o sentía mucho o no tenía sentimiento alguno.

Juntáronse las barcas, pasó el músico a la de Periandro, y todos los della le hicieron agradable recogida. En entrando el músico, en medio portugués y en medio castellano, dijo:

-Al cielo y a vosotros, señores, y a mi voz agradezco esta mudanza y esta mejora de navío, aunque creo que con mucha brevedad le dejaré libre de la carga de mi cuerpo, porque las penas que siento en el alma me van dando señales de que tengo la vida en sus últimos términos.

-Mejor lo hará el cielo -respondió Periandro-, que, pues yo soy vivo, no habrá trabajos que puedan matar a alguno.

-No sería esperanza aquella -dijo a esta sazón Auristela-a que pudiesen contrastar y derribar infortunios, pues, así como la luz resplandece más en las tinieblas, así la esperanza ha de estar más firme en los trabajos; que el desesperarse en ellos es acción de pechos cobardes, y no hay mayor pusilanimidad ni bajeza que entregarse el trabajado -por más que lo sea-a la desesperación.

-El alma ha de estar -dijo Periandro-el un pie en los labios y el otro en los dientes, si es que hablo con propiedad, y no ha de dejar de esperar su remedio, porque sería agraviar a Dios, que no puede ser agraviado, poniendo tasa y coto a sus infinitas misericordias.

-Todo es así -respondió el músico-, y yo lo creo, a despecho y pesar de las experiencias que en el discurso de mi vida en mis muchos males tengo hechas.

No por estas pláticas dejaban de bogar, de modo que, antes de anochecer, con dos horas, llegaron a una isla también despoblada, aunque no de árboles, porque tenía muchos y llenos de fruto, que, aunque pasado de sazón y seco, se dejaba comer.

Saltaron todos en tierra, en la cual vararon las barcas, y con gran priesa se dieron a desgajar árboles y hacer una gran barraca para defenderse aquella noche del frío; hicieron asimismo fuego, ludiendo dos secos palos, el uno con el otro (artificio tan sabido como usado); y, como todos trabajaban, en un punto se vio levantada la pobre máquina, donde se recogieron todos, supliendo con mucho fuego la incomodidad del sitio, pareciéndoles aquella choza dilatado alcázar. Satisfacieron la hambre, y acomodáranse a dormir luego, si el deseo que Periandro tenía de saber el suceso del músico no lo estorbara, porque le rogó, si era posible, les hiciese sabidores de sus desgracias, pues no podían ser venturas las que en aquellas partes le habían traído.

Era cortés el cantor, y así, sin hacerse de rogar, dijo:

Capítulo diez

De lo que contó el enamorado portugués

-CON MÁS breves razones de las que sean posibles, daré fin a mi cuento, con darle al de mi vida, si es que tengo de dar crédito a cierto sueño que la pasada noche me turbó el alma.

«Yo, señores, soy portugués de nación, noble en sangre, rico en los bienes de fortuna y no pobre en los de naturaleza. Mi nombre es Manuel de Sosa Coitiño; mi patria, Lisboa, y mi ejercicio el de soldado. Junto a las casas de mis padres, casi pared en medio, estaba la de otro caballero del antiguo linaje de los Pereiras, el cual tenía sola una hija, única heredera de sus bienes, que eran muchos, báculo y esperanza de la prosperidad de sus padres; la cual, por el linaje, por la riqueza y por la hermosura, era deseada de todos los mejores del reino de Portugal. Y yo, que, como más vecino de su casa, tenía más comodidad de verla, la miré, la conocí y la adoré con una esperanza más dudosa que cierta, de que podría ser viniese a ser mi esposa; y, por ahorrar de tiempo, y por entender que con ella habían de valer poco requiebros, promesas ni dádivas, determiné de que un pariente mío se la pidiese a sus padres para esposa mía, pues ni en el linaje, ni en la hacienda, ni aun en la edad, diferenciábamos en nada.

»La respuesta que trujo fue que su hija Leonora aún no estaba en edad de casarse; que dejase pasar dos años, que le daba la palabra de no disponer de su hija en todo aquel tiempo sin hacerme sabidor dello. Llevé este primer golpe en los hombros de mi paciencia y en el escudo de la esperanza, pero no dejé por esto de servirla públicamente a sombra de mi honesta pretensión, que luego se supo por toda la ciudad; pero ella, retirada en la fortaleza de su prudencia y en los retretes de su recato, con honestidad y licencia de sus padres, admitía mis servicios, y daba a entender que, si no los agradecía con otros, por lo menos no los desestimaba.

»Sucedió que, en este tiempo, mi rey me envió por capitán general a una de las fuerzas que tiene en Berbería, oficio de calidad y de confianza. Llegóse el día de mi partida, y, pues en él no llegó el de mi muerte, no hay ausencia que mate ni dolor que consuma. Hablé a su padre, hícele que me volviese a dar la palabra de la espera de los dos años; túvome lástima, porque era discreto, y consintió que me despidiese de su mujer y de su hija Leonor, la cual, en compañía de su madre, salió a verme a una sala, y salieron con ella la honestidad, la gallardía y el silencio. Pasméme cuando vi tan cerca de mí tanta hermosura; quise hablar, y anudóseme la voz a la garganta y pegóseme al paladar la lengua, y ni supe ni pude hacer otra cosa que callar y dar con mi silencio indicio de mi turbación, la cual vista por el padre, que era tan cortés como discreto, se abrazó conmigo, y dijo: "Nunca, señor Manuel de Sosa, los días de partida dan licencia a la lengua que se desmande, y puede ser que este silencio hable en su favor de vuesa merced más que alguna otra retórica. Vuesa merced vaya a ejercer su cargo, y vuelva en buen punto, que yo no faltaré ninguno en lo que tocare a servirle. Leonora, mi hija, es obediente, y mi mujer desea darme gusto, y yo tengo el deseo que he dicho; que con estas tres cosas, me parece que puede esperar vuesa merced buen suceso en lo que desea". Estas palabras todas me quedaron en la memoria y en el alma impresas de tal manera que no se me han olvidado, ni se me olvidarán en tanto que la vida me durare. Ni la hermosa Leonora ni su madre me dijeron palabra, ni yo pude, como he dicho, decir alguna.

»Partíme a Berbería; ejercité mi cargo, con satisfacción de mi rey, dos años; volví a Lisboa, hallé que la fama y hermosura de Leonora había salido ya de los límites de la ciudad y del reino, y estendídose por Castilla y otras partes, de las cuales venían embajadas de príncipes y señores que la pretendían por esposa; pero, como ella tenía la voluntad tan sujeta a la de sus padres, no miraba si era o no solicitada. En fin, viendo yo pasado el término de los dos años, volví a suplicar a su padre me la diese por esposa.

»¡Ay de mí, que no es posible que me detenga en estas circunstancias, porque a las puertas de mi vida está llamando la muerte, y temo que no me ha de dar espacio para contar mis desventuras; que, si así fuese, no las tendría yo por tales!

Detúvose algún tanto el lastimado caballero, como para tomar aliento de proseguir su plática, y luego dijo:

-«Llegué al monasterio, que real y pomposamente estaba adornado. Salieron a recebirme casi toda la gente principal del reino, que allí aguardándome estaba, con infinitas señoras de la ciudad, de las más principales. Hundíase el templo de música, así de voces como de instrumentos, y en esto salió por la puerta del claustro la sin par Leonora, acompañada de la priora y de otras muchas monjas, vestida de raso blanco acuchillado con saya entera a lo castellano, tomadas las cuchilladas con ricas y gruesas perlas. Venía forrada la saya en tela de oro verde; traía los cabellos sueltos por las espaldas, tan rubios que deslumbraban los del sol, y tan luengos que casi besaban la tierra; la cintura, collar y anillos que traía, opiniones hubo que valían un reino. Torno a decir que salió tan bella, tan costosa, tan gallarda y tan ricamente compuesta y adornada, que causó invidia en las mujeres y admiración en los hombres. De mí sé decir que quedé tal con su vista, que me hallé indigno de merecerla, por parecerme que la agraviaba, aunque yo fuera el emperador del mundo.

»Estaba hecho un modo de teatro en mitad del cuerpo de la iglesia, donde desenfadadamente, y sin que nadie lo empachase, se había de celebrar nuestro desposorio. Subió en él primero la hermosa doncella, donde al descubierto mostró su gallardía y gentileza. Pareció a todos los ojos que la miraban lo que suele parecer la bella aurora al despuntar del día, o lo que dicen las antiguas fábulas que parecía la casta Diana en los bosques, y algunos creo que hubo tan discretos que no la acertaron a comparar sino a sí misma. Subí yo al teatro, pensando que subía a mi cielo, y, puesto de rodillas ante ella, casi di demostración de adorarla. Alzóse una voz en el templo, procedida de otras muchas, que decía: "Vivid felices y luengos años en el mundo, ¡oh dichosos y bellísimos amantes! Coronen presto hermosísimos hijos vuestra mesa, y a largo andar se dilate vuestro amor en vuestros nietos; no sepan los rabiosos celos ni las dudosas sospechas la morada de vuestros pechos; ríndase la invidia a vuestros pies, y la buena fortuna no acierte a salir de vuestra casa".

»Todas estas razones y deprecaciones santas me colmaban el alma de contento, viendo con qué gusto general llevaba el pueblo mi ventura. En esto, la hermosa Leonora me tomó por la mano, y, así en pie como estábamos, alzando un poco la voz, me dijo: "Bien sabéis, señor Manuel de Sosa, cómo mi padre os dio palabra que no dispondría de mi persona en dos años, que se habían de contar desde el día que me pedistes fuese yo vuestra esposa; y también, si mal no me acuerdo, os dije yo, viéndome acosada de vuestra solicitud y obligada de los infinitos beneficios que me habéis hecho, más por vuestra cortesía que por mis merecimientos, que yo no tomaría otro esposo en la tierra sino a vos. Esta palabra mi padre os la ha cumplido, como habéis visto, y yo os quiero cumplir la mía, como veréis. Y así, porque sé que los engaños, aunque sean honrosos y provechosos, tienen un no sé qué de traición cuando se dilatan y entretienen, quiero, del que os parecerá que os he hecho, sacaros en este instante. Yo, señor mío, soy casada, y en ninguna manera, siendo mi esposo vivo, puedo casarme con otro. Yo no os dejo por ningún hombre de la tierra, sino por uno del cielo, que es Jesucristo, Dios y hombre verdadero: Él es mi esposo; a Él le di la palabra primero que a vos; a Él sin engaño y de toda mi voluntad, y a vos con disimulación y sin firmeza alguna. Yo confieso que para escoger esposo en la tierra ninguno os pudiera igualar, pero, habiéndole de escoger en el cielo, ¿quién como Dios? Si esto os parece traición o descomedido trato, dadme la pena que quisiéredes y el nombre que se os antojare, que no habrá muerte, promesa o amenaza que me aparte del crucificado esposo mío".

»Calló, y al mismo punto la priora y las otras monjas comenzaron a desnudarla y a cortarle la preciosa madeja de sus cabellos. Yo enmudecí; y, por no dar muestra de flaqueza, tuve cuenta con reprimir las lágrimas que me venían a los ojos, y, hincándome otra vez de rodillas ante ella, casi por fuerza la besé la mano, y ella, cristianamente compasiva, me echó los brazos al cuello; alcéme en pie, y, alzando la voz de modo que todos me oyesen, dije: "Maria optimam partem elegit". Y, diciendo esto, me bajé del teatro, y, acompañado de mis amigos, me volví a mi casa, adonde, yendo y viniendo con la imaginación en este extraño suceso, vine casi a perder el juicio, y ahora por la misma causa vengo a perder la vida.»

Y, dando un gran suspiro, se le salió el alma y dio consigo en el suelo.

Capítulo onceno del primer libro

ACUDIÓ con presteza Periandro a verle, y halló que había espirado de todo punto, dejando a todos confusos y admirados del triste y no imaginado suceso.

-Con este sueño -dijo a esta sazón Auristela-se ha escusado este caballero de contarnos qué le sucedió en la pasada noche, los trances por donde vino a tan desastrado término y a la prisión de los bárbaros, que sin duda debían de ser casos tan desesperados como peregrinos.

A lo que añadió el bárbaro Antonio:

-Por maravilla hay desdichado sólo que lo sea en sus desventuras. Compañeros tienen las desgracias, y por aquí o por allí, siempre son grandes, y entonces lo dejan de ser cuando acaban con la vida del que las padece.

Dieron luego orden de enterralle como mejor pudieron; sirvióle de mortaja su mismo vestido, de tierra la nieve y de cruz la que le hallaron en el pecho en un escapulario, que era la de Christus, por ser caballero de su hábito; y no fuera menester hallarle esta honrosa señal para enterarse de su nobleza, pues las habían dado bien claras su grave presencia y razonar discreto. No faltaron lágrimas que le acompañasen, porque la compasión hizo su oficio, y las sacó de todos los ojos de los circunstantes.

Amaneció en esto, volvieron las barcas al agua, pareciéndoles que el mar les esperaba sosegado y blando, y, entre tristes y alegres, entre temor y esperanza, siguieron su camino, sin llevar parte cierta adonde encaminalle.

Están todos aquellos mares casi cubiertos de islas, todas o las más despobladas; y las que tienen gente, es rústica y medio bárbara, de poca urbanidad y de corazones duros e insolentes; y, con todo esto, deseaban topar alguna que los acogiese, porque imaginaban que no podían ser tan crueles sus moradores, que no lo fuesen más las montañas de nieve y los duros y ásperos riscos de las que atrás dejaban.

Diez días más navegaron sin tomar puerto, playa o abrigo alguno, dejando a entrambas partes, diestra y siniestra, islas pequeñas que no prometían estar pobladas de gente, puesta la mira en una gran montaña que a la vista se les ofrecía, y pugnaban con todas sus fuerzas llegar a ella con la mayor brevedad que pudiesen, porque ya sus barcas hacían agua y los bastimentos, a más andar, iban faltando. En fin, más con la ayuda del cielo, como se debe creer, que con las de sus brazos, llegaron a la deseada isla, y vieron andar dos personas por la marina, a quien con grandes voces preguntó Transila qué tierra era aquélla, quién la gobernaba y si era de cristianos católicos.

Respondiéronle, en lengua que ella entendió, que aquella isla se llamaba Golandia, y que era de católicos, puesto que estaba despoblada, por ser tan poca la gente que tenía que no ocupaba más de una casa, que servía de mesón a la gente que llegaba a un puerto detrás de un peñón, que señaló con la mano. «Y si vosotros, quienquiera que seáis, queréis repararos de algunas faltas, seguidnos con la vista, que nosotros os pondremos en el puerto».

Dieron gracias a Dios los de las barcas, y siguieron por la mar a los que los guiaban por la tierra, y, al volver del peñón que les habían señalado, vieron un abrigo que podía llamarse puerto, y en él hasta diez o doce bajeles, dellos chicos, dellos medianos y dellos grandes; y fue grande la alegría que de verlos recibieron, pues les daba esperanza de mudar de navíos, y seguridad de caminar con certeza a otras partes.

Llegaron a tierra; salieron así gente de los navíos como del mesón a recibirles; saltó en tierra, en hombros de Periandro y de los dos bárbaros, padre e hijo, la hermosa Auristela, vestida con el vestido y adorno con que fue Periandro vendido a los bárbaros por Arnaldo. Salió con ella la gallarda Transila, y la bella bárbara Constanza con Ricla, su madre, y todos los demás de las barcas acompañaron este escuadrón gallardo.

De tal manera causó admiración, espanto y asombro la bellísima escuadra en los de la mar y la tierra, que todos se postraron en el suelo y dieron muestras de adorar a Auristela. Mirábanla callando, y con tanto respeto que no acertaban a mover las lenguas por no ocuparse en otra cosa que en mirar. La hermosa Transila, como ya había hecho experiencia de que entendían su lengua, fue la primera que rompió el silencio, diciéndoles:

-A vuestro hospedaje nos ha traído la nuestra, hasta hoy, contraria fortuna. En nuestro traje y en nuestra mansedumbre echaréis de ver que antes buscamos paz que guerra, porque no hacen batalla las mujeres ni los varones afligidos. Acogednos, señores, en vuestro hospedaje y en vuestros navíos, que las barcas que aquí nos han conducido, aquí dejan el atrevimiento y la voluntad de tornar otra vez a entregarse a la inestabilidad del mar. Si aquí se cambia por oro o por plata lo necesario que se busca, con facilidad y abundancia seréis recompensados de lo que nos diéredes, que, por subidos precios que lo vendáis, lo recibiremos como si fuese dado.

Uno -¡milagro extraño!- que parecía ser de la gente de los navíos, en lengua española respondió:

-De corto entendimiento fuera, hermosa señora, el que dudara la verdad que dices; que, puesto que la mentira se disimula, y el daño se disfraza con la máscara de la verdad y del bien, no es posible que haya tenido lugar de acogerse a tan gran belleza como la vuestra. El patrón deste hospedaje es cortesísimo, y todos los destas naves ni más ni menos. Mirad si os da más gusto volveros a ellas o entrar en el hospedaje, que en ellas y en él seréis recibidos y tratados como vuestra presencia merece.

Entonces, viendo el bárbaro Antonio, o oyendo, por mejor decir, hablar su lengua, dijo:

-Pues el cielo nos ha traído a parte que suene en mis oídos la dulce lengua de mi nación, casi tengo ya por cierto el fin de mis desgracias. Vamos, señores, al hospedaje, y, en reposando algún tanto, daremos orden en volver a nuestro camino con más seguridad que la que hasta aquí hemos traído.

En esto, un grumete que estaba en lo alto de una gavia, dijo a voces en lengua inglesa:

-Un navío se descubre, que, con tendidas velas y mar y viento en popa, viene la vuelta deste abrigo.

Alborotáronse todos, y, en el mismo lugar donde estaban, sin moverse un paso, se pusieron a esperar el bajel, que tan cerca se descubría; y, cuando estuvo junto, vieron que las hinchadas velas las atravesaban unas cruces rojas, y conocieron que en una bandera que traía en el peñolo de la mayor gavia venían pintadas las armas de Inglaterra.

Disparó, en llegando, dos piezas de gruesa artillería, y luego hasta obra de veinte arcabuces. De la tierra les fue hecha señal de paz y de alegres voces, porque no tenían artillería con que responderle.

Capítulo doce del primer libro

Donde se cuenta de qué parte y quién eran los que venían en el navío

HECHA, como se ha dicho, la salva de entrambas partes, así del navío como de la tierra, al momento echaron áncoras los de la nave, y arrojaron el esquife al agua, en el cual el primero que saltó, después de cuatro marineros que le adornaron con tapetes y asieron de los remos, fue un anciano varón, al parecer de edad de sesenta años, vestido de una ropa de terciopelo negro que le llegaba a los pies, forrada en felpa negra y ceñida con una de las que llaman colonias de seda; en la cabeza traía un sombrero alto y puntiagudo, asimismo, al parecer, de felpa. Tras él bajó al esquife un gallardo y brioso mancebo, de poco más edad de veinte y cuatro años, vestido a lo marinero, de terciopelo negro, una espada dorada en las manos y una daga en la cinta. Luego, como si los arrojaran, echaron de la nave al esquife un hombre lleno de cadenas y una mujer con él enredada y presa con las cadenas mismas: él de hasta cuarenta años de edad y ella de más de cincuenta; él brioso y despechado, y ella malencólica y triste. Impelieron el esquife los marineros. En un instante llegaron a tierra, adonde en sus hombros, y en los de otros soldados arcabuceros que en el barco venían, sacaron a tierra al viejo y al mozo, y a los dos prisioneros.

Transila, que, como los demás, había estado atentísima mirando los que en el esquife venían, volviéndose a Auristela, le dijo:

-Por tu vida, señora, que me cubras el rostro con ese velo que traes atado al brazo, porque, o yo tengo poco conocimiento, o son algunos de los que vienen en este barco personas que yo conozco y me conocen.

Hízolo así Auristela, y en esto llegaron los de la barca a juntarse con ellos, y todos se hicieron bien criados recibimientos.

Fuese derecho el anciano de la felpa a Transila, diciendo:

-Si mi ciencia no me engaña, y la fortuna no me desfavorece, próspera habrá sido la mía con este hallazgo.

Y, diciendo y haciendo, alzó el velo del rostro de Transila, y se quedó desmayado en sus brazos, que ella se los ofreció y se los puso, porque no diese en tierra.

Sin duda se puede creer que este caso de tanta novedad y tan no esperado puso en admiración a los circunstantes, y más cuando le oyeron decir a Transila:

-¡Oh padre de mi alma! ¿Qué venida es ésta? ¿Quién trae a vuestras venerables canas y a vuestros cansados años por tierras tan apartadas de la vuestra?

-¿Quién le ha de traer -dijo a esta sazón el brioso mancebo-sino el buscar la ventura que sin vos le faltaba? Él y yo, dulcísima señora y esposa mía, venimos buscando el norte que nos ha de guiar adonde hallemos el puerto de nuestro descanso. Pero, pues ya, gracias sean dadas a los cielos, le habemos hallado, haz, señora, que vuelva en sí tu padre Mauricio, y consiente que de su alegría reciba yo parte, recibéndole a él como a padre y a mí como a tu legítimo esposo.

Volvió en sí Mauricio, y sucedióle en su desmayo Transila. Acudió Auristela a su remedio, pero no osó llegar a ella Ladislao (que éste era el nombre de su esposo), por guardar el honesto decoro que a Transila se le debía; pero, como los desmayos que suceden de alegres y no pensados acontecimientos, o quitan la vida en un instante o no duran mucho, fue pequeño espacio el en que estuvo Transila desmayada.

El dueño de aquel mesón o hospedaje dijo:

-Venid, señores, todos adonde, con más comodidad y menos frío del que aquí hace, os deis cuenta de vuestros sucesos.

Tomaron su consejo y fuéronse al mesón, y hallaron que era capaz de alojar una flota. Los dos encadenados se fueron por su pie, ayudándoles a llevar sus hierros los arcabuceros, que, como en guarda, con ellos venían. Acudieron a sus naves algunos, y con tanta priesa como buena voluntad trujeron dellas los regalos que tenían. Hízose lumbré, pusieron las mesas, y, sin tratar entonces de otra cosa, satisficieron todos la hambre, más con muchos géneros de pescados que con carnes, porque no sirvió otra que la de muchos pájaros que se crían en aquellas partes, de tan estraña manera que, por ser rara y peregrina, me obliga a que aquí la cuente: «Híncanse unos palos en la orilla de la mar y entre los escollos donde las aguas llegan, los cuales palos, de allí a poco tiempo, todo aquello que cubre el agua se convierte en dura piedra, y lo que queda fuera del agua se pudre y se corrompe, de cuya corrupción se engendra un pequeño pajarillo que, volando a la tierra, se hace grande, y tan sabroso de comer que es uno de los mejores manjares que se usan; y donde hay más abundancia dellos es en las provincias de Ibernía y de Irlanda, el cual pájaro se llama barnaclas.»

El deseo que tenían todos de saber los sucesos de los recién llegados les hacía parecer larga la comida, la cual acabada, el anciano Mauricio dio una gran palmada en la mesa, como dando señal de pedir que con atención le escuchasen. Enmudecieron todos, y el silencio les selló los labios, y la curiosidad les abrió los oídos; viendo lo cual, Mauricio soltó la voz en tales razones:

-«En una isla, de siete que están circunvecinas a la de Ibernía, nació yo, y tuvo principio mi linaje, tan antiguo, bien como aquel que es de los Mauricios, que en decir este apellido le encarezco todo lo que puedo. Soy cristiano católico, y no de aquellos que andan mendigando la fee verdadera entre opiniones. Mis padres me criaron en los estudios, así de las armas como de las letras -si se puede decir que las armas se estudian-. He sido aficionado a la ciencia de la astrología judiciaria, en la cual he alcanzado famoso nombre. Caséme, en teniendo edad para tomar estado, con una hermosa y principal mujer de mi ciudad, de la cual tuve esta hija que está aquí presente. Seguí las costumbres de mi patria, a lo menos en cuanto a las que parecían ser niveladas con la razón, y en las que no, con apariencias fingidas mostraba seguirlas, que tal vez la disimulación es provechosa. Creció esta muchacha a mi sombra porque le faltó la de su madre, a dos años después de nacida, y a mí me faltó el arrimo de mi vejez, y me sobró el cuidado de criar la hija; y, por salir dél, que es carga difícil de llevar de cansados y ancianos hombros, en llegando a casi edad de darle esposo, en que le diese arrimo y compañía, lo puse en efeto, y el que le escogí fue este gallardo mancebo que tengo a mi lado, que se llama Ladislao, tomando consentimiento primero de mi hija, por parecerme acertado y aun conveniente que los padres casen a sus hijas con su beneplácito y gusto, pues no les dan compañía por un día, sino por todos aquellos que les durare la vida; y, de no hacer esto ansí, se han seguido, siguen y seguirán millares de inconvenientes, que los más suelen parar en desastrados sucesos.

»Es, pues, de saber que en mi patria hay una costumbre, entre muchas malas, la peor de todas; y es que, concertado el matrimonio y llegado el día de la boda, en una casa principal, para esto diputada, se juntan los novios y sus hermanos, si los tienen, con todos los parientes más cercanos de entrambas partes, y con ellos el regimiento de la ciudad, los unos para testigos y los otros para verdugos, que así los puedo y debo llamar. Está la desposada en un rico apartamento, esperando lo que no sé cómo pueda decirlo sin que la vergüenza no me turbe la lengua. Está esperando, digo, a que entren los hermanos de su esposo, si los tiene, y algunos de sus parientes más cercanos, de uno en uno, a coger las flores de su jardín y a manosear los ramilletes que ella quisiera guardar intactos para su marido: costumbre bárbara y maldita que va contra todas las leyes de la honestidad y del buen decoro; porque, ¿qué dote puede llevar más rico una doncella, que serlo, ni qué limpieza puede ni debe agradar más al esposo que la que la mujer lleva a su poder en su entereza? La honestidad siempre anda acompañada con la vergüenza, y la vergüenza con la honestidad. Y si la una o la otra comienzan a desmoronarse y a perderse, todo el edificio de la hermosura dará en tierra, y será tenido en precio bajo y asqueroso. Muchas veces había yo intentado de persuadir a mi pueblo dejase esta prodigiosa costumbre; pero, apenas lo intentaba, cuando se me daba en la boca con mil amenazas de muerte, donde vine a verificar aquel antiguo adagio que vulgarmente se dice: que la costumbre es otra naturaleza, y el mudarla se siente como la muerte.

Aquí llegaba de su historia el anciano Mauricio, escuchándole todos con la atención posible, cuando, revistiéndosele a Transila el mismo espíritu que tuvo al tiempo que se vio en el mismo acto y ocasión que su padre contaba, levantándose en pie, con lengua a quien suele turbar la cólera, con el rostro hecho brasa y los ojos fuego, en efeto, con ademán que la pudiera hacer menos hermosa, si es que los accidentes tienen fuerzas de menoscabar las grandes hermosuras, quitándole a su padre las palabras de la boca, dijo las del siguiente capítulo.

Capítulo trece

Donde Transila prosigue la historia a quien su padre dio principio

-«SALÍ -dijo Transila-, como mi padre ha dicho, a la gran sala, y, mirando a todas partes, en alta y colérica voz dije: "Haceos adelante vosotros, aquellos cuyas deshonestas y bárbaras costumbres van contra las que guarda cualquier bien ordenada república. Vosotros, digo, más lascivos que religiosos, que, con apariencia y sombra de ceremonias vanas, queréis cultivar los ajenos campos sin licencia de sus legítimos dueños. Veisme aquí, gente mal perdida y peor aconsejada: venid, venid, que la razón, puesta en la punta desta lanza, defenderá mi partido y quitará las fuerzas a vuestros malos pensamientos, tan enemigos de la honestidad y de la limpieza". Y, en diciendo esto, salté en mitad de la turba; y, rompiendo por ella, salí a la calle, acompañada de mi mismo enojo, y llegué a la marina, donde, cifrando mil discursos que en aquel tiempo hice en uno, me arrojé en un pequeño barco que sin duda me deparó el cielo. Asiendo de dos pequeños remos, me alargué de la tierra todo lo que pude; pero, viendo que se daban prisa a seguirme en otros muchos barcos, más bien parados y de mayores fuerzas impelidos, y que no era posible escaparme, solté los remos, y volví a tomar mi lanza, con intención de esperarles y dejar llevarme a su poder, si no perdiendo la vida, vengando primero en quien pudiese mi agravio.

»Vuelvo a decir otra vez que el cielo, conmovido de mi desgracia, avivó el viento y llevó el barco, sin impelerle los remos, el mar adentro, hasta que llegó a una corriente o raudal que le arrebató como en peso, y le llevó más adentro, quitando la esperanza a los que tras mí venían de alcanzarme, que no se aventuraron a entrarse en la desenfrenada corriente que por aquella parte el mar llevaba.»

-Así es verdad -dijo a esta sazón su esposo Ladislao-, porque, como me llevabas el alma, no pude dejar de seguirte. «Sobrevino la noche, y perdímoste de vista, y aun perdimos la esperanza de hallarte viva, si no fuese en las lenguas de la fama, que desde aquel punto tomó a su cargo el celebrar tal hazaña por siglos eternos.»

-«Es, pues, el caso -prosiguió Transila-que aquella noche un viento, que de la mar soplabá, me trujo a la tierra, y en la marina hallé unos pescadores que benignamente me recogieron y albergaron, y aun me ofrecieron marido, si no le tenía, y creo sin aquellas condiciones de quien yo iba huyendo; pero la codicia humana, que reina y tiene su señorío aun entre las peñas y riscos del mar y en los corazones duros y campestres, se entró aquella noche en los pechos de aquellos rústicos pescadores, y acordaron entre sí que, pues de todos era la presa que en mí tenían, y que no podía ser dividida en partes para poder repartirme, que me vendiesen a unos cosarios que aquella tarde habían descubierto no lejos de sus pesquerías.

»Bien pudiera yo ofrecerles mayor precio del que ellos pudieran pedir a los cosarios, pero no quise tomar ocasión de recibir bien alguno de ninguno de mi bárbara patria; y así, al amanecer, habiendo llegado allí los piratas, me vendieron, no sé por cuánto, habiéndome primero despojado de las joyas que llevaba de desposada. Lo que sé decir es que me trataron los cosarios con mejor término que mis ciudadanos, y me dijeron que no fuese malencólica, porque no me llevaban para ser esclava, sino para esperar ser reina y aun señora de todo el universo, si ya no mentían ciertas profecías de los bárbaros de aquella isla, de quien tanto se hablaba por el mundo.

»De cómo llegué, del recibimiento que los bárbaros me hicieron, de cómo aprendí su lengua en este tiempo que ha que falté de vuestra presencia, de sus ritos y ceremonias y costumbres, del vano supuesto de sus profecías, y del hallazgo destos señores con quien vengo, y del incendio de la isla, que ya queda abrasada, y de nuestra libertad, diré otra vez, que por agora basta lo dicho, y quiero dar lugar a que mi padre me diga qué ventura le ha traído a dármele tan buena cuando menos la esperaba.»

Aquí dio fin Transila a su plática, teniendo a todos colgados de la suavidad de su lengua, y admirados del extremo de su hermosura, que después de la de Auristela ninguna se le igualaba.

Mauricio, su padre, entonces, dijo:

-Ya sabes, hermosa Transila, querida hija, cómo en mis estudios y ejercicios, entre otros muchos gustosos y loables, me llevaron tras sí los de la astrología judiciaria, como aquellos que, cuando aciertan, cumplen el natural deseo que todos los hombres tienen de saber, no sólo lo pasado y presente, sino lo por venir. Viéndote, pues, perdida, noté el punto, observé los astros, miré el aspecto de los planetas, señalé los sitios y casas necesarias para que respondiese mi trabajo a mi deseo, porque ninguna ciencia, en cuanto a ciencia, engaña: el engaño está en quien no la sabe, principalmente la del astrología, por la velocidad de los cielos, que se lleva tras sí todas las estrellas, las cuales no influyen en este lugar lo que en aquél, ni en aquél lo que en éste; y así, el astrólogo judiciario, si acierta alguna vez en sus juicios, es por arrimarse a lo más probable y a lo más experimentado, y el mejor astrólogo del mundo, puesto que muchas veces se engaña, es el demonio, porque no solamente juzga de lo por venir por la ciencia que sabe, sino también por las premisas y conjeturas; y, como ha tanto tiempo que tiene experiencia de los casos pasados y tanta noticia de los presentes, con facilidad se arroja a juzgar de los por venir, lo que no tenemos los aprendices desta ciencia, pues hemos de juzgar siempre a tienta y con poca seguridad. Con todo eso, alcancé que tu perdición había de durar dos años, y que te había de cobrar este día y en esta parte, para remozar mis canas y para dar gracias a los cielos del hallazgo de mi tesoro, alegrando mi espíritu con tu presencia, puesto que sé que ha de ser a costa de algunos sobresaltos; que, por la mayor parte, las buenas andanzas no vienen sin el contrapeso de desdichas, las cuales tienen jurisdicción y un modo de licencia de entrarse por los buenos sucesos, para darnos a entender que ni el bien es eterno, ni el mal durable.

-Los cielos serán servidos -dijo a esta sazón Auristela, que había gran tiempo que callaba-de darnos próspero viaje, pues nos le promete tan buen hallazgo.

La mujer prisionera, que había estado escuchando con grande atención el razonamiento de Transila, se puso en pie, a pesar de sus cadenas y al de la fuerza que le hacía para que no se levantase el que con ella venía preso, y, con voz levantada, dijo:

Capítulo catorce del primer libro

Donde se declara quién eran los que tan aherrojados venían

-SI ES QUE los afligidos tienen licencia para hablar ante los venturosos, concédaseme a mí por esta vez, donde la brevedad de mis razones templará el fastidio que tuviéredes de escuchallas. Haste quejado -dijo, volviéndose a Transila-, señora doncella, de la bárbara costumbre de los de tu ciudad, como si lo fuera aliviar el trabajo a los menesterosos y quitar la carga a los flacos; sí, que no es error, por bueno que sea un caballo, pasearle la carrera primero que se ponga en él, ni va contra la honestidad el uso y costumbre si en él no se pierde la honra, y se tiene por acertado lo que no lo parece; sí, que mejor gobernará el timón de una nave el que hubiere sido marinero, que no el que sale de las escuelas de la tierra para ser piloto: la experiencia en todas las cosas es la mejor maestra de las artes; y así, mejor te fuera entrar experimentada en la compañía de tu esposo que rústica e inculta.

Apenas oyó esta razón última el hombre que consigo venía atado, cuando dijo, poniéndole el puño cerrado junto al rostro, amenazándola:

-¡Oh Rosamunda, o por mejor decir, rosa inmunda!, porque munda ni lo fuiste, ni lo eres, ni lo serás en tu vida, si vivieses más años que los mismos tiempos; y así, no me maravillo de que te parezca mal la honestidad ni el buen recato a que están obligadas las honradas doncellas.

«Sabed, señores -mirando a todos los circunstantes, prosiguió-, que esta mujer que aquí veis, atada como loca y libre como atrevida, es aquella famosa Rosamunda, dama que ha sido concubina y amiga del rey de Inglaterra, de cuyas impúdicas costumbres hay largas historias y longísimas memorias entre todas las gentes del mundo. Ésta mandó al rey, y por añadidura a todo el reino; puso leyes, quitó leyes, levantó caídos viciosos y derribó levantados virtuosos. Cumplió sus gustos tan torpe como públicamente, en menoscabo de la autoridad del rey, y en muestra de sus torpes apetitos, que fueron tantas las muestras, y tan torpes y tantos sus atrevimientos, que, rompiendo los lazos de diamantes y las redes de bronce con que tenía ligado el corazón del rey, le movieron a apartarla de sí y a menospreciarla en el mismo grado que la había tenido en precio. Cuando ésta estaba en la cumbre de su rueda, y tenía asida por la guedeja a la fortuna, vivía yo despechado y con deseos de mostrar al mundo cuán mal estaban empleados los de mi rey y señor natural. Tengo un cierto espíritu satírico y maldiciente, una pluma veloz y una lengua libre; deléitanme las maliciosas agudezas, y, por decir una, perderé yo, no sólo un amigo, pero cien mil vidas. No me ataban la lengua prisiones, ni enmudecían destierros, ni atemorizaban amenazas, ni enmendaban castigos. Finalmente, a entrambos a dos llegó el día de nuestra última paga: a ésta mandó el rey que nadie en toda la ciudad, ni en todos sus reinos y señoríos le diese, ni dado ni por dineros, otro algún sustento que pan y agua, y que a mí junto con ella nos trajesen a una de las muchas islas que por aquí hay, que fuese despoblada, y aquí nos dejaran: pena que para mí ha sido más mala que quitarme la vida, porque, la que con ella paso, es peor que la muerte.»

-Mira, Clodio -dijo a esta sazón Rosamunda-, cuán mal me hallo yo en tu compañía, que mil veces me ha venido al pensamiento de arrojarme en la profundidad del mar, y si lo he dejado de hacer, es por no llevarte conmigo, que si en el infierno pudiera estar sin ti, se me aliviaran las penas. Yo confieso que mis torpezas han sido muchas, pero han caído sobre sujeto flaco y poco discreto; mas las tuyas han cargado sobre varoniles hombros y sobre discreción experimentada, sin sacar de ellas otra ganancia que una delectación más ligera que la menuda paja que en volubles remolinos revuelve el viento. Tú has lastimado mil ajenas honras, has aniquilado ilustres créditos, has descubierto secretos escondidos y contaminado linajes claros; haste atrevido a tu rey, a tus ciudadanos, a tus amigos y a tus mismos parientes; y, en son de decir gracias, te has desgraciado con todo el mundo. Bien quisiera yo que quisiera el rey que, en pena de mis delitos, acabara con otro género de muerte la vida en mi tierra, y no con el de las heridas que a cada paso me da tu lengua, de la cual tal vez no están seguros los cielos ni los santos.

-Con todo eso -dijo Clodio-, jamás me ha acusado la conciencia de haber dicho alguna mentira.

-A tener tú conciencia -dijo Rosamunda- de las verdades que has dicho, tenías harto de que acusarte; que no todas las verdades han de salir en público, ni a los ojos de todos.

-Sí -dijo a esta sazón Mauricio-; sí, que tiene razón Rosamunda, que las verdades de las culpas cometidas en secreto, nadie ha de ser osado de sacarlas en público, especialmente las de los reyes y príncipes que nos gobiernan; sí, que no toca a un hombre particular reprehender a su rey y señor, ni sembrar en los oídos de sus vasallos las faltas de su príncipe, porque esto no será causa de enmendarle, sino de que los suyos no le estimen; y si la corrección ha de ser fraterna entre todos, ¿por qué no ha de gozar deste privilegio el príncipe?, ¿por qué le han de decir públicamente y en el rostro sus defetos?; que tal vez la reprehensión pública y mal considerada suele endurecer la condición del que la recibe, y volverle antes pertinaz que blando; y, como es forzoso que la reprehensión caiga sobre culpas verdaderas o imaginadas, nadie quiere que le reprehendan en público; y así, dignamente, los satíricos, los maldicientes, los malintencionados son desterrados y echados de sus casas, sin honra y con vituperio, sin que les quede otra alabanza que llamarse agudos sobre bellacos, y bellacos sobre agudos; y es como lo que suele decirse: la traición contenta, pero el traidor enfada. Y hay más: que las honras que se quitan por escrito, como vuelan y pasan de gente en gente, no se pueden reducir a restitución, sin la cual no se perdonan los pecados.

-Todo lo sé -respondió Clodio-, pero si quieren que no hable o escriba, córtenme la lengua y las manos, y aun entonces pondré la boca en las entrañas de la tierra, y daré voces como pudiere, y tendré esperanza que de allí salgan las cañas del rey Midas.

-Ahora bien -dijo a esta sazón Ladislao-, háganse estas paces: casemos a Rosamunda con Clodio; quizá con la bendición del sacramento del matrimonio y con la discreción de entrambos, mudando de estado, mudarán de vida.

-Aun bien -dijo Rosamunda-, que tengo aquí un cuchillo con que podré hacer una o dos puertas en mi pecho, por donde salga el alma, que ya tengo casi puesta en los dientes, en sólo haber oído este tan desastrado y desatinado casamiento.

-Yo no me mataré -dijo Clodio-, porque, aunque soy murmurador y maldiciente, el gusto que recibo de decir mal, cuando lo digo bien, es tal, que quiero vivir, porque quiero decir mal. Verdad es que pienso guardar la cara a los príncipes, porque ellos tienen largos brazos, y alcanzan adonde quieren y a quien quieren, y ya la experiencia me ha mostrado que no es bien ofender a los poderosos, y la caridad cristiana enseña que por el príncipe bueno se ha de rogar al cielo por su vida y por su salud, y por el malo, que le mejore y enmiende.

-Quien todo eso sabe -dijo el bárbaro Antonio-cerca está de enmendarse. No hay pecado tan grande, ni vicio tan apoderado que con el arrepentimiento no se borre o quite del todo. La lengua maldiciente es como espada de dos filos, que corta hasta los huesos, o como rayo del cielo, que sin romper la vaina, rompe y desmenuza el acero que cubre; y, aunque las conversaciones y entretenimientos se hacen sabrosos con la sal de la murmuración, todavía suelen tener los dejos las más veces amargos y desabridos. Es tan ligera la lengua como el pensamiento, y si son malas las preñeces de los pensamientos, las empeoran los partos de la lengua. Y, como sean las palabras como las piedras que se sueltan de la mano, que no se pueden revocar ni volver a la parte donde salieron hasta que han hecho su efeto, pocas veces el arrepentirse de habellas dicho menoscaba la culpa del que las dijo; aunque ya tengo dicho que un buen arrepentimiento es la mejor medicina que tienen las enfermedades del alma.

Capítulo quince del primer libro desta grande historia

EN ESTO estaban, cuando entró un marinero en el hospedaje, diciendo a voces:

-Un bajel grande viene con las velas tendidas encaminado a este puerto, y hasta agora no he descubierto señal que me dé a entender de qué parte sea.

Apenas dijo esto, cuando llegó a sus oídos el son horrible de muchas piezas de artillería que el bajel disparó al entrar del puerto, todas limpias y sin bala alguna, señal de paz y no de guerra; de la misma manera le respondió el bajel de Mauricio y toda la arcabucería de los soldados que en él venían.

Al momento, todos los que estaban en el hospedaje salieron a la marina; y, en viendo Periandro el bajel recién llegado, conoció ser el de Arnaldo, príncipe de Dinamarca, de que no recibió contento alguno, antes se le revolvieron las entrañas, y el corazón le comenzó a dar saltos en el pecho. Los mismos accidentes y sobresaltos recibió en el suyo Auristela, como aquella que por larga experiencia sabía la voluntad que Arnaldo le tenía, y no podía acomodar su corazón a pensar cómo podría ser que las voluntades de Arnaldo y Periandro se aviniesen bien, sin que la rigurosa y desesperada flecha de los celos no les atrevesase las almas.

Ya estaba Arnaldo en el esquife de la nave, y ya llegaba a la orilla, cuando se adelantó Periandro a recebille; pero Auristela no se movió del lugar donde primero puso el pie, y aun quisiera que allí se le hincaran en el suelo y se volvieran en torcidas raíces, como se volvieron los de la hija de Peneo, cuando el ligero corredor Apolo la seguía. Arnaldo, que vio a Periandro, le conoció; y, sin esperar que los suyos le sacasen en hombros a tierra, de un salto que dio desde la popa del esquife, se puso en ella y en los brazos de Periandro, que con ellos abiertos le recibió. Y Arnaldo le dijo:

-Si yo fuese tan venturoso, amigo Periandro, que contigo hallase a tu hermana Auristela, ni tendría mal que temer ni otro bien mayor que esperar.

-Conmigo está, valeroso señor -respondió Periandro-, que los cielos, atentos a favorecer tus virtuosos y honestos pensamientos, te la han guardado con la entereza que también ella por sus buenos deseos merece.

Ya en esto se había comunicado por la nueva gente, y por la que en la tierra estaba, quién era el príncipe que en la nave venía; y todavía estaba Auristela como estatua, sin voz, inamovible, y junto a ella la hermosa Transila, y las dos, al parecer, bárbaras, Ricla y Constanza.

Llegó Arnaldo, y, puesto de hinojos ante Auristela, le dijo:

-Seas bien hallada, norte por donde se guían mis honestos pensamientos, y estrella fija que me lleva al puerto donde han de tener reposo mis buenos deseos.

A todo esto no respondió palabra Auristela, antes le vinieron las lágrimas a los ojos, que comenzaron a bañar sus rosadas mejillas. Confuso Arnaldo de tal accidente, no supo determinarse si de pesar o de alegría podía proceder semejante acontecimiento. Mas Periandro, que todo lo notaba y en cualquier movimiento de Auristela tenía puestos los ojos, sacó a Arnaldo de duda, diciéndole:

-Señor, el silencio y las lágrimas de mi hermana nacen de admiración y de gusto: la admiración, del verte en parte tan no esperada; y las lágrimas, del gusto de haberte visto; ella es agradecida, como lo deben ser las bien nacidas, y conoce las obligaciones en que la has puesto de servirte con las mercedes y limpio tratamiento que siempre le has hecho.

Fuéronse con esto al hospedaje, volvieron a colmarse las mesas de manjares, llenáronse de regocijo los pechos, porque se llenaron las tazas de generosos vinos, que, cuando se trasiegan por la mar de un cabo a otro, se mejoran de manera que no hay néctar que se les iguale. Esta segunda comida se hizo por respeto del príncipe Arnaldo.

Contó Periandro al príncipe lo que le sucedió en la isla bárbara, con la libertad de Auristela, con todos los sucesos y puntos que hasta aquí se han contado, con que se suspendió Arnaldo, y de nuevo se alegraron y admiraron todos los presentes.

Capítulo diez y seis del primer libro de Persiles y Sigismunda

EN ESTO, el patrón del hospedaje dijo:

-No sé si diga que me pesa de la bonanza que prometen en el mar las señales del cielo: el sol se pone claro y limpio, cerca ni lejos no se descubre celaje alguno, las olas hieren la tierra blanda y suavemente, y las aves salen al mar a espaciarse; que todos estos son indicios de serenidad firme y duradera, cosa que ha de obligar a que me dejen solo tan honrados huéspedes como la fortuna a mi hospedaje ha traído.

-Así será -dijo Mauricio-, que, puesto que vuestra noble compañía se ha de tener por agradable y cara, el deseo de volver a nuestras patrias no consiente que mucho tiempo la gocemos. De mí sé decir que esta noche a la primera guarda me pienso hacer a la vela, si con mi parecer viene el de mi piloto y el de estos señores soldados que en el navío vienen.

A lo que añadió Arnaldo:

-Siempre la pérdida del tiempo no se puede cobrar, y la que se pierde en la navegación es irremediable.

En efeto, entre todos los que en el puerto estaban, quedó de acuerdo que en aquella noche fuesen de partida la vuelta de Inglaterra, a quien todos iban encaminados.

Levantóse Arnaldo de la mesa, y, asiendo de la mano a Periandro, le sacó fuera del hospedaje, donde a solas y sin ser oído de nadie, le dijo:

-No es posible, Periandro amigo, sino que tu hermana Auristela te habrá dicho la voluntad que, en dos años que estuvo en poder del rey mi padre, le mostré: tan ajustada con sus honestos deseos, que jamás me salieron palabras a la boca que pudiesen turbar sus castos intentos. Nunca quise saber más de su hacienda de aquello que ella quiso decirme, pintándola en mi imaginación, no como persona ordinaria y de bajo estado, sino como a reina de todo el mundo, porque su honestidad, su gravedad, su discreción tan en extremo estremada no me daba lugar a que otra cosa pensase. Mil veces me le ofrecí por su esposo, y esto con voluntad de mi padre, y aun me parecía que era corto mi ofrecimiento. Respondióme siempre que hasta verse en la ciudad de Roma, adonde iba a cumplir un voto, no podía disponer de su persona. Jamás me quiso decir su calidad ni la de sus padres, ni yo, como ya he dicho, le importuné me la dijese, pues ella sola, por sí misma, sin que traiga dependencia de otra alguna nobleza, merece, no solamente la corona de Dinamarca, sino de toda la monarquía de la tierra. Todo esto te he dicho, Periandro, para que, como varón de discurso y entendimiento, consideres que no es muy baja la ventura que está llamando a las puertas de tu comodidad y la de tu hermana, a quien desde aquí me ofrezco por su esposo, y prometo de cumplir este ofrecimiento cuando ella quisiere y adonde quisiere: aquí, debajo destos pobres techos, o en los dorados de la famosa Roma. Y asimismo te ofrezco de contenerme en los límites de la honestidad y buen decoro, si bien viese consumirme en los ahíncos y deseos que trae consigo la concupiscencia desenfrenada, y la esperanza propincua, que suele fatigar más que la apartada.

Aquí dio fin a su plática Arnaldo, y estuvo atentísimo a lo que Periandro había de responderle, que fue:

-Bien conozco, valeroso príncipe Arnaldo, la obligación en que yo y mi hermana te estamos por las mercedes que hasta aquí nos has hecho, y por la que agora de nuevo nos haces: a mí, por ofrecerte por mi hermano, y a ella, por esposo; pero, aunque parezca locura que dos miserables peregrinos desterrados de su patria no admitan luego luego el bien que se les ofrece, te sé decir no ser posible el recibirle, como es posible el agradecerle: mi hermana y yo vamos, llevados del destino y de la elección, a la santa ciudad de Roma, y, hasta vernos en ella, parece que no tenemos ser alguno, ni libertad para usar de nuestro albedrío. Si el cielo nos llevare a pisar la santísima tierra y adorar sus reliquias santas, quedaremos en disposición de disponer de nuestras hasta agora impedidas voluntades, y entonces será la mía toda empleada en servirte. Séte decir también, que si llegares al cumplimiento de tu buen deseo, llegarás a tener una esposa de ilustrísimo linaje nacida, y un hermano que lo sea mejor que cuñado; y, entre las muchas mercedes que entrambos a dos hemos recibido, te suplico me hagas a mí una, y es que no me preguntes más de nuestra hacienda y de nuestra vida, porque no me obligues a que sea mentiroso, inventando quimeras que decirte, mentirosas y falsas, por no poder contarte las verdaderas de nuestra historia.

-Dispón de mí -respondió Arnaldo-, hermano mío, a toda tu voluntad y gusto, haciendo cuenta que yo soy cera y tú el sello que has de imprimir en mí lo que quisieres; y si te parece, sea nuestra partida esta noche a Inglaterra, que de allí fácilmente pasaremos a Francia y a Roma, en cuyo viaje, y del modo que quisiéredes, pienso acompañaros si dello gustáredes.

Aunque le pesó a Periandro deste último ofrecimiento, le admitió, esperando en el tiempo y en la dilación, que tal vez mejora los sucesos; y, abrazándose los dos cuñados en esperanza, se volvieron al hospedaje a dar traza en su partida.

Había visto Auristela cómo Arnaldo y Periandro habían salido juntos, y estaba temerosa del fin que podía tener el de su plática; y, puesto que conocía la modestia en el príncipe Arnaldo y la mucha discreción de Periandro, mil géneros de temores la sobresalteaban, pareciéndole que, como el amor de Arnaldo igualaba a su poder, podía remitir a la fuerza sus ruegos; que tal vez en los pechos de los desdeñados amantes se convierte la paciencia en rabia y la cortesía en descomedimiento. Pero, cuando los vio venir tan sosegados y pacíficos, cobró casi los perdidos espíritus.

Clodio, el maldiciente, que ya había sabido quién era Arnaldo, se le echó a los pies, y le suplicó le mandase quitar la cadena y apartar de la compañía de Rosamunda. Mauricio le contó luego la condición, la culpa y la pena de Clodio y la de Rosamunda. Movido a compasión dellos, hizo, por un capitán que los traía a su cargo, que los desherrasen y se los entregasen, que él tomaba a su cargo alcanzarles perdón de su rey, por ser su grande amigo.

Viendo lo cual, el maldiciente Clodio dijo:

-Si todos los señores se ocupasen en hacer buenas obras, no habría quien se ocupase en decir mal dellos; pero, ¿por qué ha de esperar el que obra mal que digan bien dél? Y si las obras virtuosas y bien hechas son calumniadas de la malicia humana, ¿por qué no lo serán las malas? ¿Por qué ha de esperar el que siembra cizaña y maldad, dé buen fruto su cosecha? Llévame contigo, ¡oh príncipe!, y verás cómo pongo sobre el cerco de la luna tus alabanzas.

-No, no -respondió Arnaldo-, no quiero que me alabes por las obras que en mí son naturales; y más, que la alabanza tanto es buena cuanto es bueno el que la dice, y tanto es mala cuanto es vicioso y malo el que alaba; que si la alabanza es premio de la virtud, si el que alaba es virtuoso, es alabanza; y si vicioso, vituperio.

Capítulo diez y siete del primer libro

Da cuenta Arnaldo del suceso de Taurisa

CON GRAN deseo estaba Auristela de saber lo que Arnaldo y Periandro pasaron en la plática que tuvieron fuera del hospedaje, y aguardaba comodidad para preguntárselo a Periandro, y para saber de Arnaldo qué se había hecho su doncella Taurisa.

Y, como si Arnaldo le adivinara los pensamientos, le dijo:

-Las desgracias que has pasado, hermosa Auristela, te habrán llevado de la memoria las que tenías en obligación de acordarte dellas, entre las cuales querría que hubiesen borrado de ella a mí mismo, que, con sola la imaginación de pensar que algún tiempo he estado en ella, viviría contento, pues no puede haber olvido de aquello de quien no se ha tenido acuerdo. El olvido presente cae sobre la memoria del acuerdo pasado; pero, comoquiera que sea, acuérdesete de mí o no te acuerdes, de todo lo que hicieres estoy contento; que los cielos, que me han destinado para ser tuyo, no me dejan hacer otra cosa: mi albedrío lo es para obedecerte. Tu hermano Periandro me ha contado muchas de las cosas que después que te robaron de mi reino te han sucedido: unas me han admirado, otras supendido, y éstas y aquéllas espantado. Veo, asimismo, que tienen fuerza las desgracias para borrar de la memoria algunas obligaciones que parecen forzosas: ni me has preguntado por mi padre, ni por Taurisa, tu doncella; a él dejé yo bueno y con deseo de que te buscara y te hallara, a ella la traje conmigo, con intención de venderla a los bárbaros, para que sirviese de espía y viese si la fortuna te había llevado a su poder. De cómo vino al mío tu hermano Periandro, ya él te lo habrá contado, y el concierto que entre los dos hicimos; y, aunque muchas veces he probado volver a la isla Bárbara, los vientos contrarios no me han dejado, y ahora volvía con la misma intención y con el mismo deseo, el cual me ha cumplido el cielo con bienes de tantas ventajas, como son de tenerte en mi presencia, alivio universal de mis cuidados. Taurisa, tu doncella, habrá dos días que la entregué a dos caballeros amigos míos, que encontré en medio dese mar, que en un poderoso navío iban a Irlanda, a causa que Taurisa iba muy mala y con poca seguridad de la vida; y, como este navío en que yo ando más se puede llamar de cosario que de hijo de rey, viendo que en él no había regalos ni medicinas, que piden los enfermos, se la entregué para que la llevasen a Irlanda y la entregasen a su príncipe, que la regalase, curase y guardase, hasta que yo mismo fuese por ella. Hoy he dejado apuntado con tu hermano Periandro que nos partamos mañana, o ya para Inglaterra, o ya para España o Francia, que, a doquiera que arribemos, tendremos segura comodidad para poner en efeto los honestos pensamientos que tu hermano me ha dicho que tienes; y yo en este entretanto llevaré sobre los hombros de mi paciencia mis esperanzas, sustentadas con el arrimo de tu buen entendimiento. Con todo esto, te ruego, señora, y te suplico que mires si con nuestro parecer viene y ajusta el tuyo, que, si algún tanto disuena, no le pondremos en ejecución.

-Yo no tengo otra voluntad -respondió Auristela-sino la de mi hermano Periandro, ni él, pues es discreto, querrá salir un punto de la tuya.

-Pues si así es -replicó Arnaldo-, no quiero mandar, sino obedecer, porque no digan que por la calidad de mi persona me quiero alzar con el mando a mayores.

Esto fue lo que pasó a Arnaldo con Auristela, la cual se lo contó todo a Periandro. Y aquella noche Arnaldo, Periandro, Mauricio, Ladislao y los dos capitanes del navío inglés, con todos los que salieron de la isla bárbara, entraron en consejo, y ordenaron su partida en la forma siguiente:

Capítulo diez y ocho del primer libro

Donde Mauricio sabe por la astrología un mal suceso que les avino en el mar

EN LA NAVE donde vinieron Mauricio y Ladislao, los capitanes y soldados que trajeron a Rosamunda y a Clodio, se embarcaron todos aquellos que salieron de la mazmorra y prisión de la isla Bárbara, y en el navío de Arnaldo se acomodaron Mauricio, Transila, Ricla y Constanza, y los dos Antonios, padre y hijo; Ladislao, Mauricio y Transila, sin consentir Arnaldo que se quedasen en tierra Clodio y Rosamunda; Rutilio se acomodó con Arnaldo.

Hicieron agua aquella noche, recogiendo y comprando del huésped todos los bastimentos que pudieron; y, habiendo mirado los puntos más convenientes para su partida, dijo Mauricio que si la buena suerte les escapaba de una mala que les amenazaba muy propincua, tendría buen suceso su viaje; y que el tal peligro, puesto que era de agua, no había de suceder, si sucediese, por borrasca ni tormenta del mar ni de tierra, sino por una traición mezclada y aun forjada del todo de deshonestos y lascivos deseos. Periandro, que siempre andaba sobresaltado con la compañía de Arnaldo, vino a temer si aquella traición había de ser fabricada por el príncipe para alzarse con la hermosa Auristela, pues la había de llevar en su navío; pero opúsose a todo este mal pensamiento la generosidad de su ánimo, y no quiso creer lo que temía, por parecerle que, en los pechos de los valerosos príncipes, no deben hallar acogida alguna las traiciones; pero no por esto dejó de pedir y rogar a Mauricio mirase muy bien de qué parte les podía venir el daño que les amenazaba. Mauricio respondió que no lo sabía, puesto que le tenía por cierto, aunque templaba su rigor con que ninguno de los que en él se hallasen había de perder la vida, sino el sosiego y la quietud, y habían de ver rompidos la mitad de sus disinius, sus más bien encaminadas esperanzas. A lo que Periandro le replicó que detuviesen algunos días la partida: quizá con la tardanza del tiempo se mudarían o se templarían los influjos rigurosos de las estrellas.

-No -replicó Mauricio-, mejor es arrojarnos en las manos deste peligro, pues no llega a quitar la vida, que no intentar otro camino que nos lleve a perderla.

-Ea, pues -dijo Periandro-, echada está la suerte, partamos en buen hora, y haga el cielo lo que ordenado tiene, pues nuestra diligencia no lo puede escusar.

Satisfizo Arnaldo al huésped magníficamente con muchos dones el buen hospedaje, y unos en unos navíos, y otros en otros, cada cual según y como vio que más le convenía, dejó el puerto desembarazado y se hizo a la vela. Salió el navío de Arnaldo adornado de ligeras flámulas y banderetas, y de pintados y vistosos gallardetes. Al zarpar los hierros y tirar las áncoras, disparó así la gruesa como la menuda artillería, rompieron los aires los sonos de las chirimías y los de otros instrumentos músicos y alegres, oyéronse las voces de los que decían, reiterándolo a menudo:

-¡Buen viaje! ¡Buen viaje!

A todo esto, no alzaba la cabeza de sobre el pecho la hermosa Auristela, que, casi como présaga del mal que le había de venir, iba pensativa. Mirábala Periandro y remirábala Arnaldo, teniéndola cada uno hecha blanco de sus ojos, fin de sus pensamientos y principio de sus alegrías. Acabóse el día; entróse la noche clara, serena, despejando un aire blando los celajes, que parece que se iban a juntar si los dejasen.

Puso los ojos en el cielo Mauricio, y de nuevo tornó a mirar en su imaginación las señales de la figura que había levantado, y de nuevo confirmó el peligro que les amenazaba, pero nunca supo atinar de qué parte les vendría. Con esta confusión y sobresalto se quedó dormido encima de la cubierta de la nave, y, de allí a poco, despertó despavorido, diciendo a grandes voces:

-¡Traición, traición, traición! ¡Despierta, príncipe Arnaldo, que los tuyos nos matan!

A cuyas voces se levantó Arnaldo, que no dormía, puesto que estaba echado junto a Periandro en la misma cubierta, y dijo:

-¿Qué has, amigo Mauricio? ¿Quién nos ofende, o quién nos mata? ¿Todos los que en este navío vamos, no somos amigos? ¿No son todos los más vasallos y criados míos? ¿El cielo no está claro y sereno, el mar tranquilo y blando, y el bajel, sin tocar en escollo ni en bajío, no navega? ¿Hay alguna rémora que nos detenga? Pues si no hay nada desto, ¿de qué temes, que así con tus sobresaltos nos atemorizas?

-No sé -replicó Mauricio-. Haz, señor, que bajen los búzanos a la sentina, que si no es sueño, a mí me parece que nos vamos anegando.

No hubo bien acabado esta razón, cuando cuatro o seis marineros se dejaron calar al fondo del navío y le requirieron todo, porque eran famosos buzanos, y no hallaron costura alguna por donde entrase agua al navío; y, vueltos a la cubierta, dijeron que el navío iba sano y entero, y que el agua de la sentina estaba turbia y hedionda, señal clara de que no entraba agua nueva en la nave.

-Así debe de ser -dijo Mauricio-, sino que yo, como viejo, en quien el temor tiene su asiento de ordinario, hasta los sueños me espantan; y plega a Dios que este mi sueño lo sea, que yo me holgaría de parecer viejo temeroso antes que verdadero judicario.

Arnaldo le dijo:

-Sosegaos, buen Mauricio, porque vuestros sueños le quitan a estas señoras.

-Yo lo haré así, si puedo -respondió Mauricio.

Y, tornándose a echar sobre la cubierta, quedó el navío lleno de muy sosegado silencio, en el cual Rutilio, que iba sentado al pie del árbol mayor, convidado de la serenidad de la noche, de la comodidad del tiempo, o de la voz, que la tenía estremada, al son del viento, que dulcemente hería en las velas, en su propia lengua toscana, comenzó a cantar esto, que, vuelto en lengua española, así decía:

Huye el rigor de la invencible mano, advertido, y enciérrese en el arca de todo el mundo el general monarca con las reliquias del linaje humano.

El dilatado asilo, el soberano 5
lugar rompe los fueros de la Parca, que entonces, fiera y licenciosa, abarca cuanto alienta y respira el aire vano.

Vense en la excelsa máquina encerrarse el león y el cordero, y, en segura 10 paz, la paloma al fiero halcón unida;

sin ser milagro, lo discorde amarse, que en el común peligro y desventura la natural inclinación se olvida.

El que mejor entendió lo que cantó Rutilio fue el bárbaro Antonio, el cual le dijo asimismo:

-Bien canta Rutilio, y si por ventura es suyo el soneto que ha cantado, no es mal poeta, aunque ¿cómo lo puede ser bueno un oficial? Pero no digo bien, que yo me acuerdo haber visto en mi patria, España, poetas de todos los oficios.

Esto dijo en voz que la oyó Mauricio, el príncipe y Periandro, que no dormían. Y Mauricio dijo:

-Posible cosa es que un oficial sea poeta, porque la poesía no está en las manos, sino en el entendimiento, y tan capaz es el alma del sastre para ser poeta como la de un maese de campo; porque las almas todas son iguales y de una misma masa en sus principios criadas y formadas por su Hacedor; y, según la caja y temperamento del cuerpo donde las encierra, así parecen ellas más o menos discretas, y atienden y se aficionan a saber las ciencias, artes o habilidades a que las estrellas más las inclinan; pero más principalmente y propia se dice que el poeta nascitur. Así que, no hay qué admirar de que Rutilio sea poeta, aunque haya sido maestro de danzar.

-Y tan grande -replicó Antonio-que ha hecho cabriolas en el aire más arriba de las nubes.

-Así es -respondió Rutilio, que todo esto estaba escuchando-, que yo las hice casi junto al cielo, cuando me trajo caballero en el manto aquella hechicera desde Toscana, mi patria, hasta Noruega, donde la maté, que se había convertido en figura de loba, como ya otras veces he contado.

-Eso de convertirse en lobas y lobos algunas gentes destas setentrionales es un error grandísimo -dijo Mauricio-, aunque admitido de muchos.

-Pues, ¿cómo es esto -dijo Arnaldo-que comúnmente se dice y se tiene por cierto que en Inglaterra andan por los campos manadas de lobos, que de gentes humanas se han convertido en ellos?

-Eso -respondió Mauricio-no puede ser en Inglaterra, porque en aquella isla templada y fertilísima no sólo no se crían lobos, pero ninguno otro animal nocivo: como si dijésemos serpientes, víboras, sapos, arañas y escorpiones; antes es cosa llana y manifiesta que si algún animal ponzoñoso traen de otras partes a Inglaterra, en llegando a ella muere; y si de la tierra desta isla llevan a otra parte a alguna tierra y cercan con ella a alguna víbora, no osa ni puede salir del cerco que la aprisiona y rodea, hasta quedar muerta. Lo que se ha de entender desto de convertirse en lobos es que hay una enfermedad a quien llaman los médicos manía lupina, que es de calidad que al que la padece le parece que se ha convertido en lobo, y aulla como lobo, y se juntan con otros heridos del mismo mal, y andan en manadas por los campos y por los montes, ladrando ya como perros, o ya aullando como lobos; despedazan los árboles, matan a quien encuentran y comen la carne cruda de los muertos, y hoy día sé yo que hay en la isla de Sicilia, que es la mayor del mar Mediterráneo, gentes deste género, a quien los sicilianos llaman lobos menar, los cuales, antes que les dé tan pestífera enfermedad, lo sienten, y dicen a los que están junto a ellos que se aparten y huyan dellos, o que los aten o encierren, porque si no se guardan, los hacen pedazos a bocados y los desmenuzan, si pueden, con las uñas, dando terribles y espantosos ladridos. Y es esto tanta verdad que, entre los que se han de casar, se hace información bastante de que ninguno dellos es tocado desta enfermedad; y si después, andando el tiempo, la experiencia muestra lo contrario, se dirime el matrimonio. También es opinión de Plinio, según lo escribe en el lib. 8, cap. 22, que entre los árcades hay un género de gente, la cual, pasando un lago, cuelga los vestidos que lleva de una encina, y se entra desnudo la tierra dentro, y se junta con la gente que allí halla de su linaje en figura de lobos, y está con ellos nueve años, al cabo de los cuales vuelve a pasar el lago, y cobra su perdida figura; pero todo esto se ha de tener por mentira, y si algo hay, pasa en la imaginación y no realmente.

-No sé -dijo Rutilio-, lo que sé es que maté la loba y hallé muerta a mis pies la hechicera.

-Todo eso puede ser -replicó Mauricio-, porque la fuerza de los hechizos de los maléficos y encantadores, que los hay, nos hace ver una cosa por otra; y quede desde aquí asentado que no hay gente alguna que mude en otra su primer naturaleza.

-Gusto me ha dado grande -dijo Arnaldo-el saber esta verdad, porque también yo era uno de los crédulos deste error; y lo mismo debe de ser lo que las fábulas cuentan de la conversión en cuervo del rey Artus de Inglaterra, tan creída de aquella discreta nación, que se abstienen de matar cuervos en toda la isla.

-No sé -respondió Mauricio-de dónde tomó principio esa fábula tan creída como mal imaginada.

En esto fueron razonando casi toda la noche, y al despuntar del día dijo Clodio, que hasta allí había estado oyendo y callando:

-Yo soy un hombre a quien no se le da por averiguar estas cosas un dinero. ¿Qué se me da a mí que haya lobos hombres, o no, o que los reyes anden en figuras de cuervos o de águilas? Aunque, si se hubiesen de convertir en aves, antes querría que fuesen en palomas que en milanos.

-Paso, Clodio, no digas mal de los reyes, que me parece que te quieres dar algún filo a la lengua para cortarles el crédito.

-No -respondió Clodio-, que el castigo me ha puesto una mordaza en la boca, o por mejor decir, en la lengua, que no consiente que la mueva; y así, antes pienso de aquí adelante reventar callando que alegrarme hablando. Los dichos agudos, las murmuraciones dilatadas, si a unos alegran, a otros entristecen. Contra el callar no hay castigo ni respuesta. Vivir quiero en paz los días que me quedan de la vida a la sombra de tu generoso amparo, puesto que por momentos me fatigan ciertos ímpetus maliciosos que me hacen bailar la lengua en la boca, y malográrseme entre los dientes más de cuatro verdades que andan por salir a la plaza del mundo. ¡Sírvasse Dios con todo!

A lo que dijo Auristela:

-De estimar es, ¡oh Clodio!, el sacrificio que haces al cielo de tu silencio.

Rosamunda, que era una de las llegadas a la conversación, volviéndose a Auristela, dijo:

-El día que Clodio fuere callado, seré yo buena, porque en mí la torpeza, y en él la murmuración, son naturales, puesto que más esperanza puedo yo tener de enmendarme que no él, porque la hermosura se envejece con los años, y, faltando la belleza, menguan los torpes deseos, pero sobre la lengua del maldiciente no tiene jurisdicción el tiempo. Y así, los ancianos murmuradores hablan más cuanto más viejos, porque han visto más, y todos los gustos de los otros sentidos los han cifrado y recogido a la lengua.

-Todo es malo -dijo Transila-: cada cual por su camino va a parar a su perdición.

-El que nosotros ahora hacemos -dijo Ladislao-, próspero y felice ha de ser, según el viento se muestra favorable y el mar tranquilo.

-Así se mostraba esta pasada noche -dijo la bárbara Constanza-, pero el sueño del señor Mauricio nos puso en confusión, y alborotó tanto que ya yo pensé que nos había sorbido el mar a todos.

-En verdad, señora -respondió Mauricio-, que si yo no estuviera enseñado en la verdad católica, y me acordara de lo que dice Dios en el Levítico: «No seáis agoreros, ni deis crédito a los sueños», porque no a todos es dado el entenderlos, que me atreviera a juzgar del sueño que me puso en tan gran sobresalto, el cual, según a mi parecer, no me vino por algunas de las causas de donde suelen proceder los sueños, que, cuando no son revelaciones divinas o ilusiones del demonio, proceden, o de los muchos manjares que suben vapores al cerebro, con que turban el sentido común, o ya de aquello que el hombre trata más de día. Ni el sueño que a mí me turbó cae debajo de la observación de la astrología, porque sin guardar puntos ni observar astros, señalar rumbos ni mirar imágenes, me pareció ver visiblemente que en un gran palacio de madera, donde estábamos todos los que aquí vamos, llovían rayos del cielo que le abrían todo, y por las bocas que hacían descargaban las nubes, no sólo un mar, sino mil mares de agua; de tal manera que, creyendo que me iba anegando, comencé a dar voces y a hacer los mismos ademanes que suele hacer el que se anega; y aun no estoy tan libre deste temor que no me queden algunas reliquias en el alma; y, como sé que no hay más cierta astrología que la prudencia, de quien nacen los acertados discursos, ¿qué mucho que, yendo navegando en un navío de madera, tema rayos del cielo, nubes del aire y aguas de la mar? Pero lo que más me confunde y suspende es que, si algún daño nos amenaza, no ha de ser de ningún elemento que destinada y precisamente se disponga a ello, sino de una traición, forjada, como ya otra vez he dicho, en algunos lascivos pechos.

-No me puedo persuadir -dijo a esta sazón Arnaldo- que entre los que van por el mar navegando puedan entremeterse las blanduras de Venus ni los apetitos de su torpe hijo: al casto amor bien se le permite andar entre los peligros de la muerte, guardándose para mejor vida.

Esto dijo Arnaldo, por dar a entender a Auristela y a Periandro, y a todos aquellos que sus deseos conocían, cuán ajustados iban sus movimientos con los de la razón.

Y prosiguió diciendo:

-El príncipe, justa razón es que viva seguro entre sus vasallos, que el temor de las traiciones nace de la injusta vida del príncipe.

-Así es -respondió Mauricio-, y aun es bien que así sea. Pero dejemos pasar este día, que si él da lugar a que llegue la noche sin sobresaltarnos, yo pediré y las daré albricias del buen suceso.

Iba el sol a esta sazón a ponerse en los brazos de Tetis, y el mar se estaba con el mismo sosiego que hasta allí había tenido; soplaba favorable el viento; por parte ninguna se descubrían celajes que turbasen los marineros; el cielo, la mar, el viento, todos juntos y cada uno de por sí, prometían felicísimo viaje, cuando el prudente Mauricio dijo en voz turbada y alta:

-¡Sin duda nos anegamos! ¡Anegámonos sin duda!

Capítulo diez y nueve del primero libro

Donde se da cuenta de lo que dos soldados hicieron, y la división de Periandro y Auristela

A CUYAS voces respondió Arnaldo:

-¿Cómo es esto? ¡Oh gran Mauricio! ¿Qué aguas nos sorben o qué mares nos tragan? ¿Qué olas nos embisten?

La respuesta que le dieron a Arnaldo fue ver salir debajo de la cubierta a un marinero despavorido, echando agua por la boca y por los ojos, diciendo con palabras turbadas y mal compuestas:

-Todo este navío se ha abierto por muchas partes, el mar se ha entrado en él tan a rienda suelta que presto le veréis sobre esta cubierta. Cada uno atienda a su salud y a la conservación de la vida. Acógete, ¡oh príncipe Arnaldo!, al esquife o a la barca, y lleva contigo las prendas que más estimas, antes que tomen entera posesión dellas estas amargas aguas.

Estancó en esto el navío, sin poderse mover, por el peso de las aguas, de quien ya estaba lleno. Amainó el piloto todas las velas de golpe, y todos, sobresaltados y temerosos, acudieron a buscar su remedio: el príncipe y Periandro fueron al esquife, y, arrojándole al mar, pusieron en él a Auristela, Transila, Ricla y a la bárbara Constanza, entre las cuales, viendo que no se acordaban della, se arrojó Rosamunda, y tras ella mandó Arnaldo entrase Mauricio.

En este tiempo andaban dos soldados descolgando la barca que al costado del navío venía asida, y el uno dellos, viendo que el otro quería ser el primero que entrase dentro, sacando un puñal de la cinta, se le envainó en el pecho, diciendo a voces:

-Pues nuestra culpa ha sido fabricada tan sin provecho, esta pena te sirva a ti de castigo y a mí de escarmiento; a lo menos el poco tiempo que me queda de vida.

Y, diciendo esto, sin querer aprovecharse del acogimiento que la barca les ofrecía, desesperadamente se arrojó al mar, diciendo a voces y con mal articuladas palabras:

-Oye, ¡oh Arnaldo!, la verdad que te dice este traidor, que en tal punto es bien que la diga: yo y aquel a quien me viste pasar el pecho por muchas partes abrimos y taladramos este navío, con intención de gozar de Auristela y de Transila, reconociéndolas en el esquife; pero, habiendo visto yo haber salido mi disinio contrario de mi pensamiento, a mi compañero quité la vida y a mí me doy la muerte.

Y con esta última palabra se dejó ir al fondo de las aguas, que le estorbaron la respiración del aire y le sepultaron en perpetuo silencio. Y, aunque todos andaban confusos y ocupados, buscando, como se ha dicho, en el común peligro algún remedio, no dejó de oír las razones Arnaldo del desesperado, y él y Periandro acudieron a la barca; y, habiendo, antes que entrasen en ella, ordenado que entrase en el esquife Antonio el mozo, sin acordarse de recoger algún bastimento, él, Ladislao, Antonio el padre, Periandro y Clodio se entraron en la barca, y fueron a abordar con el esquife, que algún tanto se había apartado del navío, sobre el cual ya pasaban las aguas, y no se parecía dél sino el árbol mayor, como en señal que allí estaba sepultado.

Llegóse en esto la noche, sin que la barca pudiese alcanzar al esquife, desde el cual daba voces Auristela, llamando a su hermano Periandro, que la respondía, reiterando muchas veces su para él dulcísimo nombre. Transila y Ladislao hacían lo mismo, y encontrábanse en los aires las voces de «dulcísimo esposo mío» y «amada esposa mía», donde se rompían sus disinios y se deshacían sus esperanzas, con la imposibilidad de no poder juntarse, a causa que la noche se cubría de escuridad y los vientos comenzaron a soplar de partes diferentes. En resolución, la barca se apartó del esquife, y, como más ligera y menos cargada, voló por donde el mar y el viento quisieron llevarla; el esquife, más con la pesadumbre que con la carga de los que en él iban, se quedó, como si aposta quisieran que no navegara. Pero, cuando la noche cerró con más escuridad que al principio, comenzaron a sentir de nuevo la desgracia sucedida: viéronse en mar no conocida, amenazados de todas las inclemencias del cielo, y faltos de la comodidad que les podía ofrecer la tierra; el esquife, sin remos y sin bastimentos, y la hambre sólo detenida de la pesadumbre que sintieron.

Mauricio, que había quedado por patrón y por marinero del esquife, ni tenía con qué ni sabía cómo guialle; antes, según los llantos, gemidos y suspiros de los que en él iban, podía temer que ellos mismos le anegarían; miraba las estrellas, y, aunque no parecían de todo en todo, algunas que por entre la escuridad se mostraban le daban indicio de venidera serenidad, pero no le mostraban en qué parte se hallaba.

No consintió el sentimiento que el sueño aliviase su angustia, porque se les pasó la noche velando, y se vino el día, no a más andar, como dicen, sino para más penar, porque con él descubrieron por todas partes el mar cerca y lejos, por ver si topaban los ojos con la barca que les llevaba las almas, o algún otro bajel que les prometiese ayuda y socorro en su necesidad; pero no descubrieron otra cosa que una isla a su mano izquierda, que juntamente los alegró y los entristeció: nació la alegría de ver cerca la tierra, y la tristeza, de la imposibilidad de poder llegar a ella, si ya el viento no los llevase. Mauricio era el que más confiaba de la salud de todos, por haber hallado, como se ha dicho, en la figura que como judicario había levantado, que aquel suceso no amenazaba muerte, sino descomodidades casi mortales.

Finalmente, el favor de los cielos se mezcló con los vientos, que poco a poco llevaron el esquife a la isla, y les dio lugar de tomarle en la tierra en una espaciosa playa no acompañada de gente alguna, sino de mucha cantidad de nieve que toda la cubría. Miserables son y temerosas las fortunas del mar, pues los que las padecen se huelgan de trocarlas con las mayores que en la tierra se les ofrezcan. La nieve de la desierta playa les pareció blanda arena, y la soledad compañía. Unos en brazos de otros desembarcaron: el mozo Antonio fue el Atlante de Auristela y de Transila, en cuyos hombros también desembarcaron Rosamunda y Mauricio, y todos se recogieron al abrigo de un peñón que no lejos de la playa se mostraba, habiendo antes, como mejor pudieron, varado el esquife en tierra, poniendo en él, después de en Dios, su esperanza.

Antonio, considerando que la hambre había de hacer su oficio y que ella había de ser bastante a quitarles las vidas, aprestó su arco, que siempre de las espaldas le colgaba, y dijo que él quería ir a descubrir la tierra, por ver si hallaba gente en ella o alguna caza que socorriese su necesidad. Vinieron todos con su parecer; y así, se entró con ligero paso por la isla, pisando, no tierra, sino nieve tan dura, por estar helada, que le parecía pisar sobre pedernales. Siguióle, sin que él lo echase de ver, la torpe Rosamunda, sin ser impedida de los demás, que creyeron que alguna natural necesidad la forzaba a dejallos. Volvió la cabeza Antonio a tiempo y en lugar donde nadie los podía ver, y, viendo junto a sí a Rosamunda, le dijo:

-La cosa de que menos necesidad tengo, en esta que agora padecemos, es la de tu compañía. ¿Qué quieres, Rosamunda? Vuélvete, que ni tú tienes armas con que matar género de caza alguna, ni yo podré acomodar el paso a esperarte. ¿Qué me sigues?

-¡Oh inesperto mozo -respondió la mujer torpe-, y cuán lejos estás de conocer la intención con que te sigo y la deuda que me debes!

Y en esto se llegó junto a él, y prosiguió diciendo:

-Ves aquí, ¡oh nuevo cazador, más hermoso que Apolo!, otra nueva Dafne que no te huye, sino que te sigue. No mires que ya a mi belleza la marchita el rigor de la edad, ligera siempre, sino considera en mí a la que fue Rosamunda, domadora de las cervices de los reyes y de la libertad de los más esentos hombres. Yo te adoro, generoso joven, y aquí, entre estos yelos y nieves, el amoroso fuego me está haciendo ceniza el corazón. Gocémonos, y tenme por tuya, que yo te llevaré a parte donde llenes las manos de tesoros, para ti, sin duda alguna, de mí recogidos y guardados si llegamos a Inglaterra, donde mil bandos de muerte tienen amenazada mi vida. Escondido te llevaré adonde te entregues en más oro que tuvo Midas y en más riquezas que acumuló Craso.

Aquí dio fin a su plática, pero no al movimiento de sus manos, que arremetieron a detener las de Antonio, que de sí las apartaba, y entre esta tan honesta como torpe contienda decía Antonio:

-¡Detente, oh arpía! ¡No turbes ni afees las limpias mesas de Fineo! ¡No fuerces, oh bárbara egipcia, ni incites la castidad y limpieza deste que no es tu esclavo! ¡Tarázate la lengua, sierpe maldita, no pronuncies con deshonestas palabras lo que tienes escondido en tus deshonestos deseos! ¡Mira el poco lugar que nos queda desde este punto al de la muerte, que nos está amenazando con la hambre y con la incertidumbre de la salida deste lugar, que, puesto que fuera cierta, con otra intención la acompañara que con la que me has descubierto! ¡Desvíate de mí y no me sigas, que castigaré tu atrevimiento y publicaré tu locura! Si te vuelves, mudaré propósito, y pondré en silencio tu desvergüenza; si no me dejas, te quitaré la vida.

Oyendo lo cual la lasciva Rosamunda, se le cubrió el corazón, de manera que no dio lugar a suspiros, a ruegos ni a lágrimas. Dejóla Antonio, sagaz y advertido. Volvióse Rosamunda, y él siguió su camino; pero no halló en él cosa que le asegurase, porque las nieves eran muchas y los caminos ásperos, y la gente ninguna. Y, advirtiéndole que si adelante pasaba, podía perder el camino de vuelta, se volvió a juntar con la compañía; alzaron todos las manos al cielo, y pusieron los ojos en la tierra, como admirados de su desventura. A Mauricio dijeron que volvieran al mar el esquife, pues no era posible remediarse en la imposibilidad y soledad de la isla.

Capítulo veinte

De un notable caso que sucedió en la Isla Nevada

A POCO tiempo que pasó el día, desde lejos vieron venir una nave gruesa que les levantó las esperanzas de tener remedio. Amainó las velas, y pareció que se dejaba detener las áncoras, y con diligencia presta arrojaron el esquife a la mar, y se vinieron a la playa, donde ya los tristes se arrojaban al esquife. Auristela dijo que sería bien que aguardasen los que venían, por saber quién eran.

Llegó el esquife de la nave y encalló en la fría nieve, y saltaron en ella dos, al parecer, gallardos y fuertes mancebos, de estremada disposición y brío, los cuales sacaron encima de sus hombros a una hermosísima doncella, tan sin fuerzas y tan desmayada, que parecía que no le daba lugar para llegar a tocar la tierra. Llamaron a voces los que estaban ya embarcados en el otro esquife, y les suplicaron que se desembarcasen a ser testigos de un suceso que era menester que los tuviese. Respondió Mauricio que no había remos para encaminar el esquife, si no les prestaban los del suyo. Los marineros con los suyos guiaron los del otro esquife, y volvieron a pisar la nieve; luego los valientes jóvenes asieron de dos tablachinas, con que cubrieron los pechos, y con dos cortadoras espadas en los brazos saltaron de nuevo en tierra. Auristela, llena de sobresalto y temor, casi con certidumbre de algún nuevo mal, acudió a ver la desmayada y hermosa doncella, y lo mismo hicieron todos los demás.

Los caballeros dijeron:

-Esperad, señores, y estad atentos a lo que queremos deciros.

-Este caballero y yo -dijo el uno-tenemos concertado de pelear por la posesión de esa enferma doncella que ahí veis; la muerte ha de dar la sentencia en favor del otro, sin que haya otro medio alguno que ataje en ninguna manera nuestra amorosa pendencia, si ya no es que ella, de su voluntad, ha de escoger cuál de nosotros dos ha de ser su esposo, con que hará envainar nuestras espadas y sosegar nuestros espíritus. Lo que pedimos es que no estorbéis en manera alguna nuestra porfía, la cual lleváramos hasta el cabo, sin tener temor que nadie nos la estorbara, si no os hubiéramos menester para que miráades. Si estas soledades pueden ofrecer algún remedio para dilatar siquiera la vida de esa doncella, que es tan poderosa para acabar las nuestras, la priesa que nos obliga a dar conclusión a nuestro negocio no nos da lugar para preguntaros por agora quién sois ni cómo estáis en este lugar tan solo, y tan sin remos, que no los tenéis, según parece, para desviaros desta isla tan sola, que aun de animales no es habitada.

Mauricio les respondió que no saldrían un punto de lo que querían; y luego echaron los dos mano a las espadas, sin querer que la enferma doncella declarase primero su voluntad, remitiendo antes su pendencia a las armas que a los deseos de la dama. Arremetieron el uno contra el otro, y, sin mirar reglas, movimientos, entradas, salidas y compases, a los primeros golpes el uno quedó pasado el corazón de parte a parte, y el otro abierta la cabeza por medio; éste le concedió el cielo tanto espacio de vida que le tuvo de llegar a la doncella y juntar su rostro con el suyo, diciéndole:

-¡Vencí, señora; mía eres! Y, aunque ha de durar poco el bien de poseerte, el pensar que un solo instante te podré tener por mía, me tengo por el más venturoso hombre del mundo. Recibe, señora, esta alma, que envuelta en estos últimos alientos te envío; dales lugar en tu pecho, sin que pidas licencia a tu honestidad, pues el nombre de esposo a todo esto da licencia.

La sangre de la herida bañó el rostro de la dama, la cual estaba tan sin sentido que no respondió palabra. Los dos marineros que habían guiado el esquife de la nave saltaron en tierra, y fueron con presteza a requerir, así al muerto de la estocada como al herido en la cabeza, el cual, puesta su boca con la de su tan caramente comprada esposa, envió su alma a los aires y dejó caer el cuerpo sobre la tierra.

Auristela, que todas estas acciones había estado mirando, antes de descubrir y mirar atentamente el rostro de la enferma señora, llegó de propósito a mirarla, y, limpiándole la sangre que había llovido del muerto enamorado, conoció ser su doncella Taurisa, la que lo había sido al tiempo que ella estuvo en poder del príncipe Arnaldo, que le había dicho la dejaba en poder de dos caballeros que la llevasen a Irlanda, como queda dicho. Auristela quedó suspensa, quedó atónita, quedó más triste que la tristeza misma, y más cuando vino a conocer que la hermosa Taurisa estaba sin vida.

-¡Ay -dijo a esta sazón-, con qué prodigiosas señales me va mostrando el cielo mi desventura, que si se rematara con acabarse mi vida, pudiera llamarla dichosa; que los males que tienen fin en la muerte, como no se dilaten y entretengan, hacen dichosa la vida! ¿Qué red barredera es ésta con que cogen los cielos todos los caminos de mi descanso? ¿Qué imposibles son estos que descubro a cada paso de mi remedio? Mas, pues aquí son escusados los llantos y son de ningún provecho los gemidos, demos el tiempo que he de gastar en ellos por ahora a la piedad, y enterremos los muertos, y no congoje yo por mi parte los vivos.

Y luego pidió a Mauricio pidiese a los marineros del esquife volviesen al navío por instrumentos para hacer las sepulturas. Hízolo así Mauricio, y fue a la nave con intención de concertarse con el piloto o capitán que hubiese para que los sacase de aquella isla y los llevase adondequiera que fuesen. En este entretanto, tuvieron lugar Auristela y Transila de acomodar a Taurisa para enterralla, y la piedad y honestidad cristiana no consintió que la desnudasen.

Volvió Mauricio con los instrumentos, habiendo negociado todo aquello que quiso. Hízose la sepultura de Taurisa; pero los marineros no quisieron, como católicos, que se hiciese ninguna a los muertos en el desafío. Rosamunda, que, después que volvió de haber declarado su mal pensamiento al bárbaro Antonio, nunca había alzado los ojos del suelo, que sus pecados se los tenían aterrados, al tiempo que iban a sepultar a Taurisa, levantando el rostro, dijo:

-Si os preciáis, señores, de caritativos, y si anda en vuestros pechos al par la justicia y la misericordia, usad destas dos virtudes conmigo. Yo desde el punto que tuve uso de razón, no la tuve, porque siempre fui mala: con los años verdes y con la hermosura mucha, con la libertad demasiada y con la riqueza abundante, se fueron apoderando de mí los vicios de tal manera que han sido y son en mí como accidentes inseparables. Ya sabéis, como yo alguna vez he dicho, que he tenido el pie sobre las cervices de los reyes, y he traído a la mano que he querido las voluntades de los hombres; pero el tiempo, salteador y robador de la humana belleza de las mujeres, se entró por la mía tan sin yo pensarlo que primero me he visto fea que desengañada. Mas, como los vicios tienen asiento en el alma, que no envejece, no quieren dejarme; y, como yo no les hago resistencia, sino que me dejo ir con la corriente de mis gustos, heme ido ahora con el que me da el ver siquiera a este bárbaro muchacho, el cual, aunque le he descubierto mi voluntad, no corresponde a la mía, que es de fuego, con la suya, que es de helada nieve. Véome despreciada y aborrecida, en lugar de estimada y bien querida: golpes que no se pueden resistir con poca paciencia y con mucho deseo. Ya ya la muerte me va pisando las faldas, y estiende la mano para alcanzarme de la vida; por lo que veis que debe la bondad del pecho que la tiene al miserable que se le encomienda, os suplico que cubráis mi fuego con yelo y me enterréis en esa sepultura; que, puesto que mezcléis mis lascivos huesos con los de esa casta doncella, no los contaminarán; que las reliquias buenas siempre lo son dondequiera que estén.

Y, volviéndose al mozo Antonio, prosiguió:

-Y tú, arrogante mozo, que agora tocas o estás para tocar los márgenes y rayas del deleite, pide al cielo que te encamine de modo que ni te solicite edad larga, ni marchita belleza; y si yo he ofendido tus recientes oídos, que así los puedo llamar, con mis inadvertidas y no castas palabras, perdóname, que los que piden perdón en este trance, por cortesía siquiera merecen ser, si no perdonados, a lo menos escuchados.

Esto diciendo, dio un suspiro envuelto en un mortal desmayo.

Capítulo veinte y uno del primer libro de Los Trabajos de Persiles y Sigismunda

-YO NO SÉ -dijo Mauricio a esta sazón-qué quiere este que llaman amor por estas montañas, por estas soledades y riscos, por entre estas nieves y yelos, dejándose allá los Pafos, Gnidos, las Cipres, los Elíseos Campos, de quien huye la hambre y no llega incomodidad alguna. En el corazón sosegado, en el ánimo quieto tiene el amor deleitable su morada, que no en las lágrimas ni en los sobresaltos.

Auristela, Transila, Constanza y Ricla quedaron atónitas del suceso, y con callar le admiraron, y, finalmente, con no pocas lágrimas enterraron a Taurisa; y, después de haber vuelto Rosamunda del pesado desmayo, se recogieron y embarcaron en el esquife de la nave, donde fueron bien recibidos y regalados de los que en ella estaban, satisfaciendo luego todos la hambre que les aquejaba; sólo Rosamunda, que estaba tal, que por momentos llamaba a las puertas de la muerte. Alzaron velas, lloraron algunos los capitanes muertos, y instituyeron luego uno que lo fuese de todos, y siguieron su viaje, sin llevar parte conocida donde le encaminasen, porque era de cosarios, y no irlandeses, como a Arnaldo le habían dicho, sino de una isla rebelada contra Inglaterra.

Mauricio, malcontento de aquella compañía, siempre iba temiendo algún revés de su acelerada costumbre y mal modo de vivir; y, como viejo y experimentado en las cosas del mundo, no le cabía el corazón en el pecho, temiendo que la mucha hermosura de Auristela, la gallardía y buen parecer de su hija Transila, los pocos años y nuevo traje de Constanza no despertasen en aquellos cosarios algún mal pensamiento. Servíales de Argos el mozo Antonio, de lo que sirvió el pastor de Anfriso. Eran los ojos de los dos centinelas no dormidas, pues por sus cuartos la hacían a las mansas y hermosas ovejuelas que debajo de su solicitud y vigilancia se amparaban.

Rosamunda, con los continuos desdenes, vino a enflaquecer de manera que una noche la hallaron en una cámara del navío sepultada en perpetuo silencio. Harto habían llorado, mas no dejaron de sentir su muerte, compasiva y cristianamente. Sirvióla el ancho mar de sepultura, donde no tuvo harta agua para apagar el fuego que causó en su pecho el gallardo Antonio, el cual y todos rogaron muchas veces a los cosarios que los llevasen de una vez a Irlanda, o a Ibernía, si ya no quisiesen a Inglaterra o Escocia. Pero ellos respondían que, hasta haber hecho una buena y rica presa, no habían de tocar en tierra alguna, si ya no fuese a hacer agua o a tomar bastimentos necesarios. La bárbara Ricla bien comprara a pedazos de oro que los llevaran a Inglaterra, pero no osaba descubrirlos, porque no se los robasen antes que se los pidiesen. Dioles el capitán estancia aparte, y acomodóles de manera que les aseguró de la insolencia que podían temer de los soldados.

Desta manera anduvieron casi tres meses por el mar de unas partes a otras; ya tocaban en una isla, ya en otra, y ya se salían al mar descubierto, propia costumbre de cosarios, que buscan su ganancia. Las veces que había calma y el mar sosegado no les dejaba navegar, el nuevo capitán del navío se iba a entretener a la estancia de sus pasajeros, y con pláticas discretas y cuentos graciosos, pero siempre honestos, los entretenía, y Mauricio hacía lo mismo. Auristela, Transila, Ricla y Constanza más se ocupaban en pensar en la ausencia de las mitades de su alma que en escuchar al capitán ni a Mauricio. Con todo esto, estuvieron un día atentas a la historia que en este siguiente capítulo se cuenta que el capitán les dijo.

Capítulo veinte y dos

Donde el capitán da cuenta de las grandes fiestas que acostumbraba a hacer en su reino el rey Policarpo

-«UNA DE LAS ISLAS que están junto a la de Ibernía me dio el cielo por patria; es tan grande que toma nombre de reino, el cual no se hereda ni viene por sucesión de padre a hijo: sus moradores le eligen a su beneplácito, procurando siempre que sea el más virtuoso y mejor hombre que en él se hallara; y sin intervenir de por medio ruegos o negociaciones, y sin que los soliciten promesas ni dádivas, de común consentimiento de todos sale el rey y toma el cetro absoluto del mando, el cual le dura mientras le dura la vida o mientras no se empeora en ella. Y, con esto, los que no son reyes procuran ser virtuosos para serlo, y los que lo son, pugnan serlo más, para no dejar de ser reyes. Con esto se cortan las alas a la ambición, se atierra la codicia, y, aunque la hipocresía suele andar lista, a largo andar se le cae la máscara y queda sin el alcanzado premio; con esto los pueblos viven quietos, campea la justicia y resplandece la misericordia, despáchanse con brevedad los memoriales de los pobres, y los que dan los ricos, no por serlo son mejor despachados; no agobian la vara de la justicia las dádivas, ni la carne y sangre de los parentescos; todas las negociaciones guardan sus puntos y andan en sus quicios; finalmente, reino es donde se vive sin temor de los insolentes y donde cada uno goza lo que es suyo.

»Esta costumbre, a mi parecer justa y santa, puso el cetro del reino en las manos de Policarpo, varón insigne y famoso, así en las armas como en las letras, el cual tenía, cuando vino a ser rey, dos hijas de estremada belleza, la mayor llamada Policarpa y la menor Sinforosa; no tenían madre, que no les hizo falta, cuando murió, sino en la compañía: que sus virtudes y agradables costumbres eran ayas de sí mismas, dando maravilloso ejemplo a todo el reino. Con estas buenas partes, así ellas como el padre, se hacían amables, se estimaban de todos. Los reyes, por parecerles que la malencolía en los vasallos suele despertar malos pensamientos, procuran tener alegre el pueblo y entretenido con fiestas públicas, y a veces con ordinarias comedias; principalmente solenizaban el día que fueron asumptos al reino, con hacer que se renovasen los juegos que los gentiles llamaban olímpicos, en el mejor modo que podían. Señalaban premio a los corredores, honraban a los diestros, coronaban a los tiradores y subían al cielo de la alabanza a los que derribaban a otros en la tierra.

»Hacíase este espectáculo junto a la marina, en una espaciosa playa, a quien quitaban el sol infinita cantidad de ramos entretejidos, que la dejaban a la sombra; ponían en la mitad un suntuoso teatro, en el cual sentado el rey y la real familia, miraban los apacibles juegos. Llegóse un día destos, y Policarpo procuró aventajarse en magnificencia y grandeza en solenizarle sobre todos cuantos hasta allí se habían hecho. Y, cuando ya el teatro estaba ocupado con su persona y con los mejores del reino, y cuando ya los instrumentos bélicos y los apacibles querían dar señal que las fiestas se comenzasen, y cuando ya cuatro corredores, mancebos ágiles y sueltos, tenían los pies izquierdos delante y los derechos alzados, que no les impedía otra cosa el soltarse a la carrera, sino soltar una cuerda que les servía de raya y de señal, que, en soltándola, habían de volar a un término señalado, donde habían de dar fin a su carrera; digo que en este tiempo vieron venir por la mar un barco que le blanqueaban los costados el ser recién despalmado, y le facilitaban el romper del agua seis remos que de cada banda traía, impelidos de doce, al parecer, gallardos mancebos de dilatadas espaldas y pechos y de nervudos brazos. Venían vestidos de blanco todos, si no el que guiaba el timón, que venía de encarnado como marinero. Llegó con furia el barco a la orilla, y el encallar en ella y el saltar todos los que en él venían en tierra fue una misma cosa. Mandó Policarpo que no saliesen a la carrera, hasta saber qué gente era aquélla y a lo que venía, puesto que imaginó que debían de venir a hallarse en las fiestas y a probar su gallardía en los juegos. El primero que se adelantó a hablar al rey fue el que servía de timonero, mancebo de poca edad, cuyas mejillas desembarazadas y limpias mostraban ser de nieve y de grana; los cabellos, anillos de oro; y cada una parte de las del rostro tan perfecta, y todas juntas tan hermosas, que formaban un compuesto admirable; luego la hermosa presencia del mozo arrebató la vista, y aun los corazones, de cuantos le miraron, y yo desde luego le quedé aficionadísimo.

»Lo que dijo al rey: "Señor, estos mis compañeros y yo, habiendo tenido noticia destos juegos, venimos a servirte y hallarnos en ellos, y no de lejas tierras, sino desde una nave que dejamos en la isla Scinta, que no está lejos de aquí; y, como el viento no hizo a nuestro propósito para encaminar aquí la nave, nos aprovechamos de esta barca y de los remos, y de la fuerza de nuestros brazos. Todos somos nobles y deseosos de ganar honra, y, por la que debes hacer, como rey que eres, a los extranjeros que a tu presencia llegan, te suplicamos nos concedas licencia para mostrar, o nuestras fuerzas, o nuestros ingenios, en honra y provecho nuestro y gusto tuyo". "Por cierto -respondió Policarpo-, agraciado joven, que vos pedís lo que queréis con tanta gracia y cortesía que sería cosa injusta el negároslo. Honrad mis fiestas en lo que quisiéredes, dejadme a mí el cargo de premiároslo; que, según vuestra gallarda

»Dobló la rodilla el hermoso mancebo y inclinó la cabeza en señal de crianza y agradecimiento, y en dos brincos se puso ante la cuerda que detenía a los cuatro ligeros corredores; sus doce compañeros se pusieron a un lado a ser espectadores de la carrera. Sonó una trompeta, soltaron la cuerda y arrojáronse al vuelo los cinco; pero aún no habrían dado veinte pasos, cuando con más de seis se les aventajó el recién venido, y a los treinta ya los llevaba de ventaja más de quince; finalmente, se los dejó a poco más de la mitad del camino, como si fueran estatuas inmovibles, con admiración de todos los circunstantes, especialmente de Sinforosa, que le seguía con la vista, así corriendo como estando quedo, porque la belleza y agilidad del mozo era bastante para llevar tras sí las voluntades, no sólo los ojos de cuantos le miraban. Noté yo esto, porque tenía los míos atentos a mirar a Policarpa, objeto dulce de mis deseos, y, de camino, miraba los movimientos de Sinforosa. Comenzó luego la envidia a apoderarse de los pechos de los que se habían de probar en los juegos, viendo con cuánta facilidad se había llevado el extranjero el precio de la carrera.

»Fue el segundo certamen el de la esgrima: tomó el ganancioso la espada negra, con la cual, a seis que le salieron, cada uno de por sí, les cerró las bocas, mosqueó las narices, les selló los ojos y les santiguó las cabezas, sin que a él le tocasen, como decirse suele, un pelo de la ropa. Alzó la voz el pueblo, y de común consentimiento le dieron el premio primero. Luego se acomodaron otros seis a la lucha, donde con mayor gallardía dio de sí muestra el mozo; descubrió sus dilatadas espaldas, sus anchos y fortísimos pechos, y los nervios y músculos de sus fuertes brazos, con los cuales, y con destreza y maña increíble, hizo que las espaldas de los seis luchadores, a despecho y pesar suyo, quedasen impresas en la tierra.

»Pusiéronle luego la ballesta en las manos y algunas flechas, y mostráronle un árbol muy alto y muy liso, al cabo del cual estaba hincada una media lanza, y en ella, de un hilo, estaba asida una paloma, a la cual habían de tirar no más de un tiro los que en aquel certamen quisiesen probarse. Uno que presumía de certero se adelantó y tomó la mano -creo yo-, pensando derribar la paloma antes que otro; tiró, y clavó su flecha casi en el fin de la lanza, del cual golpe azorada la paloma se levantó en el aire; y luego otro, no menos presumido que el primero, tiró con tan gentil certería que rompió el hilo donde estaba asida la paloma, que, suelta y libre del lazo que la detenía, entregó su libertad al viento y batió las alas con priesa. Pero el ya acostumbrado a ganar los primeros premios disparó su flecha, y, como si mandara lo que había de hacer y ella tuviera entendimiento para obedecerle, así lo hizo, pues, dividiendo el aire con un rasgado y tendido silbo, llegó a la paloma y le pasó el corazón de parte a parte, quitándole a un mismo punto el vuelo y la vida. Renováronse con esto las voces de los presentes y las alabanzas del extranjero, el cual en la carrera, en la esgrima, en la lucha, en la barra y en el tirar de la ballesta, y entre otras muchas pruebas que no cuento, con grandísimas ventajas se llevó los primeros premios, quitando el trabajo a sus compañeros de probarse en ellas.

»Cuando se acabaron los juegos, sería el crepúsculo de la noche; y, cuando el rey Policarpo quería levantarse de su asiento con los jueces que con él estaban para premiar al vencedor mancebo, vio que, puesto de rodillas ante él, le dijo: "Nuestra nave quedó sola y desamparada, la noche cierra algo oscura, los premios que puedo esperar, que por ser de tu mano se deben estimar en lo posible, quiero, ¡oh gran señor!, que los dilates hasta otro tiempo, que con más espacio y comodidad pienso volver a servirte". Abrazóle el rey, preguntóle su nombre, y dijo que se llamaba Periandro. Quitóse en esto la bella Sinforosa una guirnalda de flores con que adornaba su hermosísima cabeza, y la puso sobre la del gallardo mancebo, y con honesta gracia le dijo al ponérsela: "Cuando mi padre sea tan venturoso de que volváis a verle, veréis cómo no vendréis a servirle, sino a ser servido".»

Capítulo veinte y tres

De lo que sucedió a la celosa Auristela cuando supo que su hermano Periandro era el que había ganado los premios del certamen

¡OH PODEROSA fuerza de los celos! ¡Oh enfermedad, que te pegas al alma de tal manera que sólo te despegas con la vida! ¡Oh hermosísima Auristela! ¡Detente: no te precipites a dar lugar en tu imaginación a esta rabiosa dolencia! Pero, ¿quién podrá tener a raya los pensamientos, que suelen ser tan ligeros y sutiles que, como no tienen cuerpo, pasan las murallas, traspasan los pechos y veen lo más escondido de las almas?

Esto se ha dicho porque, en oyendo pronunciar Auristela el nombre de Periandro, su hermano, y habiendo oído antes las alabanzas de Sinforosa y el favor que en ponerle la guirnalda le había hecho, rindió el sufrimiento a las sospechas y entregó la paciencia a los gemidos, y, dando un gran suspiro y abrazándose con Transila, dijo:

-Querida amiga mía, ruega al cielo que, sin haberse perdido tu esposo Ladislao, se pierda mi hermano Periandro. ¿No le ves en la boca deste valeroso capitán, honrado como vencedor, coronado como valeroso, atento más a los favores de una doncella que a los cuidados que le debían dar los destierros y pasos desta su hermana? ¿Ándase buscando palmas y trofeos por las tierras ajenas, y déjase entre los riscos y entre las peñas y entre las montañas que suele levantar la mar alterada, a esta su hermana, que por su consejo y por su gusto no hay peligro de muerte donde no se halle?

Estas razones escuchaba atentísimamente el capitán del navío, y no sabía qué conclusión sacar de ellas. Sólo paró en decir, pero no dijo nada, porque en un instante y en un momentáneo punto le arrebató la palabra de la boca un viento, que se levantó tan súbito y tan recio que le hizo poner en pie, sin responder a Auristela, y dando voces a los marineros que amainasen las velas y las templasen y asegurasen. Acudió toda la gente a la faena; comenzó la nave a volar en popa, con mar tendido y largo por donde el viento quiso llevarla.

Recogióse Mauricio con los de su compañía a su estancia, por dejar hacer libremente su oficio a los marineros. Allí preguntó Transila a Auristela qué sobresalto era aquel que tal la había puesto, que a ella le había parecido haberle causado el haber oído nombrar el nombre de Periandro, y no sabía por qué las alabanzas y buenos sucesos de un hermano pudiesen dar pesadumbre.

-¡Ay amiga! -respondió Auristela-, de tal manera estoy obligada a tener en perpetuo silencio una peregrinación que hago, que hasta darle fin, aunque primero llegue el de la vida, soy forzada a guardarle. En sabiendo quién soy, que sí sabrás si el cielo quiere, verás las disculpas de mis sobresaltos; sabiendo la causa de do nacen, verás castos pensamientos acometidos, pero no turbados; verás desdichas sin ser buscadas, y laberintos que, por venturas no imaginadas, han tenido salida de sus enredos. ¿Ves cuán grande es el nudo del parentesco de un hermano?, pues sobre éste tengo yo otro mayor con Periandro. ¿Ves ansimismo cuán propio es de los enamorados ser celosos?, pues con más propiedad tengo yo celos de mi hermano. Este capitán, amiga, ¿no exageró la hermosura de Sinforosa?; y ella, al coronar las sienes de Periandro, ¿no le miró? Sí, sin duda. ¿Y mi hermano, no es del valor y de la belleza que tú has visto?, ¿pues qué mucho que haya despertado en el pensamiento de Sinforosa alguno que le haga olvidar de su hermana?

-Advierte, señora -respondió Transila-, que todo cuanto el capitán ha contado sucedió antes de la prisión de la ínsula Bárbara, y que después acá os habéis visto y comunicado, donde habrás hallado que ni él tiene amor a nadie, ni cuida de otra cosa que de darte gusto; y no creo yo que las fuerzas de los celos lleguen a tanto que alcancen a tenerlos una hermana de un su hermano.

-Mira, hija Transila -dijo Mauricio-, que las condiciones de amor son tan diferentes como injustas, y sus leyes tan muchas como variables; procura ser tan discreta que no apures los pensamientos ajenos, ni quieras saber más de nadie de aquello que quisiere decirte: la curiosidad en los negocios propios se puede sutilizar y atildar, pero en los ajenos, que no nos importan, ni por pensamiento.

Esto que oyó Auristela a Mauricio la hizo tener cuenta con su discreción y con su lengua, porque la de Transila, poco necia, llevaba camino de hacerle sacar a plaza toda su historia.

Amansó en tanto el viento, sin haber dado lugar a que los marineros temiesen ni los pasajeros se alborotasen. Volvió el capitán a verlos y a proseguir su historia, por haber quedado cuidadoso del sobresalto que Auristela tomó oyendo el nombre de Periandro.

Deseaba Auristela volver a la plática pasada, y saber del capitán si los favores que Sinforosa había hecho a Periandro se estendieron a más que coronarle; y así, se lo preguntó modestamente y con recato de no dar a entender su pensamiento. Respondió el capitán que Sinforosa no tuvo lugar de hacer más merced, que así se han de llamar los favores de las damas, a Periandro, aunque, a pesar de la bondad de Sinforosa, a él le fatigaban ciertas imaginaciones que tenía de que no estaba muy libre de tener en la suya a Periandro, porque siempre que, después de partido, se hablaba de las gracias de Periandro, ella las subía y las levantaba sobre los cielos, y, por haberle ella mandado que saliese en un navío a buscar a Periandro y le hiciese volver a ver a su padre, confirmaba más sus sospechas.

-¿Cómo? ¿Y es posible -dijo Auristela-que las grandes señoras, las hijas de los reyes, las levantadas sobre el trono de la fortuna, se han de humillar a dar indicios de que tienen los pensamientos en humildes sujetos colocados? Y, siendo verdad, como lo es, que la grandeza y majestad no se aviene bien con el amor, antes son repugnantes entre sí el amor y la grandeza, hase de seguir que Sinforosa, reina, hermosa y libre, no se había de cautivar de la primera vista de un no conocido mozo, cuyo estado no prometía ser grande el venir guiando un timón de una barca con doce compañeros desnudos, como lo son todos los que gobiernan los remos.

-Calla, hija Auristela -dijo Mauricio-, que en ningunas otras acciones de la naturaleza se veen mayores milagros ni más continuos que en las del amor, que por ser tantos y tales los milagros, se pasan en silencio y no se echa de ver en ellos, por extraordinarios que sean: el amor junta los cetros con los cayados, la grandeza con la bajeza, hace posible lo imposible, iguala diferentes estados y viene a ser poderoso como la muerte. Ya sabes tú, señora, y sé yo muy bien, la gentileza, la gallardía y el valor de tu hermano Periandro, cuyas partes forman un compuesto de singular hermosura; y es privilegio de la hermosura rendir las voluntades y atraer los corazones de cuantos la conocen, y cuanto la hermosura es mayor y más conocida, es más amada y estimada. Así que, no sería milagro que Sinforosa, por principal que sea, ame a tu hermano, porque no le amaría como a Periandro a secas, sino como a hermoso, como a valiente, como a diestro, como a ligero, como a sujeto donde todas las virtudes están recogidas y cifradas.

-¿Que Periandro es hermano desta señora? -dijo el capitán.

-Sí -respondió Transila-, por cuya ausencia ella vive en perpetua tristeza, y todos nosotros, que la queremos bien, y a él le conocimos en llanto y amargura.

Luego le contaron todo lo sucedido del naufragio de la nave de Arnaldo, la división del esquife y de la barca, con todo aquello que fue bastante para darle a entender lo sucedido hasta el punto en que estaban.

En el cual punto deja el autor el primer libro desta grande historia, y pasa al segundo, donde se contarán cosas que, aunque no pasan de la verdad, sobrepujan a la imaginación, pues apenas pueden caber en la más sutil y dilatada sus acontecimientos.

Capítulo primero

Donde se cuenta cómo el navío se volcó con todos los que dentro dél iban

PARECE que el autor desta historia sabía más de enamorado que de historiador, porque casi este primer capítulo de la entrada del segundo libro le gasta todo en una definición de celos, ocasionados de los que mostró tener Auristela por lo que le contó el capitán del navío; pero en esta traducción, que lo es, se quita por prolija y por cosa en muchas partes referida y ventilada, y se viene a la verdad del caso, que fue que, cambiándose el viento y enmarañándose las nubes, cerró la noche oscura y tenebrosa, y los truenos, dando por mensajeros a los relámpagos, tras quien se siguen, comenzaron a turbar los marineros y a deslumbrar la vista de todos los de la nave, y comenzó la borrasca con tanta furia que no pudo ser prevenida de la diligencia y arte de los marineros; y así, a un mismo tiempo les cogió la turbación y la tormenta. Pero no por esto dejó cada uno de acudir a su oficio, y a hacer la faena que vieron ser necesaria, si no para escusar la muerte, para dilatar la vida; que los atrevidos que de unas tablas la fían, la sustentan cuanto pueden, hasta poner su esperanza en un madero que acaso la tormenta desclavó de la nave, con el cual se abrazan, y tienen a gran ventura tan duros abrazos.

Mauricio se abrazó con Transila, su hija, Antonio con Ricla y con Constanza, su madre y hermana; sola la desgraciada Auristela quedó sin arrimo, sino el que le ofrecía su congoja, que era el de la muerte, a quien ella de buena gana se entregara, si lo permitiera la cristiana y católica religión que con muchas veras procuraba guardar; y así, se recogió entre ellos, y, hechos un nudo, o por mejor decir, un ovillo, se dejaron calar casi hasta la postrera parte del navío, por escusar el ruido espantoso de los truenos, y la interpolada luz de los relámpagos, y el confuso estruendo de los marineros; y, en aquella semejanza del limbo, se escusaron de no verse unas veces tocar el cielo con las manos, levantándose el navío sobre las mismas nubes, y otras veces barrer la gavia las arenas del mar profundo. Esperaban la muerte cerrados los ojos, o por mejor decir, la temían sin verla: que la figura de la muerte, en cualquier traje que venga, es espantosa, y la que coge a un desapercibido en todas sus fuerzas y salud, es formidable.

La tormenta creció de manera que agotó la ciencia de los marineros, la solicitud del capitán y, finalmente, la esperanza de remedio en todos. Ya no se oían voces que mandaban hágase esto o aquello, sino gritos de plegarias y votos que se hacían y a los cielos se enviaban; y llegó a tanto esta miseria y estrechez que Transila no se acordaba de Ladislao, Auristela de Periandro; que uno de los efectos poderosos de la muerte es borrar de la memoria todas las cosas de la vida, y, pues llega a hacer que no se sienta la pasión celosa, téngase por dicho que puede lo imposible. No había allí reloj de arena que distinguiese las horas, ni aguja que señalase el viento, ni buen tino que atinase el lugar donde estaban. Todo era confusión, todo era grita, todo suspiros y todo plegarias. Desmayó el capitán, abandonáronse los marineros, rindiéronse las humanas fuerzas, y poco a poco el desmayo llamó al silencio, que ocupó las voces de los más de los míseros que se quejaban.

Atrevióse el mar insolente a pasearse por cima de la cubierta del navío, y aun a visitar las más altas gavias, las cuales también ellas, casi como en venganza de su agravio, besaron las arenas de su profundidad. Finalmente, al parecer del día - si se puede llamar día el que no trae consigo claridad alguna-, la nave se estuvo queda y estancó, sin moverse a parte alguna, que es uno de los peligros, fuera del de anegarse, que le puede suceder a un bajel; finalmente, combatida de un huracán furioso, como si la volvieran con algún artificio, puso la gavia mayor en la hondura de las aguas y la quilla descubrió a los cielos, quedando hecha sepultura de cuantos en ella estaban.

¡Adiós, castos pensamientos de Auristela; adiós, bien fundados disinius; sosegaos, pasos tan honrados como santos, no esperéis otros mauseolos ni otras pirámides ni agujas que las que os ofrecen esas mal breadas tablas! Y vos, ¡oh Transila!, ejemplo claro de honestidad, en los brazos de vuestro discreto y anciano padre podéis celebrar las bodas, si no con vuestro esposo Ladislao, a lo menos con la esperanza, que ya os habrá conducido a mejor tálamo. Y tú, ¡oh Ricla!, cuyos deseos te llevaban a tu descanso, recoge en tus brazos a Antonio y a Constanza, tus hijos, y ponlos en la presencia del que agora te ha quitado la vida para mejorártela en el cielo.

En resolución, el volcar de la nave y la certeza de la muerte de los que en ella iban puso las razones referidas en la pluma del autor desta grande y lastimosa historia, y ansimismo puso las que se oirán en el siguiente capítulo.

Capítulo segundo del segundo libro

Donde se cuenta un extraño suceso

PARECE que el volcar de la nave volcó, o por mejor decir, turbó el juicio del autor de esta historia, porque a este segundo capítulo le dio cuatro o cinco principios, casi como dudando qué fin en él tomaría. En fin, se resolvió, diciendo que las dichas y las desdichas suelen andar tan juntas, que tal vez no hay medio que las divida; andan el pesar y el placer tan apareados, que es simple el triste que se desespera y el alegre que se confía, como lo da fácilmente a entender este extraño suceso.

Sepultóse la nave, como queda dicho, en las aguas; quedaron los muertos sepultados sin tierra, deshiciéronse sus esperanzas, quedando imposibilitado su remedio; pero los piadosos cielos, que de muy atrás toman la corriente de remediar nuestras desventuras, ordenaron que la nave, llevada poco a poco de las olas, ya mansas y recogidas, a la orilla del mar diese en una playa, que por entonces su apacibilidad y mansedumbre podía servir de seguro puerto; y no lejos estaba un puerto capacísimo de muchos bajeles, en cuyas aguas, como en espejos claros, se estaba mirando una ciudad populosa, que por una alta loma sus vistosos edificios levantaba.

Vieron los de la ciudad el bulto de la nave, y creyeron ser el de alguna ballena o de otro gran pescado que con la borrasca pasada había dado al través. Salió infinita gente a verlo, y, certificándose ser navío, lo dijeron al rey Policarpo, que era el señor de aquella ciudad, el cual, acompañado de muchos y de sus dos hermosas hijas, Policarpa y Sinforosa, salió también, y ordenó que con cabestrantes, con tornos y con barcas, con que hizo rodear toda la nave, la tirasen y encaminasen al puerto.

Saltaron algunos encima del buco, y dijeron al rey que dentro dél sonaban golpes, y aun casi se oían voces de vivos.

Un anciano caballero que se halló junto al rey, le dijo:

-Yo me acuerdo, señor, haber visto en el mar Mediterráneo, en la ribera de Génova, una galera de España que, por hacer el car con la vela, se volcó, como está agora este bajel, quedando la gavia en la arena y la quilla al cielo; y, antes que la volviesen o enderezasen, habiendo primero oído rumor, como en éste se oye, aserraron el bajel por la quilla, haciendo un buco capaz de ver lo que dentro estaba; y el entrar la luz dentro y el salir por él el capitán de la misma galera y otros cuatro compañeros suyos fue todo uno. Yo vi esto, y está escrito este caso en muchas historias españolas, y aun podría ser viniesen agora las personas que segunda vez nacieron al mundo del vientre desta galera; y si aquí sucediese lo mismo, no se ha de tener a milagro, sino a misterio; que los milagros suceden fuera del orden de la naturaleza, y los misterios son aquellos que parecen milagros y no lo son, sino casos que acontecen raras veces.

-Pues ¿a qué aguardamos? -dijo el rey-: siérrese luego el buco, y veamos este misterio, que si este vientre vomita vivos, yo lo tendré por milagro.

Grande fue la priesa que se dieron a serrar el bajel, y grande el deseo que todos tenían de ver el parto. Abrióse, en fin, una gran concavidad, que descubrió muertos muertos y vivos que lo parecían; metió uno el brazo, y asió de una doncella que el palparle el corazón daba señales de tener vida; otros hicieron lo mismo, y cada uno sacó su presa, y algunos, pensando sacar vivos, sacaban muertos; que no todas veces los pescadores son dichosos. Finalmente, dándoles el aire y la luz a los medio vivos, respiraron y cobraron aliento; limpiáronse los rostros, fregáronse los ojos, estiraron los brazos, y, como quien despierta de un pesado sueño, miraron a todas partes; y hallóse Auristela en los brazos de Arnaldo, Transila en los de Clodio, Ricla y Constanza en los de Rutilio y Antonio el padre, y Antonio el hijo en los de ninguno, porque se salió por sí mismo, y lo mismo hizo Mauricio.

Arnaldo quedó más atónito y suspenso que los resucitados, y más muerto que los muertos. Miróle Auristela, y, no conociéndole, la primera palabra que le dijo fue -que ella fue la primera que rompió el silencio de todos:

-¿Por ventura, hermano, está entre esta gente la bellísima Sinforosa?

-¡Santos cielos! ¿Qué es esto? -dijo entre sí Arnaldo-. ¿Qué memorias de Sinforosa son éstas, en tiempo que no es razón que se tenga acuerdo de otra cosa que de dar gracias al cielo por las recibidas mercedes?

Pero, con todo esto, la respondió y dijo que sí estaba, y le preguntó que cómo la conocía, porque Arnaldo ignoraba lo que Auristela con el capitán del navío, que le contó los triunfos de Periandro, había pasado, y no pudo alcanzar la causa por la cual Auristela preguntaba por Sinforosa; que si la alcanzara, quizá dijera que la fuerza de los celos es tan poderosa y tan sutil que se entra y mezcla con el cuchillo de la misma muerte, y va a buscar al alma enamorada en los últimos trances de la vida.

Ya después que pasó algún tanto el pavor en los resucitados, que así pueden llamarse, y la admiración en los vivos que los sacaron, y el discurso en todos dio lugar a la razón, confusamente unos a otros se preguntaban cómo los de la tierra estaban allí y los del navío venían allí. Policarpo, en esto, viendo que el navío al abrirle la boca se le había llenado de agua, en el lugar del aire que tenía, mandó llevarle a jorro al puerto, y que con artificios le sacasen a tierra, lo cual se hizo con mucha presteza.

Salieron asimismo a tierra toda la gente que ocupaba la quilla del navío, que fueron recibidos del rey Policarpo y de sus hijas, y de todos los principales ciudadanos, con tanto gusto como admiración; pero lo que más les puso en ella, principalmente a Sinforosa, fue ver la incomparable hermosura de Auristela; fue también a la parte de esta admiración la belleza de Transila, y el gallardo y nuevo traje, pocos años y gallardía de la bárbara Constanza, de quien no desdecía el buen parecer y donaire de Ricla, su madre; y, por estar la ciudad cerca, sin prevenirse de quien los llevase, fueron todos a pie a ella.

Ya en este tiempo había llegado Periandro a hablar a su hermana Auristela, Ladislao a Transila, y el bárbaro padre a su mujer y a su hija, y los unos a los otros se fueron dando cuenta de sus sucesos. Sola Auristela, ocupada toda en mirar a Sinforosa, callaba. Pero, en fin, habló a Periandro, y le dijo:

-¿Por ventura, hermano, esta hermosísima doncella que aquí va es Sinforosa, la hija del rey Policarpo?

-Ella es -respondió Periandro-, sujeto donde tienen su asiento la belleza y la cortesía.

-Muy cortés debe de ser -respondió Auristela-, porque es muy hermosa.

-Aunque no lo fuera tanto -respondió Periandro-, las obligaciones que yo la tengo me obligaran, ¡oh querida hermana mía!, a que me lo pareciera.

-Si por obligaciones va, y vos por ellas encarecéis las hermosuras, la mía os ha de parecer la mayor de la tierra, según os tengo obligado.

-Con las cosas divinas -replicó Periandro- no se han de comparar las humanas; las hipérboles alabanzas, por más que lo sean, han de parar en puntos limitados: decir que una mujer es más hermosa que un ángel es encarecimiento de cortesía, pero no de obligación; sola en ti, dulcísima hermana mía, se quiebran reglas y cobran fuerzas de verdad los encarecimientos que se dan a tu hermosura.

-Si mis trabajos y mis desasosiegos, ¡oh hermano mío!, no turbaran la mía, quizá creyera ser verdaderas las alabanzas que de ella dices, pero yo espero en los piadosos cielos que algún día ha de reducir a sosiego mi desasosiego y a bonanza mi tormenta, y, en este entretanto, con el encarecimiento que puedo, te suplico que no te quiten ni borren de la memoria lo que me debes otras ajenas hermosuras, ni otras obligaciones, que en la mía y en las mías podrás satisfacer el deseo y llenar el vacío de tu voluntad, si miras que, juntando a la belleza de mi cuerpo, tal cual ella es, a la de mi alma, hallarás un compuesto de hermosura que te satisfaga.

Confuso iba Periandro oyendo las razones de Auristela: juzgábala celosa, cosa nueva para él, por tener por larga experiencia conocido que la discreción de Auristela jamás se atrevió a salir de los límites de la honestidad, jamás su lengua se movió a declarar sino honestos y castos pensamientos, jamás le dijo palabra que no fuese digna de decirse a un hermano en público y en secreto.

Iba Arnaldo invidioso de Periandro, Ladislao alegre con su esposa Transila; Mauricio, con su hija y yerno, Antonio el grande con su mujer y hijos, Rutilio con el hallazgo de todos, y el maldiciente Clodio con la ocasión que se le ofrecía de contar, dondequiera que se hallase, la grandeza de tan extraño suceso. Llegaron a la ciudad, y el liberal Policarpo honró a sus huéspedes real y magníficamente, y a todos los mandó alojar en su palacio, aventajándose en el tratamiento de Arnaldo, que ya sabía que era el heredero de Dinamarca, y que los amores de Auristela le habían sacado de su reino; y, así como vio la belleza de Auristela, halló su peregrinación en el pecho de Policarpo disculpa.

Casi en su mismo cuarto, Policarpa y Sinforosa alojaron a Auristela, de la cual no quitaba la vista Sinforosa, dando gracias al cielo de haberla hecho no amante, sino hermana de Periandro; y, así por su estremada belleza como por el parentesco tan estrecho que con Periandro tenía, la adoraba y no sabía un punto desviarse de ella; desmenuzábale sus acciones, notábale las palabras, ponderaba su donaire, hasta el sonido y órgano de la voz le daba gusto. Auristela casi por el mismo modo y con los mismos afectos miraba a Sinforosa, aunque en las dos eran diferentes las intenciones: Auristela miraba con celos, y Sinforosa con sencilla benevolencia.

Algunos días estuvieron en la ciudad descansando de los trabajos pasados, y, dando traza de volver Arnaldo a Dinamarca, o adonde Auristela y Periandro quisieran, mostrando, como siempre lo mostraba, no tener otra voluntad que la de los dos hermanos. Clodio, que con ociosidad y vista curiosa había mirado los movimientos de Arnaldo, y cuán oprimido le tenía el cuello el amoroso yugo, un día que se halló solo con él le dijo:

-Yo, que siempre los vicios de los príncipes he reprehendido en público, sin guardar el debido decoro que a su grandeza se debe, sin temer el daño que nace del decir mal, quiero agora, sin tu licencia, decirte en secreto lo que te suplico con paciencia me escuches; que lo que se dice aconsejando, en la intención halla disculpa lo que no agrada.

Confuso estaba Arnaldo, no sabiendo en qué iban a parar las prevenciones del razonamiento de Clodio, y, por saberlo, determinó de escuchalle; y así, le dijo que dijese lo que quisiese, y Clodio con este salvoconduto prosiguió diciendo:

-Tú, señor, amas a Auristela; mal dije amas, adoras, dijera mejor; y, según he sabido, no sabes más de su hacienda, ni de quién es, que aquello que ella ha querido decirte, que no te ha dicho nada. Hasla tenido en tu poder más de dos años, en los cuales has hecho, según se ha de creer, las diligencias posibles por enternecer su dureza, amansar su rigor y rendir su voluntad a la tuya por los medios honestísimos y eficaces del matrimonio, y en la misma entereza se está hoy que el primero día que la solicitaste, de donde arguyo que, cuanto a ti te sobra de paciencia, le falta a ella de conocimiento; y has de considerar que algún gran misterio encierra desechar una mujer un reino y un príncipe que merece ser amado. Misterio también encierra ver una doncella vagamunda, llena de recato de encubrir su linaje, acompañada de un mozo que, como dice que lo es, podría no ser su hermano, de tierra en tierra, de isla en isla, sujeta a las inclemencias del cielo y a las borrascas de la tierra, que suelen ser peores que las del mar alborotado. De los bienes que reparten los cielos entre los mortales, los que más se han de estimar son los de la honra, a quien se posponen los de la vida; los gustos de los discretos hanse de medir con la razón, y no con los mismos gustos.

Aquí llegaba Clodio, mostrando querer proseguir con un filosófico y grave razonamiento, cuando entró Periandro y le hizo callar con su llegada, a pesar de su deseo y aun de el de Arnaldo, que quisiera escucharle. Entraron asimismo Mauricio, Ladislao y Transila, y con ellos Auristela, arrimada al hombro de Sinforosa, mal dispuesta, de modo que fue menester llevarla al lecho, causando con su enfermedad tales sobresaltos y temores en los pechos de Periandro y Arnaldo que, a no encubrillos con discreción, también tuvieran necesidad de los médicos como Auristela.

Capítulo tercero del segundo libro

APENAS supo Policarpo la indisposición de Auristela, cuando mandó llamar sus médicos, que la visitasen; y, como los pulsos son lenguas que declaran la enfermedad que se padece, hallaron en los de Auristela que no era del cuerpo su dolencia, sino del alma. Pero antes que ellos conoció su enfermedad Periandro, y Arnaldo la entendió en parte, y Clodio mejor que todos. Ordenaron los médicos que en ninguna manera la dejaran sola, y que procurasen entretenerla y divertirla con música, si ella quisiese, o con otros algunos alegres entretenimientos. Tomó Sinforosa a su cargo su salud, y ofrecióle su compañía a todas horas, ofrecimiento no de mucho gusto para Auristela, porque quisiera no tener tan a la vista la causa que pensaba ser de su enfermedad, de la cual no pensaba sanar, porque estaba determinada de no decillo; que su honestidad le ataba la lengua, su valor se oponía a su deseo.

Finalmente, despejaron todos la estancia donde estaba, y quedáronse solas con ella Sinforosa y Policarpo, a quien con ocasión bastante despidió Sinforosa; y, apenas se vio sola con Auristela, cuando, poniendo su boca con la suya y apretándole reciamente las manos, con ardientes suspiros, pareció que quería trasladar su alma en el cuerpo de Auristela, afectos que de nuevo la turbaron, y así le dijo: -¿Qué es esto, señora mía, que estas muestras me dan a entender que estáis más enferma que yo, y más lastimada el alma que la mía? Mirad si os puedo servir en algo, que para hacerlo, aunque está la carne enferma, tengo sana la voluntad.

-Dulce amiga mía -respondió Sinforosa-, cuanto puedo agradezco tu ofrecimiento, y con la misma voluntad con que te obligas te respondo, sin que en esta parte tengan alguna comedimientos fingidos ni tibias obligaciones. Yo, hermana mía, que con este nombre has de ser llamada, en tanto que la vida me durare, amo, quiero bien, adoro. ¿Díjelo? No, que la vergüenza, y el ser quien soy, son mordazas de mi lengua; pero, ¿tengo de morir callando? ¿Ha de sanar mi enfermedad por milagro? ¿Es, por ventura, capaz de palabras el silencio? ¿Han de tener dos recatados y vergonzosos ojos virtud y fuerza para declarar los pensamientos infinitos de un alma enamorada?

Esto iba diciendo Sinforosa con tantas lágrimas y con tantos suspiros, que movieron a Auristela a enjugarle los ojos y a abrazarla y a decirla: -No se te mueran, ¡oh apasionada señora!, las palabras en la boca. Despide de ti por algún pequeño espacio la confusión y el empacho, y hazme tu secretaria; que los males comunicados, si no alcanzan sanidad, alcanzan alivio. Si tu pasión es amorosa, como lo imagino, sin duda bien sé que eres de carne, aunque pareces de alabastro, y bien sé que nuestras almas están siempre en continuo movimiento, sin que puedan dejar de estar atentas a querer bien a algún sujeto, a quien las estrellas las inclinan, que no se ha de decir que las fuerzan. Dime, señora, a quién quieres, a quién amas y a quién adoras; que, como no des en el disparate de amar a un toro, ni en el que dio el que adoró el plátano, como sea hombre el que, según tu dices, adoras, no me causará espanto ni maravilla. Mujer soy como tú; mis deseos tengo, y hasta ahora por honra del alma no me han salido a la boca, que bien pudiera, como señales de la calentura; pero al fin habrán de romper por inconvenientes y por imposibles, y, siquiera en mi testamento, procuraré que se sepa la causa de mi muerte.

Estábala mirando Sinforosa. Cada palabra que decía la estimaba como si fuera sentencia salida por la boca de un oráculo.

-¡Ay, señora -dijo-, y cómo creo que los cielos te han traído por tan extraño rodeo que parece milagro a esta tierra, condolidos de mi dolor y lastimados de mi lástima! Del vientre oscuro de la nave te volvieron a la luz del mundo, para que mi escuridad tuviese luz, y mis deseos salida de la confusión en que están; y así, por no tenerme ni tenerte más suspensa, sabrás que a esta isla llegó tu hermano Periandro.

Y sucesivamente le contó del modo que había llegado, los triunfos que alcanzó, los contrarios que venció y los premios que ganó, del modo que ya queda contado. Díjole también cómo las gracias de su hermano Periandro habían despertado en ella un modo de deseo, que no llegaba a ser amor, sino benevolencia; pero que después, con la soledad y ociosidad, yendo y viniendo el pensamiento a contemplar sus gracias, el amor se le fue pintando, no como hombre particular, sino como a un príncipe; que si no lo era, merecía serlo. «Esta pintura me la grabó en el alma, y yo inadvertida dejé que me la grabase, sin hacerle resistencia alguna; y así, poco a poco vine a quererle, a amarle y aun a adorarle, como he dicho».

Más dijera Sinforosa si no volviera Policarpa, deseosa de entretener a Auristela, cantando al son de una arpa que en las manos traía. Enmudeció Sinforosa, quedó perdida Auristela, pero el silencio de la una y el perdimiento de la otra no fueron parte para que dejasen de prestar atentos oídos a la sin par en música Policarpa, que desta manera comenzó a cantar en su lengua lo que después dijo el bárbaro Antonio que en la castellana decía: Cintia, si desengaños no son parte para cobrar la libertad perdida, da riendas al dolor, suelta la vida, que no es valor ni es honra el no quejarte.

Y el generoso ardor que, parte a parte, 5 tiene tu libre voluntad rendida, será de tu silencio el homicida cuando pienses por él eternizarte.

Salga con la doliente ánima fuera la enferma voz, que es fuerza y es cordura 10
decir la lengua lo que al alma toca.

Quejándote, sabrá el mundo siquiera cuán grande fue de amor tu calentura, pues salieron señales a la boca.

Ninguno como Sinforosa entendió los versos de Policarpa, la cual era sabidora de todos su deseos; y, puesto que tenía determinado de sepultarlos en las tinieblas del silencio, quiso aprovecharse del consejo de su hermana, diciendo a Auristela sus pensamientos, como ya se los había comenzado a decir. Muchas veces se quedaba Sinforosa con Auristela, dando a entender que más por cortés que por su gusto propio la acompañaba. En fin, una vez tornando a anudar la plática pasada, le dijo: -Óyeme otra vez, señora mía, y no te cansen mis razones, que las que me bullen en el alma no dejan sosegar la lengua. Reventaré si no las digo, y este temor, a pesar de mi crédito, hará que sepas que muero por tu hermano, cuyas virtudes, de mí conocidas, llevaron tras sí mis enamorados deseos; y, sin entremeterme en saber quién son sus padres, la patria o riquezas, ni el punto en que le ha levantado la fortuna, solamente atiendo a la mano liberal con que la naturaleza le ha enriquecido. Por sí solo le quiero, por sí solo le amo, y por sí solo le adoro; y por ti sola, y por quien eres, te suplico que, sin decir mal de mis precipitados pensamientos, me hagas el bien que pudieres. Innumerables riquezas me dejó mi madre en su muerte, sin sabiduría de mi padre; hija soy de un rey que, puesto que sea por elección, en fin, es rey; la edad, ya la ves; la hermosura no se te encubre que, tal cual es, ya que no merezca ser estimada, no merece ser aborrecida. Dame, señora, a tu hermano por esposo; daréte yo a mí misma por hermana, repartiré contigo mis riquezas, procuraré darte esposo, que después, y aun antes de los días de mi padre, le elijan por rey los de este reino; y, cuando esto no pueda ser, mis tesoros podrán comprar otros reinos.

Teníale a Auristela de las manos Sinforosa, bañándoselas en lágrimas, en tanto que estas tiernas razones la decía. Acompañábale en ellas Auristela, juzgando en sí misma cuáles y cuántos suelen ser los aprietos de un corazón enamorado; y, aunque se le representaba en Sinforosa una enemiga, la tenía lástima; que un generoso pecho no quiere vengarse cuando puede, cuanto más que Sinforosa no la había ofendido en cosa alguna que la obligase a venganza: su culpa era la suya, sus pensamientos los mismos que ella tenía, su intención la que a ella traía desatinada; finalmente, no podía culparla, sin que ella primero no quedase convencida del mismo delito. Lo que procuró apurar fue si la había favorecido alguna vez, aunque fuese en cosas leves, o si con la lengua o con los ojos había descubierto su amorosa voluntad a su hermano.

Sinforosa la respondió que jamás había tenido atrevimiento de alzar los ojos a mirar a Periandro, sino con el recato que a ser quien era debía, y que al paso de sus ojos había andado el recato de su lengua.

-Bien creo eso -respondió Auristela-, pero, ¿es posible que él no ha dado muestras de quererte? Sí habrá, porque no le tengo por tan de piedra que no le enternezca y ablande una belleza tal como la tuya; y así, soy de parecer que, antes que yo rompa esta dificultad, procures tú hablarle, dándole ocasión para ello con algún honesto favor; que tal vez los impensados favores despiertan y encienden los más tibios y descuidados pechos; que si una vez él responde a tu deseo, seráme fácil a mí hacerle que de todo en todo le satisfaga. Todos los principios, amiga, son dificultosos, y en los de amor dificultosísimos; no te aconsejo yo que te deshonestes ni te precipites; que los favores que hacen las doncellas a los que aman, por castos que sean, no lo parecen, y no se ha de aventurar la honra por el gusto; pero, con todo esto, puede mucho la discreción, y el amor, sutil maestro de encaminar los pensamientos, a los más turbados ofrece lugar y coyuntura de mostrarlos sin menoscabo de su crédito.

Capítulo cuarto del segundo libro

ATENTA estaba la enamorada Sinforosa a las discretas razones de Auristela, y, no respondiendo a ellas, sino volviendo a anudar las del pasado razonamiento, le dijo:

-Mira, amiga y señora, hasta dónde llegó el amor que engendró en mi pecho el valor que conocí en tu hermano, que hice que un capitán de la guarda de mi padre le fuese a buscar y le trajese por fuerza o de grado a mi presencia, y el navío en que se embarcó es el mismo en que tú llegaste, porque en él, entre los muertos, le han hallado sin vida.

-Así debe de ser -respondió Auristela-, que él me contó gran parte de lo que tú me has dicho, de modo que ya yo tenía noticia, aunque algo confusa, de tus pensamientos, los cuales, si es posible, quiero que sosiegues hasta que se los descubras a mi hermano, o hasta que yo tome a cargo tu remedio, que será luego que me descubras lo que con él te hubiere sucedido; que ni a ti te faltará lugar para hablarle, ni a mí tampoco.

De nuevo volvió Sinforosa a agradecer a Auristela su ofrecimiento y de nuevo volvió Auristela a tenerla lástima.

En tanto que entre las dos esto pasaba, se las había Arnaldo con Clodio, que moría por turbar o por deshacer los amorosos pensamientos de Arnaldo; y, hallándole solo, si solo se puede hallar quien tiene ocupada el alma de amorosos deseos, le dijo:

-El otro día te dije, señor, la poca seguridad que se puede tener de la voluble condición de las mujeres, y que Auristela, en efeto, es mujer, aunque parece un ángel, y que Periandro es hombre, aunque sea su hermano; y no por esto quiero decir que engendres en tu pecho alguna mala sospecha, sino que críes algún discreto recato. Y si por ventura te dieran lugar de que discurras por el camino de la razón, quiero que tal vez consideres quién eres, la soledad de tu padre, la falta que haces a tus vasallos, la contingencia en que te pones de perder tu reino, que es la misma en que está la nave donde falta el piloto que la gobierne. Mira que los reyes están obligados a casarse, no con la hermosura, sino con el linaje; no con la riqueza, sino con la virtud, por la obligación que tienen de dar buenos sucesores a sus reinos. Desmengua y apoca el respeto que se debe al príncipe el verle cojear en la sangre, y no basta decir que la grandeza de rey es en sí tan poderosa que iguala consigo misma la bajeza de la mujer que escogiere. El caballo y la yegua de casta generosa y conocida prometen crías de valor admirable, más que las no conocidas y de baja estirpe. Entre la gente común tiene lugar de mostrarse poderoso el gusto, pero no le ha de tener entre la noble. Así que, ¡oh señor mío!, o te vuelve a tu reino, o procura con el recato no dejar engañarte. Y perdona este atrevimiento, que, ya que tengo fama de maldiciente y murmurador, no la quiero tener de malintencionado; debajo de tu amparo me traes, al escudo de tu valor se ampara mi vida, con tu sombra no temo las inclemencias del cielo, que ya con mejores estrellas parece que va mejorando mi condición, hasta aquí depravada.

-Yo te agradezco, ¡oh Clodio! -dijo Arnaldo-, el buen consejo que me has dado, pero no consiente ni permite el cielo que le reciba. Auristela es buena, Periandro es su hermano, y yo no quiero creer otra cosa, porque ella ha dicho que lo es; que para mí cualquiera cosa que dijere ha de ser verdad. Yo la adoro sin disputas, que el abismo casi infinito de su hermosura lleva tras sí el de mis deseos, que no pueden parar sino en ella, y por ella he tenido, tengo y he de tener vida; así que, Clodio, no me aconsejes más, porque tus palabras se llevarán los vientos, y mis obras te mostrarán cuán vanos serán para conmigo tus consejos.

Encogió los hombros Clodio, bajó la cabeza y apartóse de su presencia, con propósito de no servir más de consejero, porque el que lo ha de ser requiere tener tres calidades: la primera, autoridad; la segunda, prudencia, y la tercera, ser llamado.

Estas revoluciones, trazas y máquinas amorosas andaban en el palacio de Policarpo y en los pechos de los confusos amantes: Auristela celosa, Sinforosa enamorada, Periandro turbado y Arnaldo pertinaz; Mauricio haciendo disinius de volver a su patria contra la voluntad de Transila, que no quería volver a la presencia de gente tan enemiga del buen decoro como la de su tierra; Ladislao, su esposo, no osaba ni quería contradecirla; Antonio, el padre, moría por verse con sus hijos y mujer en España, y Rutilio en Italia, su patria. Todos deseaban, pero a ninguno se le cumplían sus deseos: condición de la naturaleza humana, que, puesto que Dios la crió perfecta, nosotros, por nuestra culpa, la hallamos siempre falta, la cual falta siempre la ha de haber mientras no dejáremos de desear.

Sucedió, pues, que casi de industria dio lugar Sinforosa a que Periandro se viese solo con Auristela, deseosa que se diese principio a tratar de su causa y a la vista de su pleito, en cuya sentencia consistía la de su vida o muerte.

Las primeras palabras que Auristela dijo a Periandro, fueron:

-Esta nuestra peregrinación, hermano y señor mío, tan llena de trabajos y sobresaltos, tan amenazadora de peligros, cada día y cada momento me hace temer los de la muerte, y querría que diésemos traza de asegurar la vida, sosegándola en una parte, y ninguna hallo tan buena como ésta donde estamos; que aquí se te ofrecen riquezas en abundancia, no en promesas, sino en verdad, y mujer noble y hermosísima en todo extremo, digna, no de que te ruegue, como te ruega, sino de que tú la ruegues, la pidas y la procures.

En tanto que Auristela esto decía, la miraba Periandro con tanta atención que no movía las pestañas de los ojos; corría muy apriesa con el discurso de su entendimiento para hallar adónde podrían ir encaminadas aquellas razones; pero, pasando adelante con ellas, Auristela le sacó de su confusión, diciendo:

-Digo, hermano, que con este nombre te he de llamar en cualquier estado que tomes; digo que Sinforosa te adora, y te quiere por esposo; dice que tiene riquezas increíbles, y yo digo que tiene creíble hermosura; digo creíble, porque es tal, que no ha menester que exageraciones la levanten ni hipérboles la engrandezcan; y, en lo que he echado de ver, es de condición blanda, de ingenio agudo y de proceder tan discreto como honesto. Con todo esto que te he dicho, no dejo de conocer lo mucho que mereces, por ser quien eres; pero, según los casos presentes, no te estará mal esta compañía. Fuera estamos de nuestra patria, tú perseguido de tu hermano, y yo de mi corta suerte; nuestro camino a Roma, cuanto más le procuramos, más se dificulta y alarga; mi intención no se muda, pero tiembla, y no querría que entre temores y peligros me saltease la muerte, y así, pienso acabar la vida en religión, y querría que tú la acabases en buen estado.

Aquí dio fin Auristela a su razonamiento, y principio a unas lágrimas que desdecían y borran todo cuanto había dicho. Sacó los brazos honestamente fuera de la colcha, tendiéndolos por el lecho, y volvió la cabeza a la parte contraria de donde estaba Periandro, el cual, viendo estos extremos y habiendo oído sus palabras, sin ser poderoso a otra cosa, se le quitó la vista de los ojos, se le añudó la garganta y se le trabó la lengua, y dio consigo en el suelo de rodillas, y arrimó la cabeza al lecho. Volvió Auristela la suya, y, viéndole desmayado, le puso la mano en el rostro y le enjugó las lágrimas, que, sin que él lo sintiese, hilo a hilo le bañaban las mejillas.

Capítulo quinto del segundo libro

De lo que pasó entre el rey Policarpo y su hija Sinforosa

EFETOS vemos en la naturaleza de quien ignoramos las causas: adormécense o entorpécense a uno los dientes de ver cortar con un cuchillo un paño, tiembla tal vez un hombre de un ratón, y yo le he visto temblar de ver cortar un rábano, y a otro he visto levantarse de una mesa de respeto por ver poner unas aceitunas. Si se pregunta la causa, no hay saber decirla, y los que más piensan que aciertan a decilla, es decir que las estrellas tienen cierta antipatía con la complexión de aquel hombre, que le inclina o mueve a hacer aquellas acciones, temores y espantos, viendo las cosas sobredichas y otras semejantes que a cada paso vemos.

Una de las difiniciones del hombre es decir que es animal risible, porque sólo el hombre se ríe, y no otro ningún animal; y yo digo que también se puede decir que es animal llorable, animal que llora; y, ansí como por la mucha risa se descubre el poco entendimiento, por el mucho llorar el poco discurso. Por tres cosas es lícito que llore el varón prudente: la una, por haber pecado; la segunda, por alcanzar perdón dél; la tercera, por estar celoso: las demás lágrimas no dicen bien en un rostro grave.

Veamos, pues, desmayado a Periandro, y ya que no llore de pecador ni arrepentido, llore de celoso, que no faltará quien disculpe sus lágrimas, y aun las enjuge, como hizo Auristela, la cual, con más artificio que verdad, le puso en aquel estado. Volvió en fin en sí, y, sintiendo pasos en la estancia, volvió la cabeza, y vio a sus espaldas a Ricla y a Constanza, que entraban a ver a Auristela, que lo tuvo a buena suerte; que, a dejarle solo, no hallara palabras con que responder a su señora, y así se fue a pensarlas y a considerar en los consejos que le había dado.

Estaba también Sinforosa con deseo de saber qué auto se había proveído en la audiencia de amor, en la primera vista de su pleito, y sin duda que fuera la primera que entrara a ver a Auristela, y no Ricla y Constanza; pero estorbóselo llegar un recado de su padre el rey, que la mandaba ir a su presencia luego y sin escusa alguna. Obedecióle, fue a verle, y hallóle retirado y solo. Hízola Policarpo sentar junto a sí, y, al cabo de algún espacio que estuvo callando, con voz baja, como que se recataba de que no le oyesen, la dijo:

-Hija, puesto que tus pocos años no están obligados a sentir qué cosa sea esto que llaman amor, ni los muchos míos estén ya sujetos a su jurisdicción, todavía tal vez sale de su curso la naturaleza, y se abrasan las niñas verdes, y se secan y consumen los viejos ancianos.

Cuando esto oyó Sinforosa, imaginó, sin duda, que su padre sabía sus deseos; pero con todo eso calló, y no quiso interrromperle hasta que más se declarase; y, en tanto que él se declaraba, a ella le estaba palpitando el corazón en el pecho.

Siguió, pues, su padre, diciendo:

-Después, ¡oh hija mía!, que me faltó tu madre, me acogí a la sombra de tus regalos, cubríme con tu amparo, gobernéme por tus consejos, y he guardado como has visto las leyes de la viudez con toda puntualidad y recato, tanto por el crédito de mi persona como por guardar la fe católica que profeso; pero, después que han venido estos nuevos huéspedes a nuestra ciudad, se ha desconcertado el reloj de mi entendimiento, se ha turbado el curso de mi buena vida, y, finalmente, he caído desde la cumbre de mi presunción discreta hasta el abismo bajo de no sé qué deseos, que si los callo me matan y si los digo me deshonoran. No más suspensión, hija; no más silencio, amiga; no más; y si quieres que más haya, sea el decirte que muero por Auristela. El calor de su hermosura tierna ha encendido los huesos de mi edad madura; en las estrellas de sus ojos han tomado lumbre los míos, ya oscuros; la gallardía de su persona ha alentado la flojedad de la mía. Querría, si fuese posible, a ti y a tu hermana daros una madrastra, que su valor disculpe el dárosela. Si tú vienes con mi parecer, no se me dará nada del qué dirán, y, cuando por ésta, si pareciere locura, me quitaren el reino, reine yo en los brazos de Auristela, que no habrá monarca en el mundo que se me iguale. Es mi intención, hija, que tú se la digas, y alcances de ella el sí que tanto me importa, que, a lo que creo, no se le hará muy dificultoso el darle, si con su discreción recompensa y contrapone mi autoridad a mis años y mi riqueza a los suyos. Bueno es ser reina, bueno es mandar, gusto dan las honras, y no todos los pasatiempos se cifran en los casamientos iguales. En albricias del sí que me has de traer de esta embajada que llevas, te mando una mejora en tu suerte, que si eres discreta, como lo eres, no has de acertar a desearla mejor. Mira, cuatro cosas ha de procurar tener y sustentar el hombre principal; y son: buena mujer, buena casa, buen caballo y buenas armas. Las dos primeras, tan obligada está la mujer a procurallas como el varón, y aun más, porque no ha de levantar la mujer al marido, sino el marido a la mujer. Las majestades, las grandezas altas, no las aniquilan los casamientos humildes, porque en casándose igualan consigo a sus mujeres; así que, séase Auristela quien fuere, que siendo mi esposa será reina, y su hermano Periandro mi cuñado, el cual, dándotelo yo por esposo y honrándole con título de mi cuñado, vendrás tu también a ser estimada, tanto por ser su esposa como por ser mi hija.

-Pues ¿cómo sabes tú, señor -dijo Sinforosa-, que no es Periandro casado; y, ya que no lo sea, quiera serlo conmigo?

-De que no lo sea -respondió el rey-me lo da a entender el verle andar peregrinando por estrañas tierras, cosa que lo estorban los casamientos grandes; de que lo quiera ser tuyo me lo certifica y asegura su discreción, que es mucha, y caerá en la cuenta de lo que contigo gana; y, pues la hermosura de su hermana la hace ser reina, no será mucho que la tuya le haga tu esposo.

Con estas últimas palabras y con esta grande promesa, paladeó el rey la esperanza de Sinforosa, y saboreóle el gusto de sus deseos; y así, sin ir contra los de su padre, prometió ser casamentera, y admitió las albricias de lo que no tenía negociado. Sólo le dijo que mirase lo que hacía en darle por esposo a Periandro, que, puesto que sus habilidades acreditaban su valor, todavía sería bueno no arrojarse sin que primero la experiencia y el trato de algunos días le asegurase; y diera ella, porque en aquel punto se le dieran por esposo, todo el bien que acertara a desearse en este mundo los siglos que tuviera de vida; que las doncellas virtuosas y principales, uno dice la lengua y otro piensa el corazón.

Esto pasaron Policarpo y su hija, y en otra estancia se movió otra conversación y plática entre Rutilio y Clodio. Era Clodio, como se ha visto en lo que de su vida y costumbres queda escrito, hombre malicioso sobre discreto, de donde le nacía ser gentil maldiciente: que el tonto y simple, ni sabe murmurar ni maldecir; y, aunque no es bien decir bien mal, como ya otra vez se ha dicho, con todo esto alaban al maldiciente discreto; que la agudeza maliciosa no hay conversación que no la ponga en punto y dé sabor, como la sal a los manjares, y por lo menos al maldiciente agudo, si le vituperan y condenan por perjudicial, no dejan de absolverle y alabarle por discreto.

Este, pues, nuestro murmurador, a quien su lengua desterró de su patria en compañía de la torpe y viciosa Rosamunda, habiendo dado igual pena el rey de Inglaterra a su maliciosa lengua como a la torpeza de Rosamunda, hallándose solo con Rutilio, le dijo:

-Mira, Rutilio, necio es, y muy necio, el que, descubriendo un secreto a otro, le pide encarecidamente que le calle, porque le importa la vida en que lo que le dice no se sepa. Digo yo agora: ven acá, descubridor de tus pensamientos y derramador de tus secretos: si a ti, con importarte la vida, como dices, los descubres al otro a quien se los dices, que no le importa nada el descubrirlos, ¿cómo quieres que los cierre y recoja debajo de la llave del silencio? ¿Qué mayor seguridad puedes tomar de que no se sepa lo que sabes, sino no decillo? Todo esto sé, Rutilio, y con todo esto me salen a la lengua y a la boca ciertos pensamientos, que rabian porque los ponga en voz y los arroje en las plazas, antes que se me pudran en el pecho o reviente con ellos. Ven acá, Rutilio, ¿qué hace aquí este Arnaldo, siguiendo el cuerpo de Auristela, como si fuese su misma sombra, dejando su reino a la discreción de su padre, viejo y quizá caduco, perdiéndose aquí, anegándose allí, llorando acá, suspirando acullá, lamentándose amargamente de la fortuna que él mismo se fabrica? ¿Qué diremos desta Auristela y deste su hermano, mozos vagamundos, encubridores de su linaje, quizá por poner en duda si son o no principales?; que el que está ausente de su patria, donde nadie le conoce, bien puede darse los padres que quisiere, y, con la discreción y artificio, parecer en sus costumbres que son hijos del sol y de la luna. No niego yo que no sea virtud digna de alabanza mejorarse cada uno, pero ha de ser sin perjuicio de tercero. El honor y la alabanza son premios de la virtud, que siendo firme y sólida se le deben, mas no se le debe a la ficticia y hipócrita. ¿Quién puede ser este luchador, este esgrimidor, este corredor y saltador, este Ganimedes, este lindo, este aquí vendido, acullá comprado, este Argos de esta ternera de Auristela, que apenas nos la deja mirar por brújula; que ni sabemos ni hemos podido saber deste par, tan sin par en hermosura, de dónde vienen ni a dó van? Pero lo que más me fatiga de ellos es que, por los once cielos que dicen que hay, te juro, Rutilio, que no me puedo persuadir que sean hermanos, y que, puesto que lo sean, no puedo juzgar bien de que ande tan junta esta hermandad por mares, por tierras, por desiertos, por campañas, por hospedajes y mesones. Lo que gastan sale de las alforjas, saquillos y repuestos llenos de pedazos de oro de las bárbaras Ricla y Constanza. Bien veo que aquella cruz de diamantes y aquellas dos perlas que trae Auristela valen un gran tesoro, pero no son prendas que se cambian ni truecan por menudo; pues pensar que siempre han de hallar reyes que los hospeden y príncipes que los favorezcan, es hablar en lo escusado. Pues, ¿qué diremos, Rutilio, ahora, de la fantasía de Transila y de la astrología de su padre: ella que revienta de valiente, y él que se precia de ser el mayor judiciario del mundo? Yo apostaré que Ladislao, su esposo de Transila, tomara ahora estar en su patria, en su casa y en su reposo, aunque pasara por el estatuto y condición de los de su tierra, y no verse en la ajena, a la discreción del que quisiere darles lo que han menester. Y este nuestro bárbaro español, en cuya arrogancia debe estar cifrada la valentía del orbe, yo pondré que si el cielo le lleva a su patria, que ha de hacer corrillos de gente, mostrando a su mujer y a sus hijos envueltos en sus pellejos, pintando la isla bárbara en un lienzo, y señalando con una vara el lugar do estuvo encerrado quince años, la mazmorra de los prisioneros y la esperanza inútil y ridícula de los bárbaros, y el incendio no pensado de la isla: bien así como hacen los que, libres de la esclavitud turquesca, con las cadenas al hombro, habiéndolas quitado de los pies, cuentan sus desventuras con lastimeras voces y humildes plegarias en tierra de cristianos. Pero esto pase, que, aunque parezca que cuentan imposibles, a mayores peligros está sujeta la condición humana, y los de un desterrado, por grandes que sean, pueden ser creederos.

-¿Adónde vas a parar, ¡oh Clodio!? -dijo Rutilio.

-Voy a parar -respondió Clodio-en decir de ti que mal podrás usar tu oficio en estas regiones, donde sus moradores no danzan ni tienen otros pasatiempos sino lo que les ofrece Baco en sus tazas risueño y en sus bebidas lascivo; pararé también en mí, que, habiendo escapado de la muerte por la benignidad del cielo y por la cortesía de Arnaldo, ni al cielo doy gracias ni a Arnaldo tampoco; antes querría procurar que, aunque fuese a costa de su desdicha, nosotros enmendásemos nuestra ventura. Entre los pobres pueden durar las amistades, porque la igualdad de la fortuna sirve de eslabonar los corazones; pero entre los ricos y los pobres no puede haber amistad duradera, por la desigualdad que hay entre la riqueza y la pobreza.

-Filósofo estás, Clodio -replicó Rutilio-, pero yo no puedo imaginar qué medio podremos tomar para mejorar, como dices, nuestra suerte, si ella comenzó a no ser buena desde nuestro nacimiento. Yo no soy tan letrado como tú, pero bien alcanzo que, los que nacen de padres humildes, si no los ayuda demasiado el cielo, ellos por sí solos pocas veces se levantan adonde sean señalados con el dedo, si la virtud no les da la mano. Pero a ti, ¿quién te la ha de dar, si la mayor que tienes es decir mal de la misma virtud? ¿Y a mí, quién me ha de levantar, pues, cuando más lo procure, no podré subir más de lo que se alza una cabriola? Yo danzador, tú murmurador; yo condenado a la horca en mi patria, tú desterrado de la tuya por maldiciente: mira qué bien podremos esperar que nos mejore.

Suspendióse Clodio con las razones de Rutilio, con cuya suspensión dio fin a este capítulo el autor desta grande historia.

Capítulo sexto del segundo libro

TODOS tenían con quien comunicar sus pensamientos: Policarpo con su hija, y Clodio con Rutilio; sólo el suspenso Periandro los comunicaba consigo mismo; que le engendraron tantas las razones de Auristela, que no sabía a cuál acudir que le aliviase su pesadumbre.

-¡Válame Dios! ¿Qué es esto? -decía entre sí mismo-. ¿Ha perdido el juicio Auristela? ¡Ella mi casamentera! ¿Cómo es posible que haya dado al olvido nuestros conciertos? ¿Qué tengo yo que ver con Sinforosa? ¿Qué reinos ni qué riquezas me pueden a mí obligar a que deje a mi hermana Sigismunda, si no es dejando de ser yo Persiles?

En pronunciando esta palabra, se mordió la lengua, y miró a todas partes a ver si alguno le escuchaba, y, asegurándose que no, prosiguió diciendo:

-Sin duda, Auristela está celosa; que los celos se engendran, entre los que bien se quieren, del aire que pasa, del sol que toca, y aun de la tierra que pisa. ¡Oh señora mía, mira lo que haces, no hagas agravio a tu valor ni a tu belleza, ni me quites a mí la gloria de mis firmes pensamientos, cuya honestidad y firmeza me va labrando una inestimable corona de verdadero amante! Hermosa, rica y bien nacida es Sinforosa, pero, en tu comparación, es fea, es pobre y de linaje humilde. Considera, señora, que el amor nace y se engendra en nuestros pechos, o por elección o por destino: el que por destino, siempre está en su punto; el que por elección, puede crecer o menguar, según pueden menguar o crecer las causas que nos obligan y mueven a querernos; y, siendo esta verdad tan verdad como lo es, hallo que mi amor no tiene términos que le encierre, ni palabras que le declare: casi puedo decir que desde las mantillas y fajas de mi niñez te quise bien, y aquí pongo yo la razón del destino; con la edad y con el uso de la razón fue creciendo en mí el conocimiento, y fueron creciendo en ti las partes que te hicieron amable; vilas, contemplélas, conocílas, grabélas en mi alma, y de la tuya y la mía hice un compuesto tan uno y tan solo, que estoy por decir que tendrá mucho que hacer la muerte en dividirlo. Deja, pues, bien mío, Sinforosas; no me ofrezcas ajenas hermosuras, ni me convides con imperios ni monarquías, ni dejes que suene en mis oídos el dulce nombre de hermano con que me llamas. Todo esto que estoy diciendo entre mí, quisiera decírtelo a ti por los mismos términos con que lo voy fraguando en mi imaginación, pero no será posible, porque la luz de tus ojos, y más si me miran airados, ha de turbar mi vista y enmudecer mi lengua. Mejor será escribírtelo en un papel, porque las razones serán siempre unas, y las podrás ver muchas veces, viendo siempre en ellas una verdad misma, una fe confirmada, y un deseo loable y digno de ser creído; y así, determino de escribirte.

Quietóse con esto algún tanto, pareciéndole que con más advertido discurso pondría su alma en la pluma que en la lengua.

Dejemos escribiendo a Periandro, y vamos a oír lo que dice Sinforosa a Auristela; la cual Sinforosa, con deseo de saber lo que Periandro había respondido a Auristela, procuró verse con ella a solas, y darle de camino noticia de la intención de su padre, creyendo que, apenas se la habría declarado, cuando alcanzase el sí de su cumplimiento, puesta en pensar que pocas veces se desprecian las riquezas ni los señoríos, especialmente de las mujeres, que por naturaleza las más son codiciosas, como las más son altivas y soberbias.

Cuando Auristela vio a Sinforosa, no le plugo mucho su llegada, porque no tenía qué responderle, por no haber visto más a Periandro; pero Sinforosa, antes de tratar de su causa, quiso tratar de la de su padre, imaginándose que con aquellas nuevas que a Auristela llevaba, tan dignas de dar gusto, la tendría de su parte, en quien pensaba estar el todo de su buen suceso. Y así, le dijo:

-Sin duda alguna, bellísima Auristela, que los cielos te quieren bien, porque me parece que quieren llover sobre ti venturas y más venturas. Mi padre, el rey, te adora, y conmigo te envía a decir que quiere ser tu esposo, y en albricias del sí que le has de dar y yo se le he de llevar, me ha prometido a Periandro por esposo. Ya, señora, eres reina, ya Periandro es mío, ya las riquezas te sobran, y si tus gustos en las canas de mi padre no te sobraren, sobrarte han en los del mando y en los de los vasallos, que estarán continuo atentos a tu servicio. Mucho te he dicho, amiga y señora mía, y mucho has de hacer por mí, que de un gran valor no se puede esperar menos que un grande agradecimiento. Comience en nosotras a verse en el mundo dos cuñadas que se quieren bien, y dos amigas que sin doblez se amen, que sí verán, si tu discreción no se olvida de sí misma. Y dime agora, qué es lo que respondió tu hermano a lo que de mí le dijiste, que estoy confiada de la buena respuesta, porque bien simple sería el que no recibiese tus consejos como de un oráculo.

A lo que respondió Auristela:

-Mi hermano Periandro es agradecido, como principal caballero, y es discreto, como andante peregrino: que el ver mucho y el leer mucho aviva los ingenios de los hombres. Mis trabajos y los de mi hermano nos van leyendo en cuánto debemos estimar el sosiego, y, pues que el que nos ofreces es tal, sin duda imagino que le habremos de admitir; pero hasta ahora no me ha respondido nada Periandro, ni sé de su voluntad cosa que pueda alentar tu esperanza ni desmayarla. Da, ¡oh bella Sinforosa!, algún tiempo al tiempo, y déjanos considerar el bien de tus promesas, porque, puestas en obra, sepamos estimarlas. Las obras que no se han de hacer más de una vez, si se yerran, no se pueden enmendar en la segunda, pues no la tienen, y el casamiento es una destas acciones; y así, es menester que se considere bien antes que se haga, puesto que los términos desta consideración los doy por pasados, y hallo que tú alcanzarás tus deseos, y yo admitiré tus promesas y consejos. Y vete, hermana, y haz llamar de mi parte a Periandro, que quiero saber dél alegres nuevas que decirte, y aconsejarme con él de lo que me conviene, como con hermano mayor, a quien debo tener respeto y obediencia.

Abrazóla Sinforosa, y dejóla, por hacer venir a Periandro a que la viese. El cual, en este tiempo, encerrado y solo, había tomado la pluma, y de muchos principios que en un papel borró y tornó a escribir, quitó y añadió, en fin salió con uno que se dice decía desta manera:

No he osado fiar de mi lengua lo que de mi pluma, ni aun della fío algo, pues no puede escribir cosa que sea de momento el que por instantes está esperando la muerte. Ahora vengo a conocer que no todos los discretos saben aconsejar en todos los casos; aquellos, sí, que tienen experiencia en aquellos sobre quien se les pide el consejo. Perdóname, que no admito el tuyo por parecerme, o que no me conoces o que te has olvidado de ti misma; vuelve, señora, en ti, y no te haga una vana presunción celosa salir de los límites de la gravedad y peso de tu raro entendimiento. Considera quién eres, y no se te olvide de quien yo soy, y verás en ti el término del valor que puede desearse, y en mí el amor y la firmeza que puede imaginarse; y, firmándote en esta consideración discreta, no temas que ajenas hermosuras me enciendan, ni imagines que a tu incomparable virtud y belleza otra alguna se anteponga. Sigamos nuestro viaje, cumplamos nuestro voto, y quédense aparte celos infructuosos y mal nacidas sospechas. La partida desta tierra solicitaré con toda diligencia y brevedad, porque me parece que, en salir della, saldré del infierno de mi tormento a la gloria de verte sin celos.

Esto fue lo que escribió Periandro, y lo que dejó en limpio al cabo de haber hecho seis borradores; y, doblando el papel, se fue a ver a Auristela, de cuya parte ya le habían llamado.

Capítulo séptimo del segundo libro

Dividido en dos partes

RUTILIO y Clodio, aquellos dos que querían enmendar su humilde fortuna, confiados el uno de su ingenio y el otro de su poca vergüenza, se imaginaron merecedores, el uno de Policarpa y el otro de Auristela; a Rutilio le contentó mucho la voz y el donaire de Policarpa, y a Clodio la sin igual belleza de Auristela; y andaban buscando ocasión cómo descubrir sus pensamientos, sin que les viniese mal por declararlos: que es bien que tema un hombre bajo y humilde que se atreve a decir a una mujer principal lo que no había de atreverse a pensarlo siquiera. Pero tal vez acontece que la desenvoltura de una poco honesta, aunque principal señora, da motivo a que un hombre humilde y bajo ponga en ella los ojos y le declare sus pensamientos. Ha de ser anejo a la mujer principal el ser grave, el ser compuesta y recatada, sin que por esto sea soberbia, desabrida y descuidada; tanto ha de parecer más humilde y más grave una mujer cuanto es más señora. Pero en estos dos caballeros y nuevos amantes, no nacieron sus deseos de las desenvolturas y poca gravedad de sus señoras; pero, nazcan de do nacieren, Rutilio, en fin, escribió un papel a Policarpa y Clodio a Auristela, del tenor que se sigue:

RUTILIO A POLICARPA

Señora, yo soy extranjero, y, aunque te diga grandezas de mi linaje, como no tengo testigos que las confirmen, quizá no hallarán crédito en tu pecho; aunque, para confirmación de que soy ilustre en linaje, basta que he tenido atrevimiento de decirte que te adoro. Mira qué pruebas quieres que haga para confirmarte en esta verdad, que a ti estará el pedir las y a mí el hacerlas; y, pues te quiero para esposa, imagina que deseo como quien soy y que merezco como deseo: que de altos espíritus es aspirar a las cosas altas. Dame siquiera con los ojos respuesta deste papel, que en la blandura o rigor de tu vista veré la sentencia de mi muerte o de mi vida.

Cerró el papel Rutilio con intención de dársele a Policarpa, arrimándose al parecer de los que dicen: «Díselo tú una vez, que no faltará quien se lo acuerde ciento.» Mostróselo primero a Clodio, y Clodio le mostró a él otro que para Auristela tenía escrito, que es éste que se sigue:

CLODIO A AURISTELA

Unos entran en la red amorosa con el cebo de la hermosura, otros con los del donaire y gentileza, otros con los del valor que consideran en la persona a quien determinan rendir su voluntad; pero yo por diferente manera he puesto mi garganta a su yugo, mi cerviz a su coyunda, mi voluntad a sus fueros y mis pies a sus grillos, que ha sido por la de la lástima: que ¿cuál es el corazón de piedra que no la tendrá, hermosa señora, de verte vendida y comprada, y en tan estrechos pasos puesta, que has llegado al último de la vida por momentos? El yerro y despiadado acero ha amenazado tu garganta, el fuego ha abrasado las ropas de tus vestidos, la nieve tal vez te ha tenido yerta, y la hambre enflaquecida, y de amarilla tez cubiertas las rosas de tus mejillas, y, finalmente, el agua te ha sorbido y vomitado. Y estos trabajos no sé con qué fuerzas los llevas, pues no te las pueden dar las pocas de un rey vagamundo, y que te sigue por sólo el interés de gozarte, ni las de tu hermano, si lo es, son tantas que te puedan alentar en tus miserias. No fíes, señora, de promesas remotas, y arrímate a las esperanzas propincuas, y escoge un modo de vida que te asegure la que el cielo quisiere darte. Mozo soy, habilidad tengo para saber vivir en los más últimos rincones de la tierra; yo daré traza cómo sacarte desta y librarte de las importunaciones de Arnaldo, y, sacándote deste Egipto, te llevaré a la tierra de promisión, que es España o Francia o Italia, ya que no puedo vivir en Inglaterra, dulce y amada patria mía; y sobre todo me ofrezco a ser tu esposo, y desde luego te aceto por mi esposa.

Habiendo oído Rutilio el papel de Clodio, dijo:

-Verdaderamente, nosotros estamos faltos de juicio, pues nos queremos persuadir que podemos subir al cielo sin alas, pues las que nos da nuestra pretensión son las de la hormiga. Mira, Clodio, yo soy de parecer que rasguemos estos papeles, pues no nos ha forzado a escribirlos ninguna fuerza amorosa, sino una ociosa y baldía voluntad, porque el amor ni nace ni puede crecer si no es al arrimo de la esperanza, y, faltando ella, falta él de todo punto. Pues, ¿por qué queremos aventurarnos a perder y no a ganar en esta empresa?; que el declararla y el ver a nuestras gargantas arrimado el cordel o el cuchillo ha de ser todo uno; demás que, por mostrarnos enamorados, habremos de parecer, sobre desagradecidos, traidores. ¿Tú no ves la distancia que hay de un maestro de danzar, que enmendó su oficio con aprender el de platero, a una hija de un rey, y la que hay de un desterrado murmurador a la que desecha y menosprecia reinos? Mordámonos la lengua, y llegue nuestro arrepentimiento a do ha llegado nuestra necedad. A lo menos este mi papel se dará primero al fuego o al viento que a Policarpa.

-Haz tú lo que quisieres del tuyo -respondió Clodio-, que el mío, aunque no le dé a Auristela, le pienso guardar por honra de mi ingenio; aunque temo que, si no se le doy, toda la vida me ha de morder la conciencia de haber tenido este arrepentimiento, porque el tentar no todas las veces daña.

Estas razones pasaron entre los dos fingidos amantes, y atrevidos y necios de veras.

Llegóse, en fin, el punto de hablar a solas Periandro con Auristela, y entró a verla con intención de darle el papel que había escrito; pero, así como la vio, olvidándose de todos los discursos y disculpas que llevaba prevenidas, le dijo:

-Señora, mírame bien, que yo soy Periandro, que fui el que fue Persiles, y soy el que tú quieres que sea Periandro. El nudo con que están atadas nuestras voluntades nadie le puede desatar sino la muerte; y, siendo esto así, ¿de qué te sirve darme consejos tan contrarios a esta verdad? Por todos los cielos, y por ti misma, más hermosa que ellos, te ruego que no nombres más a Sinforosa, ni imagines que su belleza ni sus tesoros han de ser parte a que yo olvide las minas de tus virtudes y la hermosura incomparable tuya, así del cuerpo como del alma. Esta mía, que respira por la tuya, te ofrezco de nuevo, no con mayores ventajas que aquellas con que te la ofrecí la vez primera que mis ojos te vieron, porque no hay cláusula que añadir a la obligación en que quedé de servirte el punto que en mis potencias se imprimió el conocimiento de tus virtudes. Procura, señora, tener salud, que yo procuraré la salida de esta tierra, y dispondré lo mejor que pudiere nuestro viaje: que, aunque Roma es el cielo de la tierra, no está puesta en el cielo, y no habrá trabajos ni peligros que nos nieguen del todo el llegar a ella, puesto que los haya para dilatar el camino; tente al tronco y a las ramas de tu mucho valor, y no imagines que ha de haber en el mundo quien se le oponga.

En tanto que Periandro esto decía, le estaba mirando Auristela con ojos tiernos y con lágrimas de celos y compasión nacidas; pero, en fin, haciendo efeto en su alma las amorosas razones de Periandro, dio lugar a la verdad que en ellas venía encerrada, y respondióle seis o ocho palabras, que fueron:

-Sin hacerme fuerza, dulce amado, te creo; confiada te pido que con brevedad salgamos desta tierra, que en otra quizá convaleceré de la enfermedad celosa que en este lecho me tiene.

-Si yo hubiera dado, señora -respondió Periandro-, alguna ocasión a tu enfermedad, llevara en paciencia tus quejas, y en mis disculpas hallaras tú el remedio de tus lástimas; pero, como no te he ofendido, no tengo de qué disculparme. Por quien eres, te suplico que alegres los corazones de los que te conocen, y sea brevemente, pues, faltando la ocasión de tu enfermedad, no hay para qué nos mates con ella. Pondré en efeto lo que me mandas: saldremos desta tierra con la brevedad posible.

-¿Sabes cuánto te importa, Periandro? -respondió Auristela-. Pues has de saber que me van lisonjeando promesas y apretando dádivas; y no como quiera, que por lo menos me ofrecen este reino. Policarpo, el rey, quiere ser mi esposo; hámelo enviado a decir con Sinforosa, su hija, y ella, con el favor que piensa tener en mí, siendo su madrastra, quiere que seas su esposo. Si esto puede ser, tú lo sabes, y si estamos en peligro, considéralo, y, conforme a esto, aconséjate con tu discreción, y busca el remedio que nuestra necesidad pide; y perdóname, que la fuerza de las sospechas han sido las que me han forzado a ofenderte, pero estos yerros fácilmente los perdona el amor.

-Dél se dice -replicó Periandro-que no puede estar sin celos, los cuales, cuando de débiles y flacas ocasiones nacen, le hacen crecer, sirviendo de espuelas a la voluntad, que, de puro confiada, se entibia, o a lo menos, parece que se desmaya; y, por lo que debes a tu buen entendimiento, te ruego que de aquí adelante me mires, no con mejores ojos, pues no los puede haber en el mundo tales como los tuyos, sino con voluntad más llana y menos puntuosa, no levantando algún descuido mío, más pequeño que un grano de mostaza, a ser monte que llegue a los cielos, llegando a los celos; y en lo demás, con tu buen juicio entretén al rey y a Sinforosa, que no la ofenderás en fingir palabras que se encaminan a conseguir buenos deseos; y queda en paz, no engendre en algún mal pecho alguna mala sospecha nuestra larga plática.

Con esto la dejó Periandro, y, al salir de la estancia, encontró con Clodio y Rutilio: Rutilio acabando de romper el papel que había escrito a Policarpa, y Clodio doblando el suyo para ponérselo en el seno; Rutilio arrepentido de su loco pensamiento, y Clodio satisfecho de su habilidad y ufano de su atrevimiento; pero andará el tiempo y llegará el punto donde diera él, por no haberle escrito, la mitad de la vida, si es que las vidas pueden partirse.

Capítulo séptimo del segundo libro

ANDABA el rey Policarpo alborozado con sus amorosos pensamientos, y deseoso además de saber la resolución de Auristela, tan confiado y tan seguro que había de corresponder a lo que deseaba, que ya consigo mismo trazaba las bodas, concertaba las fiestas, inventaba las galas, y aun hacía mercedes en esperanza del venidero matrimonio; pero, entre todos estos disinius, no tomaba el pulso a su edad, ni igualaba con discreción la disparidad que hay de diez y siete años a setenta; y, cuando fueran sesenta, es también grande la distancia: ansí halagan y lisonjean los lascivos deseos las voluntades, así engañan los gustos imaginados a los grandes entendimientos, así tiran y llevan tras sí las blandas imaginaciones a los que no se resisten en los encuentros amorosos.

Con diferentes pensamientos estaba Sinforosa, que no se aseguraba de su suerte, por ser cosa natural que quien mucho desea, mucho teme; y las cosas que podían poner alas a su esperanza, como eran su valor, su linaje y hermosura, esas mismas se las cortaban, por ser propio de los amantes rendidos pensar siempre que no tienen partes que merezcan ser amadas de los que bien quieren. Andan el amor y el temor tan apareados que, a doquiera que volváis la cara, los veréis juntos; y no es soberbio el amor, como algunos dicen, sino humilde, agradable y manso; y tanto, que suele perder de su derecho por no dar a quien bien quiere pesadumbre; y más, que, como todo amante tiene en sumo precio y estima la cosa que ama, huye de que de su parte nazca alguna ocasión de perderla.

Todo esto, con mejores discursos que su padre, consideraba la bella Sinforosa, y, entre temor y esperanza puesta, fue a ver a Auristela, y a saber della lo que esperaba y temía. En fin se vio Sinforosa con Auristela, y sola, que era lo que ella más deseaba; y era tanto el deseo que tenía de saber las nuevas de su buena o mala andanza que, así como entró a verla, sin que la hablase palabra, se la puso a mirar ahincadamente, por ver si en los movimientos de su rostro le daba señales de su vida o muerte.

Entendióla Auristela, y a media risa, quiero decir, con muestras alegres, le dijo:

-Llegaos, señora, que a la raíz del árbol de vuestra esperanza no ha puesto el temor segur para cortar. Bien es verdad que vuestro bien y el mío se han de dilatar algún tanto, pero en fin llegarán, porque, aunque hay inconvenientes que suelen impedir el cumplimiento de los justos deseos, no por eso ha de tener la desesperación fuerzas para no esperalle. Mi hermano dice que el conocimiento que tiene de tu valor y hermosura, no solamente le obliga, pero que le fuerza a quererte, y tiene a bien y a merced particular la que le haces en querer ser suya; pero, antes que venga a tan dichosa posesión, ha menester defraudar las esperanzas que el príncipe Arnaldo tiene de que yo he de ser su esposa; y sin duda lo fuera yo, si el serlo tú de mi hermano no lo estorbara; que has de saber, hermana mía, que así puedo vivir yo sin Periandro como puede vivir un cuerpo sin alma: allí tengo de vivir donde él viviere, él es el espíritu que me mueve y el alma que me anima; y, siendo esto así, si él se casa en esta tierra contigo, ¿cómo podré yo vivir en la de Arnaldo en ausencia de mi hermano? Para escusar este desmán que me amenaza, ordena que nos vamos con él a su reino, desde el cual le pediremos licencia para ir a Roma a cumplir un voto, cuyo cumplimiento nos sacó de nuestra tierra; y está claro, como la experiencia me lo ha mostrado, que no ha de salir un punto de mi voluntad. Puestos, pues, en nuestra libertad, fácil cosa será dar la vuelta a esta isla, donde, burlando sus esperanzas, veamos el fin de las nuestras, yo casándome con tu padre, y mi hermano contigo.

A lo que respondió Sinforosa:

-No sé, hermana, con qué palabras podré encarecer la merced que me has hecho con las que me has dicho; y así, la dejaré en su punto, porque no sé cómo explicarlo; pero esto que ahora decirte quiero, recíbelo antes por advertimiento que por consejo: ahora estás en esta tierra y en poder de mi padre, que te podrá y querrá defender de todo el mundo, y no será bien que se ponga en contingencia la seguridad de tu posesión; no le ha de ser posible a Arnaldo llevaros por fuerza a ti y a tu hermano, y hable de ser forzoso, si no querer, a lo menos consentir lo que mi padre quisiere, que le tiene en su reino y en su casa. Asegúrame tú, ¡oh hermana!, que tienes voluntad de ser mi señora, siendo esposa de mi padre, y que tu hermano no se ha de desdeñar de ser mi señor y esposo, que yo te daré llanas todas las dificultades e inconvenientes que para llegar a este efecto pueda poner Arnaldo.

A lo que respondió Auristela:

-Los varones prudentes, por los casos pasados y por los presentes, juzgan los que están por venir. A hacernos fuerza pública o secreta tu padre en nuestra detención, ha de irritar y despertar la cólera de Arnaldo, que, en fin, es rey poderoso, a lo menos lo es más que tu padre, y los reyes burlados y engañados fácilmente se acomodan a vengarse; y así, en lugar de haber recibido con nuestro parentesco gusto, recibiríades daño, trayéndoos la guerra a vuestras mismas casas. Y si dijeres que este temor se ha de tener siempre, ora nos quedemos aquí, ora volvamos después, considerando que nunca los cielos aprietan tanto los males que no dejen alguna luz con que se descubra la de su remedio, soy de parecer que nos vamos con Arnaldo, y que tú misma, con tu discreción y aviso, solicites nuestra partida; que en esto solicitarás y abreviarás nuestra vuelta, y aquí, si no en reinos tan grandes como los de Arnaldo, a lo menos en paz más segura, gozaré yo de la prudencia de tu padre, y tú de la gentileza y bondad de mi hermano, sin que se dividan y aparten nuestras almas.

Oyendo las cuales razones, Sinforosa, loca de contento, se abalanzó a Auristela, y le echó los brazos al cuello, midiéndole la boca y los ojos con sus hermosos labios. En esto, vieron entrar por la sala a los dos, al parecer, bárbaros, padre y hijo, y a Ricla y Constanza, y luego tras ellos entraron Mauricio, Ladislao y Transila, deseosos de ver y hablar a Auristela, y saber en qué punto estaba su enfermedad, que los tenía a ellos sin salud. Despidióse Sinforosa más alegre y más engañada que cuando había entrado: que los corazones enamorados creen con mucha facilidad aun las sombras de las promesas de su gusto. El anciano Mauricio, después de haber pasado con Auristela las ordinarias preguntas y respuestas que suelen pasar entre los enfermos y los que los visitan, dijo:

-Si los pobres, aunque mendigos, suelen llevar con pesadumbre el verse desterrados o ausentes de su patria, donde no dejaron sino los terrones que los sustentaban, ¿qué sentirán los ausentes que dejaron en su tierra los bienes que de la fortuna pudieran prometerse? Digo esto, señora, porque mi edad, que con presurosos pasos me va acercando al último fin, me hace desear verme en mi patria, adonde mis amigos, mis parientes y mis hijos me cierren los ojos y me den el último vale. Este bien y merced conseguiremos todos cuantos aquí estamos, pues todos somos extranjeros y ausentes, y todos, a lo que creo, tenemos en nuestras patrias lo que no hallaremos en las ajenas. Si tú, señora, quisieres solicitar nuestra partida, o a lo menos teniendo por bien que nosotros la procuremos, puesto que no será posible el dejarte, porque tu generosa condición y rara hermosura, acompañada de la discreción, que admira, es la piedra imán de nuestras voluntades.

-A lo menos -dijo a esta sazón Antonio el padre-, de la mía y de las de mi mujer y hijos, lo es de suerte que primero dejaré la vida que dejar la compañía de la señora Auristela, si es que ella no se desdeña de la nuestra.

-Yo os agradezco, señores -respondió Auristela-, el deseo que me habéis mostrado; y, aunque no está en mi mano corresponder a él como debía, todavía haré que le pongan en efeto el príncipe Arnaldo y mi hermano Periandro, sin que sea parte mi enfermedad, que ya es salud, a impedirle. En tanto, pues, que llega el felice día y punto de nuestra partida, ensanchad los corazones y no deis lugar que reine en ellos la malencolía, ni penséis en peligros venideros: que, pues el cielo de tantos nos ha sacado, sin que otros nos sobrevengan, nos llevará a nuestras dulces patrias; que los males que no tienen fuerzas para acabar la vida, no la han de tener para acabar la paciencia.

Admirados quedaron todos de la respuesta de Auristela, porque en ella se descubrió su corazón piadoso y su discreción admirable. Entró en este instante el rey Policarpo, alegre sobremanera, porque ya había sabido de Sinforosa, su hija, las prometidas esperanzas del cumplimiento de sus entre castos y lascivos deseos; que los ímpetus amorosos que suelen parecer en los ancianos se cubren y disfrazan con la capa de la hipocresía; que no hay hipócrita, si no es conocido por tal, que dañe a nadie sino a sí mismo, y los viejos, con la sombra del matrimonio, disimulan sus depravados apetitos. Entraron con el rey Arnaldo y Periandro, y, dándole el parabién a Auristela de la mejoría, mandó el rey que, aquella noche, en señal de la merced que del cielo todos en la mejoría de Auristela habían recibido, se hiciesen luminarias en la ciudad, y fiestas y regocijos ocho días continuos. Periandro lo agradeció como hermano de Auristela, y Arnaldo como amante que pretendía ser su esposo.

Regocijábase Policarpo allá entre sí mismo en considerar cuán suavemente se iba engañando Arnaldo, el cual, admirado con la mejoría de Auristela, sin que supiese los disinios de Policarpo, buscaba modos de salir de su ciudad, pues tanto cuanto más se dilataba su partida, tanto más, a su parecer, se alongaba el cumplimiento de su deseo. Mauricio, también deseoso de volver a su patria, acudió a su ciencia, y halló en ella que grandes dificultades habían de impedir su partida. Comunicólas con Arnaldo y Periandro, que ya habían sabido los intentos de Sinforosa y Policarpo, que les puso en mucho cuidado, por saber cierto, cuando el amoroso deseo se apodera de los pechos poderosos, suele romper por cualquiera dificultad, hasta llegar al fin de ellos: no se miran respetos, ni se cumplen palabras, ni guardan obligaciones. Y así, no había para qué fiarse en las pocas o ninguna en que Policarpo les estaba.

En resolución, quedaron los tres de acuerdo que Mauricio buscase un bajel, de muchos que en el puerto estaban, que los llevase a Inglaterra secretamente, que para embarcarse no faltaría modo conveniente, y que, en este entretanto, no mostrase ninguno señales de que tenían noticia de los disinios de Policarpo. Todo esto se comunicó con Auristela, la cual aprobó su parecer, y entró en nuevos cuidados de mirar por su salud y por la de todos.

Capítulo octavo del segundo libro

Da Clodio el papel a Auristela; Antonio, el bárbaro, le mata por yerro

DICE la historia que llegó a tanto la insolencia, o por mejor decir, la desvergüenza de Clodio, que tuvo atrevimiento de poner en las manos de Auristela el desvergonzado papel que la había escrito, engañada con que le dijo que eran unos versos devotos, dignos de ser leídos y estimados.

Abrió Auristela el papel, y pudo con ella tanto la curiosidad que no dio lugar al enojo para dejalle de leer hasta el cabo. Leyóle en fin, y, volviéndole a cerrar, puestos los ojos en Clodio, y no echando por ellos rayos de amorosa luz, como las más veces solía, sino centellas de rabioso fuego, le dijo:

-Quítateme de delante, hombre maldito y desvergonzado: que si la culpa deste tu atrevido disparate entendiera que había nacido de algún descuido mío, que menoscabara mi crédito y mi honra, en mí misma castigara tu atrevimiento, el cual no ha de quedar sin castigo, si ya entre tu locura y mi paciencia no se pone el tenerte lástima.

Quedó atónito Clodio, y diera él por no haberse atrevido la mitad de la vida, como ya se ha dicho. Rodeáronle luego el alma mil temores, y no se daba más término de vida que lo que tardasen en saber su bellaquería Arnaldo o Periandro; y, sin replicar palabra, bajó los ojos, volvió las espaldas y dejó sola a Auristela, cuya imaginación ocupó un temor, no vano, sino muy puesto en razón, de que Clodio, desesperado, había de dar en traidor, aprovechándose de los intentos de Policarpo, si acaso a su noticia viniese, y determinó darla de aquel caso a Periandro y Arnaldo.

Sucedió en este tiempo que, estando Antonio el mozo solo en su aposento, entró a deshora una mujer en él, de hasta cuarenta años de edad, que, con el brío y donaire, debía de encubrir otros diez, vestida, no al uso de aquella tierra, sino al de España; y, aunque Antonio no conocía de usos, sino de los que había visto en los de la bárbara isla donde se había criado y nacido, bien conoció ser extranjera de aquella tierra. Levantóse Antonio a recibirla cortésmente, porque no era tan bárbaro que no fuese bien criado. Sentáronse, y la dama -si en tantos años de edad es justo se le dé este nombre-, después de haber estado atenta mirando el rostro de Antonio, dijo:

-Parecerte ha novedad, ¡oh mancebo!, esta mi venida a verte, porque no debes de estar en uso de ser visitado de mujeres, habiéndote criado, según he sabido, en la isla Bárbara, y no entre bárbaros, sino entre riscos y peñas, de las cuales, si como sacaste la belleza y brío que tienes, has sacado también la dureza en las entrañas, la blandura de las mías temo que no me ha de ser de provecho. No te desvíes, sositégate y no te alborotes, que no está hablando contigo algún monstruo ni persona que quiera decirte ni aconsejarte cosas que vayan fuera de la naturaleza humana; mira que te hablo español, que es la lengua que tú sabes, cuya conformidad suele engendrar amistad entre los que no se conocen.

«Mi nombre es Cenotia, soy natural de España, nacida y criada en Alhama, ciudad del reino de Granada; conocida por mi nombre en todos los de España, y aun entre otros muchos, porque mi habilidad no consiente que mi nombre se encubra, haciéndome conocida mis obras. Salí de mi patria, habrá cuatro años, huyendo de la vigilancia que tienen los mastines veladores que en aquel reino tienen del católico rebaño. Mi estirpe es agarena; mis ejercicios, los de Zoroastes, y en ellos soy única. ¿Ves este sol que nos alumbró? Pues sí, para señal de lo que puedo, quieres que le quite los rayos y le asombre con nubes, pídemelo, que haré que a esta claridad suceda en un punto oscura noche; o ya si quisieres ver temblar la tierra, pelear los vientos, alterarse el mar, encontrarse los montes, bramar las fieras, o otras espantosas señales que nos representen la confusión del caos primero, pídelo, que tú quedarás satisfecho y yo acreditada. Has de saber ansimismo que en aquella ciudad de Alhama siempre ha habido alguna mujer de mi nombre, la cual, con el apellido de Cenotia, hereda esta ciencia, que no nos enseña a ser hechiceras, como algunos nos llaman, sino a ser encantadoras y magas, nombres que nos vienen más al propio. Las que son hechiceras, nunca hacen cosa que para alguna cosa sea de provecho: ejercitan sus burlerías con cosas, al parecer, de burlas, como son habas mordidas, agujas sin puntas, alfileres sin cabeza, y cabellos cortados en crecientes o menguantes de luna; usan de caracteres que no entienden, y si algo alcanzan, tal vez, de lo que pretenden, es, no en virtud de sus simplicidades, sino porque Dios permite, para mayor condenación suya, que el demonio las engañe. Pero nosotras, las que tenemos nombre de magas y de encantadoras, somos gente de mayor cuantía; tratamos con las estrellas, contemplamos el movimiento de los cielos, sabemos la virtud de las yerbas, de las plantas, de las piedras, de las palabras, y, juntando lo activo a lo pasivo, parece que hacemos milagros, y nos atrevemos a hacer cosas tan estupendas que causan admiración a las gentes, de donde nace nuestra buena o mala fama: buena, si hacemos bien con nuestra habilidad; mala, si hacemos mal con ella. Pero, como la naturaleza parece que nos inclina antes al mal que al bien, no podemos tener tan a raya los deseos que no se deslicen a procurar el mal ajeno; que, ¿quién quitará al airado y ofendido que no se venga? ¿Quién al amante desdeñado que no quiera, si puede, reducir a ser querido del que le aborrece? Puesto que en mudar las voluntades, sacarlas de su quicio, como esto es ir contra el libre albedrío, no hay ciencia que lo pueda, ni virtud de yerbas que lo alcancen.»

A todo esto que la española Cenotia decía, la estaba mirando Antonio con deseo grande de saber qué suma tendría tan larga cuenta.

Pero la Cenotia prosiguió diciendo:

-«Dígame, en fin, bárbaro discreto, que la persecución de los que llaman inquisidores en España, me arrancó de mi patria; que, cuando se sale por fuerza della, antes se puede llamar arrancada que salida. Vine a esta isla por estraños rodeos, por infinitos peligros, casi siempre como si estuvieran cerca, volviendo la cabeza atrás, pensando que me mordían las faldas los perros, que aun hasta aquí temo; dime presto a conocer al rey antecesor de Policarpo, hice algunas maravillas, con que dejé maravillado al pueblo; procuré hacer vendible mi ciencia, tan en mi provecho que tengo juntos más de treinta mil escudos en oro; y, estando atenta a esta ganancia, he vivido castamente, sin procurar otro algún deleite, ni le procurara, si mi buena o mi mala fortuna no te hubieran traído a esta tierra, que en tu mano está darme la suerte que quisieres.» Si te parezco fea, yo haré de modo que me juzgues por hermosa; si son pocos treinta mil escudos que te ofrezco, alarga tu deseo y ensancha los sacos de la codicia y los senos, y comienza desde luego a contar cuantos dineros acertares a desear. Para tu servicio sacaré las perlas que encubren las conchas del mar, rendiré y traeré a tus manos las aves que rompen el aire, haré que te ofrezcan sus frutos las plantas de la tierra, haré que brote del abismo lo más precioso que en él se encierra, haréte invencible en todo, blando en la paz, temido en la guerra; en fin, enmendaré tu suerte de manera que seas siempre envidiado y no envidioso. Y, en cambio destos bienes que te he dicho, no te pido que seas mi esposo, sino que me recibas por tu esclava: que, para ser tu esclava, no es menester que me tengas voluntad como para ser esposa, y, como yo sea tuya, en cualquier modo que lo sea, viviré contenta. Comienza, pues, ¡oh generoso mancebo!, a mostrarte prudente, mostrándote agradecido: mostrarte has prudente, si antes que me agradezcas estos deseos, quisieres hacer experiencia de mis obras; y, en señal de que así lo harás, alégrame el alma ahora con darme alguna señal de paz, dándome a tocar tu valerosa mano.

Y, diciendo esto, se levantó para ir a abrazarle.

Antonio, viendo lo cual, lleno de confusión, como si fuera la más retirada doncella del mundo, y como si enemigos combatieran el castillo de su honestidad, se puso a defenderle, y, levantándose, fue a tomar su arco, que siempre o le traía consigo o le tenía junto a sí; y, poniendo en él una flecha, hasta veinte pasos desviado de la Cenotia, le encaró la flecha. No le contentó mucho a la enamorada dama la postura amenazadora de muerte de Antonio, y, por huir el golpe, desvió el cuerpo, y pasó la flecha volando por junto a la garganta (en esto más bárbaro Antonio de lo que parecía en su traje). Pero no fue el golpe de la flecha en vano, porque a este instante entraba por la puerta de la estancia el maldiciente Clodio, que le sirvió de blanco, y le pasó la boca y la lengua, y le dejó la vida en perpetuo silencio: castigo merecido a sus muchas culpas. Volvió la Cenotia la cabeza, vio el mortal golpe que había hecho la flecha, temió la segunda, y, sin aprovecharse de lo mucho que con su ciencia se prometía, llena de confusión y de miedo, tropezando aquí y cayendo allí, salió del aposento, con intención de vengarse del cruel y desamorado mozo.

Capítulo nueve del segundo libro

NO LE QUEDÓ sabrosa la mano a Antonio del golpe que había hecho; que, aunque acertó errando, como no sabía las culpas de Clodio y había visto la de la Cenotia, quisiera haber sido mejor certero. Llegóse a Clodio por ver si le quedaban algunas reliquias de vida, y vio que todas se las había llevado la muerte; cayó en la cuenta de su yerro, y túvose verdaderamente por bárbaro. Entró en esto su padre, y, viendo la sangre y el cuerpo muerto de Clodio, conoció por la flecha que aquel golpe había sido hecho por la mano de su hijo. Preguntóselo, y respondióle que sí; quiso saber la causa, y también se la dijo.

Admiróse el padre; lleno de indignación le dijo:

-Ven acá, bárbaro, si a los que te aman y te quieren procuras quitar la vida, ¿qué harás a los que te aborrecen? Si tanto presumes de casto y honesto, defiende tu castidad y honestidad con el sufrimiento; que los peligros semejantes no se remedian con las armas, ni con esperar los encuentros, sino con huir de ellos. Bien parece que no sabes lo que le sucedió a aquel mancebo hebreo que dejó la capa en manos de la lasciva señora que le solicitaba. Dejaras tú, ignorante, esa tosca piel que traes vestida, y ese arco con que presumes vencer a la misma valentía; no le armaras contra la blandura de una mujer rendida, que, cuando lo está, rompe por cualquier inconveniente que a su deseo se oponga. Si con esta condición pasas adelante en el discurso de tu vida, por bárbaro serás tenido hasta que la acabes, de todos los que te conocieren. No digo yo que ofendas a Dios en ningún modo, sino que reprehendas, y no castigues, a las que quisieren turbar tus honestos pensamientos; y aparéjate para más de una batalla, que la verdura de tus años y el gallardo brío de tu persona con muchas batallas te amenazan; y no pienses que has de ser siempre solicitado, que alguna vez solicitarás, y, sin alcanzar tus deseos, te alcanzará la muerte en ellos.

Escuchaba Antonio a su padre, los ojos puestos en el suelo, tan vergonzoso como arrepentido. Y lo que le respondió fue:

-No mires, señor, lo que hice, y pésame de haberlo hecho. Procuraré enmendarme de aquí adelante, de modo que no parezca bárbaro por riguroso, ni lascivo por manso. Dése orden de enterrar a Clodio, y de hacerle la satisfacción más conveniente que ser pudiere.

Ya en esto había volado por el palacio la muerte de Clodio, pero no la causa de ella, porque la encubrió la enamorada Cenotia, diciendo sólo que, sin saber por qué, el bárbaro mozo le había muerto.

Llegó esta nueva a los oídos de Auristela, que aún se tenía el papel de Clodio en las manos, con intención de mostrársele a Periandro o a Arnaldo, para que castigasen su atrevimiento; pero, viendo que el cielo había tomado a su cargo el castigo, rompió el papel, y no quiso que saliesen a luz las culpas de los muertos: consideración tan prudente como cristiana. Y, bien que Policarpo se alborotó con el suceso, teniéndose por ofendido de que nadie en su casa vengase sus injurias, no quiso averiguar el caso, sino remitióselo al príncipe Arnaldo, el cual, a ruego de Auristela y al de Transila, perdonó a Antonio y mandó enterrar a Clodio, sin averiguar la culpa de su muerte, creyendo ser verdad lo que Antonio decía, que por yerro le había muerto, sin descubrir los pensamientos de Cenotia, porque a él no le tuviesen de todo en todo por bárbaro.

Pasó el rumor del caso, enterraron a Clodio, quedó Auristela vengada, como si en su generoso pecho albergara género de venganza alguna, así como albergaba en el de la Cenotia, que bebía, como dicen, los vientos, imaginando cómo vengarse del cruel flechero, el cual de allí a dos días se sintió mal dispuesto, y cayó en la cama con tanto descaecimiento que los médicos dijeron que se le acababa la vida, sin conocer de qué enfermedad. Lloraba Ricla, su madre, y su padre Antonio tenía de dolor el corazón consumido; no se podía alegrar Auristela, ni Mauricio; Ladislao y Transila sentían la misma pesadumbre; viendo lo cual Policarpo, acudió a su consejera Cenotia, y le rogó procurase algún remedio a la enfermedad de Antonio, la cual, por no conocerla los médicos, ellos no sabían hallarle. Ella le dio buenas esperanzas, asegurándole que de aquella enfermedad no moriría, pero que convenía dilatar algún tanto la cura. Creyóla Policarpo, como si se lo dijera un oráculo.

De todos estos sucesos no le pesaba mucho a Sinforosa, viendo que por ellos se detendría la partida de Periandro, en cuya vista tenía librado el alivio de su corazón: que, puesto que deseaba que se partiese, pues no podía volver si no se partía, tanto gusto le daba el verle que no quisiera que se partiera.

Llegó una sazón y coyuntura donde Policarpo y sus dos hijas, Arnaldo, Periandro y Auristela, Mauricio, Ladislao y Transila, y Rutilio, que después que escribió el billete a Policarpo, aunque le había roto, de arrepentido andaba triste y pensativo, bien así como el culpado, que piensa que cuantos le miran son sabidores de su culpa; digo que la compañía de los ya nombrados se halló en la estancia del enfermo Antonio, a quien todos fueron a visitar, a pedimiento de Auristela, que ansí a él como a sus padres los estimaba y quería mucho, obligada del beneficio que el mozo bárbaro le había hecho cuando los sacó del fuego de la isla, y la llevó al serrallo de su padre; y más que, como en las comunes desventuras se reconcilian los ánimos y se traban las amistades, por haber sido tantas las que en compañía de Ricla y de Constanza y de los dos Antonios había pasado, ya no solamente por obligación, mas por elección y destino los amaba.

Estando, pues, juntos, como se ha dicho, un día Sinforosa rogó encarecidamente a Periandro les contase algunos sucesos de su vida; especialmente se holgaría de saber de dónde venía la primera vez que llegó a aquella isla, cuando ganó los premios de todos los juegos y fiestas que aquel día se hicieron, en memoria de haber sido el de la elección de su padre. A lo que Periandro respondió que sí haría, si se le permitiese comenzar el cuento de su historia, y no del mismo principio, porque éste no lo podía decir ni descubrir a nadie, hasta verse en Roma con Auristela, su hermana.

Todos le dijeron que hiciese su gusto, que de cualquier cosa que él dijese le recibirían; y el que más contento sintió fue Arnaldo, creyendo descubrir, por lo que Periandro dijese, algo que descubriese quién era. Con este salvoconduto, Periandro dijo desta manera:

Capítulo décimo del segundo libro

Cuenta Periandro el suceso de su viaje

-«EL PRINCIPIO y preámbulo de mi historia, ya que queréis, señores, que os la cuente, quiero que sea éste: que nos contempléis a mi hermana y a mí, con una anciana ama suya, embarcados en una nave, cuyo dueño, en el lugar de parecer mercader, era un gran cosario. Las riberas de una isla barríamos; quiero decir que íbamos tan cerca de ella que distintamente conocíamos, no solamente los árboles, pero sus diferencias. Mi hermana, cansada de haber andado algunos días por el mar, deseó salir a recrearse a la tierra; pidióselo al capitán, y, como sus ruegos tienen siempre fuerza de mandamiento, consintió el capitán en el de su ruego, y en la pequeña barca de la nave, con sólo un marinero, nos echó en tierra a mí y a mi hermana y a Cloelia, que éste era el nombre de su ama. Al tomar tierra, vio el marinero que un pequeño río por una pequeña boca entraba a dar al mar su tributo; hacíanle sombra por una y otra ribera gran cantidad de verdes y hojosos árboles, a quien servían de cristalinos espejos sus transparentes aguas. Rogámosle se entrase por el río, pues la amenidad del sitio nos convidaba. Hízolo así, y comenzó a subir por el río arriba, y, habiendo perdido de vista la nave, soltando los remos, se detuvo y dijo: "Mirad, señores, del modo que habéis de hacer este viaje, y haced cuenta que esta pequeña barca que ahora os lleva es vuestro navío, porque no habéis de volver más al que en la mar os queda aguardando, si ya esta señora no quiere perder la honra, y vos, que decís que sois su hermano, la vida". Díjome, en fin, que el capitán del navío quería deshonorar a mi hermana y darme a mí la muerte, y que atendiésemos a nuestro remedio, que él nos seguiría y acompañaría en todo lugar y en todo acontecimiento. Si nos turbamos con esta nueva, júzguelo el que estuviere acostumbrado a recibirlas malas de los bienes que espera. Agradecíle el aviso, y ofrecíle la recompensa cuando nos viésemos en más felice estado. "Aun bien -dijo Cloelia-que traigo conmigo las joyas de mi señora".

»Y, aconsejándonos los cuatro de lo que hacer debíamos, fue parecer del marinero que nos entrásemos el río adentro: quizá descubriríamos algún lugar que nos defendiese, si acaso los de la nave viniesen a buscarnos. "Mas no vendrán -dijo-, porque no hay gente en todas estas islas que no piense ser cosarios todos cuantos surcan estas riberas, y, en viendo la nave o naves, luego toman las armas para defenderse; y, si no es con asaltos nocturnos y secretos,

»Parecióme bien su consejo; tomé yo el un remo, y ayudéle a llevar el trabajo. Subimos por el río arriba, y, habiendo andado como dos millas, llegó a nuestros oídos el son de muchos y varios instrumentos formado, y luego se nos ofreció a la vista una selva de árboles movibles, que de la una ribera a la otra ligeramente cruzaban. Llegamos más cerca y conocimos ser barcas enramadas lo que parecían árboles, y que el son le formaban los instrumentos que tañían los que en ellas iban. Apenas nos hubieron descubierto, cuando se vinieron a nosotros y rodearon nuestro barco por todas partes. Levantóse en pie mi hermana, y, echándose sus hermosos cabellos a las espaldas, tomados por la frente con una cinta leonada o listón que le dio su ama, hizo de sí casi divina e improvisa muestra; que, como después supe, por tal la tuvieron todos los que en las barcas venían, los cuales a voces, como dijo el marinero, que las entendía, decían: "¿Qué es esto? ¿Qué deidad es esta que viene a visitarnos y a dar el parabién al pescador Carino y a la sin par Selviana de sus felicísimas bodas?" Luego dieron cabo a nuestra barca, y nos llevaron a desembarcar no lejos del lugar donde nos habían encontrado.

»Apenas pusimos los pies en la ribera, cuando un escuadrón de pescadores, que así lo mostraban ser en su traje, nos rodearon, y uno por uno, llenos de admiración y reverencia, llegaron a besar las orillas del vestido de Auristela, la cual, a pesar del temor que la congojaba de las nuevas que la habían dado, se mostró a aquel punto tan hermosa, que yo disculpo el error de aquellos que la tuvieron por divina.

»Poco desviados de la ribera, vimos un tálamo en gruesos troncos de sabina sustentado, cubierto de verde juncia, y oloroso con diversas flores, que servían de alcatifas al suelo; vimos ansimismo levantarse de unos asientos dos mujeres y dos hombres, ellas mozas y ellos gallardos mancebos: la una hermosa sobremanera, y la otra fea sobremanera; el uno gallardo y gentilhomme, y el otro no tanto; y todos cuatro se pusieron de rodillas ante Auristela, y el más gentilhomme dijo: "¡Oh tú, quienquiera que seas, que no puedes ser sino cosa del cielo!; mi hermano y yo, con el extremo a nuestras fuerzas posible, te agradecemos esta merced que nos haces, honrando nuestras pobres y ya de hoy más ricas bodas. Ven, señora, y si en lugar de los palacios de cristal, que en el profundo mar dejas, como una de sus habitadoras, hallares en nuestros ranchos las paredes de conchas y los tejados de mimbres, o por mejor decir, las paredes de mimbres y los tejados de conchas, hallarás, por lo menos, los deseos de oro, y las voluntades de perlas para servirte. Y hago esta comparación, que parece impropia, porque no hallo cosa mejor que el oro, ni más hermosa que las perlas". Inclínose a abrazarle Auristela, confirmando con su gravedad, cortesía y hermosura la opinión que della tenían.

»El pescador menos gallardo se apartó a dar orden a la demás turba a que levantasen las voces en alabanzas de la recién venida extranjera, y que tocasen todos los instrumentos en señal de regocijo. Las dos pescadoras, fea y hermosa, con sumisión humilde, besaron las manos a Auristela, y ella las abrazó cortés y amigablemente. El marinero, contentísimo del suceso, dio cuenta a los pescadores del navío que en el mar quedaba, diciéndoles que era de cosarios, de quien se temía que habían de venir por aquella doncella, que era una principal señora, hija de reyes: que, para mover los corazones a su defensa, le pareció ser necesario levantar este testimonio a mi hermana. Apenas entendieron esto, cuando dejaron los instrumentos regocijados y acudieron a los bélicos, que tocaron "¡arma, arma!" por entrambas riberas.

»Llegó en esto la noche, recogímonos al mismo rancho de los desposados, pusiéronse centinelas hasta la misma boca del río, cebáronse las nasas, tendiéronse las redes y acomodáronse los anzuelos: todo con intención de regalar y servir a sus nuevos huéspedes; y, por más honrarlos, los dos recién desposados no quisieron aquella noche pasarla con sus esposas, sino dejar los ranchos solos a ellas y a Auristela y a Cloelia, y que ellos, con sus amigos, conmigo y con el marinero, se les hiciese guarda y centinela. Y, aunque sobraba la claridad del cielo, por la que ofrecía la de la creciente luna, y en la tierra ardían las hogueras que el nuevo regocijo había encendido, quisieron los desposados que cenásemos en el campo los varones, y dentro del rancho las mujeres. Hízose así, y fue la cena tan abundante que pareció que la tierra se quiso aventajar al mar, y el mar a la tierra, en ofrecer la una sus carnes y la otra sus pescados.

»Acabada la cena, Carino me tomó por la mano, y, paseándose conmigo por la ribera, después de haber dado muestras de tener apasionada el alma, con sollozos y con suspiros, me dijo: "Por tener milagrosa esta tu llegada a tal sazón y tal coyuntura, que con ella has dilatado mis bodas, tengo por cierto que mi mal ha de tener remedio mediante tu consejo; y ansí, aunque me tengas por loco, y por hombre de mal conocimiento y de peor gusto, quiero que sepas que, de aquellas dos pescadoras que has visto, la una fea y la otra hermosa, a mí me ha cabido en suerte de que sea mi esposa la más bella, que tiene por nombre Selviana; pero no sé qué te diga, ni sé qué disculpa dar de la culpa que tengo, ni del yerro que hago. Yo adoro a Leoncia, que es la fea, sin poder ser parte a hacer otra cosa. Con todo esto, te quiero decir una verdad, sin que me engañe en creerla: que a los ojos de mi alma, por las virtudes que en la de Leoncia descubro, ella es la más hermosa mujer del mundo; y hay más en esto: que de Solercio, que es el nombre del otro desposado, tengo más de un barrunto que muere por Selviana. De modo que nuestras cuatro voluntades están trocadas, y esto ha sido por querer todos cuatro obedecer a nuestros padres y a nuestros parientes, que han concertado estos matrimonios. Y no puedo yo pensar en qué razón se consiente que la carga que ha de durar toda la vida se la eche el hombre sobre sus hombros, no por el suyo, sino por el gusto ajeno; y, aunque esta tarde habíamos de dar el consentimiento y el sí del cautiverio de nuestras voluntades, no por industria, sino por ordenación del cielo, que así lo quiero creer, se estorbó con vuestra venida, de modo que aún nos queda tiempo para enmendar nuestra ventura; y para esto te pido consejo, pues, como extranjero, y no parcial de ninguno, sabrás aconsejarme, porque tengo determinado que, si no se descubre alguna senda que me lleve a mi remedio, de ausentarme destas riberas, y no parecer en ellas en tanto que la vida me durare: ora mis padres se enojen, o mis parientes me riñan, o mis amigos se enfaden".

»Atentamente le estuve escuchando, y de improviso me vino a la memoria su remedio, y a la lengua estas mismas palabras: "No hay para qué te ausentes, amigo; a lo menos, no ha de ser antes que yo hable con mi hermana Auristela, que es aquella hermosísima doncella que has visto. Ella es tan discreta que parece que tiene entendimiento divino, como tiene hermosura divina".

»Con esto nos volvimos a los ranchos, y yo conté a mi hermana todo lo que con el pescador había pasado, y ella halló en su discreción el modo como sacar verdaderas mis palabras y el contento de todos; y fue que, apartándose con Leoncia y Selviana a una parte, les dijo: "Sabed, amigas, que de hoy más lo habéis de ser verdaderas mías, que juntamente con este buen parecer que el cielo me ha dado, me dotó de un entendimiento perspicaz y agudo, de tal modo que, viendo el rostro de una persona, le leo el alma y le adivino los pensamientos. Para prueba desta verdad, os presentaré a vosotras por testigos: tú, Leoncia, mueres por Carino, y tú, Selviana, por Solercio; la virginal vergüenza os tiene mudas, pero por mi lengua se romperá vuestro silencio, y por mi consejo, que, sin duda alguna será admitido, se igualarán vuestros deseos. Callad y dejadme hacer, que o yo no tendré discreción, o vosotras tendréis felice fin en vuestros deseos". Ellas, sin responder palabra, sino con besarla infinitas veces las manos y abrazándola estrechamente, confirmaron ser verdad cuanto había dicho, especialmente en lo de sus trocadas aficiones.

»Pasóse la noche, vino el día, cuya alborada fue regocijadísima, porque con nuevos y verdes ramos parecieron adornadas las barcas de los pescadores; sonaron los instrumentos con nuevos y alegres sonos; alzaron las voces todos, con que se aumentó la alegría; salieron los desposados para irse a poner en el tálamo donde habían estado el día de antes; vistiéronse Selviana y Leoncia de nuevas ropas de boda. Mi hermana, de industria, se aderezó y compuso con los mismos vestidos que tenía, y, con ponerse una cruz de diamantes sobre su hermosa frente y unas perlas en sus orejas (joyas de tanto valor que hasta ahora nadie les ha sabido dar su justo precio, como lo veréis cuando os las enseñe), mostró ser imagen sobre el mortal curso levantada. Llevaba asidas de las manos a Selviana y a Leoncia, y, puesta encima del teatro, donde el tálamo estaba, llamó y hizo llegar junto a sí a Carino y a Solercio. Carino llegó temblando y confuso de no saber lo que yo había negociado, y, estando ya el sacerdote a punto para darles las manos y hacer las católicas ceremonias que se usan, mi hermana hizo señales que la escuchasen. Luego se estendió un mudo silencio por toda la gente, tan callado que apenas los aires se movían. Viéndose, pues, prestar grato oído de todos, dijo en alta y sonora voz: "Esto quiere el cielo". Y, tomando por la mano a Selviana, se la entregó a Solercio, y, asiendo de la de Leoncia, se la dio a Carino. "Esto, señores -prosiguió mi hermana-, es, como ya he dicho, ordenación del cielo, y gusto no accidental, sino propio destos venturosos desposados, como lo muestra la alegría de sus rostros y el sí que pronuncian sus lenguas". Abrazáronse los cuatro, con cuya señal todos los circunstantes aprobaron su truco, y confirmaron, como ya he dicho, ser sobrenatural el entendimiento y belleza de mi hermana, pues así había trocado aquellos casi hechos casamientos con sólo mandarlo.

»Celebróse la fiesta, y luego salieron de entre las barcas del río cuatro despalmadas, vistosas por las diversas colores con que venían pintadas, y los remos, que eran seis de cada banda, ni más ni menos; las banderetas, que venían muchas por los filaretos, ansimismo eran de varios colores; los doce remeros de cada una venían vestidos de blanquísimo y delgado lienzo, de aquel mismo modo que yo vine cuando entré la vez primera en esta isla. Luego conocí que querían las barcas correr el palio, que se mostraba puesto en el árbol de otra barca, desviada de las cuatro como tres carreras de caballo. Era el palio de tafetán verde listado de oro, vistoso y grande, pues alcanzaba a besar y aun a pasearse por las aguas. El rumor de la gente y el son de los instrumentos era tan grande que no se dejaba entender lo que mandaba el capitán del mar, que en otra pintada barca venía. Apartáronse las enramadas barcas a una y otra parte del río, dejando un espacio llano en medio, por donde las cuatro competidoras barcas volasen, sin estorbar la vista a la infinita gente que desde el tálamo y desde ambas riberas estaba atenta a mirarlas; y, estando ya los bogadores asidos de las manillas de los remos, descubiertos los brazos, donde se parecían los gruesos nervios, las anchas venas y los torcidos músculos, atendían la señal de la partida, impacientes por la tardanza, y fogosos, bien así como lo suele estar el generoso can de Irlanda cuando su dueño no le quiere soltar de la traílla a hacer la presa que a la vista se le muestra.

»Llegó, en fin, la señal esperada, y a un mismo tiempo arrancaron todas cuatro barcas, que no por el agua, sino por el viento parecía que volaban: una dellas, que llevaba por insignia un vendado Cupido, se adelantó de las demás casi tres cuerpos de la misma barca, cuya ventaja dio esperanza a todos cuantos la miraban de que ella sería la primera que llegase a ganar el deseado premio; otra, que venía tras ella, iba alentando sus esperanzas, confiada en el tesón durísimo de sus remeros; pero, viendo que la primera en ningún modo desmayaba, estuvieron por soltar los remos sus bogadores. Pero son diferentes los fines y acontecimientos de las cosas de aquello que se imagina, porque, aunque es ley que, los combates y contiendas, que ninguno de los que miran favorezca a ninguna de las partes con señales, con voces o con otro algún género que parezca que pueda servir de aviso al combatiente, viendo la gente de la ribera que la barca de la insignia de Cupido se aventajaba tanto a las demás, sin mirar a leyes, creyendo que ya la victoria era suya, dijeron a voces muchos: "¡Cupido vence! ¡El Amor es invencible!" A cuyas voces, por escuchallas, parece que aflojaron un tanto los remeros del Amor.

»Aprovechóse de esta ocasión la segunda barca, que detrás de la del Amor venía, la cual traía por insignia al Interés en figura de un gigante pequeño, pero muy ricamente aderezado, y impelió los remos con tanta fuerza que llegó a igualarse el Interés con el Amor, y, arrimándosele a un costado, le hizo pedazos todos los remos de la diestra banda, habiendo primero la del Interés recogido los suyos y pasado adelante, dejando burladas las esperanzas de los que primero habían cantado la victoria por el Amor; y volvieron a decir: "¡El Interés vence! ¡El Interés vence!"

»La barca tercera traía por insignia a la Diligencia, en figura de una mujer desnuda, llena de alas por todo el cuerpo; que, a traer trompeta en las manos, antes pareciera Fama que Diligencia. Viendo el buen suceso del Interés, alentó su confianza, y sus remeros se esforzaron de modo que llegaron a igualar con el Interés; pero, por el mal gobierno del timonero, se embarazó con las dos barcas primeras, de modo que los unos ni los otros remos fueron de provecho. Viendo lo cual la postrera, que traía por insignia a la Buena Fortuna, cuando estaba desmayada y casi para dejar la empresa, viendo el intricado enredo de las demás barcas, desviándose algún tanto de ellas por no caer en el mismo embarazo, apretó, como decirse suele, los puños y, deslizándose por un lado, pasó delante de todas. Cambiáronse los gritos de los que miraban, cuyas voces sirvieron de aliento a su bogadores, que, embebidos en el gusto de verse mejorados, les parecía que si los que quedaban atrás entonces les llevaran la misma ventaja, no dudaran de alcanzarlos ni de ganar el premio, como lo ganaron, más por ventura que por ligereza.

»En fin, la Buena Fortuna fue la que la tuvo buena entonces, y la mía de agora no lo sería si yo adelante pasase con el cuento de mis muchos y estraños sucesos.» Y así, os ruego, señores, dejemos esto en este punto, que esta noche le daré fin, si es posible que le puedan tener mis desventuras.

Esto dijo Periandro a tiempo que al enfermo Antonio le tomó un terrible desmayo; viendo lo cual su padre, casi como adevino de dónde procedía, los dejó a todos, y se fue, como después parecerá, a buscar a la Cenotia, con la cual le sucedió lo que se dirá en el siguiente capítulo.

Capítulo once del segundo libro

PARÉCEME que si no se arrimara la paciencia al gusto que tenían Arnaldo y Policarpo de mirar a Auristela, y Sinforosa de ver a Periandro, ya la hubieran perdido escuchando su larga plática, de quien juzgaron Mauricio y Ladislao que había sido algo larga y traída no muy a propósito, pues, para contar sus desgracias propias, no había para qué contar los placeres ajenos. Con todo eso, les dio gusto y quedaron con él, esperando oír el fin de su historia, por el donaire siquiera y buen estilo con que Periandro la contaba.

Halló Antonio el padre a la Cenotia, que buscaba en la cámara del rey por lo menos; y, en viéndola, puesta una desenvainada daga en las manos, con cólera española y discurso ciego arremetió a ella, diciéndola (la asió del brazo izquierdo y levantando la daga en alto, la dijo):

-Dame, ¡oh hechicera!, a mi hijo vivo y sano, y luego; si no, haz cuenta que el punto de tu muerte ha llegado. Mira si tienes su vida envuelta en algún envoltorio de agujas sin ojos o de alfileres sin cabezas; mira, ¡oh pérfida!, si la tienes escondida en algún quicio de puerta o en alguna otra parte que sólo tú la sabes.

Pasmóse Cenotia, viendo que la amenazaba una daga desnuda en las manos de un español colérico, y, temblando, le prometió de darle la vida y salud de su hijo; y aun le prometiera de darle la salud de todo el mundo, si se la pidiera: de tal manera se le había entrado el temor en el alma.

Y así, le dijo:

-Suéltame, español, y envaina tu acero, que los que tiene tu hijo le han conducido al término en que está; y, pues sabes que las mujeres somos naturalmente vengativas, y más cuando nos llama a la venganza el desdén y el menosprecio, no te maravilles si la dureza de tu hijo me ha endurecido el pecho. Aconséjale que se humane de aquí adelante con los rendidos, y no menosprecie a los que piedad le pidieren, y vete en paz, que mañana estará tu hijo en disposición de levantarse bueno y sano.

-Cuando así no sea -respondió Antonio-, ni a mí me faltará industria para hallarte, ni cólera para quitarte la vida.

Y con esto la dejó, y ella quedó tan entregada al miedo que, olvidándose de todo agravio, sacó del quicio de una puerta los hechizos que había preparado para consumir la vida poco a poco del riguroso mozo, que con los de su donaire y gentileza la tenía rendida.

Apenas hubo sacado la Cenotia sus endemoniados preparamentos de la puerta, cuando salió la salud perdida de Antonio a plaza, cobrando en su rostro las primeras colores, los ojos vista alegre y las desmayadas fuerzas esforzado brío, de lo que recibieron general contento cuantos le conocían.

Y, estando con él a solas, su padre le dijo:

-En todo cuanto quiero agora decirte, ¡oh hijo!, quiero advertirte que adviertas que se encaminan mis razones a aconsejarte que no ofendas a Dios en ninguna manera; y bien habrás echado de ver esto en quince o diez y seis años que ha que te enseñó la ley que mis padres me enseñaron, que es la católica, la verdadera y en la que se han de salvar y se han salvado todos los que han entrado hasta aquí y han de entrar de aquí adelante en el reino de los cielos. Esta santa ley nos enseña que no estamos obligados a castigar a los que nos ofenden, sino a aconsejarlos la enmienda de sus delitos: que el castigo toca al juez y la reprehensión a todos, como sea con las condiciones que después te diré. Cuando te convidaren a hacer ofensas que redunden en deservicio de Dios, no tienes para qué armar el arco, ni disparar flechas, ni decir injuriosas palabras: que, con no recibir el consejo y apartarte de la ocasión, quedarás vencedor en la pelea, y libre y seguro de verte otra vez en el trance que ahora te has visto. La Cenotia te tenía hechizado, y con hechizos de tiempo señalado, poco a poco, en menos de diez días perdieras la vida si Dios y mi buena diligencia no lo hubiera estorbado; y vente conmigo, porque alegres a todos tus amigos con tu vista, y escuchemos los sucesos de Periandro, que los ha de acabar de contar esta noche.

Prometióle Antonio a su padre de poner en obra todos sus consejos, con el ayuda de Dios, a pesar de todas las persuaciones y lazos que contra su honestidad le armasen.

La Cenotia, en esto, corrida, afrentada y lastimada de la soberbia desamorada del hijo, y de la temeridad y cólera del padre, quiso por mano ajena vengar su agravio, sin privarse de la presencia de su desamorado bárbaro; y, con este pensamiento y resuelta determinación, se fue al rey Policarpo y le dijo:

-Ya sabes, señor, cómo, después que vine a tu casa y a tu servicio, siempre he procurado no apartarme en él con la solicitud posible; sabes también, fiado en la verdad que de mí tienes conocida, que me tienes hecha archivo de tus secretos, y sabes, como prudente, que en los casos propios, y más si se ponen de por medio deseos amorosos, suelen errarse los discursos que, al parecer, van más acertados; y por esto querría que, en el que ahora tienes hecho de dejar ir libremente a Arnaldo y a toda su compañía, vas fuera de toda razón y de todo término. Dime: si no puedes presente rendir a Auristela, ¿cómo la rendirás ausente?; ¿y cómo querrá ella cumplir su palabra, volviendo a tomar por esposo a un varón anciano, que en efeto lo eres, que las verdades que uno conoce de sí mismo no nos pueden engañar, teniéndose ella de su mano a Periandro, que podría ser que no fuese su hermano, y a Arnaldo, príncipe mozo y que no la quiere para menos que para ser su esposa? No dejes, señor, que la ocasión que agora se te ofrece te vuelva la calva en lugar de la guedeja, y puedes tomar ocasión de detenerlos, de querer castigar la insolencia y atrevimiento que tuvo este monstruo bárbaro que viene en su compañía de matar en tu misma casa a aquel que dicen que se llamaba Clodio; que si así lo haces, alcanzarás fama que alberga en tu pecho, no el favor, sino la justicia.

Estaba escuchando Policarpo atentísimamente a la maliciosa Cenotia, que con cada palabra que le decía le atravesaba, como si fuera con agudos clavos, el corazón; y luego luego quisiera correr a poner en efeto sus consejos. Ya le parecía ver a Auristela en brazos de Periandro, no como en los de su hermano, sino como en los de su amante; ya se la contemplaba con la corona en la cabeza del reino de Dinamarca, y que Arnaldo hacía burla de sus amorosos disinios. En fin, la rabia de la endemoniada enfermedad de los celos se le apoderó del alma en tal manera, que estuvo por dar voces y pedir venganza de quien en ninguna cosa le había ofendido. Pero, viendo la Cenotia cuán sazonado le tenía, y cuán prompto para ejecutar todo aquello que más le quisiese aconsejar, le dijo que se sosegase por entonces, y que esperasen a que aquella noche acabase de contar Periandro su historia, porque el tiempo se le diese de pensar lo que más convenía.

Agradecióselo Policarpo, y ella, cruel y enamorada, daba trazas en su pensamiento cómo cumpliese el deseo del rey y el suyo. Llegó en esto la noche; juntáronse a conversación como la vez pasada; volvió Periandro a repetir algunas palabras antes dichas, para que viniese con concierto a anudar el hilo de su historia, que la había dejado en el certamen de las barcas.

Capítulo doce del segundo libro

Prosigue Periandro su agradable historia y el robo de Auristela

LA QUE CON más gusto escuchaba a Periandro era la bella Sinforosa, estando pendiente de sus palabras como con las cadenas que salían de la boca de Hércules: tal era la gracia y donaire con que Periandro contaba sus sucesos. Finalmente, los volvió anudar, como se ha dicho, prosiguiendo desta manera:

-«Al Amor, al Interés y a la Diligencia dejó atrás la Buena Fortuna, que sin ella vale poco la diligencia, no es de provecho el interés, ni el amor puede usar de sus fuerzas. La fiesta de mis pescadores, tan regocijada como pobre, excedió a las de los triunfos romanos: que tal vez en la llaneza y en la humildad suelen esconderse los regocijos más aventajados. Pero, como las venturas humanas estén por la mayor parte pendientes de hilos delgados, y los de la mudanza fácilmente se quiebran y desbaratan, como se quebraron las de mis pescadores, y se retorcieron y fortificaron mis desgracias, aquella noche la pasamos todos en una isla pequeña que en la mitad del río se hacía, convidados del verde sitio y apacible lugar. Holgábanse los desposados, que, sin muestras de parecer que lo eran, con honestidad y diligencia de dar gusto a quien se le había dado tan grande, poniéndolos en aquel deseado y venturoso estado; y así, ordenaron que en aquella isla del río se renovasen las fiestas y se continuasen por tres días.

»La sazón del tiempo, que era la del verano; la comodidad del sitio, el resplandor de la luna, el susurro de las fuentes, la fruta de los árboles, el olor de las flores, cada cosa destas de por sí, y todas juntas, convidaban a tener por acertado el parecer de que allí estuviésemos el tiempo que las fiestas durasen. Pero, apenas nos habíamos reducido a la isla, cuando, de entre un pedazo de bosque que en ella estaba, salieron hasta cincuenta salteadores armados a la ligera, bien como aquellos que quieren robar y huir, todo a un mismo punto; y, como los descuidados acometidos suelen ser vencidos con su mismo descuido, casi sin ponernos en defensa, turbados con el sobresalto, antes nos pusimos a mirar que acometer a los ladrones, los cuales, como hambrientos lobos, arremetieron al rebaño de las simples ovejas, y se llevaron, si no en la boca, en los brazos, a mi hermana Auristela, a Cloelia, su ama, y a Selviana y a Leoncia, como si solamente vinieran a ofendellas, porque se dejaron muchas otras mujeres a quien la naturaleza había dotado de singular hermosura.

»Yo, a quien el estraño caso más colérico que suspenso me puso, me arrojé tras los salteadores, los seguí con los ojos y con las voces, afrentándolos como si ellos fueran capaces de sentir afrentas, solamente para irritarlos a que mis injurias les moviesen a volver a tomar venganza de ellas; pero ellos, atentos a salir con su intento, o no oyeron o no quisieron vengarse, y así, se desaparecieron; y luego los desposados y yo, con algunos de los principales pescadores, nos juntamos, como suele decirse, a consejo, sobre qué haríamos para enmendar nuestro yerro y cobrar nuestras prendas. Uno dijo: "No es posible sino que alguna nave de salteadores está en la mar, y en parte donde con facilidad ha echado esta gente en tierra, quizá sabidores de nuestra junta y de nuestras fiestas. Si esto es así, como sin duda lo imagino, el mejor remedio es que salgan algunos barcos de los nuestros y les ofrezcan todo el rescate que por la presa quisieren, sin detenerse en el tanto más cuanto: que las prendas de esposas hasta las mismas vidas de sus mismos esposos merecen en rescate". "Yo seré -dije entonces-el que haré esa diligencia; que, para conmigo, tanto vale la prenda de mi hermana como si fuera la vida de todos los del mundo". Lo mismo dijeron Carino y Solercio: ellos llorando en público y yo muriendo en secreto.

»Cuando tomamos esta resolución comenzaba anochecer, pero, con todo eso, nos entramos en un barco los desposados y yo con seis remeros; pero, cuando salimos al mar descubierto, había acabado de cerrar la noche, por cuya escuridad no vimos bajel alguno. Determinamos de esperar el venidero día, por ver si con la claridad descubríamos algún navío, y quiso la suerte que descubriésemos dos: el uno que salía del abrigo de la tierra y el otro que venía a tomarla. Conocí que el que dejaba la tierra era el mismo de quien habíamos salido a la isla, así en las banderas como en las velas, que venían cruzadas con una cruz roja. Los que venían de fuera las traían verdes, y los unos y los otros eran cosarios. Pues, como yo imaginé que el navío que salía de la isla era el de los salteadores de la presa, hice poner en una lanza una bandera blanca de seguro; vine arrimando al costado del navío, para tratar del rescate, llevando cuidado de que no me prendiese. Asomóse el capitán al borde, y, cuando quise alzar la voz para hablarle, puedo decir que me la turbó y suspendió y cortó en la mitad del camino un espantoso trueno que formó el disparar de un tiro de artillería de la nave de fuera, en señal que desafiaba a la batalla al navío de tierra. Al mismo punto le fue respondido con otro no menos poderoso, y en un instante se comenzaron a cañonear las dos naves, como si fueran de dos conocidos y irritados enemigos.

ninguno con ella. Viéndose, pues, libres de sus ofensores, se dieron a saquear el navío de las cosas más preciosas que tenía, que por ser de cosarios no era mucho, aunque en mi estimación eran las mejores del mundo, porque se llevaron de las primeras a mi hermana, a Selviana, a Leoncia y a Cloelia, con que enriquecieron su nave, pareciéndoles que en la hermosura de Auristela llevaban un precioso y nunca visto rescate. Quise llegar con mi barca a hablar con el capitán de los vencedores, pero, como mi ventura andaba siempre en los aires, uno de tierra sopló y hizo apartar el navío. No pude llegar a él, ni ofrecer imposibles por el rescate de la presa, y así, fue forzoso el volvernos, sin ninguna esperanza de cobrar nuestra pérdida; y, por no ser otra la derrota que el navío llevaba que aquella que el viento le permitía, no podimos por entonces juzgar el camino que haría, ni señal que nos diese a entender quiénes fuesen los vencedores, para juzgar siquiera, sabiendo su patria, las esperanzas de nuestro remedio. Él voló, en fin, por el mar adelante, y nosotros, desmayados y tristes, nos entramos en el río, donde todos los barcos de los pescadores nos estaban esperando.

»No sé si os diga, señores, lo que es forzoso deciros: un cierto espíritu se entró entonces en mi pecho, que, sin mudarme el ser, me pareció que le tenía más que de hombre; y así, levantándome en pie sobre la barca, hice que la rodeasen todas las demás y estuviesen atentos a estas o otras semejantes razones que les dije: "La baja fortuna jamás se enmendó con la ociosidad ni con la pereza; en los ánimos encogidos nunca tuvo lugar la buena dicha; nosotros mismos nos fabricamos nuestra ventura, y no hay alma que no sea capaz de levantarse a su asiento; los cobardes, aunque nazcan ricos, siempre son pobres, como los avaros mendigos. Esto os digo, ¡oh amigos míos!, para moveros y incitaros a que mejoréis vuestra suerte, y a que dejéis el pobre ajuar de unas redes y de unos estrechos barcos, y busquéis los tesoros que tiene en sí encerrados el generoso trabajo; llamo generoso al trabajo del que se ocupa en cosas grandes. Si suda el cavador rompiendo la tierra, y apenas saca premio que le sustente más que un día, sin ganar fama alguna, ¿por qué no tomará en lugar de la azada una lanza, y, sin temor del sol ni de todas las inclemencias del cielo, procurará ganar con el sustento fama que le engrandezca sobre los demás hombres? La guerra, así como es madrastra de los cobardes, es madre de los valientes, y los premios que por ella se alcanzan se pueden llamar ultramundanos. ¡Ea, pues, amigos, juventud valerosa, poned los ojos en aquel navío que se lleva las caras prendas de vuestros parientes, encerrándonos en estotro, que en la ribera nos dejaron, casi, a lo que creo, por ordenación del cielo! Vamos tras él y hagámonos piratas, no codiciosos, como son los demás, sino justicieros, como lo seremos nosotros. A todos se nos entiende el arte de la marinería; bastimentos hallaremos en el navío con todo lo necesario a la navegación, porque sus contrarios no le despojaron más que de las mujeres; y si es grande el agravio que hemos recibido, grandísima es la ocasión que para vengarle se nos ofrece. Sígame, pues, el que quisiere, que yo os suplico, y Carino y Solercio os lo ruegan, que bien sé que no me han de dejar en esta valerosa empresa".

»Apenas hube acabado de decir estas razones, cuando se oyó un murmúreo por todas las barcas, procedido de que unos con otros se aconsejaban de lo que harían; y entre todos salió una voz que dijo: "Embárcate, generoso huésped, y sé nuestro capitán y nuestra guía, que todos te seguiremos".

»Esta tan improvisa resolución de todos me sirvió de felice auspicio, y, por temer que la dilación de poner en obra mi buen pensamiento no les diese ocasión de madurar su discurso, me adelanté con mi barco, al cual siguieron otros casi cuarenta. Llegué a reconocer el navío, entré dentro, escudriñéle todo, miré lo que tenía y lo que le faltaba, y hallé todo lo que me pudo pedir el deseo que fuese necesario para el viaje. Aconsejéles que ninguno volviese a tierra, por quitar la ocasión de que el llanto de las mujeres y el de los queridos hijos no fuese parte para dejar de poner en efeto resolución tan gallarda. Todos lo hicieron así, y desde allí se despidieron con la imaginación de sus padres, hijos y mujeres: ¡caso extraño, y que ha menester que la cortesía ayude a darle crédito! Ninguno volvió a tierra, ni se acomodó de más vestidos de aquellos con que había entrado en el navío, en el cual, sin repartir los oficios, todos servían de marineros y de pilotos, excepto yo, que fui nombrado por capitán por gusto de todos. Y, encomendándome a Dios, comencé luego a ejercer mi oficio, y lo primero que mandé fue desembarazar el navío de los muertos que habían sido en la pasada refriega y limpiarle de la sangre de que estaba lleno; ordené que se buscasen todas las armas, así ofensivas como defensivas, que en él había, y, repartiéndolas entre todos, di a cada uno la que a mi parecer mejor le estaba; requerí los bastimentos, y, conforme a la gente, tanteé para cuántos días serían bastantes, poco más a menos. Hecho esto, y hecha oración al cielo, suplicándole encaminase nuestro viaje y favoreciese nuestros tan honrados pensamientos, mandé izar las velas, que aún se estaban atadas a las entenas, y que las diéramos al viento, que, como se ha dicho, sopla de la tierra, y, tan alegres como atrevidos y tan atrevidos como confiados, comenzamos a navegar por la misma derrota que nos pareció que llevaba el navío de la presa.» Veisme aquí, señores que me estáis escuchando, hecho pescador y casamentero rico con mi querida hermana y pobre sin ella, robado de salteadores, y subido al grado de capitán contra ellos; que las vueltas de mi fortuna no tienen un punto donde paren, ni términos que las encierren.

-No más -dijo a esta sazón Arnaldo-; no más, Periandro amigo; que, puesto que tú no te canses de contar tus desgracias, a nosotros nos fatiga el oírlas, por ser tantas.

A lo que respondió Periandro:

-Yo, señor Arnaldo, soy hecho como esto que se llama lugar, que es donde todas las cosas caben, y no hay ninguna fuera del lugar, y en mí le tienen todas las que son desgraciadas, aunque, por haber hallado a mi hermana Auristela, las juzgo por dichosas; que el mal que se acaba sin acabar la vida, no lo es.

A esto dijo Transila:

-Yo por mí digo, Periandro, que no entiendo esa razón; sólo entiendo que le será muy grande, si no cumplís el deseo que todos tenemos de saber los sucesos de vuestra historia, que me va pareciendo ser tales que han de dar ocasión a muchas lenguas que las cuenten y muchas injuriosas plumas que la escriban. Suspensa me tiene el veros capitán de salteadores (juzgué merecer este nombre vuestros pescadores valientes), y estaré esperando, también suspensa, cuál fue la primera hazaña que hicistes, y la aventura primera con que encontrastes.

-Esta noche, señora -respondió Periandro-, daré fin, si fuere posible, al cuento, que aún, hasta agora, se está en sus principios.

Quedando todos de acuerdo que aquella noche volviesen a la misma plática, por entonces dio fin Periandro a la suya.

Capítulo trece del segundo libro

Da cuenta Periandro de un notable caso que le sucedió en el mar

LA SALUD del enhechizado Antonio volvió su gallardía a su primera entereza, y con ella se volvieron a renovar en Cenotia sus mal nacidos deseos, los cuales también renovaron en su corazón los temores de verse de él ausente: que los desahuciados de tener en sus males remedio, nunca acaban de desengañarse que lo están, en tanto que veen presente la causa de donde nacen. Y así, procuraba, con todas las trazas que podía imaginar su agudo entendimiento, de que no saliesen de la ciudad ninguno de aquellos huéspedes; y así, volvió a aconsejar a Policarpo que en ninguna manera dejase sin castigo el atrevimiento del bárbaro homicida, y que, por lo menos, ya que no le diese la pena conforme al delito, le debía prender y castigarle siquiera con amenazas, dando lugar que el favor se opusiese por entonces a la justicia, como tal vez se suele hacer en más importantes ocasiones.

No la quiso tomar Policarpo en la que este consejo le ofrecía, diciendo a la Cenotia que era agraviar la autoridad del príncipe Arnaldo, que debajo de su amparo le traía, y enfadar a su querida Auristela, que como a su hermano le trataba; y más, que aquel delito fue accidental y forzoso, y nacido más de desgracia que de malicia; y más, que no tenía parte que le pidiese, y que todos cuantos le conocían afirmaban que aquella pena era condigna de su culpa, por ser el mayor maldiciente que se conocía.

-¿Cómo es esto, señor -replicó la Cenotia-, que, habiendo quedado el otro día entre nosotros de acuerdo de prenderle, con cuya ocasión la tomases de detener a Auristela, ahora estás tan lejos de tomarle? Ellos se te irán, ella no volverá, tú llorarás entonces tu perplejidad y tu mal discurso, a tiempo cuando ni te aprovechen las lágrimas, ni enmendar en la imaginación lo que ahora con nombre de piadoso quieres hacer. Las culpas que comete el enamorado en razón de cumplir su deseo no lo son, en razón de que no es suyo, ni es él el que las comete, sino el amor, que manda su voluntad. Rey eres, y de los reyes las injusticias y rigores son bautizadas con nombre de severidad. Si prendes a este mozo, darás lugar a la justicia; y soltándole, a la misericordia; y en lo uno y en lo otro confirmarás el nombre que tienes de bueno.

Desta manera aconsejaba la Cenotia a Policarpo, el cual, a solas y en todo lugar, iba y venía con el pensamiento en el caso, sin saber resolverse de qué modo podía detener a Auristela sin ofender a Arnaldo, de cuyo valor y poder era razón temiese; pero, en medio de estas consideraciones, y en el de las que tenía Sinforosa, que, por no estar tan recatada ni tan cruel como la Cenotia, deseaba la partida de Periandro, por entrar en la esperanza de la vuelta, se llegó el término de que Periandro volviese a proseguir su historia, que la siguió en esta manera:

-«Ligera volaba mi nave por donde el viento quería llevarla, sin que se le opusiese a su camino la voluntad de ninguno de los que íbamos en ella, dejando todos en el albedrío de la fortuna nuestro viaje, cuando desde lo alto de la gavia vimos caer a un marinero, que, antes que llegase a la cubierta del navío, quedó suspenso de un cordel que traía anudado a la garganta. Llegué con priesa y cortésele, con que estorbé no se le acertase la vida. Quedó como muerto, y estuvo fuera de sí casi dos horas, al cabo de las cuales volvió en sí, y preguntándole la causa de su desesperación, dijo: "Dos hijos tengo, el uno de tres y el otro de cuatro años, cuya madre no pasa de los veinte y dos y cuya pobreza pasa de lo posible, pues sólo se sustentaba del trabajo de estas manos; y, estando yo ahora encima de aquella gavia, volví los ojos al lugar donde los dejaba, y, casi como si alcanzara a verlos, los vi hincados de rodillas, las manos levantadas al cielo, rogando a Dios por la vida de su padre, y llamándome con palabras tiernas; vi ansimismo llorar a su madre, dándome nombres de cruel sobre todos los hombres. Esto imaginé con tan gran vehemencia que me fuerza a decir que lo vi, para no poner duda en ello. Y el ver que esta nave vuela y me aparta dellos, y que no sé dónde vamos, y la poca o ninguna obligación que me obligó a entrar en ella, me trastornó el sentido, y la desesperación me puso este cordel en las manos, y yo le di a mi garganta, por acabar en un punto los siglos de pena que me amenazaba".

»Este suceso movió a lástima a cuantos le escuchábamos, y, habiéndole consolado y casi asegurado que presto daríamos la vuelta contentos y ricos, le pusimos dos hombres de guarda que le estorbasen volver a poner en ejecución su mal intento, y así le dejamos; y yo, porque este suceso no despertase en la imaginación de alguno de los demás el querer imitarle, les dije que "la mayor cobardía del mundo era el matarse, porque el homicida de sí mismo es señal que le falta el ánimo para sufrir los males que teme; y ¿qué mayor mal puede venir a un hombre que la muerte?; y, siendo esto así, no es locura el dilatarla: con la vida se enmiendan y mejoran las malas suertes, y con la muerte desesperada no sólo no se acaban y se mejoran, pero se empeoran y comienzan de nuevo. Digo esto, compañeros míos, porque no os asombre el suceso que habéis visto deste nuestro desesperado: que aun hoy comenzamos a navegar, y el ánimo me está diciendo que nos aguardan y esperan mil felices sucesos".

»Todos dieron la voz a uno para responder por todos, el cual desta manera dijo: "Valeroso capitán, en las cosas que mucho se consideran, siempre se hallan muchas dificultades, y en los hechos valerosos que se acometen, alguna parte se ha de dar a la razón y muchas a la ventura; y en la buena que hemos tenido en haberte elegido por nuestro capitán, vamos seguros y confiados de alcanzar los buenos sucesos que dices. Quédense nuestras mujeres, quédense nuestros hijos, lloren nuestros ancianos padres, visite la pobreza a todos; que los cielos, que sustentan los gusarapos del agua, tendrán cuidado de sustentar los hombres de la tierra. Manda, señor, izar las velas; pon centinelas en las gavia por ver si descubren en qué podamos mostrar que, no temerarios, sino atrevidos, son los que aquí vamos a servirte".

»Agradéciles la respuesta, hice izar todas las velas, y, habiendo navegado aquel día, al amanecer del siguiente, la centinela de la gavia mayor dijo a grandes voces: "¡Navío!, ¡navío!" Preguntáronle qué derrota llevaba, y que de qué tamaño parecía. Respondió que era tan grande como el nuestro, y que le teníamos por la proa. "Alto, pues -dije-, amigos, tomad las armas en las manos, y mostrad con éstos, si son cosarios, el valor que os ha hecho dejar vuestras redes". Hice luego cargar las velas, y en poco más de dos horas descubrimos y alcanzamos el navío, al cual embestimos de golpe, y, sin hallar defensa alguna, saltaron en él más de cuarenta de mis soldados, que no tuvieron en quien ensangrentar las espadas, porque solamente traía algunos marineros y gente de servicio; y, mirándolo bien todo, hallaron en un apartamiento puestos en un cepo de hierro por la garganta, desviados uno de otro casi dos varas, a un hombre de muy buen parecer y a una mujer más que medianamente hermosa; y en otro aposento hallaron, tendido en un rico lecho, a un venerable anciano, de tanta autoridad que obligó su presencia a que todos leuviésemos respeto. No se movió del lecho, porque no podía; pero, levantándose un poco, alzó la cabeza y dijo: "Envainad, señores, vuestras espadas, que en este navío no hallaréis ofensores en quien ejercitarlas; y si la necesidad os hace y fuerza a usar este oficio de buscar vuestra ventura a costa de las ajenas, a parte habéis llegado que os hará dichosos, no porque en este navío haya riquezas ni alhajas que os enriquezcan, sino porque yo voy en él, que soy Leopoldio, el rey de los dánaos".

»Este nombre de rey me avivó el deseo de saber qué sucesos habían traído a un rey estar tan solo y tan sin defensa alguna. Lleguéme a él, y preguntéle si era verdad lo que decía, porque, aunque su grave presencia prometía serlo, el poco aparato con que navegaba hacía poner en duda el creerle. "Manda, señor -respondió el anciano-, que esta gente se sosiegue, y escúchame un poco, que en breves razones te contaré cosas grandes". Sosegáronse mis compañeros, y ellos y yo estuvimos atentos a lo que decir quería, que fue esto: "El cielo me hizo rey del reino de Dána, que heredé de mis padres, que también fueron reyes y lo heredaron de sus pasados, sin haberles introducido a serlo la tiranía, ni otra negociación alguna. Caséme en mi mocedad con una mujer mi igual; murióse, sin dejarme sucesión alguna. Corrió el tiempo, y muchos años me contuve en los límites de una honesta viudez; pero, al fin, por culpa mía, que de los pecados que se cometen nadie ha de echar la culpa a otro, sino a sí mismo; digo que, por culpa mía, tropecé y caí en la de enamorarme de una dama de mi mujer, que, a ser ella la que debía, hoy fuera el día que fuera reina, y no se viera atada y puesta en un cepo, como ya debéis de haber visto. Ésta, pues, pareciéndole no ser injusto anteponer los rizos de un criado mío a mis canas, se envolvió con él, y no solamente tuvo gusto de quitarme la honra, sino que procuró, junto con ella, quitarme la vida, maquinando contra mi persona con tan estrañas trazas, con tales embustes y rodeos, que, a no ser avisado con tiempo, mi cabeza estuviera fuera de mis hombros en una escarpia al viento, y las suyas coronadas del reino de Dánae. Finalmente, yo descubrí sus intentos a tiempo, cuando ellos también tuvieron noticia de que yo lo sabía. Una noche, en un pequeño navío que estaba con las velas en alto para partirse, por huir del castigo de su culpa y de la indignación de mi furia, se embarcaron. Súpelo, volé a la marina en las alas de mi cólera, y hallé que habría veinte horas que habían dado las suyas al viento; y yo, ciego del enojo y turbado con el deseo de la venganza, sin hacer algún prudente discurso, me embarqué en este navío y los seguí, no con autoridad y aparato de rey, sino como particular enemigo. Hallélos a cabo de diez días en una isla que llaman del Fuego; cogílos y descuidados, y, puestos en ese cepo que habréis visto, los llevaba a Dánae, para darles, por justicia y procesos fulminados, la debida pena a su delito. Esta es pura verdad, los delincuentes ahí están, que, aunque no quieran, la acreditan. Yo soy el rey de Dánae, que os prometo cien mil monedas de oro, no porque las traiga aquí, sino porque os doy mi palabra de ponéros las y enviáros las donde quisiéredes, para cuya seguridad, si no basta mi palabra, llevadme con vosotros en vuestro navío y dejad que en este mío, ya vuestro, vaya alguno de los míos a Dánae, y traiga este dinero donde le ordenáredes. Y no tengo más que deciros".

»Mirábanse mis compañeros unos a otros, y diéronme la vez de responder por todos, aunque no era menester, pues yo, como capitán, lo podía y debía hacer. Con todo esto, quise tomar parecer con Carino y con Solercio y con algunos de los demás, porque no entendiesen que me quería alzar de hecho con el mando que de su voluntad ellos tenían dado; y así, la respuesta que di al rey fue decirle: "Señor, a los que aquí venimos, no nos puso la necesidad las armas en las manos, ni ninguno otro deseo que de ambiciosos tenga semejanza; buscando vamos ladrones, a castigar vamos salteadores y a destruir piratas; y, pues tú estás tan lejos de ser persona deste género, segura está tu vida de nuestras armas; antes, si has menester que con ellas te sirvamos, ninguna cosa habrá que nos lo impida; y, aunque agradecemos la rica promesa de tu rescate, soltamos la promesa, que, pues no estás cautivo, no estás obligado al cumplimiento de ella. Sigue en paz tu camino, y, en recompensa que vas de nuestro encuentro mejor de lo que pensaste, te suplicamos perdones a tus ofensores; que la grandeza del rey algún tanto resplandece más en ser misericordiosos que justicieros". Quisiérase humillar Leopoldio a mis pies, pero no lo consintió ni mi cortesía ni su enfermedad. Pedíle me diese alguna pólvora si llevaba, y partiese con nosotros de sus bastimentos, lo cual se hizo al punto. Aconsejéle, asimismo, que si no perdonaba a sus dos enemigos, los dejase en mi navío, que yo los pondría en parte donde no la tuviesen más de ofenderle. Dijo que sí haría, porque la presencia del ofensor suele renovar la injuria en el ofendido. Ordené que luego nos volviésemos a nuestro navío con la pólvora y bastimentos que el rey partió con nosotros; y, queriendo pasar a los dos prisioneros, ya sueltos y libres del pesado cepo, no dio lugar un recio viento que de improviso se levantó, de modo que apartó los dos navíos, sin dejar que otra vez se juntasen. Desde el borde de mi nave me despedí del rey a voces, y él, en los brazos de los suyos, salió de su lecho y se despidió de nosotros. Y yo me despido agora, porque la segunda hazaña me fuerza a descansar para entrar en ella.»

Capítulo catorce del segundo libro

A TODOS dio general gusto de oír el modo con que Periandro contaba su estraña peregrinación, si no fue a Mauricio, que, llegándose al oído de Transila, su hija, le dijo:

-Paréceme, Transila, que con menos palabras y más sucintos discursos pudiera Periandro contar los de su vida, porque no había para qué detenerse en decirnos tan por estenso las fiestas de las barcas, ni aun los casamientos de los pescadores; porque los episodios que para ornato de las historias se ponen no han de ser tan grandes como la misma historia; pero yo, sin duda, creo que Periandro nos quiere mostrar la grandeza de su ingenio y la elegancia de sus palabras.

-Así debe de ser -respondió Transila-, pero lo que yo sé decir es que, ora se dilate o se sucinte en lo que dice, todo es bueno y todo da gusto.

Pero ninguno le recebía mayor, como ya creo que otra vez se ha dicho, como Sinforosa, que cada palabra que Periandro decía, así le regalaba el alma que la sacaba de sí misma. Los revueltos pensamientos de Policarpo no le dejaban estar muy atento a los razonamientos de Periandro, y quisiera que no le quedara más que decir, porque le dejara a él más que hacer; que las esperanzas propincuas de alcanzar el bien que se desea fatigan mucho más que las remotas y apartadas.

Y era tanto el deseo que Sinforosa tenía de oír el fin de la historia de Periandro, que solicitó el volverse a juntar otro día, en el cual Periandro prosiguió su cuento en esta forma:

-«Contemplad, señores, a mis marineros, compañeros y soldados, más ricos de fama que de oro, y a mí con algunas sospechas de que no les hubiese parecido bien mi liberalidad; y, puesto que nació tan de su voluntad como de la mía, en la libertad de Leopoldio, como no son todas unas las condiciones de los hombres, bien podía yo temer no estuviesen todos contentos, y que les pareciese que sería difícil recompensar la pérdida de cien mil monedas de oro, que tantas eran las que prometió Leopoldio por su rescate; y esta consideración me movió a decirles: "Amigos míos, nadie esté triste por la perdida ocasión de alcanzar el gran tesoro que nos ofreció el rey, porque os hago saber que una onza de buena fama vale más que una libra de perlas; y esto no lo puede saber sino el que comienza a gustar de la gloria que da el tener buen nombre. El pobre a quien la virtud enriquece suele llegar a ser famoso, como el rico, si es vicioso, puede venir y viene a ser infame; la liberalidad es una de las más agradables virtudes, de quien se engendra la buena fama; y es tan verdad esto que no hay liberal mal puesto, como no hay avaro que no lo sea".

»Más iba a decir, pareciéndome que me daban todos tan gratos oídos como mostraban sus alegres semblantes, cuando me quitó las palabras de la boca el descubrir un navío que, no lejos del nuestro, a orza por delante de nosotros pasaba. Hice tocar a arma, y dile caza con todas las velas tendidas y en breve rato me le puse a tiro de cañón; y, disparando uno sin bala, en señal de que amainase, lo hizo así, soltando las velas de alto abajo. Llegando más cerca, vi en él uno de los más estraños espectáculos del mundo: vi que, pendientes de las entenas y de las jarcias, venían más de cuarenta hombres ahorcados; admiróme el caso, y, abordando con el navío, saltaron mis soldados en él, sin que nadie se lo defendiese. Hallaron la cubierta llena de sangre y de cuerpos de hombres semivivos, unos con las cabezas partidas, y otros con las manos cortadas; tal vomitando sangre, y tal vomitando el alma; éste gimiendo dolorosamente, y aquél gritando sin paciencia alguna. Esta mortandad y fracaso daba señales de haber sucedido sobremesa, porque los manjares nadaban entre la sangre, y los vasos mezclados con ella guardaban el olor del vino. En fin, pisando muertos y hollando heridos, pasaron los míos adelante, y en el castillo de popa hallaron puestas en escuadrón hasta doce hermosísimas mujeres, y delante dellas una, que mostraba ser su capitana, armada de un coselete blanco, y tan terso y limpio que pudiera servir de espejo, a quererse mirar en él; traía puesta la gola, pero no las escarcelas ni los brazaletes; el morrión sí, que era de hechura de una enroscada sierpe, a quien adornaban infinitas y diversas piedras de colores varios; tenía un venablo en las manos, tachonado de arriba abajo con clavos de oro, con una gran cuchilla de agudo y luciente acero forjada, con que se mostraba tan briosa y tan gallarda que bastó a detener su vista la furia de mis soldados, que con admirada atención se pusieron a mirarla.

»Yo, que de mi nave la estaba mirando, por verla mejor, pasé a su navío, a tiempo cuando ella estaba diciendo: "Bien creo, ¡oh soldados!, que os pone más admiración que miedo este pequeño escuadrón de mujeres que a la vista se os ofrece, el cual, después de la venganza que hemos tomado de nuestros agravios, no hay cosa que pueda engendrar en nosotras temor alguno. Embestid, si venís sedientos de sangre, y derramad la nuestra quitándonos las vidas; que, como no nos quitéis las honras, las daremos por bien empleadas. Sulpicia es mi nombre, sobrina soy de Cratilo, rey de Bituania; casóme mi tío con el gran Lampidio, tan famoso por linaje como rico de los bienes de naturaleza y de los de la fortuna. Íbamos los dos a ver al rey mi tío, con la seguridad que nos podía ofrecer ir entre nuestros vasallos y criados, todos obligados por las buenas obras que siempre les hicimos; pero la hermosura y el vino, que suelen trastornar los más vivos entendimientos, les borró las obligaciones de la memoria, y en su lugar les puso los gustos de la lascivia. Anoche bebieron de modo que les sepultó en profundo sueño, y algunos medio dormidos acudieron a poner las manos en mi esposo, y, quitándole la vida, dieron principio a su abominable intento. Pero, como es cosa natural defender cada uno su vida, nosotras, por morir vengadas siquiera, nos pusimos en defensa, aprovechándonos del poco tiento y borrachez con que nos acometían, y con algunas armas que les quitamos, y con cuatro criados que, libres del humo de Baco, nos acudieron, hicimos en ellos lo que muestran esos muertos que están sobre esa cubierta; y, pasando adelante con nuestra venganza, hemos hecho que esos árboles y esas entenas produzcan el fruto que de ellas veis pendiente: cuarenta son los ahorcados, y si fueran cuarenta mil, también murieran, porque su poca o ninguna defensa, y nuestra cólera, a toda esta crueldad, si por ventura lo es, se extendía. Riqueza traigo que poder repartir, aunque mejor diría que vosotros podáis tomar; solo puedo añadir que os las entregaré de buena gana. Tomadlas, señores, y no toquéis en nuestras honras, pues con ellas antes quedaréis infames que ricos".

»Púsose en efeto mi mandamiento, y, llena de admiración y de espanto, se me humilló Sulpicia, la cual, como persona que no acertaba a saber lo que le había sucedido, tampoco acertaba a responderme, y lo que hizo fue mandar a una de sus damas le hiciese traer los cofres de sus joyas y de sus dineros. Hízolo así la dama, y en un instante, como aparecidos o llovidos del cielo, me pusieron delante cuatro cofres llenos de joyas y dineros. Abriólos Sulpicia, y hizo muestra de aquel tesoro a los ojos de mis pescadores, cuyo resplandor quizá, y aun sin quizá, cegó en algunos la intención que de ser liberales tenían, porque hay mucha diferencia de dar lo que se posee y se tiene en las manos, a dar lo que está en esperanzas de poseerse. Sacó Sulpicia un rico collar de oro, resplandeciente por las ricas piedras que en él venían engastadas, y diciendo: "Toma, capitán valeroso, esta prenda rica, no por otra cosa que por serlo la voluntad con que se te ofrece: dádiva es de una pobre viuda, que ayer se vio en la cumbre de la buena fortuna, por verse en poder de su esposo, y hoy se vee sujeta a la discreción destos soldados que te rodean, entre los cuales puedes repartir estos tesoros, que, según se dice, tienen fuerzas para quebrantar las peñas". A lo que yo respondí: "Dádivas de tan gran señora se han de estimar como si fuesen mercedes". Y, tomando el collar, me volví a mis soldados y les dije: "Esta joya es ya mía, soldados y amigos míos, y así puedo disponer de ella como cosa propia, cuyo precio, por ser a mi parecer inestimable, no conviene que se dé a uno solo. Tómeme y guárdele el que quisiere, que, en hallando quien le compre, se dividirá el precio entre todos, y quédese sin tocar lo que la gran Sulpicia os ofrece, porque vuestra fama quede con este hecho frizando con el cielo". A lo que uno respondió: "Quisiéramos, ¡oh buen capitán!, que no nos hubieras prevenido con el consejo que nos has dado, porque vieras que de nuestra voluntad correspondíamos a la tuya. Vuelve el collar a Sulpicia: la fama que nos prometes, no hay collar que la ciña ni límite que la contenga". Quedé contentísimo de la respuesta de mis soldados, y Sulpicia admirada de su poca codicia.

»Olvidaba de deciros cómo volví el collar a Sulpicia, y ella le recibió a fuerza de mis importunaciones, y casi tuvo a afrenta que le estimase yo en tan poco que se le volviese.

»Entré en consulta con los míos sobre qué derrota tomaríamos, y concluyóse que la que el viento llevase, pues por ella habían de caminar los demás navíos que por el mar navegasen, o, por lo menos, si el viento no hiciese a su propósito, harían bordos hasta que les viniese a cuento. Llegó en esto la noche, clara y serena, y yo, llamando a un pescador marinero que nos servía de maestro y piloto, me senté en el castillo de popa, y con ojos atentos me puse a mirar el cielo.»

-Apostaré -dijo a esta sazón Mauricio a Transila, su hija-que se pone agora Periandro a describirnos toda la celeste esfera, como si importase mucho a lo que va contando el declararnos los movimientos del cielo. Yo, por mí, deseando estoy que acabe, porque el deseo que tengo de salir de esta tierra no da lugar a que me entretenga ni ocupe en saber cuáles son fijas o cuáles erráticas estrellas; cuanto más, que yo sé de sus movimientos más de lo que él me puede decir.

En tanto que Mauricio y Transila esto con sumisa voz hablaban, cobró aliento Periandro para proseguir su historia en esta forma:

Capítulo quince del segundo libro

-«COMENZABA a tomar posesión el sueño y el silencio de los sentidos de mis compañeros, y yo me acomodaba a preguntar al que estaba conmigo muchas cosas de las necesarias para saber usar el arte de la marinería, cuando, de improviso, comenzaron a llover, no gotas, sino nubes enteras de agua sobre la nave, de modo que no parecía sino que el mar todo se había subido a la región del viento, y desde allí se dejaba descolgar sobre el navío. Alborotámonos todos, y puestos en pie, mirando a todas partes, por unas vimos el cielo claro, sin dar muestras de borrasca alguna, cosa que nos puso en miedo y en admiración. En esto, el que estaba conmigo dijo: "Sin duda alguna, esta lluvia procede de la que derraman por las ventanas que tienen más abajo de los ojos aquellos monstruosos pescados que se llaman náufragos; y si esto es así, en gran peligro estamos de perdernos: menester es disparar toda la artillería, con cuyo ruido se espantan". En esto, vi alzar y poner en el navío un cuello como de serpiente terrible, que, arrebatando un marinero, se le engulló y tragó de improviso, sin tener necesidad de mascarle. "Náufragos son -dijo el piloto-; disparemos con balas o sin ellas, que el ruido y no el golpe, como tengo dicho, es el que ha de librarnos".

»Traía el miedo confusos y agazapados los marineros, que no osaban levantarse en pie, por no ser arrebatados de aquellos vestiglos; con todo eso, se dieron prisa a disparar la artillería, y a dar voces unos, y acudir otros a la bomba para volver el agua al agua. Tendimos todas las velas, y, como si huyéramos de alguna gruesa armada de enemigos, huimos el sobre estante peligro, que fue el mayor en que hasta entonces nos habíamos visto. Otro día, al crepúsculo de la noche, nos hallamos en la ribera de una isla no conocida por ninguno de nosotros, y, con disinio de hacer agua en ella, quisimos esperar el día sin apartarnos de su ribera. Amainamos las velas, arrojamos las áncoras y entregamos al reposo y al sueño los trabajados cuerpos, de quien el sueño tomó posesión blanda y suavemente.

nos suspendieron las almas y alegraron los sentidos; de algunos pendían ramos de rubíes, que parecían guindas, o guindas que parecían granos de rubíes; de otros pendían camuesas, cuyas mejillas, la una era de rosa, la otra de finísimo topacio; en aquél se mostraban las peras, cuyo olor era de ámbar y cuyo color de los que se forma en el cielo cuando el sol se traspone. En resolución, todas las frutas de quien tenemos noticia estaban allí en su sazón, sin que las diferencias del año las estorbasen: todo allí era primavera, todo verano, todo estío sin pesadumbre, y todo otoño agradable, con extremo increíble. Satisfacía a todos nuestros cinco sentidos lo que mirábamos: a los ojos, con la belleza y la hermosura; a los oídos, con el ruido manso de las fuentes y arroyos, y con el son de los infinitos pajarillos, que con no aprendidas voces formado, los cuales, saltando de árbol en árbol y de rama en rama, parecía que en aquel distrito tenían cautiva su libertad y que no querían ni acertaban a cobrarla; al olfato, con el olor que de sí despedían las yerbas, las flores y los frutos; al gusto, con la prueba que hicimos de la suavidad dellos; al tacto, con tenerlos en las manos, con que nos parecía tener en ellas las perlas del Sur, los diamantes de las Indias y el oro del Tíbar.»

-Pésame -dijo a esta sazón Ladislao a su suegro Mauricio-que se haya muerto Clodio; que a fee que le había dado bien que decir Periandro en lo que va diciendo.

-Callad, señor -dijo Transila, su esposa-, que, por más que digáis, no podréis decir que no prosigue bien su cuento Periandro.

El cual, como se ha dicho, cuando algunas razones se entremetían de los circunstantes, él tomaba aliento para proseguir en las suyas; que, cuando son largas, aunque sean buenas, antes enfadan que alegran.

«No es nada lo que hasta aquí he dicho -prosiguió Periandro-, porque, a lo que resta por decir, falta entendimiento que lo perciba, y aun cortesías que lo crean. Volved, señores, los ojos, y haced cuenta que veis salir del corazón de una peña, como nosotros lo vimos, sin que la vista nos pudiese engañar; digo que vimos salir de la abertura de una peña, primero un suavísimo son, que hirió nuestros oídos y nos hizo estar atentos, de diversos instrumentos de música formado; luego salió un carro, que no sabré decir de qué materia, aunque diré su forma, que era de una nave rota que escapaba de alguna gran borrasca; tirábanla doce poderosísimos jimios, animales lascivos. Sobre el carro venía una hermosísima dama, vestida de una rozagante ropa de varias y diversas colores adornada, coronada de amarillas y amargas adelfas. Venía arrimada a un bastón negro, y en él fija una tablachina o escudo, donde venían estas letras: Sensualidad. Tras ella salieron otras muchas hermosas mujeres, con diferentes instrumentos en las manos, formando una música, ya alegre y ya triste, pero todas singularmente regocijadas.

»Todos mis compañeros y yo estábamos atónitos, como si fuéramos estatuas sin voz, de dura piedra formados. Llegóse a mí la Sensualidad, y con voz entre airada y suave me dijo: "Costarte ha, generoso mancebo, el ser mi enemigo, si no la vida, a lo menos el gusto". Y, diciendo esto, pasó adelante, y las doncellas de la música arrebataron, que así se puede decir, siete o ocho de mis marineros, y se los llevaron consigo, y volvieron a entrarse, siguiendo a su señora, por la abertura de la peña. Volvíme yo entonces a los míos para preguntarles qué les parecía de lo que habían visto, pero estorbólo otra voz o voces que llegaron a nuestros oídos, bien diferentes que las pasadas, porque eran más suaves y regaladas; y formábanlas un escuadrón de hermosísimas, al parecer, doncellas, y, según la guía que traían, éranlo sin duda, porque venía delante mi hermana Auristela, que, a no tocarme tanto, gastara algunas palabras en alabanza de su más que humana hermosura. ¿Qué me pidieran a mí entonces que no diera, en albricias de tan rico hallazgo? Que, a pedirme la vida, no la negara, si no fuera por no perder el bien tan sin pensarlo hallado.

»Traía mi hermana a sus dos lados dos doncellas, de las cuales la una me dijo: "La Continencia y la Pudicicia, amigas y compañeras, acompañamos perpetuamente a la Castidad, que en figura de tu querida hermana Auristela hoy ha querido disfrazarse, ni la dejaremos hasta que con dichoso fin le dé a sus trabajos y peregrinaciones en la alma ciudad de Roma". Entonces yo, a tan felices nuevas atento, y de tan hermosa vista admirado, y de tan nuevo y extraño acontecimiento por su grandeza y por su novedad mal seguro, alcé la voz para mostrar con la lengua la gloria que en el alma tenía, y, queriendo decir: "¡oh únicas consoladoras de mi alma; oh ricas prendas por mi bien halladas, dulces y alegres en éste y en otro cualquier tiempo!", fue tanto el ahínco que puse en decir esto, que rompí el sueño, y la visión hermosa desapareció, y yo me hallé en mi navío con todos los míos, sin que faltase alguno de ellos.»

A lo que dijo Constanza:

-¿Luego, señor Periandro, dormíades?

-Sí -respondió-; porque todos mis bienes son soñados.

-En verdad -replicó Constanza-, que ya quería preguntar a mi señora Auristela adónde había estado el tiempo que no había parecido.

-De tal manera -respondió Auristela- ha contado su sueño mi hermano, que me iba haciendo dudar si era verdad o no lo que decía.

A lo que añadió Mauricio:

-Esas son fuerzas de la imaginación, en quien suelen representarse las cosas con tanta vehemencia que se aprehenden de la memoria, de manera que quedan en ella, siendo mentiras, como si fueran verdades.

A todo esto callaba Arnaldo, y consideraba los afectos y demostraciones con que Periandro contaba su historia, y de ninguno dellos podía sacar en limpio las sospechas que en su alma había infundido el ya muerto maldiciente Clodio, de no ser Auristela y Periandro verdaderos hermanos.

Con todo eso, dijo:

-Prosigue, Periandro, tu cuento, sin repetir sueños, porque los ánimos trabajados siempre los engendran muchos y confusos, y porque la sin par Sinforosa está esperando que llegues a decir de dónde venías la primera vez que a esta isla llegaste, de donde saliste coronado de vencedor de las fiestas que por la elección de su padre cada año en ella se hacen.

-El gusto de lo que soñé -respondió Periandro-me hizo no advertir de cuán poco fruto son las digresiones en cualquiera narración, cuando ha de ser sucinta y no dilatada.

Callaba Policarpo, ocupando la vista en mirar a Auristela y el pensamiento en pensar en ella; y así, para él importaba muy poco, o nada, que callase o que hablase Periandro, el cual, advertido ya de que algunos se cansaban de su larga plática, determinó de proseguirla abreviándola y siguiéndola en las menos palabras que pudiese. Y así, dijo:

Capítulo diez y seis del segundo libro

Prosigue Periandro su historia

-«DESPERTÉ del sueño, como he dicho. Tomé consejo con mis compañeros qué derrota tomaríamos, y salió decretado que por donde el viento nos llevase; que, pues íbamos en busca de cosarios, los cuales nunca navegan contra viento, era cierto el hallarlos. Y había llegado a tanto mi simpleza, que pregunté a Carino y a Solercio si habían visto a sus esposas en compañía de mi hermana Auristela cuando yo la vi soñando. Riéronse de mi pregunta y obligáronme y aun forzáronme a que les contase mi sueño.

»Dos meses anduvimos por el mar sin que nos sucediese cosa de consideración alguna, puesto que le escombramos de más de sesenta navíos de cosarios, que, por serlo verdaderos, adjudicamos sus robos a nuestro navío y le llenamos de innumerables despojos, con que mis compañeros iban alegres, y no les pesaba de haber trocado el oficio de pescadores en el de piratas, porque ellos no eran ladrones sino de ladrones, ni robaban sino lo robado.

»Sucedió, pues, que un porfiado viento nos salteó una noche, que, sin dar lugar a que amainásemos algún tanto o templásemos las velas, en aquel término que las halló, las tendió y acosó de modo que, como he dicho, más de un mes navegamos por una misma derrota; tanto que, tomando mi piloto el altura del polo, donde nos tomó el viento, y tanteando las leguas que hacíamos por hora, y los días que habíamos navegado, hallamos ser cuatrocientas leguas poco más o menos. Volvió el piloto a tomar la altura, y vio que estaba debajo del Norte, en el paraje de Noruega, y, con voz grande y mayor tristeza, dijo: "Desdichados de nosotros, que si el viento no nos concede a dar la vuelta para seguir otro camino, en éste se acabará el de nuestra vida, porque estamos en el mar Glacial; digo, en el mar helado, y si aquí nos saltea el hielo, quedaremos empedrados en estas aguas". Apenas hubo dicho esto, cuando sentimos que el navío tocaba por los lados y por la quilla como en movibles peñas, por donde se conoció que ya el mar se comenzaba a helar, cuyos montes de hielo, que por de dentro se formaban, impedían el movimiento del navío. Amainamos de golpe, porque, topando en ellos, no se abriese, y en todo aquel día y aquella noche se congelaron las aguas tan duramente y se apretaron de modo que, cogiéndonos en medio, dejaron al navío engastado en ellas, como lo suele estar la piedra en el anillo. Casi como en un instante comenzó el hielo a entumecer los cuerpos y a entristecer nuestras almas, y, haciendo el miedo su oficio, considerando el manifiesto peligro, no nos dimos más días de vida que los que pudiese sustentar el bastimento que en el navío hubiese, en el cual bastimento desde aquel punto se puso tasa, y se repartió por orden, tan miserable y estrechamente que desde luego comenzó a matarnos la hambre. Tendimos la vista por todas partes, y no topamos con ella en cosa que pudiese alentar nuestra esperanza, si no fue con un bulto negro, que a nuestro parecer estaría de nosotros seis o ocho millas; pero luego imaginamos que debía de ser algún navío a quien la común desgracia de hielo tenía aprisionado.

»Este peligro sobrepuja y se adelanta a los infinitos en que de perder la vida me he visto, porque un miedo dilatado y un temor no vencido fatiga más el alma que una repentina muerte: que en el acabar súbito se ahorran los miedos y los temores que la muerte trae consigo, que suelen ser tan malos como la misma muerte. Ésta, pues, que nos amenazaba tan hambrienta como larga, nos hizo tomar una resolución, si no desesperada, temeraria por lo menos, y fue que consideramos que si los bastimentos se nos acababan, el morir de hambre era la más rabiosa muerte que puede caber en la imaginación humana; y así, determinamos de salirnos del navío y caminar por encima del yelo, y ir a ver si, en el que se parecía, habría alguna cosa de que aprovecharnos, o ya de grado o ya por fuerza.

»Púsose en obra nuestro pensamiento, y en un instante vieron las aguas sobre sí formado, con pies enjutos, un escuadrón pequeño, pero de valentísimos soldados; y, siendo yo la guía, resbalando, cayendo y levantando, llegamos al otro navío, que lo era casi tan grande como el nuestro. Había gente en él que, puesta sobre el borde, adivinando la intención de nuestra venida, a voces comenzó uno a decirnos: "¿A qué venís, gente desesperada? ¿Qué buscáis? ¿Venís, por venturas, a apresurar nuestra muerte y a morir con nosotros? ¡Volveos a vuestro navío, y si os faltan bastimentos, roed las jarcias y encerrad en vuestros estómagos los embreados leños, si es posible! Porque, pensar que os hemos de dar acogida será pensamiento vano y contra los preceptos de la caridad, que ha de comenzar de sí mismo. Dos meses dicen que suele durar este yelo que nos detiene; para quince días tenemos sustento: si es bien que le repartamos con vosotros, a vuestra consideración lo dejo". A lo que yo le respondí: "En los apretados peligros, toda razón se atropella, no hay respeto que valga, ni buen término que se guarde. Acogednos en vuestro navío de grado, y juntaremos en él el bastimento que en el nuestro queda, y comámoslo amigablemente, antes que la precisa necesidad nos haga mover las armas y usar de la fuerza". Esto le respondí yo, creyendo no decían verdad en la cantidad del bastimento que señalaban. Pero ellos, viéndose superiores y aventajados en el puesto, no temieron nuestras amenazas ni admitieron nuestros ruegos, antes arremetieron a las armas y se pusieron en orden de defenderse. Los nuestros, a quien la desesperación, de valientes hizo valentísimos, añadiendo a la temeridad nuevos bríos, arremetieron al navío, y casi sin recibir herida le entraron y le ganaron, y alzóse una voz entre nosotros que a todos les quitásemos la vida, por ahorrar de balas y de estómagos por donde se fuese el bastimento que en el navío hallásemos.

»Yo fui de parecer contrario, y, quizá por tenerle bueno, en esto nos socorrió el cielo, como después diré; aunque primero quiero deciros que este navío era el de los cosarios que habían robado a mi hermana y a las dos recién desposadas pescadoras. Apenas le hube reconocido, cuando dije a voces: "¿Adónde tenéis, ladrones, nuestras almas? ¿Adónde están las vidas que nos robastes? ¿Qué habéis hecho de mi hermana Auristela y de las dos, Selviana y Leoncia, partes mitades de los corazones de mis buenos amigos Carino y Solercio?" A lo que uno me respondió: "Esas mujeres pescadoras que dices las vendió nuestro capitán, que ya es muerto, a Arnaldo, príncipe de Dinamarca".»

-Así es la verdad -dijo a esta sazón Arnaldo-, que yo compré a Auristela y a Cloelia, su ama, y a otras dos hermosísimas doncellas, de unos piratas que me las vendieron, y no por el precio que ellas merecían.

-¡Válame Dios -dijo Rutilio en esto-, y por qué rodeos y con qué eslabones se viene a engarzar la peregrina historia tuya, oh Periandro!

-Por lo que debes al deseo que todos tenemos de servirte -añadió Sinforosa-, que abrevies tu cuento, ¡oh historiador tan verdadero como gustoso!

-Sí haré -respondió Periandro-, si es posible que grandes cosas en breves términos puedan encerrarse.

Capítulo diez y siete del segundo libro

TODA ESTA tardanza del cuento de Periandro se declaraba tan en contrario del gusto de Policarpo, que ni podía estar atento para escucharle, ni le daba lugar a pensar maduramente lo que debía hacer para quedarse con Auristela. Sin perjuicio de la opinión que tenía de generoso y de verdadero, ponderaba la calidad de sus huéspedes, entre los cuales se le ponía delante Arnaldo, príncipe de Dinamarca, no por elección, sino por herencia; descubría en el modo de proceder de Periandro, en su gentileza y brío, algún gran personaje, y en la hermosura de Auristela el de alguna gran señora. Quisiera buenamente lograr sus deseos a pie llano, sin rodeos ni invenciones, cubriendo toda dificultad y todo parecer contrario con el velo del matrimonio; que, puesto que su mucha edad no lo permitía, todavía podía disimularlo, porque en cualquier tiempo es mejor casarse que abrasarse.

Acuciaba y solicitaba sus pensamientos los que solicitaban y aquejaban a la embaidora Cenotia, con la cual se concertó que, antes de dar otra audiencia a Periandro, se pusiese en efeto su disinio; que fue que de allí a dos noches tocasen un arma fingida en la ciudad y se pegase fuego al palacio por tres o cuatro partes, de modo que obligase a los que en él asistían a ponerse en cobro, donde era forzoso que interviniese la confusión y el alboroto, en medio del cual previno gente que robasen al bárbaro mozo Antonio y a la hermosa Auristela, y asimismo ordenó a Policarpa, su hija, que, conmovida de lástima cristiana, avisase a Arnaldo y a Periandro el peligro que les amenazaba, sin descubrirles el robo, sino mostrándoles el modo de salvarse, que era que acudiesen a la marina, donde en el puerto hallarían una saetía que los acogiese.

Llegóse la noche, y, a las tres horas della, comenzó el arma, que puso en confusión y alboroto a toda la gente de la ciudad. Comenzó a resplandecer el fuego, en cuyo ardor se aumentaba el que Policarpo en su pecho tenía. Acudió su hija, no alborotada, sino con reposo, a dar noticia a Arnaldo y a Periandro de los disinios de su traidor y enamorado padre, que se estendían a quedarse con Auristela y con el bárbaro mozo, sin quedar con indicios que le infamasen. Oyendo lo cual, Arnaldo y Periandro llamaron a Auristela, a Mauricio, Transila, Ladislao, a los bárbaros padre y hijo, a Ricla, a Constanza y a Rutilio, y, agradeciendo a Policarpa su aviso, se hicieron todos un montón, y, puestos delante los varones, siguiendo el consejo de Policarpa, hallaron paso desembarazado hasta el puerto, y segura embarcación en la saetía, cuyo piloto y marineros estaban avisados y cohechados de Policarpo, que, en el mismo punto que aquella gente que, al parecer, huida se embarcase, se hiciesen al mar, y no parasen con ella hasta Inglaterra, o hasta otra parte más lejos de aquella isla.

Entre la confusa gritería y el continuo vocear ¡al arma, al arma!; entre los estallidos del fuego abrasador, que, como si supiera que tenía licencia del dueño de aquellos palacios para que los abrasase, andaba encubierto Policarpo, mirando si salía cierto el robo de Auristela, y asimismo solicitaba el de Antonio la hechicera Cenotia; pero, viendo que se habían embarcado todos, sin quedar ninguno, como la verdad se lo decía y el alma se lo pronosticaba, acudió a mandar que todos los baluartes, y todos los navíos que estaban en el puerto, disparasen la artillería contra el navío de los que en él huían, con lo cual de nuevo se aumentó el estruendo, y el miedo discurrió por los ánimos de todos los moradores de la ciudad, que no sabían qué enemigos los asaltaban, o qué intempestivos acontecimientos les acometían.

En esto, la enamorada Sinforosa, ignorante del caso, puso el remedio en sus pies y sus esperanzas en su inocencia, y, con pasos desconcertados y temerosos, se subió a una alta torre de palacio, a su parecer, parte segura del fuego que lo demás del palacio iba consumiendo. Acertó a encerrarse con ella su hermana Policarpa, que le contó, como si lo hubiera visto, la huida de sus huéspedes, cuyas nuevas quitaron el sentido a Sinforosa, y en Policarpa pusieron el arrepentimiento de haberlas dado. Amanecía en esto el alba, risueña para todos los que con ella esperaban descubrir la causa o causas de la presente calamidad, y en el pecho de Policarpo anochecía la noche de la mayor tristeza que pudiera imaginarse; mordíase las manos Cenotia, y maldecía su engañadora ciencia y las promesas de sus malditos maestros; sola Sinforosa se estaba aún en su desmayo, y sola su hermana lloraba su desgracia, sin descuidarse de hacerle los remedios que ella podía para hacerla volver en su acuerdo. Volvió en fin, tendió la vista por el mar; vio volar la saetía donde iba la mitad de su alma, o la mejor parte della; y, como si fuera otra engañada y nueva Dido, que de otro fugitivo Eneas se quejaba, enviando suspiros al cielo, lágrimas a la tierra y voces al aire, dijo estas o otras semejantes razones:

-¡Oh hermoso huésped, venido por mi mal a estas riberas, no engañador, por cierto, que aún no he sido yo tan dichosa que me dijese palabras amorosas para engañarme! Amaina esas velas, o témplalas algún tanto, para que se dilate el tiempo de que mis ojos vean ese navío, cuya vista, sólo porque vas en él, me consuela. Mira, señor, que huyes de quien te sigue, que te alejas de quien te busca y das muestras de que aborreces a quien te adora; hija soy de un rey, y me contento con ser esclava tuya; y, si no tengo hermosura que pueda satisfacer a tus ojos, tengo deseos que puedan llenar los vacíos de los mejores que el amor tiene. No repares en que se abraza toda esta ciudad, que si vuelves, habrá servido este incendio de luminarias por la alegría de tu vuelta. Riquezas tengo, acelerado fugitivo mío, y puestas en parte donde no las hallará el fuego, aunque más las busque, porque las guarda el cielo para ti solo.

A esta sazón, volvió a hablar con su hermana, y le dijo:

-¿No te parece, hermana mía, que ha amainado algún tanto las velas? ¿No te parece que no camina tanto? ¡Ay, Dios! ¿Si se habrá arrepentido? ¡Ay, Dios, si la rémora de mi voluntad le detiene el navío!

-¡Ay, hermana! -respondió Policarpa-, no te engañes, que los deseos y los engaños suelen andar juntos. El navío vuela, sin que le detenga la rémora de tu voluntad, como tú dices, sino que le impele el viento de tus muchos suspiros.

Salteólas en esto el rey, su padre, que quiso ver de la alta torre también, como su hija, no la mitad, sino toda su alma, que se le ausentaba, aunque ya no se descubría.

Los hombres que tomaron a su cargo encender el fuego del palacio le tuvieron también de apagarle. Supieron los ciudadanos la causa del alboroto, y el mal nacido deseo de su rey Policarpo, y los embustes y consejos de la hechicera Cenotia, y aquel mismo día le depusieron del reino y colgaron a Cenotia de una entena. Sinforosa y Policarpa fueron respetadas como quien eran, y la ventura que tuvieron fue tal, que correspondió a sus merecimientos; pero no en modo que Sinforosa alcanzase el fin felice de sus deseos, porque la suerte de Periandro mayores venturas le tenía guardadas.

Los del navío, viéndose todos juntos y todos libres, no se hartaban de dar gracias al cielo de su buen suceso. De ellos supieron otra vez los traidores disinius de Policarpo, pero no les parecieron tan traidores que no hallase en ellos disculpa el haber sido por el amor forjados: disculpa bastante de mayores yerros, que, cuando ocupa a un alma la pasión amorosa, no hay discurso con que acierte, ni razón que no atropelle.

Hacíales el tiempo claro, y, aunque el viento era largo, estaba el mar tranquilo. Llevaban la mira de su viaje puesta en Inglaterra, adonde pensaban tomar el disinio que más les conviniese, y con tanto sosiego navegaban que no les sobresaltaba ningún recelo ni miedo de ningún suceso adverso.

Tres días duró la apacibilidad del mar, y tres días sopló próspero el viento, hasta que al cuarto, a poner del sol, se comenzó a turbar el viento y a desasosegarse el mar, y el recelo de alguna gran borrasca comenzó a turbar a los marineros: que la inconstancia de nuestras vidas y la del mar simbolizan en no prometer seguridad ni firmeza alguna largo tiempo. Pero quiso la buena suerte que, cuando les apretaba este temor, descubriesen cerca de sí una isla, que luego de los marineros fue conocida, y dijeron que se llamaba la de las Ermitas, de que no poco se alegraron, porque en ella sabían que estaban dos calas capaces de guarecerse en ellas de todos vientos más de veinte navíos; tales, en fin, que pudieran servir de abrigados puertos.

Dijeron también que en una de las ermitas servía de ermitaño un caballero principal francés, llamado Renato, y en la otra ermita servía de ermitaña una señora francesa, llamada Eusebia, cuya historia de los dos era la más peregrina que se hubiese visto.

El deseo de saberla y el de repararse de la tormenta, si viniese, hizo a todos que encaminasen allá la proa. Hízose así, con tanto acertamiento que dieron luego con una de las calas, donde dieron fondo, sin que nadie se lo impidiese; y, estando informado Arnaldo de que en la isla no había otra persona alguna que la del ermitaño y ermitaña referidos, por dar contento a Auristela y a Transila, que fatigadas del mar venían, con parecer de Mauricio, Ladislao, Rutilio y Periandro, mandó echar el esquife al agua, y que saliesen todos a tierra a pasar la noche en sosiego, libres de los vaivenes del mar. Y, aunque se hizo así, fue parecer del bárbaro Antonio que él y su hijo, y Ladislao y Rutilio, se quedasen en el navío guardándole, pues la fee de sus marineros, poco experimentada, no les debía asegurar de modo que se fiasen dellos. Y, en efeto, los que se quedaron en el navío fueron los dos Antonios, padre y hijo, con todos los marineros, que la mejor tierra para ellos es las tablas embreadas de sus naves: mejor les huele la pez, la brea y la resina de sus navíos, que a la demás gente las rosas, las flores y los amarantos de los jardines.

A la sombra de una peña, los de la tierra se repararon del viento, y, a la claridad de mucha lumbre que de ramas cortadas en un instante hicieron, se defendieron del frío, y, ya como acostumbrados a pasar muchas veces calamidades semejantes, pasaron la desta noche sin pesadumbre alguna; y más con el alivio que Periandro les causó con volver, por ruego de Transila, a proseguir su historia, que, puesto que él lo rehusaba, añadiendo ruegos Arnaldo, Ladislao y Mauricio, ayudándoles Auristela, la ocasión y el tiempo, la hubo de proseguir en esta forma:

Capítulo diez y ocho del segundo libro

-«SI ES VERDAD, como lo es, ser dulcísima cosa contar en tranquilidad la tormenta, y en la paz presente los peligros de la pasada guerra, y en la salud la enfermedad padecida, dulce me ha de ser a mí agora contar mis trabajos en este sosiego; que, puesto que no puedo decir que estoy libre de ellos todavía, según han sido grandes y muchos, puedo afirmar que estoy en descanso, por ser condición de la humana suerte que, cuando los bienes comienzan a crecer, parece que unos se van llamando a otros, y que no tienen fin donde parar, y los males por el mismo consiguiente. Los trabajos que yo hasta aquí he padecido, imagino que han llegado al último paradero de la miserable fortuna, y que es forzoso que declinen: que, cuando en el extremo de los trabajos no sucede el de la muerte, que es el último de todos, ha de seguirse la mudanza, no de mal a mal, sino de mal a bien, y de bien a más bien; y éste en que estoy, teniendo a mi hermana conmigo, verdadera y precisa causa de todos mis males y mis bienes, me asegura y promete que tengo de llegar a la cumbre de los más felices que acierte a desearme. Y así, con este dichoso pensamiento, digo que quedé en la nave de mis contrarios, ya rendidos, donde supe, como ya he dicho, la venta que habían hecho de mi hermana y de las dos recién desposadas pescadoras, y de Cloelia, al príncipe Arnaldo, que aquí está presente.

»En tanto que los míos andaban escudriñando y tanteando los bastimentos que había en el empedrado navío, a deshora y de improviso, de la parte de tierra descubrimos que sobre los hielos caminaba un escuadrón de armada gente, de más de cuatro mil personas formado. Dejónos más helados que el mismo mar vista semejante, aprestando las armas, más por muestra de ser hombres, que con pensamiento de defenderse. Caminaban sobre solo un pie, dándose con el derecho sobre el calcaño izquierdo, con que se impelían y resbalaban sobre el mar grandísimo trecho, y luego, volviendo a reiterar el golpe, tornaban a resbalar otra gran pieza de camino; y desta suerte, en un instante fueron con nosotros y nos rodearon por todas partes; y uno de ellos, que, como después supe, era el capitán de todos, llegándose cerca de nuestro navío a trecho que pudo ser oído, asegurando la paz con un paño blanco que volteaba sobre el brazo, en lengua polaca, con voz clara dijo: "Cratilo, rey de Bituania y señor destos mares, tiene por costumbre de requerirlos con gente armada, y sacar de ellos los navíos que del hielo están detenidos, a lo menos la gente y la mercancía que tuvieren, por cuyo beneficio se paga con tomarla por suya. Si vosotros gustáredes de acetar este partido sin defenderos, gozaréis de las vidas y de la libertad, que no se os ha de cautivar en ningún modo; miradlo, y si no, aparejaos a defenderos de nuestras armas, continuo vencedoras". Contentóme la brevedad y la resolución del que nos hablaba. Respondíle que me dejase tomar parecer con nosotros mismos, y fue el que mis pescadores me dieron decir que el fin de todos los males, y el mayor de ellos, era el acabar la vida, la cual se había de sustentar por todos los medios posibles, como no fuesen por los de la infamia; y que, pues en los partidos que nos ofrecían no intervenía ninguna, y del perder la vida estábamos tan ciertos como dudosos de la defensa, sería bien rendirnos, y dar lugar a la mala fortuna que entonces nos perseguía, pues podría ser que nos guardase para mejor ocasión. Casi esta misma respuesta di al capitán del escuadrón, y al punto, más con apariencia de guerra que con muestras de paz, arremetieron al navío, y en un instante le desvalijaron todo, y trasladaron cuanto en él había, hasta la misma artillería y jarcias, a unos cueros de bueyes que sobre el hielo tendieron; liándolos por encima, aseguraron poderlos llevar, tirándolos con cuerdas, sin que se perdiese cosa alguna. Robaron ansimismo lo que hallaron en el otro nuestro navío, y, poniéndonos a nosotros sobre otras pieles, alzando una alegre vocería, nos tiraron y nos llevaron a tierra, que debía de estar desde el lugar del navío como veinte millas. Paréceme a mí que debía de ser cosa de ver, caminar tanta gente por cima de las aguas a pie enjuto, sin usar allí el cielo alguno de sus milagros. En fin, aquella noche llegamos a la ribera, de la cual no salimos hasta otro día por la mañana, que la vimos coronada de infinito número de gente, que a ver la presa de los helados y yertos habían venido.

»Venía entre ellos, sobre un hermoso caballo, el rey Cratilo, que, por las insignias reales con que se adornaba, conocimos ser quien era; venía a su lado, asimismo a caballo, una hermosísima mujer, armada de unas armas blancas, a quien no podían acabar de encubrir un velo negro con que venían cubiertas. Llevóme tras sí la vista, tanto su buen parecer como la gallardía del rey Cratilo; y, mirándola con atención, conocí ser la hermosa Sulpicia, a quien la cortesía de mis compañeros, pocos días había, habían dado la libertad que entonces gozaba. Acudió el rey a ver los rendidos, y, llevándome el capitán asido de la mano, le dijo: "En este solo mancebo, ¡oh valeroso rey Cratilo!, me parece que te presento la más rica presa que en razón de persona humana hasta agora humanos ojos han visto". "¡Santos cielos! -dijo a esta sazón la hermosa Sulpicia, arrojándose del caballo al suelo-, o yo no tengo vista en los ojos, o es éste mi libertador Periandro". Y el decir esto y añudarme el cuello con sus brazos fue todo uno, cuyas estrañas y amorosas muestras obligaron también a Cratilo a que del caballo se arrojase, y con las mismas señales de alegría me recibiese. Entonces la desmayada esperanza de algún buen suceso estaba lejos de los pechos de mis pescadores; pero, cobrando aliento en las muestras alegres con que vieron recebirme, les hizo brotar por los ojos el contento y por las bocas las gracias que dieron a Dios del no esperado beneficio; que ya le contaban, no por beneficio, sino por singular y conocida merced.

»Sulpicia dijo a Cratilo: "Este mancebo es un sujeto donde tiene su asiento la suma cortesía y su albergue la misma liberalidad; y, aunque yo tengo hecha esta experiencia, quiero que tu discreción la acredite, sacando por su gallarda presencia (y en esto bien se ve que hablaba como agradecida, y aun como engañada) en limpio esta verdad que te digo. Éste fue el que me dio libertad después de la muerte de mi marido; éste el que no despreció mis tesoros, sino el que no los quiso; éste fue el que, después de recibidas mis dádivas, me las volvió mejoradas, con el deseo de dármelas mayores, si pudiera; éste fue, en fin, el que, acomodándose, o por mejor decir, haciendo acomodar a su gusto el de sus soldados, dándome doce que me acompañasen, me tiene ahora en tu presencia". Yo entonces, a lo que creo, rojo el rostro con las alabanzas, o ya aduladoras o demasiadas, que de mí oía, no supe más que hincarme de rodillas ante Cratilo, pidiéndole las manos, que no me las dio para besárselas, sino para levantarme del suelo.

»En este entretanto, los doce pescadores que habían venido en guarda de Sulpicia, andaban entre la demás gente buscando a sus compañeros, abrazándose unos a otros; y, llenos de contento y regocijo, se contaban sus buenas y malas suertes: los del mar esageraban su hiel, y los de la tierra sus riquezas. "A mí -decía el uno-me ha dado Sulpicia esta cadena de oro". "A mí -decía otro-esta joya, que vale por dos de esas cadenas". "A mí -replicaba éste-me dio tanto dinero". Y aquél repetía: "Más me ha dado a mí en este solo anillo de diamantes, que a todos vosotros juntos".

»A todas estas pláticas puso silencio un gran rumor que se levantó entre la gente, causado del que hacía un poderosísimo caballo bárbaro, a quien dos valientes lacayos traían del freno, sin poderse averiguar con él. Era de color morcillo, pintado todo de moscas blancas, que sobremanera le hacían hermoso; venía en pelo, porque no consentía ensillarse sino del mismo rey; pero no le guardaba este respeto después de puesto encima, no siendo bastantes a detenerle mil montes de embarazos que ante él se pusieran, de lo que el rey estaba tan pesaroso que diera una ciudad a quien sus malos siniestros le quitara. Todo esto me contó el rey breve y sucintamente, y yo me resolví con mayor brevedad a hacer lo que agora os diré.»

Aquí llegaba Periandro con su plática, cuando, a un lado de la peña donde estaban recogidos los del navío, oyó Arnaldo un ruido como de pasos de persona que hacia ellos se encaminaba. Levantóse en pie, puso mano a su espada, y, con esforzado denuedo, estuvo esperando el suceso. Calló asimismo Periandro, y las mujeres con miedo, y los varones con ánimo, especialmente Periandro, atendían lo que sería. Y, a la escasa luz de la luna, que cubierta de nubes no dejaba verse, vieron que hacia ellos venían dos bultos que no pudieran diferenciar lo que eran, si uno de ellos con voz clara no dijera:

-No os alborote, señores, quienquiera que seáis, nuestra improvisa llegada, pues sólo venimos a servirlos. Esta estancia que tenéis, desierta y sola, la podéis mejorar, si quisiéredes, en la nuestra, que en la cima desta montaña está puesta; luz y lumbre hallaréis en ella, y manjares, que, si no delicados y costosos, son por lo menos necesarios y de gusto.

Yo le respondí:

-¿Sois, por ventura, Renato y Eusebia, los limpios y verdaderos amantes en quien la fama ocupa sus lenguas, diciendo el bien que en ellos se encierra?

-Si dijérades los desdichados -respondió el bulto-, acertárades en ello; pero, en fin, nosotros somos los que decís, y los que os ofrecemos con voluntad sincera el acogimiento que puede daros nuestra estrechez.

Arnaldo fue de parecer que se tomase el consejo que se les ofrecía, pues el rigor del tiempo que amenazaba les obligaba a ello. Levantáronse todos, y siguiendo a Renato y a Eusebia, que les sirvieron de guías, llegaron a la cumbre de una montañuela, donde vieron dos ermitas, más cómodas para pasar la vida en su pobreza que para alegrar la vista con su rico adorno. Entraron dentro, y, en la que parecía algo mayor, hallaron luces que de dos lámparas procedían, con que podían distinguir los ojos lo que dentro estaba, que era un altar con tres devotas imágenes: la una, del Autor de la vida, ya muerto y crucificado; la otra, de la Reina de los cielos y de la señora de la alegría, triste y puesta en pie del que tiene los pies sobre todo el mundo; y la otra, del amado discípulo que vio más, estando durmiendo, que vieron cuantos ojos tiene el cielo en sus estrellas. Hincáronse de rodillas, y, hecha la debida oración con devoto respeto, les llevó Renato a una estancia que estaba junto a la ermita, a quien se entraba por una puerta que junto al altar se hacía. Finalmente, pues las menudencias no piden ni sufren relaciones largas, se dejarán de contar las que allí pasaron, ansí de la pobre cena como del estrecho regalo, que sólo se alargaba en la bondad de los ermitaños, de quien se notaron los pobres vestidos, la edad, que tocaba en los márgenes de la vejez; la hermosura de Eusebia, donde todavía resplandecían las muestras de haber sido rara en todo extremo. Auristela, Transila y Constanza se quedaron en aquella estancia, a quien sirvieron de camas secas espadañas con otras yerbas, más para dar gusto al olfato que a otro sentido alguno. Los hombres se acomodaron en la ermita, en diferentes puestos, tan fríos como duros y tan duros como fríos.

Corrió el tiempo como suele, voló la noche, y amaneció el día claro y sereno; descubrióse la mar, tan cortés y bien criada que parecía que estaba convidando a que la gozasen volviéndose a embarcar; y sin duda alguna se hiciera así si el piloto de la nave no subiera a decir que no se fiasen de las muestras del tiempo, que, puesto que prometían serenidad tranquila, los efectos habían de ser muy contrarios. Salió con su parecer, pues todos se atuvieron a él; que, en el arte de la marinería, más sabe el más simple marinero que el mayor letrado del mundo. Dejaron sus herbosos lechos las damas, y los varones su duras piedras, y salieron a ver desde aquella cumbre la amenidad de la pequeña isla, que sólo podía bojar hasta doce millas, pero tan llena de árboles frutíferos, tan fresca por muchas aguas, tan agradable por las yerbas verdes, y tan olorosa por las flores, que en un igual grado y a un mismo tiempo podía satisfacer a todos cinco sentidos.

Pocas horas se había entrado por el día, cuando los dos venerables ermitaños llamaron a sus huéspedes, y, tendiendo dentro de la ermita verdes y secas espadañas, formaron sobre el suelo una agradable alfombra, quizá más vistosa que las que suelen adornar los palacios de los reyes. Luego tendieron sobre ella diversidad de frutas, así verdes como secas, y pan no tan reciente que no semejase bizcocho, coronando la mesa asimismo de vasos de corcho con maestría labrados, de fríos y líquidos cristales llenos. El adorno, las frutas, las puras y limpias aguas, que, a pesar de la parda color de los corchos, mostraban su claridad, y la necesidad juntamente, obligó a todos, y aun les forzó, por mejor decir, a que alrededor de la mesa se sentasen. Hiciéronlo así, y, después de la tan breve como sabrosa comida, Arnaldo suplicó a Renato que les contase su historia y la causa que a la estrechez de tan pobre vida le había conducido. El cual, como era caballero, a quien es aneja siempre la cortesía, sin que segunda vez se lo pidiesen, desta manera comenzó el cuento de su verdadera historia:

Capítulo diez y nueve del segundo libro

-«CUANDO los trabajos pasados se cuentan en prosperidades presentes, suele ser mayor el gusto que se recibe en contarlos, que fue el pesar que se recibió en sufrirlos. Esto no podré decir de los míos, pues no los cuento fuera de la borrasca, sino en mitad de la tormenta. Nací en Francia; engendraronme padres nobles, ricos y bien intencionados, criéme en los ejercicios de caballero; medí mis pensamientos con mi estado; pero, con todo eso, me atreví a ponerlos en la señora Eusebia, dama de la reina en Francia, a quien sólo con los ojos la di a entender que la adoraba, y ella, o ya descuidada o no advertida, ni con sus ojos ni con su lengua me dio a entender que me entendía; y, aunque el disfavor y los desdenes suelen matar al amor en sus principios, faltándole el arrimo de la esperanza, con quien suele crecer, en mí fue al contrario, porque del silencio de Eusebia tomaba alas mi esperanza con que subir hasta el cielo de merecerla. Pero la invidia, o la demasiada curiosidad de Libsomi, caballero asimismo francés, no menos rico que noble, alcanzó a saber mis pensamientos, y, sin ponerlos en el punto que debía, me tuvo más invidia que lástima, habiendo de ser al contrario; porque hay dos males en el amor que llegan a todo extremo: el uno es querer y no ser querido; el otro, querer y ser aborrecido; y a este mal no se iguala el de la ausencia, ni el de los celos.

»En resolución, sin haber yo ofendido a Libsomi, un día se fue al rey y le dijo cómo yo tenía trato ilícito con Eusebia, en ofensa de la majestad real y contra la ley que debía guardar como caballero, cuya verdad la acreditaría con sus armas, porque no quería que le mostrase la pluma, ni otros testigos, por no turbar la decencia de Eusebia, a quien una y mil veces acusaba de impúdica y mal intencionada. Con esta información alborotado el rey, me mandó llamar, y me contó lo que Libsomi de mí le había contado; disculpé mi inocencia, volví por la honra de Eusebia; y, por el más comedido medio que pude, desmentí a mi enemigo. Remitióse la prueba a las armas; no quiso el rey darnos campo en ninguna tierra de su reino, por no ir contra la ley católica, que los prohíbe; diónosle una de las ciudades libres de Alemania; llegóse el día de la batalla; pareció en el puesto, con las armas que se habían señalado, que eran espada y rodela, sin otro artificio alguno; hicieron los padrinos y los jueces las ceremonias que en tales casos se acostumbra; partiéronnos el sol, y dejáronnos. Entré yo confiado y animoso, por saber indubitavelmente que llevaba la razón conmigo y la verdad de mi parte. De mi contrario, bien sé yo que entró animoso, y más soberbio y arrogante que seguro de su conciencia. ¡Oh soberanos cielos! ¡Oh juicios de Dios inescrutables! Yo hice lo que pude; yo puse mis esperanzas en Dios y en la limpieza de mis no ejecutados deseos; sobre mí no tuvo poder el miedo, ni la debilidad de los brazos, ni la puntualidad de los movimientos; y, con todo eso y no saber decir el cómo, me hallé tendido en el suelo, y la punta de la espada de mi enemigo puesta sobre mis ojos, amenazándome de presta y inevitable muerte. "Aprieta -dije yo entonces-, ¡oh más venturoso que valiente vencedor mío!, esta punta de espada, y sácame el alma, pues tan mal ha sabido defender su cuerpo; no esperes a que me rinda, que no ha de confesar mi lengua la culpa que no tengo. Pecados sí tengo yo que merecen mayores castigos, pero no quiero añadirles este de levantarme testimonio a mí mismo; y así, más quiero morir con honra que vivir deshonorado". "Si no te rindes, Renato -respondió mi contrario-, esta punta llegará hasta el cerebro, y hará que con tu sangre firmes y confirmes mi verdad y tu pecado".

»Llegaron en esto los jueces, y tomáronme por muerto, y dieron a mi enemigo el lauro de la vitoria. Sacáronle del campo en hombros de sus amigos, y a mí me dejaron solo, en poder del quebranto y de la confusión, con más tristeza que heridas, y no con tanto dolor como yo pensaba; pues no fue bastante a quitarme la vida, ya que no me la quitó la espada de mi enemigo. Recogióronme mis criados; volvíme a la patria; ni en el camino ni en ella tenía atrevimiento para alzar los ojos al cielo, que me parecía que sobre sus párpados cargaba el peso de la deshonra y la pesadumbre de la infamia; de los amigos que me hablaban, pensaba que me ofendían; el claro cielo para mí estaba cubierto de obscuras tinieblas; ni un corrillo acaso se hacía en las calles, de los vecinos del pueblo, de quien no pensase que sus pláticas no naciesen de mi deshonra; finalmente, yo me hallé tan apretado de mis melancolías, pensamientos y confusas imaginaciones, que, por salir dellas, o a lo menos aliviarlas, o acabar con la vida, determiné salir de mi patria; y, renunciando mi hacienda en otro hermano menor que tengo, en un navío, con algunos de mis criados, quise desterrarme y venir a estas setentrionales partes a buscar lugar donde no me alcanzase la infamia de mi infame vencimiento y donde el silencio sepultase mi nombre.

»Hallé esta isla acaso; contentóme el sitio, y con el ayuda de mis criados levanté esta ermita y encerréme en ella. Despedílos; diles orden que cada un año viniesen a verme, para que enterrasen mis huesos. El amor que me tenían, las promesas que les hice y los dones que les di les obligaron a cumplir mis ruegos, que no los quiero llamar mandamientos. Fuéronse, y dejáronme entregado a mi soledad, donde hallé tan buena compañía en estos árboles, en estas yerbas y plantas, en estas claras fuentes, en estos bulliciosos y frescos arroyuelos, que de nuevo me tuve lástima a mí mismo de no haber sido vencido muchos tiempos antes, pues con aquel trabajo hubiera venido antes al descanso de gozallos. ¡Oh soledad alegre, compañía de los tristes! ¡Oh silencio, voz agradable a los oídos, donde llegas, sin que la adulación ni la lisonja te acompañen! ¡Oh qué de cosas dijera, señores, en alabanza de la santa soledad y del sabroso silencio! Pero estórbamelo el deciros primero cómo dentro de un año volvieron mis criados y trujeron consigo a mi adorada Eusebia, que es esta señora ermitaña que veis presente, a quien mis criados dijeron en el término que yo quedaba, y ella, agradecida a mis deseos y condolida de mi infamia, quiso, ya que no en la culpa, serme compañera en la pena, y, embarcándose con ellos, dejó su patria y padres, sus regalos y sus riquezas, y lo más que dejó fue la honra, pues la dejó al vano discurso del vulgo, casi siempre engañado, pues con su huida confirmaba su yerro y el mío.

»Recebía como ella esperaba que yo la recibiese, y la soledad y la hermosura, que habían de encender nuestros comenzados deseos, hicieron el efeto contrario, merced al cielo y a la honestidad suya. Dímonos las manos de legítimos esposos, enterramos el fuego en la nieve, y en paz y en amor, como dos estatuas movibles, ha que vivimos en este lugar casi diez años, en los cuales no se ha pasado ninguno en que mis criados no vuelvan a verme, proveyéndome de algunas cosas que en esta soledad es forzoso que me falten. Traen alguna vez consigo algún religioso que nos confiese; tenemos en la ermita suficientes ornamentos para celebrar los divinos oficios; dormimos aparte, comemos juntos, hablamos del cielo, menospreciamos la tierra, y, confiados en la misericordia de Dios, esperamos la vida eterna.»

Con esto dio fin a su plática Renato, y con esto dio ocasión a que todos los circunstantes se admirasen de su suceso, no porque les pareciese nuevo dar castigos el cielo contra la esperanza de los pensamientos humanos, pues se sabe que por una de dos causas vienen los que parecen males a las gentes: a los malos por castigo, y a los buenos por mejora; y en el número de los buenos pusieron a Renato, con el cual gastaron algunas palabras de consuelo, y ni más ni menos con Eusebia, que se mostró prudente en los agradecimientos y consolada en su estado.

-¡Oh vida solitaria! -dijo a esta sazón Rutilio, que, sepultado en silencio, había estado escuchando la historia de Renato-. ¡Oh vida solitaria -dijo-, santa, libre y segura, que infunde el cielo en las regaladas imaginaciones! ¡Quién te amara, quién te abrazara, quién te escogiera, y quién, finalmente, te gozara!

-Dices bien -dijo Mauricio-, amigo Rutilio, pero esas consideraciones han de caer sobre grandes sujetos; porque no nos ha de causar maravilla que un rústico pastor se retire a la soledad del campo, ni nos ha de admirar que un pobre, que en la ciudad muere de hambre, se recoja a la soledad donde no le ha de faltar el sustento. Modos hay de vivir que los sustenta la ociosidad y la pereza, y no es pequeña pereza dejar yo el remedio de mis trabajos en las ajenas, aunque misericordiosas manos. Si yo viera a un Aníbal cartaginés encerrado en una ermita, como vi a un Carlos V cerrado en un monasterio, suspendiérame y admirárame; pero que se retire un plebeyo, que se recoja un pobre, ni me admira ni me suspende; fuera va deste cuento Renato, que le trujeron a estas soledades, no la pobreza, sino la fuerza que nació de su buen discurso. Aquí tiene en la carestía abundancia, y en la soledad compañía, y el no tener más que perder le hace vivir más seguro.

A lo que añadió Periandro:

-Si, como tengo pocos, tuviera muchos años, en trances y ocasiones me ha puesto mi fortuna que tuviera por suma felicidad que la soledad me acompañara, y en la sepultura del silencio se sepultara mi nombre; pero no me dejan resolver mis deseos, ni mudar de vida la priesa que me da el caballo de Cratilo, en quien quedé de mi historia.

Todos se alegraron oyendo esto, por ver que quería Periandro volver a su tantas veces comenzado y no acabado cuento, que fue así:

Capítulo veinte del segundo libro

Cuenta lo que le sucedió con el caballo tan estimado de Cratilo como famoso

-«LA GRANDEZA, la ferocidad y la hermosura del caballo que os he descrito tenían tan enamorado a Cratilo, y tan deseoso de verle manso, como a mí de mostrar que deseaba servirle, pareciéndome que el cielo me presentaba ocasión para hacerme agradable a los ojos de quien por señor tenía, y a poder acreditar con algo las alabanzas que la hermosa Sulpicia de mí al rey había dicho.

»Y así, no tan maduro como presuroso, fui donde estaba el caballo y subí en él sin poner el pie en el estribo, pues no le tenía, y arremetí con él, sin que el freno fuese parte para detenerle, y llegué a la punta de una peña que sobre la mar pendía; y, apretándole de nuevo las piernas, con tan mal grado suyo como gusto mío, le hice volar por el aire y dar con entrambos en la profundidad del mar; y en la mitad del vuelo me acordé que, pues el mar estaba helado, me había de hacer pedazos con el golpe, y tuve mi muerte y la suya por cierta. Pero no fue así, porque el cielo, que para otras cosas que él sabe me debe de tener guardado, hizo que las piernas y los brazos del poderoso caballo resistiesen el golpe, sin recibir yo otro daño que haberme sacudido de sí el caballo y echado a rodar, resbalando por gran espacio. Ninguno hubo en la ribera que no pensase y creyese que yo quedaba muerto; pero, cuando me vieron levantar en pie, aunque tuvieron el suceso a milagro, juzgaron a locura mi atrevimiento.»

Duro se le hizo a Mauricio el terrible salto del caballo tan sin lisión: que quisiera él, por lo menos, que se hubiera quebrado tres o cuatro piernas, porque no dejara Periandro tan a la cortesía de los que le escuchaban la creencia de tan desaforado salto; pero el crédito que todos tenían de Periandro les hizo no pasar adelante con la duda del no creerle: que, así como es pena del mentiroso que cuando diga verdad no se le crea, así es gloria del bien acreditado el ser creído cuando diga mentira. Y, como no pudieron estorbar los pensamientos de Mauricio la plática de Periandro, prosiguió la suya diciendo:

-«Volví a la ribera con el caballo, volví asimismo a subir en él, y, por los mismos pasos que primero, le incité a saltar segunda vez; pero no fue posible, porque, puesto en la punta de la levantada peña, hizo tanta fuerza por no arrojarle que puso las ancas en el suelo, y rompió las riendas, quedándose clavado en la tierra. Cubrióse luego de un sudor de pies a cabeza, tan lleno de miedo que le volvió de león en cordero y de animal indomable en generoso caballo, de manera que los muchachos se atrevieron a monosearle, y los caballerizos del rey, enjaezándole, subieron en él y le corrieron con seguridad, y él mostró su ligereza y su bondad, hasta entonces jamás vista; de lo que el rey quedó contentísimo y Sulpicia alegre, por ver que mis obras habían respondido a sus palabras.

»Tres meses estuvo en su rigor el yelo, y éstos se tardaron en acabar un navío que el rey tenía comenzado para correr en conveniente tiempo aquellos mares, limpiándolos de cosarios, enriqueciéndose con sus robos. En este entretanto le hice algunos servicios en la caza, donde me mostré sagaz y experimentado, y gran sufridor de trabajos; porque ningún ejercicio corresponde así al de la guerra como el de la caza, a quien es anejo el cansancio, la sed y la hambre, y aun a veces la muerte. La liberalidad de la hermosa Sulpicia se mostró conmigo y con los míos estremada, y la cortesía de Cratilo le corrió parejas. Los doce pescadores que trujo consigo Sulpicia estaban ya ricos, y los que conmigo se perdieron estaban ganados. Acabóse el navío, mandó el rey aderezarle y pertrecharle de todas las cosas necesarias largamente, y luego me hizo capitán dél a toda mi voluntad, sin obligarme a que hiciese cosa más de aquella que fuese de mi gusto. Y, después de haberle besado las manos por tan gran beneficio, le dije que me diese licencia de ir a buscar a mi hermana Auristela, de quien tenía noticia que estaba en poder del rey de Dinamarca. Cratilo me la dio para todo aquello que quisiese hacer, diciéndome que a más le tenía obligado mi buen término, hablando como rey, a quien es anejo tanto el hacer mercedes como la afabilidad, y, si se puede decir, la buena crianza. Esta tuvo Sulpicia en todo extremo, acompañándola con la liberalidad, con la cual, ricos y contentos, yo y los míos nos embarcamos, sin que quedase ninguno.

»La primer derrota que tomamos fue a Dinamarca, donde creí hallar a mi hermana, y lo que hallé fueron nuevas de que, de la ribera del mar, a ella y a otras doncellas las habían robado cosarios. Renováronse mis trabajos, y comenzaron de nuevo mis lástimas, a quien acompañaron las de Carino y Solercio, los cuales creyeron que en la desgracia de mi hermana y en su prisión se debía de comprender la de sus esposas.»

-Sospecharon bien -dijo a esta sazón Arnaldo.

Y, prosiguiendo, Periandro dijo:

-«Barrimos todos los mares, rodeamos todas o las más islas destos contornos, preguntando siempre por nuevas de mi hermana, pareciéndome a mí, con paz sea dicho de todas las hermosas del mundo, que la luz de su rostro no podía estar encubierta por ser oscuro el lugar donde estuviese, y que la suma discreción suya había de ser el hilo que la sacase de cualquier laberinto. Prendimos cosarios, soltamos prisioneros, restituimos haciendas a sus dueños, alzámonos con las mal ganadas de otros; y con esto, colmando nuestro navío de mil diferentes bienes de fortuna, quisieron los míos volver a sus redes y a sus casas y a los brazos de sus hijos, imaginando Carino y Solercio ser posible hallar a sus esposas en su tierra, ya que en las ajenas no las hallaban.

»Antes desto, llegamos a aquella isla, que, a lo que creo, se llama Scinta, donde supimos las fiestas de Policarpo, y a todos nos vino voluntad de hallarnos en ellas. No pudo llegar nuestra nave, por ser el viento contrario; y así, en traje de marineros bogadores, nos entramos en aquel barco luengo, como ya queda dicho. Allí gané los premios, allí fui coronado por vencedor de todas las contiendas, y de allí tomó ocasión Sinforosa de desear saber quien yo era, como se vio por las diligencias que para ello hizo.

»Vuelto al navío y resueltos los míos de dejarme, los rogué que me dejaran el barco, como en premio de los trabajos que con ellos había pasado. Dejéronmele, y aun me dejaron el navío, si yo le quisiera, diciéndome que si me dejaban solo, no era otra la ocasión sino porque les parecía ser sólo mi deseo, y tan imposible de alcanzarle como lo había mostrado la experiencia en las diligencias que habíamos hecho para conseguirle. En resolución, con seis pescadores que quisieron seguirme, llevados del premio que les di y del que les ofrecí, abrazando a mis amigos, me embarqué y puse la proa en la Isla Bárbara, de cuyos moradores sabía ya la costumbre y la falsa profecía que los tenía engañados, la cual no os refiero porque sé que la sabéis.

»Di al través en aquella isla, fui preso y llevado donde estaban los vivos enterrados; sacáronme otro día para ser sacrificado; sucedió la tormenta del mar; desbaratáronse los leños que servían de barcas; salí al mar ancho en un pedazo dellas, con cadenas que me rodeaban el cuello y esposas que me ataban las manos; caí en las misericordias del príncipe Arnaldo, que está presente, por cuya orden entré en la isla para ser espía que investigase si estaba en ella mi hermana, no sabiendo que yo fuese hermano de Auristela, la cual otro día vino en traje de varón a ser sacrificada. Conocíla, dolióme su dolor, previne su muerte con decir que era hembra, como ya lo había dicho Cloelia, su ama, que la acompañaba; y el modo como allí las dos vinieron, ella lo dirá cuando quisiere. Lo que en la isla nos sucedió ya lo sabéis; y, con esto y con lo que a mi hermana le queda por decir, quedaréis satisfechos de casi todo aquello que acertare a pedir os el deseo en la certeza de nuestros sucesos.»

Capítulo ventiuno del segundo libro

NO SÉ SI tenga por cierto, de manera que ose afirmar, que Mauricio y algunos de los más oyentes se holgaron de que Periandro pusiese fin en su plática, porque las más veces, las que son largas, aunque sean de importancia, suelen ser desabridas. Este pensamiento pudo tener Auristela, pues no quiso acreditarle con comenzar por entonces la historia de sus acontecimientos; que, puesto que habían sido pocos desde que fue robada de poder de Arnaldo hasta que Periandro la halló en la Isla Bárbara, no quiso añadirlos hasta mejor coyuntura; ni, aunque quisiera, tuviera lugar para hacerlo, porque se lo estorbara una nave que vieron venir por alta mar encaminada a la isla, con todas las velas tendidas, de modo que en breve rato llegó a una de las calas de la isla, y luego fue de Renato conocida, el cual dijo:

-Esta es, señores, la nave donde mis criados y mis amigos suelen visitarme algunas veces.

Ya en esto hecha la zaloma y arrojado el esquife al agua, se llenó de gente, que salió a la ribera, donde ya estaban para recibirle Renato y todos los que con él estaban. Hasta veinte serían los desembarcados, entre los cuales salió uno de gentil presencia, que mostró ser señor de todos los demás, el cual, apenas vio a Renato, cuando con los brazos abiertos se vino a él, diciéndole:

-Abrázame, hermano, en albricias de que te traigo las mejores nuevas que pudieras desear.

Abrázole Renato, porque conoció ser su hermano Sinibaldo, a quien dijo:

-Ningunas nuevas me pueden ser más agradables, ¡oh hermano mío!, que ver tu presencia; que, puesto que en el siniestro estado en que me veo ninguna alegría sería bien que me alegrase, el verte pasa adelante y tiene excepción en la común regla de mi desgracia.

Sinibaldo se volvió luego a abrazar a Eusebia, y le dijo:

-Dadme también vos los brazos, señora, que también me debéis las albricias de las nuevas que traigo, las cuales no será bien dilatarlas, porque no se dilate más vuestra pena. Sabed, señores, que vuestro enemigo es muerto de una enfermedad, que, habiendo estado seis días antes que muriese sin habla, se la dio el cielo seis horas antes que despidiese el alma, en el cual espacio, con muestras de un grande arrepentimiento, confesó la culpa en que había caído de haberos acusado falsamente; confesó su envidia, declaró su malicia, y, finalmente, hizo todas las demostraciones bastantes a manifestar su pecado. Puso en los secretos juicios de Dios el haber salido vencedora su maldad contra la bondad vuestra, y no sólo se contentó con decirlo, sino que quiso que quedase por instrumento público esta verdad; la cual sabida por el rey, también por público instrumento os volvió vuestra honra y os declaró a ti, ¡oh, hermano!, por vencedor, y a Eusebia por honesta y limpia, y ordenó que fuédeses buscados, y que, hallados, os llevasen a su presencia para recompensaros con su magnanimidad y grandeza las estrechezas en que os debéis de haber visto. Si éstas son nuevas dignas de que os den gusto, a vuestra buena consideración lo dejo.

-Son tales -dijo entonces Arnaldo-, que no hay acrecentamiento de vida que las aventaje, ni posesión de no esperadas riquezas que las lleguen; porque la honra perdida y vuelta a cobrar con extremo, no tiene bien alguno la tierra que se le iguale. Gocéisle luengos años, señor Renato, y gócele en vuestra compañía la sin par Eusebia, yedra de vuestro muro, olmo de vuestra yedra, espejo de vuestro gusto, y ejemplo de bondad y agradecimiento.

Este mismo parabién, aunque con palabras diferentes, les dieron todos, y luego pasaron a preguntarle por nuevas de lo que en Europa pasaba y en otras partes de la tierra, de quien ellos por andar en el mar tenían poca noticia.

Sinibaldo respondió que de lo que más se trataba era de la calamidad en que estaba puesto por el rey de los dánaos, Leopoldio, el rey antiguo de Dinamarca, y por otros allegados que a Leopoldio favorecían. Contó asimismo cómo se murmuraba que por la ausencia de Arnaldo, príncipe heredero de Dinamarca, estaba su padre tan a pique de perderse, del cual príncipe decían que, cual mariposa, se iba tras la luz de unos bellos ojos de una su prisionera, tan no conocida por linaje que no se sabía quién fuesen sus padres. Contó con esto guerras del de Transilvania, movimientos del Turco, enemigo común del género humano; dio nuevas de la gloriosa muerte de Carlos V, rey de España y emperador romano, terror de los enemigos de la Iglesia y asombro de los secuaces de Mahoma. Dijo asimismo otras cosas más menudas, que unas alegraron y otras suspendieron, y las unas y las otras dieron gusto a todos, si no fue al pensativo Arnaldo, que desde el punto que oyó la opresión de su padre, puso los ojos en el suelo y la mano en la mejilla, y, al cabo de un buen espacio que así estuvo, quitó los ojos de la tierra, y, poniéndolos en el cielo, exclamando en voz alta, dijo:

-¡Oh amor, oh honra, oh compasión paterna, y cómo me apretáis el alma! Perdóname, amor, que no porque me aparto te dejo; espérame, ¡oh honra!, que no porque tenga amor dejaré de seguirte; consuélate, ¡oh padre!, que ya vuelvo; esperadme, vasallos, que el amor nunca hizo ninguno cobarde, ni lo he de ser yo en defenderos, pues soy el mejor y el más bien enamorado del mundo. Para la sin par Auristela quiero ir a ganar lo que es mío, y para poder merecer, por ser rey, lo que no merezco por ser amante: que el amante pobre, si la ventura a manos llenas no le favorece, casi no es posible que llegue a felice fin su deseo. Rey la quiero pretender, rey la he de servir, amante la he de adorar; y si con todo esto no la pudiere merecer, culparé más a mi suerte que a su conocimiento.

Todos los circunstantes quedaron suspensos oyendo las razones de Arnaldo; pero el que más lo quedó de todos fue Sinibaldo, a quien Mauricio había dicho cómo aquél era el príncipe de Dinamarca, y aquélla, mostrándole a Auristela, la prisionera que decían que le traía rendido. Puso algo más, de propósito, los ojos en Auristela Sinibaldo, y luego juzgó a discreción la que en Arnaldo parecía locura, porque la belleza de Auristela, como otras veces se ha dicho, era tal, que cautivaba los corazones de cuantos la miraban, y hallaban en ella disculpa todos los errores que por ella se hicieran.

Es, pues, el caso que aquel mismo día se concertó que Renato y Eusebia se volviesen a Francia, llevando en su navío a Arnaldo para dejalle en su reino, el cual quiso llevar consigo a Mauricio y a Transila, su hija, y a Ladislao, su yerno, y que en el navío de la huida, prosiguiendo su viaje, fuesen a España Periandro, los dos Antonios, Auristela, Ricla y la hermosa Constanza. Rutilio, viendo este repartimiento, estuvo esperando a qué parte le echarían; pero, antes que la declarasen, puesto de rodillas ante Renato, le suplicó le hiciese heredero de sus alhajas y le dejase en aquella isla, siquiera para que no faltase en ella quien encendiese el farol que guiase a los perdidos navegantes; porque él quería acabar bien la vida, hasta entonces mala. Reforzaron todos su cristiana petición, y el buen Renato, que era tan cristiano como liberal, le concedió todo cuanto pedía, diciéndole que quisiera que fueran de importancia las cosas que le dejaba, puesto que eran todas las necesarias para cultivar la tierra y pasar la vida humana, a lo que añadió Arnaldo que él le prometía, si se viese pacífico en su reino, de enviarle cada un año un bajel que le socorriese. A todos hizo señales de besar los pies Rutilio, y todos le abrazaron, y los más dellos lloraron de ver la santa resolución del nuevo ermitaño; que, aunque la nuestra no se enmiende, siempre da gusto ver enmendar la ajena vida, si no es que llega a tanto la protervidad nuestra, que querríamos ser el abismo que a otros abismos llamase.

Dos días tardaron en disponerse y acomodarse para seguir cada uno su viaje, y, al punto de la partida, hubo cortesés comedimientos, especialmente entre Arnaldo, Periandro y Auristela; y, aunque entre ellos se mezclaron amorosas razones, todas fueron honestas y comedidas, pues no alborotaron el pecho de Periandro. Lloró Transila, no tuvo enjutos los ojos Mauricio, ni lo estuvieron los de Ladislao; gimió Ricla, enternecióse Constanza, y su padre y su hermano también se mostraron tiernos. Andaba Rutilio de unos en otros, ya vestido con los hábitos de ermitaño de Renato, despidiéndose déstos y de aquéllos,

Finalmente, convidándoles el sosegado tiempo, y un viento que podía servir a diferentes viajes, se embarcaron y le dieron las velas, y Rutilio mil bendiciones, puesto en lo alto de las ermitas.

Y aquí dio fin a este segundo libro el autor desta peregrina historia.

Capítulo primero del libro tercero

COMO están nuestras almas siempre en continuo movimiento, y no pueden parar ni sosegar sino en su centro, que es Dios, para quien fueron criadas, no es maravilla que nuestros pensamientos se muden: que éste se tome, aquél se deje, uno se prosiga y otro se olvide; y el que más cerca anduviere de su sosiego, ése será el mejor, cuando no se mezcle con error de entendimiento.

Esto se ha dicho en disculpa de la ligereza que mostró Arnaldo en dejar en un punto el deseo que tanto tiempo había mostrado de servir a Auristela; pero no se puede decir que le dejó, sino que le entretuvo, en tanto que el de la honra, que sobrepuja al de todas las acciones humanas, se apoderó de su alma. El cual deseo se le declaró Arnaldo a Periandro una noche antes de la partida, hablándole aparte en la isla de las Ermitas. Allí le suplicó -que quien pide lo que ha menester, no ruega, sino suplica-que mirase por su hermana Auristela, y que la guardase para reina de Dinamarca; y que, aunque la ventura no se le mostrase a él buena en cobrar su reino, y en tan justa demanda perdiese la vida, se estimase Auristela por viuda de un príncipe, y, como tal, supiese escoger esposo, puesto que ya él sabía y muchas veces lo había dicho, que por sí sola, sin tener dependencia de otra grandeza alguna, merecía ser señora del mayor reino del mundo, no que del de Dinamarca. Periandro le respondió que le agradecía su buen deseo, y que él tendría cuidado de mirar por ella como por cosa que tanto le tocaba y que tan bien le venía. Ninguna destas razones dijo Periandro a Auristela, porque las alabanzas que se dan a la persona amada, halas de decir el amante como propias, y no como que se dicen de persona ajena. No ha de enamorar el amante con las gracias de otro; tuyas han de ser las que mostrare a su dama; si no canta bien, no le traiga quien la cante; si no es demasiado gentilhombre, no se acompañe con Ganimedes; y, finalmente, soy de parecer que las faltas que tuviere, no las enmiende con ajenas sobras. Estos consejos no se dan a Periandro, que de los bienes de la naturaleza se llevaba la gala, y en los de la fortuna era inferior a pocos.

En esto iban las naves con un mismo viento, por diferentes caminos, que éste es uno de los que parecen misterios en el arte de la navegación; iban rompiendo, como digo, no claros cristales, sino azules; mostrábase el mar colchado, porque el viento, tratándole con respeto, no se atrevía a tocarle a más de la superficie, y la nave suavemente le besaba los labios, y se dejaba resbalar por él con tanta ligereza que apenas parecía que le tocaba. Desta suerte, y con la misma tranquilidad y sosiego, navegaron diez y siete días sin ser necesario subir ni bajar, ni llegar a templar las velas, cuya felicidad en los que navegan, si no tuviese por descuentos el temor de borrascas venideras, no había gusto con que igualalle.

Al cabo destos o pocos más días, al amanecer de uno, dijo un grumete que desde la gavia mayor iba descubriendo la tierra:

-¡Albricias, señores, albricias pido y albricias merezco! ¡Tierra! ¡Tierra! Aunque mejor diría ¡cielo!, ¡cielo!, porque sin duda estamos en el paraje de la famosa Lisboa.

Cuyas nuevas sacaron de los ojos de todos tiernas y alegres lágrimas, especialmente de Ricla, de los dos Antonios y de su hija Constanza, porque les pareció que ya habían llegado a la tierra de promisión que tanto deseaban.

Echóle los brazos Antonio al cuello, diciéndole:

-Agora sabrás, bárbara mía, del modo que has de servir a Dios, con otra relación más copiosa, aunque no diferente, de la que yo te he hecho; agora verás los ricos templos en que es adorado; verás juntamente las católicas ceremonias con que se sirve, y notarás cómo la caridad cristiana está en su punto. Aquí, en esta ciudad, verás cómo son verdugos de la enfermedad muchos hospitales que la destruyen, y el que en ellos pierde la vida, envuelto en la eficacia de infinitas indulgencias, gana la del cielo. Aquí el amor y la honestidad se dan las manos, y se pasean juntos, la cortesía no deja que se le llegue la arrogancia, y la braveza no consiente que se le acerque la cobardía. Todos sus moradores son agradables, son corteses, son liberales y son enamorados, porque son discretos. La ciudad es la mayor de Europa y la de mayores tratos; en ella se descargan las riquezas del Oriente, y desde ella se reparten por el universo; su puerto es capaz, no sólo de naves que se puedan reducir a número, sino de selvas movibles de árboles que los de las naves forman; la hermosura de las mujeres admira y enamora; la bizarría de los hombres pasma, como ellos dicen; finalmente, ésta es la tierra que da al cielo santo y copiosísimo tributo.

-No digas más -dijo a esta sazón Periandro-; deja, Antonio, algo para nuestros ojos, que las alabanzas no lo han de decir todo: algo ha de quedar para la vista, para que con ella nos admiremos de nuevo, y así, creciendo el gusto por puntos, vendrá a ser mayor en sus extremos.

Contentísima estaba Auristela de ver que se le acercaba la hora de poner pie en tierra firme, sin andar de puerto en puerto y de isla en isla, sujeta a la inconstancia del mar y a la movable voluntad de los vientos; y más cuando supo que desde allí a Roma podía ir a pie enjuto, sin embarcarse otra vez si no quisiese.

Mediodía sería cuando llegaron a Sangián, donde se registró el navío, y donde el castellano del castillo, y los que con él entraron en la nave, se admiraron de la hermosura de Auristela, de la gallardía de Periandro, del traje bárbaro de los dos Antonios, del buen aspecto de Ricla y de la agradable belleza de Constanza. Supieron ser extranjeros, y que iban peregrinando a Roma. Satisfizo Periandro a los marineros, que los habían traído magníficamente, con el oro que sacó Ricla de la Isla Bárbara, ya vuelto en moneda corriente en la isla de Policarpo. Los marineros quisieron llegar a Lisboa a granjearlo con alguna mercancía.

El castellano de Sangián envió al gobernador de Lisboa, que entonces era el arzobispo de Braga, por ausencia del rey, que no estaba en la ciudad, de la nueva venida de los extranjeros y de la sin par belleza de Auristela, añadiendo la de Constanza, que con el traje de bárbara no solamente no la encubría, pero la realzaba; exageróle asimismo la gallarda disposición de Periandro, y juntamente la discreción de todos, que no bárbaros, sino cortesanos parecían.

Llegó el navío a la ribera de la ciudad, y en la de Belén se desembarcaron, porque quiso Auristela, enamorada y devota de la fama de aquel santo monasterio, visitarle primero, y adorar en él al verdadero Dios libre y desembarazadamente, sin las torcidas ceremonias de su tierra. Había salido a la marina infinita gente a ver los extranjeros desembarcados en Belén; corrieron allá todos por ver la novedad, que siempre se lleva tras sí los deseos y los ojos.

Ya salía de Belén el nuevo escuadrón de la nueva hermosura: Ricla, medianamente hermosa, pero estremadamente a lo bárbaro vestida; Constanza, hermosísima y rodeada de pieles; Antonio el padre, brazos y piernas desnudas, pero con pieles de lobos cubierto lo demás del cuerpo; Antonio el hijo iba del mismo modo, pero con el arco en la mano y la aljaba de las saetas a las espaldas; Periandro, con casaca de terciopelo verde y calzones de lo mismo, a lo marinero, un bonete estrecho y puntiagudo en la cabeza, que no le podía cubrir las sortijas de oro que sus cabellos formaban; Auristela traía toda la gala del setentrión en el vestido, la más bizarra gallardía en el cuerpo y la mayor hermosura del mundo en el rostro. En efeto, todos juntos y cada uno de por sí, causaban espanto y maravilla a quien los miraba; pero sobre todos campeaba la sin par Auristela y el gallardo Periandro.

Llegaron por tierra a Lisboa, rodeados de plebeya y de cortesana gente; lleváronlos al gobernador, que, después de admirado de verlos, no se cansaba de preguntarles quiénes eran, de dónde venían y adónde iban. A lo que respondió Periandro, que ya traía estudiada la respuesta que había de dar a semejantes preguntas, viendo que se la habían de hacer muchas veces: cuando quería o le parecía que convenía, relataba su historia a lo largo, encubriendo siempre sus padres, de modo que, satisfaciendo a los que le preguntaban, en breves razones cifraba, si no toda, a lo menos gran parte de su historia. Mandólos el visorrey alojar en uno de los mejores alojamientos de la ciudad, que acertó a ser la casa de un magnífico caballero portugués, donde era tanta la gente que concurría para ver a Auristela, de quien sola había salido la fama de lo que había que ver en todos, que fue parecer de Periandro mudasen los trajes de bárbaros en los de peregrinos, porque la novedad de los que traían era la causa principal de ser tan seguidos, que ya parecían perseguidos del vulgo; además, que para el viaje que ellos llevaban de Roma, ninguno le venía más a cuento. Hízose así, y de allí a dos días se vieron peregrinamente peregrinos.

Acaeció, pues, que al salir un día de casa, un hombre portugués se arrojó a los pies de Periandro, llamándole por su nombre, y, abrazándole por las piernas, le dijo:

-¿Qué ventura es ésta, señor Periandro, que la des a esta tierra con tu presencia? No te admires en ver que te nombro por tu nombre, que uno soy de aquellos veinte que cobraron libertad en la abrasada isla Bárbara, donde tú la tenías perdida; halléme a la muerte de Manuel de Sosa Cuitiño, el caballero portugués; apartéme de ti y de los tuyos en el hospedaje donde llegó Mauricio y Ladislao en busca de Transila, esposa del uno y hija del otro; trújome la buena suerte a mi patria; conté aquí a sus parientes la enamorada muerte; creyéronla, y, aunque yo no se la afirmara de vista, la creyeran, por tener casi en costumbre el morir de amores los portugueses; un hermano suyo, que heredó su hacienda, ha hecho sus obsequias, y en una capilla de su linaje, le puso en una piedra de mármol blanco, como si debajo della estuviera enterrado, un epitafio que quiero que vengáis a ver todos, así como estáis, porque creo que os ha de agradar por discreto y por gracioso.

Por las palabras, bien conoció Periandro que aquel hombre decía verdad; pero, por el rostro, no se acordaba haberle visto en su vida. Con todo eso, se fueron al templo que decía, y vieron la capilla y la losa sobre la cual estaba escrito en lengua portuguesa este epitafio, que leyó casi en castellano Antonio el padre, que decía así:

AQUÍ YACE VIVA LA MEMORIA DEL YA MUERTO
MANUEL DE SOSA COITIÑO, CABALLERO PORTUGUÉS, QUE, A NO SER PORTUGUÉS, AÚN FUERA VIVO.
NO MURIÓ A LAS MANOS DE NINGÚN CASTELLANO, SINO A LAS DEL AMOR, QUE TODO LO PUEDE;
PROCURA SABER SU VIDA Y ENVIDIARÁS SU MUERTE, PASAJERO.

Vio Periandro que había tenido razón el portugués de alabarle el epitafio, en el escribir de los cuales tiene gran primor la nación portuguesa. Preguntó Auristela al portugués qué sentimiento había hecho la monja, dama del muerto, de la muerte de su amante, el cual la respondió que, dentro de pocos días que la supo, pasó desta a mejor vida, o ya por la estrechez de la que hacía siempre, o ya por el sentimiento del no pensado suceso.

Desde allí se fueron en casa de un famoso pintor, donde ordenó Periandro que, en un lienzo grande, le pintase todos los más principales casos de su historia: a un lado pintó la Isla Bárbara ardiendo en llamas, y allí junto la isla de la prisión, y un poco más desviado, la balsa o enmaderamiento donde le halló Arnaldo cuando le llevó a su navío; en otra parte estaba la isla Nevada, donde el enamorado portugués perdió la vida; luego la nave que los soldados de Arnaldo taladraron; allí junto pintó la división del esquife y de la barca; allí se mostraba el desafío de los amantes de Taurisa y su muerte; acá estaban serrando por la quilla la nave que había servido de sepultura a Auristela y a los que con ella venían; acullá estaba la agradable isla donde vio en sueños Periandro los dos escuadrones de virtudes y vicios; y allí, junto la nave, donde los peces Náufragos pescaron a los dos marineros y les dieron en su vientre sepultura. No se olvidó de que pintase verse empedrados en el mar helado, el asalto y combate del navío, ni el entregarse a Cratilo; pintó asimismo la temeraria carrera del poderoso caballo, cuyo espanto, de león, le hizo cordero; que los tales con un asombro se amansan; pintó, como en resguño y en estrecho espacio, las fiestas de Policarpo, coronándose a sí mismo por vencedor en ellas; resolutamente, no quedó paso principal en que no hiciese labor en su historia, que allí no pintase, hasta poner la ciudad de Lisboa y su desembarcación en el mismo traje en que habían venido; también se vio en el mismo lienzo arder la isla de Policarpo, a Clodio traspasado con la saeta de Antonio y a Cenotia colgada de una entena; pintóse también la isla de las Ermitas, y a Rutilio con apariencias de santo. Este lienzo se hacía de una recopilación que les escusaba de contar su historia por menudo, porque Antonio el mozo declaraba las pinturas y los sucesos cuando le apretaban a que los dijese. Pero, en lo que más se aventajó el pintor famoso, fue en el retrato de Auristela, en quien decían se había mostrado a saber pintar una hermosa figura, puesto que la dejaba agraviada, pues a la belleza de Auristela, si no era llevado de pensamiento divino, no había pincel humano que alcanzase.

Diez días estuvieron en Lisboa, todos los cuales gastaron en visitar los templos y en encaminar sus almas por la derecha senda de su salvación, al cabo de los cuales, con licencia del visorrey y con patentes verdaderas y firmes de quiénes eran y adónde iban, se despidieron del caballero portugués, su huésped, y del hermano del enamorado, Alberto, de quien recibieron grandes caricias y beneficios, y se pusieron en camino de Castilla. Y esta partida fue menester hacerla de noche, temerosos que si de día la hicieran, la gente que les seguiría la estorbara, puesto que la mudanza del traje había hecho ya que amainase la admiración.

Capítulo segundo del tercer libro

PEDÍAN los tiernos años de Auristela, y los más tiernos de Constanza, con los entreverados de Ricla, coches, estruendo y aparato para el largo viaje en que se ponían; pero la devoción de Auristela, que había prometido de ir a pie hasta Roma, desde la parte do llegase en tierra firme, llevó tras sí las demás devociones; y todos de un parecer, así varones como hembras, votaron el viaje a pie, añadiendo, si fuese necesario, mendigar de puerta en puerta. Con esto cerró la del dar Ricla, y Periandro se escusó de no disponer de la cruz de diamantes que Auristela traía, guardándola con las inestimables perlas para mejor ocasión. Solamente compraron un bagaje que sobrellevase las cargas que no pudieran sufrir las espaldas; acomodáronse de bordones, que servían de arrimo y defensa, y de vainas de unos agudos estoques. Con este cristiano y humilde aparato salieron de Lisboa, dejándola sola sin su belleza, y pobre sin la riqueza de su discreción, como lo mostraron los infinitos corrillos de gente que en ella se hicieron, donde la fama no trataba de otra cosa sino del extremo de discreción y belleza de los peregrinos extranjeros.

Desta manera, acomodándose a sufrir el trabajo de hasta dos o tres leguas de camino cada día, llegaron a Badajoz, donde ya tenía el Corregidor castellano nuevas de Lisboa, cómo por allí habían de pasar los nuevos peregrinos, los cuales, entrando en la ciudad, acertaron a alojarse en un mesón do se alojaba una compañía de famosos recitantes, los cuales aquella misma noche habían de dar la muestra para alcanzar la licencia de representar en público, en casa del Corregidor. Pero, apenas vieron el rostro de Auristela y el de Constanza, cuando les sobresaltó lo que solía sobresaltar a todos aquellos que primeramente las veían, que era admiración y espanto.

Pero ninguno puso tan en punto el maravillarse, como fue el ingenio de un poeta, que de propósito con los recitantes venía, así para enmendar y remendar comedias viejas, como para hacerlas de nuevo: ejercicio más ingenioso que honrado y más de trabajo que de provecho. Pero la excelencia de la poesía es tan limpia como el agua clara, que a todo lo no limpio aprovecha; es como el sol, que pasa por todas las cosas inmundas sin que se le pegue nada; es habilidad, que tanto vale cuanto se estima; es un rayo que suele salir de donde está encerrado, no abrasando, sino alumbrando; es instrumento acordado que dulcemente alegra los sentidos, y, al paso del deleite, lleva consigo la honestidad y el provecho. Digo, en fin, que este poeta, a quien la necesidad había hecho trocar los Parnasos con los mesones y las Castalias y las Aganipes con los charcos y arroyos de los caminos y ventas, fue el que más se admiró de la belleza de Auristela, y al momento la marcó en su imaginación y la tuvo por más que buena para ser comedianta, sin reparar si sabía o no la lengua castellana. Contentóle el talle, dióle gusto el brío, y en un instante la vistió en su imaginación en hábito corto de varón; desnudóla luego y vistióla de ninfa, y casi al mismo punto la envistió de la majestad de reina, sin dejar traje de risa o de gravedad de que no la vistiese, y en todas se le representó grave, alegre, discreta, aguda, y sobremanera honesta: extremos que se acomodan mal en una farsanta hermosa.

¡Válame Dios, y con cuánta facilidad discurre el ingenio de un poeta y se arroja a romper por mil imposibles! ¡Sobre cuán flacos cimientos levanta grandes quimeras! Todo se lo halla hecho, todo fácil, todo llano, y esto de manera que las esperanzas le sobran cuando la ventura le falta, como lo mostró este nuestro moderno poeta cuando vio descoger acaso el lienzo donde venían pintados los trabajos de Periandro. Allí se vio él en el mayor que en su vida se había visto, por venirle a la imaginación un grandísimo deseo de componer de todos ellos una comedia; pero no acertaba en qué nombre le pondría: si le llamaría comedia, o tragedia, o tragicomedia, porque si sabía el principio, ignoraba el medio y el fin, pues aun todavía iban corriendo las vidas de Periandro y de Auristela, cuyos fines habían de poner nombre a lo que dellos se representase. Pero lo que más le fatigaba era pensar cómo podría encajar un lacayo consejero y gracioso en el mar y entre tantas islas, fuego y nieves; y, con todo esto, no se desesperó de hacer la comedia y de encajar el tal lacayo, a pesar de todas las reglas de la poesía y a despecho del arte cómico. Y, en tanto que en esto iba y venía, tuvo lugar de hablar a Auristela y de proponerle su deseo y de aconsejarla cuán bien la estaría si se hiciese recitanta. Díjole que, a dos salidas al teatro, le lloverían minas de oro a cuestras, porque los príncipes de aquella edad eran como hechos de alquimia, que llegada al oro, es oro, y llegada al cobre, es cobre; pero que, por la mayor parte, rendían su voluntad a las ninfas de los teatros, a las diosas enteras y a las semideas, a las reinas de estudio y a las fregonas de apariencia; díjole que si alguna fiesta real acertase a hacerse en su tiempo, que se diese por cubierta de faldellines de oro, porque todas o las más libreas de los caballeros habían de venir a su casa rendidas a besarle los pies; representóle el gusto de los viajes, y el llevarse tras sí dos o tres disfrazados caballeros que la servirían tan de criados como de amantes; y, sobre todo, encarecía y puso sobre las nubes la excelencia y la honra que le darían en encargarle las primeras figuras. En fin, le dijo que si en alguna cosa se verificaba la verdad de un antiguo refrán castellano, era en las hermosas farsantas, donde la honra y provecho cabían en un saco.

Auristela le respondió que no había entendido palabra de cuantas le había dicho, porque bien se veía que ignoraba la lengua castellana, y que, puesto que la supiera, sus pensamientos eran otros, que tenían puesta la mira en otros ejercicios, si no tan agradables, a lo menos más convenientes. Desesperóse el poeta con la resoluta respuesta de Auristela; miróse a los pies de su ignorancia, y deshizo la rueda de su vanidad y locura.

Aquella noche fueron a dar la muestra en casa del Corregidor, el cual, como hubiese sabido que la hermosa junta peregrina estaba en la ciudad, los envió a buscar y a convidar viniesen a su casa a ver la comedia, y a recibir en ella muestras del deseo que tenía de servirles, por las que de su valor le habían escrito de Lisboa. Acetólo Periandro, con parecer de Auristela y de Antonio el padre, a quien obedecían como a su mayor. Juntas estaban muchas damas de la ciudad con la Corregidora, cuando entraron Auristela, Ricla y Constanza, con Periandro y los dos Antonios, admirando, suspendiendo, alborotando la vista de los presentes, que a sentir tales efetos les forzaba la sin par bizarría de los nuevos peregrinos, los cuales, acrecentando con su humildad y buen parecer la benevolencia de los que los recibieron, dieron lugar a que les diesen casi el más honrado en la fiesta, que fue la representación de la fábula de Céfalo y de Pocris, cuando ella, celosa más de lo que debía, y él, con menos discurso que fuera necesario, disparó el dardo que a ella le quitó la vida y a él el gusto para siempre. El verso tocó los extremos de bondad posibles, como compuesto, según se dijo, por Juan de Herrera de Gamboa, a quien por mal nombre llamaron el Maganto, cuyo ingenio tocó asimismo las más altas rayas de la poética esfera. Acabada la comedia, desmenuzaron las damas la hermosura de Auristela parte por parte, y hallaron todas un todo a quien dieron por nombre Perfección sin tacha, y los varones dijeron lo mismo de la gallardía de Periandro, y de recudida se alabó también la belleza de Constanza y la bizarría de su hermano Antonio. Tres días estuvieron en la ciudad, donde en ellos mostró el Corregidor ser caballero liberal, y tener la Corregidora condición de reina, según fueron las dádivas y presentes que hizo a Auristela y a los demás peregrinos, los cuales, mostrándose agradecidos y obligados, prometieron de tener cuenta de darla de sus sucesos, de dondequiera que estuviesen.

Partidos, pues, de Badajoz, se encaminaron a nuestra Señora de Guadalupe, y, habiendo andado tres días y en ellos cinco leguas, les tomó la noche en un monte poblado de infinitas encinas y de otros rústicos árboles. Tenía suspenso el cielo el curso y sazón del tiempo en la balanza igual de los dos equinoccios: ni el calor fatigaba, ni el frío ofendía, y, a necesidad, tan bien se podía pasar la noche en el campo como en el aldea; y a esta causa, y por estar lejos un pueblo, quiso Auristela que se quedasen en unas majadas de pastores boyeros que a los ojos se les ofrecieron. Hízose lo que Auristela quiso, y, apenas habían entrado por el bosque docientos pasos, cuando se cerró la noche con tanta escuridad que los detuvo, y les hizo mirar atentamente la lumbre de los boyeros, porque su resplandor les sirviese de norte para no errar el camino. Las tinieblas de la noche, y un ruido que sintieron, les detuvo el paso y hizo que Antonio el mozo se apercibiese de su arco, perpetuo compañero suyo. Llegó en esto un hombre a caballo, cuyo rostro no vieron, el cual les dijo:

-¿Sois desta tierra, buena gente?

-No, por cierto -respondió Periandro-, sino de bien lejos della; peregrinos extranjeros somos que vamos a Roma, y primero a Guadalupe.

-Sí, que también -dijo el de a caballo-hay en las extranjeras tierras caridad y cortesía, también hay almas compasivas dondequiera.

-¿Pues no? -respondió Antonio-. Mirad, señor, quienquiera que seáis, si habéis menester algo de nosotros, y veréis cómo sale verdadera vuestra imaginación.

-Tomad -dijo, pues, el caballero-, tomad, señores, esta cadena de oro, que debe de valer docientos escudos, y tomad asimismo esta prenda, que no debe de tener precio, a lo menos yo no se le hallo, y darle heis en la ciudad de Trujillo a uno de dos caballeros que en ella y en todo el mundo son bien conocidos: llámase el uno don Francisco Pizarro y el otro don Juan de Orellana; ambos mozos, ambos libres, ambos ricos y ambos en todo extremo.

Y, en esto, puso en las manos de Ricla, que como mujer compasiva se adelantó a tomarlo, una criatura que ya comenzaba a llorar, envuelta ni se supo por entonces si en ricos o en pobres paños.

-Y diréis a cualquiera dellos que la guarden, que presto sabrán quién es, y las desdichas que a ser dichoso le habrán llevado, si llega a su presencia. Y perdonadme, que mis enemigos me siguen, los cuales, si aquí llegaren y preguntaren si me habéis visto, diréis que no, pues os importa poco el decir esto; o si ya os pareciere mejor, decid que por aquí pasaron tres o cuatro hombres de a caballo, que iban diciendo: «¡A Portugal! ¡A Portugal!» Y a Dios quedad, que no puedo detenerme; que, puesto que el miedo pone espuelas, más agudas las pone la honra.

Y, arrimando las que traía al caballo, se apartó como un rayo dellos; pero, casi al mismo punto, volvió el caballero y dijo:

-No está bautizado.

Y tornó a seguir su camino.

Veis aquí a nuestros peregrinos, a Ricla con la criatura en los brazos, a Periandro con la cadena al cuello, a Antonio el mozo sin dejar de tener flechado el arco, y al padre en postura de desenvainar el estoque, que de bordón le servía, y a Auristela confusa y atónita del extraño suceso, y a todos juntos admirados del extraño acontecimiento, cuya salida fue por entonces que aconsejó Auristela que, como mejor pudiesen, llegasen a la majada de los boyeros, donde podría ser hallasen remedios para sustentar aquella recién nacida criatura, que, por su pequeñez y la debilidad de su llanto, mostraba ser de pocas horas nacida. Hízose así; y apenas llegaron a la majada de los pastores, a costa de muchos tropiezos y caídas, cuando, antes que los peregrinos les preguntasen si eran servidos de darles alojamiento aquella noche, llegó a la majada una mujer llorando, triste, pero no reciamente, porque mostraba en sus gemidos que se esforzaba a no dejar salir la voz del pecho. Venía medio desnuda, pero las ropas que la cubrían eran de rica y principal persona. La lumbre y luz de las hogueras, a pesar de la diligencia que ella hacía para encubrirse el rostro, la descubrieron, y vieron ser tan hermosa como niña, y tan niña como hermosa, puesto que Ricla, que sabía más de edades, la juzgó por de diez y seis a diez y siete años.

Preguntáronle los pastores si la seguía alguien, o si tenía otra necesidad que pidiese presto remedio. A lo que respondió la dolorosa muchacha:

-Lo primero, señores, que habéis de hacer, es ponerme debajo de la tierra; quiero decir, que me encubráis de modo que no me halle quien me buscare. Lo segundo, que me deis algún sustento, porque desmayos me van acabando la vida.

-Nuestra diligencia -dijo un pastor viejo-mostrará que tenemos caridad.

Y, aguijando con presteza a un hueco de un árbol que en una valiente encina se hacía, puso en él algunas pieles blandas de ovejas y cabras, que entre el ganado mayor se criaban; hizo un modo de lecho, bastante por entonces a suplir aquella necesidad precisa; tomó luego a la mujer en los brazos y encerróla en el hueco, adonde le dio lo que pudo, que fueron sopas en leche, y le dieran vino, si ella quisiera beberlo; colgó luego delante del hueco otras pieles, como para enjugarse.

Ricla, viendo hecho esto, habiendo conjeturado que aquélla, sin duda, debía de ser la madre de la criatura que ella tenía, se llegó al pastor caritativo, diciéndole:

-No pongáis, buen señor, término a vuestra caridad, y usalda con esta criatura que tengo en los brazos, antes que perezca de hambre.

Y en breves razones le contó cómo se le habían dado.

Respondióla el pastor a la intención, y no a sus razones, llamando a uno de los demás pastores, a quien mandó que, tomando aquella criatura, la llevase al aprisco de las cabras y hiciese de modo como de alguna dellas tomase el pecho.

Apenas hubo hecho esto, y tan apenas que casi se oían los últimos acentos del llanto de la criatura, cuando llegaron a la majada un tropel de hombres a caballo, preguntando por la mujer desmayada y por el caballero de la criatura; pero, como no les dieron nuevas ni noticia de lo que pedían, pasaron con estraña priesa adelante, de que no poco se alegraron sus remediadores. Y aquella noche pasaron con más comodidad que los peregrinos pensaron, y con más alegría de los ganaderos, por verse tan bien acompañados.

Capítulo tercero del tercer libro

La doncella encerrada en el árbol: de quién era

PREÑADA estaba la encina -digámoslo así-; preñadas estaban las nubes, cuya escuridad la puso en los ojos de los que por la prisionera del árbol preguntaron; pero al compasivo pastor, que era mayoral del hato, ninguna cosa le pudo turbar para que dejase de acudir a proveer lo que fuese necesario al recibimiento de sus huéspedes: la criatura tomó los pechos de la cabra; la encerrada, el rústico sustento; y los peregrinos, el nuevo y agradable hospedaje.

Quisieron todos saber luego qué causas habían traído allí a la lastimada y al parecer fugitiva, y a la desamparada criatura; pero fue parecer de Auristela que no le preguntasen nada hasta el venidero día, porque los sobresaltos no suelen dar licencia a la lengua, aun a que cuente venturas alegres, cuanto más desdichas tristes; y, puesto que el anciano pastor visitaba a menudo el árbol, no preguntaba nada al depósito que tenía, sino solamente por su salud; y fuele respondido que, aunque tenía mucha ocasión para no tenerla, le sobraría como ella se viese libre de los que la buscaban, que era su padre y hermanos. Cubrióla y encubrióla el pastor, y dejóla, y volvióse a los peregrinos, que aquella noche la pasaron con más claridad de las hogueras y fuegos de los pastores que con aquélla que ella les concedía; y, antes que el cansancio les obligase a entregar los sentidos al sueño, quedó concertado que el pastor que había llevado la criatura a procurar que las cabras fuesen sus amas, la llevase y entregase a una hermana del anciano ganadero, que, casi dos leguas de allí, en una pequeña aldea, vivía. Diéronle que llevase la cadena, con orden de darla a criar en la misma aldea, diciendo ser de otra algo apartada. Todo esto se hizo así, con que se aseguraron y apercibieron a desmentir las espías, si acaso volviesen, o viniesen otras de nuevo, a buscar los perdidos; a lo menos, los que perdidos parecían. En tratar desto y en satisfacer la hambre y en un breve rato que se apoderó de sus ojos el sueño y de sus lenguas el silencio, se pasó el de la noche, y se vino a más andar el día, alegre para todos, si no para la temerosa que, encerrada en el árbol, apenas osaba ver del sol la claridad hermosa.

Con todo eso, habiendo puesto primero, cerca y lejos del rebaño, de trecho en trecho, centinelas que avisasen si alguna gente venía, la sacaron del árbol para que le diese el aire, y para saber della lo que deseaban; y con la luz del día vieron que la de su rostro era admirable, de modo que puso en duda a cuál darían, della y de Constanza, después de Auristela, el segundo lugar de hermosa; porque dondequiera se llevó el primero Auristela, a quien no quiso dar igual la naturaleza.

Muchas preguntas le hicieron y muchos ruegos precedieron antes, todos encaminados a que su suceso les contase, y ella, de puro cortés y agradecida, pidiendo licencia a su flaqueza, con aliento debilitado así comenzó a decir:

-Puesto, señores, que, en lo que deciros quiero, tengo de descubrir faltas que me han de hacer perder el crédito de honrada, todavía quiero más parecer cortés por obedeceros, que desagradecida por no contentaros. «Mi nombre es Feliciano de la Voz; mi patria, una villa no lejos de este lugar; mis padres son nobles mucho más que ricos; y mi hermosura, en tanto que no ha estado tan marchita como agora, ha sido de algunos estimada y celebrada. Junto a la villa que me dio el cielo por patria vivía un hidalgo riquísimo, cuyo trato y cuyas muchas virtudes le hacían ser caballero en la opinión de las gentes. Éste tiene un hijo que desde agora muestra ser tan heredero de las virtudes de su padre, que son muchas, como de su hacienda, que es infinita. Vivía, ansimismo, en la misma aldea un caballero con otro hijo suyo, más nobles que ricos, en una tan honrada medianía, que ni los humillaba ni los ensoberbecía. Con este segundo mancebo noble ordenaron mi padre y dos hermanos que tengo de casarme, echando a las espaldas los ruegos con que me pedía por esposa el rico hidalgo; pero yo, a quien los cielos guardaban para esta desventura en que me veo, y para otras en que pienso verme, me di por esposa al rico, y yo me le entregué por suya a hurto de mi padre y de mis hermanos, que madre no la tengo, por mayor desgracia mía. Vímonos muchas veces solos y juntos, que para semejantes casos nunca la ocasión vuelve las espaldas; antes, en la mitad de las imposibilidades, ofrece su guedeja.

»Destas juntas y destos hurtos amorosos se acortó mi vestido y creció mi infamia, si es que se puede llamar infamia la conversación de los desposados amantes. En este tiempo, sin hacerme sabidora, concertaron mi padre y hermanos de casarme con el mozo noble; con tanto deseo de efetuarlo que anoche le trajeron a casa, acompañado de dos cercanos parientes suyos, con propósito de que luego luego nos diésemos las manos. Sobresaltéme cuando vi entrar a Luis Antonio (que éste es el nombre del mancebo noble), y más me admiré cuando mi padre me dijo que me entrase en mi aposento y me aderezase algo más de lo ordinario, porque en aquel punto había de dar la mano de esposa a Luis Antonio. Dos días había que había entrado en los términos que la naturaleza pide en los partos, y, con el sobresalto y no esperada nueva, quedé como muerta; y, diciendo entraba a aderezarme a mi aposento, me arrojé en los brazos de una mi doncella, depositaria de mis secretos, a quien dije, hechos fuentes mis ojos: "¡Ay, Leonora mía, y cómo creo que es llegado el fin de mis días! Luis Antonio está en esa antesala, esperando que yo salga a darle la mano de esposa. Mira si es este trance riguroso, y la más apretada ocasión en que pueda verse una mujer desdichada. Pásame, hermana mía, si tienes con qué, este pecho; salga primero mi alma destas carnes, que no la desvergüenza de mi atrevimiento. ¡Ay, amiga mía, que me muero, que se me acaba la vida!" Y, diciendo esto, y dando un gran suspiro, arrojé una criatura en el suelo, cuyo nunca visto caso suspendió a mi doncella, y a mí me cegó el discurso de manera que, sin saber qué hacer, estuve esperando a que mi padre o mis hermanos entrasen, y, en lugar de sacarme a desposar, me sacasen a la sepultura.»

Aquí llegaba Feliciano de su cuento, cuando vieron que las centinelas que habían puesto para asegurarse hacían señal de que venía gente, y con diligencia no vista, el pastor anciano quería volver a depositar a Feliciano en el árbol, seguro asilo de su desgracia; pero, habiendo vuelto las centinelas a decir que se asegurasen, porque un tropel de gente que habían visto, cruzaba por otro camino, todos se aseguraron, y Feliciano de la Voz volvió a su cuento, diciendo:

-«Considerad, señores, el apretado peligro en que me vi anoche: el desposado en la sala, esperándome, y el adúltero, si así se puede decir, en un jardín de mi casa, atendiéndome para hablarme, ignorante del estrecho en que yo estaba, y de la venida de Luis Antonio; yo, sin sentido, por el no esperado suceso; mi doncella turbada, con la criatura en los brazos; mi padre y hermanos dándome priesa que saliese a los desdichados desposorios. Aprieto fue éste que pudiera derribar a más gallardos entendimientos que el mío, y oponerse a toda buena razón y buen discurso. No sé qué os diga más, sino que sentí, estando sin sentido, que entró mi padre, diciendo: "Acaba, muchacha; sal comoquiera que estuvieres, que tu hermosura suplirá tu desnudez y te servirá de riquísimas galas". Dióle, a lo que creo, en esto, a los oídos el llanto de la criatura, que mi doncella, a lo que imagino, debía de ir a poner en cobro, o a dársela a Rosanio, que este es el nombre del que yo quise escoger por esposo. Alborotóse mi padre, y con una vela en la mano me miró el rostro, y coligió por mi semblante, mi sobresalto y mi desmayo. Volvióle a herir en los oídos el eco del llanto de la criatura, y, echando mano a la espada, fue siguiendo adonde la voz le llevaba. El resplandor del cuchillo me dio en la turbada vista, y el miedo en la mitad del alma; y, como sea natural cosa el desear conservar la vida cada uno, del temor de perderla salió en mí el ánimo de remediarla; y, apenas hubo mi padre vuelto las espaldas, cuando yo, así como estaba, bajé por un caracol a unos aposentos bajos de mi casa, y de ellos con facilidad me puse en la calle, y de la calle en el campo, y del campo en no sé qué camino; y, finalmente, aguijada del miedo y solicitada del temor, como si tuviera alas en los pies, caminé más de lo que prometía mi flaqueza. Mil veces estuve para arrojarme en el camino de algún ribazo, que me acabara con acabarme la vida, y otras tantas estuve por sentarme o tenderme en el suelo, y dejarme hallar de quien me buscara; pero, alentándome la luz de vuestras cabañas, procuré llegar a ellas a buscar descanso a mi cansancio, y si no remedio, algún alivio a mi desdicha. Y así llegué como me vistes, y así me hallo como me veo, merced a vuestra caridad y cortesía. Esto es, señores míos, lo que os puedo contar de mi historia, cuyo fin dejo al cielo, y le remito en la tierra a vuestros buenos consejos.»

Aquí dio fin a su plática la lastimada Feliciano de la Voz, con que puso en los oyentes admiración y lástima en un mismo grado. Periandro contó luego el hallazgo de la criatura, la dádiva de la cadena, con todo aquello que le había sucedido con el caballero que se la dio.

-¡Ay! -dijo Feliciano-. ¿Si es por ventura esa prenda mía? ¿Y si es Rosanio el que la trajo? Y si yo la viese, si no por el rostro, pues nunca le he visto, quizá por los paños en que viene envuelta sacaría a luz la verdad de las tinieblas de mi confusión; porque mi doncella, no apercibida, ¿en qué la podía envolver, sino en paños que estuviesen en el aposento, que fuesen de mí conocidos? Y, cuando esto no sea, quizá la sangre hará su oficio, y por ocultos sentimientos le dará a entender lo que me toca.

A lo que respondió el pastor:

-La criatura está ya en mi aldea en poder de una hermana y de una sobrina mía; yo haré que ellas mismas nos la traigan hoy aquí, donde podrás, hermosa Feliciano, hacer las esperiencias que deseas. En tanto, sosiega, señora, el espíritu, que mis pastores y este árbol servirán de nubes que se opongan a los ojos que te buscaren.

Capítulo cuarto del tercero libro

-PARÉCEME hermano mío -dijo Auristela a Periandro-, que los trabajos y los peligros no solamente tienen jurisdicción en el mar, sino en toda la tierra; que las desgracias e infortunios, así se encuentran sobre los levantados sobre los montes como con los escondidos en sus rincones. Esta que llaman Fortuna, de quien yo he oído hablar algunas veces, de la cual se dice que quita y da los bienes cuando, como y a quien quiere, sin duda alguna debe de ser ciega y antojadiza, pues, a nuestro parecer, levanta los que habían de estar por el suelo, y derriba los que están sobre los montes de la luna. No sé, hermano, lo que me voy diciendo, pero sé que quiero decir que no es mucho que nos admire ver a esta señora, que dice que se llama Feliciano de la Voz, que apenas la tiene para contar sus desgracias. Contéplola yo pocas horas ha en su casa, acompañada de su padre, hermanos y criados, esperando poner con sagacidad remedio a sus arrojados deseos; y agora puedo decir que la veo escondida en lo hueco de un árbol, temiendo los mosquitos del aire, y aun las lombrices de la tierra. Bien es verdad que la suya no es caída de príncipes, pero es un caso que puede servir de ejemplo a las recogidas doncellas que le quisieren dar bueno de sus vidas. Todo esto me mueve a suplicarte, ¡oh hermano!, mires por mi honra, que, desde el punto que salí del poder de mi padre y del de tu madre, la deposité en tus manos; y, aunque la experiencia, con certidumbre grandísima, tiene acreditada tu bondad, así en la soledad de los desiertos como en la compañía de las ciudades, todavía temo que la mudanza de las horas no mude los que de suyo son fáciles pensamientos. A ti te va; mi honra es la tuya; un solo deseo nos gobierna y una misma esperanza nos sustenta; el camino en que nos hemos puesto es largo, pero no hay ninguno que no se acabe, como no se le oponga la pereza y la ociosidad; ya los cielos, a quien doy mil gracias por ello, nos ha traído a España sin la compañía peligrosa de Arnaldo; ya podemos tender los pasos seguros de naufragios, de tormentas y de salteadores, porque, según la fama que, sobre todas las regiones del mundo, de pacífica y de santa tiene ganada España, bien nos podemos prometer seguro viaje.

-¡Oh hermana -respondió Periandro-, y cómo por puntos vas mostrando los estremados de tu discreción! Bien veo que temes como mujer y que te animas como discreta. Yo quisiera, por aquietar tus bien nacidos recelos, buscar nuevas experiencias que me acreditaran contigo; que, puesto que las hechas pueden convertir el temor en esperanza, y la esperanza en firme seguridad, y desde luego en posesión alegre, quisiera que nuevas ocasiones me acreditaran. En el rancho destos pastores no nos queda qué hacer, ni en el caso de Feliciano podemos servir más que de compadecernos de ella; procuremos llevar esta criatura a Trujillo, como nos lo encargó el que con ella nos dio la cadena, al parecer, por paga.

En esto estaban los dos, cuando llegó el pastor anciano con su hermana y con la criatura, que había enviado por ella a la aldea, por ver si Feliciano la reconocía, como ella lo había pedido. Lleváronse, miróla y remiróla, quitóle las fajas; pero en ninguna cosa pudo conocer ser la que había parido, ni aun, lo que más es de considerar, el natural cariño no le movía los pensamientos a reconocer el niño; que era varón el recién nacido.

-No -decía Feliciano-, no son estas las mantillas que mi doncella tenía diputadas para envolver lo que de mí naciese, ni esta cadena -que se la enseñaron-la vi yo jamás en poder de Rosanio. De otra debe ser esta prenda, que no mía; que, a serlo, no fuera yo tan venturosa, teniéndola una vez perdida, tornar a cobrarla; aunque yo oí decir muchas veces a Rosanio que tenía amigos en Trujillo; pero de ninguno me acuerdo el nombre.

-Con todo eso -dijo el pastor-, que, pues el que dio la criatura mandó que la llevasen a Trujillo, sospecho que el que la dio a estos peregrinos fue Rosanio, y así, soy de parecer, si es que en ello os hago algún servicio, que mi hermana, con la criatura y con otros dos destos mis pastores, se ponga en camino de Trujillo, a ver si la reciben alguno de esos dos caballeros a quien va dirigida.

A lo que Feliciano respondió con sollozos y con arrojarle a los pies del pastor, abrazándolos estrechamente: señales que la dieron de que aprobaba su parecer. Todos los peregrinos le aprobaron asimismo, y con darle la cadena lo facilitaron todo.

Sobre una de las bestias del hato se acomodó la hermana del pastor, que estaba recién parida, como se ha dicho, con orden que se pasase por su aldea, y dejase en cobro su criatura, y con la otra se partiese a Trujillo; que los peregrinos, que iban a Guadalupe, con más espacio la seguirían. Todo se hizo como lo pensaron, y luego, porque la necesidad del caso no admitía tardanza alguna.

Feliciano callaba, y con silencio se mostraba agradecida a los que tan de veras sus cosas tomaban a su cargo. Añadióse a todo esto que Feliciano, habiendo sabido cómo los peregrinos iban a Roma, aficionada a la hermosura y discreción de Auristela, a la cortesía de Periandro, a la amorosa conversación de Constanza y de Ricla, su madre, y al agradable trato de los dos Antonios, padre y hijo (que todo lo miró, notó y ponderó en aquel poco espacio que los había comunicado), y lo principal por volver las espaldas a la tierra donde quedaba enterrada su honra, pidió que consigo la llevasen como peregrina a Roma; que, pues había sido peregrina en culpas, quería procurar serlo en gracias, si el cielo se las concedía, en que con ellos la llevasen. Apenas descubrió su pensamiento, cuando Auristela acudió a satisfacer su deseo, compasiva y deseosa de sacar a Felicianita de entre los sobresaltos y miedos que la perseguían. Sólo dificultó el ponerla en camino estando tan recién parida, y así se lo dijo; pero el anciano pastor dijo que no había más diferencia del parto de una mujer que del de una res, y que, así como la res, sin otro regalo alguno, después de su parto, se quedaba a las inclemencias del cielo, así la mujer podía, sin otro regalo alguno, acudir a sus ejercicios; sino que el uso había introducido entre las mujeres los regalos y todas aquellas prevenciones que suelen hacer con las recién paridas.

-Yo seguro -dijo más- que cuando Eva parió el primer hijo, que no se echó en el lecho, ni se guardó del aire, ni usó de los melindres que ahora se usan en los partos. Esforzaos, señora Felicianita, y seguid vuestro intento, que desde aquí le apruebo casi por santo, pues es tan cristiano.

A lo que añadió Auristela:

-No quedará por falta de hábito de peregrina, que mi cuidado me hizo hacer dos cuando hice éste, el cual daré yo a la señora Felicianita de la Voz, con condición que me diga qué misterio tiene el llamarse de la Voz, si ya no es el de su apellido.

-No me le ha dado -respondió Felicianita- mi linaje, sino el ser común opinión de todos cuantos me han oído cantar, que tengo la mejor voz del mundo: tanto que por excelencia me llaman comúnmente Felicianita de la Voz; y, a no estar en tiempo más de gemir que de cantar, con facilidad os mostrara esta verdad; pero si los tiempos se mejoran y dan lugar a que mis lágrimas se enjuguen, yo cantaré, si no canciones alegres, a lo menos endechas tristes, que cantándolas encanten y llorándolas alegren.

Por esto que Felicianita dijo, nació en todos un deseo de oírla cantar luego luego, pero no osaron rogárselo, porque, como ella había dicho, los tiempos no lo permitían. Otro día se despojó Felicianita de los vestidos no necesarios que traía, y se cubrió con los que le dio Auristela de peregrina; quitóse un collar de perlas y dos sortijas; que si los adornos son parte para acreditar calidades, estas piezas pudieran acreditarla de rica y noble. Tomólas Ricla, como tesorera general de la hacienda de todos, y quedó Felicianita segunda peregrina, como primera Auristela, y tercera Constanza, aunque este parecer se dividió en pareceres, y algunos le dieron el segundo lugar a Constanza, que el primero no hubo hermosura en aquella edad que a la de Auristela se le quitase.

Apenas se vio Felicianita el nuevo hábito, cuando le nacieron alientos nuevos y deseos de ponerse en camino. Conoció esto Auristela, y, con consentimiento de todos, despidiéndose del pastor caritativo y de los demás de la majada, se encaminaron a Cáceres, hurtando el cuerpo con su acostumbrado paso al cansancio; y si alguna vez alguna de las mujeres le tenía, le suplía el bagaje, donde iba el repuesto, o ya el margen de algún arroyuelo o fuente do se sentaban, o la verdura de algún prado que a dulce reposo las convidaba; y así, andaban a una con ellos el reposo y el cansancio, junto con la pereza y la diligencia: la pereza, en caminar poco; la diligencia, en caminar siempre. Pero, como por la mayor parte nunca los buenos deseos llegan a fin dichoso sin estorbos que los impidan, quiso el cielo que el de este hermoso escuadrón, que, aunque dividido en todos, era sólo uno en la intención, fuese impedido con el estorbo que agora oiréis.

Dábales asiento la verde yerba de un deleitoso pradecillo; refrescábales los rostros el agua clara y dulce de un pequeño arroyuelo que por entre las yerbas corría; servíanles de muralla y de reparo muchas zarzas y cambroneras, que casi por todas partes los rodeaba: sitio agradable y necesario para su descanso, cuando, de improviso, rompiendo por las intrincadas matas, vieron salir al verde sitio un mancebo vestido de camino, con una espada hincada por las espaldas, cuya punta le salía al pecho. Cayó de ojos, y al caer dijo:

-¡Dios sea conmigo!

Y el fin desta palabra y el arrancársele el alma fue todo a un tiempo; y, aunque todos con el estraño espectáculo se levantaron alborotados, el que primero llegó a socorrerle fue Periandro, y, por hallarle ya muerto, se atrevió a sacar la espada. Los dos Antonios saltaron las zarzas, por ver si verían quién hubiese sido el cruel y alevoso homicida; que, por ser la herida por las espaldas, se mostraba que traidoras manos la habían hecho. No vieron a nadie, volviéronse a los demás, y la poca edad del muerto y su gallardo talle y parecer les acrecentó la lástima. Miráronle todo, y halláronle, debajo de una ropilla de terciopelo pardo, sobre el jubón puesta una cadena de cuatro vueltas de menudos eslabones de oro, de la cual pendía un devoto crucifijo, asimismo de oro; allá entre el jubón y la camisa le hallaron, dentro de una caja de ébano ricamente labrada, un hermosísimo retrato de mujer, pintado en la lisa tabla, alrededor del cual, de menudísima y clara letra, vieron que traía escritos estos versos:

Yela, enciende, mira y habla:
¡milagros de hermosura, que tenga vuestra figura
tanta fuerza en una tabla!

Por estos versos conjeturó Periandro, que los leyó primero, que de causa amorosa debía de haber nacido su muerte. Miráronle las faldriqueras y escudriñáronle todos, pero no hallaron cosa que les diese indicio de quién era. Y, estando haciendo este escrutinio, parecieron, como si fueran llovidos, cuatro hombres con ballestas armadas, por cuyas insignias conoció luego Antonio el padre que eran cuadrilleros de la Santa Hermandad, uno de los cuales dijo a voces:

-¡Teneos, ladrones, homicidas y salteadores! ¡No le acabéis de despojar, que a tiempo sois venidos en que os llevaremos adonde paguéis vuestro pecado!

-Eso no, bellacos -respondió Antonio el mozo-: aquí no hay ladrón ninguno, porque todos somos enemigos de los que lo son.

-Bien se os parece, por cierto -replicó el cuadrillero-, el hombre muerto, sus despojos en vuestro poder, y su sangre en vuestras manos, que sirve de testigos vuestra maldad. Ladrones sois, salteadores sois, homicidas sois; y, como tales ladrones, salteadores y homicidas, presto pagaréis vuestros delitos, sin que os valga la capa de virtud cristiana con que procuráis encubrir vuestras maldades, vistiéndoos de peregrinos.

A esto le dio respuesta Antonio el mozo con poner una flecha en su arco y pasarle con ella un brazo, puesto que quisiera pasarle de parte a parte el pecho. Los demás cuadrilleros, o escarmentados del golpe, o por hacer la prisión más al seguro, volvieron las espaldas, y, entre huyendo y esperando, a grandes voces apellidaron:

-¡Aquí de la Santa Hermandad! ¡Favor a la Santa Hermandad!

Y mostróse ser santa la hermandad que apellidaban, porque en un instante, como por milagro, se juntaron más de veinte cuadrilleros, los cuales, encarando sus ballestas y sus saetas a los que no se defendían, los prendieron y aprisionaron, sin respetar la belleza de Auristela ni las demás peregrinas, y con el cuerpo del muerto los llevaron a Cáceres, cuyo Corregidor era un caballero del hábito de Santiago, el cual, viendo el muerto y el cuadrillero herido, y la información de los demás cuadrilleros, con el indicio de ver ensangrentado a Periandro, con el parecer de su teniente, quisiera luego ponerlos a cuestión de tormento, puesto que Periandro se defendía con la verdad, mostrándole en su favor los papeles que para seguridad de su viaje y licencia de su camino había tomado en Lisboa. Mostróle asimismo el lienzo de la pintura de su suceso, que la relató y declaró muy bien Antonio el mozo, cuyas pruebas hicieron poner en opinión la ninguna culpa que los peregrinos tenían. Ricla, la tesorera, que sabía muy poco o nada de la condición de escribanos y procuradores, ofreció a uno, de secreto, que andaba allí en público, dando muestras de ayudarles, no sé qué cantidad de dineros porque tomase a cargo su negocio. Lo echó a perder del todo, porque, en oliendo los sátrapas de la pluma que tenían lana los peregrinos, quisieron trasquilarlos, como es uso y costumbre, hasta los huesos, y sin duda alguna fuera así, si las fuerzas de la inocencia no permitiera el cielo que sobrepujaran a las de la malicia.

Fue el caso, pues, que un huésped, o mesonero del lugar, habiendo visto el cuerpo muerto que habían traído y reconocídole muy bien, se fue al Corregidor y le dijo:

-Señor, este hombre que han traído muerto los cuadrilleros, ayer de mañana partió de mi casa, en compañía de otro, al parecer, caballero. Poco antes que se partiese, se encerró conmigo en mi aposento, y con recato me dijo: «Señor huésped, por lo que debéis a ser cristiano, os ruego que, si yo no vuelvo por aquí dentro de seis días, abráis este papel que os doy, delante de la justicia». Y, diciendo esto, me dio éste que entrego a vuesa merced, donde imagino que debe de venir alguna cosa que toque a este tan extraño suceso.

Tomó el papel el Corregidor, y, abriéndole, vio que en él estaban escritas estas mismas razones:

Yo, don Diego de Parraces, salí de la corte de su Majestad tal día (y venía puesto el día), en compañía de don Sebastián de Soranzo, mi pariente, que me pidió que le acompañase en cierto viaje donde le iba la honra y la vida. Yo, por no querer hacer verdaderas ciertas sospechas falsas que de mí tenía, fiándome en mi inocencia, di lugar a su malicia, y acompañéle. Creo que me lleva a matar; si esto sucediere, y mi cuerpo se hallare, sépase que me mataron a traición, y que morí sin culpa.

Y firmaba: DON DIEGO DE PARRACES.

Este papel, a toda diligencia, despachó el Corregidor a Madrid, donde con la justicia se hicieron las diligencias posibles buscando al matador, el cual llegó a su casa la misma noche que le buscaban; y, entreoyendo el caso, sin apearse de la cabalgadura, volvió las riendas, y nunca más pareció. Quedóse el delito sin castigo, el muerto se quedó por muerto, quedaron libres los prisioneros, y la cadena que tenía Ricla se deseslabonó para gastos de justicia; el retrato se quedó para gustos de los ojos del Corregidor, satisfízose la herida del cuadrillero, volvió Antonio el mozo a relatar el lienzo, y, dejando admirado al pueblo y habiendo estado en él todo este tiempo de las averiguaciones Felicianas de la Voz en el lecho, fingiendo estar enferma, por no ser vista, se partieron la vuelta de Guadalupe, cuyo camino entretuvieron tratando del caso extraño, y deseando que sucediese ocasión donde se cumpliese el deseo que tenían de oír cantar a Feliciano, la cual sí cantará, pues no hay dolor que no se mitigue con el tiempo o se acabe con acabar la vida; pero, por guardar ella a su desgracia el decoro que a sí misma debía, sus cantos eran llores, y su voz gemidos. Éstos se aplacaron un tanto con haber topado en el camino la hermana del compasivo pastor, que volvía de Trujillo, donde dijo que dejaba el niño en poder de don Francisco Pizarro y de don Juan de Orellana, los cuales habían conjeturado no poder ser de otro aquella criatura sino de su amigo Rosanio, según el lugar donde le hallaron, pues por todos aquellos contornos no tenían ellos algún conocido que aventurase a fiarse de ellos.

-Sea, en fin, lo que fuere -dijo la labradora-, dijeron ellos, que no ha de quedar defraudado de sus buenos pensamientos el que se ha fiado de nosotros. Así que, señores, el niño queda en Trujillo en poder de los que he dicho; si algo me queda que hacer por serviros, aquí estoy con la cadena, que aún no me he deshecho de ella, pues la que me pone a la voluntad el ser yo cristiana, me enlaza y me obliga a más que la de oro.

A lo que respondió Feliciano que la gozase muchos años, sin que se le ofreciese necesidad de deshacella, pues las ricas prendas de los pobres no permanecen largo tiempo en sus casas, porque, o se empeñan, para no quitarse, o se venden, para nunca volverlas a comprar.

La labradora se despidió aquí, le dieron mil encomiendas para su hermano y los demás pastores, y nuestros peregrinos llegaron poco a poco a las santísimas tierras de Guadalupe.

Capítulo quinto del tercero libro

APENAS hubieron puesto los pies los devotos peregrinos en una de las dos entradas que guían al valle que forman y cierran las altísimas sierras de Guadalupe, cuando, con cada paso que daban, nacían en sus corazones nuevas ocasiones de admirarse; pero allí llegó la admiración a su punto, cuando vieron el grande y suntuoso monasterio, cuyas murallas encierran la santísima imagen de la emperadora de los cielos; la santísima imagen, otra vez, que es libertad de los cautivos, lima de sus hierros y alivio de sus pasiones; la santísima imagen que es salud de las enfermedades, consuelo de los afligidos, madre de los huérfanos y reparo de las desgracias. Entraron en su templo, y donde pensaron hallar por sus paredes, pendientes por adorno, las púrpuras de Tiro, los damascos de Siria, los brocados de Milán, hallaron en lugar suyo muletas que dejaron los cojos, ojos de cera que dejaron los ciegos, brazos que colgaron los mancos, mortajas de que se desnudaron los muertos, todos después de haber caído en el suelo de las miserias, ya vivos, ya sanos, ya libres y ya contentos, merced a la larga misericordia de la Madre de las misericordias, que en aquel pequeño lugar hace campear a su benditísimo Hijo con el escuadrón de sus infinitas misericordias. De tal manera hizo aprehensión estos milagrosos adornos en los corazones de los devotos peregrinos, que volvieron los ojos a todas las partes del templo, y les parecía ver venir por el aire volando los cautivos envueltos en sus cadenas a colgarlas de las santas murallas, y a los enfermos arrastrar las muletas, y a los muertos mortajas, buscando lugar donde ponerlas, porque ya en el sacro templo no cabían: tan grande es la suma que las paredes ocupan.

Esta novedad, no vista hasta entonces de Periandro ni de Auristela, ni menos de Ricla, de Constanza ni de Antonio, los tenía como asombrados, y no se hartaban de mirar lo que veían, ni de admirar lo que imaginaban; y así, con devotas y cristianas muestras, hincados de rodillas, se pusieron a adorar a Dios Sacramentado y a suplicar a su santísima Madre que, en crédito y honra de aquella imagen, fuese servida de mirar por ellos. Pero lo que más es de ponderar fue que, puesta de hinojos y las manos puestas y junto al pecho, la hermosa Feliciano de la Voz, lloviendo tiernas lágrimas, con sosegado semblante, sin mover los labios ni hacer otra demostración ni movimiento que diese señal de ser viva criatura, soltó la voz a los vientos, y levantó el corazón al cielo, y cantó unos versos que ella sabía de memoria, los cuales dio después por escrito, con que suspendió los sentidos de cuantos la escuchaban, y acreditó las alabanzas que ella misma de su voz había dicho, y satisfizo de todo en todo los deseos que sus peregrinos tenían de escucharla.

Cuatro estancias había cantado, cuando entraron por la puerta del templo unos forasteros, a quien la devoción y la costumbre puso luego de rodillas, y la voz de Feliciano, que todavía cantaba, puso también en admiración; y uno de ellos que de anciana edad parecía, volviéndose a otro que estaba a su lado, y díjole: -O aquella voz es de algún ángel de los confirmados en gracia, o es de mi hija Feliciano de la Voz.

-¿Quién lo duda? -respondió el otro-. Ella es, y la que no será, si no yerra el golpe éste mi brazo.

Y, diciendo esto, echó mano a una daga, y, con descompasados pasos, perdido el color y turbado el sentido, se fue hacia donde Feliciano estaba.

El venerable anciano se arrojó tras él, y le abrazó por las espaldas, diciéndole: -No es éste, ¡oh hijo!, teatro de miserias ni lugar de castigos. Da tiempo al tiempo, que, pues no se nos puede huir esta traidora, no te precipites, y, pensando castigar el ajeno delito, te echas sobre ti la pena de la culpa propia.

Estas razones y alboroto selló la boca de Feliciano y alborotó a los peregrinos y a todos cuantos en el templo estaban, los cuales no fueron parte para que su padre y hermano de Feliciano no la sacasen del templo a la calle, donde, en un instante, se juntó casi toda la gente del pueblo con la justicia, que se la quitó a los que parecían más verdugos que hermano y padre. Estando en esta confusión, el padre dando voces por su hija, y su hermano por su hermana, y la justicia defendiéndola hasta saber el caso, por una parte de la plaza entraron hasta seis de a caballo, que los dos de ellos fueron luego conocidos de todos, por ser el uno don Francisco Pizarro y el otro don Juan de Orellana, los cuales, llegándose al tumulto de la gente, y con ellos otro caballero que con un velo de tafetán negro traía cubierto el rostro, preguntaron la causa de aquellas voces. Fúeles respondido que no se sabía otra cosa sino que la justicia quería defender aquella peregrina a quien querían matar dos hombres que decían ser su hermano y su padre.

Esto estaban oyendo don Francisco Pizarro y don Juan de Orellana, cuando el caballero embozado, arrojándose del caballo abajo sobre quien venía, poniendo mano a su espada y descubriéndose el rostro, se puso al lado de Feliciano y a grandes voces dijo: -En mí, en mí debéis, señores, tomar la enmienda del pecado de Feliciano, vuestra hija, si es tan grande que merezca muerte el casarse una doncella contra la voluntad de sus padres. Feliciano es mi esposa, y yo soy Rosanio, como veis, no de tan poca calidad que no merezca que me deis por concierto lo que yo supe escoger por industria. Noble soy, de cuya nobleza os podré presentar por testigos; riquezas tengo que la sustentan, y no será bien que lo que he ganado por ventura me lo quite Luis Antonio por vuestro gusto. Y si os parece que os he hecho ofensa de haber llegado a este punto de teneros por señores sin sabiduría vuestra, perdonadme, que las fuerzas poderosas de amor suelen turbar los ingenios más entendidos, y el veros yo tan inclinados a Luis Antonio me hizo no guardar el decoro que se os debía, de lo cual otra vez os pido perdón.

Mientras Rosanio esto decía, Feliciano estaba pegada con él, teniéndole asido por la pretina con la mano, toda temblando, toda temerosa, y toda triste y toda hermosa juntamente. Pero, antes que su padre y hermano respondiesen palabra, don Francisco Pizarro se abrazó con su padre y don Juan de Orellana con su hermano, que eran sus grandes amigos.

Don Francisco dijo al padre:

-¿Dónde está vuestra discreción, señor don Pedro Tenorio? ¿Cómo, y es posible que vos mismo queráis fabricar vuestra ofensa? ¿No veis que estos agravios, antes que la pena traen las disculpas consigo? ¿Qué tiene Rosanio que no merezca a Feliciano, o qué le quedará a Feliciano de aquí adelante si pierde a Rosanio?

Casi estas mismas o semejantes razones decía don Juan de Orellana a su hermano, añadiendo más, porque le dijo: -Señor don Sancho, nunca la cólera prometió buen fin de sus ímpetus: ella es pasión del ánimo, y el ánimo apasionado pocas veces acierta en lo que emprende. Vuestra hermana supo escoger buen marido; tomar venganza de que no se guardaron las debidas ceremonias y respetos, no será bien hecho, porque os pondréis a peligro de derribar y echar por tierra todo el edificio de vuestro sosiego. Mirad, señor don Sancho, que tengo una prenda vuestra en mi casa: un sobrino os tengo, que no le podréis negar si no os negáis a vos mismo: tanto es lo que os parece.

La respuesta que dio el padre a don Francisco fue llegarse a su hijo don Sancho y quitalle la daga de las manos, y luego fue a abrazar a Rosanio, el cual, dejándose derribar a los pies del que ya conoció ser su suegro, se los besó mil veces. Arrodillóse también ante su padre Feliciano, derramó lágrimas, envió suspiros, vinieron desmayos. La alegría discurrió por todos los circunstantes; ganó fama de prudente el padre, de prudente el hijo, y los amigos de discretos y bien hablados. Llevólos el Corregidor a su casa, regalólos el prior del santo monasterio abundantísimamente; visitaron las reliquias los peregrinos, que son muchas, santísimas y ricas; confesaron sus culpas, recibieron los sacramentos, y en este tiempo, que fue el de tres días, envió don Francisco por el niño que le había llevado la labradora, que era el mismo que Rosanio dio a Periandro la noche que le dio la cadena, el cual era tan lindo que el abuelo, puesta en olvido toda injuria, dijo viéndole: -¡Que mil bienes haya la madre que te parió y el padre que te engendró!

Y, tomándole en sus brazos, tiernamente le bañó el rostro con lágrimas, y se las enjugó con besos y las limpió con sus canas.

Pidió Auristela a Feliciano le diese el traslado de los versos que había cantado delante de la santísima imagen, al cual respondió que solamente había cantado cuatro estancias, y que todas eran doce, dignas de ponerse en la memoria. Y así, las escribió, que eran éstas: Antes que de la mente eterna fuera saliesen los espíritus alados, y antes que la veloz o tarda esfera tuviese movimientos señalados, y antes que aquella escuridad primera 5

los cabellos del sol viese dorados, fabricó para sí Dios una casa de santísima, y limpia y pura masa.

Los altos y fortísimos cimientos, sobre humildad profunda se fundaron; 10
y, mientras más a la humildad atentos, más la fábrica regia levantaron.
Pasó la tierra, pasó el mar; los vientos atrás, como más bajos, se quedaron, el fuego pasa, y con igual fortuna 15
debajo de sus pies tiene la luna.

De fee son los pilares, de esperanza;

los muros desta fábrica bendita ciñe la caridad, por quien se alcanza duración, como Dios, siempre infinita; 20 su recreo se aumenta en su templanza, su prudencia, los grados facilita del bien que ha de gozar, por la grandeza de su mucha justicia y fortaleza.

Adornan este alcázar soberano 25
profundos pozos, perenales fuentes, huertos cerrados, cuyo fruto sano es bendición y gloria de las gentes;
están a la siniestra y diestra mano cipreses altos, palmas eminentes, 30 altos cedros, clarísimos espejos que dan lumbre de gracia cerca y lejos.

El cinamomo, el plátano y la rosa de Hiericó se halla en sus jardines con aquella color, y aun más hermosa, 35 de los más abrasados querubines.
Del pecado la sombra tenebrosa, ni llega, ni se acerca a sus confines:
todo es luz, todo es gloria, todo es cielo, este edificio que hoy se muestra al suelo. 40

De Salomón el templo se nos muestra hoy, con la perfección a Dios posible, donde no se oyó golpe que la diestra mano diese a la obra conveniente;
hoy, haciendo de sí gloriosa muestra, 45
salió la luz del sol inaccesible;
hoy nuevo resplandor ha dado al día la clarísima estrella de María.

Antes que el sol, la estrella hoy da su lumbre:
prodigiosa señal, pero tan buena, 50 que, sin guardar de agüeros la costumbre, deja el alma de gozo y bienes llena.
Hoy la humildad se vio puesta en la cumbre;
hoy comenzó a romperse la cadena del hierro antiguo, y sale al mundo aquella 55
prudentísima Ester, que el sol más bella.

Niña de Dios, por nuestro bien nacida;
tierna, pero tan fuerte que la frente,
en soberbia maldad endurecida, quebrantasteis de la infernal serpiente. 60
Brinco de Dios, de nuestra muerte vida, pues vos fuistes el medio conveniente, que redujo a pacífica concordia
de Dios y el hombre la mortal discordia.

La justicia y la paz hoy se han juntado 65
en vos, Virgen santísima, y con gusto el dulce beso de la paz se han dado, arra y señal del venidero Augusto.
Del claro amanecer, del sol sagrado, sois la primera aurora; sois del justo 70
gloria; del pecador, firme esperanza;
de la borrasca antigua, la bonanza.

Sois la paloma que ab eterno fuistes llamada desde el cielo, sois la esposa que al sacro Verbo limpia carne distes, 75
por quien de Adán la culpa fue dichosa;
sois el brazo de Dios, que detuvistes de Abrahán la cuchilla rigurosa, y para el sacrificio verdadero nos distes el mansísimo Cordero. 80

Creced, hermosa planta, y dad el fruto presto en sazón, por quien el alma espera cambiar en ropa rozagante el luto que la gran culpa le vistió primera.
De aquel inmenso y general tributo 85
la paga conveniente y verdadera en vos se ha de fraguar: creed, Señora, que sois universal remediadora.

Ya en las empíreas sacrosantas salas el paraninfo alígero se apresta, 90
o casi mueve las doradas alas, para venir con la embajada honesta:
que el olor de virtud que de ti exhalas, Virgen bendita, sirve de recuesta
y apremio, a que se vea en ti muy presto 95 del gran poder de Dios echado el resto.

Estos fueron los versos que comenzó a cantar Feliciano, y los que dio por escrito después, que fueron de Auristela más estimados que entendidos.

En resolución, las paces de los desavenidos se hicieron; Feliciano, esposo, padre y hermano, se volvieron a su lugar, dejando orden a don Francisco Pizarro y don Juan de Orellana les enviasen el niño. Pero no quiso Feliciano pasar el disgusto que da el esperar, y así, se le llevó consigo, con cuyo suceso quedaron todos alegres.

Capítulo sexto del tercero libro

CUATRO días se estuvieron los peregrinos en Guadalupe, en los cuales comenzaron a ver las grandezas de aquel santo monasterio. Digo comenzaron, porque de acabarlas de ver es imposible. Desde allí se fueron a Trujillo, adonde asimismo fueron agasajados de los dos nobles caballeros don Francisco Pizarro y don Juan de Orellana, y allí de nuevo refirieron el suceso de Feliciano, y ponderaron, al par de su voz, su discreción y el buen proceder de su hermano y de su padre, exagerando Auristela los cortesos ofrecimientos que Feliciano le había hecho al tiempo de su partida.

La ida de Trujillo fue de allí a dos días la vuelta de Talavera, donde hallaron que se preparaba para celebrar la gran fiesta de la Monda, que trae su origen de muchos años antes que Cristo naciese, reducida por los cristianos a tan buen punto y término, que si entonces se celebraba en honra de la diosa Venus por la gentilidad, ahora se celebra en honra y alabanza de la Virgen de las vírgines. Quisieran esperar a verla; pero, por no dar más espacio a su espacio, pasaron adelante, y se quedaron sin satisfacer su deseo.

Seis leguas se habrían alongado de Talavera, cuando delante de sí vieron que caminaba una peregrina, tan peregrina que iba sola, y escusóles el darla voces a que se detuviese el haberse ella sentado sobre la verde yerba de un pradecillo, o ya convidada del ameno sitio, o ya obligada del cansancio.

Llegaron a ella, y hallaron ser de tal talle, que nos obliga a describirle: la edad, al parecer, salía de los términos de la mocedad y tocaba en las márgenes de la vejez; el rostro daba en rostro, porque la vista de un lince no alcanzara a verle las narices, porque no las tenía sino tan chatas y llanas que con unas pinzas no le pudieran asir una brizna de ellas; los ojos les hacían sombra, porque más salían fuera de la cara que ella; el vestido era una esclavina rota, que le besaba los calcañares, sobre la cual traía una muceta, la mitad guarnecida de cuero, que por roto y despedazado no se podía distinguir si de cordobán o si de badana fuese; ceñíase con un cordón de esparto, tan abultado y poderoso que más parecía gúmena de galera que cordón de peregrina; las tocas eran bastas, pero limpias y blancas; cubríale la cabeza un sombrero viejo, sin cordón ni toquilla, y los pies unos alpargates rotos, y ocupábale la mano un bordón hecho a manera de cayado, con una punta de acero al fin; pendíale del lado izquierdo una calabaza de más que mediana estatura, y apesgábale el cuello un rosario, cuyos padrenuestros eran mayores que algunas bolas de las con que juegan los muchachos al argolla. En efeto, toda ella era rota y toda penitente, y, como después se echó de ver, toda de mala condición.

Saludáronla en llegando, y ella les volvió las saludes con la voz que podía prometer la chatedad de sus narices, que fue más gangosa que suave. Preguntáronla adónde iba, y qué peregrinación era la suya, y, diciendo y haciendo, convidados, como ella, del ameno sitio, se le sentaron a la redonda, dejaron pacer el bagaje que les servía de recámara, de despensa y botillería, y, satisfaciendo a la hambre, alegremente la convidaron, y ella, respondiendo a la pregunta que la habían hecho, dijo:

-Mi peregrinación es la que usan algunos peregrinos: quiero decir que siempre es la que más cerca les viene a cuento para disculpar su ociosidad; y así, me parece que será bien deciros que por ahora voy a la gran ciudad de Toledo, a visitar a la devota imagen del Sagrario, y desde allí me iré al Niño de la Guardia, y, dando una punta, como halcón noruego, me entretendré con la santa Verónica de Jaén, hasta hacer tiempo de que llegue el último domingo de abril, en cuyo día se celebra en las entrañas de Sierra Morena, tres leguas de la ciudad de Andújar, la fiesta de Nuestra Señora de la Cabeza, que es una de las fiestas que en todo lo descubierto de la tierra se celebra; tal es, según he oído decir, que ni las pasadas fiestas de la gentilidad, a quien imita la de la Monda de Talavera, no le han hecho ni le pueden hacer ventaja. Bien quisiera yo, si fuera posible, sacarla de la imaginación, donde la tengo fija, y pintáros la con palabras, y ponéros la delante de la vista, para que, comprendiéndola, viéades la mucha razón que tengo de alabáros la; pero esta es carga para otro ingenio no tan estrecho como el mío. En el rico palacio de Madrid, morada de los reyes, en una galería, está retratada esta fiesta con la puntualidad posible: allí está el monte, o por mejor decir, peñasco, en cuya cima está el monasterio que deposita en sí una santa imagen, llamada de la Cabeza, que tomó el nombre de la peña donde habita, que antiguamente se llamó el Cabezo, por estar en la mitad de un llano libre y desembarazado, solo y señero de otros montes ni peñas que le rodeen, cuya altura será de hasta un cuarto de legua, y cuyo circuito debe de ser de poco más de media. En este espacioso y ameno sitio tiene su asiento, siempre verde y apacible, por el humor que le comunican las aguas del río Jándula, que de paso, como en reverencia, le besa las faldas. El lugar, la peña, la imagen, los milagros, la infinita gente que acude de cerca y lejos, el solemne día que he dicho, le hacen famoso en el mundo y célebre en España sobre cuantos lugares las más estendidas memorias se acuerdan.

Suspensos quedaron los peregrinos de la relación de la nueva, aunque vieja, peregrina, y casi les comenzó a bullir en el alma la gana de irse con ella a ver tantas maravillas; pero, la que llevaban de acabar su camino no dio lugar a que nuevos deseos lo impidiesen.

-Desde allí -prosiguió la peregrina-, no sé qué viaje será el mío, aunque sé que no me ha de faltar donde ocupe la ociosidad y entretenga el tiempo, como lo hacen, como ya he dicho, algunos peregrinos que se usan.

A lo que dijo Antonio el padre:

-Paréceme, señora peregrina, que os da en el rostro la peregrinación.

-Eso no -respondió ella-, que bien sé que es justa, santa y loable, y que siempre la ha habido y la ha de haber en el mundo, pero estoy mal con los malos peregrinos, como son los que hacen granjería de la santidad, y ganancia infame de la virtud loable; con aquellos, digo, que saltean la limosna de los verdaderos pobres. Y no digo más, aunque pudiera.

En esto, por el camino real que junto a ellos estaba, vieron venir un hombre a caballo, que, llegando a igualar con ellos, al quitarles el sombrero para saludarles y hacerles cortesía, habiendo puesto la cabalgadura, como después pareció, la mano en un hoyo, dio consigo y con su dueño al través una gran caída. Acudieron todos luego a socorrer al caminante, que pensaron hallar muy malparado. Arrendó Antonio el mozo la cabalgadura, que era un poderoso macho, y al dueño le abrigaron lo mejor que pudieron, y le socorrieron con el remedio más ordinario que en tales casos se usa, que fue darle a beber un golpe de agua; y, hallando que su mal no era tanto como pensaban, le dijeron que bien podía volver a subir y a seguir su camino, el cual hombre les dijo:

-Quizá, señores peregrinos, ha permitido la suerte que yo haya caído en este llano para poder levantarme de los riscos donde la imaginación me tiene puesta el alma. «Yo, señores, aunque no queráis saberlo, quiero que sepáis que soy extranjero, y de nación polaco; muchacho salí de mi tierra, y vine a España, como a centro de los extranjeros y a madre común de las naciones; serví a españoles, aprendí la lengua castellana de la manera que veis que la hablo, y, llevado del general deseo que todos tienen de ver tierras, vine a Portugal a ver la gran ciudad de Lisboa, y la misma noche que entré en ella, me sucedió un caso que, si le creyéredes, haréis mucho, y si no, no importa nada, puesto que la verdad ha de tener siempre su asiento, aunque sea en sí misma.»

Admirados quedaron Periandro y Auristela, y los demás compañeros, de la improvisa y concertada narración del caído caminante; y, con gusto de escucharle, le dijo Periandro que prosiguiese en lo que decir quería, que todos le darían crédito, porque todos eran corteses y en las cosas del mundo experimentados. Alentado con esto, el caminante prosiguió diciendo:

-«Digo que la primera noche que entré en Lisboa, yendo por una de sus principales calles, o rúas, como ellos las llaman, por mejorar de posada, que no me había parecido bien una donde me había apeado, al pasar de un lugar estrecho y no muy limpio, un embozado portugués con quien encontré, me desvió de sí con tanta fuerza que tuve necesidad de arrimarme al suelo. Despertó el agravio la cólera, remití mi venganza a mi espada, puse mano, púsola el portugués con gallardo brío y desenvoltura, y la ciega noche y la fortuna más ciega a la luz de mi mejor suerte, sin saber yo adónde, encaminó la punta de mi espada a la vista de mi contrario, el cual, dando de espaldas, dio el cuerpo al suelo y el alma adonde Dios se sabe. Luego me representó el temor lo que había hecho, pasméme, puse en el huir mi remedio; quise huir, pero no sabía adónde, mas el rumor de la gente, que me pareció que acudía, me puso alas en los pies, y, con pasos desconcertados, volví la calle abajo, buscando donde esconderme o adonde tener lugar de limpiar mi espada, porque si la justicia me cogiese no me hallase con manifiestos indicios de mi delito. Yendo, pues, así, ya del temor desmayado, vi una luz en una casa principal, y arrojéme a ella sin saber con qué disinio. Hallé una sala baja abierta y muy bien aderezada; alargué el paso y entré en otra cuadra, también bien aderezada; y, llevado de la luz que en otra cuadra parecía, hallé en un rico lecho echada una señora que, alborotada, sentándose en él, me preguntó quién era, qué buscaba, y adónde iba, y quién me había dado licencia de entrar hasta allí con tan poco respeto. Yo le respondí: "Señora, a tantas preguntas no os puedo responder, sino sólo con deciros que soy un hombre extranjero, que, a lo que creo, dejo muerto a otro en esa calle, más por su desgracia y su soberbia que por mi culpa. Suplícoos, por Dios y por quien sois, que me escapéis del rigor de la justicia, que pienso que me viene siguiendo". "¿Sois castellano?", me preguntó en su lengua portuguesa. "No, señora -le respondí yo-, sino forastero, y bien lejos de esta tierra". "Pues, aunque fuéades mil veces castellano -replicó ella-, os librara yo si pudiera, y os libraré si puedo. Subid por cima deste lecho, y entraos debajo deste tapiz, y entraos en un hueco que aquí hallaréis; y no os mováis, que si la justicia viniere, me tendrá respeto y creará lo que yo quisiere decirles".

»Dice luego lo que me mandó, alcé el tapiz, hallé el hueco, estrechéme en él, recogí el aliento y comencé a encomendarme a Dios lo mejor que pude; y, estando en esta confusa aflicción, entró un criado de casa, diciendo casi a gritos: "Señora, a mi señor don Duarte han muerto, aquí le traen pasado de una estocada de parte a parte por el ojo derecho, y no se sabe el matador, ni la ocasión de la pendencia, en la cual apenas se oyeron los golpes de las espadas: solamente hay un muchacho que dice que vio entrar un hombre huyendo en esta casa". "Ese debe de ser el matador, sin duda -respondió la señora-, y no podrá escaparse. ¡Cuántas veces temía yo, ay desdichada, ver que traían a mi hijo sin vida, porque de su arrogante proceder no se podían esperar sino desgracias!" En esto, en hombros de otros cuatro entraron al muerto, y le tendieron en el suelo, delante de los ojos de la afligida madre, la cual con voz lamentable comenzó a decir: "¡Ay, venganza, y cómo estás llamando a las puertas del alma! Pero no consiente que responda a tu gusto el que yo tengo de guardar mi palabra. ¡Ay, con todo esto, dolor, que me aprietas mucho!"

»Considerad, señores, cuál estaría mi corazón oyendo las apretadas razones de la madre, a quien la presencia del muerto hijo me parecía a mí que le ponían en las manos mil géneros de muertes con que de mí se vengase: que bien estaba claro que había de imaginar que yo era el matador de su hijo. Pero, ¿qué podía yo hacer entonces, sino callar y esperar en la misma desesperación? Y más cuando entró en el aposento la justicia, que con comedimiento dijo a la señora: "Guiados por la voz de un muchacho, que dice que se entró en esta casa el homicida deste caballero, nos hemos atrevido a entrar en ella". Entonces yo abrí los oídos, y estuve atento a las respuestas que daría la afligida madre, la cual respondió, llena el alma de generoso ánimo y de piedad cristiana: "Si ese tal hombre ha entrado en esta casa, no a lo menos en esta estancia; por allá le pueden buscar, aunque plegue a Dios que no le hallen, porque mal se remedia una muerte con otra, y más cuando las injurias no proceden de malicia".

»Volvióse la justicia a buscar la casa, y volvieron en mí los espíritus que me habían desamparado. Mandó la señora quitar delante de sí el cuerpo muerto del hijo, y que le amortajasen y desde luego diesen orden en su sepultura; mandó asimismo que la dejaran sola, porque no estaba para recibir consuelos y pésames de infinitos que venían a dárselos, así de parientes como de amigos y conocidos. Hecho esto, llamó a una doncella suya, que, a lo que pareció, debió de ser de la que más se fiaba; y, habiéndola hablado al oído, la despidió, mandándole cerrase tras sí la puerta. Ella lo hizo así, y la señora, sentándose en el lecho, tentó el tapiz; y, a lo que pienso, me puso las manos sobre el corazón, el cual, palpitando aprieta, daba indicios del temor que le cercaba. Ella, viendo lo cual, me dijo con baja y lastimada voz: "Hombre, quienquiera que seas, ya ves que me has quitado el aliento de mi pecho, la luz de mis ojos, y finalmente la vida que me sustentaba; pero, porque entiendo que ha sido sin culpa tuya, quiero que se oponga mi palabra a mi venganza; y así, en cumplimiento de la promesa que te hice de librarte cuando aquí entraste, has de hacer lo que ahora te diré: ponte las manos en el rostro, porque si yo me descuido en abrir los ojos, no me obligues a que te conozca, y sal de ese encerramiento y sigue a una mi doncella, que ahora vendrá aquí, la cual te pondrá en la calle y te dará cien escudos de oro con que facilites tu remedio. No eres conocido, no tienes ningún indicio que te manifieste: sosiega el pecho, que el alboroto demasiado suele descubrir el delincuente".

»En esto, volvió la doncella; yo salí detrás del paño, cubierto el rostro con la mano, y, en señal de agradecimiento, hincado de rodillas besé el pie de la cama muchas veces, y luego seguí los de la doncella, que, asimismo callando, me asió del brazo, y por la puerta falsa de un jardín, a oscuras, me puso en la calle.

»En viéndome en ella, lo primero que hice fue limpiar la espada, y con sosegado paso salí acaso a una calle principal, de donde reconocí mi posada, y me entré en ella, como si por mí no hubiera pasado ni próspero suceso ni adverso. Contóme el huésped la desgracia del recién muerto caballero, y así exageró la grandeza de su linaje como la arrogancia de su condición, de la cual se creía la habría granjeado algún enemigo secreto que a semejante término le hubiese conducido. Pasé aquella noche dando gracias a Dios de las recibidas mercedes, y ponderando el valeroso y nunca visto ánimo cristiano y admirable proceder de doña Guiomar de Sosa, que así supe se llamaba mi bienhechora. Salí por la mañana al río, y hallé en él un barco lleno de gente, que se iba a embarcar en una gran nave que en Sangián estaba de partida para las Islas Orientales; volvíme a mi posada, vendí a mi huésped la cabalgadura, y, cerrando todos mis discursos en el puño, volví al río y al barco, y otro día me hallé en el gran navío fuera del puerto, dadas las velas al viento, siguiendo el camino que se deseaba.

»Quince años he estado en las Indias, en los cuales, sirviendo de soldado con valentísimos portugueses, me han sucedido cosas de que quizá pudieran hacer una gustosa y verdadera historia, especialmente de las hazañas de la en aquellas partes invencible nación portuguesa, dignas de perpetua alabanza en los presentes y venideros siglos. Allí granjeé algún oro y algunas perlas, y cosas más de valor que de bulto, con las cuales y con la ocasión de volverse mi general a Lisboa, volví a ella, y de allí me puse en camino para volverme a mi patria, determinando ver primero todas las mejores y más principales ciudades de España. Reducí a dineros mis riquezas, y a pólizas los que me pareció ser necesario para mi camino, que fue el que primero intenté venir a Madrid, donde estaba recién venida la corte del gran Felipe Tercero; pero ya mi suerte, cansada de llevar la nave de mi ventura con próspero viento por el mar de la vida humana, quiso que diese en un bajío que la destrozase toda; y así, hizo que, en llegando una noche a Talavera, un lugar que no está lejos de aquí, me apeé en un mesón, que no me sirvió de mesón, sino de sepultura, pues en él hallé la de mi honra.

»¡Oh fuerzas poderosas de amor; de amor, digo, inconsiderado, presuroso y lascivo y mal intencionado, y con cuánta facilidad atropellas disinios buenos, intentos castos, proposiciones discretas! Digo, pues, que, estando en este mesón, entró en él acaso una doncella de hasta diez y seis años, a lo menos a mí no me pareció de más, puesto que después supe que tenía veinte y dos. Venía en cuerpo y en tranzado, vestida de paño, pero limpísima, y al pasar junto a mí me pareció que olía a un prado lleno de flores por el mes de mayo, cuyo olor en mis sentidos dejó atrás las aromas de Arabia; llegóse la cual a un mozo del mesón, y, hablándole al oído, alzó una gran risa, y, volviendo las espaldas, salió del mesón, y se entró en una casa frontera. El mozo mesonero corrió tras ella, y no la pudo alcanzar, si no fue con una cox que le dio en las espaldas, que la hizo entrar cayendo de ojos en su casa. Esto vio otra moza del mismo mesón, y llena de cólera dijo al mozo: "¡Por Dios, Alonso, que lo haces mal: que no merece Luisa que la santigües a coces!" "Como ésas le daré yo, si vivo -respondió el Alonso-. Calla, Martina amiga, que a estas mocitas sobresalientes, no solamente es menester ponerles la mano, sino los pies y todo". Y con esto nos dejó solos a mí y a Martina, a la cual le pregunté que qué Luisa era aquélla, y si era casada o no. "No es casada -respondió Martina-, pero serálo presto con este mozo Alonso que habéis visto; y, en fe de los tratos que andan entre los padres della y los dél, de esposa, se atreve Alonso a molella a coces todas las veces que se le antoja, aunque muy pocas son sin que ella las merezca; porque, si va a decir la verdad, señor huésped, la tal Luisa es algo atrevidilla, y algún tanto libre y descompuesta. Harto se lo he dicho yo, mas no aprovecha: no dejará de seguir su gusto si la sacan los ojos; pues, en verdad en verdad, que una de las mejores dotes que puede llevar una doncella es la honestidad, que buen siglo haya la madre que me parió, que fue persona que no me dejó ver la calle ni aun por un agujero, cuanto más salir al umbral de la puerta: sabía bien, como ella decía, que la mujer y la gallina, etc." "Dígame, señora Martina -le repliqué yo-: ¿cómo de la estrechez de ese noviciado vino a hacer profesión en la anchura de un mesón?" "Hay mucho que decir en eso -dijo Martina-, y aun yo tuviera más que decir de estas menudencias, si el tiempo lo pidiera o el dolor que traigo en el alma lo permitiera".»

Capítulo sétimo del tercero libro

CON ATENCIÓN escuchaban los peregrinos el peregrino, cuando del polaco ya deseaban saber qué dolor traía en el alma, como sabían el que debía de tener en el cuerpo. A quien dijo Periandro:

-Contad, señor, lo que quisiéredes y con las menudencias que quisiéredes, que muchas veces el contarlas suele acrecentar gravedad al cuento; que no parece mal estar en la mesa de un banquete, junto a un faisán bien aderezado, un plato de una fresca, verde y sabrosa ensalada. La salsa de los cuentos es la propiedad del lenguaje en cualquiera cosa que se diga. Así que, señor, seguid vuestra historia, contad de Alonso y de Martina, acocead a vuestro gusto a Luisa, casalda o no la caséis, séase ella libre y desenvuelta como un cernícalo, que el toque no está en sus desenvolturas, sino en sus sucesos, según lo hallo yo en mi astrología.

-Digo, pues, señores -respondió el polaco-, que, usando de esa buena licencia, no me quedará cosa en el tintero que no la ponga en la plana de vuestro juicio. «Con todo el que entonces tenía, que no debía de ser mucho, fui y vine una y muchas veces aquella noche a pensar en el donaire, en la gracia y en la desenvoltura de la sin par, a mi parecer, ni sé si la llame vecina moza o conocida de mi huésped. Hice mil disignios, fabriqué mil torres de viento, caséme, tuve hijos y di dos higas al qué dirán; y, finalmente, me resolví de dejar el primer intento de mi jornada y quedarme en Talavera, casado con la diosa Venus, que no menos hermosa me pareció la muchacha, aunque acoceada por el mozo del mesonero. Pasóse aquella noche, tomé el pulso a mi gusto, y halléle tal, que, a no casarme con ella, en poco espacio de tiempo había de perder, perdiendo el gusto, la vida, que ya había depositado en los ojos de mi labradora. Y, atropellando por todo género de inconvenientes, determiné de hablar a su padre, pidiéndosela por mujer. Enseñéle mis perlas, manifestéle mis dineros, díjele alabanzas de mi ingenio y de mi industria, no sólo para conservarlos, sino para aumentarlos; y, con estas razones y con el alarde que le había hecho de mis bienes, vino más blando que un guante a condecender con mi deseo, y más cuando vio que yo no reparaba en dote, pues con sola la hermosura de su hija me tenía por pagado, contento y satisfecho deste concierto.

»Quedó Alonso despechado; Luisa, mi esposa, rostrituerta; como lo dieron a entender los sucesos que de allí a quince días acontecieron, con dolor mío y vergüenza suya, que fueron acomodarse mi esposa con algunas joyas y dineros míos, con los cuales, y con ayuda de Alonso, que le puso alas en la voluntad y en los pies, desapareció de Talavera dejándome burlado y arrepentido, y dando ocasión al pueblo a que de su inconstancia y bellaquería en corrillos hablasen. Hízome el agravio acudir a la venganza, pero no hallé en quién tomarla sino en mí propio, que con un lazo estuve mil veces por ahorcarme; pero la suerte, que quizá para satisfacerme de los agravios que me tiene hechos me guarda, ha ordenado que mis enemigos hayan parecido presos en la cárcel de Madrid, de donde he sido avisado que vaya a ponerles la demanda y a seguir mi justicia; y así, voy con voluntad determinada de sacar con su sangre las manchas de mi honra, y, con quitarles las vidas, quitar de sobre mis hombros la pesada carga de su delito, que me trae aterrado y consumido. ¡Vive Dios, que han de morir! ¡Vive Dios, que me he de vengar! ¡Vive Dios, que ha de saber el mundo que no sé disimular agravios, y más los que son tan dañosos que se entran hasta las médulas del alma! A Madrid voy. Ya estoy mejor de mi caída. No hay sino ponerme a caballo, y guárdense de mí hasta los mosquitos del aire, y no me lleguen a los oídos ni ruegos de frailes, ni llantos de personas devotas, ni promesas de bien intencionados corazones, ni dádivas de ricos, ni imperios ni mandamientos de grandes, ni toda la caterva que suele proceder a semejantes acciones: que mi honra ha de andar sobre su delito como el aceite sobre el agua.»

Y, diciendo esto, se iba a levantar muy ligero, para volver a subir y a seguir su viaje; viendo lo cual Periandro, asiéndole del brazo, le detuvo, y le dijo:

-Vos, señor, ciego de vuestra cólera, no echáis de ver que vais a dilatar y a estender vuestra deshonra. Hasta agora no estáis más deshonorado de entre los que os conocen en Talavera, que deben de ser bien pocos, y agora vais a serlo de los que os conocerán en Madrid; queréis ser como el labrador que crió la víbora serpiente en el seno todo el invierno, y, por merced del cielo, cuando llegó el verano, donde ella pudiera aprovecharse de su ponzoña, no la halló porque se había ido; el cual, sin agradecer esta merced al cielo, quiso irla a buscar y volverla a anidar en su casa y en su seno, no mirando ser suma prudencia no buscar el hombre lo que no le está bien hallar, y a lo que comúnmente se dice, que, al enemigo que huye, la puente de plata, y el mayor que el hombre tiene suele decirse que es la mujer propia. Pero esto debe de ser en otras religiones que en la cristiana, entre las cuales los matrimonios son una manera de concierto y conveniencia, como lo es el de alquilar una casa o otra alguna heredad; pero en la religión católica, el casamiento es sacramento que sólo se desata con la muerte, o con otras cosas que son más duras que la misma muerte, las cuales pueden escusar la cohabitación de los dos casados, pero no deshacer el nudo con que ligados fueron. ¿Qué pensáis que os sucederá cuando la justicia os entregue a vuestros enemigos, atados y rendidos, encima de un teatro público, a la vista de infinitas gentes, y a vos blandiendo el cuchillo encima del cadahalso, amenazando el segarles las gargantas, como si pudiera su sangre limpiar, como vos decís, vuestra honra? ¿Qué os puede suceder, como digo, sino hacer más público vuestro agravio? Porque las venganzas castigan, pero no quitan las culpas; y las que en estos casos se cometen, como la enmienda no proceda de la voluntad, siempre se están en pie, y siempre están vivas en las memorias de las gentes, a lo menos, en tanto que vive el agraviado. Así que, señor, volved en vos, y, dando lugar a la misericordia, no corráis tras la justicia. Y no os aconsejo por esto a que perdonéis a vuestra mujer, para volvella a vuestra casa, que a esto no hay ley que os obligue; lo que os aconsejo es que la dejéis, que es el mayor castigo que podréis darle. Vivid lejos della, y viviréis; lo que no haréis estando juntos, porque moriréis continuo. La ley del repudio fue muy usada entre los romanos; y, puesto que sería mayor caridad perdonarla, recogerla, sufrirla y aconsejarla, es menester tomar el pulso a la paciencia y poner en un punto estremado a la discreción, de la cual pocos se pueden fiar en esta vida, y más cuando la contrastan inconvenientes tantos y tan pesados. Y, finalmente, quiero que consideréis que vais a hacer un pecado mortal en quitarles las vidas, que no se ha de cometer por todas las ganancias que la honra del mundo ofrezca.

Atento estuvo a estas razones de Periandro el colérico polaco; y, mirándole de hito en hito, respondió:

-Tu, señor, has hablado sobre tus años: tu discreción se adelanta a tus días, y la madurez de tu ingenio a tu verde edad; un ángel te ha movido la lengua, con la cual has ablandado mi voluntad, pues ya no es otra la que tengo si no es la de volverme a mi tierra a dar gracias al cielo por la merced que me has hecho. Ayúdame a levantar, que si la cólera me volvió las fuerzas, no es bien que me las quite mi bien considerada paciencia.

-Eso haremos todos de muy buena gana -dijo Antonio el padre.

Y, ayudándole a subir en el macho, abrazándoles a todos primero, dijo que quería volver a Talavera a cosas que a su hacienda tocaban, y que desde Lisboa volvería por la mar a su patria. Díjoles su nombre, que se llamaba Ortel Banedre, que respondía en castellano Martín Banedre; y, ofreciéndoseles de nuevo a su servicio, volvió las riendas hacia Talavera, dejando a todos admirados de sus sucesos y del buen donaire con que los había contado.

Aquella noche la pasaron los peregrinos en aquel mismo lugar, y, de allí a dos días, en compañía de la antigua peregrina, llegaron a la Sagra de Toledo, y a vista del celebrado Tajo, famoso por sus arenas y claro por sus líquidos cristales.

Capítulo octavo del tercero libro

NO ES LA fama del río Tajo tal que la cierren límites, ni la ignoren las más remotas gentes del mundo; que a todos se estiende y a todos se manifiesta, y en todos hace nacer un deseo de conocerle; y, como es uso de los setentrionales ser toda la gente principal versada en la lengua latina y en los antiguos poetas, éralo asimismo Periandro, como uno de los más principales de aquella nación; y, así por esto como por haber mostrádole a la luz del mundo aquellos días las famosas obras del jamás alabado como se debe poeta Garcilaso de la Vega, y haberlas él visto, leído, mirado y admirado, así como vio al claro río, dijo:

-No diremos: «Aquí dio fin a su cantar Salicio», sino: «Aquí dio principio a su cantar Salicio; aquí sobrepujó en sus églogas a sí mismo; aquí resonó su zampoña, a cuyo son se detuvieron las aguas deste río, no se movieron las hojas de los árboles, y, parándose los vientos, dieron lugar a que la admiración de su canto fuese de lengua en lengua y de gente en gentes por todas las de la tierra». ¡Oh venturosas, pues, cristalinas aguas, doradas arenas! ¡Qué digo yo doradas, antes de puro oro nacidas! Recoged a este pobre peregrino, que, como desde lejos os adora, os piensa reverenciar desde cerca.

-¡Oh peñascosa pesadumbre, gloria de España y luz de sus ciudades, en cuyo seno han estado guardadas por infinitos siglos las reliquias de los valientes godos, para volver a resucitar su muerta gloria y a ser claro espejo y depósito de católicas ceremonias! ¡Salve, pues, oh ciudad santa, y da lugar que en ti le tengan éstos que venimos a verte!

Esto dijo Periandro, que lo dijera mejor Antonio el padre, si tan bien como él lo supiera; porque las lecciones de los libros muchas veces hacen más cierta experiencia de las cosas, que no la tienen los mismos que las han visto, a causa que el que lee con atención, repara una y muchas veces en lo que va leyendo, y el que mira sin ella no repara en nada, y con esto excede la lección a la vista.

Casi en este mismo instante resonó en sus oídos el son de infinitos y alegres instrumentos que por los valles que la ciudad rodean se estendían, y vieron venir hacia donde ellos estaban escuadrones no armados de infantería, sino montones de doncellas, sobre el mismo sol hermosas, vestidas a lo villano, llenas de sartos y patenas los pechos, en quien los corales y la plata tenían su lugar y asiento, con más gala que las perlas y el oro, que aquella vez se hurtó de los pechos y se acogió a los cabellos, que todos eran luengos y rubios como el mismo oro; venían, aunque sueltos por las espaldas, recogidos en la cabeza con verdes guirnaldas de olorosas flores. Campeó aquel día y en ellas, antes la palmilla de Cuenca que el damasco de Milán y el raso de Florencia. Finalmente, la rusticidad de sus galas se aventajaba a las más ricas de la corte, porque si en ellas se mostraba la honesta medianía, se descubría asimismo la estremada limpieza: todas eran flores, todas rosas, todas donaire, y todas juntas componían un honesto movimiento, aunque de diferentes bailes formado, el cual movimiento era incitado del son de los diferentes instrumentos ya referidos.

Alrededor de cada escuadrón andaban por de fuera, de blanquísimo lienzo vestidos y con paños labrados rodeadas las cabezas, muchos zagales, o ya sus parientes, o ya sus conocidos, o ya vecinos de sus mismos lugares: uno tocaba el tamboril y la flauta, otro el salterio, éste las sonajas y aquél los albogues. Y de todos estos sones redundaba uno solo, que alegraba con la concordancia, que es el fin de la música.

Y, al pasar uno destos escuadrones o junta de bailadoras doncellas por delante de los peregrinos, uno, que a lo que después pareció era el alcalde del pueblo, asió a una de aquellas doncellas del brazo, y, mirándola muy bien de arriba abajo, con voz alterada y de mal talante la dijo:

-¡Ah, Tozuelo, Tozuelo, y qué de poca vergüenza os acompaña! ¿Bailes son éstos para ser profanados? ¿Fiestas son éstas para no llevarlas sobre las niñas de los ojos? No sé yo cómo consienten los cielos semejantes maldades. Si esto ha sido con sabiduría de mi hija Clementa Cobeña, ¡por Dios que nos han de oír los sordos!

Apenas acabó de decir esta palabra el alcalde, cuando llegó otro alcalde y le dijo:

-Pedro Cobeño, si os oyesen los sordos, sería hacer milagros. Contentaos con que nosotros nos oigamos a nosotros, y sepamos en qué os ha ofendido mi hijo Tozuelo, que si él ha dilinquido contra vos, justicia soy yo que le podré y sabré castigar.

A lo que respondió Cobeño:

-El delinquimiento ya se vee, pues siendo varón va vestido de hembra; y no de hembra comoquiera, sino de doncella de su Majestad, en sus fiestas; porque veáis, alcalde Tozuelo, si es mocosa la culpa. Ténome que mi hija Cobeña anda por aquí, porque estos vestidos de vuestro hijo me parecen suyos, y no querría que el diablo hiciese de las suyas, y, sin nuestra sabiduría, los juntase sin las bendiciones de la Iglesia; que ya sabéis que estos casorios hechos a hurtadillas, por la mayor parte pararon en mal, y dan de comer a los de la audiencia clerical, que es muy carera.

A esto respondió por Tozuelo una doncella labradora, de muchas que se pararon a oír la plática:

-Si va a decir la verdad, señores alcaldes, tan marida es Mari Cobeña de Tozuelo, y él marido della, como lo es mi madre de mi padre y mi padre de mi madre. Ella está en cinta, y no está para danzar ni bailar. Cásenlos, y váyase el diablo para malo, y a quien Dios se la dio, San Pedro se la bendiga.

-¡Par Dios, hija! -respondió Tozuelo-. Vos decís muy bien: entrambos son iguales; no es más cristiano viejo el uno que el otro; las riquezas se pueden medir con una misma vara.

-Agora bien -replicó Cobeño-, llamen aquí a mi hija, que ella lo deslindará todo, que no es nada muda.

Vino Cobeña, que no estaba lejos, y lo primero que dijo fue:

-Ni yo he sido la primera, ni seré la postrera que haya tropezado y caído en estos barrancos: Tozuelo es mi esposo, y yo su esposa, y perdonen Dios a entrambos, cuando nuestros padres no quisieren.

-Eso sí, hija -dijo su padre-: ¡La vergüenza por los cerros de Úbeda, antes que en la cara! Pero, pues esto está ya hecho, bien será que el alcalde Tozuelo se sirva de que este caso pase adelante, pues vosotros no le habéis querido dejar atrás.

-¡Par diez -dijo la doncella primera-, que el señor alcalde Cobeño ha hablado como un viejo! Dense estos niños las manos, si es que no se las han dado hasta agora, y queden para en uno, como lo manda la Santa Iglesia Nuestra Madre, y vamos con nuestro baile al olmo, que no se ha de estorbar nuestra fiesta por niñerías.

Vino Tozuelo con el parecer de la moza, diéronse las manos los donceles, acabóse el pleito y pasó el baile adelante: que si con esta verdad se acabaran todos los pleitos, secas y peladas estuvieran las solícitas plumas de los escribanos.

Quedaron Periandro, Auristela y los demás peregrinos contentísimos de haber visto la pendencia de los dos amantes, y admirados de ver la hermosura de las labradoras doncellas, que parecía, todas a una mano, que eran principio, medio y fin de la humana belleza.

No quiso Periandro que entrasen en Toledo, porque así se lo pidió Antonio el padre, a quien aguijaba el deseo que tenía de ver a su patria y a sus padres, que no estaban lejos, diciendo que para ver las grandezas de aquella ciudad, convenía más tiempo que el que su priesa les ofrecía. Por esta misma razón, tampoco quisieron pasar por Madrid, donde a la sazón estaba la corte, temiendo algún estorbo que su camino les impidiese. Confirmóles en este parecer la antigua peregrina, diciéndoles que andaban en la corte ciertos pequeños, que tenían fama de ser hijos de grandes; que, aunque pájaros noveles, se abatían al señuelo de cualquiera mujer hermosa, de cualquiera calidad que fuese: que el amor antojadizo no busca calidades, sino hermosura.

A lo que añadió Antonio el padre:

-Desa manera será menester que usemos de la industria que usan las grullas, cuando, mudando regiones, pasan por el monte Limabo, en el cual las están aguardando unas aves de rapiña para que les sirvan de pasto; pero ellas, previniendo este peligro, pasan de noche, y llevan una piedra cada una en la boca, para que les impida el canto y escusen de ser sentidas; cuanto más que, la mejor industria que podemos tener es seguir la ribera deste famoso río, y, dejando la ciudad a mano derecha, guardando para otro tiempo el verla, nos vamos a Ocaña, y desde allí al Quintanar de la Orden, que es mi patria.

Viendo la peregrina el disignio del viaje que había hecho Antonio, dijo que ella quería seguir el suyo, que le venía más a cuento. La hermosa Ricla le dio dos monedas de oro en limosna, y la peregrina se despidió de todos, cortés y agradecida.

Nuestros peregrinos pasaron por Aranjuez, cuya vista, por ser en tiempo de primavera, en un mismo punto les puso la admiración y la alegría; vieron de iguales y estendidas calles, a quien servían de espaldas y arrimos los verdes y infinitos árboles: tan verdes, que las hacían parecer de finísimas esmeraldas; vieron la junta, los besos y abrazos que se daban los dos famosos ríos Henares y Tajo; contemplaron sus sierras de agua; admiraron el concierto de sus jardines y de la diversidad de sus flores; vieron sus estanques, con más peces que arenas, y sus esquisitos frutales, que por aliviar el peso a los árboles tendían las ramas por el suelo; finalmente, Periandro tuvo por verdadera la fama que deste sitio por todo el mundo se esparcía.

Desde allí fueron a la villa de Ocaña, donde supo Antonio que sus padres vivían, y se informó de otras cosas que le alegraron, como luego se dirá.

Capítulo nono del tercer libro

CON LOS AIRES de su patria se regocijaron los espíritus de Antonio, y con el visitar a Nuestra Señora de Esperanza, a todos se les alegró el alma. Ricla y sus dos hijos se alborozaron con el pensamiento de que habían de ver presto, ella a sus suegros, y ellos a sus abuelos, de quien ya se había informado Antonio que vivían, a pesar del sentimiento que la ausencia de su hijo les había causado: supo asimismo cómo su contrario había heredado el estado de su padre, y que había muerto en amistad de su padre de Antonio, a causa que, con infinitas pruebas, nacidas de la intrincada seta del duelo, se había averiguado que no fue afrenta la que Antonio le hizo, porque las palabras que en la pendencia pasaron fueron con la espada desnuda, y la luz de las armas quita la fuerza a las palabras, y las que se dicen con las espadas desnudas no afrentan, puesto que agravian; y así, el que quiere tomar venganza dellas, no se ha de entender que satisface su afrenta, sino que castiga su agravio, como se mostrará en este ejemplo. Prosupongamos que yo digo una verdad manifiesta; respóndeme un desalumbrado que miento y mentiré todas las veces que lo dijere, y, poniendo mano a la espada, sustenta aquella desmentida; yo, que soy el desmentido, no tengo necesidad de volver por la verdad que dije, la cual no puede ser desmentida en ninguna manera, pero tengo necesidad de castigar el poco respeto que se me tuvo; de modo que el desmentido, desta suerte, puede entrar en campo con otro, sin que se le ponga por objeción que está afrentado, y que no puede entrar en campo con nadie hasta que se satisfaga, porque, como tengo dicho, es grande la diferencia que hay entre agravio y afrenta.

En efeto, digo que supo Antonio la amistad de su padre y de su contrario, y que, pues ellos habían sido amigos, se habría bien mirado su causa. Con estas buenas nuevas, con más sosiego y más contento, se puso otro día en camino con sus camaradas, a quien contó todo aquello que de su negocio sabía, y que un hermano del que pensó ser su enemigo le había heredado y quedado en la misma amistad con su padre que su hermano el muerto. Fue parecer de Antonio que ninguno saliese de su orden, porque pensaba darse a conocer a su padre, no de improviso, sino por algún rodeo que le aumentase el contento de hacerle conocido, advirtiéndole que tal vez mata una súbita alegría como suele matar un improviso pesar.

De allí a tres días llegaron, al crepúsculo de la noche, a su lugar y a la casa de su padre, el cual, con su madre, según después pareció, estaba sentado a la puerta de la calle, tomando, como dicen, el fresco, por ser el tiempo de los calurosos del verano. Llegaron todos juntos, y el primero que habló fue Antonio a su mismo padre:

-¿Hay por ventura, señor, en este lugar hospital de peregrinos?

-Según es cristiana la gente que le habita -respondió su padre-, todas las casas dél son hospital de peregrinos, y, cuando otra no hubiera, esta mía, según su capacidad, sirviera por todas: prendas tengo yo por esos mundos adelante, que no sé si andarán agora buscando quien las acoja.

-¿Por ventura, señor -replicó Antonio-, este lugar no se llama el Quintanar de la Orden, y en él no viven un apellido de unos hidalgos que se llaman Villaseñores? Dígolo, porque he conocido yo un tal Villaseñor, bien lejos desta tierra, que si él estuviera en ésta, no nos faltara posada a mí ni a mis camaradas.

-¿Y cómo se llamaba, hijo -dijo su madre-, ese Villaseñor que decís?

-Llamábase Antonio -replicó Antonio-, y su padre, según me acuerdo, me dijo se llamaba Diego de Villaseñor.

-¡Ay, señor -dijo la madre, levantándose de donde estaba-, que ese Antonio es mi hijo, que por cierta desgracia ha al pie de diez y seis años que falta desta tierra! Comprado le tengo a lágrimas, pesado a suspiros y granjeado con oraciones. ¡Plegue a Dios que mis ojos le vean antes que descubra la noche de la eterna sombra! Decidme -dijo-: ¿Ha mucho que le vistes? ¿Ha mucho que le dejastes? ¿Tiene salud? ¿Piensa volver a su patria? ¿Acuérdase de sus padres, a quien podrá venir a ver, pues no hay enemigos que se lo impidan, que ya no son sino amigos los que le hicieron desterrar de su tierra?

Todas estas razones escuchaba el anciano padre de Antonio, y, llamando a grandes voces a sus criados, les mandó encender luces y que metiesen dentro de casa a aquellos honrados peregrinos; y, llegándose a su no conocido hijo, le abrazó estrechamente, diciéndole:

-Por vos sólo, señor, sin que otras nuevas os hiciesen el aposento, os le diera yo en mi casa, llevado de la costumbre que tengo de agasajar en ella a todos cuantos peregrinos por aquí pasan; pero agora, con las regocijadas nuevas que me habéis dado, ensancharé la voluntad, y sobrepujarán los servicios que os hiciere a mis mismas fuerzas.

En esto, ya los sirvientes habían encendido luces, y guiando los peregrinos dentro de la casa, y, en mitad de un gran patio que tenía, salieron dos hermosas y honestas doncellas, hermanas de Antonio, que habían nacido después de su ausencia, las cuales, viendo la hermosura de Auristela y la gallardía de Constanza, su sobrina, con el buen parecer de Ricla, su cuñada, no se hartaban de besarlas y de bendecirlas; y, cuando esperaban que sus padres entrasen dentro de casa con el nuevo huésped, vieron entrar con ellos un confuso montón de gente, que traían en hombros, sobre una silla sentado, un hombre como muerto, que luego supieron ser el conde que había heredado al enemigo que solía ser de su tío.

El alboroto de la gente, la confusión de sus padres, el cuidado de recibir los nuevos huéspedes, las turbó de manera que no sabían a quién acudir ni a quién preguntar la causa de aquel alboroto. Los padres de Antonio acudieron al conde, herido de una bala por las espaldas, que en una revuelta que dos compañías de soldados, que estaban en el pueblo alojadas, habían tenido con los del lugar, y le habían pasado por las espaldas el pecho; el cual, viéndose herido, mandó a sus criados que le trujesen en casa de Diego de Villaseñor, su amigo, y el traerle fue a tiempo que comenzaba a hospedar a su hijo, a su nuera y a sus dos nietos, y a Periandro y a Auristela, la cual, asiendo de las manos a las hermanas de Antonio, les pidió que la quitasen de aquella confusión y la llevasen a algún aposento donde nadie la viese. Hiciéronlo ellas así, siempre admirándose de nuevo de la sin par belleza de Auristela.

Constanza, a quien la sangre del parentesco bullía en el alma, ni quería ni podía apartarse de sus tías, que todas eran de una misma edad y casi de una igual hermosura. Lo mismo le aconteció al mancebo Antonio, el cual, olvidado de los respetos de la buena crianza y de la obligación del hospedaje, se atrevió, honesto y regocijado, a abrazar a una de sus tías, viendo lo cual un criado de casa, le dijo:

-¡Por vida del señor peregrino, que tenga quedas las manos, que el señor desta casa no es hombre de burlas; si no, a fee que se las haga tener quedas, a despecho de su desvergonzado atrevimiento!

-¡Por Dios, hermano -respondió Antonio-, que es muy poco lo que he hecho para lo que pienso hacer, si el cielo favorece mis deseos, que no son otros que servir a estas señoras y a todos los desta casa!

Ya en esto habían acomodado al conde herido en un rico lecho, y llamado a dos cirujanos que le tomasen la sangre y mirasen la herida, los cuales declararon ser mortal, sin que por vía humana tuviese remedio alguno.

Estaba todo el pueblo puesto en arma contra los soldados, que en escuadrón formado se habían salido al campo, y esperaban si fuesen acometidos del pueblo, dándoles la batalla. Valía poco para ponerlos en paz la solicitud y la prudencia de los capitanes, ni la diligencia cristiana de los sacerdotes y religiosos del pueblo, el cual, por la mayor parte, se alborota de livianas ocasiones, y crece bien así como van creciendo las olas del mar de blando viento movidas, hasta que, tomando el regañón el blando soplo del céfiro, le mezcla con su huracán y las levanta al cielo; el cual, dándose prisa a entrar el día, la prudencia de los capitanes hizo marchar a sus soldados a otra parte, y los del pueblo se quedaron en sus límites, a pesar del rigor y mal ánimo que contra los soldados tenían concebido.

En fin, por términos y pausas espaciosas, con sobresaltos agudos, poco a poco vino Antonio a descubrirse a sus padres, haciéndoles presente de sus nietos y de su nuera, cuya presencia sacó lágrimas de los ojos de los viejos, y la belleza de Auristela y gallardía de Periandro les sacó el pasmo al rostro y la admiración a todos los sentidos.

Este placer, tan grande como imprevisto; esta llegada de sus hijos, tan no esperada, se la aguó, turbó y casi deshizo la desgracia del conde, que por momentos iba empeorando. Con todo eso, le hizo presente de sus hijos, y de nuevo le hizo ofrecimiento de su casa y de cuanto en ella había que para su salud fuese conveniente; porque, aunque quisiera moverse y llevarle a la de su estado, no fuera posible: tales eran las pocas esperanzas que se tenían de su salud.

No se quitaban de la cabecera del conde, obligadas de su natural condición, Auristela y Constanza, que, con la compasión cristiana y solicitud posible, eran sus enfermeras, puesto que iban contra el parecer de los cirujanos, que ordenaban le dejasen solo, o a lo menos no acompañado de mujeres. Pero la disposición del cielo, que, con causas a nosotros secretas, ordena y dispone las cosas de la tierra, ordenó y quiso que el conde llegase al último de su vida; y un día, antes que della se despidiese, cierto ya de que no podía vivir, llamó a Diego de Villaseñor, y, quedándose con él solo, le dijo desta manera:

-Yo salí de mi casa con intención de ir a Roma este año, en el cual el sumo Pontífice ha abierto las arcas del tesoro de la Iglesia, y comunicádonos, como en año santo, las infinitas gracias que en él suelen ganarse. Iba a la ligera, más como peregrino pobre que como caballero rico; entré en este pueblo; hallé trabada una pendencia, como ya, señor, habéis visto, entre los soldados que en él estaban alojados y entre los vecinos dél; mezcléme en ella, y, por reparar las ajenas vidas, he venido a perder la mía, porque esta herida que a traición, si así se puede decir, me dieron, me la va quitando por momentos. No sé quién me la dio, porque las pendencias del vulgo traen consigo a la misma confusión. No me pesa de mi muerte, si no es por las que ha de costar, si por justicia o por venganza quisiere castigarse. Con todo esto, por hacer lo que en mí es, y todo aquello que de mi parte puedo, como caballero y cristiano, digo que perdono a mi matador y a todos aquéllos que con él tuvieron culpa; y es mi voluntad, asimismo, de mostrar que soy agradecido al bien que en vuestra casa me habéis hecho, y la muestra que he de dar deste agradecimiento no será así comoquiera, sino con el más alto extremo que pueda imaginarse. En esos dos baúles que ahí están, donde llevaba recogida mi recámara, creo que van hasta veinte mil ducados en oro y en joyas, que no ocupan mucho lugar; y, si como esta cantidad es poca, fuera la grande que encierra las entrañas de Potosí, hiciera della lo mismo que desta hacer quiero. Tomalda, señor, en vida, o haced que la tome la señora doña Constanza, vuestra nieta, que yo se lo doy en arras y para su dote; y más, que le pienso dar esposo de mi mano, tal que, aunque presto quede viuda, quede viuda honradísima, juntamente con quedar doncella honrada. Llamadla aquí, y traed quien me despose con ella; que su valor, su cristiandad, su hermosura, merecían hacerla señora del universo. No os admire, señor, lo que oís, creed lo que os digo, que no será novedad disparatada casarse un título con una doncella hijadalgo, en quien concurren todas las virtuosas partes que pueden hacer a una mujer famosa. Esto quiere el cielo, a esto me inclina mi voluntad; por lo que debéis al ser discreto, que no lo estorbe la vuestra. Id luego, y, sin replicar palabra, traed quien me despose con vuestra nieta, y quien haga las escrituras tan firmes, así de la entrega destas joyas y dineros, y de la mano que de esposo la he de dar, que no haya calumnia que la deshaga.

Pasmóse a estas razones Villaseñor, y creyó sin duda alguna que el conde había perdido el juicio, y que la hora de su muerte era llegada, pues en tal punto, por la mayor parte, o se dicen grandes sentencias o se hacen grandes disparates; y así, lo que le respondió fue:

-Señor, yo espero en Dios que tendréis salud, y entonces con ojos más claros, y sin que algún dolor os turbe los sentidos, podréis ver las riquezas que dais y la mujer que escogéis; mi nieta no es vuestra igual, o a lo menos no está en potencia propincua, sino muy remota, de merecer ser vuestra esposa, y yo no soy tan codicioso que quiera comprar esta honra que queréis hacerme, con lo que dirá el vulgo, casi siempre mal intencionado, del cual ya me parece que dice que os tuve en mi casa, que os trastorné el sentido y que por vías de la solicitud codiciosa os hice hacer esto.

-Diga lo que quisiere -dijo el conde-; que si el vulgo siempre se engaña, también quedará engañado en lo que de vos pensare.

-Alto, pues -dijo Villaseñor-: no quiero ser tan ignorante que no quiera abrir a la buena suerte que está llamando a las puertas de mi casa.

Y con esto se salió del aposento, y comunicó lo que el conde le había dicho con su mujer, con sus nietos, y con Periandro y Auristela, los cuales fueron de parecer que, sin perder punto, asiesen a la ocasión por los cabellos que les ofrecía, y trujesen quien llevase al cabo aquel negocio.

Hízose así, y en menos de dos horas ya estaba Costanza desposada con el conde, y los dineros y joyas en su posesión, con todas las circunstancias y revalidaciones que fueron posible hacerse. No hubo músicas en el desposorio, sino llantos y gemidos, porque la vida del conde se iba acabando por momentos. Finalmente, otro día después del desposorio, recibidos todos los sacramentos, murió el conde en los brazos de su esposa la condesa Costanza, la cual, cubriéndose la cabeza con un velo negro, hincada de rodillas y levantando los ojos al cielo, comenzó a decir:

-Yo hago voto...

Pero, apenas dijo esta palabra, cuando Auristela le dijo:

-¿Qué voto queréis hacer, señora?

-De ser monja -respondió la condesa.

-Sedlo, y no le hagáis -replicó Auristela-, que las obras de servir a Dios no han de ser precipitadas, ni que parezcan que las mueven accidentes, y éste de la muerte de vuestro esposo, quizá os hará prometer lo que después, o no podréis, o no querréis cumplir. Dejad en las manos de Dios y en las vuestras vuestra voluntad, que así vuestra discreción, como la de vuestros padres y hermanos, os sabrá aconsejar y encaminar en lo que mejor os estuviere. Y dése agora orden de enterrar vuestro marido, y confiad en Dios, que quien os hizo condesa tan sin pensarlo os sabrá y querrá dar otro título que os honre y os engrandezca con más duración que el presente.

Rindióse a este parecer la condesa, y, dando trazas al entierro del conde, llegó un su hermano menor, a quien ya habían ido las nuevas a Salamanca, donde estudiaba. Lloró la muerte de su hermano, pero enjugáronle presto las lágrimas el gusto de la herencia del estado. Supo el hecho; abrazó a su cuñada; no contradijo a ninguna cosa; depositó a su hermano para llevarle después a su lugar; partióse a la corte para pedir justicia contra los matadores; anduvo el pleito; degollaron a los capitanes y castigaron muchos de los del pueblo; quedóse Costanza con las arras y el título de condesa; apercibióse Periandro para seguir su viaje, a quien no quisieron acompañar Antonio el padre, ni Ricla, su mujer, cansados de tantas peregrinaciones, que no cansaron a Antonio el hijo, ni a la nueva condesa, que no fue posible dejar la compañía de Auristela ni de Periandro.
